pies of it were dispers'd almost all over Europe. It is not necessary to observe, that most of them were faulty; which never fails to happen in the like Cases. They were preparing to print it from one of these bad Copies; which made the Author resolve to publish it himself, with the Additions and Alterations, with which he had embellish'd it, after having shew'd it to the Abbot Tritheimius. Melchior Adam was mistaken in saying, that Agrippa, in his more advanc'd Years, having corrected, and enlarg'd, this Work, shew'd it to the Abbot Tritheimius. He had refuted his Occult Philosophy, in his Book of the Vanity of Sciences, and yet he publish'd it, to hinder others from printing a faulty and mutilated Edition of it (100). He obtain'd the Approbation of some Doctors of Divinity, and some Persons, whom the Emperor's Council appointed to examine it. "Liber ille jam nuper per aliquos Ecclesiæ Prælatos & doctores sacrarum humanarumque literarum eruditissimos, & ex Cæsaris consilio ad hoc specialiter deputatos commissarios, examinatus & probatus fuerit, deinde etiam totius Cæsarei consilii assensu admittitur, & ejusdem Cæsareæ Majestatis authentico diplomate, & appensa in rubra cæra Cæsaris aquila privilegiatus, insuper Antverpiæ, & postea etiam Parisiis, sine contradictione impressus & publice venditus sit (101). — This Book has been lately examin'd, and approv'd, by certain Prelates of the Church, and Doctors, thoroughly over'd both in sacred and profane Literature, and by Commissioners, particularly deputed for that Purpose, by Cæsar's Council; after which it was admitted by the assent of the whole Council, and licensed by the authentic Diploma of his Imperial Majesty, and the Stamp of the Cæsarean Eagle in red Wax; and was afterwards publicly printed and sold at Antwerp, and then at Paris, without any Opposition." Upon this Approbation he obtain'd a Licence from his Imperial Majesty; and caus'd his Book to be printed at Antwerp, and dedicated it to the Elector of Cologne. His Epistle Dedicatory is dated at Malines, in the Month of January, 1531; and it is the thirteenth of the sixth Book of his Letters. This Book was publish'd in the Year 1531. It was presently reprinted at Paris. These two Editions were sold without any Opposition. The Author set about a third at Cologne. Father Conrad of Ulm, Inquisitor of the Faith, had notice of it, and caus'd the Impression to be stopp'd; but the vigorous Instances of Agrippa to the Magistrates had double'd their Effect; since there is an Edition, of Cologne, of the Occult Philosophy, in 1533. It contains three Books; whereas the former Editions contain'd only the first (102). After the Death of Agrippa, a fourth was added to it by another Hand. "Optimo jure his (libris magicis) annumeretur abominabilis libellus nuper in lucem ab impio homine emissus, tributusque Henr. Corn. Agrippæ, meo olim hospiti & præceptorî honorando, ultra annos quadraginta jam mortuo, ut hinc falso ejus manibus jam inscribi sperem, sub titulo quarti libri de Occulta Philosophia, seu de Cereemoniis magicis: qui insuper clavis librorum trium de Occulta Philosophia omniumque magicarum operationum jactatur (103). — To these (Books of Magic) may very justly be added an abominable Work, lately publish'd by an impious Wretch, and ascrib'd to my late honoured Host and Preceptor, Henry Cornelius Agrippa, who has been dead more than forty Years; whence I conclude, that it is unjustly inscribed to his Name, under the Title of The fourth Book of the Occult Philosophy, or of Magical Ceremonies; which pretends, likewise, to be a Key to the three former Books of the Occult Philosophy, and all kinds of Magical Operations." Thus John Wierus expresses himself. I have seen an Edition in Folio of the Occult Philosophy, in 1533, without the Place, where it was printed. The Privilege of Charles V. is prefix'd to it, dated, if I mistake not, from Mechlen, the 12th of January, 1529.

Let us now examine the Falshoods contain'd in these Words of Naudé: "The Divines of Louvain censur'd his Declaration against the Sciences with great Severity: John Catilinet, a Cordelier, declam'd publicly against his Explication of the de Verbo Mirifico, at Dole: The Dominicans of the City of Metz wrote against the Propositions, which he had advanc'd, in support of the Opinion of (100) See the Preface.

(101) Epist. 26. lib. 7. pag. 1033. See also pag. 1045.

(102) See the Epistle Dedicatory of the 2d and 3d Books, to the same Elector of Cologne.

(103) Wierus de Magicis, cap. 5. p. 108.

HISTORY of the Occult Philosophy. (97) See the Preface. (98) Epist. 33. lib. 3. pag. 8. o. (99) It is as the beginning of the Book, and at the 704th page of the second Tome.

Let us, in a few Words, describe the History of the Occult Philosophy. Agrippa compos'd this Work in his younger Days (97), and shew'd it to the Abbot Tritheimius, from whom he had learnt many things (98). Tritheimius was charm'd with it, as appears by the Letter which he wrote to him on the 8th of April, 1510 (99); but he advises him to communicate it only to those, whom he could confide in. I know not whether the Author communicated it to too many Persons, or whether the first, who had a Copy of it, was indiscreet. The Truth is, several Manuscript Co-

V O L. I.

Q q

Facit

was not to be expected from his Pen. His Faults are not many in this Article [R]. I have already mentioned the chief Works of Agrippa, and shall speak more particularly of them in the Remarks. It will be sufficient to add, that he wrote A Commentary on the Art of Raimundus Lullius, and A Dissertation on the Original of Sin, wherein he teaches, that the Fall of our First Parents proceeded from their unchaste Love. He promised a Work against the Dominicans [S], which would have pleased many Persons, both within, and without, the Pale of the Church of Rome. He held some uncommon

"Faber Stapuleus, concerning the Monogamy of St Anne; and yet not one of these Censurers could find any thing offensive in the two first Books of his Occult Philosophy, which were printed LONG BEFORE all those Pieces, as well at Paris, as at Antwerp, and elsewhere (104)." — Observe, that he repeats these Words LONG BEFORE, in the 416th Page. To understand the whole Mistake, we must remember, that Catiline declaim'd, in the Year 1509; that the Jacobins of Metz wrote concerning St Anne, in the Year 1519; and that the Declaration on the Vanity of Sciences appear'd in 1530, a Year before the Occult Philosophy. "The Avarice of the Bookellers, and the Vanity of certain Persons, — adds Naudé (105) — injure this Author's Memory, by attributing a fourth Book to him, full of magical, vain, superstitious, and abominable Ceremonies, and by publishing it with the three Books of the Occult Philosophy. — *Wierus, in defence of Agrippa, says, that this Book was not publish'd 'till twenty seven Years after his Death, and that it is very certain he was not the Author of it (106)."

(104) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 411.

(105) Ibid. pag. 413.

* Lib. II. de Præfatiis.

(106) Naudé, ubi supra. pag. 414.

(107) Citation (103).

These Words of Naudé, twenty seven Years after his Death, compar'd with the Latin Passage cited above (107), may embarrass the Matter; but to clear it, it is sufficient to take notice of the several Editions of John Wierus. He revis'd, and enlarged his Work six times. Naudé had double'd an Edition, which the Author prepar'd in the Year 1526. There were at that Time twenty seven Years past, since the Death of Agrippa. My Edition was prepared thirteen or fourteen Years after; this is the Reason why the Author makes use of this Phrase in it, "ultra annos quadraginta jam mortuo — more than forty Years dead." — He always retain'd his nuper, and is to blame for it; since by this means he deceives his Readers. He makes them believe, that the fourth Book Philosophia Occultæ was not printed 'till twenty seven, or forty Years after the Death of Agrippa; which is false. Authors, who enlarge their Books several times, seldom take proper Care to alter the Dates.

In favour of those, who have not Agrippa's Works, I shall in this place inform them, how it is proved, that the Declaration against the Sciences was printed in the Year 1530, and the Occult Philosophy, in the Year 1531. By a Letter, printed with those of Agrippa, and dated the 10th of January, 1531 (108), we understand, that the Elector of Cologne had receiv'd a Copy of the Vanity of Sciences, and seen some Sheets of the Occult Philosophy, which was printing at Antwerp. The Author of the Bibliothèque of Dauphiné, has taken a very unnecessary Trouble in his Errata: He has changed 1467, into 1567. His Book says, that the Treatise of the Vanity of Sciences was compos'd at Grenoble, in the Year 1467. If you correct it according to the Errata, you must suppose that the Book was compos'd thirty two Years after the Death of it's Author. He had better have made no Correction at all. I think it would be a Mistake, whatever Year should be insert'd; for I believe the Author had not resided long at Grenoble, when he died there.

[R] His Faults are not many in this Article.] I. He says Cobori instead of Gobori's; Gattinaria instead of Gattinara; Raulin instead of Reuchlin; Carniletus instead of Catiline. II. He tells us, That Agrippa obtained a Professorship at Padua; which is false, he ought to have said Pavia. Mr Teiffier was also deceived by the Resemblance of the Words; he put Paris for Pavia: Perhaps it is an Error of the Press; however the Reader ought to be adverted, that he must not believe what he finds in Mr Teiffier, to wit, that Agrippa was Professor of Holy Writ at Dole, and at Paris (109). It is to be feared, that some Compiler, who shall collect all that he finds dispersed in several Authors, will tell us, some time or other, that Agrippa profess'd Divinity at Dole, Paris, Pavia, Turin, Padua, Cologne, &c. By this Means no doubt it often happens that a Man's

(108) It is the 14th of the 6th Book, pag. 968.

(109) Teiffier's Eklogæ &c. from Thuanus, Tom. 2. p. 109. Ed. of Utrecht, 1692.

Employments are multiplied without Reason; which occasions many advantageous Reflexions on the extent of his Merit. III. The following Passage is confused. The Cardinal de Sainte Croix would have engaged him to follow him to the Council, which was to be assembled at Pisa; and at the same time the King of England, Margaret of Austria, and Gattinaria, Chancellor of the same Charles V. invited him into their Service. The Rules of Grammar lead us to refer all this to one and the same time; and at this rate Moreri will have told a downright Falshood; for it was in 1529, a long time after the Affair of Pisa, that Agrippa was invited by Henry VIII. by Margaret of Austria, and by the Chancellor of Charles the Vth. IV. There is no Chicanery to be found out in vindication of what follows: But Agrippa, who loved Liberty extremely, preferred the Pleasure of Travelling before these Advantages; and, after having spent some time at Friburg, at Geneva, and elsewhere, he retired to Lyons. A pitiful Anachronism, and which involves other Mistakes. Moreri pretends, then, that none of these Offers were accepted; yet That of the Princess Margaret was, and, when it was offered, Agrippa thought no more of travelling; he had satiated his Curiosity; he had been at Geneva, at Friburg, and at Lyons. V. It is not true, that Paul Jovius, Del Rio, Thevet, and others, maintain, that Agrippa kept two Spirits in the form of two little Dogs, and that he called one of them Monsieur, and the other Mademoiselle. Paul Jovius and Thevet, &c. speak only of one Dog, without mentioning his Name. VI. He ought not to have distinguished between the Book of the Vanity of Sciences, and the other Works of Agrippa, which compose two Volumes; for that Work is at the beginning of the second Volume. I lay nothing of the Confusion, which runs through Moreri's Narrative, with respect to Chronology.

[S] He promised a Work against the Dominicans.] They were the chief Directors of the Inquisition, it is no wonder, that he was more incensed against them, than against others. His Patience was lost, when he saw them so indulgent to the Errors of their Brethren, and so severe against the equivocal Propositions of other Persons. This Indulgence would have been less scandalous, had they alone been guilty of it; but the Misfortune is, People are such Fools, that whilst they commend the Zeal of an Inquisitor, who discovers Hereby wherever he thinks fit, they will not suffer any Recrimination to be used against him, and that his own pernicious Doctrines should be laid open to the Public. Agrippa intended to be very free with the Dominicans on this Head, and upon several others. "Neque tamen putetis, seys be to the Magistratus of Cologne, hunc solum articulum apud illos reperiri hæreticum; sed alii multi, quos, cum hic nimis longum vobiscum tædiosum foret referre, enumerabo alibi, in eo scilicet libro quem de Fratrum Prædicatorum sceleribus & hæresibus inscripsi, ubi infecta sæpius veneno sacramenta, ementia sapissime miracula, interemptos veneno Reges & principes, proditas urbes & respublicas, seductos populos, assertatque hæreses, & cætera ejusmodi horum illorum facinora flagitque in varias transfusa linguas, omnique populo exposita, dilucidè narrabo (110). — Nor would I have you think, that this Article of His is the only Heretical one; there are many others of the same Stamp, which, as it would be tedious to lay them before you at present, I shall enumerate in another Place; namely, in the Treatise I am composing of the Vices, and erroneous Opinions, of the Dominicans; in which I shall expose to the whole World their vicious Practices, such as the Sacraments often infested with Poison, numberless pretended Miracles, Kings and Princes taken off by Poison, Cities and States betrayed, the Populace seduced, Heresies sowed, and the rest of the Deeds of these Heretics, and their enormous Crimes."

(110) Agrippa Open, T. 2. pag. 1037.

uncommon Opinions [T], and never any Protestant spake more forcibly against the Impudence of the Legendaries than he did (oo).

We must not forget the Key of his Occult Philosophy. He kept it only for his Friends of the first Rank, and explained it in a manner, which differs but little from the Speculations of our Quietists [U]. Let me observe likewise, that the Edition of his (oo) See the Preface to his Treatise of the Monogamy of St. Anne, Oper. Tom. 2. p. 1053.

[T] Some uncommon Opinions.] I have already mentioned That, which concerns the Fall of Adam. The rest were not of so dangerous a Nature, and their only Crime was their being agreeable to the Doctrines of the Reformers. His Dissertation concerning Marriage, dedicated to Louisa of Savoy, Mother of Francis I. strikes at the Law of Celibacy, and shews plainly, that Adultery breaks the Conjugal Engagement. One of his Friends (111) gave him notice, that this Dissertation had displeased the Court, and that at first they were afraid to present it to the Princess. I refer you to his Answer. He did not approve of the use of Images, and with all his Heart would have consented to a Reformation, which would not have occasioned the raising of Altar against Altar (112).

[U] Which differs but little from the Speculations of our Quietists.] I shall produce another Observation of Naudé, designed to shew, that, under pretence of this Key, it cannot be maintained, that Agrippa was the true Author of the fourth Book of the Occult Philosophy. "Nor must it be objected, says he (113), that the same Agrippa says in some Passages of his 'Epistles', that he reserved the Key of the three Books, which he had published (114), to himself: For, besides that it may be answered with great shew of probability, that he amused the World with this Key, in order to make himself courted by the Curious; as Jamer Gohory † and Vigener ‡ say, that he pretended, with the same View, to be master of the Practice of the Mirrour of Pythagoras, and the Secret of extracting the Spirit Gold from it's Body, in order to convert Silver and Copper into fine Gold, from which it had been separated: I say, besides this Reason, he explains sufficiently what he meant by such a Key, when he says in the nineteenth Epistle of the fifth Book. Hæc est illa vera & mirabilium operum occultissima Philosophia, Clavis ejus intellectus est, quanto enim altiora intelligimus, tanto sublimiores induimus virtutes, tantoque & majora, & facilius & efficacius operamur. — This is that true and Occult Philosophy of the Wonders of Nature; it's Key is the Understanding; for the higher we carry our Knowledge, the more sublime are our Attainments in Virtue, and we perform the most extraordinary things with greater Ease, and more effectually. Naudé slept here, but Mr de la Monnoie went farther. He did me the favour to acquaint me, that Agrippa's Sentiments agree perfectly well with those of the Quietists. You will be convinced of this, if you examine what I am going to say. Agrippa makes mention of this Key in two Letters, which he wrote to a Religious (115), who addicted himself very much to the Occult Sciences. He represents to him, that, whatever is to be found in Books concerning the Virtue of Magic, Astrology, and Alchimy, is false and deceitful, when literally understood; that a Mystical Sense is to be looked for in them; a Sense, which none of the Masters had yet found out, and that it was almost impossible to discover it, without the Assistance of a good Interpreter, unless by Divine Inspiration, which happens to very few Persons (116). "O quantal leguntur scripta de inexpugnabili magice artis potentia, de prodigijs astrologorum imaginibus, de monstrifica alchymistarum metamorphosi, deque lapide illo benedicto, quo, Midæ insar, contacta æra mox omnia in aurum argentumve permittuntur. Quæ omnia comperiuntur vana, ficta & falsa, quoties ad literam prædicantur (117). What surprising Accounts do we meet with in Authors of the invincible Power of Magic, of the wonderful Schemes of Astrologers, of the amazing Metamorphoses of the Alchymists, and of that blessed Stone, by which, as by the Touch of Midas, all Metals are transmuted into Gold: All which are experienced to be empty, fictitious, and false, when put in practice literally. We must not, adds he, look for the Principle of these great Operations without ourselves: It is an internal Spirit, which can very innocently perform all that the Mathematicians, Magicians, Alchymists, and Necromancers promise,

"I shall not explain this to you in Writing; for it is a Thing not to be committed to Paper. It is communicated from one Spirit to another in a few mystical Words. This wonderful Operator comes not from Heaven or Hell, but is the Inhabitant of our own Breasts." Atque hoc est, quod te nunc scire volo, quia nobis ipsis est omnium mirabilium effectuum operator: Qui, quicquid portentosi Mathematici, quicquid prodigiosæ Magi, quicquid invidentes Naturæ persecutores Alchymistæ, quicquid dæmonibus deteriores malefici Necromantæ promittere audent, ipse novit discernere & efficere, idque sine omni crimine, sine Dei offensâ, sine religionis injuriâ. In nobis, inquam, est ille mirandorum operator, Nos habitat, non tartara; sed nec sydera cæli. Spiritus in nobis qui viget, illa facit.

"Verum de his nobis quam latissime tecum conferendum esset, & coram. Non enim committatur hæc literis, nec scribuntur calamo, sed spiritui spiritui paucis sacrisque verbis infunduntur, idque, si quando nos ad te venire contigerit (118)." This is taken from a Letter, dated from Lyons the twenty fourth of September, 1527. The other Letter was written in the same City the nineteenth of November following: Agrippa unfolds his Mystery in it: He says, That true and solid Philosophy consists in being united with God by an Essential and Immediate Contact, which may transform us into God. He adds, "The Understanding is the Key of this Philosophy; but, to be united to God, it must be freed from Matter, and dead to the World; to the Flesh, to all the Senses, and to the whole natural Man." His Latin will express this Russian better: "Quod ad postulatam philosophiam attinet, te scire volo, quod omnium rerum cognoscere opificem ipsum Deum, & in illum tota similitudinis imagine, seu essentiali quodam contactu sive vinculo transire, quo ipse transformetur, efficiereque Deus, ea demum vera solidaque philosophia sit: Quemadmodum de Moyse ait Dominus, inquit: Ecce ego constituisti te: Deum Pharaonis. Hæc est illa vera & summa mirabilium operum occultissima Philosophia. Clavis ejus Intellectus est, Quotum enim altiora intelligimus, tanto sublimiores induimus virtutes, tantoque & majora & facilius & efficacius operamur. Verum intellectus noster carni inclusus corruptibili, nisi viam carnis superaverit, fueritque propriam naturam sortitus, divinis illis virtutibus non poterit uniri (non enim nisi sibi quam similibus congregiuntur) ac perveniendis illis occultissimis Dei & Naturæ secretis omnino inefficax est: Atque

(118) Id. ib.

Hoc opus, hic labor est, superas evadere ad auras.

"--- Mori enim oportet, mori, inquam, mundo & carni, ac sensibus omnibus, ac toto homini animali, qui velit ad hæc secretissima penetralia ingredi: Non, quod corpus separetur ab animo: Sed, quod anima relinquatur operum. De qua morte Paulus scribit Colossensibus, Mortui estis, & vita vestra abscondita est cum Christo: & alibi clarus de seipso ait, Scio hominem, in corpore, vel extra corpus, nescio, (Deus scit) raptum usque ad tertium cælum: Et quæ reliqua sequuntur (119). — As to the Philosophy you enquire into, you must know, that the only true and solid Philosophy consists in knowing God, the Creator of all things, and being transformed into the perfect Resemblance of Him, by an essential Contact or Union, and becoming God: as the Lord said to Moses, See I have made thee a God to Pharaoh. This is that True and Occult Philosophy of wonderful Things. It's Key is the Understanding. For the higher we carry our Knowledge, the more sublime are our Attainments in Virtue, and we perform the most extraordinary things with greater Ease, and more effectually. But our Understanding, included in corruptible Flesh, unless it soar above the Ways of the Flesh, and exert it's own proper Nature, cannot be united

(119) Ibid. 19. 1b. 5. pag. 909.

(111) Capellanus, Physician to Francis I. See Agrippa's Letters, pag. 832, 833, 836.

(112) See Gæfner in Biblioth. fol. 309. verso.

(113) Naudé, ubi supra, p. 414, 415.

• Epist. 56. lib. 4. & Ibid. 14. lib. 5.

(114) Naudé it misfahen, they were not then printed.

† Lib. de Myst. Not. Comment. in Paracelsi de Vita longa, fol. 61.

‡ In his Cyphers, fol. 26, & 27.

(115) Aurelius Aquapendente Augustinianus.

(116) Nisi fuerit divino numine illustratus, quod datur paucissimis. Agrippa Epist. 14. lib. 5. pag. 904.

(117) Id. ib.

his Works published at Lyons in two Volumes in 8vo. is castrated in a place, which might have displeased the Gentlemen of the Church [X].

"united to those divine Virtues (for they have no
"Communication but with what is most like them"selves) and is unqualified to look into these most
"abstruse Secrets of God and Nature.

To soar above, and view the cheerful Skies,
In this the Task and mighty Labour lies.

DRYDEN.

"--- He must die; He must die, I say, to the "World, the Flesh, all the Senses, and the whole
"Animal Man, who would enter into these secret Re"cesses: I do not mean, that the Body must be sepa"rated from the Soul; but that the Soul must re"linquish the Body: of which kind of Death St Paul "writes to the Colossians, Ye are dead, and your "Life is hid in Christ: and in another Place he "says more plainly of himself, I know a Man, whe"ther in the Body, or out of the Body, I cannot "tell (God knows) such an one caught up to the "third Heaven; and so on. This precious Death, "continues he, is granted but to a small number of "People, beloved by God, or favoured with a "propitious Influence of the Stars, or supported by "their own Merits, and the Secret of the Art.

To few great Jupiter imparts this Grace,
And those of shining Worth, and heavenly Race.

DRYDEN.

"Hac, inquam, preciosa in conspectu Domini morte
"mori oportet, quod contingit paucissimis, & fortè
"non semper. Nam id

----- Pauci, quos sequus amavit
Jupiter, aut ardens exevit ad æthera virtus, Diis geniti, potuer.

"Primum qui non ex carne & sanguine, sed ex Deo
"nati sunt: Proximè qui Naturæ beneficio ac celo-
"rum genethliaco dono ad id dignificati sunt:
"cæteri meritis nituntur & arte, de quibus viva vox
"te certiores reddat (120)." He acknowledges inge-
"nuously that he is not one of these Favourites of "Heaven, and that he has no Hopes of attaining to this "high Degree of Happiness; for he had always found "himself hurried away by the Vortices of Matter, a sen"sual Man, attach'd to a Wife, to the Flesh, to the "World, and to domestic Cares, &c. he desires only "to be considered as a Door-keeper, to introduce others
"(121). "Verum hoc te admonitum volo, ne circa
"me decipiaris, ac si ego aliquando divina passus tibi
"ista prædicem, ut tale quid mihi arrogare velim,
"vel concedi posse sperem, qui hæcenus humano fan-
"guine sacratus miles, semper fere sulcicus, tum car-
"nis vinculo charissimæ uxori alligatus, omnibusque
"instabilis fortunæ statibus expositus, totusque à carne,
"& domesticis curis transferulum actus, tam sublimia
"immortalium deorum dona non sum adsecutus: Sed
"accipi me volo velut indicem, qui ipse semper præ-

"foribus manens, aliis, quod iter ingrediendum sit,
"ostendo (122)."

[X] Castrated in a Place, which might have displeased the Gentlemen of the Church.] The Author, in that part of the Work, exclaims against the Law of Celibacy; and insinuates, that those who were the Defenders of it, connived at Fornication, rather than allow'd of Marriage, in Priests, because they drew a great Revenue from permitting them to keep Concubines. He adds, That he had read of a certain Prelate who boasted at Table, that he had eleven Thousand Concubinary Priests in his Diocese, who paid him each a Crown a Year. This Passage is not in the Edition of Lyons. Crenius, who made the Discovery, complain'd much of the Imposition: There are his Words. "Mala fide, per Beringos fratres Lugduni
"anno M.D.C. in 8vo. edita sunt Henrici Cornelii A-"grippæ — Opera; utpote in qua multa omis-
"sunt Editione, quæ in prioribus erant. Atque ne
"hoc gratis dixisse videar, capias exemplum & tractatu
"de Incertitudine & Vanitate Scientiarum atque Arti-
"um, in cuius c. LXIII. p. 189. de Lenonia, fe-
"quentia hæc, quæ ex optima, recognita, plena, &
"scholiis marginaliis (retineo vocem in titulo libri po-"sitam) illustrata editione, sine loci adjectione, anno
"M.D. XXXVI. in 8vo. excusa, admodum rara, datu-
"rus sum, in Lugdunensi planè decepta sunt: Jam
"verò etiam Lenociniis militantes Leges atque canones,
"cùm in potentum favorem pro iniquis nuptiis pug-
"nant, & iusta matrimonia dirimunt: Sacerdotesque,
"sublati honestis nuptiis, turpiter scortari compellant:
"Malueruntque illi legislatores sacerdotes suos cum in-"famia habere concubinas, quàm cum honesta fama
"uxores, fortè quia ex concubinis proventus illis est
"amplior. De quo legimus gloriatum in convivio quen-
"dam Episcopum, habere se undecim millia sacerdotum
"concubinariorum, qui in singulos annos illi aureum
"pendant. Hæc omnia, & alia forte plura, neque
"enim integrum hæcenus contuli, pro more eraserunt
"Adversarii, clarum relinquentes documentum, illo-
"rum quid editionibus tribuendum sit (123). — The "Works of Henry Cornelius Agrippa were unsuith-
"fully publish'd, at Lyons, by the Brothers Beringi,
"in the Year M.D.C. in 8vo.: there being many things
"omitted in this Edition, which were in the former.
"To confirm this, I instance, in his Treatise of The "Uncertainty and Vanity of Arts and Sciences, in "the 64th Chapter of which, pag. 189. De Lenonia,
"the following Passage, which I am going to produce
"from the best Edition of his Works, reviv'd, entire,
"and illustrated with Marginal Scholia (I retain the "Phrase, as it stands in the Title Page) printed in
"8vo. in the Year M.D. XXXVI. and now very "scarce; the following Passage, I say, is omitted in
"the Lyons Edition. Jam verò etiam Lenociniis "militant Leges, &c. This, and, perhaps, many more "Passages, (for I have not collated the whole) have "been eras'd, according to Custom, by the Enemies of "this Author: whence we may judge how far we are "to depend upon their Editions.

(122) A-grippæ, Ep-
19. p. 909,
gic.

(123) Thomas Crenius, Animadv.
Philolog.
Hæc. p. 130 secunda,
p. 13, 14.

(120) Id. ib.

(121) Compare this with les Suisse de la Foi, whereof the Sieur Pa-risot, speaks in his Book La Foi de-voilée par
la Raison.
There are some Extracts of it in the Nouvelles
de la Rep.
Lit. Octob.
1685. pag.
1140, &c.

AGUIRRE. The Bibliothéque of the Spanish Writers furnishes Five or Six Authors of this Name. The most eminent among them, is, I think, MICHAEL de AGUIRRE, born at Alpetitia, in the Diocese of Pampelune, in the Province of Guipuscoa. He was a Civilian, who, whilst he was Member of St Clement's College at Bologna, wrote in favour of the Pretensions of Philip II. King of Spain [A] to the Crown of Portugal.
He exercised the Office of a Judge in several Courts of the Kingdom of Naples, and afterwards he had the dignity of Counsellor in the Council of Granada in Spain. He died in 1588 (a). They, who shall continue the Work of Don Nicolas Antonio, will have an AGUIRRE, infinitely more famous, to insert in it. I mean JOSEPH SÆNZ de AGUIRRE, a Benedictin, one of the Learned Men of the XVIIth Century. He was Censor, and Secretary of the Supream Council of the Inquisition of Spain, First Interpreter of the Scripture in the University of Salamanca, and had been more than once Abbot of the College of St Vincent, when, in 1686, he was honoured with a Cardinal's Hat by Pope Innocent XI. He had undertaken a very great Work (b), which

(a) N. Anton. Biblioth. Script.
Hispan.
Tom. 2.
pag. 102.

(b) An Edition of all the Councils held in Spain.

[A] Wrote in favour of the Pretensions of Philip II.
King of Spain.] His Book was printed at Venice, in the Year 1581, with this Title, Responsum pro succe-ssione regni Portugallia pro Philippo Hispaniarum rege

adversus Bononiensem, Patavinorum, & Perusinarum collegia. Belsolus inserted it in his Collection of Councils.

[B] The

which he continued with the same diligence after his Promotion to the Purple. They, who would form a just Idea of it, should read the Prodromus, which he published at Salamanca [B], in the Year 1686, or, if they have it not, the Abstracts, which the Journalists gave of it [C]. He was thought, for some time, to be the Author of a very Learned Work against the Decisions of the Clergy of France, in the Year 1682 [D]. But at last the contrary appeared (c). The Conjecture was not improbable, considering this Cardinal's Attachment to the Doctrines of the Ultramontanes, and the pains he took to prevent the Agreement between the Courts of Rome and France, which was, nevertheless, concluded in the Month of October 1693. The Expence he was at in printing two Volumes of his old Friend Don Nicolas Antonio, is very commendable. I shall take notice of it in the Article ANTONIO.

(c) See the Remark [D].

[B] The Prodromus which he publish'd at Salamanca.] The Title of it is; Notitia Conciliorum Hispaniæ atque novi Orbis, Epistolarum decretalium & aliorum monumentorum sacræ antiquitatis ad ipsam spectantium, magna ex parte hactenus ineditorum, quorum editio paratur Salmanticæ cum notis & dissertationibus, sub auspiciis Catholici Monarchæ Caroli II. Studio & vigilantiis M. Fr. Josephi Sænz de Aguirre. Salmanticæ apud Lucam Perez, Universitatis Typographum, 1686, in 8vo. — Memoirs of the Councils of Spain, &c.

Note, that this Cardinal did not entirely execute the Plan of his Work, according to his first Ideas of it. They, who have not the four Volumes in Folio, which he publish'd at Rome, under the Title of Collectio maxima Conciliorum omnium Hispaniæ & Novi Orbis, &c. need only read the Abstracts, which the Journalists of Leipzic gave of them in their Acta Eruditorum, for the Year 1696.

[C] The Abstracts, which the Journalists gave of it.] The Gentlemen of Leipzic took notice of it in their Acta, of the Month of February, 1688. The Abbot de la Roque gave an Abstract of it in his Journal of the 13th of January, 1687. I wonder That Journal did not appear in the Editions of Holland. The Article relating to the Work before us is very curious; it gives Advice, in an artful manner, to Cardinal d'Aguirre, on his declaring that he would warrant divers Decretals for genuine, which all the Learned judge to be spurious.

[D] He was thought — to be the Author of a very learned Work (1) against the Decisions of the Clergy of France, in 1682.] The Title of it is; "Tractatus de libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, continens amplam discussionem Declarationis factæ ab Illustrissimis Archiepiscopis & Episcopis Parisiis mandato regio con-gretatis anno 1682, Auctore M. C. S. Theolog. Doctore Leonii apud Matthiam Hovium 1684. Iu-periorum permisso." I have read a Preface of the Abbot Paydit (2), wherein, among other things, he promises "a Confutation of the principal Maxims of the Treatise, de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ adversus quatuor propositiones Cleri, printed at Liege, and attributed to Cardinal d'Aguirre, and "and to Mons. Cozzoni;" and thus he expresses himself at the 148th Page. "The Author of the Treatise de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, or rather the Authors, for I understand that several Persons have had a hand in that Work, and that all the Roman Doctors have exhausted their whole Stock of Learning in it, though it is but a mean Performance, these Authors, I say, maintain, &c." But let us consider a little what the Author of the Letter of an Abbot to a Prelate of the Court of Rome, on the Decree of the Inquisition of the 7th of December, 1690, against thirty one Propositions, advanced. "We ourselves (3), in our Assemblies, have not even the Liberty of proposing what we may judge of Ad-vantage to our Cause. You know whose fault it is:

"Which is the Reason, why one of the Books, which ought to have been most rigorously oppos'd by our Divines, and even render'd infamous by an Episcopal Censure, is spread all over France with Impunity, and that the Abettors of the Opinions contain'd in it, disperse, and commend it every where, boasting that we dare not answer it. He presently nam'd to me the Book de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ, which is a thick Volume in Quarto, the Author of which is better known than he imagines. It is a shameful thing, continues he, that the Clergy of France should tamely permit the Author, who is a French Monk, to teach a Doctrine which we all hold to be heretical; for he maintains openly, that our Episcopal Jurisdiction is not of Divine Right." The Anatomy of the Sentence against Father Quejnel, informs me (4), that the Book de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ was compos'd at Rome, at the Instance of the Ministers of the Holy See, and printed by their Order, under the Inspection of the Nuncio of Brussels, at Brussels itself. But if Cardinal d'Aguirre be not the Author of that Treatise, it is however certain, that he wrote against the Decisions of the Assembly of 1682. The Letter I have quoted informs me of this, in a manner, which deserves the Reader's notice, as it will inform him how this Cardinal's Book is receiv'd in France. "Our four Articles were scarce come out, adds the Author (5), but a Crowd of Writers appear'd in opposition to them; though scarce any one in France undertook their Vindication. I do not say, that the Writings of our Adversaries are formidable; most of them excite our Pity; but yet they do mischief in Countries, where the People are already dispos'd in favour of the Doctrines, which they defend. — Lastly, "The noble Rewards, wherewith the Court of Rome knows how to pay the Zeal of those, who declare for her, give a Lustre to the least considerable, and the most obscure Works. Is it not by this means alone that Cardinal d'Aguirre, from a Spanish Monk, rose to his present Dignity? Was not the Abbot of St Gall nominated to a Bishoprick, with a Design of raising him to the Purple (6), as a Reward for his writing against the four Articles, as well as "Cardinal d'Aguirre?" Lastly, public Complaints (7) were made three Years before the printing of the Letter, out of which this Passage is taken, that the Pensioners among the Clergy left the Tract de Libertatibus Ecclesiæ Gallicanæ unanswered. The History of the Works of the Learned has inform'd us (8), that the Author of that Tract is a French Priest, whose Name is Antony Charlus, who fled to Rome on account of the Regale. Perhaps he ought to be called Charlus, for he is probably of the same Family with the Monk of that Name, Native of l'Isle en Jourdain (9), who died in Exile, after having suffer'd many Disgraces in the Service of the Bishop of Pamiers (10).

(1) Letter of an Abbot to a Prelate, pag. 55. 56.

(2) He was made a Cardinal in the Year 1586. His Name was Simon de la Roche.

(3) In the Sentiments of Erasme, published at Cologne, in 1688, pag. 155.

(4) Of the Month of May 1687, pag. 426.

(5) A Right belonging to the Kings of France, of disposing of benefices during the Vacancy of an Episcopal See.

(6) In the Discourse of Toulouze.

(7) Francis de Cautel.

(8) Homer. Iliad. lib. 2. v. 41.

(9) See the Catalogue of Homer on Iliad lib. 2. ver. 35.

(10) Homer. Iliad. lib. 13. ver. 61.

(11) Philo. in Hætic.

A J A X, the Son of Oileus, was one of the Chief Lords, who went to the Siege of Troy. As he was the Son of a Prince, whose Dominions were of great Extent in the Country of the Locrians, it was easy for him to fit out Forty Ships for This Famous Expedition (a). He signalized himself on many Occasions; and it is pretended that there are Three Verses in the 2d Book of the Iliad, which are not Homer's, because they give a remarkable Superiority to Ajax, the Son of Telamon, over the Ajax of this Article (b), which by no means agrees with Homer's Account of these Heroes in another (c) Place. It is certain that our Ajax may be compared with any other Prince in the Grecian Army (d) for Courage, Boldness, and Activity [A]. As for

(1) See what was said of it in the Nouvelles de la Rep. Lit. for the Month of July 1685. Art. 1.

(2) See the Abstract of a Sermon preach'd on St Polycarpus's Day at St John's in Grece at Paris, printed at Liege 1689.

(3) It is a Bishop who is supposed to speak, p. 59.

(1) See particularly the last Verses of the 14th Book of the Iliad.

[A] And Activity.] Homer generally gives him the Epithet ταχδς, swift (1). The three Hands, given him by others, signify only the Rapidity of his Action in Fight. "A multis historicis Græcis tertium manu for Judgment and Conduct, they are out of the question; they are not part of his Character. The Poets have described him as so undaunted, that they even tell us, that the Gods, with all their Thunder and their Storms, could not subdue his Insolence; inasmuch that they found it easier to destroy than to humble him [B]. The Action, which exposed him to the Anger of the Gods, was infamous, and brutish to the last degree. He had violated Cassandra, the Daughter of Priam, in the Temple of Minerva, whither she fled for Refuge. The Greeks themselves were offended at such a prophane Violence, and Ulysses advised to stone him (e). It appears, from some Passages of Ancient Authors, that Ajax denied the Fact, and offered to clear himself of it upon Oath (f). He confessed indeed, that he took the Maid in the Temple of Minerva, and that he pulled her away from the Image of the Goddess, which she had embraced (g); but he protested that he did not violate her; and pretended, that Agamemnon had spread this malicious Report, that he might keep Cassandra, whom he had seized, and whom Ajax claimed, as the first Possessor. We shall see, in the Remarks, how Minerva revenged herself on him for this Injury [C]. The Body of Ajax was thrown ashore by the Waves of the Sea on the Island Delos, where Thetis buried

(e) Pausan. lib. 10. pag. 347.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 343.

(g) Philo. in Heroic.

"num dicitur post tergum habuisse, quod ideo est fictum, quia sic celeriter utebatur in prælio manibus, ut tertium habere putaretur (2). — Many Greek Historians relate, that he had a third Hand; the Ground of which Fiction is, that he was so quick in the use of his Hands, that he seem'd to have a third." Several interpreters apply these Words of Horace to him.

(2) Servius in Æneid. lib. 1. ver. 41.

(3) Horat. Od. 15. lib. 2. ver. 19.

— & celerem sequi

Ajacem (3).

Ajax, swift in pursuit.

Mr Hofman adopts their Explication, and confirms it by Homer's Description of him.

----- 'Οϊλῆος ταχὺς υἱός

The swift-footed Son of Oileus.

At first I could not guess what he meant by confirming what the Compiler of his Dictionary had said concerning the Swiftness of Ajax's Feet, from the Authority of Homer. Quod autem supra, Ajacem pedibus velocem fuisse scribit bujusse Dictionarii compiler, Holærum habet autorem; I thought it strange, and incomprehensible, that Mr Hofman should speak of the Compiler of his Dictionary, as of an Author distinct from himself; but at last I met with a Solution of this Enigma. Mr Hofman had taken Word for Word, what I have just now cited, out of Lloyd's Dictionary. The thing has no Difficulty in Lloyd; because that Author publish'd his Dictionary only as an Addition to, and Correction of That of another. There are a great many Obscurities in Books, which proceed from the same Principle, as That of this Passage of Mr Hofman. The Authors forget to make the proper Alterations, when they abridge or transcribe the Passages of another Author (4).

(4) See the Remark [G] of the Article ACHILLEA, towards the end.

[B] Easier to destroy, than to humble him.] Minerva was, in some measure, put to her last Shifts to punish him; she rais'd a furious Storm; he saw his Ship sink; and yet he escap'd upon a Rock.

(5) Homer. Odyss. lib. 4. ver. 502.

Καὶ νῦν ἔσφυγε κῆρα, καὶ ὑβρόμενος περ Ἀθήνη, ἔλ' μὴ ὑπερβύλων ἔπος ἔβαλετο, καὶ μὲν ἄλυσεν (5).

By Neptune rescu'd from Minerva's Hate,
On Gyra, safe Oilean Ajax sat,
His Ship or'e-whelm'd; but, frowning on the Floods, Impious he rear'd Defiance to the Gods.

POPE'S Odyss.

His Triumph at his Escape was horribly blasphemous. In spite of the Gods, said he, I am safe.

(6) Id. ib. ver. 504.

Ὁ δ' ἀμνηστὶ θεῶν Φωγίην κῆρυ λατρεῖα θαλάσσης (6).

To his own Protects all the Glory gave,
The Pow'r defrauding, who vows'd safe to save.

Id. ibid.

Neptune, being angry at this Insolence, split the Rock in two with his Trident, and the Part, on which Ajax sat, fell into the Sea. Thus Homer relates it, in the 4th Book of the Odyssey. Quintus Calaber is much more particular on this Subject, and so prolix, that this single Passage shews he was not a great Master of Writing. However, he informs us, that Minerva, not being satisfy'd with the Thunderbolts, which Jupiter had given her, desired Neptune likewise to lend her all his Storms. It was the most dreadful Tempest imaginable; Minerva darted Thunder every Minute, and burnt and split Ajax's Ship; yet this Furious sav'd himself amidst the wildest Tumult of the Waves, and brav'd the Gods from the Rock which he gained.

Ὁ δ' ἔτι, καὶ οἱ μῦθοι πάντας ἐλόχευτο εἰς θεῶν ἑστίαν, καὶ τὰς αἰὲας ἀνακλόντοισι θέλαιντο. Ἐσφυγίην (7).

The Gods —

Shew'd dart united Vengeance on his Head,
And tempest Ocean from it's deepest Bed,
Still to escape he fear'd not —

(7) Quint. Calaber. lib. 14. sec. 504.

In order to destroy him, they were obliged to crush him by the fall of a Mountain, as they formerly did Enceladus. Seneca, in the Tragedy of Agamemnon, confirms this; read the first Scene of the third Act; you will there see a Description of Resistance and Fierceness carried to the highest Degree. The Festin de Pierre * is nothing to it. Poets would not be allowed at present to carry their Fictions so far on the Stage. Thus we have one Latin, and two Greek Poets, who ascribe the Death of Ajax to Neptune; but Virgil and Hyginus (8) ascribe the whole Honour of it to Minerva.

* A Comedy of Moliere's from whence our Shadwell borrow'd his Don John.

(8) Hygin. cap. 116.

— Pallasæ exurere classēm

Agrivum, atque ipsos potuit submergere ponto, Unius ob noxam & furias Ajacis Oilei?
Ipsa, Jovis lapidum jaculata è nubibus ignem, Disjunctique rates, evertitque æquora ventis.
Illum expirantem transfixo pectore flammam
Turbinæ corripuit, scopuloque infixit acuto (9).

(9) Virg. Æneid. lib. 2. ver. 39.

Could angry Pallas, with revengful Spleen,
The Grecian Navy burn, and drown the Men?
She, for the Fault of one offending Fox,
The Bolts of Jove himself presum'd to throw;
With Whirlwinds, from beneath, she toss'd the Ship,
And bare expos'd the bosom of the Deep;
Then, as an Eagle grips the trembling game,
The Wretch, yet hissing with her Father's Flame,
She strongly seiz'd, and, with a burning Wound
Transfix'd and naked, on a Rock she bound.

DRYDEN.

[C] How Minerva reveng'd herself on him for this Injury.] See the foregoing Remark. I shall only add here, that the Storm, she rais'd, cast a great many Ships away near the Rocks of Capbareum, in the Neighbourhood of the Island of Euboea, called at present Nigropunt. We cannot, without extrem Impudence, and without imputing to them a false Principle, condemn the Greek Poets for representing a whole People as punish'd by that Goddess, for the Crime of a particular Person.

(b) See the Remark [D] of the Article ACHILLES, pag. 82.

buried it [D]. Some Authors say, that he escaped from the Storm, and arrived safely at home [E]. The Locrians had a singular Veneration for his Memory (b). We shall relate, in the Article CASSANDRA, in what manner they were obliged to expiate his Crime. He tamed a Serpent fifteen Foot long, in such a manner, that it followed him like a Dog, and eat at his Table (i).

(i) Philostr. in Heroic.

Unius ob noxam & furias peccantis Oilei.

*She, for the Fault of one offending Fox,
The Bolts of Jove himself preform'd to throw.*

Or, as another Poet says,

Quidquid Oïlides commiserat, omnibus unus Peccavit Danaï, omnibus ira nocens (10).

(10) Sabinus in Epist. Ulyssis.

*What mighty Ills upon the Greeks were brought,
By rash Oïlides' bold and single Fault?*

MR SALISBURY.

The Objection would prove too much, and might be retorted against the History of David. It is not only true in Prophane, but likewise in Sacred Writers, that

(11) Horat. Epist. 2. lib. 2. ver. 14.

Quidquid delirant reges plectuntur Achivi (11).

The People suffer, when the Prince offends.

CREECH.

(12) Lycophron, ver. 400.

[D] The Island Delos, where Thetis buried it.] Lycophron informs us of this Particular (12), since the Interpreters have found it out among his Enigmas. See what Canterus and Meurfus have said upon it; but

(a) See, in the Remark [A], of the Article TELAMON, the Genealogy of Ajax, both on the Father's and the Mother's side.

AJAX, the Son of Telamon (a), was, next to Achilles, the most valiant of the Grecian Captains [A] at the Siege of Troy; where he commanded the Troops of Salamis (b), and performed many Heroic Actions, which are described in the Iliad, in Diogenes Cretensis, in Quintus Calaber, and in the XIIIth Book of the Metamorphoses, in the Speech, which he made upon the Dispute concerning the Arms of Achilles. He lost his Cause; for they were awarded to his Competitor Ulysses. He was so enraged at it, that he ran mad (c). He attacked the Cattle, and made a great Slaughter among them, fancying he was destroying his Rivals for the Arms of Achilles, or his Judges, who gave them to another: But, finding that he destroyed only Cattle, he became yet more furious, and killed himself. It is said, That his Madnefs was of great Service to the Besiegers [B]. According to some, he was condemned, not by do not believe all they say; for they are mistaken in relation to the Passage of Pausanias, which they make use of to confirm their Conjectures. Pausanias does not speak of the Tomb of the Son of Oileus (13), but of That of Ajax, the Son of Telamon. Meurfus's Criticism on the Greek of Pausanias is not right; instead of reading τὴν ἑσθον πρὸς τὸ μνημα ἢ χαλαρὰν τοῖσιν, he reads τὴν ἑσθον πρὸς τὸ μνημα ἢ χαλαρὰν τοῖσιν. According to this Correction, the Mysian, who spoke to Pausanias, told him, That the Sea had render'd all Access to That Tomb difficult to him; whereas, on the contrary, he related to Pausanias, That the Sea, had been the occasion of discovering the largeness of one of Ajax's Bones. Wherefore the meaning of it is, That the Sea having wash'd part of the Land away, had made the Place more accessible, less steep, &c.

(13) Pausan. lib. 1. pag. 34.

[E] Some Authors say, that he escap'd from the Storm, and arriv'd safely at home.] Mr Lloyd has cited these Words of Timæus Locrus, Hist. lib. 2. Μετὰ τῆς Τροίας ἀλυσιν πολλοὶ τῶν Λοκρῶν περὶ τὰς Ἰνέρας ναυηγῶντων ἀνέστησαν· οἱ δὲ λοιποὶ οὐδ' ἀνέντι μάλιν ἐς Λοκρίδα διεσώθησαν. That is, After the taking of Troy, many Locrians were shipwreck'd, and perish'd near the Gerean Rocks (14); the rest hardy escap'd, with Ajax, and return'd home to Locris. There is some Probability, that, instead of Timæus Locrus, he ought to have cited Timæus Tauromenita.

(14) Rocks of the Aegean Sea. See the Pictures of Philostratus.

(b) His Father reigned in that Island. He drove Ajax 22 Ships. Hom. Iliad. lib. 2.

(c) Sophocles in Ajax. Quintus Calaber, lib. 5.

[A] Was, next to Achilles, the most valiant of the Grecian Captains.] It is on the Authority of several Poets, that I make this Restriction:

(1) Homer. Iliad. lib. 2. ver. 275.

Ἀνδρῶν δ' αὖ μὲν ἄριστος ἦν Τελαμόνιος Αἴας·
Ὀφρ' Ἀχαιῶδες μῆνιν. [ὃ γὰρ πάλ' ὀφράτος ἦν] (1).
Ajax in Arms the first Renown acquir'd,
While stern Achilles in his Wrath retir'd.

POPE.

(2) Pindar. Nem. 7.

Pindar calls Ajax κράτιστον, Ἀχαιῶδες ἄνθρωπον, πάρα (2); strenuissimum, excepto Achille, in pugna.

(3) Sophoc. in Ajax.

Sophocles says as much of him (3). And Horace no less,

--- Ajax, Heros ab Achille secundus (4).

(4) Horat. Sat. 3. lib. 2. ver. 193.

Plutarch reports, as a Tradition, which admits of no Difficulty, That Ajax was the Handsomest, the Greatest, and the most Valiant of all the Greeks, next to Achilles (5). This is built on these Words of Homer:

(5) Plut. Symptotic. lib. 9. Quæst. 5. pag. 740. A.

Ἀλκὸν δ' ὅς περ μὲν αἶδος περὶ δ' ἔργα τίττωτο τῶν ἄλλων Δαναῶν μετ' ἀμύμονα Πηλεΐωνα (6).

With Tow'ring Ajax, an illustrious Shade;
War was his Joy, and pleas'd with loud Alarms,
None but Pelides brighter shon in Arms.

POPE's Odyss.

(6) Homer. Odyss. lib. 3. v. 549. See also ver. 463.

Plutarch builds upon this the Objection, which he makes to Plato, who feigned, that the Soul of Ajax was but the twentieth, that was enrolled. Τί δ' ἂν (εἶπεν) ὁ δεύτεραια μὲν ὁ Αἴας πάλιν καὶ μεγέθους καὶ ἀνδρείας διὰ φέρειται μετ' ἀμύμονα Πηλεΐωνα; What! (says he) was not Ajax always esteem'd second to Achilles in Beauty, Stature, and Courage? Moversi misrepresents this Passage entirely; his Words are; Plutarch remarks, in his Table-Talk, the reason, why

Plato gives but the twenty second Place, after Achilles, to the Soul of Ajax, who was esteem'd the first in Beauty, Strength, and Courage; and he makes it appear, that That Philosopher played upon the different Signification of Names.

[B] His Madnefs was of great Service to the Besiegers.] We must not, however, conclude from hence, that true Courage stands in need of such Assistance. The Benefits, which sometimes arise from Vice, do not hinder it from being in it's own Nature evil. I appeal to this fine Passage of Cicero: "Non desiderat fortitudo advocatam iracundiam; satis est instructa, parata, amata per sese. Nam illo modo quidem licet dicere utilem violentiam ad fortitudinem, utilem etiam dementia, quod & infani & ebrii multa faciunt sæpe vehementius."

Semper Ajax fortis, fortissimus tamen in furore. Nam facinus fecit maximum, quum, Danaï inclinantibus, Summam rem perfecit manu, prælium quum restituit infantiens. Dicamus igitur utilem insaniam (7).

(7) Cicero, Tuiculi. lib. 4. cap. 22. &c.

— True Bravery stands in no need of being assisted by Rage and Fury; it is sufficiently equipped, prepared, and armed by itself. By the same Argument, otherwise, we might prove Drunkenness, and Madnefs to be useful to Bravery, because Madmen and Drunkards often perform great Feats.

Ajax, for Valour constantly renown'd,
Was most an Hero, in his Madnefs found;
When he restor'd the Fight, the Grecians giving Thus Madnefs bus' it's Use." (Ground.

(d) Eustathius and the Scholiast on Odyss. lib. xi. Schol. Aristophan. in Equit.

(e) Plutarch. Symposiac. lib. i. sub fin. p. 629. See also Cicero de Officiis, lib. i. cap. 31.

(f) Plato de Republ. lib. io. pag. 765.

(g) In the Artich. TECMES-SA.

(8) Pindar. Isthm. Ode. 6. See also Apollodorus lib. 3.

(9) The Greeks call an Eagle αἰσὼς.

(10) See Suidas in ἀρπάζεω. The Scholiast of Sophocles in Ajacem, That of Homer in Il. i. 23. & Textes in Lycophr.

(11) Suidas in ἀρπάζεω.

(12) Apud Tacitum; item Scholiastes Homeri in Il. i. 23.

(13) Scholiast. Sophoc. in Ajacem.

(14) Dict. Cret. lib. 5.

(15) Suidas in voce ΠΑΛΛΑΔΙΟΝ.

by the Votes of the Grecian Princes, but by the Decision of the Trojans, of whom it was demanded, which had done them most mischief, Ajax or Ulysses (d). This Opinion is founded upon an express Passage in the Eleventh Book of the Odyssy. Ajax resembled Achilles in many things; he was equally passionate and impatient (e); and every where invulnerable, excepting one part of his Body [C]. It would betray a very little acquaintance with Fabulous History, should we believe that there have not been various and even contradictory Accounts of the Causes and Circumstances of his Death [D]. One part of Ajax's Character was Impiety [E]; it consisted, not in believing, that the Gods were not endued with great Power, but in imagining, that there was no great Glory in conquering by their assistance, since the arrantest Cowards might do so. He would only be indebted for Victory to his own Courage. It is feigned, that his Soul, having the Liberty of chusing a Body (f) to return into the World with, preferred That of a Lion to That of a Man: such was his Detestation of Mankind, when he remembered the Injustice, which was done him, in relation to the Arms of Achilles. We shall, in another place (g), take notice of his Posterity, from whence proceeded the Family of Milijades. The Poets have given Ajax the same Elogy, which the Holy Scriptures give King Saul, as to his Stature (h). He was the subject of several Dramatic Pieces, both in Greek and Latin (i). The famous Comedian Æsop refused to act them (k). The Greeks highly honoured this valiant Captain after his Death (l). They erected a stately Monument to him on the Promontory

(b) See Remark [C].

(i) Augustus had legions of them. See Suetonius, in his Life, c. 85.

(h) Cicero de Officiis, lib. i. cap. 31.

(i) See Remark [E]. Quinarius Calaber, lib. 5. Dicht. Cret. lib. 5.

[C] Every where invulnerable, excepting one Part of his Body.] The Origin of this particular Circumstance is as follows. Hercules, seeing Telamon uneasy, because he had no Children, begged of Jupiter to give him a Son, who should have a Skin as tough as that of the Nemean Lion, and be as courageous as the Lion itself (8). He saw an Eagle, after he had finished his Petition, and, taking it for a good Omen, he promised Telamon such a Son, as he had just been praying for, and ordered, that the Child should be named Ajax, from the Eagle (9), which had given the Preface. He returned to visit Telamon, after the Birth of Ajax, and, causing the Child to be brought to him naked, he wrapped him in the Skin of his Nemean Lion, which rendered the whole Body of Ajax invulnerable, excepting that Part, which happened to be under the Hole in the Skin, at the Part where Hercules carried his Quiver (10). Authors are not agreed, which this Part was; some place it under the Arm-pit (11), others in the Neck (12), others in the Side (13), others in the Breast. Tzetzes upon Lycophron is of the last Opinion. Which seems likely to be Ovid's in the thirteenth Book of the Metamorphoses, v. 391.

Dixit, & in pectus, tum denique vulnera passum,
Qua patuit, ferro letalem condidit ens.

He said, and, with so good a Will to die,
Did to his Breast the fatal Point apply.

It found his Heart, a way 'till then unknown,
Where never weapon enter'd, but his own.

DRYDEN.

[D] Various and even contradictory Accounts of the Causes and Circumstances of his Death.] For some Authors say, that he killed himself in the transport of Passion, which seized him, upon the loss of Achilles's Arms; others, that his Dispute with Ulysses was not in relation to those Arms, but to the Palladium, which was carried away from Troy, when the City was plundered. These two Accounts are incompatible; for the Arms of Achilles were awarded to Ulysses, before the taking of Troy, and Ajax's Madness immediately followed this Decision. However it be, Dictys Cretensis relates, that Ulysses carried the Palladium against Ajax, by the Judgment of the Chiefs, and that Ajax, transported with Anger, threatened to kill those, who had done him this Injustice; but that, the next Day, he was found dead in his Tent, transfix'd with a Sword (14). Ulysses, being suspected of the Murder, and perceiving the Murmurs of the Army, embarked, and sailed away, as fast as he could. Suidas (15) and Cedrenus confess indeed, that Ajax and Ulysses disputed the Palladium, but not that the Judges pronounced in favour of either of them. They say, that they separated without coming to any Determination; and that Ajax was found dead the Night following. Some will have it, that his Combat with Paris was as fatal to himself as his Adversary; that he received a Wound in it, of which he died (16), at the same time that he killed Paris (17). Others say, that the Trojans, being told by an Oracle, that Iron could not hurt his Body, and that, if they would kill him, they must overwhelm him with Dirt, actually put him to Death in that manner (18).

[E] One part of Ajax's Character was Impiety.] When he went to the Army, his Father recommended to him to add always the Assistance of God to his own Courage. Ajax answered him, That Cowards are often Victorious, with such Help; as for himself, he stood in no need of it; and that he was sure to conquer without it.

(17) Dares Phrygius, and the Scholiast of Sophocles on the Argument of Ajax.

(18) Apud Schol. Sophocli. ib.

Τίνων, δορ)
Βόλιν κρατύν μιν, εὖν δὲ δ' ἀλ κρατύν.
Ὅ δ' ὀψιμώπως ἀσφόνως ἡμείψατο.
Πάτρῳ, θεῷ μὲν ὁ μὲν ὅν ἄνδρ
Κράτος κατατρεῖται. Ἐγὼ δὲ καὶ δίχα Καίμιν, τίττω βατὶ τ' ἐπιστάσειν κλῆος (19).

(19) Sophoc. in Ajax em. pag. 80, 81.

Mi fili, inquit, virtute Velis vincere, sed auxiliante Deo semper velis vincere.
Ipse vero superbe ac stulte respondebat:
Adjuvante Deo, inquit, etiam ignavi
Vincere solent. Ego vero, vel absque Auxilio divino, confido me istam attracturum esse gloriam.

There is a Passage of the like Import in the same Author.

Εἰ δὲ τις θεῶν
Βλάττει, Φύγοι' ἂν καὶ ναυὸς τὸν ὑπέρβουα (20).
If Jove refuse, from Heaven's æthereal Height,
To aid the Warrior in the Day of Fight,
In vain the bravest to the Battle go;
Edgeless their Swords against the Dastard Foe.

(20) Ibid. pag. 51.

Minerva offered one day to give him Advice; but he answered haughtily; Trouble not yourself about my Post; I shall give a good Account of it; you may keep your good Offices for the other Greeks (21). Another time, he offered to drive Ajax's Car in the Battle; but he would not suffer it (22): Nay he even effaced the Owl, which was painted on his Shield (23). He was afraid, no doubt, that this Picture should be taken for an Act of Devotion to Minerva, and a distrust of his own Strength. It would be unjust not to inform the Reader here, that Homer does not represent him quite so irreligious; for, if he does not himself pray to Jupiter, in preparing for his Combat with the valiant Hector, he desires, at least, that others should supplicate That God; but in secret,

(21) Ibid. pag. 81.

(22) Scholiast. Sophocli.

(23) Idem.

Least the Foe should bear,
And deem their Prayers the mean Effect of Fear.
POPE.

montory Rhæteum [F]. Some miraculous Adventures have been related concerning this Tomb [G]. The Mistake, which Ronsard believed he had committed in relation to Ajax [H], was corrected in a new Edition.

(24) Hom.
Iliad. lib. 7.
ver. 194.

Or rather Aloud; for, adds he, I stand in Fear of no Man

(24) From warlike Salamis I drew my Birth,
And, born to Combats, fear no Force on Earth.

Ibid.

This is not sufficient to set him up for a Model of Devotion, as is done in the Commentary on the Emblems of Alciatus. "Recte Ajax apud Homerum, "qui Deos invocat sese ad arma componens; neque enim putat sibi felicius rei bene gerendæ auspiciis" capere posse, quam ab invocatione numinis (25). — Ajax, in Homer, does right to invoke the "Gods, when he prepares himself for the Fight; "he thought an Invocation of the Deity the happiest "Prelude to Success." This is to misrepresent the Fact: the Passage of the seventeenth Iliad, v. 645, is of no use here. He would not have the Trojans know, that the Greeks prayed to Heaven for the Success of his Arms; This may admit of two Explanations: He feared, perhaps, that the Trojans would take this Invocation of the Deity for a Sign that he distrusted his own Courage; or else He feared, that the Trojans, apprized of the Vows, which the Greeks were offering up for him, would do the same, and even more fervently, for Hector. The first of these two Explanations makes him guilty of a Vanity very injurious to God; the second represents him fully persuaded of the Divine Power. But what is this to the Purpose, since he consents they should pray aloud; I say, consents to it, in confidence of his own Strength and Dexterity; in a word, for this Reason, because he fears nothing, and is unconcerned, whether the Trojans offer up counter Prayers or not? Is this an Example of Piety, which the Commentator of Alciatus ought to have proposed? A certain Person was saying the other Day, that the Catholic Princes were in the wrong to suffer the Pilgrimages of Loretto, the Offerings, the Vows, the Prayers of forty four Hours, which they appoint, in order to obtain a glorious Campaign, to be put in the Gazettes; for, as soon as their Enemies are informed of this, they practise the same thing, and make yet larger Vows to the Saints of both Sexes. It was replied, that this shewed the plain dealing of those Princes: They will not surprize the Decrees of Heaven; they will not, like Ajax, hide the Knowledge of their Requests from their Enemies, and the means of providing against them. This would be to desire that Judgment might be given, before both Parties were heard.

[F] They erected a stately Monument to him on the Promontory Rhæteum.] It was one of those, which Alexander desired to see and honour (26). I have observed, in another Place (27), that Pliny is unjustly accused of being ignorant of the true Situation of this Sepulchre. But if it be true, that the Greeks erected this Monument, what does Horace mean by censuring Agamemnon for having left Ajax unburied?

Cur Ajax, heros ab Achille secundus, Putrescit, toties servatis clarus Archivis.
Gaudet ut Populus Priami, Priamusque inhumato, Per quem tot juvenes patrio carere sepulchro (28).

Say, why does Ajax, born the Greeks to save,
Rot on the Earth, unhonour'd with a Grave;
Whilst Priam's Sons with hostile Joy deride
HIS cold Remains, their Funeral Rites denied;
Whose Hand had burl'd to Pluto's gloomy Reign
So many Trojan Chiefs, untimely slain;
Whose Limbs, unburied on their native Shore,
Devouring Dogs, and hungry Vultures tore?

I answer, that The Poet makes use only of one of the Incidents of the Tragedy of Ajax; it is That, wherein Sophocles feigns, that Agamemnon would not consent, that Ajax should be honoured with Funeral Rites. He yielded at last to the pressing Instances of Teucer. Observe, that some Authors say, that the Body of Ajax was not burnt, and others that it was. Diogenes Cretensis and Quintus Calaber are of the latter Opinion; Philostrophus of the former. He tells us, that Calchas declared it contrary to the Precepts of Religion to permit those to be burnt, who had killed themselves (29). See in the same Philostrophus, how the Athenians distinguished themselves in honouring this Hero. Pausanias informs us, that one of the Tribes bore the Name of Ajax (30); and that the Honours they decreed to him and his Son Euryaces, were yet subsisting (31). Those of Salamis had built a Temple to Ajax (32). The whole Greek Nation invoked him some time before the Battle of Salamis (33), and afterwards consecrated to him one of the Ships, which they had taken from the Perfians, in that memorable Day, as being part of the first Fruits dedicated to the Gods (34).

[G] Some miraculous Adventures — relating to this Tomb.] Ulysses, having suffered Shipwreck on the Coasts of Sicily, lost, among other things, the Armour of Achilles. The Shield was afterwards thrown ashore by the Waves near the Sepulchre of Ajax, where it hung; but the next Day it was struck with Thunder. This is what Ptolemy the Son of Hephaestion reports (35). Pausanias says, in general, that the Storm threw the Arms of Achilles on Ajax's Tomb, after the Shipwreck of Ulysses (36). The Story was curious, and afforded too many moral Reflexions, to be omitted by the Poets. See in the Antibologia what the Greeks have sung on that Subject (37). Alciatus borrowed one of his Emblems from thence (38). As for the Prodigies, or Miracles, for which Ajax was famed after his Death, see Pausanias, at the thirty fourth Page of the first Book. Before I end this Remark, I shall add, that the Waves having half opened the Tomb of Ajax, People were curious to look into it, and observed that one of his Knee-Bones was as big as one of the Discus's or Quoits, which were made use of in the Games (39). The Person, who related it to Pausanias, would have him judge from thence of Ajax's Stature (40). Homer says that he was remarkably tall.

Ἄνδρ' ὅς τε μέγας τε,
Ἐξ ὅχου Ἀρσίωι καραλὴν ἦδ' ἐνύρας ὤμων (41).

With Giant Strength endu'd, Whose brawny Shoulders, and whose swelling Chest,
And lofty Stature, far exceed the rest.

P O E T.

[H] The Mistake, which Ronsard believed he had committed.] He had ranked Ajax among the Heroes who took Troy; but he left him out in the second Edition of his Franciad, having been told by Florens Christanus, that Ajax killed himself before the taking of the Town (42). He was plainly ignorant, that, according to some Authors, this great Captain did not die, 'till after the sacking of Troy; for, if he had known it, he would have told Florens Christanus, that he was not ignorant of what Homer, Sophocles, Ovid, and others have related; but that he knew likewise the Opinion of others; and that he chose rather to follow Diogenes Cretensis, than Homer; and thus he might have avoided the Acknowledgment of a Mistake: A Confession very ungrateful to a Poet, and even to other Authors.

A J A X, the Son of Teucer, caused a Temple to be built to Jupiter in Olbus, a City of Cilicia. The Priest of That Temple was Lord of the Country called Tracheotis. Several Tyrants endeavoured to invade this Country, and to support themselves in it, so that it became a true Theatre of Robberies. After these Tyrants were extirpated, it was called the Country of Teucer, and the Priesthood. These are the Names it had in Strabo's time, who adds, that most of it's Pontiffs had born the Name of Teucer, or That of Ajax; and that Aba, the Daughter of Zenophanes, one of the Tyrants, being allied to that Family by Marriage, became Mistress of the Country, after her Father had governed it in quality of her Guardian. She was confirmed in the Possession of it by Marc Antony and Cleopatra, to whom she had made her Court with great Address. After her Death, the Country returned into the Power of the lawful Possessors (a). We may infer from hence, that the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is very erroneous in this Article [A].

(a) See Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 462.

[A] The Supplement to Moreri — is very erroneous in this Article.] After having thoroughly considered the Matter, I find the shortest way is to set down the whole Article of the Supplement: Here it is. Ajax, the Son of Teucer, King of Salamis, in the Island of Cyprus, having succeeded his Father, consecrated a Temple to Jupiter, in the City of Olbus. He maintained himself in the Possession of this Kingdom, against several Princes, who endeavour'd to make themselves Masters of it, and left it to his Posterity, who most of them bore the Name of Ajax, or of Teucer. Strabo, lib. 14. I observe, in confusion of this Account, I. That it deceives the Reader, by inducing him to believe, in virtue of this Narrative, that the Town of Olbus was in the Island of Cyprus. II. That it is not true, that Strabo says, Ajax succeeded his Father in the Kingdom of Salamis. The indefatigable Meursius, who took so much pains to discover the Names of all those, who reign'd in the Island of Cyprus, did not meet with a single Ajax (1). III. That it is not true, that several Princes endeavour'd to wrest the Kingdom of Salamis from Ajax. Their Attempts were aim'd against Trachetis, the Patrimony, or Demefn of the Church of Olbian Jupiter, in Illicitia; and Strabo does not say, that they endeavour'd to dispossess Ajax of it, nor that Ajax was in Possession of it. A Man may build a Temple without being the Priest of it, and without possessing the Revenues, with which it is endow'd. IV. That, supposing Ajax had been both Prince and Priest of Trachetis, it would be false, that he kept the Possession of it, and that he left it to his Descendants; it is plain, from the Relation of Strabo, that the Series of lawful Successors was sometimes interrupted.

(1) See his Treatise de Cypro, lib. 2. cap. 7. & seq.

AJAX, an Ecclesiastic, famous for his Piety, and Exemplary Life, in the Reign of Theodosius. He had a Brother, whose Name was Zeno, who was equally virtuous. They distinguished themselves for the practice of Virtue, at first, not in a Solitude, but in the City of Gaza; afterwards they addicted themselves to a Monastic Life. They were often very ill treated, for courageously maintaining the Orthodox Faith against the Pagans. Ajax had married a very handsome Woman; but it is said he knew her but Three times, from whence proceeded Three Sons; after which, he separated himself from her, as to Conjugal Commerce, and wisely governed the Church of Botolium. He brought up Two of his Sons to the Study of Divinity, and to Celibacy, and married the Third (a).

(a) Socrum. lib. 7. c. 23.

AIGUILLON, a small Town of Guienne, on the Confluence of the Rivers Lot and Garonne, four Leagues below Agen [A], was erected into a Duchy, with the Dignity of Peerage annexed to it, in favour of the Duke of Maienne, in the Year 1599. The Letters Patents for it were confirmed in Parliament the Year following (a); but, the family of that Duke being extinct, the Erection of it was renewed in the Reign of Lewis XIII. in the Year 1638, by Letters Patents, which were confirmed the same Year (b). Cardinal Richelieu caused this to be done, in Favour of his Niece, the Lady de Combalet, who was afterwards so well known by the Name of the DUCHESS OF AIGUILLON. We shall speak of her in her proper place (c). She left this Duchy by Will to her Niece Mary Magdalen Teresa de Vignerod, Sister to the Duke of Richelieu (d). Nothing is more remarkable in History, than the Resistance made by the Town of Aiguillon [B] in 1346, against the Duke of Normandy, who was afterwards King John. We are ashamed to read the account of it at present; and our Military Men cannot sufficiently express their Wonder, that the Art of War was at that time so inconsiderable in respect to what it is now. If the Duke of Normandy, eldest Son to the King of France, had taken Aiguillon after fourteen Months Siege, he would have deserved the greatest Triumph; and yet, at present, such a Town, as This was at that time, would hardly do honour to a Colonel.

(a) The 2d of March.

(b) The 19th of May.

(c) In the Article (VIGNEROD Mary de).

(d) See the State of France, Tom. 2. p. 88, 80. E. d. 168c.

[A] Below Agen.] If I had thought proper to observe, in the middle of what Towns Aiguillon is situated, I should not have pitch'd upon Agen and Nerac, as Mr Moreri did; for these three Places form a Triangle; but I should have chosen Agen and Tonneins, the one above, the other below Aiguillon, on the Garonne. This Fault is so much the more considerable, as there is no Reader but will conclude from it, that Nerac is situated on the same River.

[B] Is more remarkable — than the Resistance made by the Town of AIGUILLON.] Pappyrus Masson says, that the Siege continued fourteen Months. "Acilioneum (1) urbem irrita Joannis, postea Regis Francorum, & tunc Ducis Normannie, quatuordecim mensium obfidione memorabilem (2). — The City Acilio (AIGUILLON) famous for the fourteen Months fruitless Siege of John, afterwards King of France, and then Duke of Normandy." The numerous Army of the Duke of Normandy is no less to be considered, than the length of the Siege. "This Duke came to Toulouse, in the beginning of January, with an hundred thousand Men bearing Arms. All this dreadful Multitude did nothing in three Months, but take some paltry Towns in A-genois, and afterwards the City of Angouleme, from whence they attack'd Tonneins, and then besieg'd Aiguillon — very well stor'd, and fortify'd, for those times (3). The manner of the Attack is a third remarkable Particular. "This whole Century (4) has not produc'd a more memorable Siege, if we consider either the Attack or the Defence. It was attack'd three times a Day for a whole Week together; afterwards they plied it with Artillery and Engines, both by Land and by Water." The following Citation takes in the two Passages of Mezerai. I fetch it from Catel (5). "Froissard, in the 121st Chapter of his first Volume, says, That when the Duke of Normandy besieg'd, with a hundred thousand French, the City of Aiguillon, in possession of the English, he sent to Toulouse for eight of the greatest Engines that were in that City, and when the Inhabitants of Aiguillon were upon the point of being attack'd, it was agreed by the French Lords, that those of Toulouse, Carcassonne and Beausaire should attack them from Morning 'till Noon, and those of Rouergue, Cahors, and Agenois, from Noon 'till Night (6)." Mezerai makes the three Assaults in a Day continue, but a Week, which does not answer the

(3) Mezerai, Abreg. Chron. ad ann. 1345. Tom. 3. pag. 24. Holl. Edit. 1673.

(4) It was the XIVth Century.

(5) Id. ibid.

(6) Catel's Memoirs for the History of Languedoc, pag. 563.

(1) Baudrand calls it Aguillonum.

(2) Pappyrus Masson's Description of the R. Var of Gaul.

Colonel, who should take it at the first Onset. The Romans made almost the same Reflexion, when they compared the first Conquests of their City [C] with the Victories they gained afterwards. Mezerai strangely puzzles the Affair I am speaking of (e). Aiguillon had not altogether the same Success against the English, as against the Duke of Normandy; for, when they besieged it in 1430, they did not take the Castle; they took only the Town, and plundered it (f).

(e) See Remark [B].

(f) Darnal's Antiquities of Aiguillon, pag. 100.

Expectation he had raised in his Readers; for what is a Week in fourteen Months? The Idea he gives us of the Attack is certainly too narrow and confin'd. Besides, he is guilty of a Chronological Error. According to his Account, the Duke of Normandy came to Toulouse in the Month of January, 1346, and spent three Months in taking some paltry Towns; afterwards he took Angouleme, and then return'd towards the Garonne, took Tonneins, besieg'd Aiguillon, and rais'd the Siege of it by reason of the Battle of Creci. This Battle was fought on the 26th of August, 1346. According to this Narrative of Mezerai, it is not only impossible, that the Siege of Aiguillon should have lasted fourteen Months, but even, considering the Custom of those times, that the Siege should have been very long: And it is to speak improperly, to say, that the Duke of Normandy push'd it vigorously (7). We must place the Arrival of this Prince at Toulouse in the Year 1345.

(7) Mezerai, ibid.

[C] When they compar'd the first Conquests of their City. See Flarus and his exclamatory Style. "Sora" (quis credit?) & Algidum terrori fuerant: Satricum atque Corniculum provincie. De Verulis & Bovillis pader, sed triumphavimus. Tibur, nunc sub-urbanum, & æstivæ Præneste deliciae, nuncupatis

"in Capitolio votis, petebantur. Idem tunc Fæfulæ, quod Caræ nuper; idem nemus Aricinum, quod Hercynius saltus: Fregellæ, quod Gelforicum: Tiberis, quod Euphrates. Coriolus quoque (præ pudor!) victus ad gloriæ fuit, ut captum oppidum Caius Marcus Coriolanus, quasi Numantium aut Africam, nomen induerit (8).—Even Sora (who would think it?) and Algidum struck Terror: Satricum and Corniculum were Provinces. Verulæ and Bovillæ, (though now we are assur'd of it) were matter of Triumph. We made Jerusalem Vow in the Capitol for the Conquest of Tibur, now Rome's Suburbs, and Præneste's Summer Pleasures. Fæfulæ was, then, what Caræ was lately; the Aricinian Grove, what the Hercynian Wood; Fregellæ, what Gelforicum; Tiber, what Euphrates. The Victory gain'd over Coriolus (I am assur'd of it) was thought so glorious, that Caius Marcus Coriolanus assum'd the Captive City's Name, as it had been another Numantia, or Africa." But what shame forever it was to the French, not to be able to take Aiguillon, with so many Men, commanded by their King's eldest Son, it was a great Honour to the English, that they defended the Post so long.

(8) Flarus, cap. 11. 120.

AILLI (a) (PETER de) Bishop of Cambrai (b) and Cardinal, was born at Compiègne in Picardy [A], in the Year 1350. His Family was very obscure; some say He was (c) Under-Porter of the College of Navarre; but they are mistaken. He was not entered in That College till about the Year 1372. He was admitted a Pensioner there, among the Students in Divinity. He was at that time Solicitor for the French Nation in the University of Paris, and capable of setting up for a good Author, as he made it appear by his Treatises of Logic [B] according to the Hypotheses of the Nominals, and his Treatises concerning the Nature of the Soul, and that of Meteors. He shewed such great Penetration and Elegance in his Works, that he laid thereby the Foundation of That high Reputation, to which he rais'd himself. He had as good Success in his Explication of Peter Lombard, in the Year 1375. This happy Application to Scholastic Learning did not hinder him from being a good Preacher. He took his Doctor's Degree in 1380, and had a Canonship given him at Noion. He was recalled to Paris Four Years after, to exercise the Office of Great Master of the College of Navarre. He had a great Number of Scholars there, and among others John Gerson, and Nicolas de Clemangis. He pleaded with so much Force in 1387, before the Pope (d), against a Jacobin (e) who had appealed from the Judgment, which the Faculty of Divinity of Paris had pronounced against him, that he obtained a Confirmation of the Sentence. He wrote likewise a Treatise against the same Jacobin. This gained him so great a Reputation, that, in 1389, he was made Confessor and Almoner

(a) In Latin Petrus de Alliaco, or ab Alliaco, or ab Aliaeco, or Alliaccensis, or Alliaccus, or Alliaco, &c.

(b) The et, & Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 48. & de Scient. Mathem. p. 152, 228, &c. ubi dicitur de Aiguillon, p. 152, 228, &c.

(c) See Remark [A].

(d) It was the Antiquary Clem. VII. who resided at Avignon.

[A] Born at Compiègne in Picardy.] This appears by the public Registers of the Church of Cambrai (1); so that we may place in the List of Thet's Untruths what he says concerning Peter d'Ailli's native Country. "He was born, says he (2), in a very obscure Village of Germany, called Ailly, from which, to hide the meanness of his Extraction, he took his Name. He was so poor, that he was obliged to serve as Under-porter to the College of Navarre, to support himself in his Application to the Study of Literature." Volaterran had already publish'd, that Peter d'Ailli was a German (3).

(1) Apud Launoium Hist. Coll. Navari, pag. 137.

(2) Thet's Untruths, Men, Tom. 7. pag. 82. 12mo.

(3) See Gerner, Bibl. fol. 543. v. 10.

[B] By his Treatises of Logic.] He understood it perfectly, and was indebted to it for that Strength and Skill, wherewith he supported his own Opinions, and overthrew those of others. The famous Wesselus of Groningen speaks of him in this manner. "Quis unquam ad illum apicem Theologicæ, quo Petrus de Alliaco ascendit, absque definitionibus, divisionibus, argumentationibus, instantiis logicis perveniret? In disputationibus dico, ubi discussæ disertæ opus est. Quomodo Petrus Joannem de Montefonso in Rota de errore quatuordecim illarum conclusionum conclusisset, nisi distinctione multiplici, aut elenchi ignorantia antecedente vel consequente delatam docuisset? Opus igitur Theologicis Logicam inferre. Et GERSON iste quo tandem

"tantus ipse Theologus, nisi per accuratissimam illam suam Magistri Petri Logicam, evasit (4)?—Who can ever arrive at those Heights of Divinity, to which Peter d'Ailli attain'd, without Definition, Divisions, Syllogisms, and Logical Instances? I mean, in Controversies, which require a rational Disquisition. How could he have convinc'd John de Montefonso of Error in his fourteen Conclusions, before the Pope, had he not shew'd in what manner he was led into them, either by heaping Distinction upon Distinction, or by an Ignorance of the Argument in the Antecedent, or Consequent? Divinity therefore stands in need of Logical Conclusions. And how could the famous GERSON ever have been the great Divine he was, without this accurate Logic of Peter d'Ailli?" We must remark, that Mr de Launois is of Opinion, the Words Rota de errore, &c. in the foregoing Passage, were the Title of a Book written by Peter d'Ailli; but I chuse to understand by Rota, the Place, where the Pope heard the Disputants. Without doubt Logic contributed much to the following Elogy of Peter d'Ailli: "Aquila Franciæ, atque aberrantium à veritate malleus indefessus (5).—The Eagle of France, and the indefatigable Combatant of Heretics."

(4) Wesselus of the History of the Faculty of the Parisian University, and Launoium Hist. Navari, pag. 469.

(5) Launois, ubi supra, pag. 159. 4to.

[C] Almoner

(f) According to Moreri, it was the Bishoprick of Bellai; but he is mistaken.

(g) Moreri says it was at Pisa; but he is mistaken.

(b) Taken out of the Latin History of the College of Navarre, by Mr. de Launoi, pag. 467, &c.

(i) Diffata huiusmodi danda injuriarum sunt, natus in candidissimo pectore. Launoi. ibid. pag. 430.

* Claudii Gallia Christiana, fol. 68.

(6) See Faucher-L'Abbe de Scriptor. Eccles. Tom. 2. pag. 179.

(7) Vossius de Hist. Lat. pag. 548. Bellarmine de Script. Eccles. mentions the same Year, but without taking notice of any City.

(8) See Launoi's Hist. Navar. pag. 137.

(9) Ibid. p. 134. 475.

(10) Id. ib. pag. 475.

(11) Ibid. p. 144. 135.

(12) Miræus, in Autario de Script. Eccles. c. 454. p. 265.

Almoner to Charles VI [C], and Chancellor of the University. Five Years after, the first Dignity of the Holy Chapel of Paris was conferred upon him; to wit that of Treasurer. So many different Employments did not hinder him from applying himself earnestly to find out the most effectual means of putting a stop to the Schism, which divided the Church of Rome. He went from the King to the Anti-Pope Benedict XIII. in 1394, and gave such an advantageous Character of him at his return, that it was resolved, in the King's Council, to acknowledge him for lawful Pope. He obtained the Bishoprick of Puy in Vellai (f), at the end of the Year 1395, and That of Cambray, in the beginning of the Year following. He was much esteemed by Boniface IX. and he made use of his interest with him in procuring a Doctor of Divinity to be established in all the Episcopal Churches of the Kingdom. He preached at Genoa, in the Year 1405, on the Mystery of the Trinity, before Benedict XIII. and persuaded That Pope to enjoin all the Churches to celebrate the Feast of the Trinity. He was admired for his Learning and Prudence in the Council of Pisa, in the Year 1409. He maintained, in all the Assemblies of Paris, which debated concerning a Remedy for the Schism, that the only way to put a stop to it was to call a General Council. Two Years after, he was promoted to the Purple (g). He went into Germany, in the Year 1414, in Quality of the Pope's Legate. He presided at the third Session of the Council of Constance; he composed Three Pieces during the sitting of the Council: One, De emendanda Ecclesia; another, De duodecim bonoribus beati Josephi; another, De modo & forma eligendi Papæ: And no Person had a greater share, than He, in the Affairs of That memorable Assembly, which lasted Three Years. He died in the Year 1425 [D], and was buried in his Cathedral of Cambray. He was a great Benefactor to the College of Navarre [E], and left great Sums, by his Will, for Services to be performed in several Churches for the Repose of his Soul (b). Mr de Launoi, who supplied me with this Account, does not forget to look upon Peter d'Ailli's Doctrine concerning the Ecclesiastical Power, as a Blemish in a beautiful Body. He imputes it to the Misfortunes of the Times (i); but I wonder he forgot another Blemish of This Doctor, I mean his Fondness for Judicial Astrology [F]. Lastly; our

[C] Almoner to Charles VI. See du Puyrat, pag. 345, of the Antiquities of the King's Chapel. He observes there, that "Peter d'Ailli never had the Quality of great Almoner of France, nor of the King's great Almoner: They were Titles unknown at that Time, and did not come in Fashion, 'till the Reign of Charles VIII. and of Francis I. whatever the Author of the Gallia Christiana * may say, in which the Continuator of the Annals of Baronius is likewise mistaken."

[D] He died in the Year 1425. It is strange, that a Person of this Rank and Distinction should die, without our knowing certainly where, or in what Year. Some say that he died in Germany, in the Year 1416. Others, that he died at Avignon, on the 8th of August, 1425, when he was the Pope's Legate in France (6). Others allow, that he died at Avignon, but place his Death in the Year 1426 (7). Mr de Launoi is contented with placing it in the Year 1425, in the 479th Page of his Book; but he had said, (Page 129) that Peter d'Ailli died, when he was Legate of the Holy See in Germany, in the Year 1423 (8). "Anno postquam vastatum est à Burgundionibus quinto. — Five Years after it was laid waste by the Burgundians." Now, in the 126th Page of the same Work, he has placed this Ravage in the Year 1418. The Register of the Church of Cambray says, that he died on the 9th of October, 1425, being Legate of the Holy See in the Lower Germany, and that, on the 9th of July following, his Body was carried to Cambray, where it was buried behind the great Altar. The difference of 1416, and 1426, proceeds from an Error of the Press; the Figure 1 being, by mistake, plac'd instead of the Figure 2, occasion'd two different Opinions.

[E] He was a great Benefactor to the College of Navarre. He was called it's second Founder (9). He built the House of the Divines, but not the Library. Spondanus, who affirms it, is mistaken; it was the Work of Charles VIII. "Spondanus in annalibus Ecclesiasticis prodidit ad exstructam esse bibliothecam. Sed aberrat; id est opus Caroli octavi Regis, cuius & nomen universitatis in Bibliotheca vitro centies depingitur, & itatus in occidentali turbinati parietis como erecta conspicitur (10)." It is true, indeed, Peter d'Ailli would have part of his Benefactions to the College laid out in purchasing Books; and that he often presented them with Books (11). I cannot tell, whether he gave them his own Library, as Aubert Miræus assures us he did: "Alliacus, says he (12), anno 1425, Avenione mo-

"riens, bibliothecam suam legavit Navaræo Patriis Collegio, quam ibi magna cum voluptate aliquando vidimus. — D' Ailli, dying at Avignon in the Year 1425, left his Library to the College of Navarre at Paris, which I have formerly seen there with great Pleasure." I don't find, that Mr Launoi says so; his Silence alone is sufficient to refute this Flemish Writer.

[F] His fondness for Judicial Astrology (13.) Bellarmine has not overlooked this Blemish: "Unum est, says he (14), in quo reprehenditur hic auctor, quod videlicet inesse videatur Christi nativitatem prænotici potius ex genethliacis observationibus, atque ad hoc adduxerit apparitionem stellæ, quæ apparuit Magis. — There is one thing, for which This Author deserves Censure; I mean, his Opinion, that the Nativity of Christ might have been calculated Astrologically, and his appealing, in proof of this, to the Phenomenon of the Star, which appeared to the Wise Men." Others observe, that Peter d'Ailli maintained, in his Book de Concordia Historiæ & Astrologiæ Divinatriæ, that Noah's Flood, the Birth of JESUS CHRIST, and such other Miracles, and all the Prodigious, might have been foretold by Astrology (15); and that he referred the Origins, Revolutions, and Destructions of Commonwealths, and Religions, to the Conjunctions of the Higher Planets (16). Bodin adds, That Johannes Picus, Prince of Mirandola, takes the Hypotheses of Peter d'Arliac (17) for certain, without enquiring any farther after the Truth; though, out of thirty six great Conjunctions, which That Cardinal observed, from 115 Years after the Creation of the World, 'till the Year of our Lord 1385, not six of them proved true (18). [De Alliacus is the vulgar Latin Name of Peter d'Ailli (Alliacus): from whence Bodin formed his Arliac, by changing the first of the two ll into an r, as in Varle, Merlin, Merlusine, from Vallet, Mellin, Mellusine. REM. CRIT.] This Passage of Bodin was thus drawn up in the Latin Edition, Miram mibi visum est quamobrem J. Picus Mirandulæ princeps illius hominis errores sane pudentes in cælestium orbium doctrina pro certis & compertis demonstrationibus habuerit; cum enim post orbem conditum anno centesimo decimo quinto usque ad annum Christi 1385, triginta sex Jovis & Saturni conjunctus tradiderit, vix tamen ullus eo quo docuit loco ac tempore describitur. The same Bodin attacks the very Foundation of these Hypotheses: "Cardinal d'Arliac, says he (19), begins with the great Conjunctions at the Time of the Creation of the World, supposing, according

(13) See the end of the Remark [K].

(14) Bellarmine de Script. Eccles. p. 344. It refers to 10 Sicus Siennæ, Bibl. Sanctæ, Annot. 15, & 81. & lib. 6. Annot. 10.

(15) Vossius de Scientiis Mathem. pag. 215.

(16) Bodin: d. Repub. lib. 4. pag. 448. of the 1st Edit. u.

(17) See his cæli sim.

(18) Bodin, ubi supra.

(19) Id. ib. pag. 549.

our Peter d'Ailli, who submitted Scepters and Crowns to the Ecclesiastical Power; who endeavoured to multiply Festivals; who founded such a great number of Masses for the Repose of his Soul; and who condemned John Hus to Death [G]; appears nevertheless in the Catalogue of the Witnesses of the Truth [H], as a Forerunner of Luther and of Calvin. The Cartesians likewise rank him in the Number of their Forerunners,

in

"according to his Account, that there are 7118 Years, following the Error of Alphonsus, which was rejected by all the Hebrews; and at present with common Consent by all Churches. — And therefore it is an intolerable Error to suppose the great Conjunction of the three higher Planets to have fallen out in the Year of the Creation 320, and to lay it down, that there are at present 7118 Years elapsed, which is carrying it up to twelve hundred Years before the Creation of the World." This manner of opposing Peter d'Ailli cannot be decisive at present, when we consider, that several learned Men prefer the Calculation of the Greek Bible, concerning the Duration of the World, before the Calculation of the Hebrew Text. Vossius had more reason to insult him, on the rise of the Arian Herey, than on the Duration of the World. These are Vossius's Words; and we find by them, that our Astrologer placed the beginning of That Herey seven hundred Years after JESUS CHRIST, which betrays a very gross Ignorance. "Valde etiam futile est fundamentum quod isti ipsi ponunt. Ait ab initio mundi uque ad diluvium fluxisse annos 2042. à diluvio ad natalem Christi 3102. His ita constitutis, totus est in eo ut ostendat, quodcumque mirandum aliquid contingit in terris, etiam illustrem aliquam stellarum conjunctionem apparuisse in cœlis. Atqui falsissimum est quod sibi sumit de anno vel diluvii vel natalis Domini: Nec levis est error, sed spississimus; in priori quidem numero, annorum pene sexcentorum, in altero autem, paulo pauciorum. Quid mirum? omnino Cameracensis fuit Chronologiæ imperitissimus, ut vel arguit quod Arrianam Hæresim cepisse dicat anno Christi septingentesimo, quam verifamilis tum pene extinctam dixisset. Ortum vero constat fere initio seculi quarti. — The Foundation, which he lays of This Science, is very weak. He tells us, that from the Creation to the Deluge were 2042 Years (20); from the Deluge to the Birth of Christ 3102. If this were admitted, it would yet rest upon him to shew, that, upon every wonderful Event, there appeared in the Heavens some remarkable Conjunction of the Stars. But his Hypothesis concerning the Year of the Deluge, and the Birth of Christ, is most false. Nor is it a trivial Error, but a very considerable one; being no less, than a Mistake of near six hundred Years in the former, and something less in the latter (21). Nor are we to wonder at it; since the Bishop of Cambray's utter Ignorance of Chronology appears in his placing the Rise of the Arian Herey in the 700th Year of Christ, which he might, with more appearance of Truth, have said was extinct at that Time. For it is certain it commenced at the beginning of the fourth Century (22)." If Thevet had wrote with Judgment, would he have spoke of Peter d'Ailli in the following Terms? "I could wish that all, who set up for Astrologers, would carefully peruse his Books; it would not be Labour lost: For besides the extraordinary Observations I have related (23), they would find there a Sentence drawn up against those, who, under the Name of true Astrology, take a Pleasure in being imposed upon by the false Mask of Astrology, introducing an Astral Idolatry, altogether abominable (24)." This pretended Idolatry was no more to be feared in Thevet's Time, than the religious Worship of the Earth: So that if Peter d'Ailli's Books were only fit to convert this kind of Idolaters, they were almost useless. But, as, on the other side, they were calculated to keep up the Credit of Astrology, by reason of the Influences, which the Author attributes to the Conjunctions of the Planets, things of which Thevet says never a Word, the reading of them was much more prejudicial, than useful.

[G] Who condemned John Hus to Death. It was not without exhorting him to submit, and assuring him it was the best way he could take. "Examinatis dictis testimoniis, & recitatis articulis erroneis, in Paucum conflessi, Cardinalis Cameracensis, iudex causæ deputatus à Concilio, dixit ad Joannem Hussi-

"En vîz d'ûz proposîtes sunt tibi, ut ex his eligas unam; aut te offeras omnino totum in potestatem & gratiam Concilii, ejusque decretis super hac re acquiescas; ita namque fiet ut Concilium ob honorem domini nostri Regis Romanorum nunc præsentis, ac fratris ejus Bohemie Regis, clementer acturum sit tecum; aut si ex dictis articulis quoddam tenere ac defendere intendas, & desideres aliquam audientiam, concedetur tibi quidem; sed tunc scias hic esse magnos & illuminatos viros, qui fortissima habent adversus articulos tuos fundamenta, & verendum est ne inde gravioribus involvaris erroribus. Id consulendo dixerim tibi, non ut iudex (25). — The Witnesses having been examined, and the erroneous Articles recited, in the Assembly of the Fathers, the Cardinal Bishop of Cambray, having been deputed Judge of the Cause by the Council, addressed himself to John Hus, in the following Manner. You have your Choice of two Ways; either to throw yourself wholly upon the Power and Favour of the Council, and acquiesce in their Sentence; which will induce the Council, in respect to our Lord the King of the Romans now present, and his Brother the King of Bohemia, to deal mildly with you; or, if you have thoughts of maintaining and defending any of the aforesaid Articles, and desire another hearing, it shall be granted you; but be assured, here are great and enlightened Men, who can produce strong and fundamental Arguments against your Articles; and you must take care you do not involve yourself in still greater Errors. I give you this Advice, as your Friend, not as your Judge." Mr de Launoi, having related this, adds, that This Heretic chose rather to maintain his Opinions obstinately, and to be burnt, than to follow the wholesome Advice of Cardinal d'Ailli. Verum litigiosus homo dogmata sua nimis pernicinaciter propagare maluit & comburi, quam usque adeo salubre Cardinalis Alliati consilium sequi.

[H] Appeared nevertheless in the Catalogue of the Witnesses of the Truth. "He was delegated, by the Determination of the Council of the French Church, to require the two Popes, who contested the Papacy, to resign the Papal See. He was answered, that the Popes of Rome are never guilty of Schism; but that the French Prelates were purposely Schismatics. He was afterwards sent back again, according to the Advice of the Council, held at Paris, with the Sieur John Mangre, Marthal de Baucisand, who afterwards spoke his Mind very freely to the Anti-Pope at Avignon; nor was Cardinal d'Ailli behind hand in severely reproving him (26). And this seems to be the Reason, why Henry Pantaleon ranked him among those, who, at that time, exclaimed, and wrote against the Ambition of the Popes, the Corruption of the Church, and the Schisms and Divisions, which sprang up daily; telling us, That he wrote a Book, entituled, Of the Reformation of the Church; which however is not to be met with in the Catalogue of his Books, which is very large, both in Divinity and in Mathematics (27)." Nothing is more true, than what Pantaleon affirms concerning this Book of Peter d'Ailli. As to the Catalogue of the Witnesses of the Truth, collected by Francis Illyricus, we find Peter d'Ailli in it condemning the Doctrine of Transubstantiation, and laying before the Council of Constance a Project of Reformation; according to which, the Court of Rome was to be deprived of the numberless ways and means of heaping up Money; the Prelates were to be compelled to live an exemplary Life, and to discharge their Duties; the Pomp of Ceremonies, the unnecessary Holidays, the Abuse of Fasts, and the Canonization of Saints, were to be abolished; and the Number of Monks, Images, and Churches to be diminished (29). We may be sure that all the Writings of Peter d'Ailli are not calculated to please the Court of Rome, since three or four of them have been inserted in the Appendix of the Falsiculus rerum expetendarum & fugiendarum (30). Ortubinus

(20) Vossius means 2242.

(21) Vossius, according to his Hypothesis, ought to have found here an Error of above 600 Years.

(22) Vossius, de Scientiis Mathematicis. pag. 215.

(23) He had only mention'd the Reduction of all Ptolemy's Parallels to twelve.

(24) Thevet's Hommes Illustres. Tom. 7. pag. 89.

(25) Launoi; Hist. Gymnasii Navarræ, p. 474. ex Hufstæd cujusdam relatione apud Bzovium ad ann. 1415. n. 47.

(26) See what du Pleffis Morinai cites out of Froillard upon this occasion, in his History of Iniquity, p. 487, &c. Edit. in Folio 1611.

(27) Thevet Hommes Illustres. pag. 88.

(28) See the Dissertation of Mr Allix, at the beginning of the Determinatio Fr. Joannis Parisiensis. Printed at Lond. 1686. pag. 71, 72.

(29) See du Pleffis, Mystery of Iniquity, p. 523.

(30) Printed at London, 1690.

(8) Petrum
Aliaenem Cambracen-sem civis Episcopum ejecit, Roma ex exule fecit Cardi-nalem.
Erat. de Ratione con-scrib. Epist.
larum, Epist.
Constat.

(31) Thevet,
Hommes Il-
lustr. p. 90.

(32) Baillet,
Life of Descartes, Tom.
2. pag. 522.

(33) Thevet
ubi supra.
pag. 89.

(34) According to Geiner
fol. 147.
verso, it was
in 1478.

(35) All this is taken out of Mr de Launoi,
Hist. Gymn.
Navarre, p.
476, &c. or from Estier l'Abbe de Scrip. Eccl.
pag. 180.

(36) Published at Basil, in 1418.

(37) Published at Cologne, in Sept. 1418.

(38) Published at Co-logne, in Oct. 1418.

(39) In his Antiquities of the King of France's Court, p.
500.

(40) Bodin's Preface to the Dæmonomania of Sorcerers,
pag. 14.

(41) Part of it can be in Emanuel College, at Cambridge.
Oudin's Sup-
plem. de Scrip. Eccl.
pag. 690.

in the Question relating to Accidents [I]. He had been turned out of his Episcopal Church, if we may believe Erasmus; who adds, That his Exile procured him a Cardinal's Hat (k). He wrote many Books [K], some of which were never printed [L]. He composed likewise Verses, such as they were, in the Vulgar Language [M]. Consult the Authors cited by Moreri, and, instead of Frisart, to whom he refers us; read Froissard.

Gratius had already inserted in That Fasciculus this Cardinal's Treatise de Emendatione Ecclesie. What I have said concerning the Diminution of the Number of Monks, does not agree with what Thevet had been informed of; to wit, That Peter d'Ailli had composed a Book entitled, The Buckler of Poverty, wherein he apologized for the Mendicant Fryars (31).

[I] The Cartesians likewise ranked him in the Number of their Forerunners, in the Question relating to Accidents. A Professor of Louvain, one of the most strenuous Opposers of Mr Descartes, became "one" of his most zealous Followers, after he had found "in some Authors, very much approved by the Church, his Opinion concerning Transubstantiation, which was almost the only Point, which stuck with him. Some time after, he inserted, in his Theological Theses, an Abstract of a Book, which Cardinal d'Ailli, Bishop of Cambray composed on the Master of the Sentences, to shew, that the Cardinal propoies Mr Descartes's Opinions, concerning the Accidents of the Eucharist, and reconciles it with the Definition of the Oecumenical Council of Constance (32).

[K] He wrote many Books. His Commentaries on the Master of the Sentences, and the four Treatises inserted in the Appendix to the Fasciculus rerum expetendarum, were printed at Strasburg in 1490. A Volume of his Treatises and Sermons was printed in the same Place, at the same time. Part of his Treatises was reprinted at Douay, in the Year 1634. under the Care of Leander de St Martin, Hebrew Professor at Douay. Thevet assures us, "That he had a Work of Peter d'Ailli, which was printed in the Year 1410, on the twelfth of August, when the Art of Printing began to be in use in France, in which there is a great Number of Mathematical Figures (33)." This cannot be; for the Art of Printing was not discovered 'till about the Year 1440. He might have said, that the Sacramentale of this Author was printed at Louvain in 1487, and his Questions in sphaeram mundi Joannis de Sacroboscum Commentarii Petri Circelli Daronensis Hispani, at Paris in 1488 (34). His Meteors was printed at Strasburg, in the Year 1504, and at Vienna, in Austria, in 1509. His Life of Pope Celestin V, was printed at Paris in the Year 1539 (35), and is to be met with in the Lives of the Saints compiled by Surius. There is a Difficulty in the Title of this Book, as it ascribes to Peter d'Ailli the Dignity of Confessor to Charles V. but we had better suppose, that Charles V. is mistaken for Charles VI. than to say, there was another Peter d'Ailli. Possessin, who believed it, is much mistaken. The Cardinal appears to have nothing so much at Heart as Astrology; for, besides that he presented to the Council of Constance a Plan for the Reformation of the Calendar, he composed the following Books; Tractatus de vero cyclo lunari. Vignitilogium de concordantia Astronomica veritatis cum Theologia. Tractatus de concordia Astronomica veritatis & narrationis Historice (36). Tractatus elucidarius Astronomice concordie cum Theologia & cum Historica Narratione. Apologetica defensio Astronomice veritatis (37). Alia secunda Apologetica defensio ejusdem (38). Tractatus de concordia discordantium Astronomorum.

Du Peyrat assures us (39), That Bodin, in his Preface to the Dæmonomania of Sorcerers, mentions a Book, composed by Cardinal d'Ailli, wherein he maintained, that there is not one necessary Demonstration in Aristotle, except That, whereby he has demonstrated the Unity of God. There are two Particulars, which deserve Censure, in this; for Bodin does not say, as du Peyrat intimates, That Peter d'Ailli wrote a distinct Treatise on this Subject; and he declares, that the Author had remarked some other Demonstrations in Aristotle, though but few in Number (40).

[L] Some of which were never printed. They are in the Library of the College of Navarre (41); Mr de Launoi gives us a List of them. Some of them contain an Answer to certain very curious Questions, as, Utrum esse tria supposita unius nature sit perfectio (Whether three Substrata of one and the same Nature be the Perfection of that Nature): Utrum libertas creaturae rationalis ante & post lapsum intrinsece sit equalis (Whether the Free-Agency of a rational Creature before and after it's Fall be intrinsically equal): Utrum Creatura rationalis conscientia erroris ejus actum excusare possit (Whether the erroneous Conscience of a rational Creature can excuse it's Act). This latter Question puts me in mind of certain Papers, which appeared some time ago in Holland, concerning the Privileges of an erroneous Conscience; in which it was so demonstratively proved, that every Action, committed against the Light of Conscience, is essentially evil, and that it must necessarily and indissolubly be avoided; that the Opposers of this Doctrine fell into this shocking Opinion, That a Man must not always act according to the Light of his Conscience: From whence it follows, that it is sometimes justifiable to act contrary to the Dictates of Conscience. A monstrous Doctrine! destructive of all Morality; and in comparison of which the most extravagant Probabilism is an innocent Opinion. What makes this the more strange is, that they were Fanatics, who ran into this Extream; tho' They, of all Men, are most concerned to assert the Rights of Conscience.

[M] He compos'd likewise Verses, such as they were, in the Vulgar Language. I quote my Authority in the Margin, who says, "That Peter d'Ailli wrote many French Verses in Rhime, such as was practis'd in his Time, which were translated into Latin by Nicolas de Clemangis. I have seen some of them, says he (42), which were printed above an hundred Years ago. He adds, That the same Author wrote a Book in French, entitled, The seven Steps of the Ladder of Penitence, figured and set forth under the seven penitential Plagues; printed at Paris." I am afraid the Croix du Maine imposes upon us in relation to this last Work; for Mr de Launoi positively asserts, That Antony Belard made a French Translation of the Latin Treatise of Peter d'Ailli, on the seven Penitential Psalms, and that Denis de Harpi printed this Translation at Lyons, in the Year 1544, in 160 (43).

Add the following Observation: "The French Verses of Peter d'Ailli, which la Croix du Maine spoke of, are only thirty two in Number, and contain a short Description of a Tyrant's Life. Nicolas de Clemangis paraphras'd them in Latin Hexameters, printed with the French Verses of Peter d'Ailli, at the end of a Book, entitled, The Contempt of the Court, translated from the Spanish of Guevara, into French, Italian, and High Dutch, at Geneva, in 169, by John de Tournes, 1605. The Paraphrase of Clemangis is to be met with at the end of his Epistles, page 355, of the Edition of Leyden. As for the Translation of Antony Belard, Antony du Verdier says, page 51 of his Bibliothéque, that it was printed in 1542, by Denis de Harpi, in 160, at Lyons (44).

(40) Bodin's Preface to the Dæmonomania of Sorcerers,
pag. 14.

(41) Part of
it can be in Emanuel College, at Cambridge.
Oudin's Sup-
plem. de Scrip. Eccl.
pag. 690.

(42) La
Croix du Maine, Bi-
blioth.
Franc. pag.
351.

(43) Launoi,
Hist. Gymn.
Nav. p. 476.

(44) Mr de la Monnoie's Museum, p. 12.
Rema. li.

AIMON, Prince of the Ardennes, was, were are told (a), the Father of those Four Worthies, so celebrated in our Old Romances. They are commonly called The Four Sons of Aimon. They had but one Horse in common to them all, whose Name was Bayard. I should not have taken notice of so Idle a Tale, had it not been for the sake of observing, that these romantic Extravagancies have even crept into the Sanctuary. Popular Superstition has introduced them into Religion; and if any one had objected to these Impertinent Writers, Haec nunc ferta ducent in mala (b), he

he would not have been a False Prophet. The History of Luxemburg, composed by John Bertels, Abbot of Epternach, informs us, that Renauld, the Eldest of these Four Brothers, died a Martyr to the Name of JESUS CHRIST; that he was canonized; that the Church celebrates his Festival; that Temples were consecrated to him, and, among others, the Church of St Renauld, in the Country of Cologne, to which is annexed a Convent of Nuns. There is also a Church dedicated to the same Saint at Cologne, near That of St Maurice; and the representation of the Four Brothers is painted on the Walls of the Church. They are all four on one Horse, and Renauld, the Eldest, has a Diadem round his Head, as a Mark of his Saintship. It is pretended, that, after having been a great Warrior under Charlemagne, he turned Monk at Cologne (c); that he died a Martyr, and that, because he wrought Miracles after his Death, a Church was built to him (d).

(c) Ferrarius in Catalog. Sanctorum ad 7. Januar.

(d) See Voetii Disput. Theolog. Tom. 3. pag. 503.

AYRAULT (PETER), in Latin Ærodius, Lieutenant Criminal in the Presidial Court of Angers, his native Country, was born in the Year 1536. He studied Humanity and Philosophy at Paris; afterwards he applied himself to the Civil Law at Toulouse; from thence he went to Bourges, to improve himself by the Lectures of Duarenus, Cujacius, and Doneau, three of the most Excellent Civilians of That Time. After taking his Bachelor's Degree at Bourges, he returned to his own Country, where for some time he read Public Lectures in Civil Law, and pleaded at the Bar. He was then 22 Years of Age. Some time after he returned to Paris, where he became one of the most famous Advocates of the Parliament [A]. In the Year 1563, he published, there, the Declamations of Quintilian, which he corrected in several Places, and accompanied them with Notes. The Year following, he published a Treatise of the Power of Redemption, composed by Francis Grimaudet, the King's Advocate at Angers, to which he prefixed a Preface, concerning the Nature, Variety, and Alteration of the Laws. In the Year 1567, he published a Book entitled Decretorum rerumve apud diversos populos ab omni Antiquitate Judicatarum Libri duo—Accedit tractatus de origine & auctoritate rerum Judicatarum. He enlarged it considerably in the following Editions [B]. He left Paris, the Year following, to exercise the Office of Lieutenant Criminal in his own Country: Which he executed with so much Justice, that, like another Cassius, he was called the Rock of the Accused. During the Confusions of the League, he exercised, in the Interim [C], the Office of President in the same Court, of which he acquitted himself with the same Integrity. The City of Angers expressed their Esteem for him several ways; especially by conferring upon him the Office of Perpetual Eschevin*. He had a great Quarrel with Philip Gourreau Master of the Requests, his Countryman, and published an Apologetical Letter against him in 1577 (a). He was heartily attached to the honest Party against the League; and he was obliged to be so, not only on account of his Office in the Presidial Court, but because he was Master of the Requests to the Duke of Anjou, a Place

* A kind of Magistrate something like an English Sheriff.

(a) He published two Editions of it, in one Year, at Angers, the second more ample than the first. This Piece is in Latin.

[A] One of the most famous Advocates of the Parliament. Antony Loisel, in his Dialogue of the Advocates of the Parliament of Paris, places our Ayraul in the List of the most famous, and gives him the Pre-eminence over Bodin. It is true he remarks, that Bodin had no Success at the Bar. These are Loisel's Words: "Master Peter Ayraul was likewise promoted to the Post of Lieutenant Criminal at Angers, where he was born, and retir'd thither about the latter end of the extraordinary Sessions of Poitiers, in the Year 1567, though he was a skillful and learned Pleader, and succeeded much better than John Bodin of Angers; for, notwithstanding the latter was a complicit Scholar, his Pleadings at the Bar had never any Success (1)." Some of Peter Ayraul's Pleadings were printed at Paris, in the Year 1568 (2). They were reprinted at Rouen, in 1614, with the Notes and Additions of a young Civilian. Mr Menage, who tells us this (3), might have added, that they were printed at Paris, in 1593, in 8vo. with some other small Pieces of Peter Ayraul. The Secular Priests of Paris chose him, in 1564, to plead their Cause against the Jesuits; yet he did not plead it; perhaps, because it was not thought proper, that the Interest of the Clergy should be distinct from That of the Bishop of Paris. This is the Conjecture of du Boulay (4). However it be, his Pleading was published, as I just now observ'd in the marginal Note (2).

[B] He enlarg'd it considerably in the following Editions. The second Edition is of Paris, 1573, in 8vo. and contains six Books. The Third is in Folio, and the Title of it is, Rerum ab omni antiquitate judicatarum Pandectæ. There is a Paris Edition of it likewise, in 1588. After the Death of the Author, the same Pandectæ were printed at Paris, in the Year 1615, with the small Treatise of Patrio Jure. He had revised and corrected them. Mr Menage had promis'd (5) a new Edition of them, with short Marginal Notes, wherein he designed to shew, from whence Ayraul borrowed his Examples. This is a very learned Work. "Continet enim res ab omni antiquitate apud Indos, Judæos, Græcos, Romanos, Francos, aliosque, judicatas (6). — For it contains Cases adjudg'd from all Antiquity among the Indians, Jews, Greeks, Romans, French, and others." That, which he wrote in French, Of the Judiciary Forms, which the ancient Greeks and Romans made use of in public Trials, compared with the Practice of our French, is useful and curious. It was printed, the first time, at Paris, in 1575, in 8vo. The second Edition, which is of Paris, in 1588, in 4to, was enlarg'd by two Books: The third was enlarg'd by one Book, at Paris, in the Year 1598, in 4to (7). So that this Work contains four Books. The fourth Book, which treats of the Proceedings against dead Bodies, Apostes, the Memory of a Person, Brute Beasts, things Inanimate, and Criminals who refuse to appear before the Judge; was printed at Paris, in 1591. I forgot to observe, that his Treatise de decretis rebus apud diversos populos ab omni antiquitate judicatis, was printed at Frankfort, in the Year 1580, from the first Edition. The Abbreviators of Gesner had no other Knowledge of our Peter Ayraul, but what the Edition of Germany afforded them. They were mistaken, in supposing his Name was Paul.

[C] In the Interim. Mr Menage makes this Interim to continue two Years; Et Prætura manere per biennium sanctus Ærodius (8); and yet he says, That Ayraul was not nominated to this Office, 'till the 11th of May, 1589, and that Henry the Great presented another Person to it, in the beginning of the Year 1590, incunte Anno 1590.

(c) Ubi supra, pag. 28.

(6) Menage in the Life of Peter Ayraul; p. 27.

(7) It is thus we must translate the Words of Mr Menage, Quem postea anno 1588, duobus libris, & anno 1598, tribus auctorem in eadem urbe publicavit.

(8) Id. ib. pag. 24.

(9) Ib. pag. 23.

(1) Loisel, apud Menag. in Testim. de P. Ærod. prefix'd to his Life, p. 26.

(2) There are 22 of them; of which the 20th is That, which he had prepared for the Secular Priests of Paris against the Jesuits, in 1564.

(3) In his Life of Peter Ayraul; pag. 26.

(4) In the History of the University of Paris, Tom. 6. p. 666. apud Menag. in Testim. de P. Ærod. pag. 77.

Place which he had jointly with the Civilian Baudouin, before That Prince came to the Throne. The Speech, which he made before That Duke, upon his Entry into Angers, on the 7th of January, 1570, was printed with the Discourse, which he addressed to him [D] in praise of his Victories, and of the Reformation of the University of Angers. This Discourse turns chiefly on Baudouin's having dedicated two Ancient Panegyrics to That Prince; viz. That, which Eumenius made upon Constantius; and That, which Patulus made upon Theodosius. The Discourse, which Ayrault published, in the Year 1589, on the Death of Henry III. and the Prejudice which the Church received by it, testifies his Adherence to that Monarch's Party. He neither put his own, nor the Printer's Name to it. Tbuanus speaks of it with Commendation (b). A Latin Translation of it by the Author himself was found among his Papers. He wrote a Discourse at that time, in which he exhorted Henry IV. to become a Catholic: But, of all his Works, That which made him most known in Foreign Countries, and chiefly among the Protestants, is his Treatise of Paternal Power [E]. He composed it during a Law-Suit, which he had with the Jesuits, on account of his Eldest Son, who had taken the Habit of their Order (c). He had sent him to their College at Paris, to render him the more capable of succeeding him; and, some time after, had the Vexation to hear, that they had persuaded him to enter himself among their Order. He complained of This Proceeding to the Parliament of Paris (d); and, being informed, that they had secreted him, he presented a Petition to the Pope, and obtained Letters from Henry III. to Cardinal d'Est, Protector of the Affairs of France, and to the Marquis de Pisani, Ambassador of that Crown (e); by which Letters the King pressed them to obtain an Order from the Pope for the Release of the Young Man. But all was in vain. The Treatise of Paternal Power, which he addressed three Years after to this Disobedient Son, did not prove more effectual. Although Ayrault had other Sons, yet he was exceedingly concerned at the loss of This. He had married Anne des-Jardins, at Paris, in the Year 1564. She was Daughter of John des-Jardins, Physician to Francis I., by whom he had 15 Children [F], of which Ten were living, when he died at Angers, the 21st of July, 1601, aged 65 Years (f). I borrow this Article from Mr Menage (g).

(b) Thuan.
Hist. lib. 95.

(c) See the following Article.

(d) The 1st of May,
1586.

(e) They are dated July 28. 1586.

(f) Sainte Marthe is mistaken in the Flagey of Peter Ayrault, whoever he is, is not but 65 Years of Age.

(g) The Life of P. Aëro-dus, written by Aëgidius
Menage, & a Dungles's Son, and printed at Paris, 1671,
in 4to.

[D] Was printed with the Discourse, which he addressed to him.] Mr Menage has not rightly adjusted the Date of the Impression of these two Pieces; he says they were printed in 1577, and that the Prince, who is celebrated in them, was then King of Poland, and Duke of Anjou. This is plainly to tell us, that he was not King of France; and yet the Duke of Anjou was Inaugurated at Rheims, in the Month of February, 1575, and he was look'd upon as King of France, the very Day that Charles IX. died (10). You may take it for granted, that the Speech and Discourse, in question, came out in 1570, and consequently that the Subject of them was no longer King of Poland.

[E] His Treatise of Paternal Power.] The Author wrote it in French and Latin; one of his Countrymen, whose Name was Jacob Frubert, translated it into Italian (11). Let us see what Mr Menage says of it; "Egit cum fugitivo filio tanquam cum absente reo, hoc est annotatione & programme."

(10) It was on May 30, 1574.

(11) Menage
ubi supra,
pag. 28.

Qualis populeæ mœrens philomela sub umbra
Amisissos queritur fœtus (12);

(12) Virg.
Georg. lib.
4. ver. 511.

"Et quæ sequuntur; notum enim tibi carmen est;
"Talis Petrus Aërodus amisissum filium in solabiter in "scriptis suis queritur. Vide quæso — quos ipse
"questus fundat in libro tertio Ordinis judicarii, mo-
"do fratrem Johannem Aërodium, modo Renatum fi-
"lium compellans. Quis vere tam ferus ac ferreus
"est, qui cum querelas ejus legat in libello illo aureo,
"et tot laudibus à Stephano Pascaño (13) celebrato,
"quem de patrio jure ad fugitivum filium contra Jesu-
"itas scripsit, à gemitu & lacrimis temperare possit?
"— At non solus Aërodus fatum suum genuit;
"ingenuere & alii; lege Stephani Pascañi & Johan-
"nis Bodini (14) ea de re ad Petrum Aërodium Epi-
"stolas. Lege Antonii Arnaldi Advocati Parisiensis
"— Orationem pulcherrimam habitam in Senatu
"Parisienſi contra Jesuitas anno m. d. lxxxxiv (15).
"— He considered his Fugitive Son as a Defen"dant, who refuses to appear at the Suit of the Plan-
"tiff, and treated him in the usual Forms."

(13) See the 10th Letter of the 11th Book of Pas-cañi's Letters.

(14) Menage produces Bo-dini's Letter,
pag. 242.

(15) Vit.
Aërod. pag.
37.

At, close, in Poplar Shades, her Children gone,
The Mother Nightingale laments alone;

"and so on; you know Virgil's Simile; just so she dis"consolate Aërodus laments; in his Writings, the Last

"of his Son. — Do but read his Complaints in the "third Book of his Judiciary Forms, one while calling "upon John Aërodus his Brother, then on his Son
"Renatus. But who is so steel'd to all Sense of Pity,
"as to refrain from Sighs and Tears, when he reads
"his Complaints in that Golden Work Of Paternal
"Power, so much commended by Stephen Pascañus,
"which he wrote against the Jesuits, and addressed
"to his Fugitive Son? — But Aërodus did not la"ment his Fate alone; others sympathiz'd with him;
"read Stephen Pascañus' and John Bodin's Letters to "Peter Aërodus upon this Subject. Read those of "Antony Arnald, Advocate of Paris; and the beau"tiful Oration, delivered in the Senate of Paris, a"gainst the Jesuits, in the Year m. d. lxxxxiv." Mr Menage relates, in his Remarks, what Antony Arnald said upon this Subject, and the Answer return'd him by Peter Barni, Attorney to the Jesuits of the College of Clermont. The Answer runs thus, That the Jesuits would never receive Renatus Ayrault in France, though he was at least eighteen Years of Age; but that, without discovering to them his Design, he went into Germany, where he was receiv'd (16). See the Remark [A], of the following Article.

[F] By whom he had fifteen Children.] We set apart a particular Article for his eldest Son: His second Son Peter AYRAULT succeeded his Father in his Virtues and Office, and was President in the Seneschal's Court of Angers, Counsellor of the City, and Mayor. He obtained, in the Year 1603, a Professorship of Civil Law, in the University of Angers, for William Barclay. The Speech he made before Mary de Medici, the Mother of Lewis XIII., at Angers, on the 16th of October, 1619, may be seen in the 6th Tome of the French Mercury. He was deputed to the Assembly, which call'd themselves Les Notables, The Eminent or Remarkable Men, who met at Rouen, in 1617. He left a Family. His Brother, John AYRAULT, was Advocate in the Parliament of Paris. Their Brother, William AYRAULT, a Benedictin Monk, Doctor of the Sorbonne, was in favour with Lewis Servin, Advocate General in the Parliament of Paris. Guyonne AYRAULT, one of their Sisters, married William Menage, the King's Advocate in the Presidial of Angers. From that Marriage sprang the late Mr Menage (17), one of the most learned Men of France.

(16) Menage, ibid.
pag. 251.

(17) Vit.
Aërod. See the Citation
(g) of this Article.

AYRAULT (RENATUS) Eldest Son of the foregoing, was the Cause of great Uneasiness to his Father. He was born at Paris, on the eleventh of November, 1567, and was put to School to the Jesuits (a). Peter Ayrault had a good opinion of them at that time (b); and was so fond of them, that he would hardly have undertaken the Parisian Clergy's Cause against them, at that time, as he actually did afterwards in the Year 1564. Perceiving in this his Eldest Son a lively Wit, great Memory, and many other good Qualities, he earnestly intreated the Provincial of the Jesuits, and the Rector of the College of Clermont, when he committed his Son to their Care, not to solicit him, in any manner, to enter into their Order; and assured them he had other Children, whom he intended to dedicate to the Church; but that he designed this Son should succeed him in his Post, and intended him for the Support of his Family. They promised to grant his Request. However the Young Gentleman's great Abilities made the Jesuits desirous of having a Subject of this Importance in their Society; at length, after he had studied Rhetoric Two Years under Father James Sirmond, they gave him the Habit of their Order in 1586. His Father, without whose Consent or Privacy this was done, made a great stir about it. He accused them of Plagiarism, and summoned them to deliver up his Son. They answered, That they knew not what was become of him. Ayrault obtained a Decree of Parliament, whereby the Jesuits of the College of Clermont were ordered not to receive Renatus Ayrault into their Order, and to notify this Prohibition to the other Colleges. This Decree was not obeyed; the Young Man was removed from Place to Place, his Name was changed, and he was sent into Lorain, Germany, and Italy [A]; Henry III. caused his Ambassador, and the Protector of his Affairs, to solicit the Pope; Ayrault wrote to his Holiness about it; the Pope caused the Lift of all the Jesuits in the World to be shewed him; Renatus Ayrault, going under another Name, did not appear in this Lift (c). Three Years of Trouble and Enquiry being employed to no Purpose, the Father had recourse to his Pen, and wrote a Book concerning the Paternal Power, and addressed it to his Son Renatus (d). Renatus answered it; but his Superiors did not think fit to publish his Answer. They employed Richeome, Provincial of the Jesuits of Paris, to refute Peter Ayrault's Book [B]. Renatus's Adventures are as follows. He entered into the Order, at Triers, on the 12th of June, 1586. He went afterwards to Fulde, where he renewed his Study of Rhetoric. He passed through Germany, and was taken there by the Protestants; He went to Rome, where he studied Philosophy a Year, under Mutius Vitellsebi (e). He continued this Study, the Year following, at Milan, and finished it at Dijon (f). Having taught the Classes, in the same City, during four Years, with great Success, he left it, when the Jesuits were banished from several Cities of the Kingdom, in the Year 1594, and went into Piedmont, where he taught for two Years. He came afterwards to Avignon, where he studied Divinity four Years. After which he returned to Rome; from whence he was sent to Milan to teach Rhetoric. This he did for some Years; and returned afterwards into France; where he passed through the most illustrious Employments of his Order; He taught Philosophy; he Preached; He was Superior of a College. He was Rector at Rheims, Dijon, Sens, Dole, and Bezançon; He was the Provincial's Assistant, and Procurator of the Province of Champagne, and afterwards of That of Lyons, at Rome. Lastly, he died at la Fleche on the 18th of December, 1644 (g). His Father, by a Deed executed before a Notary and Witnesses, deprived him of his Blessing in the Year 1593. but he did not keep his Repentment till his Death; for a Writing was found among his Papers, in which he gave him his Blessing [C].

(a) Menage, Vit. Ayrauld pag. 245.

(b) Quos tunc ipse amabat & magni faciebat: Quin & eos vocari Andegavum & ibi sedem habere aliquando voluit. Id. p. 35. See pag. 245. where he cites Ayrault, in the in the third Book of his Judiciary Order.

(c) See the Text of the preceding Article towards the End.

(d) See the R. mark [E] of the preceding Article.

(e) He was General of the Jesuits.

(f) At the time a Course of Philosophy lasted three Years.

(g) Vita P. Arodi. See the Cit. on (g) of the preceding Article.

[A] Into Lorain, Germany, and Italy.] Antony Annauld set forth, in his Plea of the Year 1594, that the Jesuits had enticed away Renatus Ayrault, when he was but fourteen Years of Age, and that they kept him in Italy and Spain. It does not appear, that they ever sent him into Spain (1), and he wanted but little of his 19th Year, when he took the Jesuits Habit.

(1) Hispaniam quoque petiisse falso creditum est. Menage, ubi supra, p. 37.

[B] They pitch'd upon Richeome—to refute Peter Ayrault's Book.] His Answer, as well as Renatus Ayrault's, was never printed. "Quia indecorum visum est adversus parentes scribere filios, prohibitus est a Rectoribus suis responsum vulgare. Igitur id aggressus est Ludovicus Richeomus—quod me docuit privata ipsius Renati Arodi ad ipsum Richeomum epistola, cujus exemplar, quæ sua est humanitas, misit ad me Roma Petrus Possinus, Presbyter Societatis Jesu doctissimus, idemque Jesuiticæ Historiæ Scriptor celeberrimus. Sed neque responsum suum vulgavit Richeomus: quæ de causa nescio (2).—He was forbid by his Superiors to publish his Answer, because it was thought indecent for Children to write against their Parents. For which reason Lewis Richeome undertook it—as I am inform'd by a private Letter of Renatus Ayrault's to the same Richeome; a Copy of which Peter Possin, a learned Presbyter of the Society of Jesuits, and the celebrated Author of the History of Jesuitism, was so good-natur'd as to transmit to me at Rome."

[C] A Writing—in which he gave him his Blessing.] It was sign'd with his own hand, and contain'd as follows: "God give his Peace, his Love, and his Grace, to my Son Renatus Ayrault. I give him my Blessing, in the Name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. And I forgive him every thing wherein he may have offended me. And I pray God to assist him with his holy Spirit, whatever State, or Calling, he may undertake (3).

(2) Menage, vit. Arodi. pag. 39.

(3) Ibid. pag. 257.

AITZEMA (LEO de) a Gentleman of Friesland, born at Doccum, in the Year 1600, was Counsellor of the Hans-Towns, and their Resident at the Hague. He compiled an History of the United Provinces, which sold very well, and is of great use to those, who study Politics; for it contains, Word for Word, the Treaties of Peace, Instructions and Memoirs of Ambassadors, Letters and Answers of Sovereigns, Capitulations of Towns, and other Public Acts, each in its Original Language, and then translated into Dutch, in which Language the History is written. There are two Editions of it [A]. Although it is chiefly considerable, for the Authentic Pieces, which the Author collected with much Patience and Application, I would not judge of the rest, as Mr de Wicquefort did [B]. I have been told that this Historian speaks in an impartial Manner of whatever relates to Religious Disputes. Mr Arnaud cited him for a Particular not very advantageous to the Protestants (a). Valerius Andreas mentions one Leo Aetsma, a Frieslander, who printed his Juvenile Latin Verses at Franeker, in the Year 1617 (b). Some think this Poet is the same with the Historian, who is the Subject of this Article (c). LEO DE AITZEMA died at the Hague, on the 23d of February 1669. after having been employed there, about forty Years, in quality of Resident for the Hans-Towns, which was procured him by FOPPIUS de AITZEMA his Uncle, Resident of Holland [C], at Hamburg. Our Leo was a very good Man, Serviceable to his Friends, Affable, Liberal to the Poor, and well versed in Politics. He spoke several Languages, German, French, Italian, and English. His Father was Secretary of the Admiralty of Friesland (d). It will not be improper to observe that there are already published Three Volumes, in Folio, of the Continuation of Aitzema; the first reaches from 1669 to 1679. the Second from 1679 to 1687. the Third from 1687 to 1692 (e). A Minister, whose Name was AITZEMA, wrote a Dutch Book concerning the Sibyls.

(a) See the Apology for the Catholics, part 2. pag. 267.

(b) Valer. Andr. Bibl. Belg. p. 623.

(c) Konig. Bibl. p. 19.

(d) It resid'd, at that time, at Doccum; at present it resides at Harlingen.

(e) The first was printed at Amster-dam in 1685; the second in 1688; and the third in 1692.

[A] There are two Editions of it. The first contains fifteen Volumes, in 4to. which were printed separately; the first in 1657, and the last in 1671: the first begins at the Cessation of the Truce, which was concluded, by the Interposition of Henry the Great, between Spain and the United Provinces, and reaches from the Year 1621 to the Year 1625. The last contains the History of the Year 1668. The second Edition is in seven Volumes in Folio, which were printed in 1669, and in 1671. The last of these Volumes contains a general Table of the other six, with an Account of the Peace of Munster, and a Treatise intitled, The Lion reformed; and which is a Narrative of the Transactions in the United Provinces in 1650, and 1651, in relation to the filling up of some considerable Posts. This Treatise had already appear'd in 4to in the Year 1652. The Account of the Peace of Munster had been printed in Latin in the Year 1654.

[B] As Mr de Wicquefort did. He speaks of Aitzema in the following Words. "The History, or the Account of the Affairs of State and of War, which was written in Holland, in fourteen or fifteen Volumes, contains a great Variety of Treaties, Resolutions, and other authentic Pieces; so that it may serve as an Inventory to those, who have no Access to the Archives of the State; but what the Author has added of his own, is beneath the Gazette, in whatever Light it be considered. He is

"Master of no Style; His Language is altogether barbarous, and the whole Texture of the Work is a meer Chaos. This is common to our Author with most of those, who, in that Country, attempt to write History, without express Order and Permission; and, generally speaking, they do it without Judgment and without Sincerity (1)." It must be confessed, This Censure is very disadvantageous to our Author's Character; and indeed gives offence to many Persons.

[C] Foppius d'AITZEMA his Uncle, Resident of Holland. I have met with a Passage relating to him in one of Puffendorf's Volumes. I find there, that, in 1636, this Foppius, Envoy of the United Provinces to the Emperor, affirmed at Ratibon, that Salvius had inform'd him by Letter, that the Swedes intended to negotiate a Peace at the Court of Vienna; but that Salvius denied it (2). Nevertheless Foppius was very busy in negotiating the Peace; but Sweden did not think him qualified for such a Work; and it was thought ridiculous in him to intermeddle in such a Design, especially considering that, since he had gone over to the Roman Communion, he had employ'd every Art to insinuate himself into the Emperor's Favour. Nec Aitzema idoneus tanta rei autor habebatur, omnibus qui dominem norant irridentibus, quod ista de se ingerere non dubitaret, quem præsertim post suscepta sacra Romana gratia Caesaris omnibus modis adrepere consuebat (3).

(1) Wicquefort's Ambassador, Tom. 1. p. 772. See also p. 445.

(2) Puffendorf de Rebus Suecicis, lib. 9. pag. 296. n. 53. ad ann. 1637.

(3) Id. ib.

AKAKIA (MARTIN) Professor of Physic, in the University of Paris, in the XVIth Century, was of Chalons in Champagne [A]. His Name was Sans-malice, (without Malice); but, according to the Custom of those times, he changed it to Akakia, which signifies the same in Greek, as Sans-malice does in French [B]. He transmitted it to his Posterity, who have always bore it to this present time. He made a considerable Progress at Paris, under the Professor Peter Briffot (a), and acquired from

(a) Moreau, in vita Briffoti.

[A] Was of Chalons in Champagne. Moreri, not knowing what Catalaunensis meant, thought, in good earnest, that Akakia was a Catalan. He was of Catalonia, says he; and he refers us for it to Quenstedt, who has positively declared, that This Physician was of Chalons; a City, the Bishop whereof assumes the Title of Count and Peer of France (1).

[B] His Name was Sans-Malice, but—be changed it to Akakia, which signifies the same in Greek, as sans-malice does in French. We learn this from Renaud Moreau, in his Life of Sylvius, and Gabriel Naudé, in his Judgment on Augustin Niphus (2). See likewise le Mothe le Vayer, at the 277th Page of the 12th Tome of his Works; and Mr Menage, in his Origin of the French Language (3). Father L'Abbe believes, that all this is but an ex post facto, or pretty Allusion, made afterwards, or perhaps a Nickname, which was given him, and which grew afterwards into a Family Name (4). He assigns two Reasons for this Opinion; the first is that 'Akakia does not signify a MAN free from Malice, but, simply, a Freedom from Malice. The second is, that This Physician of Francis I. would have wrote himself Acacia or Akakia, if he had borrow'd a Name from the Greek Tongue. To confirm the first he adds, that This Physician, if it be true that his Name was, at first, Sans-malice, would have done better to quit the Feminine Name 'Akakia, and assume one more Masculine, and which should have some relation to 'Akaxi, Acacius, Words in use among the Greeks and Latins. Who would not laugh at the Simplicity or Ignorance of him, who, having the Family Name of Bald or Virtuous, should turn his Name into Greek, and call himself 'Αλακκία or Αρετή? These Reasons are very weak. As for the second, we may allow, that he ought to have wrote himself Acacia or Akakia; and I think That learned Physician did actually subscribe himself after the latter. As for the other Reason, it is easy to see, that Father L'Abbe advances nothing material; for the Masculine 'Akaxi does not so fully come up to the French Word Sans-malice, as the Feminine 'Akakia does. The Comparison of Bald or Virtuous is improper; since it is cer-

(1) Quenstedt de Patriis Vitor. Eruditor. p. 51.

(2) Fol. 9, iii.

(3) At the 475 Page of the Paris Edition in 1694.

(4) L'Abbe's Etymologies of French Words, pag. 10.

from him most of what he published afterwards on Galen [C]. He was created Doctor of the Faculty of Physic of Paris, in the Year 1526. Francis I., one of whose Physicians in Ordinary he was, had a great esteem for him. I cannot determine in what Year he became Professor of Physic; but he was so, when Gesner published his Bibliothèque, that is, in the Year 1545. He died in the Year 1551. His Coat of Arms was, Gules and a Cross d'Or, with four Cubes d'Or, with this Motto, Quæcunque seras fortuna, ferenda est. He married Mary Chauveau, Widow of Silvan de Montbelon, by whom he had a Son, who was Professor of Physic, as we shall see. Most of his Descendants have followed the same Profession; though one among them had other Affairs upon his hands besides Physic [D]. They, who place the Death of our Martin Akakia in the Year 1605, are strangely mistaken [E]. Marot spoke of him with Commendation: Mr Ménage has cited his Elogium of him (b).

(b) Ménage's Origin of the French
Tongue, pag.
4.

tain, that Sans-malice has not the Nature of an Adjective Noun; and that, if a Person, whose Name happens to be Avec-peine, should have a mind to Grecise it, he ought rather to take the Name of Synalopécia, than That of Synalopécis.

[C] What he publish'd — on Galen. In 1538, he publish'd a Latin Translation of Galen's two Books, De ratione curandi, and accompanied it with a Commentary (5). Afterwards he translated the Ars Medica, quæ & Ars parva, of the same Galen. This Work was printed at Lyon, in 1548. He is likewise Author of a Book, printed at Paris, in the Year 1555, with the Title of "Synopsis eorum, quæ quinque prioribus libris Galeni de facultatibus simplicium medicamentorum continentur. — A Synopsis of the Contents of the five first Books of Galen, Of the Qualities of Simple Medicines."

[D] Tho' one among them had other Affairs upon his Hands besides Physic. A Letter of Guy Patin, dated the twenty second of July, 1664, contains these Words: "The King has caused the Brother of M. Akakia, our Colleague, to be confined in the Bastille, for having wrote something, which displeased his Highness the Prince. It is not long, since he was employed about the Marriage of the Duke of Enguien, and had been Secretary of the Embassy to Poland." Every one has heard of the Complaints, which a Friend to the House of Austria, disguised under the Name of Stanislaus Lysmachus, a Polish Knight, published in 1683, against the Correspondence, which France carried on with Count Tekeli, by the means of Akakia and du Vernet-Boncauld. I have just read, in a Book entitled, The Journal of Amsterdam (6), that the same Akakia had a great share in the Intrigues, which were formed, to place the Crown of Poland on the Head of the Duke of Longueville, by deposing King Michael. It is affirmed, in this Journal, that the Emperor complained of this to the King of France, and that, among others, he named Mr Akakia as one of the chief Conductors of That Affair; that Mr Akakia was committed to the Bastille; but that he pursued the Scheme, which he had begun, rather with more Application, and had more leisure to keep up the Correspondence he had settled; and that his Letters and Negotiations continued their Train, notwithstanding his Imprisonment; and that the Business was so far advanced, that nothing but the Death (7) of the Duke of Longueville hindered the Execution of it. The Medals were already prepared. This second Imprisonment of Mr Akakia lasted but five or six Months, if I can depend upon one, whom I have consulted, since the reading of That Journal. This Person told me farther, that Mr Akakia was so overjoyed to find himself pitched upon, as a proper Person to foment the Troubles of Hungary, that, though he was then very sick, he soon recovered Health enough to set out on the Expedition. Not daring to take the way of Germany, he went into England, where he embarked for Sweden, from whence he went by Sea to Riga, and from thence to Poland; where he died. He was a Man of Intrigue; and acted vigorously for the Conclusion of the Peace of Oliva.

[E] They, who place the Death — in the Year 1605, are strangely mistaken. This the Author of the Diarium Biographicum did (8): Thus he expresses himself, under that Year; "Martinus Akakia, Gallus, CATALA UNENSIS, Medicinæ Doctor & Professor Lutetiæ Paris. — Martin Akakia, a French Man, of CHALONS, Doctor of Physic, and Professor at Paris." After which he gives us the Titles of some Books, of which Akakia, of Châlons, is the true Author. If he had known, that Brissot, whose Disciple our Akakia was, was no longer in France, in the Year 1519, he would not have prolonged the Life of this Disciple of his to the Year 1605; or he would have taken some Notice of so remarkable an old Age, as his would have been. His Mistake might arise from hence, that a Physician died in the Year 1605, whose Name was Akakia. He was a Grand-Child of Brissot's Disciple. Guy Patin speaks of him in this manner, with his cynical Liberty; "Two Doctors of our Society conspired in writing the Apology for Theodorus Mayerne Turquet; to wit, Seguin, who always supported the Quacks, and his Brother-in-law Akakia, who died in the Year 1605, of the Pox, which he brought with him from Italy, whither he went with M. de Betune Ambassador at Rome (9)." If our Martin Akakia was capable of getting such a Disease at the time of this Embassy, he must, without all Contradiction, have been the oldest Whoremaster in Europe.

(7) He was kill'd at the Passage of the Rhine,
June 12, 1672.

(8) Hennin-
gus Witte, Professor at Riga, in Li- vonnia.

(9) Patin,
Letter VIII.
of the first E-dicion.

AKAKIA (MARTIN) a Parisian, Son of the preceeding, was created Doctor of Physic of the Faculty of Paris, in the Year 1572. Tristan de Roasting, Knight of the Order, and Amiot Bishop of Auxerre, became his Patrons [A]; and, at their Solicitation, Charles IX. gave him the Office of first Reader and Regius Professor of Chirurgery in the Year 1574. Four Years after, he was made Second Physician to Henry III. (a). As he was ambitious of producing the most elaborate Lectures in the Royal Schools, which took up a great deal of his time, he feared, that the visiting of his Patients, and the Function he was obliged to discharge at Court, would be too heavy a Burthen for him. So that, to preserve himself from sinking under so many Labours, he resigned his Professorship, with the King's leave, to John Martin, a Person

(a) See Re-
marque [A].

[A] Tristan and Amiot became his Patrons. An apter Proof cannot be given of this than the Words, which I am going to cite out of a Panegyric of Henry III. It is Martin Akakia who speaks: "Vix dum igitur in publica professione, qua nos Carolus Rex Christianissimus, Tristandus Roasting Equite Torquato fortissimo, & Jacobo Amyoto Altissidorensium Episcopo de nobis referentibus, cohonestaverat, quadriennium compleveramus, cum Tu nos inter tuos Medicos allegisti & conscripsisti. — I had scarce compleated four Years in the Exercise of That public Profession, with which the most Christian King Charles, at the Request of the brave Tristan de Roasting, Knight of the Order, and James Amiot, Bishop of Auxerre, had honoured me, when you gave me a Rank among your own Physicians." This Panegyric was printed at Paris in the Year 1578, with this Title: Martini Akakia Regii & Medici & Professoris ab suam in ordinem Regiorum Medicorum co-optationem Panegyricus, Henrico Valejo Regi Christianissimo dictus.

[B] At

(5) Gesner's Biblioth.
fol. 500.

(6) It came out in Sept.
1693.

son very capable of That Office, as his Writings testify [B]. But John Martin, rightly judging that it would be incompatible with his other Employments, if he would discharge it conscientiously, restored it to Martin Akakia; who disposed of This Employment in favour of his Son-in-Law Peter Seguin, and died very soon after, in the Year 1588, being about Forty nine Years of Age. He left Two Sons, of whom I am going to speak, and a Daughter, who was married to Peter Seguin, one of the most learned Physicians of the Faculty of Paris, and who exercised his Father-in-Law's Profession in the Royal College from the Year 1588, to the Year 1599. The Treatise de Morbis muliebribus, and the Consilia Medica, of our Martin, are scarce known to any one, but under the false Supposition, that they come from the same hand, as the Treatises of Martin Akakia of Cbalons. I have not met with any Bibliographer, who distinguishes the Father's Writings from Those of the Son; both are ascribed to Martin Akakia Catalaunensis. I should have been deceived in this point as well as Moreri, had I not consulted some Friends [C] about it. The Two Books de Morbis muliebribus were inserted in the Collection, which a Physician, whose Name is Israel Spacbius, published at Strasbourg, in 1597, of several Treatises concerning the Diseases of Women; and, as for the Consilia Medica, they are to be found in a Collection of the like Works published by Scholzius at Franckfort, in 1598. It is highly probable, that Israel Spacbius believed the Two Books de Morbis muliebribus to be a Work of the Disciple of Brissot. It was, doubtless, He, who inserted in the Title, Martini Akakia Medici Regii & in Universitate Parisiensis Professoris Medicinæ doctissimi, &c. This Work had never been printed, but had been handed about in Manuscript. Spacbius knew, in general, that Martin Akakia wrote it; and he innocently believed, that This Akakia was the same Author, who had published some Works already; thus he gave him the Titles of the Akakia of Cbalons, and not That of Regius Professor, which the Author would have assumed, if he had published his Book himself.

[B] As his Writings testify, Renatus Moreau took care to publish two Pieces of this Author: to wit, Prælectiones in librum Hippocratis Cui de morbis internis, Paris. 1637. Prælectiones in librum Hippocratis Cui de aëre, aquis, & locis, Paris. 1646. He prefixed the Author's Elogy to the first. There are likewise some Latin Verses of Antony Morneau prefixed to the second, in praise of the same Martin, who was one of the Commissioners at the famous Conference of du Perren, and du Pleffis.

[C] Had I not consulted some Friends,] The Professor Drelincourt was pleased to inform me, that Martin Akakia, Author of the Treatise de Morbis muliebribus, not only cites Fernel and Amatus Lusitanus, but also Staliger's Work against Cardan, and the Cosmocrutice of Cornelius Gemma. Fernel dedicated his Books to Henry II. who did not begin his Reign till the Year 1547. Amatus Lusitanus composed his Second Century at Rome (1) in the Year 1551 (2): I say at Rome; whither Pope Julius III. had invited him. Staliger's Book against Cardan was not printed till 1557. That of Cornelius Gemma was written on occasion of the Star, which appeared in the Year 1572. and was not printed till 1575. This Martin Akakia, therefore, must have been living in the Year 1575. Mr Drelincourt's Remarks prove this plainly. Now, as I had read (3), that Martin Akakia was Royal Professor of Physic, in the Year 1577, and that Peter Seguin succeeded him, on the twentieth of September, 1594; I was desirous of knowing what William du Val had said upon this Subject, in his Catalogue of the Professors of the Royal College. This I accomplished by the Assistance of Mr Pinson de Rialles (4), who took the Pains, in a most obliging manner, to send me several Particulars concerning the Akakia's. He informed me among other things, I. That the Martin Akakia of Cbalons, Physician to Francis I. died in the Year 1551. From this Fact, and the Remarks of Mr Drelincourt, it necessarily results, that the Author of the Book de Morbis muliebribus, is not Martin Akakia Catalaunensis. II. That it is true indeed, that Peter Seguin had a Grant, in the Year 1588, of the Office of Royal Lecturer of Chirurgery, upon the Resignation of Martin Akakia, his Father-in-law, but that he was obliged to take out new Letters, in the Year 1594. And the Reason was this: During the Civil Wars, the Number of Royal Lectures increased much more than the Foundation could support; several Persons having surreptitiously obtained Grants of that Place. Henry IV. chafired Part of those Lecturers, in 1594, and gave out new Letters to those, whom he retained. Peter Seguin was one of the latter. And for this Reason his Promotion was dated in the Year 1594, by the Author of the Antiquities of Paris; but, if That Author had been exact, he would not have been contented to say, that Peter Seguin succeeded Martin Akakia on the twentieth of September, 1594. He would have been afraid of making his Readers imagine, that Martin Akakia died the same Year, and that Peter Seguin commenced from that Time Royal Professor. Now whoever should say this, would be guilty of two great Mistakes.

(4) Abbate in the Parliament of Paris.

(1) That, which Akakia quotes without naming it; but which he quotes in Centur. 2. Curat. 39. pag. 289.

(2) He says of himself, pag. 136.

(3) In the Antiquities of Paris, by Father Du Breuil, pag. 568.

(4) He resigned his Place on being made Royal Reader in Physick, on the 10th of Sept. 1609, by the Resignation of John Duret.

AKAKIA (MARTIN) Son of the Preceding, was created Doctor of Physic, at Paris, in 1598. He was made Royal Professor of Chirurgery, the Year after, by the Resignation of Peter Seguin, his Brother-in-Law (a). He took a Journey to Rome, and died of a Distemper, at Paris, in the Year 1605, without leaving any Posterity. He lies buried with his Father at St Germain de l'Auxerrois. His Brother JOHN AKAKIA, created Doctor of Physic, in the Year 1612, was Physician to Lewis XIII. and died in Savoy in the Year 1630. He left many Children [A].

[A] He left many Children.] I. MARTIN AKAKIA, Royal Professor of Chirurgery (1), who resigned his Place in favour of Matburin Denyau, and died some Years after, in 1677, leaving a Son, who was Clerk to the Comptroller General of the Finances, and a Daughter married to Mr le Vayer de Boutigni, Counsellor in the Parliament of Paris. II. ROGER AKAKIA. He is the Man of Intrigue, taken Notice of in the Remark [D] of the first Akakia. III. CHARLES AKAKIA: a very pious Clergyman, attached to the Port-Royal. IV. SIMON AKAKIA de Pleffis, Agent for the Port-Royal Ladies. V. N. AKAKIA, known by the Name of Mr de Lac. He has the Care of the Edition of the late Mr de Saez's Books on the Scripture. There were other Children of John Akakia, besides these five.

(1) He had the Post, when William du Val published his Catalogue in 1644.

A K I B A, a famous Rabbin, flourished, a little after Titus had destroyed the City of Jerusalem. He was a Jew only by the Mother's side; and it is pretended, that his Father was a Defendant of Sijera, General of the Army of Tyre. Akiba lived in the Country, till he was forty Years of Age; where he had no very Honourable Employ; for he kept the Flocks of Calba Schwua, a rich Citizen of Jerusalem. At length he applied himself to Study, at the Instigation of his Master's Daughter, who promised to marry him, if he made a great Progress in the Sciences. He applied himself so earnestly to Study, for twenty four Years, in the Academies, that, afterwards, he found himself surrounded with a crowd of Disciples, as one of the greatest Masters, that had been in Israel. He had twenty four Thousand Scholars. He declared for the Impostor Barcochebas (a), and maintained, that the Words of Balaam, A Star shall come out of Jacob, were to be understood of him, and that he was the true Messiah (b). He was not satisfy'd with anointing him (c), as Samuel did the two first Kings of the Jews; He even submitted to become his Equerry (d). The Forces, which the Emperor Hadrian sent against the Jews, who, under the Conduct of this false Messiah, had committed horrible Massacres, extinguished this Faction. Akiba was taken, and punished with a cruel Death (e): His Flesh was torn with Iron Combs; but in such a manner, that they lengthened out the Torture, and put him to Death, as it were with a slow Fire (f). He lived one Hundred and twenty Years, and was buried, with his Wife, in a Cave, on a Mountain not far from Tiberias. His twenty four Thousand Disciples were buried below him in the same Mountain (g). I mention these particulars, without pretending, that they all deserve Credit. It is thought, that he wrote a spurious Book, under the Name of the Patriarch Abraham [A]. Some say, he was guilty of a more unpardonable Offence than this; namely, that he altered the Hebrew Text of the Bible [B], in order to answer an Objection of the Christians [C]. The Jews give him great Commendations [D]; and look upon him as a Man, who taught them all the unwritten Law [E]. The Remark, which we shall make upon this, will contain some Particulars

(a) This word signifies in Hebrew, Son of the Star.

(b) See Joh. à Lent. Schediasma Historico Philologico de Judæorum Pseudo-Messias, pag. 9.

(c) Ibid. p. 14.

(d) Ibid. p. 9, & 15.

(e) Ibid. p. 14. ex Tractatu Talmudico Erufin, fol. 21.

(f) Ibid. p. 15. ex Tractatu Talmudico Berachos, fol. 61.

(g) Ibid. p. 15. ex Autore libelli de Cippis ab Hottingero editi, & Latine translata.

[A] That he wrote a spurious Book, under the Name of the Patriarch Abraham. It is entitled, Seppher Jezirab; that is, The Book of the Creation. See the Remark [E] of the Article A B R A H A M, and add there this Supplement. Lambecius ought not to have said that this Book of the Creation was printed the first time at Mantua (1); for the Edition of Mantua in 4to, with the Commentary of Abraham Ben-Doir, and several other Rabbies, whose Names you may find in the 536th Page of the Critical History of the Old Testament, had been preceded by the Paris Edition, in 8vo, 1552. The same Book was printed at Basil in Folio, in the Year 1587, with several others of the same Stamp. It is of great Weight with the Cabalists; they say, they work Miracles by it (2).

(1) Lambecii Histor. Literar. Prodrom. p. 53. apud Placcium de Pseudonymis, pag. 134.

(2) Placcius, ibid.

[B] He altered the Hebrew Text of the Bible. This Alteration relates to the Age of the Patriarchs, when they began to have Children. Every one knows, they were older at that Time, according to the Bible of the LXX, than according to the Hebrew Bible. For Example; Adam, according to the Hebrew Text, was one hundred and thirty Years old, when his Wife brought forth Seth; but, according to the Translation of the LXX, he was, at that time, in his two hundred and thirtieth Year. Most Divines prefer the Hebrew Text to the Greek. They, who contend for the Greek, are but few in Number, but, in Recompence for this, they are commonly Men of singular Learning. Father Paul Pezron, a Monk of the strictest Order of Cisterians, and Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, is one of this Minority. He pretends, among other things, that the Jews altered the Hebrew Text in relation to the Times which pass'd between the Destruction of Jerusalem, under Titus, and the twelfth Year of the Emperor Hadrian (3). He proves this by the Translation of Aquila, published in the twelfth Year of That Emperor, which agrees very well with the Hebrew Text at this present time. Now as Aquila, going over from the Christian to the Jewish Religion, put himself under the Tuition of Akiba; it seems very probable to Father Pezron, that This Alteration of the Scripture ought to be imputed to That Rabbi. It is certain that Akiba was "at that time in great Esteem among the Jews, and chiefly among those of Palästina; for he was about forty Years Master of a College, which they had at Jabne, or at Tiberias, near the Lake of Genesareth (4). — He had many Disciples; he pass'd for the most learned Man among the Jews; and had so much Credit

(3) Pezron, of the Anti-quity of Times, cap. 16. pag. 289. Edit. of Paris 1687, in 4to.

(4) Ibid. p. 290.

"with them, that it was he, who declared that Barcochebas was the Messiah (5)."

[C] In order to answer an Objection of the Christians. "The Christians never disputed more strongly against the Jews, than in those Times, says the same Author (6), and never oppos'd them more effectually. For they had nothing more to do, than to shew them the Gospel on the one side, and, on the other, the Ruins of Jerusalem, which were before their Eyes, to convince them that JESUS CHRIST, who had so plainly foretold it's Destruction, was the Prophet whom Moses had promised. — But they press'd them very close with their own Traditions, which import'd, That CHRIST should manifest himself at the end of about six thousand Years, by shewing them, that this Number of Years was actually accomplished. This greatly embarrassed them, and it doubles the Reason, why it is said, in the Talmud, that Akiba and Samsai computed the Years (7) out of which such powerful Arguments were drawn against them." It is certain, that the Jews might have answered the Objection drawn from the six thousand Years, had the Bible been such, as we have it at present; for it wants much of that Number of Years, from Adam to JESUS CHRIST.

[D] The Jews give him great Commendations. They called him Setbumtaab (8), that is, The Authentic. One of them (9) says, it would fill a whole Volume to speak of him according to his Worth. His Name, says another, ran all over the Universe, and we have received all the Oral Law from His Mouth; Hujus nomen (inquit autor libri Zemach David) exit ab uno extremo mundi usque ad aliud, atque totam legem Oralem ex ejus ore accepimus (10).

[E] Look upon him as a Man, who taught them all the unwritten Law. See the Passage just now quoted, and the Book, which Father Paul Pezron published at Paris in the Year 1691 (11). We find there (12), that Rabbi Akiba, the Son of Joseph, was the first Compiler of the Deuteroseph, or Jewish Traditions, and the chief of the Traditionaries; that he collected the Traditions, which Hillel, Simon, and other ancient Doctors had invented; that he added others of his own Invention to them; that they were in vogue together till the end of the Vth Century, at which time others were added to them, of which the Talmud was compos'd; that Akiba (13) employ'd the Rabbi Meir, the most famous of all his Disciples, to commit part of these Traditions to Writing, out of which the Misna was afterwards compos'd

(5) Ibid. p. 291.

(6) Id. ib.

(7) Talmud in Tractatu de Synedrio.

(8) See Joh. à Lent de Pseudo-Messias, pag. 9.

(9) Zacutus in Juchisin, pag. 66. apud Lent, pag. 19.

(10) Koenig. Biblioth. pag. 19.

(11) Entirety of the Antiquity of Times.

(12) Page 61.

(13) Page 63. ex Zemach David, p. 99.

clear of the Objection made in relation to the Three Days and Three Nights, which JESUS CHRIST was to pass in the Bowels of the Earth, as Jonas did in the Whale's Belly (b). I must not omit, that his Poetry was very much esteemed. He wrote a Latin Tragedy, called Roxana, at the Representation of which, in a College at Cambridge, there happened a very remarkable Accident (c). A Lady was so frightened with the Last Word of the Tragedy, Sequitur, Sequar, which was pronounced with a very furious Air, that she was distracted all her Life-time after. Alabaster was yet living in 1630. His Apparatus in Revelationem Jesu Christi was printed at Antwerp in the Year 1607. As for the Spiraculum tubarum, seu fons spiritualium expositionum ex equivocis Pentagloti (d) significationibus, and his Ecce sponsus venit, seu tuba pulcritudinis, hoc est demonstratio quod non sit illicitum nec impossibile computare durationem mundi & tempus secundi adventus Christi; they were printed at London (e). From these Titles we may judge of the Author's Taste; but we shall form a better Notion of it from the Words of Andrew Rivet [B], which I shall produce. We must not forget his Lexicon Hebraicum, in Folio. I have taken no Notice of his Motives of his Conversion, which he published, after having embraced the Catholic Religion; we know well enough that this is the Practice of those, who change their Religion; A Custom more in vogue at that Time, than at present. The Public had not, then, leisure to be disgusted at this sort of Books. That of Alabaster was refuted by Roger Fenton (f).

(b) See Remarke [A].

(c) Fuller's Worthies.

(d) See the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library: But it should be Pentateuchi.

(e) See the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library.

(f) His Reply is intitled, An Answer to W. Alabaster's Motives. Lond. 1599. in 4to

" a Foundation of Weeds and Refuse, to explain to us
" his Mystical Theology, and (as he himself calls it)
" the internal Sense and Marrow of the Scripture;
" though in reality, nothing else but a Madman's
" Dreams. Upon which account it was of ill repute,
" and deservedly felt the Church's censorial Rod, at " Rome. For who can bear, that, in so serious a " Matter, I mean in explaining the Scripture, any " one should vend for approved Wares, what are but
" the delirious Productions of his own disordered
" Brain?" He gives afterwards some Examples of " this Author's Explications.

I shall quote presently a Protestant, who reproaches the Roman Catholics for tolerating the idle Fancies of Alabaster.

I have been informed by a learned Person, that most Readers do not love to be told, in general, that such or such an Author has advanc'd a chimerical Opinion. This excites their Curiosity, and they want to have it immediately satisfy'd, and even without being oblig'd to have recourse to some other Book, which they have in their Library. This learned Person therefore, would have thought I ought to have said nothing of Isidorus Pelusiotus, or that, having observed, in general, that his Opinion is grotesque, I ought to have produc'd it; especially considering that Father Garasse's Book is seldom found in the Library of private Persons. I profit by this Advice, and find by experience it is well founded; for which Reason I have chosen, upon many Occasions, to add to my Commentaries, rather than excite the Curiosity of my Readers in vain: Isidorus Pelusiotus, then, in order to complete the Number of Days, suppos'd, That the Darkness, at the time of the Passion, ought to be taken for one Night, and that the return of the Light 'till Sun-set ought to be consider'd as a Day. Read what follows: " I answer, That it is true, there is " some Difficulty in reconciling this Passage (4) with
" the Truth of History; and that it was one of the " chief Arguments, by which Julian, the Apostle,
" endeavour'd to overthrow the Truth of the Gos" pel; however it is not so desperate, but that a " true and natural Exposition may be given of it,
" without having recourse to Fancies; which some " have done, though without any ill Design; as we " have seen above, concerning the Hour of the Re" surrection. Isidorus Pelusiotus, in the 114th Epistle
" of the first Book of his Epistles, gives us a new
" Explication of it in these Words:—Sic habeto;
" sexta hora Parasceves in crucem actus est Dominus,
" ab hac hora usque ad nonam tenebrae extiterunt;
" has tu noctem intellige: Rursus hora nona lux;
" hæc tu pro die habe: Nox rursum Parasceves:
" Tum dies Sabbathi: Tum nox Sabbathi Dominici
" Diei. — Take it thus; Our Lord was crucified
" at the sixth Hour, on Good Friday; from this " Hour to the ninth, there was Darkness; call this " one Night; again, at the ninth Hour there was " Light; let this stand for one Day: Then follow'd
" the Night of Good Friday: Then the Day of the " Jewish Sabbath: Then the Night of the Christian " Sabbath, or Lord's Day. — It is true, indeed, ac" cording to this Exposition, that JESUS CHRIST re-
" main'd three Days and three Nights, in the Bowels

" of the Earth; but they are Days and Nights redu" ced to a very narrow Compas (5).

[B] A better Notion of it, from the Words of Andrew Rivet.] " Anno, 1600, says he (6), qui-" dam Pontificus Anglus Gastelmus Alabasterus, edi-
" dit Antwerpæ librum, cui titulum fecit, Appara" tus in revelationem Christi, in quo profectus se no-
" vum & admirabilem rationem asserre investigandi
" Prophetiarum mysteria ex Scriptura se ipsam inter-
" pretante. Ibi novam Cabalam instituit, ex qua
" quilibet ex quolibet educit, & mutatis, vel inver-
" sis, aut separatis, & disjunctis, Ebraeorum vocabu" lorum literis, aut syllabis, novis etiam significati-
" bus contra grammaticæ rationem assignatis, diversis
" nominibus aut verbis, omnia pervertit, & ipsi adeo
" commentum placet, ut, quamvis sæpe excipiat se
" nolle præjudicare Latine versioni, cum tamen vi-
" deat ex ea nullis fiduculis sensum, quem sibi propo-
" nit, posse erui, non veretur dicere, pag. 61, *De-
" um Christi & Religionis Christianæ mysteria per
" illam verborum formam in Ebraeo legis codice ex-
" pressisse, quæ sensum carnalem, & à divina mente
" alienum, lectori prima fronte offerret, atque ita
" voluisse ut in Ecclesia Christiana nulla possum legere
" secundo versio, quam quæ secundum Ebraeorum ver-
" borum corticem conciperetur, ut hoc modo sapientia
" divina non esset cuivis profano obvia. Sed postea
" idem, per totum illud opus, ipsa sapientiam illam
" divinam ex Scriptura, si Deo placet, penetrabilibus
" haurit, ut ne ulli quidem hæcenus ex Patribus san-" ctissimis vel unius loci talis interpretatio in me-
" tem unquam venerit, ne ipsis quidem omniscitis
" Pontificibus. — In the Year 1607, a certain " English Roman Catholic, named William Alabaster,
" published, at Antwerp, a Book, entituled *Apparatus
" in Revelationem Christi*; in which he professes to " give us a new and admirable Method of investiga" ting the mysterious Sense of the Prophecies, by " making the Scripture it's own Interpreter. In " this Work, he drew up a new Cabala, by the help
" of which he extracts any thing from any thing;
" and perverts the whole Scripture, by changing, or " inverting, or separating, and disjoining, the Let" ters of the Hebrew Words, or Syllables; sometimes
" by assigning new Significations to them, contrary " to the Rules of Grammar, or by substituting new " Nouns or Verbs: Nay he is so fond of his own
" Comment, that, tho' he frequently assures us he in" tends no Prejudice to the Latin Version, yet, when
" he cannot, with all the torturing imaginable, wrest
" That to the Sense, he would extract from it, he " is not ashamed to declare, Pag. 61, That God ex-
" press'd the Mysteries of CHRIST, and the Christian " Religion, under That Form of Words, which is " in the Hebrew Code of the Law, which, at first " sight, presents to the Reader a carnal Sense, and " wide of the Divine Intention, and that it is his " Will, that no Version should be publicly read in " the Christian Church, but what is conceiv'd accord" ing to the Bark, or external meaning of the He" brew Words; that by this means the Divine Wis" dom might not be obvious to the Prophane. Yet
" this very Author afterwards, through his subtle
" Work, so exposes his divine Wisdom, by drawing
" it*

(c) Garasse's Curious Doctrines, pag. 592, 593.

(6) Rivet. Hæroge ad Scripturam sacram, cap. 15. Oper. Tom. 2. p. 937.

(4) It is That of the 12th Chapter of St Matthew, where it is said, that the Son of Man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth.

"it out of it's Recesses, that none of the Holy Fathers, not even the Popes themselves, with all their Infallibility, ever dream'd of one single Interpretation, such as our Author gives us." Rivet, having produc'd two Examples of the visionary Notions of this Author (7), continues his Discourse thus; "Alia hujus farinae multa, pag. 57. & seqq. afferuntur à nugatore blasphemò, quibus syllabas unius nominis & verbi seorsum accipiens, & à sua radice divellens, omnia sursum deorsum vertit: Et tamen in regno Pontificio toleratur hæc novitas, ubi simplex Scripturæ ex ipsa Scriptura interpretatio hæc refores infimulatur. Sed de his hæcenus. Videant Pontificii, an suo Alabastro non debeant nigrum præfigere theta: Nos hominis insolentissimam audaciam detestamur, etsi cum Jesuita Possévinus suis Catholicis Scripturibus inferuerit, Appar. Sacri Tomo primo. — This blasphemous Trifler has given us more of the same Stamp, Page 57, &c. in which, by taking the Syllables of a single Noun or Verb apart, he overturns the whole Sense. And yet this novel Practice is tolerated in a Roman Catholic Country, where the simple Interpretation of Scripture by itself is charged with Heresy. But so much for this Subject. I leave it to the Roman Catholics to judge, whether their Alabaster ought not to undergo the Sentence of Condemnation: For my own part, I detest the shameless Impudence of the Man, notwithstanding the Jesuit Possévin has "inferred him among his Catholic Writers." Observe I. That the Work, out of which this is taken, was publish'd the first time in 1626, and that the Edition in Folio, printed in the Year 1652, which I make use of, had been revised, corrected, and enlarged by the Author. II. That Alabaster's Book had been condemn'd at Rome, the 30th of January, 1610, and that the Author was return'd to the Bosom of the Church of England, a considerable time before the first Edition of Rivet's Book. The Congregation of the Index express themselves in the following Terms; I set them down, because they seem to infer that the Apparatus of Alabaster was reprinted at Rome, with some Alterations and Corrections. Apparatus in Revelationem Jesu Christi Auctore Gulielmo Alabastro Anglo, Antwerpæ 1607. Et Antipbesi, Benedicti à Benedictis Veneti, contra Gulielmum Witackerum, nisi fuerint ex CORRECTIS AB AUCTORIBUS ET ROMÆ IMPRESSIS, cum approbatione P. Mag. Sacri Palatii. But perhaps they meant only, that, in case those Authors should correct their Works, and suffer them to be printed at Rome, with the Approbation of the Master of the Sacred Palace, they would then license the new Edition. I believe this to be the true Sense. Samuel Andreas, a German Divine, wrote a Book (8) against the Cabala of Dr Henry Moor (9), wherein he produces some Influences of Alabaster's Chimeras (10).

(8) See the Index Librorum prohibitorum, printed at Rome in the Time of Alexander VII. pag. 206.

(9) The Title is, Examen Cabalæ Henr. Mori.

(10) Andr. Exam. Cab. H. Mori.

(a) Plin. lib. 4. c. 12. and not cap. 2. as in Moreri.

(b) Joseph. de Bello Judaico, lib. 7. cap. 29.

(c) Cum Vologeses, Parthorum Rex, auxilia adversus Alanos, ducentes alterum ex Vespasiani liberis depopulisset, omni ope contendit, ut ipse potissimum mitteretur. Sueton. in Domit. c. 2.

(d) Continui's Hist. of France.

(e) Amm. Marcell. lib. 30. c. 3.

(f) See Geomark [B].

ALAINS, in Latin ALANI, a barbarous People, who greatly contributed to the Ruin of the Roman Empire. Pliny places them in Europe, beyond the Mouths of the Danube (a); but Josephus points out their Situation more exactly; for he places them near the Palus Maotis, and the Tanais (b). He describes a furious Eruption, which they made into Media, and Armenia, in the Reign of Vespasian. It was at that time, that Vologeses, King of the Partians, desired That Emperor to send him Assistance against the Alani, under the Command of one of his Sons; upon which Domitian used his Endeavours to obtain this Commission (c). This might induce Moreri to tell us, though a little confusedly as to Chronology, that these Barbarians had already made themselves known from the Time of Domitian. But this want of Chronological Exactness is nothing in comparison of the rest. He tells us, that the Alani joined with the Vandals, with the Suevi, and afterwards with the Goths, in the beginning of the Fifth Century; that they fought against the French in the Year 505; that they ravaged Gaul; that Gunderic, the Son of Aodigigis, was their Chief; that, about the Year 509, they passed into Spain, where they settled; and that they were defeated there by Vallia, King of the Goths, in 418. Such gross Mistakes, surely, must fly in the Reader's Face; for in short, a People, conquered in 418, in a Country, into which they came about the Year 509, is a Story, sufficient to awaken the most languishing Attention. The Truth is, Moreri is guilty of an Anachronism of no less than an Hundred Years. The Alani advanced, in 406, from the Banks of the Danube to the Rhine, without meeting any Resistance; and being joined by the Vandals, who had escaped from a Battel lost against the Franks, they entered Gaul. Their King's Name was Respendial: the King of the Vandals's Name was Gunderic, the Son of Godisigil, who had been killed in the late Battel. Several other Nations of Barbarians joined them, and caused a prodigious Desolation in all the Gauls. Part of the Alani, under the Conduct of Utacus, who had succeeded Respendial, passed into Spain, in the Year 409, and settled in the Province of Carthagina, and in Lusitania; the other Part kept their Ground in Gaul, under the Conduct of Two Kings. The Alani in Spain, defeated by Vallia, King of the Goths, near Merida, in 418, were forced to submit to Honorius. Their King Vatacus lost his Life in the Battel (d). We meet with certain of the Alani, in the Year 464, who threw off the Yoke of the Huns, after the Death of Attila, and entered Italy in order to settle there; but Ricimer, marching against them with the Forces of the Empire, defeated them in such a manner near Bergamo, that but very few of them escaped, and their King Beorgor was killed in the Battel. The Huns, having committed great Ravage and Slaughter in the Country of the Alani, had a long time before associated themselves with those, who escaped their Fury. This we read in Ammianus Marcellinus (e). He gives us a long Description of the Manners of the Alani (f) and says, they were the same People, to which Antiquity gave the Name of Massagetæ [A]; he pretends they

[A] The People to whom Antiquity gave the Name of Massagetæ. There are two Passages in relation to this in Ammianus Marcellinus (1); the first is in the fifth Chapter of the twenty third Book, and will admit of no Difficulty; "Lucullus, per Albanos & Massagetæ, quos Alanos nunc appellamus, hæc quoque natione perrupta, vidit Caspius lacus. — Lucullus, by the Albani and Massagetæ, now called Alani, forcing his Way thro' this People, came in sight of the Caspian Sea." The other is in the second Chapter of the thirty first Book, in a Place where the Manuscripts are so confused, that we must have Recourse to Critical Conjectures, to find in it what I attribute here to Marcellinus. It is, therefore, only upon the Conjecture of the learned Valesius, that This Historian is made to say aduquæ Alanos they inhabited the vast Solitudes of Scythia, and gave their Name to the Neighbouring Nations, as fast as they subdued them, and spread this Name as far as the River Ganges. Though he represents them Cruel and Savage [B], yet he does not make them equal the Huns in Brutality; and he remarks that they pillaged and plundered as far as the Palus Mæotis, and as far as Media and Armenia.

(1) Moreri cites the first Book, which is 13th.

Alanos pervenit, veteres Massagetæ. — He penetrated as far as the Alani, formerly the Massagetæ. Now, as the first Passage plainly proves, that Marcellinus placed the Alani in Asia, we may, I think, contest, with this learned Commentator, the Explanation he gives of these Words of the Text: "Hister Sauromatas prætermat ad usque amnem Tanaim pertinentes, qui Asiam terminat ab Europa. Hoc transitio in immensum extensas Scythiæ solitudines Alani inhabitant (2). — The River Ister (or the Danube) flows by the Country of the Sauromatæ, which reaches as far the River Tanais, the Boundary of Asia and Europe, beyond which, the Alani inhabit the immense Deserts of Scythia." Valesius will have hoc transitio (beyond which) to relate to the Danube, and not to the Tanais; and, in proof, he alleges Pliny, Dionysius Charracenus, Orosius, and Tzetzes, who place the Alani in Sarmatia, and beyond the Danube; but the Question is not what others have said of it, but only what Marcellinus's Opinion was; and, upon this Foot, it seems to me, that hoc transitio must be referred to the Tanais; for, besides that the Massagetæ did not inhabit between the Tanais and the Danube, we find a little after, that this Historian places the Alani in the Neighbourhood of the Amazons, and makes them rob and plunder, on the one side, as far as Media and Armenia, and, on the other, as far as the Palus Mæotis, and the Bosphorus Cimærius. "Parte alia prope Amazonum sedes Alani sunt Orienti adclines, diffusi per populos gentes & amplas, Asiaticas vergentes in tractus, quos dilatari ad usque Gangem accipi fluvium (3). — latrocinando & venando ad usque Mæotica stagna & Cimærium Bosphorum, itidemque Armenios discurrantes & Mediam (4)." All this shews, that he has not followed the Opinion of those Authors, who placed the Alani in the European Sarmatia; for where would be the wonder, if Robbers, thus situated, should ravage not only Media and Armenia, but likewise the Palus Mæotis? Marcellinus would not be the only Author, who places these Barbarians in Asia; Does not Valesius cite Procopius (5), who places them between Caucasus and the Caspian Port? Lastly, What does Moreri mean by these Words: Pliny places them in the European Sarmatia, where Lithuania is at present? Doubtless he means, that the Sarmatia of the Ancients is the present Lithuania: But this is false; for Lithuania is but a small Part of the ancient European Sarmatia. Observe, that Ptolemy acknowledges two Nations of Alani, one in Europe, the other in Asia.

[B] He represents them Cruel and Savage. They had no other Houses than their Waggon; in them they begot, and brought up, their Children, and abode no longer in a Place, than till they had consumed their Provisions. Fleth and Milk were their only Food; and they did not manure their Ground. "Nec enim ulla sunt illis tuguria aut versandi vomeris cura: Sed carne & copia visitant lactis, pluvris superfluentes. — assumptisque pabulis velut carpentis civitates impositas vehunt, marefque supra cum feminis coeunt, & nascuntur in his & educantur infantes (6)." They accustomed themselves early to ride on Horseback, and looked upon it as mean to travel on Foot. They were so fond of War, that they esteemed those happy, who died in it, and loaded those with Injuries, and Reproaches of Cowardice, who died of Age and of Sickness. They took a pride in nothing more than in having killed a Man; they cut off the Heads of those, whom they killed; they flayed them, and made use of their Skins as Ornaments for their Horses; they had no Temples, nor worshipped any thing but a naked Sword stuck in the Ground. It was their God Mars, the Patron of the Countries, which they inhabited. They foretold future Events by the help of certain Rode, selected with magical Incantations. "Judicatur ibi beatus, qui in prælio profuderit animam: Senescentes enim & fortuitis moribus mundo digressos ut degeneres & ignavos conviciis atrocibus insectantur: Nec quidquam est quod elatius fassent, quam homine quolibet occiso: Proque exuviis gloriosis, interfectorum avulsis capitibus detractas pelles pro phaleris jumentis accommodant bellatoribus. Nec templum apud eos visitur, aut delubrum, &c. (7)." This is the Picture, which Ammianus Marcellinus draws of these Barbarians; and it is not improper to represent to those, who are acquainted only with civilized Nations, that there are others so savage, as more nearly to resemble Brute Beasts, than the Human Species. This may afford many Reflexions both Physical and Moral, and make us wonder at the infinite variety of Customs and Dispositions of which our Nature is susceptible, and, among which, for one that is good, we may count above an Hundred thousand bad.

AL AIS, a City of France, in the Severnes, in the Diocese of Nîmes, five Leagues from Uzès (a), is the Capital of an Ancient Lordship, which was erected into an Earldom, and possessed by Charles de Valois, Duke of Angoulême, a Natural Son of Charles IX. Lewis Emanuel de Valois was long known by the Name of Count d'Alais (b); he was Colonel General of the Light Horse of France, Governor of Provence, and Son of this Duke of Angoulême, and Father of Frances Mary de Valois, Wife of Lewis of Lorraine, Duke of Joyeuse. By this Marriage the Earldom of Alais fell to the House of Lorraine, settled in France; for, from the Marriage of the Duke of Joyeuse with Frances Mary de Valois, sprung Lewis-Joseph of Lorraine, Duke of Guise, who died at Paris of the Small-Pox, the 30th of July 1671, aged twenty one Years (c). The City of Alais became Episcopal after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes [A]. Some will have it to be the Alesia described by Julius Cæsar, in the seventh Book of his Commentaries. Mr de Mandajors, who is Mayor of it, wrote a Dissertation on this Subject. See the Journal of the Learned, of the 9th of May, 1695, at the 321st Page of the Edition of Holland.

(a) From Baudrand's Lexic. Geograph.

(b) It is he, of whom Gaffendus speaks so often, and to whom he wrote so many Letters, Ludovico Valesio.

(c) In 1685.

[A] The City of Alais became Episcopal after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes (1.) It is not without reason that I mark this Period of Time; for it is certain, that the Suppression of That Edict occasioned the Erection of This new Bishoprick. This Country was full of Protestants, who were forced, by a Mission of Dragoons, to sign a Popish Formulary. It was, therefore, thought expedient not to let them be so far distant from their Prelate, as they would have been, if they had been subjected to the Diocese of Nîmes. This new Episcopal Church "is composed of two Collegiate Churches, That of Psalm,

"modi, and That of the City of Alez, and has twenty three Canons, and twelve Prebendaries: It's first Bishop Francis, Knight of Saulx, Abbot of Psalmodi, and Doctor of the Sorbonne, was consecrated, by Cardinal de Buzi, Archbishop of Narbonne, in the Church of the Nuns of the Visitation of Montpelier, the twenty ninth of August, 1694. He is descended from one of the most ancient and noblest Families of Poitou (2)." See the Letter which M^r Pontier wrote to him, and which he published at Paris in 1695. The Journal of the Learned takes notice of it (3).

(6) Amm. Marcell. lib. 31. c. 2.

(7) Id. ib.

(c) Father Anselm's Genealogy of the House of France, p. 28. 175, 176.

(2) Journal of the Learned, May 17th, 1705. p. 322. Ed. of Holland.

(3) Id. pag. 321.

ask, whether Pope Eugenius thundered his Anathemas against the President of a Council, in which he had been deposed. He deprived him of all his Dignities, and called him the Son of Iniquity [B]. Yet, notwithstanding This, Lewis Alamandus died in the Odour of Sanctity [C], and wrought so many Miracles, after his Death, that, at the Request of the Canons, and the Celestins of Avignon, and at the Solicitation of Cardinal de Clermont, Legate à latere of Clement VII, he was canonized by that Pope in the Year 1527 (f). Odoricus Raynaldus pretends, that he repented of all that he had done in the Council of Basil; but no Proof can be given of This Repentance (g); nor can we contradict this Matter of Fact, that, a Year before his Death (b), he was one of Those, who, in the Council of Lausanne, represented the Council of Basil, as a Holy and Sacred Assembly (i). He died at sixty Years of Age (k), on the 16th of September 1450 (l). Some say he died in Savoy, at the Abbey of Hautecombe, where the Monks built a Chapel so him, and invoked him in the Celebration of the Mass (m); others say, that he died at Salon (n). His Body lies at Arles: The Bull of Clement VII permits the Removal of it from the damp Vaults under Ground to any other more convenient place in the same Church. Some affirm, after James Philip de Bergamo (o), that Lewis Alamandus published several small Works, not unworthy of his Pen; but I meet with no mention of their Titles, or the Libraries, where they are.

The Jansenists, who censured Odoricus Raynaldus for the Pretended Repentance of our Lewis Alamandus, are themselves liable to Censure [D].

"nor in the Day; he is ever reading or negotiating; he thinks on nothing less than his Belly; he is not a Man for my Money. There is not the least Remembrance between us." "Quos inter (they are the Words of Aeneas Silvius, concerning the Diet of the Concilium)? "Crocovicensis Archiepiscopus diminutionem (abrogationem) tulit. Cui cum aves & arinarum carnes afferrentur, substrictas avicularum sunt, orante in porta famulo, ut, quod plus esset, id Dominum dimitteretur; sperabat namque, ex arte partem, ex avibus autem non sperabat: Dominus tamen avicularum precepisset. Ideoque, cum spoliolum sensit, utique conquisitus est publicoque testatus, nunquam se diem; postquam Sacerdos fuit, tulisse perjurium. Ac cum rogaretur ne admittentem haberet, quoniam id obligasset Cardinali (Arletensi). Probat, inquit, Cardinalem mihi equiparari, hominem Gallicum, parvum, eventrem, aut ut verius loquar non hominem. Ego apud cum meo infortunio sum locutus, omnia quae facio per litteras mihi certina indicat, nec adhuc bibere eum, aut comedere vidi; & quod mihi molestius est, infames noctes infamesque dies ducit (quamquam nulla est apud nos dies) aut legi semper, aut negotiari. Nulla ei minor quam ventris est cura; mihi nihil cum commune est (1). — Among whom the Archbishop of Crocovia was abridg'd in his Diet. For, when they were bringing him a Dish of Wild Fowl, and another of Venison, the Wild Fowl was taken away; his Servant of the Door intreating, that they would allow his Master the largest Dish; for he was in hopes part of the Venison might fall to his Share, which he could not have expected from the Wild Fowl; whereas his Master would have preferred the latter. When the Archbishop found himself rob'd of half his Dinner, he complain'd of it, and publicly declared, that it was the most unfortunate Day he had met with, since he first went into Orders. And, when he was desired not to be surpris'd at it, since the same thing had happen'd to the Cardinal of Ales, he exclaimed, What a Comparison you make! you tell me of a sober Frenchman, &c." Such is the bodily Constitution of those, who, in the greatest Affairs, are able to surmount the strongest Obstacles. This requires Men of Labour, detach'd from sensual Pleasures, and intrepid. The following is the Latin Description of Lewis Alamandus's Resolution of Mind, against the Fear of the Plague. "Neque illum preces, neque domesticorum funera, flectere poterunt, volentem potius cum vitæ periculo salutare Concilium; quam cum periculo Concilii salvare vitam; sciebat enim, quoniam se recedente pauci remanessent, facileque committi fraudi in ejus absentia possidet (2)."

[B] And call'd him the Son of Iniquity. In a Bull dated at Florence, in the Year 1442, he calls him Iniquitatis filium, rebellionum & factuum multorum reum; and he says that the Council of Ferrara, and Florence, had condemn'd him to be strip of all his Dignities; & Ferrariensis & Florentino Concilio damnatum & universis dignitatibus privatum fuisse (3). [C] Yet, notwithstanding this, Lewis Alamandus died in the Odour of Sanctity. This Instance, and the Beatification of Peter of Luxemburg, by the same Bull of Clement VII (4), are a little puzzling to the Controversitists of the Roman Party; for, in short, if, as they pretend, every one, who is not united to the Pope, is out of the Pale of the Church, how came these two Persons to merit the Rank of Saints? The best answer to this, is, that the Distinction between the true and the false Pope being above the Capacity of private Persons, and a miste Question of Fact, the Error was invisible, and consequently ought not to prejudice those, who acted with Sincerity; as to the Question of Right. But have a care of the Reply, and the Consequences, which result from hence in favour of other Errors.

[D] The Jansenists who censur'd him (see them) liable to Censure. They alledge, first of all, the Continuators of Baronius's injurious Treatment of the Cardinal of Arles, and they observe afterwards, "that he was forc'd to confess, in two several Places, to wit, in the Year 1426, & 26, and in the Year 1450, n. 20, that God confirm'd the Holiness of this Cardinal, by such visible and well attested Miracles, that Clement VII placed him in the Number of the Blessed (5). — The manner in which this Author endeavours to clear himself, continues they, is most shocking, and cannot be founded but on a most pernicious Maxim; which is, that Persons, guilty of public Crimes, may become Saints; and be acknowledged as such by the Church, without giving any Proof of their having repented of their Crimes, and though there is the greatest Reason, on the contrary, to believe, that they persevered in them. For if the Cardinal of Arles was guilty of certain Crimes, and ought to be esteemed as a very wicked Man for his Behaviour in the Council of Basil, never was Man more condemn'd in his Offence; since, when the Fathers of the Council of Basil, in which he presided, reconciled themselves to Nicolas V, it was not by acknowledging in any manner, that they had done amiss, either in opposing Eugenius, or in deposing him, or in electing Amedeus; but, on the contrary, they protested, that they had done nothing; but with a view to the good of the Church, and that they did not declare for Nicolas V otherwise, than by re-electing him, after the voluntary Resignation of Pellus; and this Union was made, without obliging them to recant any thing they had done; on the contrary, Nicolas V, confirm'd all the Proceedings of the Council of Basil. Therefore if all that the Cardinal of Arles did in That Council was criminal, never any Man shew'd greater Obstinacy in his Crimes. Whence it follows; that if this did not hinder him from becoming a Saint, the Consequence will be, that Perseverance in the greatest Crimes is no Bar to any one's Beatification; which is shocking: And yet this necessarily follows from the Words of Raynaldus, in the Year 1450; n. 20. — Hoc Anno Ludovicum Alamandum Archiepiscopum Arletensem — vitæ celsæ tradunt; acque miraculis post mortem conculcasse affirmant; omnesque Clement VII, valuti Sanctum, esse permittit exarato

(f) See the Bull for it in Launo, Epist. 11. part. 1. pag. 79, 80. E. 27. Cantab. 1689. Folio.

(g) Launo, ibid. p. 81.

(b) Anno 1449.

(i) Sacri Basilensis Concilii Diploma Concilii Lausaneensis apud Raynaldum ad an. 1449.

(1) Aeneas Silvius de Gestis Basilienensis Concilii, lib. 2.

(2) Id. ib.

(3) See Launo, Epist. 11. part. 1. n. 45. p. 80.

(4) See the Bull of Clement VII. in Launo, ubi supra, pag. 79, 80.

(5) Tit. ap. p. 81. from bis Epistoph.

(m) Petrus Monodus in Amedeo Pacifico, cap. 6. in Launo, ubi supra, p. 81.

(n) Moreri.

(o) Jacobus Philippus Bergomi. lib. 15. Chron. cor.

(4) See Mr. Claude's Defence of the Reformation, part 3, towards the end.

(5) Remarks on the 18th Tome of the Ecclesiastical Canons, pag. 213. These Remarks are printed with a Collection of several Pieces in Defence of the Confessors of the Faculty of Divinity at Paris, &c. n. a Brief and a Bull of Alexander VII. I make use of the Edition of Geneva; they have put in the Title at Munster by Bernard Roesfeldt in 1667, in 8vo.

" exarato diplomate Pontificio 9 Apr. an. 1527. Ita-
 " que adoranda est divina misericordia, quæ exiguo
 " temporis fluxu Ludovicum ipsum, nefandi & pernicio-
 " sissimi schismatis auctorem, propagatorem here-
 " seos, qui ex erronea conscientia innumera in Dei " Ecclesiam mala invexerat, ac tot annorum cursu in " pertinaciam obfirmatus profanaverat Sacramenta, po-" nitentem ac reversum in gremium Ecclesie ad san-" ctitatis culmen brevi evertit. — This Year, they " say, died Lewis Alamandus, Archbishop of Arles,
 " who became famous for Miracles after his Death,
 " and was permitted to be adored as a Saint, by a
 " Pontifical Bull of Clement VII, dated April 9,
 " Anno 1527. We ought therefore to adore the Di- " vine Compassion, which, in so short a time, rais'd
 " to the biggest Pitch of Sanctity, this Lewis, Author
 " of a wicked and most pernicious Schism, a Propagator
 " of Heresy; and who, out of an erroneous Con- " science, was the occasion of numberless Evils to the " Church of God, and who, confirm'd in Perseverance,
 " prepar'd the Sacraments for so many Years; but
 " at last repented, and return'd to the Bosom of the " Church. — If this Author had only said, that " the great Zeal of this Holy Man, for the Reform" ation of the Church, had carried him too far,
 " though he acted upon good Motives, it would " have been tolerable, and not so contrary to the " Testimony which God gave of his Sanctity. But " to represent him as a wicked Man; and as an ob" stinate Heretic and Schismatic, who had sacrile-

" giously profan'd the Sacraments; and to tell us,
 " that, in a Year or two afterwards, he became a " Saint, fit to be canoniz'd, without giving any " Proof of his Repentance of so many Crimes, as
 " as are imputed to him, is to have a strange Idea of " Holiness, or rather it is to join Wickedness and " Sanctity together, to avoid confessing, that a Pope
 " was mistaken, in declaring a Man a Sinner, whom " God himself had declared a Saint. But the Bull
 " of Clement VII, relating to the Beatification of this " holy Man, reported by Ciacconius, is sufficient to " confute this Writer; since it appears from thence,
 " that the Pope does not alledge his sincere Repentance
 " of the Crimes he had committed; but that he " yielded up his most pure Soul to God, after having
 " liv'd sixty Years." These Gentlemen censure Reyn-
 " aldus very justly for his bold Assertion of Alaman-
 " us's Repentance; and they demonstratively confute
 " what he advances; but they are in the wrong to ac" cuse him of That shocking Doctrine, which they so " pompously display: It is not true, that he joins San" ctity and Impenitence together; for he supposes, on " the contrary, that the Cardinal actually did repent;
 " and in That he acknowledges the adorable Mercy
 " of God. If I assert here, that Mr Claude has re-" proach'd the Jansenists with Inconsistencies in relation " to Odoricus Reynaldus (6), it is only to shew, that the " Remarks, which I attribute to them, have been as" cribed to them by others.

(6) Claude's Preface to the Answer to the Perpetuity of the Faith defended,
pag. 28, 29.

ALAMOS (BALTHAZAR) was born at Medina-del-Campo in Castile. Having studied the Civil-Law at Salamanca, he entered into the Service of Antony Perez, Secretary of State to King Philip II, and had a great share in his Master's Esteem and Confidence; which was the reason, why they secured his Person, after That Minister's Disgrace. He was kept in Prison eleven Years. Philip III, upon his Accession to the Throne, set him at liberty, in compliance with the Orders which his Father left him in his Will. Alamos led a private Life, till Duke d'Olivarez, Favourite of Philip IV, called him to the discharge of public Employments. He was promoted to the Post of Attorney-General in the Court of Criminal Causes, and in the Council of War; afterwards he was Counsellor in the Council of the Indies; and lastly in the Council of the Royal Patrimony. He was Knight of St James, a Man of Wit and Judgment, and had a better Pen than Tongue. He lived Eighty eight Years, and left only Daughters. He acquired a great Reputation by his Spanish Translation of Tacitus, and by the Political Aphorisms, which he inserted in the Margin; but there are different Opinions of this Work [A]. It was published at Madrid in the Year 1614,

[A] There are different Opinions of this Work. This Difference of Opinions relates much more to the Aphorisms, than the Translation, as will appear by the following Citations. "As for the Aphorisms of " Alamos, they are not such, as they are thought to " be; for you will scarce meet with any thing in them
 " like an Aphorism, or that comes near the force of " what is express'd in the Text of the Translation.
 " And whereas Aphorisms ought to be more sen" tentious than the Text; the Words of the Text are " always more sententious, than his Aphorisms. Last" ly, to be short, his Aphorisms are generally mere " paraphras'd Translations of the Translation itself;
 " an insipid and tedious thing to a Reader of Under" standing and Taste. This being suppos'd, I shall " not scruple to say, That Alamos's Translation is " much better than his Aphorisms. And it is a Judg" ment, which the Author of the Historical and Po" litical Bibliography has made before me, in the " Article of the Latin Historians. Tacitus illustra- " ted, says he, (it is the Title of Alamos's Translation)
 " is much esteem'd by our Travellers; but, to judge
 " rationally of it, the Notes are no better than the " impertinent New Thoughts of Lewis d'Orleans on
 " this Author, or than the Aulic and Political Re" marks of Count Hanibal Scot of Piatenza, which " Lipius rightly calls Leaden Notes. — Yet a certain " Spanish Secretary, whose Name is Juan Onate, took
 " the Pains to rank these Aphorisms under particular " Titles, in an Alphabetical Order, and made no Dif" ficulty to entitle them, Alma de Cornelio Tacito.
 " Nay farther, one Jerome Canini translated them in" to Italian, and inserted them in the Italian Version
 " of Adriano Politi, as something very excellent;
 " witness the Title, — Operi di Corn. Tacito illu- " strate con NOTABILISSIMI AFORISMI del Signor
 " D. Baldassare Alamo (1). — The Works of Corne-

" lius Tacitus, illustrated with the CELEBRATED
 " APHORISMS of Signor D. Balthazar Alamos."

Here are already two Authors, who speak with Contempt of these Aphorisms, and two, who set a great Value on them. This difference of Opinion will be less surprizing, if we reflect, that, in the Year 1683, Mr Amelot had not the same Notion of them, as he had in 1686, and in 1690. Let us consult the Preface to his Tiberius (2). "It is very true,
 " says he, that Alamos not only translated Tacitus,
 " but wrote likewise a great number of Remarks upon
 " on him; which he calls Aphorisms, and which
 " Antony de Covarruvias, who approved his Book,
 " represents as the principal Part of the Work. —
 " I confess that it is excellent, both in respect of " the Translation, which is as perspicuous as the Original
 " is obscure, as likewise of the Aphorisms, which are
 " in every Margin; most of which are properly Pa" raphrases and Versions of the Sentences of Tacitus,
 " and the rest moral or political Conclusions, drawn " from the Events, which he relates; but, notwith" standing the great Reputation of this Author, I hope
 " my Work will be very well received by those, who " are proper Judges in this Matter; and the more, be" cause my Undertaking was much more difficult than " that of Alamos. For all his Aphorisms—are so many " detach'd Pieces and Scraps, and, as the Proverb " says, Sand without Lime or Cement; whereas, in my
 " Chapters, I throw into a continued Discourse all
 " the Latin Citations, which are in the Margins,
 " and collect into an uniform Body all these distinct " Pieces. Upon this Occasion Justus Lipsius says;
 " a Man must undertake such a Work, to know how " difficult it is." The Words of Lipius, as they are " cited by Amelot, are as follows. "Nec vero nudas
 " & sparsas sententias dedimus, ne diffuerent, & esset,
 " quod dicitur, Arena sine Calce: Sed eas aut inter
 " se

(2) Printed
at Amsterd.
in 1683.

* Aun es la principal parte de su mo-mento de su Obra.

* The Soul of Cornelius Tacitus.

(1) Amelot
de la Houf-te's Critic I Discourse before his Translation of Tacitus's Annals, printed in 1690. This Discourse had already appeared before his Morals of Tacitus, in 1683. It is a little enlarg'd in the Editions of the Annals.

1614, and was to have been followed by a Commentary [B] which was never printed, that I know of. The Author composed these Two Works, during his Confinement, and endeavoured, in that Condition, to obtain a Licence for the Impression [C]. He left some other Works, which were not printed: Advertimientos al gobierno, addressed to the Duke of Lerma, about the beginning of the Reign of Philip III: El Conquistador; it contained Advices in relation to the Conquests to be made in the New World: Puntos políticos o de Estado. Dom Garfias Telode de Sandoval, Knight of Calatrava, Son-in-Law to Alamos, gave notice of these Manuscripts to Dom Nicolas Antonio (a), from whom I have borrowed the greatest part of this Article.

(a) See the Bibliotheca Scriptor. Hispan. Tom. 1. pag. 141.

"se haud indecenter vinximus, aut interdum velut cœmento quodam commiximus nostrorum verborum, "è mille aliquot particulis uniforme hoc & cœhærens corpus formantes. Hoc totum quam arduum mihi fuerit, frustra dixerim apud non expertum — eo major mihi molestia, quod per hæc aliena vestigia sic iverim, tanquam in liberrimo ingenii cur- fu +.

+ Lip'us in Prefat. Doctr. Civis.

[B] Was to have been followed by a Commentary. The King's Licence expressly mentions this Commentary. Antony Covarruvias speaks of it as of a Book, which he had read, and tells us also the Disposition, and principal Parts of the Work, in his Approbation, prefixed to the Translation. Another Approbator speaks of this Commentary by Name. Alamos mentions it several times in his Prefaces, and promises to clear up the Obscurities of Tacitus in it: Yet Nicolas Antonio is silent in this Matter; and, what is more strange, does not so much as mention the Translation; he only tells us, That Alamos wrote Aphorisms on Tacitus.

[C] Endeavoured, in that Condition, to obtain a Licence for the Impression. I make this Observation, not to lengthen out the Article, as some Readers of precipitate Judgments may imagine. I propose a Breviate of a Case, in relation to a small Process entered against Don Nicolas Antonio, with great Appearance of Reason. He pretends that Emanuel Sueiro translated Tacitus's Works into Spanish, after Antony de Herrera had translated part of them, and after Balthazar de Alamos and Carlos Coloma had translated them entire. "Post Antonii de Herrera aliqualem, Balthazaris de Alamos & Caroli Coloma illustrium virorum integram operam, in hujusmet autoris interpretatione positam (3)." Now, he acknowledges, that Sueiro's Translation was printed at Antwerp in 1613; and it is certain, that That of Alamos was printed at Madrid in 1614. It is the Date, which Don Nicolas Antonio gave to the Aphorisms of Alamos (4). Farther, Alamos sets down in his Preface the Reasons why he continued his Design of publishing his Tacitus, after Sueiro's Translation appeared. It is therefore, I think, impossible to vindicate Don Nicolas Antonio against the Objection of Mr Amelot de la Houssaie; which shews, says he, citing what I have just now produced, that Don Nicolas Antonio mistook, when he supposed the Translation of Emanuel Sueiro to be later than That of Alamos (5). There is but one thing to be pleaded in his Excuse, which is to say, that perhaps Sueiro was not ignorant, when he undertook his Work, that Alamos had already obtained a Licence for publishing one of the same kind, which had been read and approved by Antony Covarruvias. The News of it might reach him at Antwerp; for in the Year 1594, King Philip II. ordered Covarruvias to examine the whole Work of Alamos; and, in the Year 1603, Philip II. granted a Permission to print it. Alamos relates all this in his Advertisement to the Reader, which by the by, overthrows the Conjecture of those, who fancy that he filled the Margins of his Translation with Aphorisms, only to excel That of Sueiro (6). The Aphorisms were a principal Part of his Work, from the time, that it was approved by Antony Covarruvias.

(3) Nic. Anton. Bibl. Hispan. Tom. 1. pag. 273.

(4) Id. ibid. pag. 140.

(5) Y aunque agora a via Salido otro Tacito traducido por Manuel Sueyro, no quise que dexasse de publicarse el mio, &c.

(6) Critic. Discours. de Tacitus's Morals, and before his Translation of the Annals.

ALBERTUS MAGNUS, a Dominican, Bishop of Ratisbon, and one of the most famous Doctors of the XIIIth Century, was born at Lawingen, on the Danube, in Suabia, in the Year 1193, or 1205 [A]. Moreri's Dictionary gives us an Account of the several Employs, which were conferred upon him, and the Success of his Lectures in several Towns (a). I shall confine my self to some Fabulous Reports concerning him. It has been said, that he practised the Art of Midwifery; and it was thought improper for a Person of his Profession to set up for a Man-Midwife (b). The Foundation of this Story is, That there went a Book under the Name of Albertus Magnus, containing several Instructions for Midwives, and so much Knowledge of their Art, that it was thought he could not have been so well skilled in the Trade, if he had not exercised it. But the Apologists for Albertus Magnus maintain, that he was not the Author of that Book [B], nor of another De Secretis Mulierum [C], where- in

(a) See Likewise Bullart, Academy of Sciences, pag. 145. and the Remark [H] below.

(1) Vossius de Scient. Math. pag. 362.

[A] In the Year 1193, or 1205. Vossius justly censures Nicolas Reusnerus, who placed the Birth of Albertus in the Year 1293, and his Death in the Year 1382; thus setting out with a Mistake: "Quæ magna na est avspognia peccantis in ipso operis ingressu, velut cantherius in porta, ut dici solet, nam ab hoc Alberto icones & elogia sua auspicator (1)." Thus Vossius expresses himself, without remembering that, through as great a Mistake as this, he had (page 62) placed Albertus's flourishing Condition in the Year 1160, and his Death, at Eighty seven Years of Age, in the Year 1208; and that he had made him cotemporary with Urban IV. and the Emperor Rodolphus.

[B] That he was not the Author of that Book. It is entitled, De Natura rerum, and treats at large, and minutely, of the Practice of Midwifery. The Author maintains, that this Subject is not unworthy the Pen of a Monk, since the Ignorance of Midwives destroys many Children, and deprives them for ever of heavenly Bliss. Peter of Prussia, a Monk of the Order of St Dominic, maintains that this Book, De Natura rerum, was composed by Thomas Cantipratanus, a Disciple of Albertus; and he does not deny, that several Precepts are to be met with in it, for procuring a happy Delivery, which cannot be expressed without obscene Words; But it is not Nature, he says, but human Sensuality, which sullies these Ideas (2). "Admodum succenit in blaterones illos, qui Alberto imposuerunt quod egisset obstetricem: Falsus tamen Cantipratanus ad instructionem obstetricum, in Opere perperam supposito præceptorum ejus Alberto, tradidisse modos & vias faciles obstetricationis, cuius precepta chartis committi, nec voce tradi possunt, absque expresse Multorum quæ libido non natura foedavit (3)." It would be curious enough, to have seen Albertus Magnus undertake to deliver a Woman, and set his Hand to the Work. See the Remark [A] of the Article HIEROPHILUS.

[C] Nor of another De Secretis mulierum. Naudé makes use of these two Proofs: I. Albertus's Name is not prefixed to the Work; he who commented upon it would deceive us, when he maintains the contrary. II. Albertus's Authority is often made use of in this very Book; and therefore the Author lived some time after him (4). These two Proofs are inconclusive; and the Consequence drawn from the second is of no weight. Many Reasons may oblige a Man not to put his Name to a Book; and no Authors cite themselves more willingly than those, who suppress their Names; nor is any thing more common, than to quote cotemporary Authors. See the Remark [K].

(2) Petrus de Prussia in Alberti Magni vita, cap. 18.

(3) Theophilus Raynaud. Hæroth. 2. 2. Serm. 3. cap. 10. pag. 361.

(4) Naudé's Apology for Great Men, pag. 524.

in are many Things, which could not be expressed but in obscene and filthy Terms; which raised a great Clamour against the pretended Author of it. His Apologists cannot always have recourse to a positive Denial of Matter of Fact; They acknowledge there are some Questions in his Commentary on the Master of the Sentences relating to the Practice of the Conjugal Duty [D], in which he was obliged to make use of Terms, which gave Offence to chaste Ears (c); but they alledge, what he observes himself in his own Justification, that so many monstrous Things are revealed in Confession, that it is impossible not to touch upon such Questions. It is certain, that Albertus was the most inquisitive of Men. He exposed himself, upon that account, to other Accusations. It has been said, that he was in search of the Philosophers Stone [E]; and even that he was a notorious Magician [F], and that he had formed a Machine,

(c) Theoph. Rayn. ubi supra.

(c) The Title of the Chapter is, Quod scire naturalia etiam impudice utile sit & necessarium.

(6) Theoph. Raynaud. ubi supra.

(7) Id. ibid.

(8) Horat. Od. 7. lib. 3. ver. 19.

* Lib. 6.

(a) Naudé, ubi supra, pag. 515.

(10) Ibid. pag. 520.

† Lib. 2. de Auro.

‡ Lib. 3. Physic. cap. 13.

 Alchym. impugnata, lib. 2. c. 7.

† Translatu 1. cap. 9.

[D] Some Questions — relating to the Practice of the Conjugal Duty. Peter of Prussia, when he could not deny the Fact, endeavoured to justify the Lawfulness of it; and shews, in the eighteenth Chapter of his Book (5), That it is useful, and even necessary, for us to be acquainted with natural Things, not excepting the most obscene; and that, therefore, Albertus and other Casuists were in the right to treat of Subjects full of Obscenity; for, without it, Confessors would not be qualified to remedy the Complaints of their Penitents. "Qualia item multa ab Alberto de usu conjugii in 4. S. d. 31. sub finem, scripto comprehensa factur, illud ex iplo Alberto ibidem præfatus [dicendum primo, quod hujusmodi turpes quæstiones nunquam tractari deberent, nisi illa coherent monstra quæ his temporibus in confessione audiuntur] ne ergo Confessorum rudes sint medicinæ, quam facere debent adeo frequentibus morbis, justum censuit Albertus in illud oletum stylum demittere (6)." We are told, that it were to be wished, that none but Confessors would concern themselves with such Obscenities; but that there must be Books, to which we may have Recourse in Cases of Conscience, which relate to That filthy Subject. "Necessarium est enodationem solidam atque legitimam dubiorum circa fornicationes illas emergentium proflare alicubi apud probatos Doctores ejusmodi vult Albertus, qui proinde reprehensione vacat, etiam illi veluti scriptiois putorem suis commentariis immiserit (7)." But it would be yet more necessary to abolish that which makes this sort of Writings necessary, for, how good soever an Author's Intention may be, it is to Books of this Nature, rather than to numberless others, we ought to apply Horace's

---- Peccare docentes

----- Historias ----- (8).

---- Tales, the Bawds to Vice.

CREECH.

[E] That he was in search of the Philosophers Stone Naudé informs us, that Meyer, the great Patron of the Alchemists, was not ashamed to affirm in his Symbols of the Golden Table of the twelve Nations *, that St Dominic was the first who had the Knowledge of the Philosophers Stone; and that those, to whom he left it, communicated it to Albertus Magnus, who by that means cleared all the Debts of his Bishoprick of Ratisbon in less than three Years (9). Meyer builds his Opinion upon three Books of Chymistry, which he ascribes to Albertus Magnus. Naudé answers, that he is in the wrong to attribute them to him (10), and for this reason, because not one of them has been inserted among his Works, or specified by Trithemius; and because That of the Quintessence was falsely ascribed to him by Francis Picus †. To prove this last Fact, he does not imitate Pelcurion ‡ and Gulbertus , who maintained, that Albertus laughed at Alchemists, and their pretended Transmutations, in his third Book of Minerals †. He does not alledge this Proof, since Albertus in That maintains a quite contrary Opinion; but he shews, that the Author of the Quintessence styles himself Monk of the Order of St Francis, and says, that he composed it, when he was in Prison. These two Circumstances must undoubtedly relate to John de Rupescissa.

[F] That he was a notorious Magician. Trithemius endeavoured long ago to justify him from this Accusation. This appears from these Words: "Non surrexit post eum vir similis ei, qui in omnibus literis, scientiis, & rebus tam doctus, eruditus, &

"expertus fuerit. Quod autem de Necromantiâ acculatur, injuriam patitur vir Deo dilectus (11). — There arose no one after him, who deserved to be compared to Him, for universal Knowledge and Experience. As to the Accusation of Necromancy brought against him, it is an Injury to this Favourite of Heaven." Naudé pretends, that this Accusation can only arise from two Works, which went under the Name of Albertus Magnus, and on the Androis. So that here are two Proofs: Let us see then what he says of each.

I. The first of these two Books is entituled, de Mirabilibus; the other is the Mirror of Astrology, which treats of the licensed and prohibited Authors, who have wrote on this Science (12). Francis Picus *, and Martin Del Rio † agree, that they do Albertus Magnus a great Injury, who believe him to be the Author of the Book of Mirabilibus, and therefore the latter clears him in these very Terms; "Alberto Magno tributis liber de Mirabilibus, vanitate & superstitione referuntur est, sed magno Doctore partus supposititius. — The idle and superstitious Book de Mirabilibus, ascribed to the famous Dr Albertus Magnus, is a spurious Work." The Mirror of Astrology "was condemned by Gerson ‡ and Agripa §, as superstitious to the highest Degree; and by Francis Picus , and many others, because the Author of it asserts a very erroneous Opinion, in favour of Books of Magic; which, he maintains, ought carefully to be preserved, because the Time approaches, in which, for certain Reasons, which he does not specify, Men will be obliged to peruse and consult them on some Occasions (13)." It seems, then, that if our Albertus had composed such a Book, he must have been considered as a Magician; but Naudé does not allow this Consequence, since the Jesuit Vasquez expressly declares ††, "that Books of Magic are necessary, and that Magicians are tolerated by God, that Libertines may in some Measure be reclaimed from Atheism (14)." Besides, Naudé takes it for granted, that Roger Bacon is the Author of That Work, as Francis Picus maintains, in his first Book against Astrologers (15). So much for the first Proof of the Accusation. Let us see how the second is answered.

II. Some Persons have believed, that brazen Heads might be made under certain Constellations, which would give Answers, and direct a Man in all his Affairs. One Ypes relates , that Henry de Villene had made one at Madrid, which was broke to pieces by the Command of John II. King of Castile. Virgil, Pope Silvester, Robert of Lincoln, and Roger Bacon, had the like Heads, if we may believe certain Writers (16). Albertus Magnus was judged to be more ingenious; for it is pretended that he "had formed an entire Man of this sort, having worked thirty Years without interruption, in forging him under divers Aspects and Constellations; as for Example, the Eyes, --- when the Sun was in a Sign of the Zodiac correspondent to such a part; which he cast of mixed Metals, and marked with the Characters of the same Signs and Planets, and of their divers and necessary Aspects; and thus the Head, Neck, Shoulders, Thighs and Legs, fashioned at different Times, and connected together in the Form of a Man, had the Ingenuity to reveal to the said Albertus the Solution of all his principal Difficulties (17)." This is what is called the Androis of Albertus Magnus. It was broke, they say, by Thomas Aquinas, who could not bear it's everlasting Title rattle with Patience. Henry de Aissa and Bartholomew Sibylla assure us, that it was "composed of Flesh and Bones; but by Art, not Nature: Which

(11) Trithem. de Scriptur. Eccles. p. 195.

(12) Naudé, ubi supra, p. 523, 524.

* Lib. 7. de Praenot. cap. 7.

† Disquisit. Mag. lib. 1. cap. 3.

‡ Libro de libris Astrolog. non toleratis, Proposit. 3.

§ In Epistola.

 Lib. 7. de Praenot. cap. 2.

(13) Naudé, ubi supra, pag. 525.

†† Part. 1. Q. 28. 2. Art. 3. Disp. 20. cap. 4. at the beginning.

(14) Naudé, ubi supra, pag. 527.

(15) Idem, pag. 526.

 Apud Emanuel de Moura, §. 2. cap. 15. art. 6.

(16) Naudé, ubi supra, pag. 528.

(17) Idem, pag. 529, 530.

a Machine, in the shape of a Man, which served him for an Oracle, and explained all the Difficulties, which he proposed to it. I could easily be induced to believe, that, as he understood the Mathematics, he had made a Head, which, by the help of Springs, might form certain articulate Sounds; but what Folly is it to ground an Accusation of Magic upon this? Some pretend that he was justify'd from this Imputation by an extraordinary Miracle [G]. Though he was as well qualified, as any Person, to be the Inventor of Artillery, there is Reason to believe that they, who ascribe the Invention of it to Him, are mistaken [H]. It is said (d), that he had naturally a very dull Wit, and that he was upon the point of leaving the Cloister, because he despaired of attaining to what his Fryar's Habit required of him; but that the Holy Virgin appeared to him, and asked him, in which he would chuse to excel; in Philosophy,

(d) See Vol. 1. of Bzovius's Annals.

(18) Idem, pag. 131. He cites Peregr. Quæst. 3. Decad. cap. 2. Qu. 3.

"Which being, however, judged impossible by modern Authors, and the Virtue of Images, and planetary Rings and Seals, being then in great Vogue, it has been always believed since ---- that such Figures were made of Brass, or of some other Metal, which was fashioned under the Influence of Heaven, and of the Planets (18). Upon this foot Naudé refutes Albertus's Accusers; namely, by supposing, that the pretended Androïds was composed of Metal. He shews, by very strong Reasons, that it could neither hear, nor speak, nor serve the Devil as an Instrument for Speech; and that, if the Devil had spoke through this Machine, he would have done it without the help of the metallic Organs, of which it was composed. So that it would not have been necessary to employ so much Time, and so many Ceremonies, in forging such a Machine; A Bottle or a Trumpet would have been as proper to resolve all the Difficulties of Albertus. Lastly, Naudé remarks, that They, who mention this Androïds, bring no Proof of the Fact. Tostatus, notwithstanding all his Wit and Learning, was very credulous; therefore his Authority proves nothing. If any one will maintain, that such a Tradition must have some Foundation, Naudé assigns a very plausible one (19), which is, that Albertus might perhaps have in his Closet a Head, or Statue of a Man, like those Machines of Bœthius, of which Cassiodorus speaks: "Metalla mugiant, Diomedes in ære grues buccinant, æneus anguis infibilat, aves simulatæ frutinnunt, & quæ propriam vocem nesciunt ab ære dulcedinem probantur emittere cantilenæ. — Metals bellow; Diomedes's Cranes chatter in Brass; A brazen Serpent hisses; Imitated Birds chirp; and Things, which have no Voice of their own, are found, in Brass, to counterfeit the Sweetness of singing."

(19) Naudé, ubi supra, p. 539, 540.

††† Lib. 1. Variar. Ep. 45.

[G] He was justified from this Imputation by an extraordinary Miracle.] According to Father Theophilus Raynaud, the Accusers of Albertus say, that, on Twelfth-day, he treated William Earl of Holland, and King of the Romans, who pass by the City of Cologne; and that, to make his Entertainment the more remarkable, he changed the Winter into a Summer full of Flowers and Fruits. "Horridam hyemem in florigeram fructiferamque æstatem vertit, ut scribit Trithemius in Chron. Spanh. anno 1254." (20). Trithemius in effect relates this. They add to this the speaking Head, the Book of Mirabilibus, and That of secretis mulierum. Father Theophilus does not refute these Accusations by the Elogies, which several Historians bestow upon the Virtues of the Accused. He has recourse to the Testimony, which God himself gave of the Sanctity of Albertus by several miraculous Operations, and by preserving his Body from Corruption to this Day: Testimonium quod ejus sanctitati Deus perhibuit patris in ejus gratiam miris plerisque operibus, & ipsius Alberti corpore ad hunc usque diem à tæbe & putrefactione exempto. This Apologist adds, that the Metamorphosis of Winter into Summer, and the speaking Head, are two great Falsities; and that the two Books in Question are falsely attributed to Albertus Magnus; and that St Thomas does not say *, that he formerly broke the speaking Head, in his Master's House. Hyems in veris amenitatem versâ, & caput æneum articulate loquens, ad Deum Fabulinum fuit aleganda tanquam confecta & falso jactata de tanto viro --- libri autem Magici, qui Alberto affingebantur, sunt supposititii (21). See what this Jesuit relates of certain Machines, which utter very harmonious Sounds. He will allow, that Albertus might have a Head so ingeniously contrived, that the Air, which was blown into it, might receive the Modifications requisite to form a human Voice. As to the Exemption from Putrefaction, read the following Extract from Thevet; "Our Albertus, having lived Eighty seven Years, died in the Year of our Redemption 1280, at Cologne, whither he had retired to Study; and there his Body is buried, in the middle of the Quire of the Convent of the Dominicans, and his Entrails were carried to Ratisbon; his Body was yet entire in the Time of the Emperor Charles V. and was taken up by his Command, and afterwards replaced in its first Monument (22). The Jesuit Raderus wrote some Latin Verses on the Preservation of his Body from Putrefaction (23). They end thus;

Illius doctas mirentur sæcula chartas,
Miror ego salvas post tria sæcla manus

Let the famed Writings of the world's Sage (24)
The Admiration prove of every Age;
Thy learned Hands, Albertus, I admire,
After Three Centuries preserved entire.

Moreri says but Two hundred Years, instead of Three hundred. Neither his usual Practice, nor his Disposition, incline him to lessen Things of this Nature.

[H] They, who ascribe the Invention of it to him, are mistaken.] "John Matthew de Luna", who liv'd "above an Hundred and twenty Years ago (25), maintains, though against the constant Opinion of Polydorus, Magius, Mayer, Pancirolus, Florentius, Rivault, and Bezoldus, that Albertus Magnus found out the Use of great Guns, Fusils, and Pistols; but I cannot find, in all those Authors, any thing which comes near this Opinion, except that the Experiment was made of these Engines in his Time, by a German Monk, whom they call Bertbold Schurix, or by a Chymist, who, in the Judgment of Carnaxanus, an ancient Author, liv'd in the City of Cologne, in which it is certain that Albertus continu'd to reside, after he took the Habit of a Dominican (26). Thus Naudé refutes John Matthew de Luna. The last thing he asserts is false; for the Historians of Albertus tell us, That he enter'd into the Order of St Dominic, in the Year 1222; That, after his Superiors had sent him to Cologne, to teach Divinity and Philosophy, and he had acquitted himself of that Employment to the astonishment of his Auditors, he distinguish'd himself at Hildeheim, at Friburg, at Ratisbon, and at Strasburg; that he return'd to Cologne, in the Year 1240; that, among other Disciples, he had Thomas Aquinas there, to whom he resign'd his Chair, when he went to profess in the City of Paris; that, having taught three Years at Paris, he return'd to Cologne; that he was made Provincial of his Order, in the Year 1254; that he perform'd the Visitation of the Provinces on Foot; that he went to Rome, by order of Alexander IV, where he was made Master of the Sacred Palace, and read Divinity Lectures; that he returned into Germany in the Year 1260; that he was elected Bishop of Ratisbon there; that, at three Years end, he obtained leave to resign his Bishoprick; that he return'd to his Cell at Cologne; that the Pope commanded him, a little while after, to preach the Crusade all over Germany and Bohemia; that, in 1274, he assisted at the Council of Lyons; that he had the Character of the Emperor's Ambassador there; and that, at last, he returned to Cologne (27). How could Naudé, who was so deeply read, be ignorant of these several Stations of Albertus Magnus?

(22) Thevet's Hommes Illustres, Tom. 2. pag. 87.

(23) Bullart, Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. pag. 147. mentions them.

(24) i. e. Aristotile.

* Libro de Rerum invent. cap. 12. fol. 10.

(25) These are Naudé's Words, pag. c18. of his Apology for Great Men, Paris 1625.

(26) Moreri, in the end of this, tests only of Gun-Powder, of which Naudé says nothing.

(27) See Bullart's Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. pag. 146, &c.

(20) Theophil. Rayn. Hystor. 5. 2. Serm. 1. cap. 14. pag. 149.

* III. contra Gent. cap. 104.

(21) Theophil. Raynaud. p. 150.

losofhy, or Divinity; that he made choice of Philofophy; that the Holy Virgin affured him he fhould furpafs all Men in that Science; but that, as a Punifhment for his not chufing Divinity, he fhould, before his Death, relapse into his former Stupidity. They add farther, That, after this Apparition, he fhewed a prodigious deal of Wit, and improved in all Sciences, with a Quicknefs, which aftonifhed all his Mafter; but that, Three Years before his Death, he forgot, in an instant, all that he knew; and that, being at a ftand, in a Lecture of Divinity at Cologne, and endeavouring in vain to recal his Ideas, he was fenfible that it was the Accomplifhment of the Prediction. Whence it was faid, the he was miraculoufly converted from an Afs into a Philofopher, and afterwards from a Philofopher into an Afs. It is needlefs to obferve that this is a meer Story; they who will believe me in this, ftand in no need of my Opinion, and would form this Judgment without expecting it; and as for thofe, who judge otherwife of it, they will not change their own Opinion, by finding here, that I am of a different. Our Albertus was a very little Man [1]. He died at Cologne, the 15th of November 1280, being Eighty feven or Seventy five Years old. He wrote fuch a prodigious number of Books, that they amount to twenty one Volumes in Folio, in the Edition of Lions, 1651. A Dominican of Grenoble, called Peter Jammy, procured it.

Two or three Particulars, which have been communicated to me (e), fhall be produced below [K].

(c) By Mr de la Monnoie.

[1] Our Albertus was a very little Man.] "Some write, That, kifling his Holinefs's Feet, upon his Arrival at Rome, the Pope commanded him to rife, "thinking he was yet on his Knees; though he was "really ftanding (28)." The fame Story is told of fome other Perfons. See the Remark [H], of the Article ANDRE (JOHN); and remember the Logicians Diftribution between quantitas molis, and quantitas virtutis. Little Albert the Great puts me in mind of it (29).

(28) Id. ib. pag. 148.

(29) The non eft in tanto corpore mica falis, carnes the fame Diftribution.

(31) Simler. Epitome Biblioth. Gefn. pag. 332.

[K] Particulars, which fhall be producd below.] "The Book De Secretis Mulierum, falſely alcribed to "Albertus, is the Work of one of his Difciples, "named Henry of Saxony; under whoſe Name it has "been printed ſeveral times. Theſe are Simler's "Words: — Henrici de Saxonia Alberti Magni "discipuli liber de ſecretis mulierum, impreſſus Au- "guſtæ anno D. 1498, per Antonium Sorg (30). — "Henry of Saxony, the Diſciple of Albertus Magnus, his Book De Secretis Mulierum, printed at "Ausborg, in 1498, by A. Sorg. — And in Thua- "nus's Catalogue you meet with — Henrici de Saxo- "nia de ſecretis mulierum, de virtutibus herbarum, "lapidum, quorundam animalium, aliorumque in 120, "Francof. 1615 (31). — Henry of Saxony, of the "Secrets of Women, of the Virtues of Herbs, Stones, "of ſome Animals, and other Things, in 120, France- "fort, 1615. — Albertus's Name being more fa- "mous than That of Henry, plainly gave occaſion "to this Suppoſition. — John Picus de Mirandula, "ſays, That Albertus, in his riper Years, condemn'd "the Books of Magic, which he had compos'd in "his Youth. — Andriæ is not the Term made uſe "of, when they ſpeak of Albertus Magnus's Artificial "Man. It is a Word abſolutely unknown, and in- "vented by Naudé, who boldly applies it, as if it "had been generally received."

(31) In the 156th Page of the ſecond Part.

ALBRET, a Family. It was, for ſome Ages, one of the moſt Illuſtrious of France, for the great Men it produced, whoſe Merit was diſtinguiſhed by the moſt Eminent Dignities of the Kingdom. Every one knows that this Family was in poſſeſſion of Navarre and Bearn. Moreri ſpeaks of it at large; I refer my Readers to him, without examining into the Truth of every thing he has advanced in relation to it. I ſhall only take Notice of one Omiſſion; Namely that this illuſtrious Houſe was extinguiſh'd by the Death of the Marquis d'Albret (a) who was killed in Picardy, in the Houſe of the Marquis de Buſſi-Lamet. He married the only Daughter of his Uncle, the Mareſchal d'Albret, in the Year 1662; but this Marriage produced no Children. It is probable the Mareſchal conſulted the Interests of his Family, more than the Inclinations of the two Couſins; for it is ſaid, there was but little Harmony between the Huſband and the Wife. She married again with the Count de Marſan, one of the Sons of the Count d'Harcourt. Her firſt Huſband, the Marquis d'Albret, was in a fair way of being advanced to the Chief Military Offices: He was already Field-Mareſchal, and would have ended the Campaign, of 1678, under Mareſchal Schomberg, who was ſent to the Frontiers of Champagne, in the beginning of the Month of Auguſt. Whiſt his Flying Camp drew near Charleville, the Marquis d'Albret demanded of him a Furlough for a few Days. It was not queſtioned, but it was upon an Affair of Gallantry. However it be, he was ſlain at the above mentioned Gentleman's Houſe, who cleared himſelf by proving, that he was then in another place (b). This was the Bed of Honour, in which the only remaining Branch of ſuch a line of Heroes ended his Life. His Family deſerved to end on a more glorious Occaſion. The Marſhal d'Albret died Governor of Guienne, two Years before. He had obtained the Staff of Mareſchal of France in 1653. They, who pretend that he earned it by ſecuring the Prince of Condé, are ignorant of the Matter of Fact. It was not he, (but Mr de Guिताуд) who arreſted him (c): He only conduſted the Prince to Bois de Vincennes. He commanded, at that Time, the Gendarmes of the Guard. He learned the Trade of War in Holland, and was called the Count de Moſſens. It is under this Name that he is ſo greatly celebrated by Mr de St Evreumont (d). He was Knighted the firſt of January, 1662, and made Governor of Guienne in the Month of November, 1670. In 1645, he married Magdalen de Guenegaud, youngſt Daughter of Gabriel de Guenegaud, the King's Treafurer (e). He was one of Scarron's Heroes, as appears evidently from that Writer's Works.

(a) His Name was Charles Arminieu d'Albret.

(b) See the 120th Letter of Buſſi-Rabutin, part 1. p. 8. 202. Edit. Holl.

(c) See Benjaminus Priolus de Rebus Gallicis, lib. 5. c. 3.

(d) See St Evreumont's Miscellaneous Works, Tom. 2. pag. 71, 77, &c. Edit. Holl. 1693.

(e) See Faſtes An. ſeime, Tom. 2. p. 283.

ALBUNEA, a Famous Place (a), near Tibur in Italy. See the last Remark of the Article TIBUR. (2) Al. præf. Tivoli.

ALBUTIUS SILUS (CAIUS) a Famous Orator in the Reign of Augustus, was born at Novara, and had raised himself there to the Office of Ædile; but quitted his Post on occasion of an Insult offered him by some Persons, who had lost their Cause. He was their Judge, and gave Sentence against them; upon which they dragged him by his Feet from the Tribunal. This Affront induced him to leave his Country immediately, and repair to Rome; where he became acquainted with the Orator Munacius Plancus. Emulation breeding ill blood between them, he set up a separate Auditor; and at last ventured to plead Causes. He met with some Disgraces at the Bar [A], which obliged him to quit it. Being old, and troubled with an Imposthume, he returned to Novara, where, assembling the People, he represented to them, in a long Speech, the Reasons, which gave him a disrelish of Life, and then starved himself to death (a). Seneca the Father, who had often heard him plead, gives an ample Account of him, and recites several Abstracts from his Speeches (b). He commends him as one, who would neither suffer, nor do an Injury; and this he calls the highest degree of Probity; Homo summæ probitatis, qui nec facere injuriam, nec pati sciret. Seneca, the Philosopher, would have defined the Nature of Probity better. Albuntius composed a Treatise of Rhetoric, as may easily be inferred from a Passage of Quintilian (c).

(a) Albuntius non obliuiscens Prætoris atque auctor, Scientiam bonæ dicendi esse contentat (Rhetoricam). Albuntius, præ eminenti Poëta, fide et Audacia, alibi Rhetoricæ in de the Science of speaking. well Quint. Instit. lib. 2. cap. 5.

(a) Sueton. de Clar. Rhetor. c. 6.

(b) Seneca, Præf. lib. 3. Controuert. & alibi passim.

[A] He met with some Disgraces at the Bar. It happened, once, that he address'd himself to his Adversary in these Words, intending nothing more by them, than a fine Rhetorical Figure, Senar by the Alps, and by the Memory of your Father, and you shall gain your Cause. After he had illustrated and set off the Thought to the best Advantage, the Advocate on the other side reply'd, We accept the Condition. Albuntius answered, that he intended to offer no such Terms; that it was only a rhetorical Figure, and that all figurative Expressions must be excluded, if Things were thus taken literally. The other Advocate reply'd, That Men could live without these Figures, and that they might be banish'd, with all his Heart. The Judges gave it for the Oath, and Albuntius lost his Cause, for a rhetorical Flourish. He was so vex'd at it, that he renounc'd the Profession (1). The same Account is given of it by Suetonius; "Cum, in lite quadam centum virali ab aduersario, quem ut impium erga parentes inessebat, jururandum quasi per figuram sic obtulisset; Jura per patris matrisque cineres, qui inconditi jacent, & alia in hunc modum: arripiente eo conditionem, nec judicibus aspernantibus, non sine magna sui inuidia negotium affixit" (2). From that Time, Masters have recommended to their Disciples not to apply these Figures unseasonably (3).

(1) Seneca, Præf. lib. 3. Controu.

(2) Sueton. de Claris Rhetor. c. 6.

(3) Quintil. lib. 5. c. 2.

ALBUTIUS (TITUS) a Philosopher of the Epicurean Sect, went, in his Youth, from Rome to Athens, and gained such a Taste for the Manners of the Greeks, that he was fonder of passing for a Greek, than a Roman (a); which occasioned a Jest of Scævola [A], to which Lucilius gave a very malicious turn in one of his Satires, as we learn from Cicero (b). The same Author informs us, I. That Albuntius was a zealous Epicurean (c), and that he would have been a better Orator, had he been less attached to the Sect of Epicurus (d). II. That he was well versed in the Greek Learning (e), and that he published some Harangues (f). III. That he had served in some of the Offices of the Republic; that he governed Sardinia in the Quality of Pro-Prætor (g); and that he could

(a) Ibid.

(b) Ibid.

(c) Ibid. de Provinc. Consul. cap. 7. & in Pisonem, cap. 38.

(a) Cicero in Bruto, cap. 26, 35.

(b) Id. l. 1. de Finib. cap. 3.

(c) Id. lib. 1. de Nat. Deorum, cap. 33.

(d) Id. in Bruto, cap. 26, 35.

[A] A Jest of Scævola. It consisted in this; when he received a Visit from Albuntius at Athens, he saluted him in Greek, and made all his Attendants salute him in the same Language. The Ridicule cannot be conceived without thinking on the Action itself. Cicero, upon this Occasion, expresses himself thus. "Res vero bonas verbis electis graviter ornate: que dictatas quis non legat nisi qui se planè Græcum dici velit, ut à Scævola est Prætor salutatus Athenis " Albuntius, quem quidem locum cum multa venustate & omni sale idem Lucilius, apud quem præclare Scævola,

Hence, when at Athens, once 'tis known to Fame
To visit me, a Prætor there, you came,
Χαῖρε, O Titus! was my Compliment,
And Χαῖρε, Titus! thro' the Circle went.
— The Jest too keen Albuntius could not bear,
And Wit divided the once friendly Pair.

In this Passage Cicero expressly declares, That Albuntius was, at that Time, Prætor at Athens, and yet the Verbes of Lucilius testify, that Albuntius, upon visiting Scævola, was saluted in Greek, and in a bantering manner; which offended him, and made him Scævola's Enemy. Is it not very evident, that, according to Lucilius, it was Scævola, and not Albuntius, who was then Prætor? Had Albuntius been Prætor, he would have received, not made Visits; or if he had made any, he would not have met with so satirical a Reception. It is therefore surprizing, take it which way you will, either that Cicero should say, that Albuntius was Prætor; or, if he said that Scævola was, as it is very likely he did, that the Error, which has crept into the Editions, has never been corrected. It ought to be read, as à Scævola est Prætor salutatus Athenis Albuntius (2); and not, as à Scævola est Prætor salutatus Athenis Albuntius. Mr Dacier cites these Verbes of Lucilius, and translates them in such a manner, as to declare, that Scævola was Prætor at Athens, when he derided Albuntius, who was come to pay his court to him (3). Corradus thinks, that Albuntius studied at Athens, and that Scævola pass'd through it, in his Way to Rhodes, as mentioned in the first Book of Orators (4).

(2) Corradus, in Bruto Cicero-nis, pag. 189. would have it corrected thus. Other Critics are of the same Opinion. See the Cicero of Mr Gronovius.

(3) Dacier on Horace, Sat. 2. lib. 2. pag. 221. Edit. Holl.

(4) Corradus ubi supra.

Græcum te, Albuti, quam Romanum atque Sabinum Municipem Ponti, Titii, Anni, Centurionum, Pæclarorum hominum ac primorum signiferumque, Maluisti dici. Græce ergo Prætor Athenis Id quod maluisti, te, cum ad me accedi: saluto: Χαῖρε, inquam, Tite: Lictores, turma omni, cohorsq; Χαῖρε. Hinc hostis Mui Albuntius, hinc inimicus (1).

— Who would refuse to read a good Subject treated of with Weight and Beauty, and in choice Phrases; but one, who plainly affects the Manners of Greece: such as Albuntius; who, when he was Prætor at Athens, was saluted in Greek by Scævola; a Circumstance represented with great Elegance and Wit by the Poet Lucilius, who introduces Scævola addressing himself thus to Albuntius:

So fond of Grecian Customs was you grown,
That you ador'd the Citizen of Rome.

(b) Cicero Tuscul. 5.
cap. 37.

could not obtain from the Senate the Proceſſion [B] which he deſired, to thank the Gods for his Exploits; that he was accuſed of Bribery and Corruption [C], and baniſhed [D]; and that he went to philoſophize at Athens (b). ſcarvola's Jeſt ſowed the Seeds of Diſcord between [B] That he could not obtain from the Senate the Proceſſion, &c.] Cicero relates this, in order to deprive the Friends of Gabinus and Piſo of the Conſolation they drew from it. He ſhews them that the Caſes were not parallel: "Hac conſolatione utuntur, etiam T. Albutio ſupplicationem hunc ordinem denegalle, quod eſt primum diſſimile: Res in Sardinia cum maſtrucatis latrunculis à Proprietore una cohorte auxiliana gella, & bellum cum maximis Syriæ gentibus ac tyrannis conſulari exercitu imperioque conſectum. Deinde Albutius, quod à Senatu petebat, ipſe ſibi in Sardinia ante decreverat: Conſtabat enim, Græcum hominem ac levem in ipſa provincia quaſi triumphaffe. Itaque hanc ejus temeritatem Senatus ſupplicatione denegata notavit (5). — They comfort themſelves with this Reflexion, that Titus Albutius was denied a public Thankſgiving by the Senate; but there is a manifeſt Diſparity between the two Caſes; firſt, between the Tranſactions of a Pro-Prætor in Sardinia, with but one auxiliary Cohort, and a War with the greateſt Nations and Kings of Syria, carried on and finiſhed with a conſular Force. In the next place, Albutius had decreed himſelf, in Sardinia, the very Thing he petitioned the Senate for: For it is well known, that this Mimic of Greece, this Triſter, celebrated a kind of Triumph in That Province. The Senate therefore branded this his Preſumption with the reſuſal of a public Thankſgiving." It is thought, that Albutius commanded in Sardinia, in the Year of Rome, 639 (6).

(c) Father Prouſt in his Commentary in ſum Delphini, on Cicero de Caris Oratoribus.

(c) Cicero in Bruto.

(8) Corradus
in Bruto Ciceronis,
pag. 189.
Douza in Luciliū,
pag. 99.

(9) Cicero,
Divinat. in Verrem.

(10) Id. ib.

[C] That he was accuſed of Bribery and Corruption] The following Paſſage puts this paſt diſpute; "Mutius autem Augur, quod pro ſe opus erat, ipſe dicebat, ut de pecuniis repetundis contra T. Albutium. Is oratorum in numero non fuit; juris civilis intelligentia, atque omni prudentiæ genere præſtanti (7). — The Augur Mutius (ſcarvola) ſpoke, in perſon, to what regarded himſelf; as in the Accuſation of Bribery and Corruption againſt T. Albutius. He was not an Orator; but excell'd in a thorough Knowledge of the Civil Law." It is not very certain, that Mutius ſcarvola was the Accuſer: I ſhould chufe to ſay, that he was only concern'd in the Cauſe, and obliged to clear up, or maintain, ſome Point, which related to it, and was part of the Accuſation againſt the Defendant. He had Eloquence enough for a thing of this nature; but otherwiſe he was no Orator; as plainly appears from the Words I have quoted. Some Critics prefer this reading; Mutius autem Augur, quod opus erat, per ſe ipſe dicebat (8); with all my Heart; this reading will ſtill leave room to conjecture, that ſcarvola was only accidentally engaged in the Cauſe, and ſpoke but to ſome particular Circumſtance of it. This Conjecture, which I ſhall mention again in the Remark [F], is ſtrongly confirmed by a Reaſon, which Cicero alledg'd againſt the Perſon, who conteſted with him the Right of accuſing Verres. He ſays, That Caius Julius, having a like Diſpute with Cneius Pompeius, in the Affair of Albutius, made uſe of two Arguments; the one was, that Pompey had been Quæſtor to Albutius; the other, that the Inhabitants of Sardinia had deſired him to accuſe Albutius (9). It was adjudg'd, that Pompey ſhould not be the Accuſer. This Office, therefore, remained with Caius Julius. The Reader, if he knew it not before, may learn from hence, by the way, that the Romans did not approve, that a ſuperior Magiſtrate ſhould be accuſed by his Subaltern. "Neque fere unquam venit in contentione de accuſando qui Quæſtor fuiſſet, quin repudiaretur. Itaque neque L. Philoni in C. Servilium nominis deferendi poteſtas eſt data, neque M. Aurelio Scaro in L. Flaccum, neque Cn. Pompejo in T. Albutium: Quorum nemo propter indignitatem repudiatus eſt, ſed ne libido violandæ neceſſitudinis autoritate judicium comprobaretur (10). — No Quæſtor ever demanded the Right of Accuſation, but he was rejected. Thus L. Philo was denied the Liberty of accuſing C. Servilius, M. Aurelius Scarus of accuſing L. Flaccus, and Cn. Pompeius of accuſing T. Albutius: None of which were ſet aſide as unworthy; but, leſt the Authority of the Judges ſhould ſeem to countenance an Inclination to violate the Laws of Relation or Friendſhip." Apuleius ſeems to confute what I have endeavoured to prove; for he ſays, in his ſecond Apology, That C. Mutius accuſed A. Albutius. But it is eaſy to answer this Objection; for, on the one ſide, the Perſons of whom Apuleius ſpeaks, have different Names from thoſe whom I am here ſpeaking of; and, on the other, what Apuleius ſays of his C. Mutius cannot be applied to our ſcarvola. It is certain that our Albutius's Name was Titus, and not Aulus, and that our ſcarvola was called Quintus Mutius; and, as he was Augur, he was often denoted by that Office; Quintus Mutius ſcarvola Augur. The Accuſer, whom Apuleius ſpeaks of, was a young Man, who then made his firſt Appearance at the Bar. "Neque autem gloriæ cauſa me accuſat, ut M. Antonius Cn. Carbonem, C. Mutius A. Albutium — quippe homines eruditiffimi juvenes laudis gratiâ primum hoc rudimentum forenſis operæ ſubstant, ut aliquo inſigni judicio civibus ſuis noſcerentur, qui moſ incipientibus adoleſcentibus ad illuſtrandum ingenii ſtorem apud antiquos conſeſſus, diu exolevit (11). — He does not accuſe me, with a view of eſtabliſhing a Reputation, as M. Antonius did, when he accuſed Cn. Carbo, and C. Mutius, in his Accuſation of A. Albutius. — Theſe were young Gentlemen of promiſing Genius, who, ambitious of Fame, made theſe firſt Eſſays at the Bar, in order to diſtinguiſh themſelves by ſome notable Cauſe to their Fellow Citizens: A Practice, which the Ancients allowed in Youth, at their firſt ſetting out, to diſplay their opening Talents; but is now diſuſed." This does not agree with our Mutius ſcarvola: He was Conſul in the Year of Rome 636 (12); he was old, when Cicero was but eighteen Years of Age, that is to ſay, in the Year of Rome 665; and Albutius was not accuſed, till after his return from Sardinia, where he was Pro-Prætor, in the Year 649. See the following Remark. Perhaps the Tranſcribers of Apuleius have by degrees chang'd C. Julius into C. Mutius. It is certain, that C. Julius was the Accuſer of Albutius, and, if Apuleius had nam'd him, he would have been exact in this reſpect; but he cannot be juſtified in what he advances, that all the Accuſers, he names, were young Adventurers, who endeavour'd to ſignalize their ſetting out in the World, by ſome famous Cauſe. He borrows all theſe Examples from Cicero, as the famous Grævius has judiciously obſerved (13); why then does he reduce them all to one Species, ſince Cicero ranks them under different Claſſes (14)? Is it not, becauſe they would not have ſerv'd his purpoſe, if they had been divided? This is a fruitful Source of Falsifications in matters of Faſts. If they do not ſuit an Author's Purpoſe, as they ſtand, it is by turning and wreſting them as he pleaſes, and they answer his Intention.

(11) Apul.
Apolog. 2.

(12) Cicero
in Lælio, at the beginning.

(13) Grævius, Notus in Ciceron. de Offic. lib. 2.
cap. 14.

(14) He al-lleges his Accuſation as giving Ver-res as one Example: Therefore he did not pretend to cite only theſe, who had it up for Accuſers in their Youth.

(15) Cicero
in Pilonem.

(16) Id. lib.
5. Tuſculan.
cap. 37.

[D] And baniſh'd.] We do not meet with this in the ſame Paſſages of Cicero, where Albutius's Trial is mentioned, and it muſt not be wonder'd at; for, when an Author does not write the Life of a Man, he ſays no more of him, than what relates to the Subject in hand. When Cicero took ſome notice of Albutius's Trial, he had only in view the Perſons who had ſpoke, or intended to ſpeak, againſt the Accuſed; it was not, therefore, neceſſary, that he ſhould mention the Iſſue of the Cauſe. When he ſpoke of Albutius's Banishment, his only aim was to ſhew the good Uſe a Man may make of his Exile; and therefore it was not neceſſary to remark the Cauſe of Albutius's Banishment. It is our Buſineſs to weave theſe different Paſſages into one Contexture; by which means we ſhall find, that Albutius, having been accuſed of Corruption, upon the Petition of the Inhabitants of Sardinia, was condemn'd, and baniſh'd. Albutius, cum in Sardinia triumphaffet, Romæ damnatus eſt (15). — Albutius, after he had triumphed in Sardinia, was condemn'd at Rome. — Quid T. Albutius, nonne animo æquiffimo Athenis exul philoſophabatur? Cui tamen illud ipſum non accidit, ſi in republica quieſcens Epicuri legibus paruiſſet (16). — Did not Titus Albutius philoſophize, with great calmneſs of Mind, at Athens; which he could not have done, had he ſtaid at home, and obey'd the Laws of Epicurus? Gaſſendus cited this between them [F]. The Dictionaries are not free from Faults upon this Subject [F].

I do

this Passage very ill; for, instead of fi in republica — parisset, he gave it, nisi in republica — parisset

(17) Gaffend. de Vita Epic. lib. 2. cap. 6. pag. 188. in Folio. where the Citations in the Margin are very erroneous.

(18) Cicero, Divin. in Verrem.

(19) Sueton. in Julio, cap. 55.

(17) They, who require a Proof of my Assertion, that Albutius was accused, at the Petition of the Inhabitants of Sardinia, may find one in the following Words. "Julius hoc secum authoritatis ad accusandum afferbat, quod, ut hoc tempore nos ab Siculis, sic tum ille ab Sardinis rogatus ad causam accesserat" (18). — Julius claim'd the Right of Accusation, upon this Authority, that he undertook the Cause, at the Request of the Sardinians, as we do now at the Request of the People of Sicily." To which may be added these Words of the 14th Chapter of the 2d Book de Officiis: Aut patrocinio, at nos pro Siculis, pro Sardinis Julius. So we must read it with Lambinus; or pro Sardinis contra Albutium Julius, with Manutius. Consult Suetonius (19).

[E] Scævola's Jest sow'd the Seeds of Discord between them. This is what Lucilius particularly took notice of in his Satires, Hinc hostis Muti Albutius, hinc inimicus.

A Jest divided the once friendly Pair.

A learned Man believes, that they were frequently engaged on contrary Sides, particularly in the Cause of Granius, accused by Albutius, and defended by Mutius. He says, that at least, Mutius was much pleased, that Granius was acquitted. He proves this by a Passage of Cicero, to which he confesses that others give a different Explication; to wit, That Albutius accused Mutius of Corruption. "Sape inter se dissentirent" & contenderent; ut, quum Albutius Granium oppugnabat, & Mutius eum defendebat, certe illo absoluto gaudebat, ut libro secundo de Oratore scriptum videbis, quamvis aliter alii verba illa sint interpretati, & putant ipsum Scævola ab Albutio de pecuniis repetundis accusatum fuisse, quod ut nos de viro tali credamus adduci non possumus (20)." I can neither reconcile myself to the Sense, which this Critic rejects, nor to that which he approves. I should rather think Cicero meant, that Scævola was concern'd in the Process of Corruption, entered against Albutius; and so far concern'd, that the Justification of Albutius was to result from His Condemnation. I suppose, in consequence of this Conjecture, that Scævola's Cause depended upon that of Albutius, and that from hence it was that he pass'd for Albutius's Accuser. He was acquitted, I suppose, honourably; which occasioned the Conviction of Albutius. I suppose farther, that the latter appeal'd to the Crier Granius's Registers, in order to convict Scævola, and that his Proof was judg'd insufficient. Granius was pleas'd at Scævola's Acquittal, and was rallied as if he had rejoic'd, that the Judges had no regard to his Books, or his verbal Processes. This I take to be the Import of Cicero's Words, "Bella etiam est familiaris reprehensio quasi errantis, ut quum objurgavit Albutius Granium, quod quum ejus tabulis quiddam Albutio probatum videretur, & valde absoluto Scævola gauderet, neque intelligeret contra suas tabulas esse judicatum (21)." If any other Proof is required of the Enmity between Albutius and Scævola, I can add, that Lucilius introduced Scævola jelling upon Albutius's Style (22). I should be glad to know whence Father Proust had it, that Lucilius's Anger against our Scævola proceeded from the Affection he had for Albutius, against whom Scævola had pleaded (23). If Lucilius was Albutius's Friend, he verily'd the Maxim, That a Jeffer prefers his Jest to his Friend;

(20) Corradus in Brutum Cicero, lib. 2. cap. 185.

(21) Cicero, lib. 2. de Orat. c. 70.

(22) See below the Remark [G].

(23) Proust Comment. in Cicero, de Orat. lib. 2. n. 72. in usum Delphini.

— dummodo risum
Excusati sibi, non hic cuiquam parcat amico (24);

for we have seen how this Satirist diverted himself at the Expence of Albutius.

[F] The Dictionaries are not free from Faults upon this Subject. I. Charles Stephens pretends, that Varro spoke of our Titus Albutius, as of a Poet, who had wrote Satires after Lucilius's Manner, Lucilian Style. But, when we consult Varro, we find that he speaks of one Lucius Albutius. "Nonne item Lucius Albutius, homo (ut fecitis) apprime doctus, cuius Lucilia no characterē sunt libelli, dicebat, in Albano fundum suum patibundus semper vinci à villa, agrum enim

"minus dena millia reddere, villam plus vicena (25)?" — Did not Lucius Albutius, a very learned Man (as you know) and whose Writings are in the Style and Manner of Lucilius, say, that the Revenue of his Farm at Alba was scarce half that of his Villages? II. It is not true, that Lucilius laugh'd at Albutius as one, who intermix'd Greek with Latin Words; Charles Stephens did not take the Poet's Meaning; he fancied that the χαιψα belongs to Albutius; whereas it must be refer'd to Scævola, and his Attendants. Lloyd and Hofman have not corrected these two Faults. Observe, that I do not pretend to deny, that Albutius intermix'd Greek Phrases with Latin. III. What Charles Stephens, Lloyd, and Hofman suppose, is very precarious; to wit, That the Father of the Witch Canidia was the same Albutius, spoken of in the second Satire of the second Book of Horace. Mr Dacier believes they are two Albutius's (26). IV. These three Dictionary-Writers are mistaken, when they take the Albutius of the second Satire of the second Book of Horace for a downright Miser. We shall soon see the contrary. V. Moreri is mistaken, when he fancies, that the Albutius, whom Cicero speaks of, in the beginning of the first Book de Finibus, is not the same with him, whom he mentions in the first Book de Naturâ Deorum, and in the fifth Book of the Tusculan Questions. VI. It is not true that Horace says, That there was an Albutius, the most covetous of all Men, who was wont to correct his Servants before they executed his Commands, for fear, as he said, he should forget to do it, if they did not exactly obey his Orders. Moreri, who ascribes all this Discourse to Horace, was deceived by Charles Stephens; though the latter does not expressly ascribe this little Fable to Horace. All that Horace says of the Matter is this.

(25) Varro de Re rustica, lib. 3. cap. 2.

(26) Dacier's Remarks on Sat. 1. lib. 2. pag. 40.

Mundus erit, qui non offendet fordibus, atque
In neutram partem cultus miser: hic neque servus,
Albuti fenis exemplo, dum munia didit,
Sævus erit: neque, sic ut simplex Nævius, unctam Convivis præbebit aquam (27).

(27) Horat. Sat. 2. lib. 2. ver. 65.

— He lives well, who keeps the middle State,
And neither leans too much to this, nor that:
Such, when he bid his Slaves do this and this,
Will not be rigid, as Albutius is;
Nor yet, like Nævius, when he makes a Feast,
With costly Ointment will be wash his Gueft.

CREECH.

The meaning is, that true Cleanliness lies in the middle between Nastiness, and a too scrupulous, and over nice Exactness (28). If he had been the excessive and servile Care that is taken by the People in keeping their Houses clean in some Parts of Holland, he would have call'd it a false Neatness. Albutius and Nævius are produced as two Examples of vicious Extremes; the former as an Instance of too much Formality; the latter of too little. Some Interpreters have changed the Characters; and mistaken Nævius for a Prodigal, and Albutius for a covetous Man (29). But, perhaps, the Words of Horace do not relate to Covetousness and Prodigality; but only rather to Neatness and it's contrary. This latter Defect is sometimes attended with superfluous Expences. Some Persons are extravagant in Drefs, in Furniture, and in Eating; and yet have not the Reputation of being well dress'd, of disposing the Ornaments of their Apartments to Advantage, or of keeping a good Table. However it be, Albutius here is not an Example of Covetousness. I shall conclude, by observing, that Albutius's Severity towards his Slaves is not a Circumstance forg'd by Moreri; he had read it in his Patron (30): but did not know that the Original of it is in an ancient Scholiast. "Alper in exigenda à singulis im-

(28) See Mr Dacier on this Passage.

(29) The old Commentators, Lambinus, Cruguius, &c. d. l.

(30) Charles Stephens.

pena ratione castigandoque, adeo ut servos nonnumquam castigaret prius, & cederet, quam peccassent, dicens vereri se ne cum peccassent cadere tunc ei non vacaret (31). — Rigid in exacting an Account from every one of their Tasks; to such a Degree, that he sometimes corrected, and beat his Servants, before they offend'd, pretending, that he fear'd he should not, when, he had an Opportunity of doing it."

(31) Vetus Commentator in Hierat. d. l.

(7) Plin. lib.
29. cap. 1.

I do not believe, that our Tinus Albutius is the same, whom Horace speaks of [G] in the second Satire of the second Book. We meet with nothing concerning the Physician ALBUTIUS, whom Pliny ranks among the most Famous (i).

(32) See Mr
Dacier, ubi
supra.

[G] I do not believe, that our Albutius is the same, whom Horace speaks of. We have seen, that Horace's Albutius was a Man of too great Exactness; that he never forgave his Domestic an Offence; that he would have one do precisely this, and another that; and that he defended to Particulars, in a pedantic manner. He, whom Lucilius describes, as one who affected so much the Greek Politeness and Elegancy, that he desired to pass for a Greek (32), was cut out to furnish Horace with the Example he wanted; since every Person, who affects the Manners of foreign Countries, mixes with them I know not what of forced and extravagant, which turns the thing into Ridicule. See the Behaviour of the Country 'Squires so often ridiculed by Moliere, with regard to Fashions in which they never observe a Medium. I can scarce believe, that Horace brought upon the Stage the Albutius of Lucilius; nor do I think it strange, that Torrensius believed he did. Mr Dacier chuses to say, That the Albutius, mentioned by Horace, was the Son of him, whom Lucilius satirized. I believe, that Albutius's Affectation of what was Greek, related chiefly to the Language. We find, besides, from a Jest of Lucilius, that he was too nice in the disposition of his Words.

"Collocationis est componere & frungere verba, sic ut
"neve asper eorum concursus neque hiulus sit, fed
"quodammodo coagmentatus & levis. In quo lepide
"socreri persona lussit is, qui elegantissime id facere
"potuit, Lucilius,

Quam lepide lexis composuē, ut tessellæ omnes
Arte, pavimento, atque emblemate vermiculato.

"Quæ cum dixisset in Albutium illudens, &c. (33)
"— The Collocatio (or Disposition) consists in "ranging the Words in such a manner, that the Pe"riod shall neither be harsh, nor discontinuous, but
"as it were cemented and polish'd. Lucilius rallied
"this careful Style very elegantly, as he was very "capable of doing, in the Person of Mutius the Augur
"(34), comparing it to small Tiles, wrought artifi"cially, upon a Pavement, into variety of emblematical
"Figures. Applying this in a bantering way to Al"butius, &c." The Verses of Lucilius represent a "fort of Style in Writing, which may be called Inlaid,
"or Mosaic, Work.

(33) Cic. de Orat. lib. 3.
cap. 43. See Lucius in Orator, cap.
43, &c.

(34) We learn from Seneca, that Lucilius sometimes introduced him speaking in his Satires.

(a) They make him a Portuguese in the Index of the B. lib.
of Meaux's Explication of the Revelations.

(b) Sotuel,
Biblioth.
Script. Soc.
ciet. Jesu,
pag. 557.

(c) Bishop of Meaux's Preface to the Revelations, p. 13.
Edit. Holl.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Alegambus had given him 63 Years. Ester Sotuel corrected this Mistake.

(f) In the 1st and 2d Dissertation.

ALCASAR (Lewis de) a Spanish Jesuit (a), was born at Seville, in the Year 1554. He entered among the Jesuits in the Year 1569, in spite of the Opposition of his Family, which had great Possessions. After teaching Philosophy, he taught Divinity above Twenty Years at Corduba, and at Seville. He applied himself chiefly to discover the Mysteries contained in St John's Revelations, and employed near Twenty Years in this Work (b). The Book he composed upon this Subject is one of the best, which the Roman Catholics have produced on the Apocalypse [A]. It is entitled, Vestigatio Arcani Sensus in Apocalypsi, and has been printed several times [B]. It is pretended that Grotius borrowed many of his Notions from it (c). The Author maintains, that the Apocalypse is fully accomplished as far as the twentieth Chapter, and finds the Two Witnesses in it, besides Elias and Enoch (d). He makes no Scruple of rejecting the Ancient Fathers; and, as his Principal Studies tended only to the Explication of this Book, the other Work, which we have of his, is but a Commentary on the Passages of the Old Testament, which have some relation to St John's Revelation. It was printed, after his Death, with this Title, In eas Veteris Testamenti partes quas respicit Apocalypsis, nempe Cantica Canticorum, Psalmos complures, multa Danielis, aliorumque librorum capita, libri V. So that here are Two Volumes in Folio, which are, properly speaking, but a Commentary on the Revelations; but there is an Appendix to each: That of the First Volume is a Treatise de Sacris ponderibus & mensuris, and That of the Second a Treatise de malis Medicis. Alcasar died at Seville, the 16th of June, 1613. aged sixty Years (e). You will find an Examen of some of his Apocalyptic Hypotheses, in a Work, which Mr Heidegger published at Leyden, in the Year 1687, entitled, Mysterium Babylonis magnæ.

[A] The Book — is one of the best, which the Roman Catholics have produced on the Apocalypse.] This is Nicolas Antonio's Account of it. "Insignem
"posuit operam in adornando atque illustrando Apocalypsis libro obscurissimo. Edidit namque lucubrationes suas ad ipsam ingeniosas quidem, eruditae, elaborataeque, ut censet Cornelius à Lapide. Sed quisnam sponsor erit, telo eum quamvis acuto & forti scopum tetigisse (1). — He took remarkable "Pains in explaining and illustrating that obscure Book, The Apocalypse. For he published his own
"Lucubrations on it, ingenious indeed, and elaborate, in the Opinion of Cornelius à Lapide. But, as
"sharp and strong as his Arrow may be, who will answer for him, that he has hit the Mark?" I am certain there is no Bankrupt, or imprison'd Debtor, but could find Security much easier, than your Interpreters of the Apocalypse, were there a Tribunal on Earth to assess those at a large Fine, who should warrant false Interpretations. When a Man flatters his Passions, where no Danger attends his Opinions, he is apt to be credulous; but it would be in vain to demand such Securities, as Don Nicolas Antonio would require.

[B] Printed several times.] Father Alegambus mentions only the Edition of Antwerp, by John Keerberge, in 1614, and immediately after says, that the other Volume was posthumous. If the first had been printed but in 1614, it would have been Posthumous, and so there would have been no Reason to distinguish the one from the other. We must believe then, as Don Nicolas Antonio observes, that the first was printed at Antwerp, by Keerberge, in the Year 1604. Besides this Edition, Nicolas Antonio speaks of that of 1610; Antwerpæ apud Nutius, and that of Lyons, 1616. Draudius quotes these two last Editions, and besides them one of Antwerp, by Keerberge, in 1611 (2). Father Sotuel, besides the Edition of 1614, mentions only the two last of Nicolas Antonio, and says also, that the other Volume is posthumous. So that his Revision of Alegambus is not so exact as it ought to be.

(2) Draud.
Bibliotheca
Class. p. 22.

(1) Nicol.
Anton. Bi-
blioth.
Script. His-pan. Tom.
2. pag. 14.

ALCÆUS, a Native of Mitylene in the Island of Lesbos, was one of the greatest Lyric Poets of Antiquity. Some say, That he was the Inventor of this Species of Poetry.

— Age, dic Latinum, Barbite, carmen,
Lesbio primum modulate civi (a):

(a) Horat.
Od. 32. lib.
1. ver. 3.

Begin,

*Begin, sweet Harp, a Roman Strain
Those Measures and those Airs maintain,
First struck by great Alcæus' noble Hand.*

CREECH.

He flourished in the forty fourth Olympiad (b) at the same time with Sappho, who was likewise of Mitylene. The Scandalous Chronicle [A] says, that Alcæus, one day, requested I know not what Favour of Sappho, but that Sappho, who was not, at that time, in so good a Humour as she used to be, refused him what perhaps she offered him the next day (c). However it be, he had other business upon his Hands besides making Verses: he wanted to give a Proof of his Courage in War, but was not very successful in it; for he ran away, and left his Arms behind him, when the Athenians gained a Battle against the Lesbians (d). But it was some Comfort to him in his Disgrace, that the Conquerors caused his Arms to be hung up in the Temple of Minerva at Sigeum; which they would not have done, with such a Mark of Distinction, had they not thought it a glorious Monument of their Victory (e). Alcæus did not forget this Circumstance in the Verses he wrote on this unlucky Adventure [B]. His Muse, whom he employed in the midst of War, either in Catches, or Love Songs, or in celebrating his Mistresses (f), who was such another trusty Support as himself [C]: His Muse, I say, was not silent on the Defeat of the Lesbians. It is well known, that she was not always ludicrous, and that she could treat the gravest Subjects with a suitable Dignity

[A] The scandalous Chronicle.] I have set down Mr le Fevre's own Words, and am very much mistaken, if he fetch'd this little Fable any where else than from Aristotle's Rhetoric. Aristotle cites these Words of Alcæus;

Θάλω τιν' εἰπών, ἀλλὰ με καλῶς Λιδεύς.

And this Answer of Sappho,

Αἰ δ' ἴξαι σ' ἐσθλῶν ἵμερόν, ἢ καλῶν,
καὶ μή τι εἰπὼν γλῶσσαν ἐκύκλα κακῶν, Λιδεύς κε γυ σ' ὕχ' ἄχων ὄμμαϊ.
"Αλλ' ἔλατ' ἐπὶ δ' ἰκαλῶν (1).

(1) Aristot.
Rhetor. lib.
2. cap. 6.
Note, that I read, and accept these Greek Words, as Scaliger did in Euseb. p.
85. Edit.
1658.

The Import of the Verses is This. Alcæus declares he has something to say, but that Modesty forbids him; Sappho replies, that if his Request were honourable, and his Tongue were not prepared to utter something immodest, Shame would not have appear'd in his Face, and he would not be at a loss to make a reasonable Proposition.

A L C Æ U S.

Fain wou'd I speak, but must, thro' Shame, conceal
The Thought my eager Tongue wou'd fain reveal.

S A P P H O.

Were your Request, O Bard, on Honour built,
Your Cheeks wou'd not have worn these Marks of Guilt;
But in prompt Words the ready Thought had shewn,
And your Heart's honest Meaning quickly shewn.

They, who are qualified to judge of Mr le Fevre's Books, Men, as he says in his first Journal, whose Souls are capable of different Forms, and who understand, at half a Word, wherein the Beauty of Thoughts and Expressions consist, are sensible, that these Words of Alcæus are one of those Declarations of Love, which require the critical Minute, and that Sappho apprehended perfectly what he meant. Her Answer is wise, but it is perhaps too serious upon this Supposition.

[B] The Verses he wrote on this unlucky Adventure.] H B, among all the Latin Poets, who most resembles Alcæus, confesses, as well as He, in his Poems, that he fled from the Battle, and threw down his Arms, as being useless in Flight.

Tecum Philippos & celerem fugam
Senfi, relicta non bene parmula,
Quum fracta virtus, & minaces
Turpe solum tetigere mento (3).

(3) Horat.
Od. 7. lib.
2. ver. 9.

The bloody Wars, Philippi's Field,
Ignobly having lost my Shield,
With thee I saw, secure from Wound;

I saw the Flight, when Pompey proud
To Cæsar's stronger Virtue bow'd,
And safely hit the bloody Ground.

CREECH.

The same Adventure happen'd to Archilochus before Alcæus, and he confess'd it publicly (4). Perhaps Horace would not have been so ingenuous, if he had not had these great Examples before his Eyes. Chabot is mistaken, when he maintains, that Plutarch refutes Herodotus in relation to Alcæus's Flight (5). Plutarch says only, that Herodotus suppress'd a fine Action of Pittacus, but not the cowardly Behaviour of Alcæus (6).

[C] His Mistress, who was such another trusty Support as himself.] Horace informs us, that Alcæus's Mistress was a Boy, whose Name was Lycus, and who had black Eyes and black Hair.

Qui ferox bello; tamen inter arma,
Sive jactatam religarat udo Littore navim,
Liberum & Musas, Veneremque, & illi
Semper hærentem puerum canebat,
Et Lycum nigris oculis, nigroque
Crine decorum (7).

He fierce in Arms; yet, midst his Cares,
When Dangers press'd, and noisy Wars,
And stain'd his charming Harp with Blood;
Or, when he stemm'd the angry Seas,
Or when, arriv'd, he sat at ease,
And laugh'd at all the Fury of the Flood;
The Muses be in sounding Verse,
Wou'd sing, and Venus' Praise rehearse,
With her th' attending wanton Boy;
Or Lycus' Face, surprizing Fair,
With coal-black Eyes, and auburn Hair,
By Nature fitted to entice to Joy.

CREECH.

It is apparently He, who had a Mole upon his Finger, which, in the Poet's Eye, was a beautiful Ornament. Nevus in articulo pueri delectat Alcæum, at est corporis macula nevus, illi tamen hoc lumen videbatur (8). Cicero says, in another place, that, though Alcæus had shewed a great deal of Courage, he had filled his Verses with an excessive Pederasty; Fortis vir in sua republica cognitus, quæ de juvenum amore scripsit Alcæus (9)? He was so amorous, that he compares himself to a Hog, who, whilst he eats one Acron, devours another with his Eyes; Just so, says he, when I am enjoying one Girl, I am wishing for another. Α υς τὰν βάλλον τὰν μ' ἔχει, τὰν δ' ἔσθαι λαβών. Κάθ' αἰδέα καλὴν τὰν μ' ἔχω, τὰν δ' ἔσθαι λαβών. Scipio Gentilis relates this in his Notes on Apuleius's Apology, pag. 65.

(b) Euseb. in Chronico.

(c) Le Fevre's Lives of the Greek Poets,
pag. 27.

(d) Herod.
lib. 5. cap.
95.

(e) Id. ibid.

(f) Horace.
See his words below in the Remark [C].

(4) See Remark [H] of his Poems.

(5) Chabot,
in Horat.
Od. 13. lib.
2.

(6) Plut. de Malign. He-
rodoti, pag.
858.

(7) Horat.
Od. 32. lib.
1. ver. 6.

(8) Cicero
de Natur.
Deor. lib. 1.

(9) Id.
Falsely.
Quæ. 4.
cap. 33.

Dignity [D]; particularly the fine Common-place Topic against Tyrants. Alcæus, in That, followed an Inclination, which was confirmed by his own Adventures, and his personal Interests; for he had vigorously opposed the Invaders of the Liberty of his Country, and particularly Pittacus [E], who became an Usurper, though he was one of the Seven Sages of Greece. He set Alcæus at Liberty, whom he had taken Prisoner, saying, that it was better to forgive, than to punish, an Offence (g). Some say, that Alcæus was expelled with many others; but that at length he put himself at the head of the Exiled, made War against the Tyrants, and drove them out (b). I find in Dionysius Halicarnassensis nothing more, than that the Inhabitants of Mitylene elected Pittacus for their General, against the Poet Alcæus, and his Adherents, whom they had banished (i). Others say, that, having abused Pittacus's Clemency, and continuing to cabal, and inveigh against him, he had no longer Favour shewn him (k); which Ovid expressed in these Words;

Utque lyræ vates fertur periisse severæ,
Causa sit exitii dextera læsa tui.

Or may thy Satire too severe be found,
And Thine, like poor Alcæus' Muse, be crown'd
With Vengeance from the Hand it dares to wound.

This is the more probable, as Alcæus pass'd for one, who did not oppose Innovations, as such, but because others had introduced them (l). It is a very common Infirmary. There are only some small Fragments of his Poems remaining.

[D] His Muse — could treat the gravest Subjects with a suitable Dignity.] This made Horace say,

Et te sonantem plenius auro,
Alcæe, plectro, dura navis,
Dura fugæ mala, dura belli.
Utrumque sacro digna silentio
Mirantur umbræ dicere: sed magis
Pugnas & exactos tyrannos Denfum humeris bibit aure vulgus (10).

*Alcæus too, whose golden Strings
With many Strokes sound softer things;
He sings the Dangers, and the Fears,
Of Flight, of sailing, and of Wars.
With silent Awe the Shades admire
The tuneful Numbers of his Lyre:
The vulgar Ghosts throng most to hear
Of Kings depos'd; of Feats of War
And drink them with a greedy Ear.*

CREECH.

Mr Dacier remarks on these Words, I. That Alcæus's Style was noble and strong, and that he treated of more lofty Subjects, than Sappho, who says of him in Ovid,

Nec plus Alcæus confors patriæque Lyræque Laudis habet, quamvis grandius ille sonet.

--- The wide World resounds with Sappho's Praise.
Tho' great Alcæus more sublimely sings,
And strikes with bolder Rage the sounding Strings,
No less Renown attends the moving Lyre,
Which Cupid tunes, and Venus does inspire.

POPE.

II. That Horace gives him a Golden Plectrum, because he is speaking of that Part of his Works, wherein he describes the Civil Wars, which happened at Mitylene, and the different Factions of the Tyrants Pittacus, Myrsilus, Megalagyrus, the Cleanastides, and others (11), and that those Poems were called ΣΥΓΓΡΑΜΜΑΤΑ ΣΕΒΑΣΤΑ, Poems on Seditions. He cites this Passage of Quintilian: "Alcæus in parte operis auro plectro merito donatur, qua tyrannos infestatur." Multum etiam moribus confert, in eloquendo brevis & magnificus, & diligens, plerumque Homero similia, sed in lusus & amores descendit, majoribus tamen aptior (12). — Alcæus deserves the Golden Plectrum, which is given him, in that Part of his Poems, in which he lashes Tyrants. In this he is greatly useful to the Manners of Mankind, being concise and majestic in his Language, and much like Homer: However he sometimes descends to Mirth and Love; tho' naturally qualified for softer Subjects." Add to this the Epithet of Threatning, given to his Muse:

----- Alcæi MINACES

Stefichorique graves Camæenæ (13).

[E] Had vigorously opposed — Pittacus.] He inveighed against him in very vulgar Terms. He called him Splay-Foot, Fat-Gut, &c. as we learn from Suidas under the Word σαρκώδης, and from Diogenes Laertius in the Life of Pittacus. The Moderation of the latter was very praise worthy, and appeared so to Valerius Maximus: "Pittaci quoque moderatione pectus instructum, qui Alcæum poetam & amaritudine odii & viribus ingenii adversus se pertinacissimè usum, tyrannidem à civibus delatam adeptus, tantummodo quid in opprimendo posset admo- nuit (14). — Pittacus likewise was a Person of great Moderation, who, having seized on the kingly Power, abolished by the People, only showed the Poet Alcæus, who employed all the Bitterness of Hatred, and the Force of Wit, in abusing him, what he could have done in the way of Oppression."

(g) Heraclitus apud Diogenem Laertium. in Pittaco, lib. 1. n. 76.

(b) Dacier on the 13th Ode of the 2d Book of Horace.

(i) Dionysius Halicarnassensis. Antiq. Rom. lib. 5. cap. 82.

(k) See Dionysius Salvi- gnius Boetius, Com- ment. in I- bin. pag. 102, 103. Edit. 4to.

(l) Ovid's δυσχερὲς ἀνα- βασιάνων τῶν νεύων. Ne ipse quidem purus studii ejus- modi novan- darum re- rum. Strabo, lib. 13. pag. 425.

(11) See Strabo, lib. 13. p. 424.

(12) Quin- tilian. lib. 10. cap. 1.

(13) Horat. Od. 9. l. 4.

(14) Valer. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 1.

(a) Suidas.

(b) Mitru- Ἀλκᾶος, ἄλτρα 'Αλκᾶ- ος. Id.

(c) Scholias. Aristophanis in Argu- mento. Plauti.

(d) Macro- b. Saturnal. lib. 5. c. 20.

(e) Plut. in Flaminio, pag. 373.

A L C Æ U S, an Athenian (a), and a Tragic Poet, was the first, according to some, who composed Tragedies. If we may believe Suidas, he is not the same with the Comic Poet A L C Æ U S, the Fifth of the Ancient Comedy, and the Son of Miccus. It seems, he renounced his Country, which was the City of Mitylene, and passed for an Athenian (b). He left ten Pieces, whereof one was entitled Pasiphaë: It was that which he produced, when he disputed with Aristophanes in the Fourth Year of the Ninety seventh Olympiad (c). Athenæus cites some others: It is not certainly known, whether the Endymion, cited by Pollux, belongs to Alcæus the Tragic, or Alcæus the Comic Poet: But it is probable, that the Piece entitled Cælum, was written by the former, since Macrobius cites it as a Tragedy (d). I find, in Plutarch, a Poet A L C Æ U S, different from all the preceeding (e), and who is perhaps the same, whom Porphyrus mentioned as a Writer of Satirical Iambic Verses, and Epi- grams, grams, and who wrote a Poem concerning the Plagiarism of the Historian Ephorus (f). The Alcæus of Plutarch lived in the Hundred and forty fifth Olympiad, in the Year of Rome 555, as appears by the Ode he composed on the Battle, which Philip, King of Macedon lost in Thessaly. This Ode represented Philip as running away faster than a Stag, and magnified the Number of the Slain, in order to chagrin him the more. Nevertheless Plutarch tells us, that Titus Flaminius, who gained the Battle, was more offended at Alcæus's Verses, than Philip; because the Ode mentioned the Ætolians before the Romans, and seemed thereby to give the Ætolians the chief Honour of the Victory. Philip defended himself against Alcæus's Song by another [A]. It must be confessed, that Plutarch makes the Roman Consul too apt to take Offence. We are told likewise of one ALCÆUS, a Messenian, who lived in the Reign of Vespasian, and in That of Titus (g). Some of his Epigrams are in the Antologia. I know not which of these Alcæus's suffered a very remarkable kind of Death [B] for his Lewdness. Vossius, at the forty second Page of his Notes on Catullus, believes it was He, who satirized Philip King of Macedon. He takes him for the Comedian by mistake; for the Comic Poet was cotemporary with Aristophanes.

[A] Philip defended himself against Alcæus's Song by another. Plutarch gives us the Substance of it in these two Lines:

Ἀλκαῖος δὲ θυλάει, ἰδὼν ὅτι, τοῖς οὐκ ἔνδοξον
Ἀλκαίῳ σαρκεὶς ἀνίστηναι ἰσλάει (1).

This leafless, barkless Trunk, O Passenger, is erected as a Gibbet for Alcæus.

[B] Suffered a very remarkable kind of Death. Isaac Vossius gives us (2) this Epitaph, taken out of an Antologia, which was never printed:

Ἀλκαῖος τὰρ ἐστίν, ὃν ἔκτανεν ἡ ραδιθυράλλῃ
Τιμωρὲς μυχῶν γῆς θυλάειν ἰσλάει.

This is Alcæus's Tomb, who died by a Radish, the Daughter of the Earth, and Punisher of Adulterers.

The meaning of this is, that Alcæus suffered the Punishment of Adulterers, which consisted in a certain manner of impaling. They thrust one of the largest Radishes they could find up the Adulterer's Fundament, or, for want of Radishes, they made use of a Fish, with a very large Head; as the Scholiast of Juvenal informs us, on these Words of the tenth Satyre,

---- Quosdam Mœchos & * Mugilis intrat.

This helps us to understand this Menace of Catullus.

Ah tum te miserum, malique fati,
Quem, attractis pedibus patente porta,
Percurrent raphanique mugileque (3).

ALCHABITIUS, an Arabian Astrologer, composed an Introduction to the Knowledge of the Celestial Influences [A]. He wrote likewise concerning The Conjunction of the Planets, and a Treatise of Optics, which was found in a Convent of Germany, and brought to the Author of the Book de Lumine Animæ. His Astrological Works, translated by John of Seville (a), were printed at Venice in 1491, with the Exposition of John of Saxony, and, in 1521, with the Corrections of Antony de Fantis, a Physician of Treviso in Italy (b). It is not well known at what time Alchabitus lived.

[A] Composed an Introduction to the Knowledge of the Celestial Influences. The Title of the Book in Gesner and in Simler, is, Isagogæ ad magisterium judiciorum æstherum, vel ad scrutanda stellarum magisteria. Vossius gives it in another manner, but which comes to the same Sense; Isagogæ ad scrutanda æstro-indicia (1). But Moreri, mistaking one Word for another in Vossius, initia for indicia, gives us an incomprehensible Title; An Introduction to the Knowledge of the beginning of the Stars. It appears that

As I wretched Thou, and born to luckless Fate,
Who art discovered by the un-bus Gate!
If once, alas! the jealous Husband come,
The Radish, or the Sea-Fish, is thy doom.

Lucian speaks of this sort of Punishment, but does not say whether the Criminal died of it, and differs but little from his Scholiast. They both tell us, that the Adulterer was usually well beat; but the Scholiast says, that the Radish was not thrust up his Fundament, 'till he was ready to expire under the Blows he had received. Lucian insinuates the quite contrary; for the Letcher, of whom he speaks, having been soundly beat, leaped down from the Tiling, and ran away with the Radish sticking in his Posteriors. Καὶ δὲ τὸν τῆς ἀλθιᾶς δόρυς παρὰ τὸ πρὸς τὸν βουδινῶν (4). De testis defiliens aufugit natus raphano appletis. Vossius ought not to have concluded from this Passage of Lucian, that this Punishment was not Mortal; for it is very probable, that if the Patient had not run away, it would have cost him his Life sooner or later. The two Verses, which Vossius cites, and which he takes for the Discourse of an Adulterer, who said to her Godmother, that if the Punishment of the Cross was inflicted upon their Gallants, instead of the Radish, no one would have any thing more to say to them, are a better Proof, than the Words of Lucian (5). The Commentators on Diogenes Laertius rightly apprehended what Menedemus aimed at, when he said to an insolent Adulterer, that the Juice of Radishes was useful: Πλεῖς ἢ τὸν δεσποτιζόμενον μυχῶν, ἀγροῦς, ἴσον, ἔτι δὲ μύρον καὶ μέλι χυλὸν ἔχει χρεῖσθαι, ἀλλὰ δὲ παρὰ τὸν (6). Adulter exultanti adultero, ignotas, inquit, non modo brassica succum inesse utilem, sed & raphanos.

ALCHINDUS, a Physician and Astrologer among the Arabians. Cardan reckoned him among the Twelve Sublime Geniuses, whom he looked upon as the chief of those, who excelled in the Sciences (a). This is to exceed Albobaen Haly, and Haly Rodaan, who call him the great Astrologer, and even Rafis and Mesue, who style him the most Learned and most Experienced Physician, and even Averroes and Wimpina, who call him the Subtile Philosopher. One may judge of his Parts and Learning by his Two printed Books, De Temporum Mutationibus, and De Gradibus Medicinarum.

(f) Porphyrius apud Euseb. Præp. Evangel. lib. 10. cap. 3. pag. 467.

(g) Tzetzes in Lycophr. apud Gyrind. de Poët. Dialog. 1. pag. 511. Edit. 1692.

(1) Plutarch. in Flamin. pag. 373.

(2) Isaac Vossius in Carallum, pag. 42.

* The Mugilis is a Sea-Fish with a large Head.

(3) Catull. Epigr. 14. See Parthenius, Muretus, and Achillex Scaurus on this Passage.

(a) Joannes Hispanicus.

(1) Vossius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 399.

(4) Lucian. de morte Peregrin.

(5) Ex Hesychio in λεξικῶν ὀβύσιν. See also the Scholiast of Aristophanes in Nubibus.

(6) Diogenes Laert. lib. 2. n. 128. See Aldobrandinus & Menagius.

(b) Gesner in Bibl. & ex eo Vossius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 314. & 319.

(2) See du Verdier, pag. 20. of his Bibliothæque.

(a) Card. de Subtilit. lib. 16. Naudé in his Apology for Great Men, pag. 354. amplius Cardan's Tenacity too much.

Medicinarum compositarum investigandis. We meet with many others, which are very often cited by Authors, under the Titles, De ratione sex quantitatum: De quinque essentis: De motu diurno: De vegetabilibus, and De Theoricâ magicarum artium. This last Work induced all the Demonographers to represent Alchindus as a dangerous Magician. Francis Picus, and Conrad Wimpina, have amply discoursed of the Heresies, Blasphemies, and Absurdities, which are to be met with in this Book. The famous John Picus does not seem to have judged so disadvantageously of him, since he says, that he knew but Three Men, who had so much as touched upon the natural and lawful Magic, to wit, Alchindus, Roger Bacon, and William Bishop of Paris. What is most to be depended upon, according to Gabriel Naudé, from whom I borrow this Article, is I. That this Work is full of Superstition, and Doctrines quite contrary to our Faith, and such as are to be expected from a Mabometan, who writes his Thoughts with great Freedom. II. That he cannot be accused of Magic, since he was so far from amusing himself with the Theurgic or Goetic Magic, that his sole View was to account in a natural Way for all that is attributed to good or bad Angels; which Petrus de Apono and Pomponatius have done after him (b). These Philosophers, in support of their Opinion, maintain that Sublunary things depend wholly on the Heavenly, and that they mutually receive their Properties from each other, and that each receives them from the whole, by means of certain material Effluvia, which, passing from the least to the greatest, are the Cause, they tell us, of all the Phænomena in Nature. We cannot certainly say when Alchindus lived; but we must not place him in the XII Century, since Averroes makes mention of him. There is a JAMES ALCHINDUS, whom some confound with the ALCHINDUS of this Article [A].

(A) Naudé, ibid. and the following Page.

[A] Whom some confound with the Alchindus of this Article.] Wolfgang Justus says, that James Alchindus lived under Pope Eugenius III. in the Year 1145, cotemporary with Averroes and Avicenna: He says, that he was an Arabian Physician and Philosopher (1). The Bibliographers attribute the same Books to Alchindus, and to James Alchindus. Vossius seems to distinguish between them; for, when he speaks of Alchindus, he ascribes to him only the Treatise of sex quantitativus, and does not mention his Age; but

(1) Apud Merklinum in Lindenio renovato.

(a) See Remark [E].

(b) Panzirol. de Claria Legum Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 169.

(c) Minos in Vita Alciati.

ALCIATUS (ANDREW) a great Civilian, flourished in the XVI Century. He was the Son of a rich Merchant of Milan [A], and was born in the Month of May, 1492 (a). It is pretended, that his Mother in bringing him forth, felt scarce any of the usual Pains of Labour (b). Having studied Humanity under Janus Parabasius, who taught at Milan (c), he applied himself to the Civil-Law at Pavia and at Bologna (d), and attended chiefly the Lectures of Jason in the former of these Universities, and those of Charles Ruinus in the latter (e). After he was created Doctor, he betook himself to the Bar in the City of Milan (f), till he was called to the Professorship of Civil-Law by the University of Avignon [B]. He filled the

(2) Vossius de Scientiis Mathem. pag. 61. & 179.

(d) Mr. Telford in his Eligies takes from Thomas, Tom. 1. pag. 30. quoting Minos, says that Alciatus studied at Verona; but I have not found this.

Chair

(c) Panzirol. ibid.

(f) Minos in Vita Alciati.

[A] He was the Son of a rich Merchant of Milan.] I have followed Panzirolus, the only Author, whom I have consulted, who makes him the Son of a Person of that Profession: "Ex Joanne pecuniolo natus" gotiote Mediolani ferè nullo parentis dolore natus "et educatus fuit (1)." Others make him rather the Son of a Gentleman of an ancient Family; "Andreas Alciatus in pago Alciato seu Alzato Mediolanensi natus è nobili Alciatorum familia." This is the Opinion of Claudius Minos (2). It cannot be objected to me, that in some Countries the quality of Merchant, and That of Gentleman, are not incompatible; for, where they are united, an Historian seldom takes notice of the least, without speaking of the most considerable. Wherefore, since Panzirolus has only mentioned the Occupation of Alciatus's Father, he seems not to have been of Claudius Minos's Opinion.

(1) Panzirol. de Claria Legum Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 169. pag. 353.

(2) Minos in Vita Andree Alciati, Ghilini, Lorenzo Craffo, Paul Freher, Bullart, &c. say he descended from a noble and ancient Family.

(3) Panzirol. ubi supra.

(4) See the Commentaries on his Works, &c. pag. 112. of the Panzirol. edition.

[B] He applied himself to the Bar in the City of Milan, till he was called — by the University of Avignon.] I shall be cautious of adopting the Narrative of Panzirolus. That would lead me to assert, that Alciatus, having been created Doctor of the Civil and Canon Law, in the Year 1517, being a little above twenty two Years of Age, taught first at Pavia, and afterwards at Avignon: Primum itaque Ticini professor, postea Avenioni docuit (3). But this would be giving the Lie to Alciatus himself, who declares in a Speech, which he made at Pavia, that, when he obtained six hundred Crowns Salary, at Avignon, he had never appeared in any Chair. "Avenioni cum nunquam ad eam diem cathedram ascendissem stipendium sexcentorum mereret (4)." —

he places James Alchindus in 1235, and ascribes to him, among other Books, a Treatise of radiis stellarum (2). It is, doubtless, the same Book, which Gesner alleges under the Title of radiis stellaris, and which he believes to be a Work of James Alchindus, though the Name of James is not joined there with that of Alchindus. One would imagine by the Title alone, that it belongs to Him, who was suspected of Magic.

Panzirolus's Account is, moreover, suspected of Falshood; he betrays an extreme Negligence; we find there, that Alciatus was not quite Twenty three Years of Age in 1517, and yet his Epitaph, related by Panzirolus, three Pages after, declares, that he was near Fifty nine Years of Age in the Month of January 1550: he was therefore Twenty five in 1517. What Panzirolus affirms, that Alciatus published his Paradoxa and his Disputationes about the Year 1517, cannot be cleared up by Claudius Minos; for there never was a Chaos of a Book more absurd, than the Passage where this last Writer speaks of the Edition of Alciatus's Paradoxa. "Duodecim post annos, scilicet (5), cum civilis & pontificii juris professoris insignibus donatus esset, Paradoxa & Disputationes in publicum emisit, opus, ut ipse dicit, elaboratum horis successivis, & à candidato adhuc & tirone. — Twelve Years after, when he was invested with the Professorship of Civil and Canon Law, he published his Paradoxa and Disputationes, a Work, according to his own Account, composed at his leisure Hours, and when he was as yet but a Candidate and a Student." It is not easily seen, to what the Word duodecim relates; for all that goes before is an Account of Alciatus's different Stations, and of his manner of teaching the Civil Law. If these Words of Minos imported, that Alciatus published his Paradoxa twelve Years after his Promotion to the Doctorate, all this Chaos would be reduced into order; but, then, what would become of Panzirolus, who places the Edition of That Book about the time of his taking the Degree of Doctor; that is, about the Year 1517? What would become of

Tiraquellus,

Chair with such great Abilities, that Francis I. thought him a proper person to promote the Study of the Civil-Law in the University of Bourges. He invited him thither in 1529 [C], and, the Year following, he doubled his Pension, which was at first Six hundred Crowns. Alciatus professed the Civil-Law Five Years at Bourges, and acquired a great Reputation there. But he made use of an Artifice to obtain an Increase of his Salary [D]. He mixed a great deal of Literature with the Explication

of

- (6) Tiraguet, Jur. Præmigen. pag. 158. apud Baillet, Enfans celebres, p. 126. where you will find the following Author's quoted, viz. Ghilini, Theatr. Literat. pag. 1. & Pichet. Athen. Milan. pag. 26, 28.
- (7) Baillet Enfans Celebres, pag. 126.
- (8) Pasquier's Recherches, lib. 9. cap. 39. pag. 901.
- (9) See the Preface to the Paradoxes, prefixed to the Edition of 1539.
- (10) Beginning the Year in January.
- (11) Epist. Godii, dec. pag. 76.
- (12) Ibid. pag. 78.
- (13) Ibid. pag. 96.
- (14) Ibid.
- (15) Ibid. pag. 106.
- (16) He says, in the first Page of his History of Calvinism in Berri, that Alciatus read his first Lecture at Bourges, on Monday, Apr. 19. 1529.
- (17) Panzirus de claria Legum Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 169.

Tiraquellus, who says, that Alciatus wrote a considerable Work before he was twenty Years of Age (6)? "It is That, which is extant under the Title of Paradoxes of the Civil Law, which he divided into "fix Books, and dedicated to the Chancellor du Prat, "when he was at Bourges in 1529, twelve Years after having published it in his own Country, when "he assumed the Doctor's Cap; but seventeen or "eighteen Years after the Composition of it (7)." The Work, which I cite, informs me, that Alciatus's first Essay was an Explication and Correction of the Greek Terms, which we meet with in the Digests; that this Book was published first in Italy, and some time after at Strasbourg, in 1515. I have read, in a certain Author (8), that the first Dedication Alciatus made of his Works, is dated in 1513, and that it is That of the three last Books of the Code. What is very certain, is, that he published his Paradoxes, dedicated to the Chancellor Antony du Prat, about the Year 1517 (9). He published his Disputationes about the same time, dedicated to John Selvo, President of the Senate of Milan, and his Prætermissa, dedicated to James de Minut, Counsellor in the same Senate, and ancient Professor of the Civil Law at Orleans. He was Professor at Avignon in the Year 1521; for he says, in the Epistle Dedicatory of his Treatise de Verborum significatione, dated at Bourges the first of May, 1520, that he had dedicated it to his Scholars eight Years before. I have been informed, that Budæus, in a Letter written to Christopher Longueil, in the Month of February 1520 (10), mentions a Visit, which Alciatus made him some time before at Avignon. Mr de la Monnoie communicated to me this Particular. I add, that some Letters of our Alciatus were published at Utrecht, which shew, that he was Professor of the Civil Law at Avignon in the Year 1518 (11); that his Salary amounted to Five hundred Crowns, and that he had Seven hundred Auditors. Two Years after he wrote, that they allowed him Six hundred Crowns, besides other Gratuities; and that his Auditorium was composed of above Eight hundred Persons, among whom there were some Prelates, Abbots, and Counts (12). He left That Professorship, and returned to Milan, about the end of October 1522. Among other things, which induced him to this Retreat, the principal was, that his Salary was not punctually paid him, the City of Avignon being in debt by Reason of the Contagious Distemper. Besides, they gave him to understand, that if the Plague returned, he must consent to a Diminution of his Salary. But he rejected the Condition (13). He applied himself to the Bar in his own Country, and found this Employment more advantageous than he expected (14). He stayed in Italy, 'till he accepted the Professorship which was offered him in the University of Bourges (15).

[C] He invited him thither in 1529.] I choose to follow Minos and Mr Catherinet (16), rather than Panzirus. The latter anticipates this Invitation by an whole Year. "Deinde anno 1528, Bituriges, "quo magna studiorum multitudo ad ejus famam conflavit, amplo 1200 aureorum stipendio à Rege "Francisco est conductus (17). — At length, in "the Year 1528, he was retained at Bourges by "King Francis, with a Salary of Twelve thousand "Crowns; whither the Fame of his Abilities drew "from all Parts a great Number of Students." I do not object to Panzirus, that his Pension was at first but Eighteen hundred Livres, and that, being doubled, the next Year, it amounted to the Sum which he has laid down: I have greater Instances of Inaccuracy to charge him with. He says, I. That Alciatus lived but few Years in France; because Francis Maria, Duke of Milan, ordered him to return, and threatened him with the Confiscation of all his Effects in case of Disobedience. II. That Alciatus, being returned home, taught for some Years at Pavia; 'till he retired to Bologna in 1532, on account of the Wars, It is certain, that Alciatus lived five Years at Bourges: This appears by the Verses, he wrote on his leaving it.

Urbs Biturix, invitus amans te defero amantem, Quinque per æstates terra habitata mihi (18).

And therefore, since, according to Panzirus, he was invited thither in the Year 1528, he could not have left it till 1533. How could he then have taught for some Years at Pavia, after his Removal from Bourges, and retire afterwards to Bologna, in the Year 1532? His Dissertation concerning Duels, dedicated to Francis I., is dated from Avignon the first of March, 1529. The Preface to his Paradoxes is dated from Bourges the Twenty fourth of August 1529. This is decisive against Panzirus. There remain yet two Errors to be censured, one of Moreri, the other of Paul Freberus. The former says, that the Liberty of Francis I. drew Alciatus into France, where he taught at Avignon; according to the latter, Alciatus went to teach in That City, immediately upon his leaving Parrhasius's School (19). It is an absurd Mistake to say, that the Liberty of a King of France invited a Professor into another Prince's Country; and who does not know, that when Alciatus left Parrhasius's School, he went to study at Pavia and at Bologna, and that he took his Doctor's Degree in 1517, and that he published some Books before he was Professor at Avignon?

[D] He made use of an Artifice to obtain an Increase of his Salary.] He contrived the matter so by his Intrigues, that a Professorship was offered him by the University of Padua. Vossius, who informs me of this, was afraid, lest by deferring to return an Answer to the Offer, which was made him of a Professorship in the University of Cambridge, he should be suspected of the same Artifice; for, adds he, it is a piece of Cunning generally put in Practice: "Quis, rerum mearum ignarus, aliud sibi persuadere "possit, quam diutius hanc in respondendo cessat- "tionem inde duntaxat, aut potissimum saltem, pro- "manare, ut Vocatione Anglicana aliquid mihi apud "Batavos lucelli acquiram? Scimus id plerique me- "ris esse. Nec notam hanc effugit summus Juris- "consultus, Andreas Alciatus, cum Biturigibus Pa- "tavium vocaretur. Et ille quidem callide hoc ege- "rat ipse, ut vocaretur. Mihi, ut scis, ne per for- "nium tale quid cogitanti sponte apud vos professio "oblata est. Ille item, immane quantum aucto si- "pendio, apud Biturigas remansit. Ego, uti hoc nunquam egi, ita nec quicquam accessions (quam "quidem scio mihi minimè invideres) consequar re- "manendo, nisi simul accessio fiat fortè novi la- "boris (20). — Who, that is unacquainted "with the State of my Affairs, would put any other "Construction on my long Neglect in returning an "Answer, than that I hoped this Invitation from "England might be improved to my Advantage in "Holland? Nor was the great Civilian, Andrew "Alciatus, clear from this Suspicion, when he was "invited from Bourges to Pavia. He indeed art- "fully contrived this Invitation. As for myself, "you know, that I never so much as dreamt of the "Professorship in your University, 'till it was offered "me. He, likewise, continued at Bourges, upon his "Stipend being greatly augmented. I, as I never "acted in this manner, so I shall receive no addi- "tional Advantage (which I am sure you would not "envy me) by continuing here; unless at the same "time an additional Service be required of me." I should feel some Remorse of Conscience, did I not acknowledge, that Mr de la Monnoie acquainted me with this Passage of Vossius. Besides which, He has imparted to me the following Particulars. "It ap- "pears, by the twelfth Letter of the second Book "of Sadolet's Letters, that Alciatus, from the first "Year of his Abode at Bourges, had, or pretended "to have, a Design to profess the Law at Bologna.

(18) S. Mi- nos, ubi su- pra.

(19) Freher. in Theatr. Viror. illust. pag. 826.

(20) Vossius Epist. 43. pag. 91, 92. It is cited from Leyden, June 1. 1625.

of the Laws, and happily banished That barbarous Language, which had prevailed, till then, in the Lectures and Writings of the Civilians. Tbuanus extols him highly for This: I say, Tbuanus, who, otherwise, was but little acquainted with his History [E]. This Professor's Extemporary Harangue to Francis I., who came into his Auditory [F], pleased that Monarch much. Francis Sforza, Duke of Milan, thought himself obliged to recal into his Country so eminent a Man, and compassed his Design by giving him the Dignity of a Senator, besides a great Salary. Alciatus, therefore, went to teach the Civil-Law at Pavia; but a little after he came to the University of Bologna (g), where he resided Four Years. Afterwards he returned to Pavia, from whence he went to Ferrara (b), being invited thither by Duke Hercules d'Est, who endeavoured to make that University famous. It recovered it's Splendor under a Professor, who was so much followed; but, at the end of Four Years, Alciatus left it, to return to Pavia, where at last he met with the true Remedy for his inconstant

(g) He made his Inaugural Speech there on the 3d of Nov. 1537.

(b) He made his Inaugural Speech there in 1543.

"Two Italian Letters of Bembus, one of the seventh of July, 1533, and the other of the Twenty third of February, 1533, contain many Particulars concerning the Design, which the Republic of Venice had of inviting Alciatus to Padua (21). The Professors of That University were in terrible Apprehensions about it; and among others, Franciscus da Corte, in Latin, Franciscus Curtius; who, to prevent the coming of such a Colleague, spread a Report, That the Duke of Milan, Francis Sforza, erroneously called Francis Maria by Panzirulus, had forbid him, on very severe Penalties, to leave the Professorship of Pavia, Sotto pena di confiscatione, Upon pain of Confiscation of his Goods." To clear this Account from all Intricacy, we must, I think, suppose, that the Twenty third of February, 1533, in the Letter of Peter Bembus, is of the Year 1534, beginning the Year in the Month of January; for, without it, we cannot be persuaded, that Alciatus was at Pavia, when that Letter was dated; He, who had professed five Years at Bourges, and who did not begin to profess there 'till 1529. In consulting the Latin Letters of the same Bembus, I find, that he writ to our Alciatus on the fifteenth of July, 1532, to exhort him to come and take Possession of the Professorship, which was offered him in the University of Padua. He removes the Objection which kept him in suspense, which was, that the Republic of Venice would not promise him the same Species of Crowns, which he demanded (22). Bembus tells him, that he ought not to disengage himself from his Promise on so trivial an Account, and if you come, says he, I will undertake, that you shall have in a very little time all the Money, which you desire, and other Advantages too. He wrote to him again on the Twenty first of April, 1534. Alciatus was then at Pavia, but discontented. Bembus declares, that, as for his Part, he was very well satisfied with his Excuses; but that the Curators of the University of Padua were not; and that they were persuaded, that the Request which he had made of the Professorship of Civil Law among them, was grounded on a Motive of Interest; that is to say, That Alciatus would not have desired the Professorship in the University of Padua, but in order to make use of the Offer of this Post to procure a larger Salary from the Duke of Milan. "Utinam tam æqui in te Judices præfati ludi Patavini essent, neque sibi persuasissimum haberent, te propterea profectum Jus Civile hac in urbe locum postulavisse, ut eo tradito apud Ducem istum tuum uterere, ad largius atque uberius ab eo stipendium promerendum (23)." Alciatus had before made use of the same Artifice, at Avignon. He employed one of his Friends (24) to contrive the Matter so, that he might be invited to Bologna or Padua. He had no Intention of accepting these Offers; but he hoped to procure a better Salary by this Means. This appears from some Letters he wrote at that Time, and which were printed at Utrecht in the Year 1697. "Si mille mihi aurei Ferraræ confisterentur, eo non irem: Et satis non possum mirari, qui tibi in mentem venerit, hanc conventionem cum eo tractare; cum de Patavino, aut Bononiensi Gymnasio solum tibi mandata dederim: Quamvis nec mihi displiceant tua ista consilia: Non quod in has Academias venturus sim, sed quod Avenionenses, si civerint ab aliis quoque me sollicitari, ne eos deferam timebunt, & augebunt stipendia. Quare cum eis potissimum velim hæc diffeminare, quos conjectabis ido-neos esse; ut in Avenionensem Academiam literas harum rerum indices dent (25). — If they would settle upon me a thousand Crowns a Year at Ferrara, I would not go thither; and I cannot enough wonder how you could think of entering into such a Negotiation, since I commissioned you to treat only concerning the Bolognian and Pavian Schools: however I am not displeased with your Designs; not that I have any Thoughts of ever coming into those Universities, but because the People of Avignon, when they find I am courted by others, will fear I should desert them to prevent which they will augment my Stipend. Wherefore I desire you would impart this Design to those, whom you shall judge proper for it, that they may send Letters to the University of Avignon, in Confirmation of these Matters." His Friend called at Padua, to induce the German Scholars to desire the Republic of Venice to send for Alciatus (26). The latter desired him not to trouble himself about it, since he was engaged for two Years in the City of Avignon. His Letter is dated the Twenty sixth of September, 1520. What Meanness! What fordid Love of Gain!

[E] Tbuanus — who, otherwise, was but little acquainted with his History! He supposes, I. That Alciatus, after having taught a long time at Bourges, was Professor at Avignon; but the contrary is true. II. That Alciatus left France, in the decline of his Age; whereas he was but forty Years of Age, or thereabouts. III. That Alciatus, being return'd into Italy, read first at Bologna, and afterwards at Ferrara. He read at Pavia, before he went to Bologna. IV. That Alciatus died in the Year 1551; but his Epitaph says it was on the 12th of January, 1550. It is true, some Authors report, That Alciatus's Epitaph mentions Fifty eight Years, eight Months, and four Days, which would prove that he died the 12th of January, 1551; but others report, that it gives him but Fifty seven Years, eight Months, and four Days (27). Tbuanus's Mistake is not so considerable, as that of Forster, adopted by Mr Donjat (28), and that of Imperialis. The latter places the Death of Alciatus in the Year 1559 (29). Forster places it in the Year 1548 (30). But let us particularly remark the Error of the Astrologer, who, having said that Alciatus died at Ferrara, in the Year 1546, adds, that it was of a Wound from Saturn and the Sun. "Andreas Alciatus didicit literas Græcæ à Pomponio Gaurico Patavii — obiit Ferraræ anno 1546, ex Saturno in oppositione horoscopi, & Sole Martis tetragono fauciato. In conversione annua non solum directi ones Aphætarum, sed annuæ conversiones penitus commutatae interirunt (31)." This is what Lucæ Gaurici notes, under the Figure of the Nativity of our Civilian. He supposes him to be born, the eighth of May, 1492, at one Hour, and thirty Minutes, after Sun-rising. Is not this a pretty Art? It has Rules, according to which a Man ought to die several Years before his Death. I have seen one of Alciatus's Letters, dated the third of September, 1530, wherein he says, that he is just entered upon his Thirty seventh Year, or that he is but little more than Thirty seven Years of Age. Vix trigimum & septimum annum attingens (32). This would prove that he was born in 1494, or 1493.

[F] This Professor's extemporaneous Harangue to Francis I. who came into his Auditory. Minus reports this Fact: Panzirulus says nothing of it; but, instead of it, tells us, That the Dauphin, having assisted at one of Alciatus's Lectures, presented him with a Medal, to the value of Four hundred Crowns. It

(21) Epist. Gualdii, &c. pag. 79.

(26) Ibid. pag. 78.

INCONSISTENCIES in relation to the Age of Alciatus.

(27) Ghilini Teatro de Literati, parte 1. pag. 11.

(28) Donjat. Prænot. Canon. p. 619.

(29) Imperialis Histor. pag. 52.

(30) Forster. Histor. lib. 5. cap. 41. pag. 542.

(31) Lucæ Gaurici in Schematib. fol. 73.

(32) Epist. Gualdii, &c. pag. 106.

(21) These Letters of Bembus, are in the 645th and 646th Pages of the Collectanea, entitled, Lettere di XLIII. Hummini illustri, printed at Venice, 1560, in 8vo. See likewise the 29th and 35th Letter of the 16th Book of Bembus.

(22) Cum tu nummos aureos solares petieris, illa tibi tantum aurea est pollicita. Pet. Bembus Epist. 20. lib. 6. pag. 634.

(23) Idem, Epist. 30. lib. 6. pag. 635.

(24) Call'd Franciscus Calvus.

(i) Panz. de Claris Leg. Interp. lib. 2. cap. 16c. See concerning the Time of his Death, the Remark [E] towards the End.

stant Humour [G], I mean Death, on the 12th Day of January, 1550 (i). He was not full Fifty eight Years of Age. Paul III. gave him an honourable Reception, in his Passage through Ferrara, and offered to advance him to Ecclesiastical Dignities. Alciatus was contented with that of Prothonotary, and would not renounce the Profession of the Civil-Law [H]. The Emperor created him a Count Palatine, and a Senator. Philip, King of Spain (*), passing through Pavia, presented him with a Gold Chain. It is thought that Alciatus died of a Surfeit, which he got by over eating himself (k); for he was not only very covetous, but likewise a greater Eater [I]. He was the same, which the Inhabitants had given the Dauphin. I have already said, on other Occasions, That, when a Fact of this nature is variously reported by Authors, or does not appear in most of those, who write a Person's Elogy, it cannot be depended upon. Yet this Fact ought to be excepted out of this Rule; for we find among Alciatus's Works (33) the Discourse, which he made when Francis I. assisted at one of his Lectures.

(4) Ex cibo, quem largorem sumere conlueverat, morbum contraxit. Id. ib.

(33) Tom. 4. pag. 870. Edit. f. Francfort 1617.

[G] The true Remedy for his inconstant Humour. If I had taken Advantage of all that I have met with in Authors, concerning the several Stations of Alciatus, I should have represented him as more inconstant, than he really was. It is sufficient, that he went from Avignon to Bourges, from Bourges to Pavia, from Pavia to Bologna, from Bologna to Pavia, from Pavia to Ferrara, from Ferrara to Pavia, and all this before sixty Years of Age. I bet to ill disposes his Account of this learned Civilian, that any Reader would infer from it, that Alciatus returned into France, after the Duke of Milan had recall'd him from Bourges. We have seen that Panzirolus makes him go from Pavia to Avignon. Mureri sends him from Bourges to Orleans, and from Orleans to Padua.

Mr Teisser makes him Professor at Milan (34). He cites Pasquier, in the Twenty ninth Chapter of the ninth Book of his Recherches: He should have cited the Thirty ninth Chapter; but Milan is not to be found there. These are Pasquier's Words: "I heard " three or four of Alciatus's Lectures in the City of " Pavia. Coming from thence to Bologna, where " Marianus Socinus, the Nephew of Bartholomew, " read Lectures, I found that the Italian Scholars, " in general, had a greater Esteem for him, than for " the other. Nay, those, who had any Suit in Law, " chose rather to make use of Socinus, because, said " they, he never lost any time in the study of hu- " man Learning, as Alciatus did." Mr Teisser, citing this Passage, says, That Bartholomew Socinus taught the Civil Law at Bologna, when Alciatus was Professor at Milan. These two Facts are not to be found in Pasquier. If I would have made a general Collection of all these Circumstances, what a Weathercock should I have made of our sickle Professor? but I should have been a thousand times more to blame, than the Authors of these Falshoods, if I had made use of them to his prejudice. He was not ignorant, that he was censured for his frequent Changes of Universities, and, among other Reasons, he endeavour'd to justify himself by this, that no one finds fault with the Sun, for running round the Earth, to animate all things by it's Heat, and it's Beams: He added, That when any one praises the fixed Stars, he does not design to condemn the Planets (35). There was an insufferable Vanity in these Comparisons; it was to consider himself as a Source of Light, which was to run successively through all the Republic of Letters, that the Darkness of Ignorance might be expell'd from every Place by his Presence. But let us allow him his Comparison, and tell him, that he ought to have resembled Copernicus's Sun, have kept his Center, and illuminated from thence all who approach'd him. It is much more honourable for a Philosopher to be visited by a great Number of Scholars, in the place of his Residence, as Abelard was (36), than to ramble up and down in search of Scholars. And, doubtless, if the love of Glory alone possesses a Man's Soul, without being mix'd with the love of Gain, or a fantastical Humour of being soon disgusted with the same Things, we should not see so many Persons struck with Alciatus's Dis temper. The Idea of true Glory would inspire a Man with a Resolution not to wander in search of great Theatres of Action, but to convert the Place of his own Residence into such a Theatre, how small soever it be: He would remember Agglaus's Answer. He happened to be placed, on a Day of Ceremony, beneath his Rank; 'Eury, (34) Teisser, Eloges des Hommes illustres, Tom. 2. pag. 395. Edit. Geneva, 1683.

(3) See the Speech he pronounced at Ferrara, in 1543. Oper. Tom. 4. pag. 872. and Claud. Minus in his Life.

(35) See Remark [A] of the Article FOUL-QUES.

say: be, δαίμων γὰρ ἔστι ἐν οἷ τοῖσι τὰς ἀνδρῶν ἐν- τήμας, ἀλλ' οἱ ἀνδρες τὰς τοῦτο ἐπιδεικνύμεναι: — I am satisfied; for I will shew that a Man does not receive Honour from his Place, but his Place from him (37). He would see that it is much more glorious to do a thing gratis, than for Reward, and that the nearer a Man comes to a free Gift, that is, to a Profession without a Salary, the nearer he approaches to what is great and noble; whereas he recedes from it, and becomes a Man of a mean and mercenary Spirit, in proportion as he increases the Wages, which he extorts. This is to reduce the Profession of Learning to the Nature of the most Mechanic Arts. A Shoemaker, or a Hatter, who will be better paid for his Work than another, gains the Reputation of an excellent Workman by it. To pretend, that an Increase of your Salary is a Proof that you are esteemed the greater Preacher, or more learned Professor; is it not to judge of your Trade, as we judge of that of a Shoemaker, or a Hatter? This is the direct way to cry down Learning, and to draw Contempt upon those, who profess it; for a false Taste of Glory, join'd with Covetousness, generally occasions the Fault, for which Alciatus was blamed; I mean the violent Desire of making the Tour of all the Universities; which I have already taken notice of in another Place (38). Surely this is to set up one's Learning to public Sale, and to proclaim, That he who bids most shall have it.

[H] And would not renounce the Profession of the Civil Law. He congratulates himself upon it, in a Letter which he wrote to Paul Jovius, whom Pope Paul III. had amuss'd a long time with deceitful Promises. I am very glad, says he, that I did not suffer myself to be deceived by that Pontiff, who invited me to go to Rome, upon the Promise of great Rewards. Upon this he set forth the solid Advantages of his Profession, in opposition to the imaginary Hopes of a Cardinalship. " Mihi gratulor, quod ab eo (inveterati " agnus sene Principe) me decipi non sim passus, quum " me, uti scis, magnis propositis præmiis Ticino, " Ferrara, atque Bononia, in Urbem accerferet. " Tum enim ex jure meo magis cautus fui, quam tu " ex sapientie præceptis prudens Philosophus. Cur " enim pro inani aut incerta spe purpureæ, hos tantos " primi suggestus honores reliquerem, opimis præ- " sertim firmatus stipendiis? Cur has tantas contem- " nerem circumfusus juventutis salutaciones? & hanc " denique tot consultoribus januum pulantibus exili- " mationem magno lucro, & non obscura cum laude " quæsitam, ineptè sultate defererem (39)? — " For why should I quit these first-rate Honours, at- " tended too with great Advantages, for the vain and " uncertain Hopes of the Purple? Why should I de- " spise that awful Respect, which is paid me by the " surrounding Crowd of Students? and why should I " foolishly forsake the great Reputation I acquire, not " without considerable Gain, from such a Number of " Persons, who are continually knocking at my Door to " consult me?" Note, by the by, that this confutes those who say, that he refus'd a Cardinal's Hat, which the Pope offer'd him (40). This Story is the fruit of an Hyperbole, the darling Figure of many People. The whole Truth of the Matter is this, That the Pope, the better to persuade Andrea Alciatus to come to Rome, gave him to understand that it would be a means to open his Way to the Sacred College. Such a Discourse is very far from the Offer of a Cardinal's Cap. (*) [Alciatus, to whom it is said that Philip made a Present of a Gold Chain, died in 1550. Now this Prince came to the Crown but upon the Abdication of the Emperor his Brother. If Mr BAYLE had recollected this, he would have said the Prince of Spain, and not the King of Spain. This little Piece of Inadvertency is properly Panzirolus's, whom Mr BAYLE only copies here. REM. CRIT.]

[I] For he was not only very covetous, but likewise a great Eater. Panzirolus expresses himself thus: Avarior

(37) Plot. in Ap. pph. Lacon. init. pag. 208.

A REFLEX-ION on the Rambling Humour of some Profes-sors.

(38) In the Remark [A], of the Article AC-CARIS I.

(39) Alciat. Epist. ad Paulum Jovium. It is prefix'd to the first Volume of Jovius's Histories, and dated from Pavia, the seventh of October, 1549.

(40) Teisser. Elog. Tom. 2. pag. 354. Edit. 1683. & Tom. 1. pag. 34. Edit. 1696.

(l) Vir fuit corpulentus, proceræ stature. Panzir. de Clivis Leg. Interpr. 1b. 25. cap. 169. Mr. Tellier, Tom. 2. p. 304. of his Elegies, f. 35 he was a Man of a middle Stature.

(m) It is not therefore, true that there was at Naples, in 1688, a Grandson of the Great Alciatus. See Dr. Burnett's Travels into Italy. If there was, he must have been very old.

He was a corpulent and tall Man (l). After the Death of his Mother, who was much advanced in Years, he had a mind to lay out his Estate in founding a College; but, having received an Affront from some insolent Scholars, he gave over that Design, and made choice of Francis ALCIATUS for his Heir, a Young Man of great Hopes, whom he had educated (m), though he was not nearly related to him (n). This Francis Alciatus succeeded to Andrew's Estate and Professorship, and made himself famous at Pavia by his Lectures in Civil-Law. Cardinal Borromeo, who had been his Disciple, invited him to Rome, and was so good a Patron to him, that he obtained for him, from Pope Pius V, a Bishopric, the Office of a Datary, and a Cardinal's Hat (o). There are some Treatises of Civil-Law wrote by this Cardinal Alciatus, who died at Rome in the Month of April, 1580, being a little above fifty Years of Age. See Nicus Erythraeus, in the Forty seventh Chapter of the second Pinacotheca. Those, who say that our Alciatus lived always a single Life, are mistaken [K]. He set up for an Author betimes, as I have observed in the Remark [B]. He published many Law Books, and some Notes on Tacitus, whose Latinity appeared to him very harsh [L]. Muretus, in one of his Speeches, very much inveighs against this Delicacy (p). Alciatus was not sensible of this; for he was already dead; but other Critics, particularly Floridus Sabinus, who attacked him in his Life-time, made him feel their Teeth and Nails (q). His Emblems were very much esteemed, and some Learned Persons have adorned them with Commentaries [M]. His Poems

(n) Moreri l'hist. eccl. de ses bis Neptels.

(o) Panzir. ubi supra.

(p) 'Tis the 1st of the 2d Tome. See all Bodin, Meth. Histor. cap. 4. pag. 85.

(q) Cl. Minos in Vita Alciat.

Avarior habitus est, & cibi avidior. He adds, That Alciatus, having once received Three hundred Crowns for his Advice, and hearing, that Marianus Scinius had received a larger Fee upon the same Occasion, said, they had found a better Merchant, but not a better Lawyer. Take this by the way, for a Confirmation of what has been quoted out of Pasquier (41). "Here are more Tidings of Alciatus's Covetousness. He is taxed with two Things. The one is, That his Method favours of I know not what Offentation of the Doctor. — The other is, that Covetousness had so far got the Ascendant over him, that his Tongue, his Pen, and his Doctrine, seemed to be at the Service of that Lord, who paid him best. Nay, I remember, that speaking of Jafon, in his Parerga, he seems to preach in favour of Money; for he praises him, because his Salary had been augmented; which Alciatus knew very well how to make his Advantage of, having drawn Twelve hundred Crowns from the University of Bourges, besides his Licences and Degrees; the Prices of which he caused to be trippled, following the Steps of Dr Jafon, who was the first that took fifty, and an hundred, Crowns, for the Degrees and Honours he conferr'd on the Civilians; whereas before his Time they were wont to pay but three or four Crowns. And, therefore, he says, it is lawful for himself, Deicius, Ruinus, and the other Doctors, to enrich themselves by these Gratuities paid by the Scholars. From whence it is easy to gather, that he did not fail to alledge the Example of Jafon against those, who censured him for being so fond of Money, that they, who had a Mind to take a Doctor's, or Bachelor's, or Licentiate's, Degree from him, were obliged to pay down their Crowns in abundance. That which makes me persist in this Opinion, is, that, in the last Chapter of the fifth Book of his Parerga, renewing his Discourse concerning Jafon, he complains of Princes, and Lords, who set such a mean Value on learned and knowing Men; whereas in former Times, and even in Vespasian's Time (according to the Report of Suetonius) That Emperor caused Fifteen hundred Crowns of the public Money to be given to the Greek and Latin Orators, and Rhetoricians: He also adds the Authority of the Rhetorician Eumanius, who exercised his Profession at Autun, to whom Fifteen thousand Crowns of the public Money were given yearly, by Order of the Emperors Dioleflan, and Maximilian." These are Thevet's Words, in the 279th Page, of the seventh Tome, of his History of illustrious Men.

[K] Those, who say that our Alciatus liv'd always a single Life, are mistaken. Let us see what he says in a Letter, which he wrote to his Friend Francis Calvus, after he came from Milan to Avignon. "Vice versa & ego te rerum mearum admonco; multis affectum me ærumnis patria excessisse, Uxorem vivam & solipsum ibi reliquisse; cæteros fato sum ætos; fortunis plerisque amissis, virtuti soli innoxum non omnino concidisse. Libros & Bibliothecam cam omnem conservasse. In præsentia Jus Civile Avenione profiteo (42). — I will now, in my turn, give you an Account how my Affairs stand; I have left my Country in great Affliction of Mind; I have left behind me my Wife, alive, and in Health; the rest of my Relations are dead (43); my Virtue alone supports me from entirely sinking under the Loss of the greatest part of my Fortunes; I have preserved my Books, and my whole Library, and, at present, I profess the Civil Law at Avignon." Let us then correct these Words of Mr Teissier, he liv'd always a single Life (44).

[L] Whose Latinity appeared to him very harsh.] This Complaint escap'd him in a Letter to Paul Jovius: "Alciatus non dubitat affirmare dictionem ejus præ illa Pauli Jovii esse sententia (45) — Alciatus does not scruple to affirm, that his Style, in Comparison of Paul Jovius's, is like a Place covered with Thorns and Briars." On another Occasion, he expresses himself in a very different manner: "Certat in Tacito sermonis gravitas cum elegantia (46). — In Tacitus, Dignity of Style contends with Elegance." I refer the Examination of this to the Article TACITUS.

[M] His Emblems were very much esteemed, and adorned with Commentaries.] Scaliger the Father, who was not lavish of his Praises, as every one knows, gives this Account of That Work: "Alciati præter emblemata nihil mihi videre contigit. Ea vero talia sunt, ut cum quovis ingenio certare possint. Dulcia sunt, pura sunt, elegantia sunt, sed non sine nervis; sententiæ vero tales, ut etiam ad usus civilis vitæ conferant (47). — I have not met with any Work of Alciatus, except his Emblems. But they are, I think, equal to any Work of Genius. They are entertaining, chaste, and elegant, and not without Strength; the Sentences likewise are such, as may even be of Service to the Purposes of Civil Life." These Emblems were translated into French, Italian, and Spanish (48). There are at least three French Translations; That of Bartholomew Aneau, That of John le Fevre, and That of Claudius Minos (49). The latter not only translated, but commented upon them: One of the most learned Humanists of Spain (50) thought them worthy of a Commentary of his own composing. Pignorius, a learned Italian, formed the same Judgment of them; and after them, a Professor of Friburg (51), published them with their's and his own Notes, and added those of Frederic Morel at the end. This Edition is a very good one: 'Tis pity we cannot distinguish in it what belongs to each Commentator: It came out at Padua, in the Year 1661, in 4to. I do not mention Sebastian Stockhamerus, whose Labours are not much esteemed. "Sebastianum Stockhamerus vix Commentatoris nomine dignor, quia in sola epigrammatis resolutione occupatur, paucissimis, illicque suis vulgaris, sententiis & fabulis additis; ad hæc vix median emblematum partem hoc suo more explicat (52). — Sebastian Stockhamerus scarce deserves the Name of a Commentator; for he is wholly taken up in the Analysis of an Epigram, adding

(42) Epist. Gadii, &c. pag. 75.

(43) Te he f. 35. lb. d. pag. 96. in a Letter, written in 1522, that his Mother and his Uncle, by his Father's side, were living.

(44) Teissier. Addit. aux Elog. Tom. 1. pag. 34.

(45) Vossius de Hist. Lat. lib. 1. pag. 160.

(46) Vide Cramberti Diff. Politic. in Tacit. pag. 3.

(47) Jul. Cæsar Scalig. lib. 6. de Poetic.

(48) Joh. Matthæus Tolcanus in Populo Italico, lib. 3.

(49) See the Bibliothecope of la Croix du Maine.

(50) Sanctius Brocensis.

(51) Joann. Thibaultus Marimontanus, of Tirol, Philosopher and Physician, and formerly Archdeacon of Friburg, and Professor in ordinary of Humanity, in the University of Briggaw.

(52) Thibaultus in Pref. Claudius Minos, gives much the same Judgment of it in his Preface, adding were much commended, as Mr Baillet ingeniously observes in the Third Volume of his Jugemens sur les Poëtes, n. 1286. He is not one of those, who have perished in their first Sentiments; for we find, in his Parerga, a Work, which he published in his old Age, a Retraction of several things, which the fire of Youth had occasioned him to advance with too great Precipitation; and, when his Dispunctiones were printed in 1529, he gave the Public to understand (r) that, in revising this Work, he did not pretend to give his Approbation to every thing he had inserted in it in his Younger Days, nor to deprive himself of the liberty of altering his Opinions. This Remark was made by an Apologist of the Emperor Justinian (s).

A Letter was printed at Leyden (t), in 1695, wrote by Andrew Alciatus, which he did not intend to make public; for it contains a lively Description of the Abuses of a Monastic Life. He wrote this Letter to Bernard Mattius, who had been his Colleague, and who turned a Fryar of the Order of St Francis on a sudden, and without consulting his Friends. He represented to him his Imprudence with great Learning and Eloquence. This Piece of Alciatus was composed in four Days; and was found in Scrivener's Closet (u). It is dated the 7th of June 1553 [N].

(r) See the Preface to the Book.

(s) Gabriel Trivarius, Obferuat. Apologet. ad Inscript. Orationis ad Antecessores, pag. 187. Paris. 1631.

(t) B. M. Matthæus, Prefat. f. the Great Lib. at Leyd. n.

(u) See the Epistle Dedicatory of Mr Matthæus.

"adding a few, and those the most trite and common Sentences; besides, he does not explain half the Emblems, after this his Manner." I omit likewise the Jesuit, who explained the same Emblems publicly at Paris (53); but I believe the Reader will not be displeased to see the Title, which Bartholomew Anæus (Bartholomæus Anæus) prefixed to His Translation. It is This. Andrew Alciatus's Emblems translated Verse for Verse, according to the Latin, and digested into Common Places, with Summaries, Incriptions, Schemes, and brief epimythic Expositions, according to the Natural, Moral, or Historical Allegory. The Editions of this Work of Alciatus are numberless; there are Two hundred and twelve Emblems in That of Tbuius, which I make use of; I am therefore surprized, that Paul Freherus should say, That this Book contains but One hundred Emblems (54).

(54) Paul Freher. in Theatro.

[N] It is dated the 7th of June, 1553.] If this Date be right, we must reject all the Authors, who place Alciatus's Death on the twelfth of January, 1550, or 1551, and who alledge his Epitaph as a Proof (55). But there is a Mistake in the Date of this Work, and I believe it was composed before the Year 1520, and that it is the same Piece, which Alciatus feared Erasmus would cause to be printed. "Quod ut facias te quoque ipse oro: Nec minus ut de uingibus Erasmi regutines orationem illam meam ad Matthiam Minoritam, cum id quæso, ne, si cinerariorum istorum manus inciderit, parata sint mihi cum eis æterna bella (56). — This I intend to treat you to perform; as also, that you would get out of Erasmus's Clutches That Oration of mine to Matthias Minorita; lest, if it falls into the Hands of those Blowers of the Coals, I should be drawn in to wage eternal War with them." This is what he wrote to his Friend Francis Calvus, the Twenty sixth of September, 1520. Some of this Civilian's Letters were published at Utrecht in 1697, which inform us of many Particulars, and chiefly of the Encomiums he bestowed upon himself with all a Boaster's Vanity.

(55) See the Remarks [E].

(56) Epist. Gudii, sec. pag. 80. See also, pag. 81, 82, and Mr Burman's Preface.

ALCIATUS (JOHN PAUL) a Gentleman of Milan, was one of those Italians, who left their Country in the XVIth Century, to embrace the Protestant Religion, and who afterwards refined so much upon the Mystery of the Trinity, that they formed a New Party, equally odious to the Protestants and Catholics. Alciatus had bore Arms; he began his Innovations at Geneva, together with a Physician, whose Name was Blandrata, and an Advocate, whose Name was Gribaud, to whom Valentinus Gentilis associated himself (a). The Precautions, which were taken against them, and the severe Proceedings carried on against the latter, made the rest more timorous, and induced them to look out for another Stage (b). They made choice of Poland, where Blandrata and Alciatus sowed their Heresies with good Success. They invited Gentilis thither [A], who did not fail to join them (c). He had obligations

(a) See Arctius, in the History of Gentilis's Condemnation.

(b) Beza in Vit. Calvini.

(c) Id. ib.

[A] They invited Gentilis thither.] I have followed Aretius and Theodorus Beza, who agree in this, That Gentilis did not go into Poland, till after Blandrata and Alciatus had published their Opinions there (1); and I give up the Author of the Bibliotheca Antitritinarianorum, who affirms that Alciatus and Gentilis went into Poland together about the Year 1562 (2). Stanislaus Lubienietzky says almost the same thing. "Valentinus iste & Paulus Alciatus Pedemontanus, cum Geneva ob odia Calvinii acerrima subsisteret non possent, anno 1563 in Poloniam venerant (3). — Tibi Valentinus et Paulus Alciatus of Piedmont, when they could no longer continue at Geneva, on Account of the inveterate Prejudices against Calvin, in the Year 1563, came into Poland." But these Authors are not exact enough to deserve the Preference. Hornius deserves it still less, who says, That George Blandrata, and Paul Alciatus, both Physicians, (he is mistaken in regard to Alciatus) fled from Switzerland into Poland, being terrified at the Punishment of Servetus and Gentilis. In the same Page of his Ecclesiastical History, he affirms, that they followed the Trithemism of Valentinus Gentilis (4). But it is certain that Alciatus's Heresy was meerly confuted, than by a Letter of Peter Martyr, written at Zurich, the eleventh of July, 1558. He informs Calvin, in this Letter, that he had seen Gregory the Physician, and John Paul the Piemontois; that they were exhorted not to disturb the Union of the Church, and to conform themselves to the Formulary of the Italian Church of Geneva; that they could not prevail with them, and that, upon Bullinger's Opinion, they were advised to leave the City; that they did so; that the Physician said, he was going into Transylvania; and that John Paul went to Chiavonne. We must not read Gregorium Medicum, in Peter Martyr, but Georgium Medicum; who is no other than George Blandrata, as Johannes Paulus Pedemontanus is no other than our Alciatus. If Calvin had not expressly said, that all these Heterodox Italians, and by Name John Paul Alciatus, signed the Formulary, I should be much tempted to think, that those, whom Peter Martyr speaks of, refused to subscribe to it. However it be, they were not at Geneva a little after their Subscription; for they subscribed on the eighteenth of May, 1558, and were at Zurich the eleventh of July following. Gentilis was not executed 'till 1566. He left Geneva some Months after the Subscription, and went into the Country of Gex, where he conferred with Alciatus; which shews, either that Alciatus did not go to Chiavonne, when he left Zurich, or that he did not long continue there. See the Article B. LANDRATA, where I endeavour to clear up the Chronology in relation to these Persons.

(1) Aretius in his History of Gentilis's Condemnation. See also the 81st Letter of Beza.

(2) Bibl. Antitritin. pag. 26, 27.

(3) Lubienietzky's History of the Reformation in Poland, pag. 107.

(4) The Mistakes are to be found in the Edition of 1687, enlarged with Mr Leydecker's Notes, and his Continuation.

(d) Bibl.
Antitrinit.
pag. 28.

other in 1565, dated from Husterlitz, in which he maintained that JESUS CHRIST did not exist before he was born of the Holy Virgin (d). There was Reason, then, to blame Moreri, who made him an Arian, and afterwards a Mahometan (e). Perhaps, before he went to Dantzic, he made the Tour of Turkey, without any design of turning a Renegade, but only to secure himself from Perfection [E]; which perhaps occasioned the Report of his pretended Mahometanism. Calvin and Beza represented him as a Madman [F].

(e) See his Dictionary
in the Aricle ALCI-ATUS, where he is confuted.

"that Alciatus, in his Letters to Gregorius Paulus, dated at Husterlitz, in the Year 1564 and 1565, dissuaded him from the Opinion, that Christ existed before he was born of Mary and strenuously opposed the Vulgar Notion of the Trinity; inasmuch that he is said inadvertently to have recommended to him a kind of Mahometanism, even in the doubtful and hazardous beginnings of a Reformation; but that it was found out by Calvin and his Followers, who were inflamed with the most deadly Hate towards him, and all Lovers of Truth."

[E] Perhaps — he made the Tour of Turkey — to secure himself from Perfection.] This puts me in mind of Peter Abelard, who was on the Point of seeking an Asylum among the Infidels, against the Agents or Promoters of Orthodoxy. He had been very ill treated, and was more alarmed than any other; for, whenever he was told that there would be speedily an Assembly of Ecclesiastics, he immediately believed it was designed to condemn HIM. Besides he found, by Experience, the great Credit of those Agents; and it was not easy to escape them under Princes of their own Party. They send circular Letters; and, before their Enemy arrives at any Town, the Description of his Errors has already alarmed the Inhabitants of it, and exasperated them against him. There was a Time, when they, who had the Pope's Ear, could make the best part of Europe an uninhabitable Country to a Person, whom they were resolved to decry as an Heretic; and the poor Wretch might, in some Sense, apply to himself the Psalmist's Exclamation, Whither shall I go then from thy Spirit? or whither shall I go then from thy Presence? — If I take the Wings of the Morning, and remain in the utmost Part of the Sea; — even there also thy right Hand shall hold me. Psal. cxxxix. — Therefore, it is no wonder, that Peter Abelard was induced to retire among the Mahometans or Pagans. He was in hopes, that, in paying Tribute, he might have the Liberty to profess Christianity, out of the Sphere of Activity of the Odium Theologicum, and he fear'd, that, unless he did so, he should always find himself within the Influence of That Sphere. These are his Words. "Deus ipse mihi testis est, quotiens aliquam Ecclesiasticum personam conventum adunari noveram, hoc in damnationem meam agi credebam. Stupefactus illico, quasi su-

"pervenientis ictum fulguris expectabam, ut quasi hæreticus aut profanus in confiliis traheretur aut Synagogis — Sæpe autem (Deus scit) in tantum lapsus sum desperationem, ut, Christianorum finibus excessis, ad Gentes transire disponerem, atque ibi quietè sub quacunque tributi passione inter inimicos Christi christianè vivere (21). — God himself is my Witness, that, as often as I heard, that an Assembly of Ecclesiastics was to meet, I fancied it was called for my Condemnation. In the utmost Consternation thereupon, I immediately expected, as some Thunder-Clap, to be dragg'd before Councils and Synagogues, and to be accused as an Heretic, or profane Person. — Often likewise (God knows) I fell into such Despair, that I purpos'd to quit Christendom, and to take Refuge among the Pagans; there, at the Expence of a Tribute, to live as a Christian, among the Enemies of Christ." Now, as Alciatus had yet more to fear from Popery, than Abelard, and that he found but little Safety in Countries, where other Christians were Masters,

(21) Abbe-lardi Opus-
pag. 32.

----- Tenent Danaï, quâ deficit Ignis (22);

(22) Virgil
Æn. lib. 2.
ver. 505.

Where'er the raging Fire had left a Space,
The Grecians enter, and possess the Place.

DRYDEN.

his capricious Humour might well create in him a Desire of trying the Toleration of the Turks, and then might induce him to change his Mind, and resolve upon going to Dantzic. Let us learn from hence to distrust certain Accounts, though adopted by considerable Authors.

[F] Calvin and Beza represented him as a Madman.] The former says, that, on the Day, when the Italians, suspected of Heterodoxy, were required to sign a Formulary, Alciatus flew into a violent Passion. "Inter quos Princeps fuit Joannes quidam Paulus Alciatus, homo non solidi tantum & vesani ingenii sed plane phreneticus ad rabiem usque (23). — Among them the Chief was one John Paulus Alciatus, a Man, not only Foolish and Ignorant, but Frantic even to Rage." The latter says, that he was a giddy-headed, and frantic Fellow; "Paulus quidam Alciatus, Mediolanensis, homo jam antea plane phreneticus & vertiginosus (24)."

(23) Calvin.
adverf. Va-lent. Gentil.
pag. 69.
Tractat.
Theolog.

(24) Beza
Epist. 31.

ALCIATUS (TERENCE) an Italian Jesuit, descended from the same Family as Alciatus the Civilian, was born at Rome in the Year 1570. He studied the Civil-Law five Years before he turned Jesuit, and entered into That Society in the Month of March, 1591. The Employments he had in it testify, that they looked upon him as a considerable Man. He was thirteen Years Præfect of the College of Rome; he taught Philosophy five Years, and Divinity seventeen in That City. Afterwards he was Director of the Penitentiary of the Vatican, and Sub-Superior of the Maison Professe. He assisted at the Ninth General Congregation of the Jesuits, as Deputy of the Province of Rome, and, when he died of an Apoplexy on the 12th of November, 1651, he was Sub-Provincial. He was not less esteemed out of the Society; for, besides that he was a long time Qualificator of the Congregation of the Holy Office, and Confessor of the Congregation of Rites, he was chosen by Pope Urban VIII to refute Father Paul. He prepared an Edition of the Acts of the Council of Trent, which he intended as an Apology for that Assembly against all kind of Adversaries, and particularly against This Formidable Venetian. He had already collected a great number of Materials for this Important and Laborious Work, when Death took him out of the World (a); but, though he had spent several Years upon this Undertaking, he had scarce began to digest it into Form. Father Sforza Palavicini, who was engaged in the same Design, informs us why Father Alciatus was so backward in his Performance [A]. If Moreri had but cast his Eye on the Preface of Cardinal Pallavicini,

(a) See his Bibliotheca Scriptor. in Sæcul. 16.
lib. 1.

[A] Father Alciatus was so backward in his Performance.] He laid it down as a Rule, never to deny a thing, without bringing Proofs of the Negative; inasmuch that he spent many Years in search of Memoirs, which might furnish him with Proofs. Cardinal Palavicini pretends, that this was a Work of Supererogation; because no Law obliges a Man to prove what he denies: It lies upon the Accuser to prove Palavicini, he would not have put the Acts of the Council of Trent among Father Alciatus's Works. We must only insert among them one Sermon on the Passion, preached before Pope Clement VIII in 1602, and the Life of Peter Fabri, a Companion of St Ignatius Loyola. Father Alciatus, disguised under the Name of Eminius Tacitus (b), translated it into Italian from the Latin of Nicolas Orlandino (c). This Translation was printed at Rome in 1629. The Latin was printed at Lyons in 1617. Moreri observes, that Pope Urban VIII declared, that Father Alciatus deserved a Cardinal's Hat. Nicinus Erythæus reports the same (d). If it be asked, what prevented this Jesuit from obtaining what he deserved; I answer, had not Urban the VIIIth the disposal of these Hats? The Reply is very obvious; This Dignity is to be conferred on such a number of Persons for Political Reasons, that, they, who are thought worthy of it, cannot always be admitted to it.

(b) Leo Alciatus in Apibius urbanis, p. 238. and Alegambus, call bim Erminius.

(c) Sætuell's B. bl. Societ. Jesu.

(d) Nic. Erythæus. Pinacoth. 2. cap. 47.

prove his Charge; and if he does not do it, he deserves the Punishment of Retaliation. But the accused Person may content himself with a bare I deny it: This is sufficient to acquit him, whilst nothing is proved against him: "Là dove questi s'era fatto lecito, d' accusare senza provare, il che dalle leggi è punito colla pena del talione; quegli non volle negare senza haver la prova della falsità; dal che ogni legge li dà obbligava. Quindi fu che spece moltissimi anni in cercar memorie certe di que' successi (1)." By this Cardinal's good leave, I do not think, that, upon this occasion, it was sufficient to deny what Father Paul affirmed. When the Laugh is against us, we cannot bring too many Proofs in support of our Cause. The Cardinal adds, that Father Alciatus composed very slowly, as being scrupulously exact in whatever he wrote; besides which, old Age, and the Affairs of the Society, were new Obstacles. "Dapoi la freddezza dell'età decrepita, la natura perplessa, la pena altrettanto lenta, quanto esquisita, le occupazioni de' nostri governi domestici hanno cagionato ch' egli sia morto con lasciar solo qualche vestigio dell' opera concepita in idea (2)." We may learn from hence, that some Persons, through too much care of becoming good Authors, never become Authors at all.

(1) Palavicini's Introduction to the Hist. of the Council of Trent.

(2) Id. Ibid.

ALCINOE, Daughter of Polybius, the Corinthian, and Wife of Amphilocus, ran mad for Love of one Xanthus, of the Island of Samos, who lodged at her House. This was not the strangest part of her Adventure; the great Matter of Surprise is, that it was Minerva who inspired her with this Disease of Love, to punish her for not having discharged her Promise to a Woman, who had worked for her. This Woman prayed to Minerva to revenge her; and thus her Prayers were heard. Alcinoe, influenced by this Goddess, fell so desperately in Love with her Guest, that she forsook her House and her young Children, and embarked with him. But, at Sea, she reflected on her Conduct, she bewailed it, she remembered, with Tears and Cries, her young Husband, and her Children; lastly, all the good Words of Xanthus, who promised to marry her, being too feeble a Consolation, she cast herself into the Sea (a). A great Exploit, and highly worthy of the Goddess Minerva! See the Remark [C] of the Article EGIALEA, and the Remark [D] of the Article MYRRHA.

(a) Parthenit. Eroticonum. c. 27.

ALCINOUS, King of the Phæacians, in an Island, which is, at present, called Corfu, was the Son of Naustobius (a), and Grandson of Neptune and Peribœa [A]. He married his Niece Arete, the only Daughter of Rexenor, the Son of Naustobius, and had five Sons by her, and a Daughter whose Name was Nausicaa, whom Homer greatly celebrates (b). He praises the Mother much more, and makes a Heroine of her. He gives us likewise very long Descriptions of Alcinous's Palace and Gardens. According to his Account, these Gardens produced the most excellent Fruits in the World, without any vicissitude of Winter and Summer, and in every Month of the Year. It was, doubtless, by his Gardens that Alcinous chiefly immortalized his Memory [B]. He received Ulysses with great Civility [C], whom a Storm had cast a-shore

(a) Homer. Odyss. lib. 6, & 7. We must not call him Naustobius, as Moreri does.

(b) Homer. Odyss. lib. 6. ver. 62.

[A] Grandson of Neptune and Peribœa.] Britannicus assures us, that Alcinous was the Son of Phæax, and that Phæax was the Son of Neptune, and of Coryra (1). I find indeed the latter of these two Circumstances in Stephen of Byzantium, but not that this Son of Neptune and Coryra was the Father of Alcinous.

(1) Britannicus in Juvenal. Sat. 5. ver. 151.

[B] It was doubtless, by his Gardens, that Alcinous chiefly immortalized his Memory.] The Poets, in general, strive to out-do each other in speaking of his Gardens. Lloyd cites many Passages from them; let us content ourselves with this of Juvenal:

Illa jubebit
Poma dari, quorum solo pascaris odore,
Qualia perpetuus Phæacum autumnus habebat (2).

(2) Juvenal. Sat. 5. ver. 147.

To him are ordered, and those happy few,
Whom Fate has rais'd above Contempt and you,
Most fragrant Fruits; such in Phæacian Gardens grew;
Where an eternal Autumn ever smiles,
And golden Apples loaded Branches fill'd.

Rev'd. Mr WILLIAM BOWLES.

And let us add to this the Testimony of an Author in Prose. "Antiquitas nihil prius mirata est quam Hesperidum hortos, ac regum Adonis & Alcinoui (3) — Antiquity admired nothing beyond the

(3) Plin. lib. 19. cap. 4.

"Gardens of the Hesperides, and those of the Kings Adonis (4) and Alcinous." Lloyd cites Theophrastus, Patriarch of Antioch, who mentions these Gardens in his third Book ad Autolicum, but he says that we must correct the Reading Antinous, and substitute Alcinous. He cites likewise these Words of St Gregory Nazianzen:

Ἡ δὲ τραπεζὰ καὶ ἄλσος Ἀλκινόοιο Τερπνοτέρη (5).

Thy Table is pleasanter than the Gardens of Alcinous.

I have not observed, that the Poets feign, that this Prince was the Orchard-Keeper, as Moreri will have it. Charles Stephens led him into this Error; for in his Dictionary we find an Alcinous different from the King of the Phæacians, and distinguish'd by the Office of Hortorum custos; which the Author proves by the second Book of Virgil's Georgics, and by some Verses of Ovid and Statius; which relate, not to this, but only to Alcinous's Gardens. Probably this Mistake might arise from a Blunder of some Transcriber, or Printer, who put custos, instead of cultor.

[C] He receiv'd Ulysses with great Civility.] Several Authors, as Rasinius Textor (6), and Decimator (7), attribute

(4) I have not noticed Theophrastus Pliny's right understood what he had read, concerning the Gardens of Adonis. They were not such as he takes them to be.

(5) Gregor. Nazianz. C. 21. Vitulian.

(6) In Epi-thet.

(7) In Syl. voc. vocabul. & in Thes. sive ling. rum.

ALCINOUS. ALCYONIUS.

201

a-shore on the Coast of the Phæacians; he offered him his Daughter, and caused him to be conducted to Ithaca loaded with Presents. Now, as Ulysses told the Company an hundred old Women's Stories, during the Feast, to which he was admitted, it is thought that this occasioned certain Proverbs, which were in use among the Ancients [D]. However it be, Alcinous's Kingdom was a jovial Country; the People there loved good Cheer, and the Conveniences of Life [E], which however did not hinder them from being active, and very good Seamen (c), and Alcinous from being a very just Prince, as appears from these words:

Ἀλκίνοος ——— δυνάστητος βασιλῆων (d).

Alcinous ——— the justest of Kings.

attribute this Reception to Nausicaa, the Daughter of Alcinous, without allowing the Father any share in it. But they forget, that the only gave Ulysses Cloaths, and Advice, without the City; and that she had a Father and Mother, who perform'd all the Honours of Reception, and Hospitality. See the Article NAUSICAA.

[D] Certain Proverbs, which were in use among the Ancients. Moreri says, that "Ulysses related the Fable of the Cyclopes, of the Læstrigons, and others, leaning, as they say, with his Elbow on the Table; which gave occasion for that Proverb of the Ancients, which Erasmus did not forget, "Alcinous's Table;" or, as Plato expresses it, Must I relate the Story of Alcinous to you?" This is nothing to the Purpose. I. The Phrase and others is obscure, and quite careless. II. The Proverb of Alcinous's Table did not arise from Ulysses's Story-telling, but from the good Cheer, which Alcinous usually provided. See the following Remark. Besides, it is not true, that Plato expresses himself by way of Question: He declares only that he will not repeat the Fable of Alcinous (8). It is yet more false, that what he says is, in other Terms, the same thing with the Table of Alcinous. It is certain that we find, in the Index of Erasmus's Adagia, Alcinoi Mensa, and Alcinoi Apologus, as two different Proverbs. The first is not an Article in the Body of the Book; it is only added, by way of Supplement to the Proverb, Sylaristica Mensa (9); and is taken from these Words of Gregory Nazianzen, Οὐκ ὡς λωτοφάγεσιν παύειν, ἀλλ' ὡς ἀλκινόου τετραπύλῳ; non ad Lotophagorum inopiam, sed Alcinoi menjam. Hadrian Junius, who made a Collection of Proverbs after Erasmus, wherein he places Alcinoi Horti as a capital Proverb, cites, in the Explication of it, this other Passage of the same Father, concerning the Table of Alcinous;

Καὶ δόμον αἰγλήνῃα καὶ Ἀλκινόου τετραπύλῳ.

The Dome magnificent could'st thou afford,
And rich Alcinous's hospitable Board.

Lloyd cites another Passage, in which this holy Doctor makes use of the same Phrase. As for the Alcinoi Apologus, Erasmus repeats it twice. First he understands it of old Wives Tales, de longis & anilibus fabulamentis, and justifies it by the Stories, which Ulysses told at the Table of Alcinous. "Prodigiosas ac deridiculas fabulas & protentuosas mendacia de Lotophagis, Læstrygonibus, Circe, Cyclopiibus atque id genus aliis plurimis miraculis, fretus videlicet Phæacum inciticia barbareque (10). — His monstrous and absurd Tales, and portentous Lies, concerning the Lotophagi, the Læstrigons, Circe,

"the Cyclopes, and the like wonderful Events, which be told, relying upon the Ignorance and Barbarity of the Phæacians." But, in another Place (11), he tells us that he had met with another Signification of the same Proverb, in the fourth Book of Aristotle's Rhetoric (12), but that he would suspend his Decision, till he saw more clearly into the Matter, either by the Commentaries of St Gregory Nazianzen on those Books of Aristotle (13), or by some other means. I scarce meet with any one, who pays the least Regard to this latter Passage of Erasmus. They stop at the first; as if the true Sense were to be found there: But it is far from being to be met with in that place; for if we consider never so little what Erasmus says on Aristotle's Words, we shall wholly distrust the Explication he has given in another Place. I own this Passage of Aristotle is obscure, that it is differently read, and that perhaps there is an Hiatus in it; but there is no probability, that by the Apologue of Alcinous, we ought to understand a Tale of a Tab. Yet Gilbert Cousin, who made a Collection of Proverbs after Erasmus, fancies so; though he considers the thing only according to Aristotle's Citation (14). There is a Passage in Ælian, where Alcinoi apologi, Ἀλκίνοου ἀπολόγοι, can only be taken for the Discourses of Ulysses to that Prince in the Odyssey (15).

[E] The People there lov'd good Cheer, and the Conveniences of Life. Alcinous made no Secret of this to Ulysses: We love, said he to him, Feasts, Music, Dancing, change of Apparel, Bathing, and the Bed.

Ἄνδ' ἡμῖν δαΐς τε φίλη, κίθαρις τε, χοροὶ τε,
Ἑμμετὰ τ' ἐξημοῖα, λολέει τε θάρμα, καὶ ἑναια.

To dance, to dress, to sing, our sole Delight,
The Feast, or Bath, by Day, and Love by Night.
POPE'S Odyss.

Horace expresses it in this Manner;

Alcinoique

In cute curanda plus æquo operata juvenus,
Cui pulcrum fuit in mediis dormire dies, &
Ad strepitum citharæ cessatum ducere curam (17).

Alcinous's idle Youth, whose sole Design

Aim'd at soft Blandishments, and being fine,
Indulg'd at ease, who slept out half the Day,
And lull'd their Cares with Dancing, Song, and Play.

I need not observe, that by Alcinoi juvenus, must be understood the young Lords of Alcinous's Court. Athenæus somewhere remarks the voluptuous Life of the Phæacians.

ALCYONIUS (PETER) was one of those learned Italians, who cultivated useful Literature in the XVth Century. He acquired a considerable Knowledge of the Greek and Latin Tongues, and wrote some Rhetorical Pieces, which deserved the Approbation of good Judges. He was a long time Corrector of the Press at Venice, in the House of Aldus Manutius [A], and ought consequently to have a share in the Praises,

[A] A long time Corrector of the Press at Venice, in the House of Aldus Manutius. Paul Jovius's Account falls short of this. He only says, "Cum diu in Chalceographorum Officiis, corrigendis erroribus mensura mercede operam navasset, multa observatione ad præcellentem scribendi facultatem pervenit (1). — Having been employ'd a long time in Printing-Offices, in correcting Errors of the "Press, for a monthly Stipend, by long Observation he arriv'd at an excellent Faculty of Writing." What relates to Aldus Manutius, is borrowed from Varillas, and I confess that I do it trembling, considering the great Number of Faults, which that Writer committed, about the learned Men, whom he has mentioned in his Anecdotes of Florence. "The Public, says (2) Varillas Anecdotes, pag. 103. be (2), is obliged to him for that Exactness of Aldus Manutius, E c c (c) Homer. Odyss. lib. 6. ver. 270. lib. 7. ver. 35, 107. lib. 8. ver. 247, 253, &c.

(d) Orpheus.

(11) Id. n. 82. cent. 1. chil. 5. pag. 1057.

(12) It is the 16th Chapter of the 3d Book in the Edition of Geneva, 1605.

(13) I never heard of the Commentaries.

(14) Cognat. in Proverb. n. 210. He quotes, as Erasmus does, the fourth Book of the Rhetorics.

(15) Ælian. var. Hist. lib. 13. c. 13.

(16) Homer. Odyss. lib. 8. ver. 248.

(17) Horat. Epist. 2. lib. 1. ver. 23.

(10) Erasmus. Adag. n. 32. cent. 4. chil. 2. p. 469.

(1) Paul. Jovius, in Elog. c. 123. pag. 265.

(2) Varillas Anecdotes, pag. 103.

(a) See the List of them in the Biblio-theque of Gelfner.

(b) Epistles of Princes,
fol. 92. verso.

(c) Jovius,
Elog. c. 123.

Praises, which are given to the Editions of that Learned Priester. He translated several Treatises of Aristotle into Latin (a), but without Success. Sepulveda wrote against these Translations, and observed so many Faults in them, that Alcyonius found no better Remedy for his Disgrace, than to buy up as many Copies of Sepulveda's Works as he could find, in order to burn them [B]. Paul Jovius accuses him of a second Fault, which is more disgraceful than the first; namely of having been an impudent Parasite [C], who made no scruple of eating two or three times a day out of his own House. I cannot tell whether we ought to give entire Credit to Paul Jovius in this Matter; for he quarrelled with Alcyonius (b) upon hearing, that he was his Rival in the Commission of writing History [D]. The Treatise, which Alcyonius published concerning Exile, contained so many fine Passages among other very mean ones, that it was thought he had tacked several Parts of a Treatise of Cicero de Gloria to his own Thoughts, and afterwards, to prevent being convicted of the Theft, had thrown into the Fire that Manuscript of Cicero [E], which was the only one in the World (c). The Two Orations, which he made, after the taking of Rome, in which

"Manutius, in printing the best Greek and Latin Authors, which we admire at present; for he was all his Life-time Corrector of that famous Printing-Office." This last Particular is false, for Alcyonius was Professor at Florence, under the Pontificate of Hadrian VI.

[B] Sepulveda ----- observed so many Faults in them, that Alcyonius found no better Remedy, &c. Paul Jovius remarks this. "Quum aliqua ex Aristotele perperam insolenterque vertisset, in eum Sepulveda vir Hispanus, egregie de literis meritis, edito volumine peracuta jacula contorsit ----- tanto quidem eruditiorum applausu, ut Alcyonius ignominie dolore misere confternatus, Hispani hostis libros in tabernis, ut concremaret, gravi pretio coemere coeretur (3). ----- Having translated some Pieces of Aristotle, after a wretched and ignorant Manner, Sepulveda, a Spaniard, well deserving of the learned World, attack'd him very severely upon it ----- with such Applause from the learned, that Alcyonius, greatly affected with Grief, at the Ignominy thrown upon him, was forced to buy up, at a great Price, the Books of his Spanish Enemy, that he might burn them." See the Epistles of Princes, collected by Russell, and translated by Belleforest, Fol. 93. See also the Twenty seventh, and the last Letter of the third Book of Longolius. "Si bene te novi, ipse tu denunciabis, ut hominis, ad tantæ contumelie nuncium, vultum videas: quod unum fane spectaculum tibi magnopere video (4). ----- If I know you well, you will yourself carry the News (namely, that Sepulveda's Work was printed,) that you may observe the Man's Look, when he hears of such a Story upon his Character; a Sight, which I greatly envy you the Pleasure of."

(3) P. Jovius
ubi supra.

(4) Longolius
Epist. ult.
lib. 3.
fol. 25.
verso.

[C] Paul Jovius accuses him ----- of having been an impudent Parasite. Let us set down his own Words: "Cum nulla ex parte ingenuis, sed plane plebeis & fordibus moribus fœderetur; erat enim impudens gulæ mancipium, ita ut eodem sæpe die bis & ter, aliena tamen quadra, cœnaret; nec in ea fœditate malus omnino medicus, quod domi decum in lecti limine per vomitum ipso crapulæ onere levaretur (5). ----- He was a Man, not of ingenuous, but downright plebeian and sordid, Manners; he was a shameless Slave to his Appetite; inasmuch, that, in one and the same Day, he would dine three or four times, but always at another's Expence; nor was he altogether a bad Physician in this beastly Practice; since, afterwards, before he went into Bed, he discharged the intemperate Load of his Stomach." Varillas mentions only Alcyonius's Drunkenness; he accuses him, of getting drunk as often as he had an Opportunity for it. Latomus, whose Verses Paul Jovius alleges, mentions two of this Person's Excesses; that of Drinking, and that of Eating too much.

(c) P. Jovius
Elog. c. 123.
pag. 265.

(6) Letters of Princes,
fol. 93.

(7) Ibid.

[D] His Rival in the Commission of writing History. He, who informs us of this, adds, That it was not true, that Alcyonius was to compose an History, and that Paul Jovius was told so, only to make them quarrel (6). Cardinal de Medicis diverted himself with these Feudes of the Learned; he took delight in disquieting Alcyonius, by protecting Sepulveda, Note, that Alcyonius extolled to the Skies the first Decad of Paulus Jovius's History, in the second Part of his Treatise de Exilio (7).

[E] Had thrown into the Fire That Manuscript of Cicero. Paul Jovius is not the only Person, who mentions this unlucky Trick. Paul Manutius in his Commentary on these Words of Cicero; librum tibi celeriter mittam de gloria (8), ----- (I will speedily send you my Book de Gloria), speaks of it thus: "Li-bros duos significat, quos de gloria scripti: qui ut-que ad patrum nostrorum ætatem pervenerunt. Nam Bernardus Justinianus in indice librorum suorum nominat Ciceronem de Gloria. Is liber postea, cum universam bibliothecam Bernardus monachorum monasterio legasset, magna conquisitus cura, nequitiam eî inventus. Nemini dabium fuit, quia Petrus Alcyonius, cui monachæ medico suo ejus tractandæ bibliothecæ potestatem fecerat, homo improbus furto averterit. Et sane, in ejus opusculo, de Exilio, adpersa nonnulla deprehenduntur, quæ non oleas Alcyonium auctorem, fed aliquanto præstantiorem artificem, videantur. ----- He means the two Books, which he wrote de Gloria; which were handed down to the Age of our Fathers. For Bernardus Justinianus, in the Catalogue of his Books, mentions Cicero de Gloria. This Book, purchased not without great Pains, when Bernardus bequeathed his Library to a Monastery of Nuns, was afterwards not to be found. It was generally believed, that Peter Alcyonius, Physician to the Monastery, to whom the Nuns entrusted the Management of this Library, privately made away with it. And, to say the Truth, there are some scattered Passages in his Work de Exilio, which do not favour Alcyonius's Pen, but of a more excellent Artist." We understand, by this Passage, that Alcyonius was a Physician by Profession. See the Remark [F]. Now since he was Physician to a Convent of Nuns, it cannot, I think, be true, that he spent all his Life in Manutius's Printing-Office. This is a new Proof of Varillas's Error.

(8) Cicero,
Epist. 27.
lib. 15. ad
Atticum.

I have two things to remark against this Historian. The first is, that, in the Fragment of his Lewis XI, he imputed the Plagiarism, and the Destruction of the Treatise de Gloria to Philæphus, and cited the lesser Elogies of Paul Jovius. He was informed (9), that there was no such thing there. No doubt he profited by this Advice, in publishing his Lewis XII; for, after having observed the same thing concerning Philæphus, he adds: "Nevertheless it is not certain that he was guilty of this Crime, which passes for one of the greatest that can be committed in the Affair of Literature; and some Authors impute it to a learned Person of the same time, whose Name is Alcyonius, and maintain that he appropriated this Work of Cicero to himself, after having changed the Title of it, which was de Gloria, into that of de Exilio. (10)." To this latter Fact he applies the Citation of Paul Jovius. Had he entirely suppressed what concerns Philæphus, he would have come off better; for where could he find that Philæphus was accused of this Fraud? Besides Alcyonius is not charged with publishing Cicero's Book, and changing only the Title of it: his Vanity might easily have been forgiven, if he had only been guilty of this; the Pleasure of having that Work of Cicero would make one forget the Trick; but he is accused of having taken a rich Embroidery out of it, and tacking it to his own Rags, and afterwards of burning that whole Work of Cicero. "Ex libro de Gloria Ciceronis, quam nostra malignitate aboleverat, multorum ju-"

Remarks
upon VA-RILLAS.

(9) Nouvelles de la Rep. de Letter, June 1685. Article 179, towards the End.

(10) Varillas, Hist. of Lewis XI.
Book 1. pag.
30. of the Dutch Edit.

"dicio

he very eloquently represented the Injustice of Charles V. and the Barbarity of his Soldiers, removed in some measure the Suspensions, which were entertained against him (d). They are Two very good Pieces. There is mention of a Speech which he composed upon the Knights, who died at the Siege of Rhodes (e). He was Professor at Florence in the Pontificate of Hadrian VI.; and, besides his Pension, had Ten Ducats per Month from Cardinal de Medicis, for Translating a Work of Galen (f). Having heard that this Cardinal was elected Pope, he desired Letters of Dismissal from the Florentines; but, not obtaining them, he went nevertheless to Rome, full of the hopes of raising himself there (g). He lost all his Estate, in the Troubles, which the Colonnas excited in Rome; and, some time after, when the Emperor's Forces took the City, in the Year 1527, he received a Wound, as he was making his Retreat to the Castle of St Angelo; into which he forced his way, notwithstanding the Soldiers, who pursued him, and joined Clement VIII. He was afterwards guilty of base Ingratitude towards That Pope; for, upon the raising of the Siege, he went over to Cardinal Pompey Colonna, at whose House he fell sick, and died in a few Months.

(d) Jovius, ibid.

(e) Letters of Princes, fol. 93.

(f) Vita, De partibus Animalium.

(g) Letters of Princes, fol. 95.

"dicio confectum crederetur. In eo enim tanquam vario cantone præclara excellens purpure fila, languentibus cæteris coloribus, intertexta notabantur
(11) Jovius, "It is thought he composed it out of Elog. cap. Cicero's Book of Gloria, which he wickedly and 323. p. 266. maliciously destroyed. For in this Patch-work Composition there appear interperfed several beautiful Threads of the finest Purple, whilst the rest of the Colours are faint and languid (12)." My second Remark is, that when Varillas mentions Francis Philip-pous, in his Secret History of Florence, he imputes nothing to him in relation to the Book of Gloria;
(12) Page he accuses Alcyonius alone of That scandalous Action.
169. He says (13), that "this wretched Plagiarist was ob-(13) Page liged to comfort the Provoditor Cornaro in the 168. Exile, to which he was condemned, for having been defeated in the War against the Turks, tho' (14) So his "it was not his own Fault. Alcyonius (14) sent him Name is the Book, entitled De fortiter toleranda exilii for-written tuna. And as this Treatise was only composed out throughout of Sentences, though very ill thrown together, of the whole E- Cicero's Book of Gloria, it was much esteemed; dition of the Anecdotes. notwithstanding the more judicious observed that there was no Coherence in it. Alcyonius, ravished with the Success of his Work, altered his Design of publishing This Piece of Cicero. And, knowing very well that no one, besides himself, had a Copy of it, he threw it into the Fire, for fear it should be found some time or other among his Papers, and his Theft should be discovered by that means." If we compare this Relation with That, which is in the Life of Lewis XI. we shall have reason to wonder, how one and the same Man could relate the same Fact with so many inconsistent Varieties. Having not this Treatise of Alcyonius, I cannot determine, whether Varillas has justly remarked the Subject and Occasion of it. I can only say, that the Title he gives it does not agree with That which Gesner let down, Medices Legatus, seu de Exilio liber;
(15) It is very curious; read it in Les Oupcles de Colomes, chap. 15. and that a Passage of this Book (15) discovers to me, that John de Medicis, who was Pope Leo X. is introduced speaking in it. But what I cannot determine by myself, I can affirm on the Word of a Friend of mine, whose Exactness and Capacity I am thoroughly acquainted with (16). His Observation, com-(16) Mr de muni- cated to me, is as follows: "The Legatus Melarroque. dices, seu de Exilio, of Petrus Alcyonius is so far from being wrote for the Consolation of the pretended Provoditor Cornaro, that it is dedicated by the Author ad Nicolaum Schembergium Pontificem Campanum (17), and there is not one Word in the (17) He was afterwards a Cardinal: I mention him in the Article SCHOMBBERG (Nicholas). whole Book that can either directly or indirectly relate to Cornaro. This Work, printed at Basil in 1546, is divided into two Books, the Title of which runs thus; Petri Alcionii Medices Legatus, seu de Exilio, ad Nicolaum Schembergium Pontificem Campanum. It is written by way of Dialogue; and
"John de Medicis, who was afterward Pope Leo X.,
"Julius de Medicis, and Laurence de Medicis, are the Interlocutors. This is the Reason, why Medices is put in the Title; and, because the Author supposes that these Interlocutors discoursed together a little while after Pope Julius II. had sent John de Medicis as his Legate, at the Head of the Army, which was to retake Bologna, the Word Legatus was added to that of Medices." What follows is certainly a great Mistake. Nevertheless believed of it before his Death (to wit, Alcyonius) and made a kind of Honourable Amend*, prefixed to the two Speeches, which he composed at Venice on the Desolation caused by the Lutherans at Rome (18). Doubtless Varillas intended to translate these Words of Paul Jovius: "Verum non multo post confirmata suspi-cionis invidiam duabus splendidissimis orationibus pereregredie mitigavit, quum in clade urbis vehe-mentissime invecius in Cæsarem, populi Romani injurias & barbarorum immanitatem summa perfecti Oratoris eloquentia deplorasset. — Not long after he wonderfully took off from the Odium of a confirmed Suspicion by two most elegant Orationes, when, upon the City's Desolation, he inveighed most vehemently against Cæsar, and lamented the Injuries of the Roman People, and the Cruelty of their inhuman Foes, with all the Eloquence of a perfect Orator." Is there the least Shadow of any thing relating to the Lutherans in this Passage? Is there any Traces of Repentance in it; any Footsteps of an Honourable Amend; on Account of the Book of Gloria?

Has Jovius any other Design than to shew that Alcyonius's Speeches were so much admired, that People were the more inclined to believe, that he might be the Author of the fine Passages in the Book, entitled, de Exilio? I don't believe these Speeches were composed at Venice.

* Amende Honorable.

(18) Varillas, Anecdotes, pag. 168.

I am surprized, that Pierius Valerianus, who regretted the Suppression of a Work, with which he charged Alcyonius, took no notice of the Suppression of the Treatise of Gloria. Having related that Peter Marcellus could not put the last Hand to some Works by Reason of his Sickness; he adds: "Quatuor tamen libros exactissime interpretationis in Mathematicas disciplinas Braccius ejus filius ab interitu vindicavit, vel ipsius auctoritas de se testimonio absolutos; atque que ii Barbarorum manus effugerant, Braccii ipsius diligentia in Arcem Æliam asportati. Sed enim in Petri Alcyonii manus cum incidissent, ita suppressi sunt, ut aulicum amplius apparuerint (19). — However, bis Sen Braccius preferred from Destruction four Books of most exact Lessons upon Mathematical Learning, which were perfectly finished, as appears from the Author's own Testimony. These escaped the Hands of the Barbarians (20), being conveyed by the Care of Braccius to the Ælian Tower. But when they fell into
"Peter Alcyonius's Hands, they were so suppressed,
"as never afterwards to appear."

(19) Pierius Valerianus, de Litterat. Infelicit. p. 76.

(20) He means the Army of Charles V. which plundered Rome in 1527.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, Dr Bourddelot, Physician to the King, and to the Dukes of Burgundy, did me the Favour to send me his Copy of the Treatise of Alcyonius. It is a small Book in 4to, printed at Venice in the Year 1522, in ædibus Aldi & Andreae Juliani Saceri. The Title of it is, Petri Alcyonii Medices Legatus de Exilio; it contains two Parts (21), which are both dedicated ad Nicola-um Schembergium Pontificem Campanum. I found the Information, which Mr de Larroque had sent me concerning this Work, to be true. It does not contain any thing which relates to the Exile of the Venetian Provoditor. The three Interlocutors consider only their own Condition. They were all of the House of Medicis, and continued still under the Misfortune of Banishment. John de Medicis comforts himself, and them too: He is the chief Actor in this Piece, and alleges the Reasons and Examples; in a Word, the Author bestows upon him his Erudition, and his elegant Style. Note, that this Book of Alcyonius

(21) The runn- no title of the first is, Medices Legatus prior; and the running Title of the second is, Medices Legatus posterior.

(b) Pierius Valerianus,
de Literat.
Infelicitat.
p. 63.

Months (b). His Vanity hindered him from becoming more learned [F], and his Practice of Detraction raised him many Enemies [G]. The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is nothing to the purpose in this Article [H]. For it is only a faithful Copy of Varillas's enormous Faults. Some learned Men have very much commended Alcyonius, and his Translations [I].

We find something concerning him in the Letters of Longolius, which is not much to his Advantage [K].

mius was printed at Geneva, in the Year 1624, in 8vo, with two Treatises of Cerdas (22).

[F] His Vanity hindered him from becoming more learned. This is the Opinion of Pierius Valerianus;

"Non displicuisset mihi Alcyonius, si, quantum stylo profecerat, amicorum consilium de rebus adhibere voluisset, qui, nisi ipsum sibi tantum arrogasset, futurum omnino fuerat et primoribus; multam enim Græcis, Latinique literis operam impenderat, & discipulis variis oblectatus erat (23). — Alcyonius would not have displeased me, if, as he was Master of a good Style, he had but consulted his Friends in relation to the Subject-matter of his Compositions; for, had he not depended so much upon his own Judgment, he would have been one of the first Class of Authors; for he had bestowed great Pains in the Greek and Roman Learning, and was Master of many Sciences."

(23) Pierius
Valerian. de Literat. In-
felicit. p. 63.

[G] His Practice of Detraction raised him many Enemies. Let us hear the same Evidence again: "Is eo primum infelicitatis incommodo flagellatus est, quod dum de litteris omnibus male sentit, dicatissima omnes obtreptione lacerabat, unde omnium tam doctorem quam imperitorem in se odium concitavit. — He was particularly unhappy in this Respect, that, having an ill Opinion of the Learned in general, he was perpetually detracting from their Merits; by which means he drew upon himself the Hatred both of the Learned and the Ignorant." See below the Remark [K].

[H] The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is nothing to the Purpose in this Article. I. They have not taken notice, that the Alcyonius of Varillas's Anecdotes is a Chimera of the Transcribers. No doubt the Author gave it Alcyonius in the Original of those Memoirs; and consequently they should not have distinguished the pretended Alcyonius from Peter Alcyonius, whom Moreri had justly placed in the XVth Century. This put me in mind, that Claude du Verdier, in his Censura in omnes penes autores (p. 73.), says, that Peter Avionius had remarked many Errors in Apuleius's Book de Mundo. The Errata corrected Avionius by Alcyonius. Notwithstanding which, Avionius is cited in the fifty fifth Page of the Plagiariorum Syllabus, printed at Amsterdam, in 1694, with the Ammatates Theologico-Philologica of Mr Almeloveer. II. They should have considered, that, according to Varillas, this pretended Alcyonius, having deplored the Ravages, which Charles the Fifth's Army committed at Rome in the Pontificate of Clement VII., should have been placed in the XVIIth Century. III. That which was taken out of the Anecdotes is not purged from any Errors.

[I] Some learned Men have very much commended Alcyonius, and his Translations. I shall only mention what was wrote to Erasmus by Ambrosius Leo Nolanus, in the Year 1518. This Friend, who was an able Physician, informed him, that the Senate of Venice had caused it to be proclaimed by Sound of Trumpet, that all those, who aspired to the Professorship of the Greek Tongue, vacant by the Death of Mark Musurus, should present themselves; and that two Months should be appointed for taking their Names; and examining their Abilities and Knowledge of the Greek Authors. "Statutum est tempus duorum mensium quo competitors & nomina dent, & legendo & aperiendo Græcos autores offendant qui viri sint, & quantum lingua & ingenio polleant (24)." Leo adds, that several of Musurus's Disciples prepared themselves to dispute his Succession, and that Alcyonius, one of the most polite among them, distinguished himself by many admirable Translations. It is better to express this according to the Original; "Inter eorum elegantiores unus Petrus Alcyonius multa à Græco in Romanum sermonem elegantissime vertit. Nam Orationes pleraque Isocratis ac Demosthenis tanta Aspinitate expressit, ut Ciceronem ipsum nihilominus legere videris. Aristotelique multa vertit tam candidè ut Latium gloriabundum dicere possit; en Aristotelem nostrum habemus. Idem ipse juvenis, ut est literarum optimarum utrarumque maximus alumnus, ita tui quodque amantissimus, ac studiorum tuorum laudator summus (25). — Among the more polite of these, (a) Ibid. Peter Alcyonius rendered many things from the Greek into the Roman Tongue, with the greatest Elegance. For he expressed several of the Orationes of Isocrates and Demosthenes, so nearly in the Ciceronian Style, that you would imagine you was reading Cicero himself. And so fairly did he translate many of Aristotle's Pieces, that Latium might boast an Aristotle of its own. This young Author, as he is the greatest Follower of the best, and of both kinds of Learning, so is he very much your Friend, and extremely fond of your Works." Erasmus, answering this Letter, the fifteenth of October, the Year following, caus'd Peter Alcyonius to be complimented in his Name, and confess'd, that he had never heard of him. It were to be wish'd, since there are different Opinions about Alcyonius's Translations, that the learned Mr Huet had done him the Honour to take notice of him, when he compos'd his Dialogues de Interpretatione.

(24) Epist.
Eras. 28. lib.
10. p. 520.

I shall add at this time another Testimony to that of Leo Nolanus. I find that Gabriel Naudé very much commends Alcyonius's Translations, in his Treatise de Fato & Vita Terminus. He tells us, that this Translator, having examin'd three Objections, which may be made to those, who say that the Treatise de Mundo is a Piece of Aristotle's, has recourse, afterwards, to every thing, which may prevent his being obliged to confess, that it is a spurious Piece, concluding with these Words; But let us leave these disagreeable Questions to the Grammarians. "Difficultates ejusmodi amoliri tentet: atque ne supposititium hunc scetum, quem una cum legitimis aliis GANTISSIME de Græco Latino fecerat, agnoscere cogetur, vertit se in omnes partes, tandemque his verbis concludit: Sed morositatem ejus generis questionum Grammaticis relinquamus (26)."

[K] We find something concerning him in the Letters of Longolius, which is not much to his Advantage. We have already seen (27), that, in the Opinion of Longolius, Alcyonius's Looks, upon the News of the publication of Sepeveda's Book, would be an entertaining Sight. Here is something worse. Alcyonius, having passionately desired to carry one of Longolius's Letters to Mark Antony Flaminius, went away without taking it with him, upon which Longolius makes this Reflexion: "Nosti hominis ingenium: Ille enim & cœnæ quam ei opiparam hic dederamus, & laudum quibus a nobis ornatissimus discesserat, & literarum quas summa contentione ut fessitanter scriberem pervicerat, oblitus, profectus esse dicitur. Quod vos idcirco scire volui, ut meis verbis hac de inhumanitate cum eo expofoletis (28). — You know the Nature of the Man: After an headlong Entertainment, which I prepared for him, and the many Praises I bestowed upon him, he forgot it all, and went away, without taking with him the Letters, which, at his own earnest Solicitation, I had written in haste. This I thought fit to inform you of, that you may expofoletate with him in my Name, concerning this uncourteous Treatment." Longolius adds, That it was fortunate enough; since he had said some things in his Letters, which he desired Alcyonius, as well as others, should never be acquainted with. Is not this to infinuate that he was thought capable of breaking open a Letter? "Quamquam id ipsum de quo queror non omnino incommodè nobis accidisse videri possit, ea enim is literis incaute commiseram quæ illum in primis celatum esse cupiebam. Perfecerat scilicet prius nostræ consuetudinis usus, ut magis quibuscum agerem in mentem mihi veniret, quam cui literas daturus essem facis meminisse sem (29)." If he be the Person mentioned in another Letter of Longolius (30), as a learned Man conjectures (31), what a Picture is drawn of him? What unpolite

(26) Gabe.
Naudé de
Fato & Vita Terminis,
p. 32.

(27) In Ro-
mark [E].

(28) Christopher Longolius
Epist.
21. lib. 1.
fol. 103.
verso.

(29) Ibid.
fol. 204.

(30) It is the 20th of the 2d Book.

(31) Mr de la Monnoie:
I am oblig'd to him for this Passage of Longolius, & Longolius.

unpolite Behaviour, what outrageous Detraction is imputed to him; and what Contempt is shewn for his Person! What makes it doubtful whether our Alcynonius is intended in that Letter, is, that a little after Longolius mentions him without any seeming dislike to him; but this Reason for doubting is no convincing Proof; since the Picture given of him agrees with that, which another Author, of the same Age, has drawn of the same Alcynonius. Gyraldus, having said (32), That Pierius Valerianus was a sincere Man, adds immediately after; "diversæ naturæ est Petrus Alcynonius Venetus, mordax & maledicus, nec pudens magis quam prudens ----- mitte de

"hoc nebulone plura, qui bellum bonis omnibus indixit, flagris & fuste coercendus ----". Peter Alcynonius, the Venetian, was of a different Disposition; a Back-biter, and a Detractor, nor more modest than prudent. ----- But no more of this poultry Fellow, who was at open War with all good Men; and who deserves the Correction of the Whipping-post, or a good Caning." Note, that the same Author owns, that he composed very good Lyric and Iambic Verses, and that he boasted to have wrote an excellent Tragedy on the Death of JESUS CHRIST (33).

(33) Id. ibi.

ALCMAN, a Lyric Poet, flourished in the Twenty seventh Olympiad (a). Some say he was a Lacedemonian, and others, that he was born at Sardes, the chief City of Lydia. What is certain, is, that he was a Freeman of Sparta [A], and that the Lacedemonians thought it much to their Honour, that they had supply'd Greece with such a Genius [B]. He wrote many Verses, of which there are but few extant, which are cited by Athenæus, or some other Ancient Author. He was a Man of a very Amorous Disposition, and is looked upon as the Father of Genteel Poetry [C]. Nay, it has been said, I think, that he was the first, who introduced the Custom of singing Love-Songs in Company (b). The Name of one of his Mistresses is preserved (c): She was Megalostрата, a Poetess. If he had stopped here, there would not have been so much Reason to complain of him; but it is said, that he was likewise in love with one Chæaron (d). Alcman was one of the greatest Gluttons of his time (e); this Quality would have been attended with great Inconveniences, if Poetry had been in those Times upon the same Foot it has often been; I mean, very unfit to maintain it's Master. He died of a very singular Disease; for he was eaten up with Lice (f). He must not be distinguished from the Poet Alcæon [D]; and I see no necessity for acknowledging Two Alcmans, one of Lacedemon, and the other of Messena [E].

(a) Suidas in Αλκμάν.

(b) Athen. lib. 13. p. 600.

(c) Id. ibid.

(d) Id. lib. 10. p. 416.

(e) Ibid. & Zelian. Var. Histor. lib. 1. cap. 27.

(f) Aristot. de Hist. Anim. lib. 1. cap. 37. Plin. lib. 11. cap. 33. Plutarch. in Sylla, pag. 474.

[A] A Freeman of Sparta. This appears from an Epigram, which Plutarch inserts in his Treatise of Exile (1). The Author of that Epigram makes Alcman say, That if he had been educated in Sardes, the Country of his Ancestors, he had been only a poor Priest of the Goddess Cybele, deprived of his Manly Parts; but that he is at present a Citizen of Lacedemon, well instructed in the Greek Learning, which makes him superior to the Kings of Lydia. The Latin Interpreter has ill translated the first Verse of that Epigram,

----- Σάρδεϊς ἀρχαῖος παῖδ' ἔρον τόμος.

----- O mea majorumque meorum Patria Sardes!

for we must conclude from this Translation, that Alcman was born at Sardes (2), which the Greek Words do not import: Thus it happens, that a Translator is sometimes a sower of Dissension, when he least thinks of it. The Translator of the Greek Epigram into Latin was not aware, that, by adding the Word mea, he should induce many Authors obstinately to maintain, that Alcman was not born at Lacedemon. How many Writers are there, who consult only the Versions, and who make use of all the Proofs, which the Version supplies them with, whether the Greek Original will allow it or not? Salmastus has learnedly corrected this Epigram (3); but I do not well apprehend what they mean, who refer us to him, as to a Judge, who has put an end to the Dispute about Alcman's Country. The Question is, whether this Poet was born at Lacedemon, or at Sardes in Lydia. Suidas maintains the former Opinion (4), Crates the second (5). Velleius Paterculus (6), and Ælian (7), deny what Suidas affirms. Of what use is the Epigram in putting an end to this Dispute, since it does not inform us, where Alcman was born, but only that he was not educated in Sardes, the Country of his Ancestors; that he was educated after the Greek Manner, and that he enjoy'd the Freedom of Lacedemon? This may equally signify these two things; either that Alcman was carried into Greece, being a Child, or that his Father went and settled there, before this Son was born. In this latter Case, Alcman might have been born in the City of Lacedemon. Stalger was of this Opinion, but he founded it upon a bad Reason. "Ego "Laconem fuisse arbitror, quum Laconica dialecto "usus sit (8). — I am of Opinion that he was a Lacedemonian, since he writes in the Doric Dialect." If he had thought of the Epigram, mentioned by Plutarch, he would have seen the insufficiency of this Reason. Alcman, not having been educated in Lydia, but in Greece, and living at Lacedemon, must needs have made use of the Doric Dialect, which was that of Sparta. How harsh soever it was, yet he wrote his Poems in it. "Ὁ ποιῆσαι δὲ σμῶνα, ἔδ' ἐν ἐς ἡδονὴν αὐτῶν ἐλυμῆναι τὴν λακωνικὴν ἢ γλωσσά, ἔκιστα παρεχόμενόν τοι εὐφρονον (9). Cut in cantibus pangentis nihil omnino Laconica lingua obstitit, est in vobis appellandis habet suavitate.

[B] The Lacedemonians thought it much to their Honour, that they had supply'd Greece with such a Genius. The Passage of Paterculus, which I have cited, proves this; these Words of Statius

----- & tetricis Alcman cantatus Amyclis (10).

Alcman the Theme of rough Amyclæ's Song;

is a farther Proof. Add to this the Monument erected to Alcman, near the Temple of Helen (11).

[C] Is looked upon as the Father of Genteel Poetry. This is evident from this Passage of Athenæus (12). "Ἀρχαῖος δὲ Ἀρμονιακῶν, ὃς φησι Καίματ' ἄλκμων, Ἀλκμῶνα γεγονῆναι τὴν ἑρσικὴν μελῶν ἡ γέμονα, καὶ ἐκδιδῆναι πρῶτον μελῶν, ἀκλῆσεν οὖν αὐτὸν καὶ τὰς γυναῖκας καὶ τὴν ταυτὴν μῦθον εἰς τὰς διαλέκτους." Archytas Harmoniacus writes, as Chamaeleon tells us, that Alcman was the first Inventor of Love Verses, that he had a great Passion for Women, and was the first, who introduced that kind of Poetry, which is sung in Meetings and Assemblies.

[D] He must not be distinguished from the Poet Alcæon. St Jerome, in the Chronicle of Eusebius, having spoke of Alcæon, under the thirtieth Olympiad, mentions Alcman under the Forty second, and makes use of this Citation, ut quibundam videtur. Scaliger reads Alcman in the first Passage, instead of Alcæon. It is plain, by the Reign of Arctus, King of Lydia, in whose Reign Crates plac'd Alcman, that this Poet flourished about the thirtieth Olympiad, which is the Time, wherein Alcæon is placed in the Chronicle of Eusebius. If this Reason is not sufficient to shew, that those two Names belong to one and the same Person, it will undeniably prove, that Alcæon, Alkmaïon, and Alcman, Alkmdn, differ only in the Dialect; and that the first ought to be changed into the second, by the Rules of the Doric Dialect. See the Commentary of Salmastus on Solinus, pag. 885. The Alcman of the Forty second Olympiad, is a Chimerical one. Eusebius placed him there, because he had read some Authors, who were mistaken, in relation to Alcman's Age.

[E] I see no necessity for acknowledging two Alcmans, one of Lacedemon, and the other of Messena. I think Suidas

(10) Stat. Silv. 3. lib. 5. ver. 153.

(11) Pausan. ubi supra.

(12) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 600. See hikmæ Suidas, in Αλκμῶνα.

(72) Lilius Gregorius Gyraldus de Poëtis fuit temporis Dialog. 1. pag. 542. Edit. 1696.

(1) Oper. Moral. pag. 599.

(2) Amiot is guilty of the same Error.

(3) Salmast. Exercit. Pili-nian. p. 88.

(4) He says he was born at Messen, which was a part of Lacedemon, according to Strabo, as he is corrected by Salmastus, ubi supra.

(5) Apud Suidam in Αλκμῶνα.

(6) Alcman lacones falso sibi vindicant. Paterculus, lib. 1. sub fine.

(7) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 12. cap. 50.

(8) Scellie. Animadv. in Eucl. b. n. 1260.

Suidas is the only Author, who makes this Distinction. But his Authority is not very great, when he quotes no Author, and mentions no Circumstances. This is the Case of his Alcmena of Meffena; he says nothing of him. Let us remember that he said, That the true Alcmena was born at Messia, and Messias. This Place being not famous, some Transcribers thought it should be Messias, in the Authors who had reported the same thing with Suidas. Their pretended Correction produced a new Alcmena, who was tack'd to Suidas's Patch-work. This Conjecture appears to me more probable, than That of Lilius Gyraldus. He acknowledges but one Alcmena; but he will have him to be born at Messena, and changes Messias in Suidas into Messias. Scaliger justly rejects this Conjecture (13).

(13) Scaliger.
Animadv.
in Euseb. c.
1360.

ALCMENA, the Daughter of Electryon, King of Mycenæ [A], was the Wife of Amphitryon, and the Mother of Hercules. She was delivered of this Son, whilst her Husband was living; and yet Hercules was not the Son of Amphitryon, but of Jupiter, who, assuming the Form of Alcmena's Husband [B], was admitted without any scruple to the Matrimonial Functions. He was so well pleased with the sport, that he continued the Night to three times it's usual Length [C]. Behold the Origin of Hercules! most Modern Authors say, that Alcmena was already with Child, by Amphitryon; but Apollodorus insinuates plainly enough, that she was yet a Maid [D]; which is more for the Honour of Jupiter. However it be, Amphitryon returned home the same Day, which

[A] The Daughter of Electryon, King of Mycenæ.

The Poet Ælius says she was born of Amphiaræus, and Eriphyle (1). Others say indeed, That Electryon was her Father, but, according to them, her Mother was Anaxo, the Daughter of Alcæus, the Son of Perseus (2), and not Lyfide, the Daughter of Prolops and Hippodamia, as Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Hippman, &c. say she was (3). The Scholiast on Pindar is for Lyfide (4).

(1) Pausan.

l. 5. p. 165.

(2) Apollod.

Bibl. lib. 2. p. 96.

Scholiast.

Homeri in Ilia. 4. ver.

323.

(3) See their

Dictionary.

(4) In O-

lymp. Od. 7.

(5) Diodor.

Sicul. l. 5.

cap. 2.

[B] Assuming the Form of Alcmena's Husband.

Diodorus Siculus observes, that Jupiter took this Method, because he would not use any Violence, and because, in the way of Persuasion, he had no Hope of prevailing upon so chaste a Lady as Alcmena was (5). The same Historian observes, that, on this Occasion, Jupiter was not moved by that lascivious Passion, which he had felt so often for other Women, and that his only Inclination was to get an Hero. For which Reason he did it not in haste; he employ'd much time in the Work, three successive Nights. Our Physicians would laugh at such a Reason. I cannot tell why Plautus makes Jupiter speak thus to Amphitryon.

Tu cum Alcmena uxore antiquam in gratiam

Redi: haud promerui tantumobrem vitio verteres,

Mea vi subacta est facere (6).

(6) Plaut. in Amphitr.

sub finem.

— Be reconciled, as before, to your Wife Alcmena; she has not deserved your Reproaches; my Power compelled her to this Action.

For, since Jupiter had put on the Form of the Husband, it was not necessary to use any Violence; and we have just now seen that he assumed this Shape, only because he would not employ any violent Methods. A modern Author alleges this Example of Alcmena, to prove that a sincere Ignorance is a good Excuse, and quotes some fine Lines of Molière (7). A thousand things might be said upon this Subject; it affords Matter for a great variety of Reflexions.

(7) See the new Letters against

Maim-

bourg's History of Calvinism, pag.

285, &c.

Note, that some Persons will have Plautus's Thought to be this. Alcmena was constrained to let me enjoy her, since I had the Power of assuming your Resemblance. If it be so, it must be said, that the Intention of the Poet was much better than his Expression.

[C] He continued the Night to three times it's usual Length [Jupiter was so well pleased with the Lady, that he made the Night last all that Day, and the Night following; which moved Lycophron to call Hercules τρεῖς νύκτες ἄλκυον, the Lion of three Nights, as Lucian did likewise (8). Perhaps Vigener alluded to these Words of Hyginus: Qui tam libens cum ea concubuit, ut unum diem usurparet, duas noctes congeneret (9). The Dialogue of Lucian, which takes notice of the long Night, which Jupiter spent with Alcmena, informs us, that Mercury went with Orders to the Sun, to stand still three Days, that Jupiter might have time enough for the Production of Hercules; one Night not being sufficient for the Generation of so great a Warrior. It seems Jupiter did his best; for the Weight of the Child had like to have burst his Mother. τῶρον ἔν ἐν μὲν νυκτὶ ἀνέτεκεν ἑρμῆς (10). Hæc una nocte abfolvi non potest.

(8) Vigener

upon Philo-strat. Tom.

2. fol. 17.

Ed. 4to.

(9) Hygin.

cap. 29.

(10) Lucian.

Dial. Merc.

& Solis. See

Diod. Sicul.

lib. 5. c. 2.

Tendebat gravitas uterum mihi, quodque ferebam
Tantum erat, ut posses auctorem dicere testis Ponderis esse Jovem (11).

*My Womb extends with such a mighty Load,
As Jove the Parent of the Burthen bear'd.*

Mr G A Y.

Many Authors are of opinion, that this Night was not trippled, but only doubled (12). Others say, that it lasted nine times longer than usual. St Jerome, who might have read this in the Writings of two Fathers of the Church (13), made no use of it, and kept to the Tradition of the double Night: In Alcmena adulterio duas noctes Jupiter copulavit. From that Time Jupiter took his leave of Women; Alcmena was the last Mortal whom he lay with. Niobe was the first; sixteen Generations pass'd between the one and the other (14). Such was the Duration of Jupiter's latruges on Earth. Now, as his Diversion with Alcmena was the last of the kind he was to take in this World, was it not reasonable that it should last longer than usual? Alcmena wondered at the length of the Night (15): It seem'd therefore long to her; this makes for her Honour. And indeed she was a very virtuous Woman (16), and would not have merited, though she had lost her Sight, the Satire of the following Distich.

Cum longas noctes Moreta ab amore rogaret,
Favet amor votis, perpetuasque dedit.

*Long Nights Moreta (17) ask'd, in love to burn;
Love heard her Wishes, and gave her Night return.*

Sofia, Amphitryon's Valet, made an Observation worthy of him, when he perceived that the Night was longer than it used to be; he with'd those Gallants Joy, who had paid dear for their Bargains.

Ubi sunt isti scortatores qui soli iaviti cabant?

Hæc vox citis't exercendo scorto conducto malè (18).

Where are those intriguing Sparks, who, against their Will, lie alone? This Night is calculated for the full Enjoyment of a dear-bought Wench.

[D] That she was yet a Maid. Apollodorus relates, That Electryon, going to revenge the Death of his Sons, put his Kingdom, and his Daughter Alcmena into the Hands of Amphitryon, after having made him swear, that he would abstain from Alcmena, till his Return (19). Amphitryon, having inadvertently killed him, a little while after, was obliged to seek a Retreat. He went with Alcmena into Boeotia, and as he declared that she would marry Him, who should revenge the Death of her Brothers, he engaged in pursuit of this Revenge, and, associating himself with others, made War with the Teleboæ, who had killed Alcmena's Brothers (20). Being returned to Thebes victorious, and triumphant, he understood that ANOTHER HIMSELF had enjoy'd the Lady. It is plain that he had not the first Favour; doubtless Alcmena had put off the Ceremony of the Wedding, or at least the Consummation of her Marriage, till Amphitryon

(11) Ovid.
Metam. lib.
9. ver. 233.

(12) Amor.
lib. 1. Eleg.
13. Propert.
lib. 2. Eleg.
22. Capella,
lib. 2. c. 39.

(13) Clem.
Alexandr. in Protrept.
pag. 20. Ar-
nobius, lib.
4. pag. 145.
tabo Words
are these,
Quis illum in Alcmena noctibus fecit
re-vigilasse continua?

(14) Diodor.
Sicul. lib. 5.
cap. 2.

(15) Hygin.
cap. 29.

(16) See Re- mark [8].

(17) The Comedies of Molière, Henry the Great's Mi-stres.

(18) Am-
phitr. Act.
1. Scen. to
ver. 130.

(19) Apollod.
Biblioth. lib. 2.
pag. 99.

(20) Id. ib.
pag. 101.

which succeeded the Long Night, which That God had passed with Alcmena. He was not so well received by his Wife, as he might have expected, after Absence; and he soon discovered the Reason of it, by the account, which She gave him of the Transactions of the preceeding Night. They, who shall put themselves in his Place, may tell us what he thought of the Matter. He immediately had recourse to the Soothsayer, and learnt from Tiresias, that Jupiter, in the Form of Amphitryon, had enjoyed Alcmena. He must bear it, as well as he could; and it does not appear, that his Chagrin continued very long; for, the Night following, he got his Wife with Child, who was already so by a God (a). Juno, out of her usual Jealousy, prevented the Delivery of this Lady, as long as she could; it was only the Dexterity of a Servant Maid, which eluded the Ill Intentions of Lucina [E], who hindered Alcmena from being

(a) Hyginus, c. 29. says, That he lay no more with her, and speaks only of Hercules. See Apollod. Biblioth. lib. 2. pag. 97.

Amphitryon had conquered the Teleboas. Jupiter, knowing that Amphitryon was upon his Return, and that there was no other time to crop this Flower of Virginity, but whilst Amphitryon was on his Journey, prevented him, and did his Business before the Husband's Arrival. Apollodorus adds, That Amphitryon, having enjoy'd Alcmena, got her with Child; this Child was a Night younger than Hercules. ΑΛΚΜΗΝΗ ἡ δὲ ἱέρους παῖδας. Διὶ δὲ Μεγαλῆα παῖδα ἔκγονε, Ἀμφιτρυῶνι ἱερῆα (21). Alcmena vero duos peperit filios: Jovi quidem Herculem una nocte grandiorē, atque Amphitryoni Iphiclem. This is a further Confirmation of what I am to prove. The Scholiast upon Homer is more precise than Apollodorus: He says plainly, That the Marriage was not consummated 'till after the return of Amphitryon (22). In Plautus's Comedy Matters go otherwise. Amphitryon leaves his Wife with Child, when he goes to the War (23). A great Temptation indeed to Jupiter! It would be much worse, if Plautus had observed the Unity of Time, as Mademoiselle le Fèvre will have it. In that Case, it must be said, That Jupiter interrupted the whole course of Nature, by stopping the Sun, to divert himself the longer with a Woman big with two Children, and so near her time, that, if he had stay'd a little longer, the Midwife would have been obliged to lay to him, give me your Place. This is an unlucky Alternative for Plautus. For either the Time of his Comedy must be several Months; or he must suppose a Woman, ready to be delivered of Twins, a very tempting Morfel to the greatest of all Monarchs; and this, with supposing at the same time, that the King of Gods and Men had already begot one of these Twins. Take notice that the Poet does not feign, that Jupiter disguised himself in the Shape of Amphitryon, in order to come like a good Husband to the Assistance of Alcmena, in her Labour; it was the Visit of a very amorous Spark. See how Mercury expresses himself in the Prologue,

Et meus Pater nunc intus hic cum illa cubat,
Et hæc ob eam rem nox est facta longior,
Dum ille qua cum volt voluptatem capiat.

My Father, within there, is now in Bed with her; and it is upon this Account that the Night is longer than usual, to give him an Opportunity of satisfying his Appetite.

As for these Words of Sofa,

Hæc nox facta est exercendo scorto male conducto.

This Night is calculated for the full Enjoyment of a dear-bought Wench.

He illustrates them thus:

Meus Pater nunc pro hujus verbis recte & sapienter facit
Qui complexus cum Alcmena cubat amans animo obsequens (24).

(24) Plauti Amphitry. Act. 1. Sc. 1. ver. 133.

— My Father in this Business acts a very wise Part; as he loves the Sport, he has pitched upon Alcmena for a Bedfellow.

He congratulates himself for having removed all Interruptions to Jupiter's Joy, and prepares to continue his good Offices, 'till the Gallant be satisfied.

Bene & prosperè hoc hodie operis processit mihi;
Amovì à foribus maximam molestiam,

Patri ut liceret tuto illam amplexari.

Erroris ambo ego illos & dementiæ

Complebo, atque omnem Amphitruonis familiam

Adco, usque satietatem dum capiet Pater

Illius quam amat (25).

(25) Ibid. Act. 1. Sc. 2. ver. 1. 2. 3. 5. &c.

Thus far Success attends upon my Counsels; I have removed the greatest Obstacle from the Door, that my Father may take his Joing of Pleasure in full Security. — I will perplex them both with Mistakes, and fill them with Madness; and not only the Master and Man, but Amphitryon's whole Family, 'till my Father is cloy'd with the Enjoyment of his Mistress.

[E] The Dexterity of a Servant Maid, which eluded the ill Intentions of Lucina (26.) I follow Ovid's Narrative. Alcmena had been seven Days in Labour, with horrible Pains. Galanthis, one of her Women, came in, and went out, and, being apprehensive of some Charm, upon seeing a Woman sitting at the Door, and muttering to herself, with her Hands joined on her Knees, she told her that Alcmena was delivered. Lucina (for it was she, who was sitting in that Posture) no sooner heard these Words, but she disjoined her Hands, and rose up, which caused Alcmena to be delivered.

(26) Stevenson the Goddess of Child-birth.

--- subscindit in illa

Ante fores ara, dextroque à poplite levum
Pressa genu, digitis inter se pectine junctis,
Sustinuit partus, tacita quoque carmina voce
Dixit, & inceps tenuerat carmina partus.

Una ministrarum, media de plebe, Galanthis
Flava comas, aderat, faciendis Arenua jussis, Officiis dilecta suis. Ea sensit iniqua
Nescio quid Junone geri, dumque exit & intrat
Sæpe fores, Divam residentem vidit in ara, Brachiaque in genibus digitis connexa teneant;
Et, quæcunque es, ait, domina gratare; levata est
Argolis Alcmena, potiturque puerpera voto.
Exsiluit, junctaque manus patefacta remisit
Diva potens uteri: vinculis levor ipsa remisit (27).

(27) Ovid. Metamorph. lib. 9. ver. 298, &c.

*She hears the groaning Anguish of my Fits,
And on the Altar at my Door she sits.
O'er her left Knee her crossing Leg she casts,
Then knits her Fingers close, and wrings them fast.
This stay'd the Birth; in muttering Verse she pray'd.
The muttering Verse th' unfinish'd Birth delay'd.*

Among the Theban Dames Galanthis stands, Strong limb'd, red hair'd, and just to my Commands.
She first perceiv'd, that all these racking Woes
From the persisting Hate of Juno rose.
As here and there she pass'd, by chance she sees
The seated Goddess; on her close-press'd Knees
Her fast-knit Hands she leans; with cheerful Voice
Galanthis cries, whoe'er thou art, rejoice, Congratulate the Dame, she lies at Rest,
At length the Gods Alcmena's Womb have blest.
Swift from her Seat the startled Goddess springs,
No more concealed, her Hands abroad she flings;
The Charm unloos'd, the Birth my Pangs reliev'd; Galanthis' Laughter vex'd the Pow'r deceiv'd.

GAY.

Pausanias,

being delivered. She was brought to bed of Two Boys; He, of whom Jupiter was Father, was called Hercules; and He, who was the Son of Amphitryon, was named Iphiclus (b). It is said, That she married Rhadamanthus, after the Death of Amphitryon, and that her Tomb was to be seen adjoining to That of Rhadamanthus, near Haliartus, in Boeotia (c). Others say, That she was buried at Megara, and that the Oracle ordered it so, when Hercules's Children consulted it, on a Dispute between them, some being willing that she should be carried to Argos, and others maintaining that she ought to be brought to Thebes (d). She died on the Frontiers of Megara, as she was returning from Argos to Thebes (e). Hercules was already dead; she survived him to her great Grief; but on the other hand she had the Satisfaction of holding in her hands the Head of Hercules's Persecutor, and of tearing out his Eyes [F]. It is related, that her Corps disappeared in the Ceremony of the Funeral, and that a Stone was found in her Bed (f). Which made Pausanias say, That she was metamorphosed into a Stone (g). Antoninus Liberalis tells us, that, whilst the Heracleida were preparing the Funeral Rites of Alcmena, Jupiter ordered Mercury to steal her away, and to transport her to the Fortunate Islands, in order to marry her to Rhadamanthus. This Order was obey'd; and a Stone was placed in her Coffin. They who carried it, finding it very heavy, opened it, and, instead of a dead Body, found a Stone, which they deposited in the sacred Grove, where was afterwards a Chapel of Alcmena, at Thebes (b). Diodorus Siculus remarks only, That she disappear'd, and that the Thebans paid her Divine Honours (i). They continued to shew her Chamber in Pausanias's Time (k). Her Altar was seen at Athens at the same time (l). The Present, which she received from Jupiter, for the long Night's Lodging he had with her, was shewed many Ages after at Lacedæmon, as a singular Curiosity (m). Very surprizing things have been related concerning her Tomb [G]. Consult the Article AMPHITRYON.

(b) Apollon. Biblioth. pag. 103.

(c) Plutarch. in Lyfandro, pag. 44. Antonini Liberalis Metamorph. cap. 35.

(d) Pausan. lib. 1. p. 33.

(e) Id. ibid.

(f) Plut. in Romulo, pag. 35.

(g) Pausan. lib. 6. pag. 2. 4.

(h) Antonin. Liberal. ubi supra.

(i) Diod. Sic. lib. 5. c. 4.

(j) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 290. Heliod. about 110 Years after the Birth of Christ.

(k) Id. lib. 1. pag. 17.

(m) See the Article TELEPHOS, Remark [D].

Pausanias does not relate the Story with the same Circumstances. He says, That the Figures of certain Women (28) were seen at Thebes, whom Juno had sent to prevent Alcmena's Delivery. The Daughter of Tiresias (29) deceived them, by crying out that Alcmena was delivered (30). In Pliny's Time they looked upon the Posture I have mentioned as a kind of Witchcraft. "Addidere gravidis, vel cum remedium alicui adhibetur, digitis pectinatum inter se implexis, veneficium est: idque comperit tradunt Alcmena Herculem pariente. Pejus, si circa unum ambove genua: item poplites alternis genibus imponi (31). — To sit by Women with Child, or when a Medicine is administered to any one, with one's Fingers joined together in the Fashion of a Comb, is Witchcraft; and this was experienced, when Alcmena was in Labour of Hercules. The Charm is stronger, if this be done upon one or both Knees; as also if the Posture be cross-legged." We shall see in another Place the Licence, which Plautus took, in supposing that Alcmena was delivered without Pain (32). [Rabelais, B. 3. cap. 48. has very properly rendered the Text of Ovid and Pliny. If Mr BAYLE had known this, he would doubtless have produced it here. REM. CRIT.]

[F] The Satisfaction of holding in her Hands the Head of Hercules's Persecutor, and of tearing out his Eyes. Apollodorus informs us, that the Sons of this Hero found a good Asylum in Athens against Eurystheus and that Hyllus, one of them, having killed him, cut off his Head, and gave it to Alcmena, who dug out the Eyes with a Weaver's Shuttle: Καὶ τὸ μὲν κεφάλαιον ἀποσπῶν Ἀλκμήνην διδῶσθαι, ἢ τὸ κεφάλαιον τοῦ ῥαδάμανθους ἐξώρυξεν αὐτὴν (33). Ennius: caput amputatum Alcmenæ adit. Hæc autem illic textorius radiis oculos effodit.

[G] Very surprizing things — concerning her Tomb. Agchilaus, King of Sparta, intending to remove the Relicks of Alcmena to Lacedæmon, sent some People to Haliartus, who opened her Monument. They found in it two earthen Vessels, a Bracelet of Brass, and a copper Table, on which certain Letters were engraven, which no one understood. As they resembled the Egyptian manner of Writing, Agchilaus caused them to be transcribed, and sent the Copy to the King of Egypt, desiring him to enquire of his Priests the Purport of them (34). Plutarch adds, that Agetoridas, who was deputed for this Purpose by Agchilaus, went to Memphis, where the Prophet Chonuphis decyphered the Inscription. It contained a Precept addressed to the Greeks, to live in Peace, to honour the Muses, and to compose their Differences according to the Rules of Equity. The Letters of the Inscription were like the writing, which Hercules learnt in the Reign of King Proetus. The most remarkable Particular is, that the Inhabitants of Haliartus, having had a very bad Harvest, and great Inundations, believed that the Evils proceeded from having permitted the Removal of Alcmena's Tomb. We read the same Reflexions in divers Legends, concerning the dismembering or translating of the Bodies of Saints.

(33) Apollod. Biblioth. 2. pag. 151.

(34) Plutarch. in Eurydice Socrus Geniis, pag. 576. &c.

A L C M Æ O N. Many Persons have been called by this Name. The last Perpetual Archon of Athens was called A L C M Æ O N. After him other Archons were created, whose Office continued but ten Years. This Alteration happen'd in the VIth Olympiad, a little before Romulus built the City of Rome (a). Herodotus speaks of an A L C M Æ O N, who lived at Athens in Cræsus's Time, and who performed many good Offices to the Ambassadors, whom That King sent to Delpi (b). Cræsus, having heard of it, invited him to his Court, and gave him leave to take as much Gold out of his Treasury as he could carry. We read, in Herodotus, the Expedient, which A L C M Æ O N made use of to carry a great Weight of it. Cræsus made him many other Presents, inasmuch that he put him in a Condition of adding a very great Lustre to his Family at Athens, where it became one of the most considerable. The A L C M Æ O N I D Æ (so they called A L C M Æ O N's Posterity) distinguish'd themselves on several Occasions, and chiefly by strenuously opposing the Tyranny, which Pisistratus and his Sons endeavoured in vain to perpetuate there. I believe this A L C M Æ O N was the same, who was General of the Athenians, in the War, which was undertaken for the Protection of the Temple of Delpi, at the Solicitation of Solon (c). I find an A L C M Æ O N in Plutarch, who was a great Enemy of Themistocles (d). There are many Faults in Moreri's Dictionary relating to the Word

ALCMÆON [A]. I am going to give separate Articles of two Persons who bore this Name.

[A] There are many Faults in Moreri's Dictionary relating to the Word Alcmæon. I. It is not true, that Alcmæon, the last perpetual Archon, lived about the Year 301, or 300, of Rome. Eusebius, who is cited for it, places the end of the perpetual Archons before the Foundation of Rome. II. Besides, the Year 301 of Rome does not answer to the Year of the World 3300, but to the Year 3530, or thereabouts, according to Petavius; or the Year 3498, according to Setbus Calosivius. III. Alcmæon, the perpetual Archon, is not the same Alcmæon, who received so many Presents from Cræsus (1). He preceded the beginning of That King's Reign about One hundred and ninety Years. IV. The last Year of That Reign answers to the 206th Year of Rome. V. Herodotus, who is cited, does not say, that Alcmæon succeeded his Father Megacles in the Office of Annual Archon; nor that the Ambassadors of Cræsus asked Alcmæon, whether he would accompany their Master to Delphi; nor that, after he had promised them to do it, That King presented him with as much Gold as he could carry; nor that, perceiving that Alcmæon had loaded himself with Gold beyond his Strength, he caused him to be carried with the Burthen to his House; because he could not walk under it. I cannot imagine for what Reason Herodotus is quoted, when his Narrative is so strangely falsified. VI. Alcmæon, the Son of Amphiaraus, did not marry Callirhoe, after the Death of Alphesbea his first Wife; the latter was yet living at the time of the second Marriage,

(1) Yet it is so affirmed in the Dutch Edition of Moreri's Dictionary. The Supplement to the Dictionary says only, that this Alcmæon had been an annual Archon of Athens.

(2) Ovid. de Remed. Amor. v. 455.

Amphilochi frater ne Phegida semper amaret, Callirhoe fecit parte recepta tori (2).

*Left Phegeus' Daughter shou'd engross his Heart,
Callirhoe in his Bed obtained a Part.*

VII. Plutarch does not say, that the Fable of Alcmæon signifies that he killed his Mother, that is to say, his Part, in order to go and live in the Country, which is expressed by the River his Father-in-law. One would think, that Moreri read in Plutarch, that Alcmæon castrated himself; which seems to be the Natural Sense of these Words, he killed his Mother, that is to say, his Part. I am willing to believe, that instead of Partie (Part), the Author gave it Patrie (Native Country); but this does not justify him; for Plutarch does not say, that Alcmæon killed his Native Country, or that he abused it: On the contrary he tells us, that Alcmæon, shunning Magistracies, Seditions, Factions, and Calumnies, made choice of a small Retreat, in order to live quietly, and that thus he fled from the Furies (3). VIII. The Chronicle of Eusebius is cited still more improperly, to explain what the Fable says of Alcmæon; for of what use is it towards explaining this Fable, to say,

(3) Plut. de Exilio. pag. 602.

ALCMÆON, the Son of Amphiaraus and Eriphyle, the Sister of Adrastus, kill'd his Mother in obedience to his Father's Command. I am going to tell you the Reason of so strange a Command. Amphiaraus looked upon Eriphyle as the Cause of his Death. He had resolv'd not to go to the Theban War; for, being a great Soothsayer, he foresaw, that, if he went, he should die there. Moreover, he had promised with an Oath, That, if he should have any Dispute with Adrastus, he would refer the whole Matter to the Decision of his Wife. They differ'd about the Expedition to Thebes. Adrastus would have Amphiaraus engage in it; but Amphiaraus refused, and dissuaded others from it. Eriphyle decided the Affair, as Adrastus desir'd, being bribed by a fine Necklace (a), which Polynices offered her (b), and which she accepted, contrary to her Husband's Command not to take any thing of Polynices. Hence she has furnished many Topics and moral Thoughts to the Censors of the Fair Sex. It is well known, that Amphiaraus, dying, when the Army was routed, was swallowed up in an Abyss, which a Clap of Thunder opened under his Feet. He had ordered his Sons, before he march'd against Thebes, to kill Eriphyle, as soon as their Age would permit. All the Generals, except Adrastus, perished in this War. Ten Years after, their Sons resolv'd to revenge this Affront, and made choice of Alcmæon for their Generalissimo. Eriphyle, bribed again by Presents, solicited them to this War. Thersander, the Son of Polynices, presented her with a Necklace (c), and a Robe (d). Alcmæon, tho' greatly inclin'd to kill his Mother before he accepted the Command of the Forces, yet march'd against Thebes, without executing Amphiaraus's Order. This Expedition proved very fortunate: the Thebans; by the Advice of

That the City of Thebes was plundered, that Tiresias was taken Prisoner, and that his Daughter Manto was consecrated to the Service of Apollo? IX. It is not true, that Eusebius relates these Things, as falling out in the One hundred and eighty seventh Year of Abraham. He says nothing of the lacking of Thebes; he speaks in general of the seven Captains, who attacked this City, and of their Posterity, which renewed the War; I say, he speaks of the first of these two Expeditions under the Year 784, and of the last under the Year 823. X. Neither Eusebius, nor any other Historian, observe that Alcmæon's Expedition against Thebes was unsuccessful (4); for it was at that Time that the Epigones plundered the City, &c. XI. They did not carry away the poor blind Tersias: He had fled, with the other Thebans, before the Enemy entered the City. XII. They did not collect a great Booty, to revenge the Disgrace of their Fathers. It ought to have been said, that, to revenge the Disgrace of their Fathers, they undertook a second Expedition. XIII. It is not true, that the Philosopher Alcmæon made it appear, that the Moon has a peculiar Property, which never ends; he supposed the Eternity of this Planet: It can only be a Supposition; and it is a more unpardonable Negligence in a Priest, than any other Author, to say, That it has been made appear, that the Moon is eternal, and that the immortal Soul turns continually as the Sun. XIV. Eusebius does not speak of Alcmæon the Philosopher; doubtless he meant the Poet, when he said: Alcmæon clarus habetur; & Lesbos Lesbicus, qui parvum fecit Iliadem. — Alcmæon is reckoned famous, as is Lesches of Lesbos, who wrote the lesser Iliad. XV. These Words of his are in the Thirty first Olympiad, and not in the Sixty ninth. XVI. It is equally false, that Plutarch, in the Life of Solon, cites an Historian, whose Name is Alcmæon. These are Plutarch's Words; they will serve to shew how hasty Transcribers fall into the greatest Mistakes. 'Ου μὲν ποτὶ στρατὸς ἐπὶ τῷ τῷ ἀδελφῷ καὶ πόλεμον, ὡς λέγειν φασὶν Ἑρμιππὸς Ἐυάνθη καὶ Σαμίων. 'Οὐδὲ δ' Ἀλκίωνα ἰρητῶν τῶν εἰρηκῶν, ὥς τις τῶν Δελφῶν ἀπομνημονεύει Ἀλκμαίων, ὁ Σόλων, Ἀθηναίων γεννητὸς ἀναρχογενεῖα (5). He was not appointed General for this War, as Hermippus says Euanthes of Samos delivered. For the Orator Æschines said no such thing, and, in the Commentaries of Delphi, Alcmæon, not Solon, is the Athenian General. Lloyd and Hofman found the pretended Historian Alcmæon in this Passage of Plutarch: In Delphorum Commentariis, say they, citatur à Plutarcho in Solone. It is plain that these Commentaries of Delphi are the Work, which they ascribe to Alcmæon, and which they pretend to have been cited by Plutarch. I wonder that Postellus fell into this Mistake: Alcmæon, says he (6), in Delphorum commentariis, Ἀλκμαίων ἐστὶ τῶν τῶν Δελφῶν ἀπομνημονεύει, citatur à Plutarcho in Solone.

(4) Moreri, bib. in the Lyons Edition, 1688, and in that of Holland, expresses himself thus: After his unfortunate Expedition to Thebei.

(5) Plur. in Solone, pag. 84. A.

(6) Vossius de Histores. Græc. pag. 501.

(a) See concerning this Necklace the Remarks on the Article CALLIROHE.

(b) Hyginus says, c. 73. That Adrastus gave her the Necklace, and that Eriphyle discovered the Place where Amphiaraus hid himself.

(c) Diod. Siculus is rather to be credited, who says, That Thersander gave her only the Pearl, or Robe; he could not give the Necklace, since Eriphyle had it already.

(d) Called in Greek ἄσπετος.

of Tiresias, abandoned their City; it was plundered, and destroyed. Alcmaeon, transported with new Rage, upon hearing, that Eriphyle had suffered herself to be corrupted by Presents against him also, no longer scrupled to kill her, after consulting the Oracle about it. Some maintain, that his Brother Amphilochus assisted him in this Parricide; but most Authors deny it. Alcmaeon, haunted by the Furies for this Action, retired to Psophis in Arcadia, where he expiated his Crime, with the usual Forms, under the Protection of Phegeus, and married Arginoë (d), the Daughter of the same Phegeus, to whom he made a Present of the Necklace and the Robe, which were given to Eriphyle. A great Famine arising, recourse was had to the Oracle, which ordered Alcmaeon to fly to Achelous. He arrived there, after much rambling up and down, where he renewed the Ceremonies of the Expiation, and married Callirhoë, the Daughter of Achelous; and settled on a Corner of Land, which that River had form'd by throwing up a quantity of Sand [A]. Callirhoë declared she would not lie with him, if he did not make her a Present of Eriphyle's Necklace and Robe. This obliged him to return to Phegeus, from whom he obtained the Necklace, having made him believe that the Oracle had declared to him, that the Furies would not cease to persecute him, till he had offered the Necklace to Apollo. Phegeus was afterwards informed, that Alcmaeon designed this Present for Callirhoë; upon which he ordered his two Sons to pursue and kill him, which they did: And, because Arginoë was offended at it, they carried her in a Box to Tegea, and charged her with the Murder. Some say that Alcmaeon, during his Madness, diverted himself with the Prophetess Manto, the Daughter of Tiresias; and that he had two Children by her (f). See the Sequel to this in the Article of CALLIRHOË. Alcmaeon's Furies made a great Noise on the Stage of Ancient Greece (g), but we have none of those Tragedies left [B]. What has been said of his Tomb, deserves to be considered [C]. The Oropians, who were beforehand with all other Nations in placing Amphiaras among the Gods, excluded Alcmaeon from Divine Honours, which they conferred on his Father and his Brother (h), on account of his Parricide (i). It is observed, that a Persian, called Orontes, resembled him perfectly (k).

Some Historians say, that, after the second War of Thebes, Alcmaeon went into Etolia, being invited thither by Diomedes, and that he assisted him in conquering that Country, and Acarnania; and that being both summoned to accompany the Expedition of Troy, Diomedes went, but Alcmaeon staid in Acarnania, and built a City there, which he called Argos of Amphilochus, in Honour of his Brother (l). Note, that he practised the Trade of Divination in Acarnania (m).

[A] He settled on a Corner of Land, which that River had formed by throwing up a Quantity of Sand. It will not be amiss to illustrate Amphilochus by a Passage of Pausanias, which imports, that, after Alcmaeon had killed his Mother, he fled from Argos to Psophis, where he married Alpheisbea the Daughter of Phegeus (1). His Marriage did not cure him of his Phrenzy; so that he had recourse to the Oracle, which ordered him to retire to a new Land, which was made since the Murder of Eriphyle. He was assured that the Furies would not pursue him thither. Meeting, then, with a Piece of Land, thrown up by the Waters, at the Entrance of the River Achelous, he settled there, and married Callirhoë.

[B] We have none of those Tragedies left. I question not but the two Verses, mentioned by Plutarch, in one of his Books, are taken out of some of those Pieces. The common-place Topic, which Plutarch there touches upon, is of greater Importance than is generally believed to be. It relates to a general Fault, to wit, of those who reproach their Neighbours with a Vice, which they themselves are guilty of, or which is less than their own. Alcmaeon reproaches Amphilochus for being the Brother of a Woman, who had killed her Husband: Amphilochus answers, And you have killed your own Mother. He, who is very guilty himself, must not set up for a Cate, and a Censor. Οὐκ ἔστι μοι γὰρ λοιδορήσας, αὐτὸς ὃν πατρὸς ἀνέλεστος. Μὴ δ' ἀσέως αὐτὸς ὢν ἀνελδίδης, Ἀνδρῶν κτῆνι γυναικὶς φονεὺς ἔσθι; Τὸν Ἀδελφόν; Ἄλλῃ μὲν. Τὴ δ' ἐκείνη; ὃν ἀλλοτρίον ἄλλα ἰδὼν ἑαυτὸς φονεὺς ὄνεις; Ὡς δ' αὐτίχῃ γὰρ μάλιστα ἢ γὰρ ἐγὼ λέω (2).

Non itaque adulterium objice alteri, ipse infans puerorum amore flagrans, neque prodigialitatem sordidus ipse. Alcmaeon Adraflam hoc maledicta iussit, Tibi quæ maritum sanæ interfecit est foror. Quid Adrafla? Non alienam sed proprium ei reponit opprobrium, Matrem necasti tu manu tua tuam.

[C] What has been said of his Tomb, deserves to be considered. This Tomb was at Psophis in Arcadia; it was but indifferently adorned; but it was surrounded with such high Cypresses, that they covered with their Shade the Hill, which commanded the City. They were never cut, because it was thought they were consecrated to Alcmaeon; and they were called the Virgins (3).

A L C M Æ O N, born at Grotone, was a Disciple of Pythagoras. It is thought he was the first who wrote upon Physics (a). He held very heterodox Opinions; as, that the Moon was eternal, and that the Soul always turned round like the Sun. This is what Laërtius says of him. Cicero represents this Philosopher's System better; for how careless is it, among all the Planets, to which Alcmaeon attributed an eternal Nature, to pitch upon That, whose Alterations are the most sensible, I mean the Moon! Laërtius should therefore have said, as Cicero did (b), that This Philosopher ascribed a Divine Nature to all the Celestial Bodies, and even to our Souls. But, as it is the Fate of false Systems to be incoherent, we find that our Alcmaeon argued very inconsequentially, when he made so great a Distinction between the Knowledge of the Gods, and that of Men. He said, that the Gods knew things evidently, and Men only conjecturally. This may be said by those who acknowledge One only True God; but they who take the Planets, and human Souls, for so many Gods, become ridiculous.

(d) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 2. c. c. lib. 1. c. 6.

(f) Tuten. f. om. Apollonius l. 3. p. 18. &c. See also Diogenes. Sicul. lib. 5. c. 6.

(g) Alcmaeon olim Tragicorum pulcherrima lallavit cum furore suo, nunc nullam sui nominis fabulam habet. Barth. in Statium. Tom. 2. p. 449.

(h) Pausan. lib. 1. pag. 33.

(1) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 255.

(2) Plutarch. in Arato, p. 1028.

(k) His Name was AMPHILOCHUS. See the Remarks on this Article.

(l) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 225. See also lib. 10. pag. 318.

(m) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. lib. 1. pag. 334.

(2) Plut. de capiendis ex inimicis. lib. 88.

(3) Id. lib. 8. pag. 255.

(a) Phavorin. in omnimoda Philosophia. Apud Laërt. l. 1. in Alcmaeon. Clem. Alex. Stromat. l. 1. Theodoret. Serm. 2.

(b) Cicero de Nat. Deor. lib. 2. c. 17. Laërt. ubi supra.

culous when they pretend, that Human and Divine Knowledge do essentially differ. It is not true that Alcmæon died of a pedicular Distemper [A].

[A] It is not true that he died of a pedicular Distemper. Antigonus Carylus mistook the one for the other, when he said (1) that Alcmæon the Philosopher, had this Disease; he took Alcmæon, the Disciple of Pythagoras, for Alcmæon the Poet. Charles Stephens does not only say, that the Philosopher Alcmæon died of a pedicular Disease, but also that he was the first, who died of it; for which he alleges Ælian. Both these Assertions are false; Ælian is not speaking of our Alcmæon; but observes several things concerning Alcmæon the Poet: Having said, that the Philosopher Pherecydes died of the Distemper here in Question (2), he would doubtless have given him the Precedence over Alcmæon, if he had mentioned the latter in relation to this kind of Disease. Charles Stephens's Errors are likewise to be met with in Father Lesclapier (3).

(2) Ælian.
Var. Histor.
lib. 4. c. 28.

(3) In Cicero
de Nat.
Deor. p. 41.

ALDRINGER, a famous General, in the Reign of the Emperor Ferdinand the Second, raised himself solely by his Merit. He was of the Country of Luxemburg, and of very obscure Birth [A]. In his younger Days he engaged in the Service of some Gentlemen, who went into France; he apply'd himself with them to Study, and made a great Progress in it. Being come into Italy, he was made Chancellor to Count Madrucci. He went afterwards to Trent, where he had an honourable Employment in the Chancery; but the Jealousy of his Colleagues, and their Conduct, so greatly disgusted him, that he left his Post, and, enrag'd at Fortune, determined to follow the Profession of the first Man he should meet with in his Way. He took the Way of Inspruck, and, meeting a Soldier near the Bridge, who was returning into Italy, he entered himself a private Soldier. He became a Sergeant soon after; and, as he was Master of his Pen, he was employ'd to draw up all the Accounts of the Company, and to write the Answers, which the Captain was to give. He gave his Captain such an Insight into Affairs, as opened to him the Way to an higher Employment. This Promotion occasioned the Lieutenant of the Company to be made Captain, and Aldringer to be advanced to the Lieutenant's Place. He defended himself so well, with but fifty Men, in a disadvantageous Post, that he maintained it, notwithstanding all the Attacks of the Enemy. From that time the Reputation of his Courage spread as far as that of his Capacity: Several Colonels offered him a Company; the Nephew of the Archbishop of Salzburg was one of them. On account of his Youth, he had occasion for such a Man in his Regiment; he gained him, and acquired so much Honour, by Aldringer's good Counsels, that, to testify his Acknowledgment, he made him his Sergeant-Major. Aldringer was afterwards Lieutenant-Colonel, and then Colonel; and made it so fully appear, that he understood his Profession thoroughly, that he was thought worthy to command in Chief, in the Expedition to Manina (a). He joined the broken Remains of the Battle of Leipic (b), very opportunely, with the Troops which he brought from Italy; and perhaps, if Count Tilly had delay'd giving Battle till the Arrival of these Troops, as he was advised to do, the Event would not have been so fatal to the Imperialists. Aldringer left Tilly, some time after, to retire into Bohemia, on account of the Jealousies, which the ill State of Affairs sowed between the Imperialists and the Bavarians (c); but this Dis-union did not continue long. He was, in the Month of March 1632, with Tilly on the Banks of the Leck, to dispute the Passage of that River with the King of Sweden. He was at that time Great Master of the Artillery (d). The Wound, he received in his Head, contributed much to the Advantage the Enemy had in passing the River; but did not hinder him from serving the same Campaign; he joined Count Wallestein in Bohemia, notwithstanding the Efforts of the Enemy to hinder this Junction: he was obliged to return in haste into Bavaria, to oppose General Horn's Troops. The Success was various, on both sides, in those Parts, all the Remainder of that Year, and the beginning of the following. The most glorious Exploit of Aldringer, during that time, was his contributing, in 1633, to the raising the Siege of the City of Constance. He march'd afterwards to join the Duke of Feria, who had brought some Spanish Troops from Italy. It has been thought, that Wallestein had given Aldringer private Orders to frustrate the Duke's Designs [B]; and

(a) In 1632.
Taken from Galeazzo Gualdo Priorato in the 6th Book of the History of the Wars of Germany.

(b) In 1631.

(c) Priorato
lib. 2. at the Year 1631.

(d) Blanc's History of Bavaria,
Tom. 4.
pag. 374.

[A] Of very obscure Birth. Puffendorf says, Humiliated Luxemburgians loco ortus; and adds (1), that he was, at first, Footman to certain French Barons, and afterwards a Secretary. According to another Historian, his Condition was not so mean; he makes him first Rudy, then go to the War, then serve as a Secretary, and afterwards take up Arms again. "Luxemburgi penitus sed honesto loco ortus, primam meam literis dedit (2). — Bona at Luxemburg; "of private, but respectable, Parents; he spent the "first part of his Life in Study." He makes him naturally abstemious, ingenio promptus acie ac, & ad turba vini abstinent; (3). which was a very bad, and very prejudicial, Quality, in a Soldier, in Germany.

[B] It has been thought, that Wallestein had given Aldringer private Orders to frustrate the Duke's Designs. The Historian of Bavaria, whom I have cited, says (A), "That the Swedes desired only to come to a general Engagement, though they were not so advantageously posted, as the Catholics. The Duke of Feria, continues he, seeing a fair Opportunity, endeavoured in vain to oblige Aldringer to engage with the Enemy, and could never obtain any thing from a Man, who was under the Correction of Wallestein; and the Swedes retiring as it were in Triumph, about the end of October, the ill Conduct of Aldringer, which cost the Catholic Union dear, displeas'd the Duke of Feria so much, that he died soon after of Grief." This Historian had said, in the foregoing Page, that "Aldringer, being in the Secret of Wallestein, seldom acted without his Orders; and that a Piece was published, at that time, which imported, that, whilst Wallestein wrote to the Emperor, that he was about to send Aldringer to the Duke of Bavaria, to get rid of him entirely, he gave him private Orders to serve him only

(1) Puffendorf, Rerum Suecicarum, lib. 6. pag. 257.

(2) John Cluverus, Hist. Histor. lib. 11. Appendix.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Blanc's History of Bavaria, Tom. 4. pag. 484.

and that this was the true Reason, and the secret Motive, why Aldringer would never consent to give Battle. However we must not imagine, that he was privy to all the Plots of Wallestein; he had only a certain Complaisance for him, which, without ruining the Affairs of their common Master, very much advanced the private Interests of That General. The like Intelligences are practised in most Armies. He was kill'd in the Year 1634, at Landshut a Town of Bavaria, and it was never known, whether it was by his own Soldiers, or by the Suedes. He had been created a Count (c). He was a Man of excellent Qualities [C]; 'tis pity they were attended with an excessive Avarice and Cruelty [D]. Such is commonly the Fate of Man; He resembles those Lands, which promiscuously produce both good and bad Herbs.

(r) Blanc, ibid. p. 43.

"only by acting upon the defensive with the little Reinforcement, which he commanded: Which Aldringer not having punctually performed, Galas let him know from Wallestein, that he would never pardon him this Disobedience."

"[c] He was a Man of excellent Qualities.] He had a very quick and penetrating Wit, great Skill, a refined Understanding, and great Courage; he distinguished himself in Councils of War by the Force of his Reasons, and by the Probability of his Conjectures; he was besides a good Writer; he spoke several Languages, and had extracted the Quintessence of the Maxims of several Countries. The Politics of an Italianiz'd Spaniard did not out-do his; "Le da lui praticate varie nationi, l'osservate diverse maniere, e gli investigati genii e inclinazioni di molti

"popoli lo refero così accorto nelle attioni, che alcuno Spagnuolo Italianato non lo avanzava (5)."

"[D] Attended with an excessive Avarice and Cruelty.] He was void of Compassion, and exacted Contributions with the utmost Rigour; he had no regard to the necessities of the Soldiers, so that he was neither belov'd by the People, nor by the Army. He made a good hand of it at the sacking of Mantua; and no Officer in the Imperial Army gained so large a share of Plunder as he (6). It was believed that his own Soldiers slew him on the Bridge of Landshut, the Opportunity of doing it without discovery being favourable. "Fu colpito e fatto cader morto, non senza sospetto cio divenisse dalla parte de' suoi per vendetta d'alcune ingiurie fatte loro, essendo egli per la sua severita piu temuto che amato della militia (7)."

(5) Priori's History of the Wars of Germany, lib. 9. pag. 291. Edit. 4to

(6) Id. ibid.

(7) Id. ibid. pag. 283.

(a) Defended in the Courts of this Name, according to Aubertus Miræus de Scriptoribus sæc. XVI. pag. 154.

(b) Bullart, Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. pag. 110, says he was 80 Years old.

(c) See Mercklinus in Lindeno renovato, p. 1047.

(d) See Remark [D].

ALDROVANDUS (a) (ULYSSES) Professor of Philosophy, and Physic, at Bologne, his Native Country, was one of the most inquisitive Men in the World with respect to Natural History. His Cares, his Labours, and his Expences, on that account, are incredible. He travelled into the remotest Countries, without any other Motive, than that of enquiring into the Productions of Nature there. Minerals, Metals, Plants, and Animals, were the Objects of his Enquiries, and of his Curiosity: But he applied himself chiefly to the Knowledge of Birds; and, in order to have very exact and lively Representations of them, he employed the most excellent Artists of Europe [A], for above thirty Years, at his own Expence. These Expences ruin'd him; he found himself at last reduced to the utmost Necessity; and it is said that he died in the Hospital of Bologne, loaded with Years (b), and blind, in the Year 1605 (c). A remarkable Example both of Publick Ingratitude [B], and Private Curiosity. A thousand Reflexions might be made on this Adventure; but I leave them to others, and shall only content myself with this single Observation, That Antiquity does not afford any Example of so extensive and difficult an Undertaking, as This of our Ulysses, with regard to Natural History. Pliny, I confess, treats of a greater Variety of Subjects, but he only glances upon them, and says but little of each; whereas Aldrovandus collected every thing he could meet with. His Compilation comprehends several large Volumes in Folio (d); but the whole Honour of it must not be ascribed to him [C]; for there came out a Work, after his Death, in which it is thought

[A] He employ'd the most excellent Artists of Europe.] Let us see what Aubertus Miræus has collected on this Subject: "Pictori cuidam ea in arte unico triginta et amplius annos annuum aureorum ducentorum stipendium percipit. Delineatores celeberrimos, Laurentium Benninum Florentinum, & Cornelium Suintum Francofurtensem ære suo condaxit, nec non Jacobi Ligotti, Serenissimi Etruriæ ducis Pictoris eximii, opera in hac eadem provincia Florentiæ quandoque usus est, ut quo maximo fieri posset artificum oves eæ designarentur. Tandem Sculptorem habuit insignem Christophorum Coriolanum Norimbergensem, atque ejus nepotem, qui eas adeo venuste adoeque eleganter exculpserat, ut non in ligno sed in ære factæ viderentur (1). — He paid an annual Stipend of Two hundred Crowns, for more than thirty Years, to a Painter, the first of his Profession. He hired the most celebrated Drawers, Laurentius Benninus the Florentine, and Cornelius Suintus of Francfort; besides which he employ'd, at Florence, the most serene Duke of Tuscany's famous Painter, James Ligotius, to delineate his Birds, in the most exquisite manner possible. At last he engag'd, as his Sculptor, Christopher Coriolanus, of Nuremberg, and his Nephew, who carved them so beautifully, and elegantly, that they seem'd not express'd in Wood, but in Brass."

(1) Aubert. Miræus de Scriptoribus sæculi XVI. pag. 154.

[B] A remarkable Example of publick Ingratitude.] We must not imagine that no one helped this Naturalist in the Expences he was at. "The Senate of Bologne, Cardinal Montalto, Francis Maria, Duke of Urbino, and others of the chief Persons of Italy, contributed willingly to it, by supplying the Painters, and Sculptors, which Aldrovandus had under him, with Money for their Maintenance — After having dedicated twelve Books of his Ornithology, or History of Birds, to Pope Clement VIII, and some others to those, who had favour'd his Labours with their Benefactions, he bequeathed the rest by Will to the magnificent Senate of Bologne — — — who assigned a considerable Sum of Money to John Cornelius Uterverius, born at Delft, in Holland, Professor in that University, and since to Thomas Dempster, a Scotch Gentleman, Professor likewise in the same Place, to collect, and cause these Books to be printed, which so highly deserved Publication (2)."

[C] The whole Honour of it must not be ascribed to him.] It appears, by the Catalogue of Books of Physic, that most of the Volumes of Aldrovandus's Natural History, were printed after his Death (3). The Ornithology (4), in three Volumes in Folio, and the seven Books of Insects, in one Volume of the same size, are the only Works, which he published. The Volume of Serpents, the three Volumes of Four-footed Beasts, the Volume of Fishes, that of Bloodless Animals. The History of Monsters, with the Supplement to that of Animals, in twelve Volumes, the Treatise of Metals, and the Dendrology (5), came out at different Times, under the Care of different Persons, after the Death of Aldrovandus. The Volume

(2) Bullart, Academy of Sciences, Tom. 2. p. 110.

(3) Mercklinus in Lindeno renovato, pag. 1047.

(4) i. e. The History of Birds.

(5) i. e. The History of Trees.

thought he had no other share, than that of furnishing the Plan [D], or at most some imperfect Memoirs. I explain this in the Remarks. It is impossible, I think, that he could write such a prodigious Number of Books, as Imperialis gives us a Catalogue of (e); and it is not to be wondered at, that, being employ'd in such different Recherches, which require the greatest Attention, he often gave for Verse, what was most contrary to the Rules of Poetry (f); and that he was not much skilled in Greek (g). A Poet, who was once Pope, has given us a pretty Elogium of him [E].

(6) In Museo Historico. See also Paul Freherus's Theatre. P. 137.

(6) Professor of Physic of the University of Bononia, and Keeper of the Museum and Physic Garden.

(7) Ex Lindenio renovato, ubi fupra.

(8) The Dendrology.

(9) Journ- of the Learned, Nov. 12. 1668. pag. 425.

(10) Secken- dorf de Lutherano. lib. 2. pag. 125. a. 3.

(11) Vossius de Orig. 1. dolol. lib. 3. cap. 91. pag. 1227.

(12) Ezek. Spanhem. apud Konig. Bibl. p. 244.

(10) Ibid.

(11) See Spanhem. de Præst. Numism. Differt. 3. sub fin. pag. 252.

(12) Lorenzo Crasso, Elgie of Learned Men, Tom. 1. pag. 137. 138.

(13) In Nomenclatore Cardinalium pag. 132. & in Istoria de Poeti Greci of Lorenzo Crasso, pag. 278.

(14) Oldimeis in Athenæ Romano, pag. 177.

of Serpents was prepared for the Prefs by Baribolomew Ambrosin (6). That of Quadrupedes, with cloven Feet, was first digested by John Cornelius Uterverius, and afterwards by Thomas Demter, and published by Mark Antony Bernia, and by Jerome Tamburin. That of Quadrupedes with continuous Feet, and that of Fishes, was prepared for the Prefs by Uterverius, and published by Tamburin. That of Quadrupedes, with Fingers or Claws, was compiled by Ambrosin. The History of Monsters, and the Supplement, were collected by the same, and published at the Expence of Mark Antony Bernia. The Dendrology is the Work of Ovid Montalbani (7).

[D] There came out a Work after his Death, in which he had no other share, than that of furnishing the Plan.] The Abbot Gallois has so well represented the Judgment, which ought to be formed of this great Work, that I believe I shall oblige the Reader more by producing the Passage at length, than by abridging it. His own Words, then, are as follows. "Aldrovandus is not the Author of this Book (8), nor of many others, which nevertheless were published in his Name. But it happened to the Collection of Natural History, of which these Books make a part, as to those great Rivers, which, during their whole Course, preserve the Name they had at their Spring, though, at last, the greatest part of the Waters they disembody into the Sea, does not belong to them, but to other Rivers, which mix with them. As the six first Volumes of this great Work were Aldrovandus's, though the others were composed by different Authors, after his Death, they are yet ascribed to him, either because they are a Continuation of his Design, or compiled out of his Memoirs, or wrote upon his Plan, or, perhaps, with a View of recommending the latter Volumes by so famous a Name (9)." They, who would be acquainted with the Plan of this Compilation, need only cast their Eyes on the following Words; the Abbot Gallois goes on thus: "There is scarce any thing written about these Trees but what has been collected in this Volume. For this Author is not satisfy'd with mentioning all that he had read in Naturalists concerning them; but he observes also, according to the Method of Aldrovandus, what the "Historians have wrote, what the Legislators have ordained, and what the Poets have feigned, about them. Moreover he explains the different uses of these Trees are put to in Oeconomics, in Physic, in Architecture, and in other Arts. Lastly, he takes Notice of the moral Sayings, Proverbs, Devices, Enigmas, Hieroglyphics, and many other things, which relate to his Subject (10)." He did not forget to consult Medals, and to borrow from them what might be useful to his Design (11).

[E] A Poet, who was once a Pope, has given us a pretty Elogium of him.] I mean Marpho Barberini, or Urban VIII. He wrote the following Epigram, in Praise of Aldrovandus.

Multiplices rerum formas, quas pontus & æther
Exhibet; & quidquid promit & addit humus,
Mens haurit, spectant oculi, dum cuncta sagaci,
Aldrobande, tuos digerit arte liber.
Miratur proprios solers industria fœtus,
Quamque tulit molli se negat esse parem.
Obstupet ipsa simul rerum fecunda creatrix,
Et cupit esse suum quod videt Artis opus (12).

Curious retiring Nature to pursue;
And dress'd in all her Shapes the Pow'r to view;
Whether in Earth's dark Womb conceal'd they lie,
Or on her Surface catch th' admiring Eye;
Whether in Seas they swim, or cut the yielding Skies;
Thro' ev'ry Form thy tow'ring Genius soars,
And all the vast Variety explores.
Great Nature's Comment, hence, these Volumes rose;
Here Art, sagacious, all her Beauties shows.
See Industry, unconscious of her Worth,
Start at her Offspring, and deny the Birth;
While Nature vain would claim the better Part;
And call that Her's, which is the Work of Art.

Lorenzo Crasso has given us another Epigram with this.

ALEANDER (JEROM) Archbishop of Brindisi, and Cardinal, in the XVIth Century. Alexander VI. desired to have him in his Service [A], and intended him for Secretary to his Son. He changed his Mind soon after, and sent him to negotiate in Hungary; but Alexander happened to be sick at that time, and could not go from Venice, where he resided. Lewis XII. sent for him into France, in the Year 1508 [B], to be Professor of Philology in the University of Paris. Aleander was then Twenty eight

[A] Alexander VI. desired to have him in his Service.] I make use of this Expression, because the Author, whom I follow, reduces the thing to a meer Design, which was never put in Execution. According to his manner of Expression, Aleander was never in the Service of that wicked Pope. If so, all those Reflexions, which were made to the Disadvantage of Aleander, occasioned by the pernicious School of Alexander VI. and Cæsar Borgia, wherein it is pretended that he was educated, stand for nothing. I shall not pretend to decide the Matter, and leave the Reader the trouble of examining into the Affair. "Aleandrum (qui paulo ante Cancellarius Leodensis, & olim famosissimi Cæsaris illius Borgia seu Ducis Valentini Secretarius fuerat, famulus hero dignus, & pars aulæ Romanæ sub Alexandro VI. pessime describit Lutherus (1). — Luther gives a very bad Character of Aleander, who a little before was Chancellor of Leige, and lately Secretary to the most infamous Cæsar Borgia, or Duke Valentine; a Servant worthy of his Master, and part of the Roman Court, in the Pontificate of Alexander VI." [B] Lewis XII. sent for him into France, in the Year 1508.] Pallavicini does not mention this Year;

but, because he says that Aleander was sent for to Paris at Twenty eight Years of Age, I did not think myself mistaken in setting it down; since, as a farther Confirmation, Aleander's Epitaph imports, that he died in the Year 1542, aged Sixty two Years within thirteen Days (2). He was therefore born the thirteenth of February, 1480. For those, who remark the Day of his Death, place it on the first Day of February (3). I am surprized at the Negligence of the Authors of his Epitaph. They say that he was born in Carniola, in the Year 1479, and that he died at Rome in the Year 1542, being within thirteen days of Sixty two Years. This cannot be true, except by supposing, that the Year 1479 did not begin in January, and that the Year 1542 began with it: Now it is ridiculous to suppose, in an Epitaph, a manner of reckoning time so destitute of Uniformity. I wonder that the Author of the Nomenclator did not perceive this false Supposition. He says one thing, which is inconsistent with Father Pallavicini's to wit, That Aleander was but twenty Years of Age, when he taught in the University of Paris.

Memory to him [F]. I do not believe there was any reason to say, that the Hebrew was his Mother-Tongue, or, to express myself more plainly, that he was born a Jew [G]. There was more reason to accuse him of being passionate (f). He wrote his

(f) See the end of the Roman [G].
OWN

and what is not. This Defect reigns throughout the Nomenclator, the Athenæum of Oldoini, and several other Bibliographers. Alexander's great Work, wherein he censured all sorts of Professors, was never printed. It is said, that he was finishing it, when he died. Mentre andava compiendo una vastissima Opera contra i Professori di tutte le Scienze, fu assalito in Roma dalla morte (11). This is what Moreri meant by these Words, He died the first of February 1642, when he was about publishing a considerable Work. Most Writers have copied Paul Jovius in this Point. "Quum vastum opus vasta illa memoria adversus singulos disciplinarum professores agitare, Romæ interit (12). — He was preparing a prodigious Work, by the help of that prodigious Memory of His, against Professors of all kinds, when Death seized him at Rome." The Continutors of Gesner and König were acquainted only with the Tables of the Greek Grammar, among Alexander's Works. Draudius did not know so much. The Catalogue of Oxford contains but a small Poem of this Author's.

[F] Attribute a surprising Memory to him. I look upon Paul Jovius's Account of this Matter as a mere Poetical Flight, tho' he gave it in Prose; which is, that Alexander remembered every thing that he read, and could repeat it a long time after, without mistaking Things, or Words. "Detur hoc incomparabile inusitate memoriæ felicitati, quæ in Hieronymo Aleandro supra cujusque vel antiqui seculi captum admiranter excelluit, ut ejus ex vero depicta facies vel in pudenda ingenii fertilitate inter læcundissimas imagines conficiatur, quando nihil eum cuncta volumina cupide perlegentem vel rerum vel verborum omnino subterfugerit, quin singula memoriter vel à multis annis longo sepulta silentio recitaret (13). — We must ascribe this to that uncommon Happiness of Memory, which was remarkable in Jerom Alexander, beyond the Comprehension even of ancient Times; inasmuch that a true Picture of this Author, tho' of a shameful barrenness of Genius, might claim a Place among the Representations of the most fertile Wits; since, notwithstanding his universal Knowledge of Books, which he read over with great Eagerness, nothing, either as to the Matter or the Expression, escaped his Memory; but he could repeat every Particular by Heart, though many Years after he first read them." It is hard to believe this without Experience: but, as a Memory does not cease to be very good, though it does not come up to the Degree, which Paul Jovius mentions, I do not question the perfect Knowledge of divers Languages, which Alexander's Epitaph attributes to him; Hebraicæ, Græcæ, Latinæ, aliquotque aliarum linguarum exoticarum ita exacte docto, ut eas recte & apte loqueretur & scriberet. — So perfectly skilled in the Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and other foreign Tongues, that he could both speak and write them justly and properly.

[G] I do not believe there was any Reason to say — That he was born a Jew. Luther and his Disciples gave it out as a certain Truth, during Alexander's first Nunciature in Germany; and we find the following Account of it in Luther's Works (14). "Venit his diebus Hieronymus Alexander, vir sua opinione longe maximus, non solum propter linguas quas eximie callebat, siquidem Hebræa illi vernacula est, Græcæ à puero illi coaliuit, Latinam autem didicist diutina professione, fed etiam mirabilis suis videtur ob antiquitatem generis. Nam Judæus natus est, quæ gens immodicè gloriatur de Abrahamæ vetustissimo se originem ducere. An vero baptisatus sit nescitur. Certum est eum non esse Pharisæum, quia non credit resurrectionem mortuorum, quoniam vivit perinde atque cum corpore sit totus periturus, adeo nullum à se pravum affectum abstinens. Usque ad insaniam iracundus est, quavis occasione furens. Impotentis arrogantia, avaritiæ inextinguibilis, nefandæ libidinis & immodicæ, summum gloriæ mancipium, quamquam mollior quam qui possit elaborato stylo gloriam parare, & pejor quam qui vel conetur in argumento honesto. At ne nesciamus, cessit felicissime simulata defectio ad Christianos. — Here is just arriv'd Jerom Alexander,

"in his own Opinion the most famous of Men, not only on account of the Languages he perfectly understands; for Hebrew is his Mother-Tongue, Greek grew familiar to him from his Youth, and Latin he attained by long exercise; but admired likewise by his own Country-men for the antiquity of his Race. For he was a Jew by birth; a People which boasts extravagantly of their Descent from Abraham who lived so many Ages ago. Whether he was ever baptized, is unknown. But it is certain that he is not a Pharisee, because he does not believe the Resurrection of the dead; since he lives, as if he were to perish entirely with the Body, and denies himself no Gratification of his depraved Affections. He is choleric even to Madness, falling into a Passion upon every Occasion; of outrageous Arrogance, unsatiable Avarice, shameful and immoderate Lust; an abandoned Slave to Fame, though too indolent to acquire it by an elaborate Style (15), and too dishonest even to attempt it by just and proper Reasoning. As for his pretended Conversion to Christianity, it has turned out greatly to his Advantage." This Picture represents Alexander to us not only as a Jew, who pretended to become a Convert to Christianity, and whose Baptism was doubtful, but also as one, who did not believe the Immortality of the Soul, and who plunged himself into the most infamous Pleasures; as a Man furiously passionate, covetous, and proud to the highest Degree. He answered the Accusation of being born a Jew, and declared before the Diet of Worms, that his Ancestors had the Dignity of Marquis in Istria, and that he had given good Proofs of his Noble and Illustrious Extraction, when he was made Canon of Liege. He appealed to several Persons, who heard him, and knew his Family. Mr Seckendorf informs us of this Particular. He found it in the Archives of the Duke of Weimar, where the Acts of the Diet of Worms are kept, among other Manuscripts of that time. Alexander's long Speech is abbreviated in those Acts, and it is from thence that this illustrious Lutheran furnished us with the above-mentioned Account of Alexander's Family, which he translated from his own Words into Latin (16). "Tandem questus est à Luthero spargi quasi Alexander gente Judæus esset: Deum immortalæ dixit, multi hic sunt boni viri quibus notus fum ego & familia mea, & asserere ego vere possum, majores meos Marchionem in Istria fuisse (17); quod vero parentes mei ad inopiam redacti sunt, fato tribui debet. Natalis etiam meos ita legitimi, ut in Canonium Leodiensem receptus sim, quod factum non foret, nisi ortus essem ex familia illustri vel spectabili." What induces me to believe, that this Reproach of being born a Jew was unjust, is no trifling Reason. Hultre Hutten published an Inveective against Alexander, wherein he was so angry, that he threatened to kill him: "Omnem adversam diligentiam, omne adhuc bebo studium, omnia tentabo conaborque, ut qui furore, amentia, & iniquitate gravis accessit, vita inanis hinc effleris. Neque enim expectandum adhuc tibi est, ut filios hic doctorum virorum sentias, sed futurum crede, ut fortium gladiis consodiare (18). — I will watch every Opportunity, I will make it my whole Business, I will try every Art and Means, that one so full of Rage, Madness, and Iniquity, may not depart with his Life. For you must not expect, that the Learned here will express their Repentments against you with their Pens; depend upon it, the Swords of the Brave will revenge their Quarrel on you." He was not ignorant that our Nuncio had refused the Reproach of Judaism before the Diet, and had boasted that he descended from a most illustrious Family; but he is so far from engaging to maintain this Charge, that he denies it was ever brought against him. I am not concerned, whether he had reason to deny it, or not; the Proof I draw from his Silence is the same; for if he had believed there was any Ground for this Accusation, he would, at least, have maintained, that Alexander denied his Jewish Extraction falsely. But, on the contrary, does he not affirm, that the Counts, to whom he said he was related, did not acknowledge (11) Lor. Cassio, Histor. de Poet. Greci, pag. 277.

(12) Jovius in Elog. cap. 98. pag. 231.

(13) Id. ib. pag. 230.

(14) Tom. 1. fol. 456. apud Seckendorf. de Luther. lib. 1. pag. 125. n. 4.

(15) Paul Jovius says, That Alexander learn'd only to speak well, and that, when he attempted to write, he perceiv'd his weak side too late.

(16) Seckendorf. de Luther. pag. 143. lit. k.

(17) It is said in his Epitaph, that he descended from Countess Lametti, in Caria, a Pethenoloxia in Istria.

(18) Hutten. in Alcan. dram.

own Epitaph, which shews that he was not dissatisfied with his Condition, as some have charged him with being [H]. Erasmus mentions him frequently in his Letters, and almost always to his Disadvantage [I]. He complains, among other things, of the acknowledge him for their Kinsman? "Nihil intellexisti proxima auditione, cum multis quidem excusares Judaicam originem, nemo objiceret. Nam esse malum, quacunq[ue] etiam gente editum, sciebant omnes. Itaque nemo magnopere putabat generis pravitate tibi objiciendam: adversum mores fremehant infensæ multi. Et poterat sentiri jam manifeste quæ esset animorum commotio: tu tamen, quasi illic potissimum expurgatione opus esset, multis tractabas locum cum ad fastidium usque audientiam: sed tanta cum fiducia, ut plane certus tibi esse videreris neminem intelligere, quam impudenter ibi mentireris omnia. Illo enim post multa erupisti, ut ad nobiliss. Comitum, qui te penitus ignorant, & quos tu laud satis nosti, genus, originem tuam referres (19). — At the next Hearing, you behaved quite like a Fool, when you took so much Pains to refute, what no one objected to you, the Charge of having been born of Jewish Parents. Every one knew you to be a Rascal, what ever was your Extradition. Therefore no one thought it of much Importance to object to you the Vileness of your Origin; whereas many inveighed strongly against your Morals. The Disposition of the Audience towards you was very evident; yet, as if the Refutation of this Charge was of the highest Consequence, you dwelt upon it with such tire-some Prolixity, that the Hearers were quite sick of the Subject; and That, with such an Air of Assurance, as if you were convinced, that no one understood, how impudently false every thing you said was. For, at last, you had the Confidence to refer your Birth and Origin to a Noble Family of Counts, who know nothing of you, and whom you yourself know very little of." Now, as the least Story, which is handed about, becomes at last considerable; I would not deny, that the Slander, which was spread against this Nuncio, was grounded upon what Paul Jovius says, that the Jews admired Alexander's Skill in the Hebrew Tongue, and that they were much inclined to believe that he was of their Nation: "Latinæ Græcæque literæ quum sæpe alacriter jactabundo pro vernaculis haberentur, Hebraicæ admirantibus Judæis & sæc stirpis cum facile credentibus, solertissime didicisti (20)." They, who shall have a mind to criticize upon me, are desired to observe, that I do not pretend, that Paul Jovius's Book occasioned this Calumny; the Notion, I think, might have been broached long before Paul Jovius took any Notice of it.

(19) Id. ib.
f. 10. Jovius
Epist. ad
Nauicam, p.
33.

Lib. 8.
Epist. ad
Nauicam
p. 33.

(21) This Supplement comes from M^{re} de la Mannoie.

"What Luther says, that Alexander was very choleric, is very true: We may believe Jesse Gentin, this Cardinal's Secretary, in a Letter to Nauica Bishop of Vienna. He tells him, with the greatest Simplicity, after having informed him of the Death of Alexander, that he knows not where to go, after the Death of his Master, for fear of finding one more passionate still. Hæstenus, says he, alium Mecenatem Romæ non quævisi, eo quod immodestia & furor hujus mei defuncti inculcat mihi timorem ne faciam Glauco cum Diomedem permutationem. — Hitherto I have not looked out for another Mecenat at Rome; for the intemperate Disposition of my deceased Patron makes me afraid of making Glauco's Exchange with Diomedes."

See the Margin (21).
[H] He wrote his own Epitaph, which shews that he was not dissatisfied with his Condition, as some have charged him with being. It consists of two Greek Verses, importing, that he died willingly; since he should thereby avoid being a Witness of many things, the Sight of which was more insufferable than Death.

Κάτθανον ἐκ δεικόν, ὅτι παύσομαι ὃν ἐπιμάρτυς
Πολλῶν, ὅντιν ἐδὼν ἄλγιστον ἢ θανάτῳ.

This would be the Disposition of all Men, if Reflexion, Reason, and Sense were capable of surmounting those Mechanical Impressions, which make us in love with Life. But, setting aside this profound Morality, I say it is very strange, that Paul Jovius should produce such an express Evidence against himself, as this Epitaph. He had said, that Alexander, angry with his Fate, which took him off one Year before his Climacteric, died complaining of this Anticipation: Interit fatis suo vehementer indignatus, quum se præreptum anno uno ante climactericum inter anxiam supremamque suspiria quereretur (22): and, immediately after, he adds, that Alexander ordered, by his Will, that a Greek Distich of his own Composition, should be inserted in his Epitaph, containing this Thought:

Excessi è vitæ ærumnis facilisque iubenque,
Ne pejora ipsa morte dehinc videam.

*Tranquil of Heart, and with a willing Mind,
The World, and all it's Miseries, I resign'd; Pleas'd to awake from Life's uneasy Dream,
Nor longer see what worse than Death I deem.*

Lorenzo Crasso gives nearly the same Account of Alexander's Indignation at his Fate: "Fu assalito in Roma dalla Morte, contro la quale mostroffi anche negli ultimi sospiri sdegnato (23). — He was seized with Death at Rome, at which he expressed great Indignation, even with his last Breath." He foretells, says Paul Jovius, new Misfortunes ready to fall on our Heads, novæ clades imminere nobis ominatur; but nothing is more false than this: Alexander considered the time to come only accidentally; all his Thoughts were employ'd on the past; he only declared his Belief, that the World would not mend. So that here is a second Error of Paul Jovius. As to the first, he cannot be justified, without being moreover charged with monstrous Calumny, in representing Alexander as a Cheat upon his Death-bed, who ordered, by his Will, that Posterity should be made to believe a notorious Falshood, to wit, that he died in great Discontent of Mind. Lorenzo Crasso says, that Scaderus inserted the Sepulchral Inscription of Alexander in his Monuments of Italy, with the Latin Translation of the two Greek Verses (24): This Translation is the same which Paul Jovius mentions; and is about as good as this: "Non invitus obii, quia quiesco; telis multorum quæ videre pejus est morte (25). — I did not die unwilling, because I am at Rest; having been Witness of many things, which to see is worse than Death." This is the Consequence of making use of a Language but little known; all the Force and Grace of the Greek Distich have escaped the Translators.

Let me insert in this Place a Remark, which was communicated to me by a learned Person: Jesse Gentin says, in his Letter to Nauica, that Alexander, having disposed his Affairs three Days before he died, servitoribus & aliis præsentibus pronuntiavit suum quod fieri cupiebat epitaphium, — declared to his Servants and others what kind of Epitaph he desired to have, quod hoc disticho clausit: Κάτθανον &c. which he concluded with this Distich, κατθανον &c. This shews, adds he, that the Epitaph did not consist altogether of two Verses, but that they were only the Conclusion of the Epitaph. I am not of this Opinion. I believe Gentin meant that his Master comprehended in this Distich all the Inscription he intended for his Tomb.

[I] Erasmus mentions him frequently in his Letters, and almost always to his Disadvantage. Alexander, being naturally of a warm Temper, and being moreover interested in the Ruin of Lutheranism, by his Quality of Nuncio, sent into Germany to stifle that Party in it's Birth, could not suffer the Moderation of Erasmus. This was not all; Erasmus's Enemies did not cease to defame him, as a Favourer of Lutheranism: Thus the reciprocal Friendship and Esteem, which was between him and the Nuncio, suffered a great Diminution upon Alexander's first coming into Germany. "Hieronymum Aleandrum Nuncium apostolicum, hominem apertissime doctum, mihi hique veteris ac jucundissima nequissime conjunctum, miris mendaciis in me conati sunt irritare — Quid multis? persuaserunt homini, ut acriter ingenio prædido, ita credulo, me parum amice de ipso & sentire & loqui. Nec desuerunt qui coalescentem

(22) Jovius,
ubi supra.

(23) Lor.
Crasso. Hist.
di Piet. Gr.
pag. 2-8.

(24) Id. ib.
pag. 2-8.
(25) Chytræus, l. 1.
fol. 4-8. relati ut, apud Schænkendorf,
lib. 1. par.
128. lit. b.

the ill Offices he had done him with the Bishop of Liege, with whom Aleander had centem amicitiam novis subinde delationibus disci-derent (26). — They endeavoured by surprizing Falshood to exasperate against me Jerom Aleander, a very learned Person, and my old and intimate Friend. — “ In fœct, he was so credulous, though a Man of acute Parts, as to be persuaded by them, that I thought and spoke of him not like a Friend. Nor were there wanting some, who contrived, by new Calumnies, to prevent the Renewal of our Friendship.” This is to speak but slightly of Aleander’s ill Dispositions, if it be true, as it is highly probable, that it is He, who is denoted elsewhere (27), by the Title of Bull-Carrier, Διαπορευτής, for That Bull-Carrier did his utmost Endeavours to ruin Erasmus; and it was well for the latter, that the Emperor did not comply with every thing he desired of him; “ Me quo minus oppresserit, per illum non stetit: perierat Erasmus, si pronas aures Principum reperisset. — If I was not ruined, no Thanks to him: Erasmus had been lost, if the Great had lent a favourable Ear to him.” A Letter, which Erasmus had written to Luther, and which the Friends of the latter had made public, exasperated Aleander to that Degree, that he endeavoured to ruin his ancient Friend, both with the Pope, and with the Bishop of Liege. “ Hæc (Epistola) dedit anam Aleandro, jampridem iniquo in me animo, ut me perditum iret, conatus Leonis animum irritare in me, simul Leodienfis Episcopi, qui prius pene deperibat, ut loquar, Erasmum. Nam ipse Leodienfis offendit mihi literas, quas ad eum à Roma scripserat Aleander, satis odiose me attingentes (28). — His Letter induced Aleander, already prepossessed against me, to contrive my Ruin, which he endeavoured to do, by exasperating Pope Leo against me; as also the Bishop of Liege, who before was doatingly fond, if I may use the Expression, of Erasmus. For the Bishop himself showed me the Letters, which Aleander wrote to him from Rome, in which he sufficiently discovered his Spleen against me.” He affected to say that Erasmus’s Works were the Source of all the Heretical Doctrines, then maintained. “ Jam audio multis perusum ex meis scriptis extitisse totam hanc Ecclesiæ procellam. Cujus vanissimi rumoris præcipuus autor fuit Hieronymus Aleander, homo, ut nihil aliud dicam, non superstitiosus verax (29). — *I am now informed, that it is a general Persuasion, that all this Storm, which has fallen upon the Church, was raised by my Writings.

The chief Author of this groundless Report was Je-rom Aleander, a Person, to say no more of him, not over scrupulous with regard to Truth.*” He not only found fault with Erasmus’s Religion, but reflected also upon that great Man’s Learning, and his Works. This appears by a Letter, which Erasmus wrote to him in the Year 1524 (30), in which he opens his Heart to him. He looked upon him as so enraged an Enemy, that he took him for one of the chief Promoters of the Censures, which the Sorbonne had published against his Books, and for the true Author of the Invektive, which passed under the Name of Julius Cæsar Scaliger. “ Non tamen erant proditura Censuræ, nisi quidam oleum camino addidissent. Lutetiz fuit Ecclus, & ut suspicor, Aleander; quæ suspicor hac de causa præcipue venisse, ut Erasmo molliatur exitium. Julii Sca-ligeri libellum tam scio illius esse, quam scio me vivere. Id tamen dissimulandum est, ne magis in-fanat prodito furo (31). — However these Censures would never have appeared, had not a certain Person thrown Oil upon the Fire. It is well known, that Ecclus was at Paris, and, as I suspect, Aleander; whose principal Design in coming thither, I suspect to have been, a Plot against Erasmus. I am as sure, that the Book of Julius Scaliger is His, as that I am now alive. But this must be dissembled, lest he should grow more furious, upon pulling off the Mask.” I have shewn elsewhere (32), that Erasmus was mistaken in relation to this last Fact; Scaliger’s Oration was the Work of Him, whose Name it bears; and, to say, that, in the Year 1531, Aleander went to Paris, chiefly to contrive Erasmus’s Ruin, is to think one’s self too considerable a Man, and to be ignorant of the Nature of the Charge, which the Pope gave this Nuncio. We shall see in another Place (33), whether Erasmus had reason to attribute a Book, which bore the Name of Dilect, to Aleander.

He meant this Nuncio in the twenty fourth Letter of the twenty fifth Book. Aleander’s Passion must therefore have been extreme; for he, whom Erasmus complains of, had handed about a Paper (34)
at the Court of Rome, wherein he told the Pope, that he wondered that, so many thousands of Men having perished in Germany, in the War of the Peasants, Erasmus, the Author of this furious Tumult, was yet living. We cannot be ignorant, who the Author is, whom Erasmus denotes, since we find these Words in another Letter: “ *In me impudentissimis argumentis causam agit (Albertus Pius) & agit hostiliter, docere laborans, me fuisse occasionem, causam, autorem & principem, totius hujus negotii.
Quod idem agit Aleander in suo Racha, demirans me adhuc spirare, quum in Germania tot hominum millia sint trucidata (35).* — Albertus Pius carries on the Cause against me with most impudent Arguments, and declares open War against me; taking a great deal of Pains to shew, that I was the Occasion, the Cause, the Author, and Ringleader of this whole Affair. Aleander does the same, in his Racha, in which he expresses his Wonder, that I am yet alive, after the Slaughter of so many thousand Men in Germany.” In another Place (36) he denotes him by the Name of VER-PUS, which shews that he believed still, that Aleander was born a Jew. If Aleander wrote this Book, he held a very strict Correspondence with Erasmus, and had the same Table, the same Chamber, and the same Bed with him; and had received besides good Offices from him; for thus Erasmus expresses himself: “ Cum altero filio mihi olim non tectum modo ac mensa, verum etiam cubiculum & lectus communis: adeoque à me nulla læsus est injuria, ut, quum illi res essent angustiores, commenda-tibus literis meis nonnihil etiam adjutus sit, nec ufquam illius in scriptis meis nisi honorifica men-tio (37). — *The other shared not only my House and my Table, but even my Bed (38); and so far was He from receiving an Injury from me, that, when his Circumstances were a little embarrassed, I assisted him in some measure by Letters of Recommendation; nor did I ever mention him in my Writings;
but with Respect.*” We must necessarily understand this of Aleander, when we remember another Letter (39), wherein we find these Words: “ Ut video, tibi propemodum persuasit (Aleander): ut ego, qui è domestico convictu ac lectuli quoque contubernio totum intus & in cute abvi, tam scio esse ovum illius, quam scio me vivere. — I find, Aleander has persuaded you of the contrary; but I, who, from my Intimacy with him, see into his very Thoughts, am as certain This Work (40) is His, as that I am alive.” Let us end this disadvantageous Relation with a Passage, which concerns Aleander’s Morals. If we may believe Erasmus, he lived at Venice the Life of an Epicurean in the Year 1533. Nunc Venetiæ pland vivit Epicureum, non sine dignitate tamen (41). — Not without Dignity. Doubtless he means, by this Dignity, the double Mitre, which he had mentioned in the sixtieth Letter. Aleander
gemina mitra insignitus, nam Brundisynus & Oretinus est; apud Cæsarem agit legatum Anglicum (42). This latter Term is equivocal, and perhaps Erasmus did not write Anglicum, but Anglicum, to denote the Office of Apostolical Nuncio, which Aleander had at that time in Germany. However, it had not been amiss to have hinted, in a marginal Note, that he was not the King of England’s Ambassador to the Emperor Charles V; for the Reader will naturally understand it so. Monf. de la Monnoie happily conjectures, that Anglicum was owing to Erasmus’s having written, by way of Abbreviation, aplicum for apostolicum.

The Reader should, at least, see one Passage of Erasmus, to the Advantage of Aleander: “ Etiamsi nominasset istum, qui Aleandrum Erasmo præfere-re in omnibus, nihil erat periculi. Nam & ipse plurimum tribuere soleo Aleandro, præsertim in litiris, nihiloque magis me lædi puto, si doctior est, quam quod doctior est aut formosior (43). — You might safely have named him, who prefers Aleander to Erasmus in every thing. For I always pay a great

(33) In the same Remarks

(34) In which he explained the meaning of the Hebrew Word Racha.

(35) Erasmus. Epist.
lib. 20. pag.
102. It is not d. f. r. m.
Basil, Dec.
23. 1533.

(36) In the 43rd Letter of the 32nd Book, pag.
1931. See also the 74th Letter of the same Book.

(37) Epist.
24. lib. 25.
pag. 1379.

(38) It was probably at Venice, where Erasmus was employ’d by Aldus Ma-nutius.

(39) The 58th
Letter of the 30th Book of Erasmus,
pag. 1945.

(40) He means Scaliger’s Oration.

(41) Epist.
62. lib. 30.
pag. 1943.

(42) Epist.
60. lib. 30.

(43) Epist. 4.
lib. 21. pag.
1065. See the 194th pag.
“ great

had a Brother, who was a much greater Master, than he, of the Art of Diffimulation [K].

"great Deference to Aleander, especially in Matters of Learning; nor is it more injurious to me, if he is a better Scholar, than if he is richer, or handsomer." The Letter, wherein Erasmi speaks thus, is dated the Thirty first of August, 1524.

[K] He had a Brother ----- a much greater Master, than he, of the Art of Diffimulation.] Eraf- mus, who informs us of this Particular, adds, that this Brother was, upon this Account, more dangerous than Aleander, who knew not so well to conceal his Designs. I will give you his own Words: "Habet Fratrem apud Leodiensem hoc perniciosiorem, quod omnia potest diffimulare, id quod non potest Aleander (44)."

(44) Ep. 57. lib. 2. pag. 1011.

(a) They are distinguished by the Appellations of Aleander the elder, and Aleander the younger.

(b) Salmasius.

(c) Mr. Baillet, in his Judgment on the Poets, n. 1250. and Witte in his Diarium Biograph. part. 2. pag. 40. place his Death in the Year 1631. Witte calls him Alexander.

ALEANDER (JEROM) of the same Family with the Preceding (a), and Grandson of Jerom Amalibus, by the Mother's side, was one of the learned Men of the XVIIth Century. Upon his quitting Frioul, his Native Country, to go to Rome, he was made Secretary to Cardinal Ottavio Bandini, which Employ he discharged with Honour near twenty Years. He ventured early to appear in Print; for he had scarce taken his Degree of Civilian, before he published a Commentary on the Institutes of Caius. He did not suffer his Pen to be idle at Rome; for being one of the first who was admitted into the rising Academy of the Humourists, he had always some Composition ready to produce before them, and wrote likewise a very learned Treatise, in Italian, on the Device of that Assembly. The Fertility of his Genius, and his Studies, appeared in several Works on different Subjects. He explained some Pieces of Antiquity [A]; he wrote on the Question concerning Suburban Churches, and published a Book against That, which an anonymous Author (b) had composed on this Subject, in Favour of the Protestants. A Volume of his Verses was published, and was followed by an Apology for the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, against the rude Attacks of the Cavalier Siliani. Urban VIII. expressed his Esteem for him advantageously; for he laboured to draw him from the Service of Cardinal Bandini, in order to place him in That of the Barberinis: so that Aleander became Secretary to Cardinal Francis Barberini, the Pope's Nephew. He went with this Cardinal into France, when he was sent thither with the Character of Legate à Latere. He did not sink under the Fatigues of this long Journey, but bore them with Resolution, notwithstanding the Weakness of his Constitution, and his want of Health. He was not so much Master of himself, with regard to good Cheer. He had agreed, with some of his intimate Friends, to treat one another every three Days by turns. Amidst such a Variety of Delicacies, he could not forbear eating more than was proper, considering his weak Stomach; so that he fell sick, and could not recover of his Illness (c). The Cardinal his Master, made a magnificent Funeral for him in the Academy of the Humourists, and his Brethren, the Academics, carried his Body to the Grave (d). Gaspard de Simonibus spoke his Funeral Oration on the 31st of December 1631. It was printed at Paris in the Year 1636. Aleander had such an elegant and genteel way of writing, that the Compliment, which one of his Friends made him upon it, deserves our Notice [B].

(d) Taken from Nicinus Erythraeus, Pinacoth. 1. See also Alphab. in Alphab. Urbani, pag. 123. 124. 125.

(1) It was printed at London in 1682, and at Frankfurt in 1683. 12mo.

[A] He explained some pieces of Antiquity.] They were two Marbles, a Table, and a Statue. The Table contained the Figure, and the Symbols, of the Sun; the Statue was surrounded with a Girdle full of carved Work. The Title of this Work of Aleander is as follows: Explicatio antiquæ tabule marmoreæ solis effigie symbolique exculptæ: explicatio sigillorum æonæ veterem statuem marmoream cingentis. It is in Quarto, printed at Rome, in the Year 1616, and at Paris, in the Year 1617. I do not question but his Acquaintance with Father Morin was owing to this Work. It appears, by the Book, entituled, Ecclesiæ Orientalis antiquitates (1), that they corresponded by Letters.

[B] Such an elegant and genteel way of Writing, that the Compliment — deserves our notice.] Nicinus Erythraeus told him often, When I read your Works, I find myself a learned Man; but when I read those of other Writers, who pretend to Eloquence, I find myself very Ignorant; for I understand nothing in them. How few Latin Authors are there, at present, who deserve this Compliment? I do not speak of those, who write in the Chancery, or Scholastic, Style, but of those, who write as Orators, and who labour their Phrases. They are generally fit only to mortify the Prefumption of their Readers, who find themselves every Moment stopt by some Allusion, or some Metaphor, so confusedly express, that they are altogether in the Dark. The Misfortune is, that the Reader is seldom mortify'd by this means, since Self-love prompts him to impute the Cause of these Obscurities, not to his own Ignorance, but to the Nonsense of the Author. However, I fancy the Reader will be pleased to read Nicinus Erythraeus's genteel Compliment in the Original. "Scribentis ejusdem ratio tum in soluta oratione tum in versibus adeo erat pura, adeo perspicua, ut sæpe ex me audiret tum demum me mihi met doctum eruditumque videri, cum sua legerem; cum autem in aliorum scriptis, qui se eloquentes dicebant, vellent, incurrerem, tum plane me indoctum omnipiumque rerum rudem agnoscere, eò quod verbum prorsus in illis nullum intelligerem (2)." This ought to have been a strong Inducement to him, not to leave any Obscurities in his Elegies; and yet they are not altogether free from it. Some think he has not express'd clearly, whether it was at Rome or Paris, that good Cheer was so fatal to Aleander; they believe it was at Paris (3). As for myself, I do not question the contrary; the Agreement of treating one another two or three times a Week, by turns, favours more of Persons, at ease, and at Home, than of Travellers. Besides, the Journey, which the Legate Francis Barberini took into France, in the Year 1625, lasted but few Months; and Aleander did not die till the Year 1631.

(2) Nicinus Erythr. Pinacoth. 1. pag. 46.

(3) See the Judgment of the Learned on the Poets, Tom. 4. n. 1430. pag. 54.

ALEGAMBUS (PHILIP) a Flemish Jesuit, was born at Brussels, the Twenty second of January 1592. He studied Classical Learning in his own Country; after which he went into Spain, and entered into the Duke of Osuna's Service; whom he followed into Sicily, when he went to take upon him the Office of Viceroy there. Finding within himself a Call to a Religious Life, he took the Jesuit's Habit at Pulermo, termo, on the seventh Day of September, 1613. He performed his Noviciate, and his Course of Philosophy, in the same City, and his Divinity Studies at Rome; from whence he was sent into Stiria, to teach Philosophy in the University of Gratz. Having discharged the Duties of this Function to the Satisfaction of his Masters, he was made Professor of School-Divinity, and solemnly promoted to the Doctorate in the Year 1629. During these Transactions, the Prince of Eggenberg, Favourite of the Emperor Ferdinand II, had a mind to send his Son to travel, and to appoint a prudent and learned Jesuit to be his Confessor in his Travels. Father Alegambus was thought fit for this Employ, and was taken out of the Schools to travel with this young Lord. He was five Years with him, and saw Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy. Being returned to Gratz, he taught Moral Divinity there, and was the Spiritual Father of the Youth. In the Year 1638, the young Prince, whom he had accompanied in his Travels, was nominated by the Emperor Ferdinand III, for the Embassy of Obedience to Pope Urban VIII. He desired Father Alegambus to accompany him; upon which this Jesuit travelled to Rome, in Quality of the Ambassador's Confessor. When this Function was over, the General of the Jesuits retained him to be his Secretary for the Latin Dispatches, which related to Germany. Alegambus, having discharged the Duties of this laborious Function for four Years successively, was obliged to leave it; a continual Application to Writing having greatly impaired his Sight. Upon this they gave him the Presecture of Spirituals in the Maison Professe, and the Office of confessing in the Church; of which it is said he acquitted himself with great Applause. He died at Rome of a Dropsy, on the sixth Day of September 1652 (a). He wrote but few Books [A]; and yet he deserves the Elogy of a very good Author; for the Bibliothèque de the Writers of his Order is a good Book in it's kind, and excels by much all the Works of this Nature, which were wrote before That time. He must necessarily have taken a great deal of Pains in collecting the Materials; a Work, which requires two Talents, seldom found together, great Patience, and great Eagerness. He was obliged afterwards to put these Materials in order; and this was the most laborious part of his Work; because a Man is no longer supported by the strong Inclination, which prompted him to search for the Materials, which he wanted. It was at Rome that Alegambus composed his Bibliothèque; for which he had collected for many Memoirs (b); and it was printed at Antwerp in 1643. He so greatly enlarged the Work, which the Jesuit Ribadeneira had begun on this Subject [B], that, whereas the Work of the latter is but a very small Offavo, his is a pretty large Folio. I shall mention, in the Remarks, what has been said for or against it [C]. He intended a new Edition, and, during the nine Years he survived the former,

(a) Taken from Sotuel's Bibl. Script. Soc. Jesu. Rome 1675, pag. 706, 707.

(b) Sotuel, ibid.

[A] He wrote but few Books.] The Catalogue of his Works, according to Father Sotuel, is as follows: Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jesu, Antwerpæ, 1643, in Folio. Vita P. Jobannis Cardin Lusitani ex Societate Jesu, Romæ, 1649, in 12°. Heroes & Viri clemæ charitatis Societatis Jesu, Romæ, 1658, in 4to. Mortes illustres & gesta eorum de Societate Jesu, qui in odium fidei ab Hæreticis vel aliis occisi sunt, Romæ, 1557, in Folio.

[B] The Work, which the Jesuit Ribadeneira had begun on this Subject.] That the Reader, who desires to know the History of the Bibliothèque, of which we speak, may not have the trouble of turning to another Volume, I shall observe here, that Peter Ribadeneira begun, in the Year 1602, the Catalogue of the Jesuit Authors. This Catalogue consisted of but few Sheets; he enlarged it afterwards, and published it at Antwerp, in the Year 1608. It was printed at Lyons, the Year following, with some Additions, and Corrections, in relation to some Particulars concerning the French Jesuits, with which the Author was unacquainted. Father Julius Nigroni perceived, that this Work stood in need of Correction in many other Places, particularly with respect to the Italian Jesuits; upon which a new Edition was published, in the Year 1613, at Antwerp. Father Andrew Schott had the Care of it; and it was considerably enlarged (1); but was still a very defective Work; which was the Reason why Alegambus undertook to put it into a better Condition, and to make it fitter to give an advantageous Idea of the Erudition of the Society. He published it in the Year 1643. It was still farther enlarged by the Jesuit Sotuel, whose Edition was published at Rome, in the Year 1675, and no doubt it will require still farther Additions, both because the Society of the Jesuits continually affords new Authors, and because many things escaped the last Continuator, which might make the Bibliothèque of the Order more perfect. The second Tome of the Bibliothèque Romaine (2), informs us, that the Jesuit Bonanni is preparing a Catalogue of the Writers of his Society, who have published any thing since the Year 1675. The

(1) See Alegambus's Preface.

(2) Printed at Rome in 1692. The Author's Name is Prosper Mandolin.

Exactness of Alegambus is doubtless wonderful; but yet there are some Faults, both of Omission and Commission, in his Book. He does not always mention the first Edition of Books, which is a considerable Fault, to be found in all the Compilations, which have hitherto appeared. No one has yet undertaken to publish an exact Collection of all the Editions, and carefully to observe the first. Gesner, and his Continutors, have been very negligent in this respect. Father Sotuel, willing to avoid the minute Particulars, on which Alegambus sometimes enlarges a little too much, is too concise and barren. He was not so well qualify'd for this Work, as Alegambus. The Curious, and even those, who excuse him on account of the Orders, which he might have received from his Superiors, in relation to the anonymous, and pseudonymous Writers, look upon his Work, in this respect, as much inferior to that of the former, in which so many obscure Authors are brought to light.

[C] What has been said for or against it.] Mr Baillet will supply us with a Comment on the Text of this Remark. Let us begin with the fair side.

He says (3), that "the Bibliothèque of the Writers of the Society ----- is a grand Collection, "which surpasses all those of the same Nature, and "that it ought to be considered as one of the most "perfect of the kind." That, according to Nicolas Antonio (4), "the Jesuits have shewn, by this Work, "how curious and industrious they are in the things "which concern them, and that, having built on the "Foundation of Ribadeneira, they raised this great "Edifice; the Beauty whereof consists particularly in "the Exactness and Proportion of it's Parts, and of "which the whole Credit is due to Alegambus, a "Writer so careful and exact, that there is no Danger "of being deceived by him; because he is not only "free from Confusion, and never takes one Author "for another, but also because he does not attribute "any Book to the Jesuits, which they did not write, "and because he is exact and faithful, in his Representation of those, which really come from the Society." Mr Baillet adds, "that it is no small Praise

(3) Baillet's Judgment of the Learned, Tom. 2. n. 112. p. 130.

(4) Pref. Biblioth. Ser prior. Hispan.

mer, he collected many Particulars, which might serve for Corrections, or Additions. Father Sotuel made use of them, when he published a new Edition of this Bibliothèque at Rome, in 1675 (c).

(c) Id. ibid.

It cannot be denied that there are many inconsiderable Authors taken Notice of in this Book, and many Authors of the first Rank. But some pretend, that should it be continued, there would be a very sensible Disproportion in it; that is to say, the great Men would be incomparably fewer in the Continuation, than in what has hitherto appeared. This gives me an Opportunity of communicating to the Publick what passed in a Conversation between some learned Persons in the Year 1697 [D].

"----- to have avoided a Fault with so much Care, into which most of the other Regulars have fallen, who have given an account of the illustrious Men of their Order; who, thinking to do Honour to their Communities, by increasing the Number of their learned Men and Saints, indifferently, and without Choice, have plac'd a great many Authors among their Brethren, who did not belong to them; whereas there is scarce one to be seen in the Bibliothèque of the Society, who had not been a Jesuit. Nay, that the Writers, who left their Society, as Papyrus Masso, Gaspar Scioppius, Mark Antony de Dominis, Christian Francken, &c. do not appear in it." Or that if they are seen there, it is only in relation to their Works, which preceded their Departure; that, in this View, we find there Francis de Macedo, a Portuguese, who from a Jesuit became a Cordelier, and Claudius Danquoy, a Fleming, who left the Society for a Canonship at Tournay. Lastly, Mr Baillet observes, that, according to the Author of the News from the Republic of Letters (5), Alegambus, "suited himself to the Taste of our Age, that is, of all Persons of good Sense; that this Taste consists in observing a Chronological Exactness in every thing relating to History; that it is this, which occasioned the Approbation of the Applauses bestowed upon Alegambus, who takes notice every where of the Time, and Place, of the Birth of Authors, the Age when they became Jesuits, their Employments, and their chief Actions, according to the Series of Time, and that there is something extremely pleasing in this Exactness. Lastly, continues Mr Baillet (6), as the Society of the Jesuits has been hitherto the most Learned of all regular Societies, that is to say, at least, the most abundant in all sorts of Writers (except in Physic) ----- we may judge from thence of the Advantage, which may be drawn from this copious Bibliothèque, which is well enough written, without any affectation of a particular Style, and without too far-fetch'd Ornaments ----- dispos'd in a very fine Method, and embellish'd with a great Number of laborious and useful Tables." This is the fair Side of it's Character. Let us now proceed to the Imperfections of this Bibliothèque.

(5) In July 1683, Art. 5. where he indirectly censures Sto, who are contented to extract a Man's Qualities in fine Phrases, without taking notice of his Country, Family, and Employments; and where he says, That one cannot read the Lives of several Roman Emperors, without being disgusted, and without complaining of the Carelessness of the Historians, who mention neither the Place where they were born, nor their Family, nor their Age, nor by what means they raised themselves.

(6) Baillet, ubi supra, P. 167.

(7) Id. ibid. P. 15.

(8) Id. ibid. P. 135.

Mr Baillet says (7), that "as the most perfect Bodies are not always free from Spots and Defects, when their Beauty consists only in the Size and Proportion of their Parts, it will be no surprize to hear, that this fine Bibliothèque has met with it's Censors as well as others; that some think they discover in it something of that Affection for one's own Society, which inclines a Man to represent the Writers of it always to their Advantage; that they add, that, in effect, there is nothing to be met with in this huge Volume, but Elogies; and that, among such a great Number of Authors and Books, it does not appear that Alegambus and Sotuel acknowledge one that is bad, except, perhaps, those, who have been put into the Inquisition, or into the Index; that others have observed, that there is scarce one Writer in all this Bibliothèque, who is not represented to us as a Saint. It is true, that reasonable Persons ought to be satisfied with seeing a solemn Protestation at the beginning, and end of the Book, that he does not pretend to warrant what is said of the Holiness and Virtues attributed to his Brethren, no more than the other Encomiums, which are bestowed upon them." It is more difficult, according to Mr Baillet (8), "to answer two other Accusations; the first is, that Alegambus, being deceived by some false Memoirs, which ill affected Persons sent him, calls Mr Marion, Mr Servin, and some other illustrious Magistrates, and good Catholics, Heretics. The second is, that he was so indifferet as to reveal certain things, which it was of the utmost Importance to the Society, to "keep private and suppress; as for Example, when he affirms, that the Amphitheatre of Honour [* §], written against the Royal Authority, by one Bonarcius, is the Work of a famous Jesuit, though Father Cotem had assured King Henry the Great of the contrary; and that some other Books, written against Episcopacy and Hierarchy in general, and against the Clergy of France, and the Sorbonne in particular, were composed by some Fathers of the Society; though the chief among the Jesuits of France, who governed the Houses of Paris, having been called upon to answer this Charge, had protested, even under their own Hands, that the Jesuits were not the Authors of these Libels." Mr Baillet adds, that "Sotuel, was more discreet in this Point than Alegambus; for in his Edition we do not find the Writings of the false Smith, and of the false Of-Jesu, which gave so much Offence; nor the Books of Guimenius, of Fernand, and of the Apologist for the Casuists; nay, he took care to tell us beforehand, that his Silence, in relation to these Books, ought to pass for a disowning, and a private Condemnation, which the Society makes of them. But it cannot be denied, on the other side, that he has preserved Alegambus's Faults in many other Places, and that his Edition is not so exact and fine, as that of Alegambus." See the foregoing Remark. I shall take notice of a small Defect of this Bibliothèque, at the End of the Remark [C], of the Article ANNAT.

[§*] [This Book is ascribed to the Jesuit Carolus Scribonius, in the Catalogue of Ribadeneira; at Lyons, in 8vo. for Pillebotte; and, at Antwerp, ex officina Plantiniana, 1613, 8vo. REM. CRIT.]

[D] What pass'd in a Conversation of some learned Persons in the Year 1697.] Some Gentlemen, who came to Delft, with the Plenipotentiaries of France, being one Day in Company with some French Refugees, and some Persons of the Country, the Conversation, according to the Custom of Men of Letters, turned upon Books and learned Men. Most of them acknowledged the Decay of Learning; and they observed, more than once, with great Joy, that the Society of Jesuits scarce produces any learned Men at present. The Bellarmins, the Sirmonds, and the Petauviuses, add they, have left no Successors; their Places, and those of many other less famous Men, are still vacant. Mr * * * * was almost the only Person, who did not approve of this Censure, and who desired the Company to consider, that those, who take Delight in such Discourses, are guilty of two Faults; for "in the first place, said he, they lightly touch upon what concerns other Orders, and Communities, but insist much on That of the Jesuits. This respect of Persons is very unjust. Have the Universities of France any Professors of Physic, which make so great a Noise as Fernel, and Sylvius? Or any Professors of the Civil Law, who come near Dencaus, Duaren, Hotman, and Cujacius? Shew us, if you can, a Casaubon, a Scaliger, or a Salmasius, in the Protestant Party. Shew us a Grotius, an Heinsius, or a Vossius, in Holland. Did not these Men die without leaving any Successors? Have they left Places, which are filled up? Let us confess then, that the Decline, which you affect to appropriate to the Jesuits, is common to all the Parties and Communities of Europe; it is a Defect of the Times, and not of their Society. Do not imagine, says he, (which was his second Reflexion) that I pretend, that this part of the XVIIth Century, in which we live, is inferior to the former Part, or to the foregoing Age. I believe, on the contrary, that, upon the whole, it ought to have the Preference, and that it is the Alteration of our Taste, which is the only Reason of what you call the Decay of Literature. The Study of Critical Learning is fallen; Men apply themselves to the reason-

Whether there are as many learned Jesuits now, as formerly.

(a) See Remark [D] of the Art de ACONTI-
US.

"ing Part (g); they improve their Minds much more than their Memory; they are desirous to think delicately, and to express themselves politely. This Application does not indeed produce those great Volumes, which impose on the Publick, and which raise a Man to a great Reputation; but in truth it strikes out more Light, and forms a Genius more valuable than the great Learning of the Grammarians, and Philologists. The Jesuits have followed this new Taste; and this is the Reason, why their learned Men are not of the same Stamp with those, who lived formerly. Have you observed, as I have done, continued he, the considerable Number of illustrious Men, at present in their College at Paris? Father Benier is so consummate in Language, that all the Strangers of Europe and Asia desire his Company, and converse with him, as if he was their Countryman. Can a more extensive share of Literature be seen, than That of Father Hardouin? Is not Father Commire one of the best Latin Poets at present in the World? Is there any Writer, who exceeds Father Boubourin in the Purity of the French Language, and in the Beauty of his Compositions, or Father Jouvency, in point of Philology, or Father de la Beune in a fine Latin Style, by whose Care Father Sirmond's Works have been lately published? Are there better Pens in France than Father le Tellier, Father Daniel, Father Duclin, &c.? I name you some of them, but without pretending to wrong many others, whom I do not name." This was the Discourse of Mr. * * * * *, if the Person, who informed me of this Conversation, related it faithfully. My Readers may judge of it as they think fit.

ALESIIUS (ALEXANDER) a famous Divine of the Confession of Augsburg, and Author of several Books (a), was born at Edinburgh in Scotland, the Twenty third of April 1500. He made a wonderful Progress in School-Divinity; and entered early the Lists against Luther. It was at that time the Controversy in fashion, and the great Field of Battle, wherein young and old Authors endeavoured to give Proofs of their Merit. He had his Share, a little while after, in the Verbal Dispute, which Patrick Hamilton maintained against the Ecclesiastics [A], concerning certain new Opinions, which he had gained a Relish of at Marburg. He endeavoured to bring him back to the Catholic Religion, but could not prevail upon him; and began himself to entertain Doubts concerning his own Religion, from this Gentleman's Discourse, but much more from the Constancy he shewed on the Wood-Pile, on which David Beton, Archbishop of St Andrews, caused him to be burnt. The Doubts of our Alesius would perhaps have been attended with no Consequence, if they had let him quietly enjoy the Canonship, which he possessed in the Metropolitan Church of St Andrews; but he was persecuted with so much Violence, that he was forced to retire into Germany [B], where at length all his Doubts vanished. At first indeed he wavered a little between the two Religions, as may be seen in his Answers to Cocleus: But at last he embraced Lutheranism, and persevered in it to his Death. It is true, that, between several Parties, which arose in that Sect, he sometimes inclined to the side of the less Orthodox. Thus, in 1560, he maintained the Doctrine of George Major concerning the Necessity of Good Works [C]. I forgot to observe, that the Alteration, which happened in England, with respect to Religion, after the Marriage of Henry VIII with Anne Bullen, occasioned Alesius to repair to London in 1535. He was greatly countenanced

(a) See Remark [C].

(1) Beza in Iconibus.

(2) Lewis Rabus, in the 4th Book of his History of Martyrs; Budaeus in Aduersaria, pag. 38. Hondorf Prompt. pag. 64. Justus de Academis, p. 45. place it as Buchanan does. See Jacobi Thomasi Oratio de Alexandro Alezio, pag. 307.

(3) Buchanan. Rerum Scotticarum, lib. 24.

(4) Expositio in Psal. 37. fol. 164. See also his Answer to Cocleus, p. 9.

[A] He had his Share, a little while after, in the Verbal Dispute, which Patrick Hamilton maintained against the Ecclesiastics. Beza has, in few Words, given us the Elogy of this Protestant Martyr, who was of a Family related to the Kings of Scotland. He places his Martyrdom in the Year 1530 (1). Buchanan places it in the Year 1528 (2), and says, the Earl of Arran's Brother was his Father, and the Duke of Albign's Sister, was his Mother. He observes, that, a little after his Execution, the Death of a Dominican, who had been his Accuser, occasioned a great Confection in the Minds of the People. This Dominican's Name was Alexander Campbell; he was a young Man of great Genius, and Learning: He had often discoursed with Hamilton, about the Interpretation of Scripture, and had confessed to him, that he acknowledged most of the Doctrines for true, which pass'd at that time for Paradoxes. Hamilton, remembering this Confession, treated him as a vile Wretch, when he found that he was his Accuser, and cited him before the Throne of God. These Words affected him in such a Manner, that he lost his Senses, and died mad some time after (3). Alesius relates many Particulars concerning the Execution of Patrick Hamilton (4), which Rabus inserted in his German History of Martyrs.

[B] He was persecuted with so much Violence, that he was forced to retire into Germany. This Persecution was raised against him, for preaching warmly before a Provincial Synod, in 1529, against fornicating Priests. The Provost of St Andrews, whose lewd Intercourses were known to every body, apply'd the Sermon to himself, and fancied it was preach'd on purpose to turn the Eyes of the whole Congregation upon him. He resolv'd to be revenged the first Opportunity; and, as he was of a Temper a thousand times more fit for a Soldier than a Canon, he made choice only of violent means. Hearing that the whole Chapter was assembled to send Complaints against him to King James V, he came to the Assembly with an armed Retinue, and ordered Alesius to be seized; who exhorted him to moderate his Anger; nay, he drew a Sword upon him, in answer to his just Remonstrance. The poor Canon was so terrified, that he threw himself at the Provost's Feet, and humbly begged his Life of him. He came off with a kick on the Stomach, which made him fall into a Swoon: After which he was carried to Prison: All the rest of the Canons were likewise imprisoned; but the King, being informed of the Matter, ordered them to be set at Liberty. Alesius alone was not released; on the contrary, he was clapped into a dreadful Dungeon, where he remained One and twenty Days. His Liberty was of no long Continuance; he thought he ought to acquaint the Magistrates with the ill Treatment he had suffered: Whereupon the Provost, who had forbid him to acquaint them with it, caused him to be imprisoned again, and represented to the Archbishop, that he had published heretical Opinions in his Synodal Sermon, and that he deserved to be punished. He was so vexed at Alesius's being let out of Prison, while he was on a Journey, that he wanted by all means to send him thither again, without suffering him to finish a Mass, which he had begun. But at last the Intreaties of the Canons softened him; he waited 'till the end of the Mass, to remand him back to Prison. Now, as they knew he would be confined again in the Dungeon the next Day, they advised the Prisoner to make his escape in the Night, and to leave Scotland. He followed this Advice, and went into Germany, in the Year 1532 (5).

[C] He maintained the Doctrine of George Major, concerning the Necessity of good Works. The Title of his Book is, De necessitate & merito bonorum operum disputatio proposita in celebri Academia Lipsica, ad xxix diem Novemb. 1560. This Dispute is the fifth inter Anti-Tapparianas; and thus we have an Anti to add to Mr Bailler's Collection. Upon this Occasion, I shall set down the Titles of his principal Works. Commentarii in Evangelium Joannis, & in utramque Epistolam

(c) Jacobus Thomasi in Oratione de Joh. Alezio.

countenanced there by Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, by Latimer, and by Thomas Cromwell, who was at time in great Credit with the King; and he taught publickly. The Fall of these Favourites obliged him to return into Germany, where the Elector of Brandenburg made him Professor of Divinity, at Francfort on the Oder, in the Year 1540. Aleſius had a Dispute, there, two Years after, upon the Question, Whether the Magistrate may and ought to puniſh Fornication [D]. He held the Affirmative,

Epistolam ad Timotheum. Expoſitio in Pſalmos Davidis. De juſtificatione, contra Oſiandrum. De ſancta Trinitate, cum conſultatione erroris Valentini Gentilis. Reſponſio ad 32 articulos Theologorum Lovaniensium, &c.

[D] He had a Dispute — upon the question, whether the Magistrate may and ought to puniſh Fornication.] This Dispute did not turn upon Adultery, but on ſimple Fornication: for though the Punishment of Adultery is as rare, as the Crime is frequent, yet it is accounted lawſul among Chriſtian Doctors. So that Aleſius had only an Antagoniſt to oppoſe, who maintained againſt him, that the Magiſtrate neither can, nor ought, to puniſh Fornication. The final Decision of this Dispute was put off; and it is very probable, that Aleſius, being angry at this Delay, would live no longer among People, who appeared ſuch Favourers of the Impunity of Fornication. “Cum A. 1542, ſays Thomavius (6), inter ipſam & alium quandam “exorta eſſet controverſia de quaſtione, poſſit ne ac “debeat Magiſtratus Politicus ſcortationem punire? “veramque ſententiam, hoc eſt affirmantem, ac Philippi quoque Melancthonis calculo approbatam”, defendente Aleſio, nihilominus huius diſputationis “decilio juberetur diffiri: offenſus, ut apparet, hac bonæ cauſæ procaſtinatione Aleſius, non expectato “Principis adventu, diſceſſit.” Such an indignation did not ill become a Profeſſor of Divinity, who had ſeen the riſe of the Reformation, and who would naturally wiſh that he might not live to ſee Morality return to it's former Relaxation. Nothing could reſpect greater Honour upon the Proteſtant Religion, than the Severity of it's Maxims, in relation to Chſtity; for the Obſervation of theſe Maxims is the moſt difficult Victory we can obtain over Nature, and that which beſt ſhews our Dependence upon God, by the reciprocal Ties of his Protection and Love. It was, therefore, matter of great Scandal, that, in the Year 1542, a Proteſtant Divine, who maintained, that Magiſtrates may, and ought to, puniſh Fornication, ſhould meet with Oppoſition, and, in ſome meaſure, ſink under it. At preſent, as we are accuſtomed to a Toleration of this Crime, ſcarce any one is offended at it. A very honeſt Man aſſured me, lately, that the Magiſtrates of Straſburg have ſuch an Indulgence for a Girl, who ſuffers herſelf to be got with Child, that, provided ſhe pays the Fine, at which this kind of Fault is taxed, they reſtore her to her former Character, and inflict Penalties on thoſe, who dare, in the leaſt, to reproach her for the future. This is, doubtleſs, a more ſingular Privilege, than that of reſtoring, by Patent, ſuch Families as have derogated from their Nobility; and if I may be allowed to laugh upon ſo ſerious an Occaſion, I would ſay, that the Magiſtrates of Straſburg ought to have ſtipulated the Preſervation of this Privilege, when they capitulated with France, and when, after the Peace of Ryſwick, they demanded a Renewal of their Capitulation (7). I am aware, that they do not pretend, by this Prerogative, to overthrow the Truth of that ancient and undeniable Axiom.

— Nulla reparabilis arte
Læſa Pudicitia eſt, deperit illa ſemel.

No Art can Modeſty, when loſt, reſtore,
Once forfeited, 'tis ne'er recover'd more.

They do not pretend, phyſically ſpeaking, to reſtore a loſt Maiden-head; this would be to oppoſe the true Senſe of the Axiom: but, morally ſpeaking, they pretend to reſtore it; ſince they patronize the Reputation of a lewd Girl, and ſecure her from Reproach; inſomuch that ſhe may carry her Head as lofty as an honeſt Woman. Nay, 'tis ſaid, that the Efficacy of their Sentence is ſuch, that Women, who have had Children, and who, by paying their Fine, have renewed their Reputation, meet with Huſbands as eaſily, and almoſt as advantageouſly, as if they had not committed the Fault. But I would rather aſcribe this to the weakneſs of the Men, who marry them, than to their Perſuaſion of the Efficacy of the Sentence (8). However, we may apply to thoſe, who ſuppoſe that the Payment of a Fine makes amends for Crimes of this Nature, what was ſaid to thoſe, who fancied that a little fair Water could waſh away the Stain of Murder.

Ah! nimium faciles, qui triſtia crimina cædis
Flumineæ tolli poſſe putatis aqua (9).

Fools! on external Sprinklings Streſs to lay,
And think that they can waſh the Stains of Guilt away.

The ſame honeſt Man aſſured me, that what he knew for certain of the Cuſtoms of Straſburg; he had been informed was praſticed in ſome other Parts of Germany. Such Laws would have made the Divine, whoſe Article I am writing, very angry; for this is ſo far from puniſhing Fornication, that it is in ſome degree to reward it, ſince the Advantage of appearing every where without fear of Reproach, is a Benefit, which greatly exceeds the Damage ſuſtained by the Payment of the Fine, which ſometimes is not one half of the Money, which is got by Proſtitution.

I have heard ſome very judicious Perſons ſay, that the Practice of a great many Countries is rather a Reward, than a Punishment, of Fornication. This Practice requires, that whoever owns himſelf to be the Father of a Baſtard, ſhall be condemned to keep it, and to give the Mother a Sum of Money. An Order for the Maintenance of the Child cannot paſs for a Punishment; ſince the Law of Nature plainly lays this Obligation on every Man. Nothing therefore but the Money, which is paid to the Girl, can be called a Punishment; but, beſides that it is a very light Punishment to the Father, it is, properly ſpeaking, a Reward to the Mother. “Now it is very “ſtrange, ſays theſe Gentlemen, that Chriſtian Tribunals ſhould decree Rewards to Women for loſing their Honour, and ſcandalizing the Public.” Some one replied, that the Loſs they ſuffered, and which rendered it more difficult for them to get a Huſband, required ſome Amends, as an Act of Juſtice. “No, answered they, it is not an Act of Juſtice, but meer Favour and Grace: Juſtice does “not require, that thoſe who ſuffer by a voluntary “Transgreſſion of the Laws of God, and of Human Honour, ſhould be indemnified. And, if the Sovereign will beſtow Favours, he ought to make choice of more worthy Objects. Would a Man “be obliged to reward a Girl, who, in committing “a Robbery for his Sake, or through his Inſtigation, ſhould loſe an Arm or a Leg? The Judge “would be ſo far from decreeing her any Reparation for the Loſs ſhe ſuſtained, that he would condemn her to a corporal Punishment. The ſame “would happen in all puniſhable Caſes, wherein “ſhe ſhould loſe a Limb, in executing her Lover's “Counſels. Fornication alone is excepted out of this “Rule: Let us call it then the common Offence, and “the privileged Caſe, Words ſeparately appropriated to other things (10), and about which a Book “was publiſhed at Paris, in the Year 1611 (11).” Upon this ſome one alledged, that the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, being tired with the Complaints of ſo many Servant Maids, who accuſed their young Maſters of having got them with Child, had made a Law, that, for the future, theſe ſort of Creatures ſhould be paid but twenty five Florins; for which they ſhould be obliged to keep the Child; that they thought by this means to lay a reſtraint upon Lewdneſs: for they were ſenſible that the Profit, which accrued to theſe Girls from their ill Conduct, induced them either to make Advances, or to yield to the firſt Sollicitation; and that, in a Word, their Lewdneſs ought to be deprived of all Hopes of Gain, and not encouraged by the Expectation of what the

(8) I have been aſſured, that they themſelves make a jeſt of it, and ſay, that the kind of Injury carries nothing off the Punishment; imitating thoſe, who rally themſelves to weaken the Rallies of others. See the beginning of the Remark (B) of the Article AGESII.

(9) Ovidius Faſtor. lib. 2. ver. 45.

(10) They call a common Offence the Crimes of an Eccleſiaſtic, which are judged by the Tribunals of the Church; and a privileged Caſe the Crimes of an Eccleſiaſtic, which come under Cognizance of Secular Judges.

(11) Written by Benigne Milletot, Counſeller in the Parliament of Dijon.

(6) Thomavius ubi ſupra, F. 3. 318.

• In Epistolâ Reſponſoria ad Academiam Franconordianam; ſee Part. 1. Conſil. Theol. Phil. Melancthon. P. 523.

† See Phil. Melancthon Epist. ad C. mer. pag. 413. 414.

(7) See the Mémoire Historique of June, 1708.

tive, with Melanthion. I cannot tell, whether he took it ill, that the Decision of this Dispute was delay'd; and whether this Discontent was the occasion of his leaving Frankfort with so much Precipitation; but it is certain, that the Court of Brandenburg complained of him, and that they wrote to the University of Wittemburgh to have him punished. The Affection he had for Melanthion made People believe, that he was retired to Wittemburgh [E]; but he chose rather to go to Leipsic, where he refused, in 1543, a Professorship in the University, which Albert, Duke of Prussia, designed to erect at Konigsberg, and which was erected there the following Year. It is not certain, whether he had a Professorship in the University of Leipsic at that time; or whether they only gave him Hopes of the Divinity-Chair, which he afterwards enjoy'd till his Death, which happened on the seventeenth of March 1565 [F]. He was miraculously preserved from Death in his Youth [G]. The Esteem and Authority he possessed appear from the great Number of Conferences, at which he assisted [H]. He married an English Woman, by whom he had two Daughters, and a Son.

Courts should think proper to adjudge them. To this it was answered, that it is not certain, that such Laws have been made at Amsterdam, tho' the Fame of them was spread over other Towns of that Country. Whether it be true or false, it is very certain, that this proves, that People are not ignorant, that the common Conduct of the Courts of Judicature is too favourable to Fornication, and that it encourages young Women to Debauchery, rather than lays a Restraint upon their Modesty. And this is plain from hence, that Sovereigns, in punishing Transgressors of the Decalogue, are not directed by the Sinfulness of the Action, but by the temporal Prejudice, which the State receives from it. Hence it is that they punish Robbers and Murderers; but, because Fornication seems more useful than prejudicial to the temporal Good of the State, they connive at it, and behave in such a manner, as to make People think, that they are not displeased with having their Towns peopled per fas & nefas. If they laid the Law of God to Heart in this Point, they would increase the Fear of Infamy, instead of removing it; they would impose large Fines, to be paid, not to the Girls, who transgress, but to Hospitals; they would brand with Disgrace both the Tempter, and her, who could not resist the Temptation; and, because Infamy is not sufficient among Persons of mean Birth to stop a certain Coquetry, which animates the Tempter, which prevents him, and assures him of Victory with the utmost ease, they would inflict a more sensible Punishment, for which they could not fail of finding the proper Methods.

Ecclesiastical Discipline is very near fallen into the same Relaxation. It is but few Years (12) since a young Gentleman's Tutor made his Addressee, in a Town of ----- to a young Coquet; and soon obtained what he desired of her. As soon as her Relations perceived that she was with Child, they endeavoured to marry her to our Spark. He refused it; for, besides that the easiness of his Conquest was no great Inducement to him to think of marrying her, he did not believe himself to be the only Person, who had a Finger in the Pye, or that the Child was more his own Manufacture than another's. The only Method of obliging him to take her to Wife, was to threaten him, that, if he did not marry her, he should lose the Benefice he had in England. He married her, and thereby preserved his Benefice. Such was the Reward of Coquetry; a Coquetry, which had been carried to the most scandalous Excesses. What would the ancient Fathers say, if they were to return into the World? they might well cry out, calling their Eyes on the Face of the Church, O domus antiqua, quam dispartì dominaris domino! It is the Fate of all Religions, as well as all Politic Bodies, to be the worse for Age. Men, indeed, are more corrupt in their Youth, than in an advanced Age. But it is quite otherwise with Republics. There is nothing like new Laws (13). Laws are like Bread and Eggs, pan d' un di, ovo d' un bora. — Bread for a Day, an Egg for an Hour. The flourishing State of a Code, (I mean the Practice and Observation of the Laws) is That of Infancy. See the Complaint of a Poet, who had described some Abuses of Augustus's Age. It resembles that of Jesus Christ, from the beginning it was not so (14).

Not so, at first, great Romulus prescribed;
Severe the Laws, when Cato was our Guide.
With better Principles our Fathers liv'd,
And juster Maxims were, of old, receiv'd.

In this respect, Sects and Communities, &c. resemble MAN, who is innocent only in the Cradle, and a Year or two after. Let us observe, that there are some Protestant Countries (16), where they still use some Severity against Fornication, both with respect to Women and Men. But I am sure that our Alexander Alefius would require something farther still. What would he say of other Countries?

I must farther observe, that the Courts, which adjudge a Pecuniary Profit to loose Women, or which condemn them to marry those, who debauched them, do it to avoid many Inconveniencies: but they increase thereby the Disorders of Impurity; for every Sentence they pronounce of this kind is a real Advantage to one naughty Woman, and a Motive of Hope to twenty more. Every Girl, who gets a Husband this way, is an Encouragement to others to attempt the same Methods. This abuse has been perceived in France: The new Laws are not so favourable there, as the old ones were, to those Ladies, who make too great an Advantage of the Privileges of Marriage. It is a Sacrament, which has a retroactive Virtue, and which, like that of Penance, is a Plank after Shipwreck. It makes one enter again into the Port of Honour; it repairs old Breaches; it legitimates Children unlawfully begotten (17): To say nothing of the thick Veil, with which it covers new Breaches, current Faults, and daily Offences.

[E] The Affection, which he had for Melanthion, made People believe he was retired to Wittemburgh. Melanthion, in his Two hundred and ninetieth Letter, expresses some uncertainty, whether Alefius did not doubt of his Friendship. In his Two hundred eighty eighth Letter, he declares, that he observed in him certain Whims and Starts of Temper, αεγχιλας & παρορμητικὸν ὄρεμα.

[F] His Death happened on the seventeenth of March 1565. The Calendar of Peter Eberus notes, that Alefius died on the eighteenth of March, 1565, being Seventy five Years of Age: the first Fault is very small, since it is but of one Day; but the second is of ten Years, and therefore more considerable. Alefius himself wrote, in the Register of the University of Leipsic, that he was born in the Year 1500. Bucholcerus (18), and Rensnerus (19), give him as long a Life as Paul Eberus. This whole Remark is taken out of Thomasmus Bucholcerus might have been reprimanded for another thing, viz. for saying that Alefius lived and taught in Germany, after his coming to Wittemburgh; that is to say, after the Year 1533.

[G] He was miraculously preserved from Death in his Youth. He says, in one of his Books (20), that he often recollects (but that the Thought kills his very Blood), that as he was tumbling towards a Precipice, on the Top of a very high Mountain, he felt himself transported to another Place, without knowing how, or by whom; which he attributes to the Faith of his Relations, and not to the small Papers, which he carried about him, containing some Verses of St John's Gospel, according to the Custom of Children in those Times.

[H] The great Number of Conferences, at which he assisted. In the Year 1555, when those of Nuremberg desired Melanthion to come and compose the Discussions

(16) Geneva, and more still in the Canton of Bern.

(17) See Remmark [A] of the Article ARIOSTA.

(18) Chronol. p. 613.

(19) Isaagor. Hist. p. 635.

(20) Epistola dedicat. in Com. n. r. in 'Ann. m. S. e. l. k. w. e. Prelat. in altern. ad Timotheum, ap. d. Jacobum Thomasmus, in Orat. de Aleo, p. 325.

(92) I write this in 1698.

(13) See the beginning of the Remark [M] of the Article NE-STORIUS.

(14) Matth. x. 3.

(15) Horat. Od. 15. lib. 2.

Præscriptum, & intonsi Catonis Auspiciis, veterumque norma (15).

a Son. He had but one Daughter living, when he died. I have extracted this from a Speech of James Thomafius, Profeflor at Leipfic, in the Year 1683, in 800. His whole Account is accompanied with Citations. I did not think my felf obliged to copy them: They, who would apply to the Originals, will eafily meet with the Speech, which points them out.

- (21) Came-rarius, in vita Melanthonis.
Thomafius ubi fupra
pag. 321.
(22) Beza in Iconibus.
(23) Came-rarius, ubi
fupra, ibid.
- Diffentions, which the Difciples of Andrew Ofsander caufed in their City (21), he brought Alefius along with him, who performed his Part very well in the Difputes they engaged in (22). Melanthion knew him to be very capable of this; he had had him for his Affiftant in 1554, in the Conference of Neumburg, which was held to appeale the Theological Troubles of Pruffia. Camerarius praifes Alefius very much on this Account. "Alexander Alefius, patria Scotus, "valde carus Philippo Melanthoni, rei Theologicæ "intelligentiffimus, & artifex excellens congruentium "difputationum, & vir dignitate atque doctrina ex- "quifita præftans (23). — Alexander Alefius, a "Scotch Man, greatly in Favour with Philip Melan- "thion, thoroughly verfed in Divinity, who had an excel"lent Talent at Difputation, and famous for his extra"ordinary Merit and Learning." He had obferved in another Place, that Grancicell, who prefided in the Conference of Worms, in the Name of Charles V., in 1541, would not let Alefius fpeak, whom the Elector of Brandenburg had fent thither. "Qui qui-

"dem & paratus erat & cupidus confictus, fed huic
"obftitit iuffum præfidis, qui & Alefium ad pugnam
"instructum fciret, & talem adminiftrationem rei vi-
"ciosam effe animadverteret. — Wro was both "ready and eager to engage; but was prevented by "Order of the Prefident, who knew that Alefius was "come prepared for the Combat, and obferved, that
"fuch a Management of the Affair would be wrong."

ALEXANDER AB ALEXANDRO [A], a Neapolitan Civilian of great Learning, flourished about the end of the XVth Century, and beginning of the XVth [B]. He applied himself to the Profession of the Law with ardor, first at Naples, and afterwards at Rome (a); but he spent all the Time he could steal from the Fatigues of Pleading, in the Study of polite Literature, and at last entirely quitted the Bar, to lead a more calm and agreeable Life with the Muses. The Reason he alledges for abandoning the Profession of an Advocate [C], was the Ignorance or Corruption of those who administered Justice; which inclined him rather to live a retired Life, than to take much Pains in studying the Civil Law, since his Labours would avail nothing against the Rashness of a corrupt Judge (b). He had seen many Examples of this Disorder at Rome, which he mentioned to Rapbael Volaterranus, who asked him the Reason of his Retreat. It is somewhat strange, that, among so many Men of Learning, who were his Contemporaries, or who wrote Elogies of the learned Men of those

- (7) Alexander ab Alex.
Genial. dier.
lib. 2. cap. 1.

- (8) Ibid. lib.
6. cap. 7.

- (1) Simon
Goulart did fo in his Translation of Philip de Comines.

- (2) Balzac's
Preface to his Socrate Clarcken.

- (3) To fpeak accurately befides have found, that Alexander was b'this Christian Name, and the Name of his Family.
We meet with the same in other Places: See Mullerus, in his Treatise De Scriptoribus Homonymis.

- (4) Alexander ab Alex.
Genial. dier.
lib. 2. c. 15.
fub fin. pag.
736.

- (5) Id. lib. 1.
cap. 1.

- (6) Id. lib. 6.
cap. 7.

[A] Alexander ab Alexandro.] I give him his Latin Name according to the Grammarians. They who translate it Alexander of Alexandria are mistaken (1). Our Author was of a Neapolitan Family of the Name of Alexander. It is pretended, that it had before produced some Illustrious Persons, as Moreri relates after Lorenzo Craffo. Every one knows Balzac's pleasant Reflexion. "Was there not, says he (2), "a Grammatico-Civilian in the Kingdom of Naples, "who assumed the Name of ALEXANDER AB "ALEXANDRO? Can any thing be more mag- "nificent and more glorious than to be twice an "Alexander, an Alexander by one's Name, and an "Alexander by one's Lordship (3)?"

[B] Flourished about the End of the XVth Century and beginning of the XVth.] My reason for saying this, is, that our Author, speaking of the Calamities of the Kingdom of Naples, carries them down to the Death of Frederic, the Son of Ferdinand I (4), that is, to the Year 1504. besides, he speaks of Jovianus Pontanus, as of a Person no longer in being (5). Now Jovianus Pontanus did not die before the Year 1505. This is what escaped those, who placed the Death of our Alexander in the Year 1494, in which Moreri gives them a much stronger Proof of his Ap- probation than of his Uncertainty.

[C] The Reason he alledges for abandoning the Profession of an Advocate.] To give the Author's Reason it's full Force, I must set it down in his own Words. "Quæ cum viderem, says he (6), patro- "nique contra vim potentiorum aut gratiam nihil "præfidii esse, nihil opis, frustra nos in legum con- "troverfiis & edicendis toto casuum varietatibus tam "peniculate editis tantum laboris & vigiliarum sus- "cipere, tantoque nos studio fatigari dicebam, cum "ad ignaviffimi impuriffimique cuiusque temeritatem, "qui juri dicendo præfideret, quem leges virum bon- "num esse volunt, non æquo jure fed ad gratiam " & libidinem judicia ferri, decretaque legum tanto "confilio edita convelli & labefactari viderem. — "When I saw these things, and that it was impos- "sible for the Advocates to support their Clients a- "gainst the Power and Favour of the Great, I said, "it was to no Purpose to take so much Pains, and "undergo so great a Fatigue, in studying the Law, "and thoroughly considering all it's Variety of Cases; "since I could not but observe, that the Issue of Suits

"depended not on the Justice of the Cause, but on "the Favour and Affection of a lazy and corrupt
"Judge, whom the Laws suppose to be a good and "upright Man; and that the judicial Decrees, so
"equitably contrived, were every Day broke in upon,
"and weakened." It was much better to quit the Bar, than to imitate the Practice of some Advocates, who, having lost many good Cases, undertake to defend the world. I have read not long ago, "That "one of the most famous Advocates of this Age,
"whom his Brethren asked, why he took upon him
"to plead bad Causes, answered them smiling, that "He did it, because he had lost a great many good "ones. This is a bad excuse, continues the Author
"an Advocate, who, having examined a Cause, "finds it unjustifiable, ought to leave it (7). I have met with another Passage in the Book of Alexander ab Alexandro, which shews the Integrity of his Heart (8).
One of his Friends, seeing, that he did not push his Fortune, advised him to make use of the Expedients, which had succeeded so well with such and such Persons, whom he named to him; who had been raised by Favour to Honours and Mitres, in spite of the Merit of their Competitors, and who had attained to Favour by unlawful Methods. Our Author was not ignorant of these Examples, and knew some that were worse; he had seen in his Youth a very honest Man, well versed in Latin and Greek, who, having struggled with an extreme Poverty, while he relied only on his Virtue and Learning, resolved to try another way: He engaged in such villanous Arts, as are improper to be mentioned, and in a little while he became Rich and Powerful, and was possessed of good Preferences. "Eo vesaniae processit, ut, coactis
"inopia, obsecris & libero homine indignis artibus
"vacaret (quibus vero artibus non libet dicere, ita
"foedæ & pudendæ sunt) confectaque fuit sibi res
"ex sententia; namque haud multo post & sacerdotio
" & opibus auctus, affluens & beatus, tranquillissime
"vitam egit (9)." But these Examples did not flagger our Advocate: he chose rather to be contented with a mean Fortune, than to hazard his Conscience.
"Longe igitur multumque præstat, satiusque fuit
"ui ingenio meo, vacuumque his molestissimis modico
"civilique cultu contentum esse, neque in ambitionem non necessariam incurrere, quam bona animi, si
"qua sibi homo studio & labore paravit, ex turpi quæstu
"pessimo

- (7) Journal
des Savants,
1690. pag.
201.
Dutch Edit.

- (8) Alex. ab
Alex. lib. 6.
cap. 16.

- (9) Id. lib.

those times, scarce any one mentions him [D]. We should know but few Particulars of his Life, if he himself had not touched upon some of them in his Work (c). We find there, that he lodged in a House, at Rome, which was haunted with Spirits (d) ; so that here is an Evidence to be produced against the Incredible ; an Evidence, I say, who pretends to have seen, and who relates the surprizing Pranks of the Apparition, which disturbed the House. He tells us farther, that, when he was very young, he went to Philolpus's Lectures, who explained Cicero's Tusculan Questions at Rome (e). We may gather from the Twenty first Chapter of the fourth Book, that he was at Rome, when Nicolas Perottus, and Domitius Calderinus, read public Lectures there on Martial [E]. I do not find, that he speaks of the Office of Prothonotary of the Kingdom of Naples, which it is said he exercised with great Reputation (f). I cannot tell when he died, but I know that he was buried in the Monastery of the Olivetans (g). Every one blamed him for the Affectation he shewed, in not quoting the Authors, who furnished him with his Materials (b). Tiraquellus remedied this Omission by a learned Commentary, which was printed at Lyons in 1587 (i). It was reprinted at Leyden in two Volumes in 8vo, in the Year 1673, with the Notes of Dionysius Gotbtfredus, Christophor Colerus, and Nicolas Mercerus, on the same Text. I find by Gefner's Bibliotheca, that the Edition, published at Paris, of this Work of Alexander ab Alexandro, in the Year 1532, was more exact than the rest, and that Gerard Morrbius, who corrected it, had collated with the Originals the Passages, which the Author had taken from others. He must, then, have collated a great many ; for the six Books of the Dies Geniales are scarce any thing but a large Collection, relating to the History and Customs of the ancient Greeks and Romans ; besides several Grammatical Questions. Exactness is not in it's Perfection in this Work [F]. I do not believe, that the French Translation of this Work, by Bernard de la Roche (k), was ever printed. The Author of the Neapolitan Bibliotheca had no Success in the Article of our Alexander [G] ; but the Additions of Leonardo Nicodemo are very curious on this Subject [H].

(c) Leon. Albert. Descript. Ital. pag. 272.

(b) Barclaius, de reg. no. lib. 6. cap. c. Cyrenus de Syntal. cap. 21. n. 61. Volius de Hist. Lat. pag. 609. Meibomius de Vita Maccenatis, pag. 138.

(i) Ectud. Sennetia in Genialium dieum Alexandri Alexandri, lib. 6. in fol. It was reprinted at Frankfurt, in fol. in 1594.

(k) La Croix du Maine, pag. 46.

Alicatus

(10) Id. ib. " pessimo Exemplo scdere (10)." The Advice, which was given him, is much like this.

Aude aliquid brevibus Gyaris & carcere dignum,
Si vis esse aliquis. Probitas laudatur & alget (11).

Wouldst thou to Honours and Preferments climb?
Be bold in Mischiefs, dare some mighty Crime;
Which Dungeons, Death, or Banishment deserves,
For Virtue is but dry grass, and flowers.

DYDEN.

He dedicated his Book to the Duke of Attri. This Duke was very learned, as we shall observe under AQUAVIVA.

[D] Scarce any one mentions him.] Yet, if we may believe Morari, all the great Men of That Age, as Georgius Trapezuntius, Theodorus Gaza, Domitius Calderinus, Pontanus, &c. were his Friends and his Admirers. All that can be gathered from the Book itself of Alexander ab Alexandro, is, that, in his Youth, he heard the Lectures, which Philolpus read at Rome, who was then very old (12), and that he was entertained sometimes, together with some very learned Men, at the Houses of Jovian Pontanus (13), Hermolaus Barbarus (14), Sannazarus (15), Gabriel Altilius (16), &c. This is not a sufficient Warrant to affirm, that certain Persons admire certain Persons. See the following Remark.

[E] Was at Rome, when Nicolas Perottus, and Domitius Calderinus, read public Lectures there on Martial.] This is all that can be gathered from what he relates concerning Nicolas Perottus, and Domitius Calderinus: As for that great Intimacy, which Panzirrolus pretends there was between them (17), it must be looked for elsewhere, and I cannot tell whether it be possible to find any Proofs of it. I question not, but Panzirrolus trusted to his Memory for this Particular, without considering, that the Memory is a Mould, in which Objects change their Form very easily.

[F] Exactness is not in it's Perfection in this Work.] I chuse rather to alledge the Testimony of one of the Commentators, than to pass this Censure on my own Authority. Let us hear then what Nicolas Mercerus says. " Est profecto, mi Linoceri (18), verum quod aiunt. Fuit Alexander vir eruditus & multae lectionis: multa ad utilitatem publicam scripsit eleganter, multa tamen, ut hominum est infirmitas, minus accurate, vel memorie vitio, vel imprudentia lapsus. Quae lectoribus indicari magis interfuit. — The common Opinion, Friend Linocerus, is very true. " Alexander was a Man of Learning and great reading. He wrote many Things for public Use with Elegance; but in many things, such is human Infirmitas, he was deficient, for want either of Memory or Skill. It was highly proper to inform the Reader of this." I am not the only Person, who complains, that Editors of Books, cum notis Variorum, leave out the Epistles Dedicatory, and the Prefaces (19). They should do, as was done in the last Edition of Diogenes Laertius (20). If the same had been practised in that of Alexander ab Alexandro, I might have given a better account of this Author and his Book.

[G] The Author of the Neapolitan Bibliotheca had no Success in the Article of our Alexander.] He only refers his Readers to three or four other Books (21), and was ignorant, that Alexander Jurisconsultus Neapolitanus, Author of the four Dissertations, of which he gives the Title (22), is the same with Alexander ab Alexandro; inasmuch that he speaks twice of the same Man, without knowing that they are different Authors. The Title of the four Dissertations is as follows. " Alexandri Jurisconsulti Neapolitani Dissertationes quatuor de rebus admirandis, quae in Italia nuper contigere, id est, de somniis quae à viris spectatae fidei prodita sunt, inibique de ludibus Juniani Maii somniorum conjectoris: de umbrarum figuris & fallis imaginibus: de illusionibus malorum daemonum, qui diversis imaginibus homines deluserunt: de quibusdam ædibus, quae Romae infames sunt ob frequentissimos leumures, & terrificas imagines, quas author ipse singulis fere noctibus in Urbe expertus est: Romae, in 4to. Abique anno nec apud quem. — Alexander, the Neapolitan Civilian, his four Dissertations concerning the wonderful Things, which have lately happened in Italy, viz. of Dreams, related by Men of unquestionable Veracity, herein this of the Praises of Junianus Maius, Interpreter of Dreams: of the Shapes and deceitful Appearances of Spectres: of the Illusions of Evil Spirits, who deceive Men by various Appearances: of certain Houses at Rome, which are infamous on account of frequent Apparitions, and frightful Sightings, which the Author himself was every Night a Witness of at Rome, in 4to." They have neither set down the Printer's Name, nor the Year of the Impression. We shall see, in the following Remark, that these Pieces have been incorporated with the Dies Genialis.

[H] The Additions of Leonardo Nicodemo are very curious on this Subject.] He proves, that Alexander

(10) See Crenius, Chap. 1, of the first part of the Animalverities Philosophicæ & Historicae, and the Remark [R], of the Article M. A. R. O. T.

(20) That of Amstelredam, 1692, which contains most of the Prefaces, &c. of the foregoing Editions.

(21) Nicolo Toppi Biblioth. Neapolit. pag. 6.

(22) Id. ib. pag. 7.

(f) Panzirolus, Genialium dieum libri vi.

(d) Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 23.

(e) Eum ego adolescentulus sen. m. inter ceteros meos colui & observavi. Ibid. lib. 1. cap. 23.

(f) Panzirolus de clar. leg. interpret. lib. 2. cap. 122.

(11) Juven. Sat. 1. ver. 73.

(12) Alex. ab Alex. lib. 2. cap. 23.

(13) Id. ib. lib. 2. cap. 2. See also lib. 3. cap. 8.

(14) Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 2.

(15) Ibid. lib. 2. cap. 2.

(16) Ibid. lib. 5. cap. 2.

(17) Almondum familiars fuit: Panzirolus de claris legum Interpret. lib. 2. cap. 122.

(18) He, to whom I dedicated this N. 111.

226 ALEXANDER. ALEXIS. ALFENUS.

Alciatus believed, that ALEXANDER ab Alexandro was yet living, in the Year 1521. I shall give his own Words, because they contain his Opinion of this Writer [1].

ab Alexandro is the Author of the four Dissertations, because most of the Particulars they contain are to be met with in the Dies Geniales: For Example, that which relates to the Prailes of Junianus Maius, and the Interpretation of Dreams (23), is to be found in the eleventh Chapter of the first Book, where this Junianus is represented as one, who had daily a crowd of Dreamers attending him, whose Dreams he interpreted in a very intelligible manner, whereby many Persons avoided Death, or great Troubles. Read the Twenty third Chapter of the fifth Book (24), where you will find what concerns the Apparitions and Hobboblins, which haunted the Author's own House. We find the Title of an Edition in Folio, of the Dies Geniales in Nicodemo's Additions: I should take it for the first, if a Passage of Alciatus did not hinder me (25). The Title is this. "Alexandri de Alexandro " Dies Geniales. Ne quis opus excudat denuo infra

(23) Entitulata, Miracula de fornicatis apud nonnullos cognita & comperta, & que ipse ex-pertus fui.

(24) Leonardo Nico-demo, sive de miris Book, thro' mistake.

(25) *I quote
it in the Remark [1].*

(25) This Letter is dated from Rome, the 24th of June, 1522.

"septennium, sub diris imprecationibus Apostolica
"autoritate interdictum est. — Alexander ab Alex-
"andro, his Dies Geniales. It is ordered by Aposto"lical Authority, and upon pain of dreadful Anathemas,
"that no one reprint this Work, 'till seven Years are
"expired." There is at the end, "Romæ, in ædi-
"bus Jacobi Mazochii, Rom. Academiæ Bibliopolæ.
"Anno Virginæ partus 1522, Kalend. April. Pontif.
"S. D. N. de cujus nomine pontificali adhuc non "constat, anno primo. — At Rome, for James Ma-
"zochius, Bookseller to the Academy of Rome, in "the Year of Christ 1522, the Kalends of April, in "the first Year of the Pontificate of S. D. N. whose "pontifical Name is not yet known." Nicodemo men"tions a Fragment of a Letter of Jerome Niger (26),
"which is not very complimentary to the Neapolitani in ge"neral, or our Alexander in particular. "Quel libro
"d' Alessandro de gli Alessandri è intitolato Dies Ge"niales, à similitudine delle notti Attiche d' Aulo Gel-
"lio, è de' Saturnali di Macrobio, cose cavate di qua
"è di là. Ed in vero ha molto del Napoletano, con

"soportazione del Sannazaro parlando. Vendefi sei
"carlini, al parer mio troppo caro. — This Book
"of Alexander ab Alexandro is entitled, *Dies Ge"niales, in imitation of the Noctes Atticæ of Aulus
"Gellius, and the Saturnalia of Macrobius, which "are Collections from different Authors. In truth it "favours much of the Neapolitan, in speaking of San"nazarius with Patience. It is sold for six Carlini,
"a Price, in my Opinion, much too great." I shall "give an Article concerning Junianus Maius, the *Ar-
"temidorus* of his Age.*

[1] I shall give his own Words, because they con"tain his Opinion of this Writer.] I take them out of a "Letter, which he wrote from Milan, the sixth of "May, 1521, and which was printed in the Year 1699 (27). "Alexandri Jurisconsulti Neapolitani librum,
"quem ad nos misisti, diligenter legi. Vir est do-
"ctus & diligens, & non parum studiosos adjuvabit:
"suspitor tamen eum quandoque falli. — Si is
"aliqua tecum familiaritate junctus est, velim ab eo
"exquiras, ut Alpheni Jurisconsulti vetustissima scrip-
"ta, commentariisque Senatus consultorum, quæ vi-
"disse se, emisseque Romæ, ait, commodato det.
"Eorum autem mentionem facit capite quarto & sep-
"timo primi libri: suspitor enim nescio quid Partha-
"sianum, quem scis eos auctores plerumque adducere
"solitum, quos nunquam viderat. — I have care"fully perused the Book of Alexander the Neapolitan "Civilian, which you sent me. He is a learned and "industrious Writer, and not a little useful to the Stu"dious; but I suspect he is sometimes mistaken. —
"If you have any acquaintance with him, pray beg the "favour of him to lend you the ancient Works of "Alphenus the Civilian, and the Commentaries on
"the Senatus Consulta, which he says he saw, and "purchased, at Rome; he mentions them in the fourth "and seventh Chapters of his first Book: For I suspect
"him of imitating Parthianus, who, you know, was "wont to alledge Authors, whom he never saw."

(27) *Epist.
Gudli, Dec.
Pag. 91.*

ALEXANDER THE GREAT, King of Macedonia. Look for MACEDONIA.

ALEXANDER VII. Pope. Look for CHIGI.

ALEXANDER VIII. Pope. Look for OTTOBONI.

ALEXIS, a Piemontois. There is a Book of SECRETS under the Name of this Alexis. It was printed at Basil in 8vo, in the Year 1563, being translated from the Italian into Latin by Wecker (a). It was likewise translated into French, and printed several times with Additions. There is a Preface to it, wherein Signor Alexis informs the Public, that he was born of a Noble Family; that he applied himself to study from his Childhood; that he learned Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Chaldee, Arabic, and several other Languages; that, being particularly fond of the Secrets of Nature, he had collected as many of them as he could in his Fifty seven Years Travels; that he had piqued himself upon not communicating them to any one, but that, at the Age of Eighty two Years and seven Months, seeing a poor Man dead at Milan, whom he could have cured, if he had communicated one of his Nostrums to the Surgeon, he was touched with so great a Remorse of Conscience, that he nearly turned Hermit, and in this Solitude disposed his Recipes for Publication. The Hawkers carry them to Country-Fairs, with their other little Books, covered with blue Paper. It is true they have only the choice Remedies of Signor Alexis; the whole Collection would be too great a Volume for them.

(a) *Merck-
lin. in Lin-denio reno-vato, pag.
28.*

(a) *Aeron calls him Marcus, but it should be Servius, according to William Grotius,
Vit. Jurisf.
pag. 86. See Aulus Gellius, lib. 6.
cap. 5. & Pomponius,
in lib. 2.
D. de Orig.
Juris.*

ALFENUS VARUS (PUBLIUS) born at Cremona, first a Shoemaker, and afterwards a Disciple of the famous Civilian, Servius Sulpicius (a), and at last Consul, was a very learned Man in the Civil Law [A]. He was buried at the Public Expence. This is all that is said of him by one of the old Scholiasts upon Horace, in his

[A] A very learned Man in the Civil Law.] This "Passage of Amnianus Marcellianus against the Advo"cates of his Time; "Hi, ut altius videantur jura
"callere, Trebatium loquuntur, & Cascellium, &
"Alfenum, & Auruncorum Sicoranumque jamdiu le-
"ges ignotas (1). — These Men, that they may be "thought more deeply versed in the Science of the Law,

"are ever talking of Trebatius, Cascellius, and Alfenus,
"and the obsolete Laws of the Aurunci and Sicani." This Passage, I say, is sufficient to convince us of the great Authority of the Name of Alfenus, in matters of Law. Add to this the Testimonies alledged by Bertrand, in the first Book of his Civilians (2).

(2) *Pag. 56.
57. Edit.
Lugd. Bat.
1675.*

[B] On

(1) *Amm.
Marcell. lib.
3. cap. 4.
Pag. 594.*

his Notes on a Passage, which relates to our Alfenus [B], whose Consulship, they say, fell out in the Year of Rome 754 (b). I will not warrant this. Alfenus wrote Forty Books of Digests, which are mentioned in the Index of the Pandectæ, and some Books of Collections, Collectaneorum. Aulus Gellius cites both these Works; and, tho' he refutes what he quotes out of them, yet he represents the Author as a Man, who was a great Enquirer into Antiquities [C]. The Civilian Paulus wrote an Abridgment of Alfenus's Books (c). If it were true, that there was an Alfenus among the Counsellors of the Emperor Alexander Severus [D], who was a Disciple of Papi-nian, as some affirm from a very intricate Passage of Lampridius, he might be descended from the other; tho' it must be confessed that there were some Alfenus's different from the Disciple of Sulpitius. There was an Alfenus mentioned by Cicero in his Oration for Quintilius, and an Alfenus, General of the Army under Vitellius, and Prefect of the Prætorium, who did not behave like a Man of Courage, when his Party was overcome by That of Vespasian (d). Donatus, in the Life of Virgil, speaks of an Alfenus [E], who, with some others, exempted the Lands of that Poet from the Fate, to which those of the Neighbourhood were exposed, when, after the Defeat of Brutus, they were assigned to the Soldiers. Very learned Persons believe, that He, who did Virgil that kind Office, was the same Alfenus, who had been formerly a Shoemaker, and the same Alfenus, whom Catullus speaks of (e). This is attended with some Difficulty [F]. I see my Remarks, in which Moreri is sometimes shewn to be guilty of unpardonable Mistakes.

(b) See Crui-quius in Hor. Sat. 3. lib. 1.

(c) Guil. Grot. Vind. Juriscont. pag. 86.

(d) Tacit. Histor. lib. 2. cap. 29, 43. & lib. 3. cap. 36, 55, 61. & lib. 4. cap. 11.

(e) Dacier apud Horace Sat. 3. lib. 1.

[B] On a Passage, which relates to our Alfenus.
The Words of Horace deserve to be produc'd.

Alfenus vaser, omni
Abjecto instrumento æris, clausque taberna,
Sutor erat, sapiens operis sic optimus omnes
Est opifex, sic rex solus (3).

(3) Horat. Sat. 3. l. 1. ver. 130.

*Skillsful Alfenus, though he lost his Aul,
And threw away his Lest, and shut his Stall,
And broke his Threads, yet was a Cudler still;
Thus each Mechanic, if he has but skill,
Is wise, and only King.* CREECH.

[C] Aulus Gellius — though he refutes what he quotes out of them, yet represents him as a great Enquirer into Antiquities. This relates to the Signification of these Words, argentum purum putum, which were in the Treaty of Peace, concluded between the Republic of Rome, and that of Carthage. The Romans were to receive every Year a certain Tribute of Money, purum putum, that is of good Alloy. Moreri imagined, that the proper name of that Tribute was purum putum, which is a pleasant Conceit enough. Aulus Gellius rejects, not without reason, the Sense, which Alfenus gave to these Words (4); and, if we were to judge of this Civilian's Capacity from hence, he would soon lose his great Reputation. He believed that purum putum was formed from purus, as novicius and propicius are form'd from novus and propius, in order to give more Force to the Signification of the primitive Word. Aulus Gellius refutes him solidly, and shews that putum signifies That, from which all Superfluities are retrench'd. He does not cite the Book, which Moreri quotes, to wit, the fourth and thirtieth of the Digests, nor That, which Bertrand alledges, to wit, the thirtieth of the same Digests; but he cites the Thirty fourth. As for the other Work, which he cites, it is entituled, Conjectaneorum, in the Edition of Henry Stephens; but I find that Bertrand, and William Grotius, read it Collectaneorum. This last Title seems to agree better with the Passages of the Pandectæ, where Servius is cited upon the Testimony of Alfenus, Servius apud Alfenum notat, putat; but it would be wrong to prefer, upon this Account, the latter Title to That, which Henry Stephens preferred. Bertrand makes Aulus Gellius say what he does not, to wit, that the Work, entituled Collectanea, consisted of four Books. These are Aulus Gellius's Words: In libro digestorum trigesimo & quarto, conjectaneorum autem secundo, in fadere, inquit, &c (5). I do not question, but that, since Bertrand said, that Aulus Gellius quoted the thirtieth Book of the Digests, he believed that & quarto related to the following Words, and that, without taking notice of what follows, he concluded, that the fourth Book of the Collectanea had been cited; from whence, nevertheless, he had no reason to infer, that the Work contained but four Books, and that Aulus Gellius said so. Neither the critical Remarks on this Work of Bertrand, inserted in the Edition of Leyden, nor William Grotius, have taken notice of these small Mistakes. Aulus Gel-

(4) Aulus Gell. lib. 6. cap. 5.

(5) Id. lib.

lius speaks to the Advantage of Alfenus: "Alfenus Jurisconsultus, Servii Sulpitii Discipulus, Rerumque antiquarum non incuriosus (6). — Alfenus, the Civilian, Disciple of Servius Sulpitius, and a curious Enquirer into Antiquity."

(6) Lib. 6. cap. 5.

[D] But there was an ALFENUS among the Counsellors of the Emperor Alexander Severus. The Passage of Lampridius, as it is printed, is so erroneous in some respects, that nothing can be concluded from it, for the Existence of an Alfenus, in the Reign of Alexander Severus. See Cassiodorus on that Passage. However Moreri should not have cited Horace, nor Aulus Gellius, for his Alfenus, surnamed the younger, who lived, says he, in the Reign of Alexander Severus.

[E] Donatus — speaks of an ALFENUS. Moreri, giving an Article of this Person, pag. 170, calls him Alphenius Varus, a Roman Knight, and cites Donatus in vita Virgilii. But Donatus does not style him a Roman Knight; and, besides, in the best Editions (7), it is Alphenus, Varius, as two different Persons, and not Alphenius Varus, as one Person. It must, nevertheless, be confess'd, that these Verses of the ninth Eclogue of Virgil, ver. 26.

(7) That of Hackius at Leyden 1680.

Immo hæc, quæ Varo necdum perfecta canebat, Vare, tuum nomē (superet modo Mantua nobis, Mantua væ miseræ nimium vicina Cremonæ)
Cantantes sublime ferent ad sidera cygni;

Or what unfinished'd be to Varus read;
Thy Name, O Varus (if the kinder Powers
Preserve our Plains, and shield the Mantuan Towers, Obnoxious by Cremona's neighbouring Crime)
The Wings of Swans, and stronger-pinion'd Rhyme, Shall raise aloft, and soaring bear above,
Th' immortal Gift of Gratitude to Jove.

DRYDEN.

are applied, by the Grammarian Servius, to an Alfenus Varus, who was sent by Augustus to command beyond the Po, after Pollio had lost that Government. The same Grammarian observes, that some Persons have applied these other Verses of Virgil to the Civilian Alfenus Varus, Successor of Servius Sulpitius;

Nam neque adhuc Varo videor, nec dicere Cinna
Digna, sed argutos inter strepere anser olens (8).

(8) Virgil. Eclog. 9. ver. 35.

I nor to Cinna's Ears, nor Varus dare aspire,
But gabble, like a Goose, amidst the Swan-like Quire.

DRYDEN.

The reason was, because Alphenus Varus the Civilian was something of a Poet. Servius confutes them, by shewing, that this Elogy ought to be understood of the Poet Varius, whom Horace praised so much.

[F] This is attended with some Difficulty. A Person, who applies himself with such Ardour to the Civil Law, that, by his great Progress, he notonly wipes off the Disgrace, arising from the Mechanic Trade, which

he

he had exercised in his Native Country, but succeeds likewise the greatest Civilian at that time in the Republic of Rome, must probably be too sedate, to join with Catullus, and other Sparks of the same Stamp, in their Debauchery. But the Alfennus, of whom Catullus speaks, was of this Knot of Rakes.

(9) Catull.
Epig. 31.
Mr. Dacier upon Horace,
Sat. 3. lib. 1.
cites the 27th Epigram of Catullus.

Alphene immemor, & unanims false fodalibus (9)!

Forgetful Alphenus, and false to your unanimous Companions!

He introduced Catullus to his own Whore:

Varus me meus ad fuos Amores
Visum duxerat & fore otiosum,
Scortillum, ut mihi tum repente visum est,
Non illepidum, nec invenustum (10).

(10) Catull.
Epig. 10.

Varus carried me Home from the Forum, being disengaged, to see his Mistress; who appeared to me, upon a sudden View, a smart, pretty, Wench.

And therefore it is not very likely, that he was the Disciple of Sulpitius. Muretus was censured for saying, that Varus, who carried Catullus to his Mistress, was Quintilius Varus; and the Censure was grounded on this, that there were at least Fifty seven Years between the Defeat of the three Legions of Varus, and the Visit, which Catullus speaks of. I make use of this Reason (11). There must be fifty Years, more or less, between this Visit, and the Consulship of Alfennus (12), and therefore it is very unlikely, that the Shoemaker of Cremona, if he was Consul in the Year of Rome 754, had such an intimate Acquaintance with Catullus fifty Years before: For a Country Shoemaker, who leaves his Trade; in order to study in the Capital City, can be no Boy; when he is intimate with Persons of Distinction. Add to this, that he, who did Virgil that good Office, commanded beyond the Pa forty Years before the Consulship in Question (13). So that there is reason to doubt, whether Alfennus, who was Consul in the Year of Rome 754, be the same with Virgil's Benefactor: For it is seldom that a Man attains to great Dignities, when the usual time of arriving at them has been long over. This was the Case of those, who, after a Government of a Province, were forty Years without obtaining the Consular Dignity.

(11) See
in Catull.
Epig. 10.

(12) It is placed in the 754th Year of Rome.

(13) Servius
in Ecl. 9.
ver. 29.

ALFONSUS. See the Kings of this Name under That of their respective Kingdoms.

ALYPIUS, of Antioch, lived in the Reign of Julian the Apostate. He had already commanded in England, when That Prince took it into his Head to rebuild the Temple of Jerusalem, and appointed him Overseer of the Work. Alypius promoted the Design with great Application, and was assisted in it by the Governor of the Province (a). Yet he was obliged to desist from the Undertaking; the Flames, which issued out of the Earth, rendring the Place inaccessible. Eight Years after, he found himself involved in a terrible Persecution, which destroyed a great number of People, and which was first raised against those, who had made use of Magic to discover the Successor of Valens. When the Commissioners for informing against the Guilty had set the Affair a-going, nothing was to be seen but accused Persons, who were immediately Condemned and Punished. Alypius, who had betaken himself to a private Life, in order to enjoy the Pleasures of Quiet, was attacked by the Informers, and accused of being a Poisoner (b). He was banished, and all his Estate confiscated. His Son Hierocles, being condemned to Death on the same Accusation, was happily saved, as he was led to the Place of Execution (c). The News of this fortunate Event mitigated Alypius's Affliction in his Exile. It is very probable, that the Author of the Geographical Piece, which pleased Julian the Apostate very much, is the same with our Alypius [A]; but I do not believe, that this Work is a Description of the Old World, which James Godfrey translated out of Greek into Latin [B]. I know nothing of one ALYPIUS, who wrote a Treatise of Music, entitled Εισαγωγὴ μουσική, Introductio Musica, mentioned by Cassiodorus; Maurus

was

(a) See Re- mark [A].

(b) See Re- mark [A].

(c) See the manner how,
in the Article
HIERO-CLES.

(1) See Re- mark [B].

(2) Athen.
Marcell. lib.
25. cap. 1.
pag. 350. ad
not. 363.

[A] The Author of the Geographical Piece, which pleased Julian the Apostate, is the same with our Alypius. This Author lived in the Reign of Julian the Apostate. We have two Letters, which that Prince wrote to him, which testify, that Alypius was the Brother of Cæsarius, and that he exercised a considerable Employ (1). This last Character agrees admirably well with Alypius of Antioch, who, after having been Deputy-Governor in England, was sent to Judea to superintend the Building of the Temple. Ammianus Marcellinus informs us of these Particulars. "Ambitiosum quondam apud Hierosolymam templum — instaurare sumptibus cogitabat immodicus: Negotiumque maturandum Alypio dederat Antiocheni, qui olim Britannias curaverat pro praefectis. Cum itaque rei idem fortiter instaret Alypius, juvaretque provinciae rector, metuendi globi flammarum prope fundamenta crebris assultibus erumpentes fecere locum, exultis aliquoties operantibus, inaccessum (2). — He resolved to rebuild the magnificent Temple, which was formerly at Jerusalem, at an immense Expence, and committed the Dispatch of the Work to Alypius of Antioch, who had formerly commanded in Britain under the Praefect. "But, as Alypius was carrying on the Work with great Expedition, and was assisted in it by the Governor of the Province, there issued forth dreadful Balls of Fire, with frequent Eruptions, near the Foundations, which sometimes burnt the Workmen, and rendered the Place inaccessible." Thus he speaks in the Twenty ninth Book: "Ecce

"autem Alypius quoque, ex Vicario Britanniarum, placiditatis homo jocundus, post otiosum & repotitum vitam (quoniam huc ulque injustitia tederat manus) in squalore maximo volutatus, ut veneficii reus, citatus est cum Hierocle filio (3). — Alypius too, formerly Deputy-Governor of Britain, a Man of a pleasant and easy Temper, after a Life of Ease and Retirement (for the Hand of Injustice reached even thither) was treated as the greatest Criminal, and arraigned for poisoning, with his Son Hierocles."

[B] I do not believe, that this Work is the Description of the old World, which James Godfrey translated out of Greek into Latin. This Description is an anonymous Work, composed in the Reign of the Emperors Constantius and Constant. There was an ancient and very barbarous Latin Translation of it, which Salmafius communicated to the learned James Godfrey, who caused it to be printed, with the Greek Text, and with a new Translation, accompanied with Notes (4). Vossius seems to believe, that the Author of this Description is the same Alypius, who sent a Geographical Treatise to Julian the Apostate; but if so, continues he, it must be said, according to the Remark of James Godfrey, that Alypius composed it before he was commanded in England, for there is nothing said of that Island in it, but on the Credit of others: "Britannia Provincia, scut qui fuerunt narrant, valde maxima." As for me, I should readily conclude from this Passage, that Alypius did not write this Description; and this is my Reason. It was long, since his having been Lieutenant in England, when

(3) M. H.
2. cap. 1.
pag. 556. ad
ann. 371.

(4) Vossius
de Scient.
Math. pag.
243.

was the first who published it in Greek (d). Mr Hofman would have done better to have omitted this Article entirely [C].

Ed. Vindob.
in Secret.
Mss. p. 2
90

Julian gave him a Commission to rebuild the Temple of Jerusalem. "Negotiumque maturandum Alypio dederat Antiocheni, qui OLIM Britannia curaverat pro Praefectis (5). — He committed the Dispatch of the Work to Alypius of Antioch, who had formerly commanded in Britain under the Prefect." He sent his Geography to the Emperor, while he commanded under him in some Province. He was therefore able to speak of England, as an Eye-witness. He is not, then, the Author of the Description of the old World, in which there is nothing said of that Island, but on the Credit of others, who had travelled thither. Let no one object to me, that he wrote two Books, the one before he went into England, the other under Julian the Apostate, and that the first is the Description, published by Godfrey; for it is very probable, that, if he was Author of that Description, he would have inserted it in the Work, which he sent to Julian, and thus the first Work would have been disregarded. It would have been lost, then, and the Book, which Godfrey translated and adorned with Notes, would not be extant at this present Time. We understand from Julian, that Alypius was a Poet: Εἶπε δὲ, ὡς he (6), ὅτι τὸ διαγεγεμενὸν τὸ ἄριστον βίβλιον, ὃ καλεῖται ὡς αὐτὸς τὸν ἱερὸν λόγον. — It contains likewise much better Descriptions than the former; besides which you have given it a Poetical Turn by the Iambics, which you have added to it. Afterwards he approves of the manner, in which Alypius treated the People, and praises him for using sometimes Mildness, and sometimes great Resolution. Ἰστέον δὲ τὸ διοικῆσαι τὴν αἰσχυρῶς, ὅτι δεξιότητι αἰμα καὶ ἀπαλὸς ἀπαστὰ περὶ τὸν αἰσχυρῶς, οὐκ ἀνέχεται. μέλει δὲ ἀπὸ τῆς αἰσχυρῶς ἀνδρείᾳ καὶ ἰσχύι, καὶ τῇ αἰσχυρῶς αἰσχυρῶς καὶ οὐκ ἀνέχεται, τὴν δὲ τὸν αἰσχυρῶς ἀπαστὰν αἰσχυρῶς ἀπαστὰν αἰσχυρῶς, καὶ μάλιστα ἐπὶ οὐκ ἀνέχεται ἑσθλῶς. — As to your Conduct in Affairs of Government, I am pleased to find, that you study to transact every thing with Assiduity and Humanity; for it requires no small Ability and Virtue so to temper Lenity and Moderation with Vigor and Resolution, as to use the former towards good Men, and exert the latter for the Punishment of the bad.

[C] Mr Hofman would have done better to have omitted this Article entirely. I. In the first Place, he writes Alypius. II. He says, that Alypius of Antioch is Author of the Description of the old World. III. That this Description was published in Latin, in the Reign of Constantius and Constant. IV. That there was another Alypius of Antioch, who wrote a Treatise of Geography. V. That Ammianus Marcellinus asserts This. This is all Mr Hofman's Account; in which there are many Faults of Omission; but the work is, the little he has said is quite full of Faults of Commission.

ALYPIUS, a Philosopher of Alexandria, cotemporary with Jamblicus, and one of the subtlest Logicians of his Time, was as little as a Dwarf; but his Wit made up for this Imperfection. He had many Disciples, to whom he gave only verbal Instructions, without dictating any Thing to them. Which was the reason why they left him, to follow Jamblicus, under whom they might improve both by Lectures and Writings. Jamblicus, having had some Conversation with our Alypius, admired his Judgment, and his Genius; and even composed his Life, wherein he praised his Virtue, and the firmness of his Soul. Alypius died, very old, in the City of Alexandria (a).

(a) Baronius
in Vita
Jamblicus

ALYPIUS, Bishop of Tagasta, where he was born (a), was one of St Austin's good Friends. He was baptized, with him, at Milan, in the Year 388. Five Years after, he travelled into Palestine, and if, on the one hand, the great Character, he gave St Jerom of St Austin, served to cement the Friendship of those Fathers, it seems, on the other hand that, at his return into Africa, he cooled St Austin's Affection. This is ascribed to his relating the scandalous things, which St Jerom's Adversaries spoke of him at Jerusalem. Alypius was not promoted to the Bishoprick of Tagasta, till the Year 394, a Year after his Travels into Palestine. He assisted at the Council of Carthage, in the Year 403, in which an Attempt was made to bring over the Donatists to the Unity of the Church. The Benefactions, which Pinianus bestowed on the Church of Tagasta, when he went thither in the Year 409, with the two Melania's, and Albina his Mother-in-law, exposed Alypius to Calumny, as if, by his fine Discourse and Dexterity, he had extorted too much from these good and charitable Persons. The Inhabitants of Hippo murmured furiously against him, because they looked upon him as the cause of their loosing the Prey, which they thought they had in their Hands. They had obliged Pinianus, even against his Will, to promise them that he would embrace the Priesthood in their City; His great Estate induced them to this Violence; but, the next Day, he left Hippo, and returned to Tagasta, and did not think himself obliged by such a forced Promise as his was. Alypius was one of the seven Catholic Prelates, who disputed, in 411, with seven Donatist Bishops, in the famous Conference of Carthage. In 419, he was deputed to Honorius, by the Church of Africa. Pope Boniface received him with many Marks of Friendship, and employed him to transmit to St Austin some artful Letters, which the Pelagians dispersed in the Churches. St Austin, the best Writer of his Time, was desirous to refute them. He undertook it, and exerted all his Skill in it (b); but Alypius confuted this Heresy more strongly, by the severe Decrees, which he obtained at the Court of Honorius, against the Pelagians [A]. We should be better acquainted with his Actions

(a) It is a Town in Africa.

(b) Taken from Baronius's Annals, under the Year, which I have mentioned.

[A] The severe Decrees, — against the Pelagians. Baronius does not affirm, that the African Churches sent Alypius to the Emperor, to desire leave to make use of the secular Arm against the Followers of Pelagius; he only conjectures it, and grounds his Conjecture on the Orders, which were dispatched, in the same Year, by the Emperor Honorius, against the Pelagians of Africa. But Mr Maimbourg does not speak of this as a doubtful Matter; for, having made an odious Comparison between the Conduct of the Protestant Ministers and that of the Pelagians, he adds (1), "That which has

(1) Maimbourg Histoire du Pontificat
de St Leon,
lib. 1. pag.
33. Dub.
Edit.

and his Merit, if we had the Work, which St Austin promised, in a Letter, which he wrote to St Paulinus [B]. To conclude, Alypius was very near being married. See the Remark [B] of the Article St AUGUSTIN.

"filled all France with Joy, is, that so just a Decree was soon followed by That famous Edict of October, which gave the fatal Blow to this Heresy, by forbidding the public Exercise of the pretended Reformation, destroying all their Temples, and banishing those Ministers, who refused to renounce their Errors. And this is exactly what the Emperor Honorius did against the Pelagians, at the Request of the Clergy of Africa, presented by Alypius. For, by the Edict which that Prince granted him for the Good of the whole Church, that Heresy was exterminated out of the Empire; they, who might yet be suspected of it, were forbidden to meet, and those false Bishops, who would not subscribe to it's Condemnation, were expelled from their Seas."

[B] The Work, which St Austin promised in a Letter — to St Paulinus.] Because what he says in that Letter (2) may give a general Notion of Alypius's Merit, it will not be improper to produce it here, Est etiam aliud quo ipsum fratrem amplius diligas, nam est cognatus venerabilis & verè beati Episcopi Alypii, quem toto pectore amplecteris & merito: nam quisquis de illo viro benigne cogitat, de magna Dei misericordia & de mirabilibus Dei muneribus cogitat. Itaque, cum legis petitionem tuam, quæ desiderare te indicat, ut historiam suam tibi scriberet, & volebat facere propter benevolentiam tuam, & molebat propter verecundiam suam, quem cum viderim inter amorem pudoremque fluctuantem, onus ab illo in humeros meos transuli: nam hoc mihi etiam per epistolam iussit.

(a) It is the 32d.

(a) Demetrius, his Daughter, is very much praised by the Fathers.

(f) Baronius ad Ann. 395. n. 12.

(2) Ibid. n. 19.

(3) Baron. ad ann. 395. n. 20.

"Cito ergo, si Dominus adjuverit, totum Alypium inferam præcordiis tuis: nam hoc sum ego maxime veritus, ne ille vereretur aperire omnia, quæ in eum Dominus contulit, ne alicubi minus intelligenti (non enim abs te solo illa legeretur) non divina munera concessa hominibus, sed seipsum prædicare videretur, & tu, qui nostri quomodo hæc legas, propter aliorum cavendam infirmitatem, fraternæ notitiæ debito fraudareris. — This Brother has still a farther claim to your Affection; for he is related to the venerable, and truly blessed Bishop Alypius, whom you embrace with your whole Heart, an deservedly: for whoever thinks favourably of him, reflects upon the great Mercy, and the wonderful Gifts, of God. Therefore, when he had read your Petition, in which you expressed your Desire, that he would write to you his own History, he was inclined to do it out of good Will to you, but deterred from it by his own Modesty; whom when I saw fluctuating between Love and Modesty, I transferred the Burthen from his Shoulders to my own; as he had desired me by Letter to do. Speedily therefore, with God's Assistance, I shall infuse all Alypius into your Breast; for my greatest Fear was, lest he should conceal Part of the Favours bestowed on him by God, out of a dread of appearing to the Ignorant (for you would not have been his only Reader) rather to preach up himself, than the Divine Gifts bestowed on Men: and that, out of Regard to the Weakness of others, you, who would have rightly understood him, would be defrauded of the Debt of Brotherly Information."

(b) Baronius ad Ann. 395. n. 12.

ALYPIUS (FALTONIUS PROBUS) Brother of Q. Clodius Hermogenianus Alypius (a), was Prefect of Rome in the Reign of the Emperor Theodosius. Baronius proves it by some Inscriptions (b). He adds, that there are several Letters from Symmachus to this Alypius [A]; he cites the Roman Martyrology, which says, that St Almachius was killed by the Gladiators [B] in the Prefecture of Alypius; Lastly, he conjectures, I. That Alypius, Governor of Egypt, with whom John the Hermit had a Conference [C], is the same with Him, who is the Subject of this Article. II. That this Conversation with the Hermit converted Alypius. A learned Englishman conjectures, that the Martyr St Almachius is an imaginary Saint, and that the Title of the Almanack produced this wonderful Canonization [D].

[A] There are several Letters from Symmachus to this Alypius. His Words are these: "Ad eundem quoque Alypium complures extant Epistolæ Symmachii, deque eo, meminit in Epistola ad Flavianum (1)." He cites the Eighty second Letter of the second Book of Symmachus. In my Edition, I find, at the Eighty second, these Words: "Jam pridem Domino & fratri meo Alipio comitatum sacrum visere atque adire cupienti. — My Master and Brother Alypius, desirous of going to see and attend the sacred Procession."

[B] St Almachius was killed by the Gladiators. He endeavoured to suppress the Worship of false Gods, on the Day of the Octave of Christmas, (which is the first Day of the Year) and it cost him his Life. These are the Words of the Martyrology, on the first of January, "Romæ S. Almachii martyris, qui, jubente Alypio Urbis præfecto, cum diceret, hodie Octavæ Domini diei sunt, cessat à superstitionibus idolorum, & à sacrificiis pollutis, à gladiatoribus occisus est (2). — St Almachius, Martyr at Rome; who, at the Command of Alypius, Prefect of the City, having said, To Day is the Octave of Christmas; lay aside your idolatrous Superstitions, and polluted Sacrifices; was thereupon slain by the Gladiators." Theodoret, in the Twenty sixth Chapter of the fifth Book of his Ecclesiastical History, speaks of a Monk, whose Name was Telemachus, who came from the utmost Parts of the East to Rome, to endeavour at the abolishing the Shews of the Gladiators. He had the Courage to catechise these People; but the Spectators were so offended at it, that they stoned him to Death. Honorius, hearing of it, caused him to be ranked among the Martyrs, and commanded these sort of Games to be abolished. Baronius (3) would reduce what you have just now read, and what

I have cited out of the Martyrology, to one and the same Fact, and would willingly make us believe, that Theodoret called Him Telemachus, whom he ought to have called Almachius; that he placed in the Reign of Honorius what was done in that of Theodosius, and that he imputed the Action of the Gladiators to the Spectators. At this rate Theodoret must be guilty of three Mistakes.

[C] Alypius — with whom John the Hermit had a Conference. Baronius cites hereupon a long Passage (4), by which we are given to understand, that Good Palladius took it very ill, that the Hermit should leave him, to go and converse with Alypius, Governor of the Province. His Repentment hereupon inspired him with some Contempt for the Hermit, and with a Resolution to retire. He would have done so, if the Hermit had not sent him Word to defer his Intentions a little while. Palladius perceived from hence, that the Man had a great Fund of Spirituality in him, and a very particular Talent of guessing at a Man's Thoughts. He said 'till the Governor was gone, and then the Hermit made his Excuses.

[D] The Title of the Almanack produced this wonderful Canonization. They, who cannot procure the English Book, printed at London in 1688, entitled, The Embassy of the Church of Rome, may consult the eleventh Volume of the Bibliothèque Universelle, at the One hundred thirty ninth Page. They will see there, that, according to the Conjecture of the English Author, "Some ignorant Monk, of the VIth or VIIIth Century, seeing at the beginning of the Calendar, S. Almanachum, written, by way of abbreviation, according to the Custom of those Times, S. Almachum, took the Word, seldom used in those Times, for the Name of a Saint, " gave

(4) Palladius in Lucif. cap. 22. apud Lipsium. tom. 3.

"gave it a Termination in us, and placed it on the first Day of the Year. Ignorance and Chance had no sooner brought this new Saint into World, but he found Martyrologists, who affirmed that he was killed in the Amphitheatre of Rome in the Prefecture of Alpius, by the Gladiators, whom he endeavoured to hinder from fighting. No ancient Author mentions this holy Courage (5). Alpinus * is the first, who speaks of it, but with some Doubt."

(c) Test Theodoret affirms it to be the Monk Telemachus. See Remark [B].

ALKINDUS. Look for ALCHINDUS.

* De Divin. Offic. cap. 4.

ALLATIUS (Læo) Librarian of the Vatican, born in the Island of Chios, was one of the most famous Writers of the XVIIth Century. He was laborious, and indefatigable, greedy after Manuscripts, endowed with a great Memory, very fit to collect Materials, and consequently deserving of the Place which he enjoyed; though he had no very great Penetration, nor a manner of arguing, which favoured of the good Logician. I omit the Employments which he had, before he was made the Pope's Librarian, nor have I examined, whether Moreri, who speaks of him at large, is very exact. If I have any thing to say upon this Head, it shall be in the Remarks [A]. So that, omitting here what may be found in his Dictionary, I shall only touch upon some Particulars, which he has omitted. Allatius was very serviceable to the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, in the Dispute they had with Mr Claude, about the Belief of the Greeks in regard to the Eucharist. Mr Claude often calls him the great Author of Mr Arnaud, and gives him but an indifferent Character [B]. Mr Simon represents him as a Man of no Sincerity [C]. Never was a Latin by Birth more zealous against the schismatical Greeks, than Allatius, nor more devoted to the See of Rome. He never was married, nor in Ecclesiastical Orders; the Reason he gives for it deserves to be known [D]. It would be difficult to find in the History of Authors, a more remarkable Particular, than That, which relates to a Pen, which he used [E]. He published several Manuscripts, several Translations of Greek Authors and several Books of his own composing. The List of them in Moreri's Dictionary does not distinguish

[A] If I have any thing to say upon this Head, it shall be in the Remarks. I find in Lorenzo Craffo (1), that Leone Allacci (so he calls him) was but

(1) Lorenzo Craffo Istoria de' Poeti Greci, pag. 306. See also his Elogii d'Uomini Letterati, Tom. 1. pag. 397. & seq.

(2) Theat. of the Spinelli.

(3) Moreri places this in the Year 1651. but Heidelberg was not taken till 1622.

nine Years of Age, when he was carried from the Island of Chios into Calabria, where he met with the Protection of a powerful Family (2). After some time, he was sent to Rome, where he studied classical Learning, Philosophy, and Divinity, in the Gregorian College. He was elected at Naples great Vicar to Bernard Juslinieni, Bishop of Anglona. He returned to his Native Country; but, finding nothing there agreeable to his Inclinations, he returned to Rome, where he studied Physics under Julius Caesar Lagalla, and was admitted Doctor in That Science. Afterwards he applied himself to Polite Literature, and taught Greek in the College of his Nation. The death of Gregory XV. deprived him of the Reward of the Commission, which he had received, to transport the Library of the Elector Palatine to Rome (3). Some time after, he went into the Service of Cardinal Bichi, afterwards of Cardinal Francis Barberini, and at last had the Care of the Library of the Vatican from Pope Alexander VII. Lorenzo Craffo says nothing more in the Book, which I have quoted. I add, that Allatius had been a long time Librarian to Cardinal Barberini.

[B] Mr Claude — gives him but an indifferent Character. "Allatius was a Greek, who had left his Religion to embrace the Romish: a Greek, whom the Pope had made his Library-keeper, a Man the most attached to the Interest of the Court of Rome, a Man the most malicious, and most outrageous against Persons: a Man the most zealous against the Greeks, who are called Schismatics, particularly against Cyril, and, after all, a true Dealer in Smoak (4). His Zeal for the Court of Rome appears in the very beginning of his Book, De perpetua Confectione: for thus he speaks in favour of the Pope: "The Roman Pontiff holds of no one; he judges every one, and is judged of none: Obedience is to be paid to him, though he governs unjustly; he gives Laws without receiving any; he alters them as he pleases, he creates Magistrates, he determines Matters of Faith, he orders the great Affairs of the Church, as he pleases. He cannot err, if he would; for no Infidelity or Error can come near him: and if an Angel should say otherwise, being invested as he is with the Authority of Jesus Christ, he cannot change. The ill Nature, with which he treats those, against whom he disputes, as Cyrtæus, Creygibon, the Archbishop of Corfu, and others, whom he attacks out of Wan-toness, appears from the mere reading of his Works; each Period honours them with some of these fine Appellations: Fools, Lyars, Blockheads, Rotten Mulbrooms, Infernal Mouthis, Wicked, Impudent, and such like Terms †, which are not the Marks of a Temper extremely moderate. To prove to us the Conformity of the Greek Church with the Romish in Essentials, he lays it down as a Principle, that we must acknowledge, as the true Greek Church, no other Party, but that which obeys the See of Rome; as for the other Greeks, whom he calls Heretics and Schismatics, he fairly maintains, that it would be right to reduce them to obedience by Fire and Sword. That Heretics ought to be proscribed, exterminated, and punished, and, if they are obstinate, put to death and burnt ‡. "They are his own Words." Had Moreri reason then to call him good Man? Is this contemptuous Elogy due to those, who talk of nothing but penal Laws, Extirpation, and Fire and Sword, when the Question is, How Heretics are to be dealt with?

[C] Mr Simon represents him as a Man of no Sincerity. The Design of the whole first Chapter of the Critical History of the Levant, is to shew, that Leo Allatius had no Reason to be in a Passion with Caucas, Archbishop of Corfu; that Caucas has not imputed any Opinions and Practices to the Greeks, which they disown; and that Allatius, to please Pope Urban VIII. who had at that time formed the Design of re-uniting the Greeks to the Church of Rome by softning Methods, had abated of the Rigour of several of the Greek Opinions. This is plainly to insinuate, that he wanted Sincerity; for if Caucas was in the right, he could not be contradicted, out of Complaisance to the Pope, without sacrificing Candour to Maxims of State.

[D] The Reason he gives for it deserves to be known. Pope Alexander VII. asked him one Day, why he did not take Orders. It is, answered he, because I would be always ready to marry. Why then, replied the Pope, don't you marry? It is, replied Allatius, because I would always be at liberty to take Orders (5). Thus he spent his whole Life in deliberating between a Parish and a Wife: Perhaps, at his Death, he repented, that he had not chosen one or other of them; but he might have repeated thirty or forty Years successively, if he had actually made his Choice.

[E] A remarkable Particular relating to a Pen, which he used. This Particularity comes from the same Hand with the foregoing, to wit, Jahn Pasfricius, Allatius's good Friend, Heir of his Books, † Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 15. 16, 17, 18. & adverb. Creygh. passim.

‡ Allat. de Perpet. Conf. lib. 2. c. 13. Ibid. lib. 3. cap. 11.

(c) Mabilion Museum Ital. Tom. 1. pag. 61.

* Allat. de Perpet. Conf. lib. 1. c. 2.

distinguish these Three sorts of Works, nor does it comprehend all that Allatius published. There is more of Reading and Learning in his Productions, than of Wit and Judgment. He knew how to discover the Faults of those, against whom he wrote, but he did it with too much Sharpness, and after an insulting manner. This is chiefly to be seen in the Dissertations, which he published against Mr Creygibon (a), concerning the Council of Florence. His Genius and his Memory appear in the Digressions he made from one Subject to another in the same Volume. Mr Sallo was far from being his Admirer upon this Account [F]. Allatius died at Rome, in the Month of January, 1669 (b), being Eighty three Years old. He often wrote Greek Verses. He composed a Poem in Greek on the Birth of Lewis XIV, wherein Greece is introduced Speaking. This Poem was printed before his Book, de Perpetua Confectione, which he dedicated to that King. I forgot to observe, that the Gentlemen of Port-Royal did not fail to reply to Mr Claude, in Favour of Allatius [G].

(a) See the Journal des Sçavans of Nov. 15. 1666.

(b) Henn. Witte, Diarium Biograph. Moneri places his Death in 1670.

(6) Ibid.

(7) See the Article of LANCELOT an O-liverian Monk.

(8) Id. Mabilion. pag. 77.

(9) Journal des Sçavans, of Jan. 19. 1665.

(10) Diogen. Laert. in E-pimenide, lib. 1. n. 112.

(11) Teiffier, Catalog. pag. 355.

and Principal of the College of propaganda fide. He told Mabilion (6), that Allatius, having made use of the same Pen (7) for forty Years in writing Greek, and looking it at last, was ready to cry for Grief. He wrote very fast; for he transcribed in one Night the Diarium Romanorum Pontificum, which Hilarion Rancatus, a Cistercian Monk had lent him (8). Allatius was not permitted to publish it.

[F] Mr Sallo was far from being his Admirer on this Account.] Having observed, that the chief Piece of one of Allatius's Works was a Complaint of the Virgin, he goes on thus: "This Complaint was composed by Metaphrastes, from which Leo Allatius - - - takes occasion to give us an Elogium of Metaphrastes, written by Pfellus. And, because Metaphrastes's Name was Simoen, he takes occasion likewise from hence to make a very long Dissertation on the Lives and Works of great Men, of the Name of Simoen. From the Simoen he proceeds to the Simons, from those to the Simondes, and lastly to the Simonastides. This way of writing is the Taste of Leo Allatius. For he had before composed Dissertations on the Lives and Works of some Authors, who had equivocal Names, as That of George, Methodius, Nicetas, Philo, and Pfellus. This is a new invented Project; at least we have nothing like it in the Works of the Ancients (9)." Diogenes Laertius seldom forgets to mention, at the end of each Philosopher's Life, those who bore the same Name; and he cites Demetrius Magnes, who had wrote a Book, ὅτι ὁμοῦ μὲν οὐκ ἔστι τὰ ἐξ ὁμογενῶν (10). Of Poets, and Authors, of the same Name. See the Remark [H] of the Article APOLLONIUS TYANEUS. Nor is Allatius the Restorer of this Project: Maurius had published several Treatises of this Nature before him. See Mr Teiffier, in his Catalogus Authorum Bibliothecarum, where he gives us a List of the Authors, who exercised their Pens on this Subject (11). He calls them Scriptores de Homonymis. According to Mr Sallo, Homonymi ought to be translated those who have Equivocal Names; but, by his Leave, This would be a wrong Translation. It was never said, that Princes of the same Name, as the Charles's, the Lewis's, the Henry's, had equivocal Names. Names of this Sort are such as may be taken in different Senses; such is their Species and their Use, both in Logic, and in common Speech. But, to return to Leo Allatius, I must observe, that he was very fit to draw up Lists or Catalogues. He made this appear when he published his Apes Urbana; it is a Book, which grows scarce, and is already very dear in Holland (12). It contains a List of all the learned Men, who flourished in Rome, from the Year 1630 to 1632, with a Catalogue of their Works. The Reason of the Title is taken from the Bees, which Pope Urban VIII. bore in his Coat of Arms. There is another List of Allatius, which is less known than this, the Title whereof is Dramaturgia. It relates to Dramatical Works, and their Authors. The Book, which he published at Rome, in the Year 1636, De Erroribus magnorum virorum in dicendo, contains several Remarks stolen from Claudius Du Verdier. Mr Morbof charges him with it (13).

[G] The Gentlemen of Port Royal did not fail to reply to Mr Claude in Favour of Allatius.] First, they mention part of what Mr Claude says of him; and then they go on thus. "But, besides, that these empty Reproaches carry an ill Face; that Allatius's Writings give quite another Idea of him, and that his Brethren * speak of him in a very different manner, and cite him with Commendation; they are likewise contrary to good Sense: for a Man may be zealous or bitter against an Author, whom he refutes, without being a Cheat, and a Forger of false Passages, and false Stories; and there is no Consequence from the one to the other. It is not with the Vices, as it is with the Virtues of Men; there is no Affinity between them; nay, they are often contrary the one to the other: and Persons may be Passionate, Violent, Flatterers, Interested, without giving any occasion to believe, that the Passages, which they cite, are supposititious. There is yet less Reason to believe it of Allatius, than of another, because some Books, which he cited, when they were but in Manuscript, having been afterwards printed, have justified his Faithfulness; and because it appears, farther, that he always pretended to the Reputation of a learned Critic; and it is well known, that such Persons are very far from falsifying Authors." It is certain, that Mr Drelin-court cites him with Commendation, and makes use of his Doctrine concerning the Witch of Ender, who conjured up the Ghost of Sarnuel. He cites his Treatise De Engastrimybo, published in the Year 1630.

(12) It is not to be met with in Becklet's Shop; but sometimes at Amst.

(13) Mémoires de Paris. pag. 86. Polyhistor. pag. 179.

* Drelin-court Dialogue de la défiance aux enfers. pag. 200, &c. Note, that in my Edition, which is the second, you will find the page 47, and the following page, for which see the notes to the Allatius.

ALMAIN (JAMES) Professor of Divinity at Paris, in the College of Navarre, flourished in the beginning of the XVIth Century. He was born at Sens, and acquired the Reputation of one of the most subtle Logicians, and best Schoolmen of the Times. The great Inclination he had for the Doctrine of Scotus, and that of Occam, and Gabriel Biel, shews the Character of his Genius. He taught Logic and Physics, before he was admitted into the House of Navarre, in the Year 1508, and published some Treatises on these two branches of Philosophy, in 1505, and 1508. He took his Doctor of Divinity's Degree in the Year 1511, and the Year following he explained the three Books of Sentences in the College of Navarre. He was employed at the same time to write for King Lewis XII against Pope Julius II, and to vindicate the Authority of the Councils against a Piece of Cardinal Cajetan. The Council of Pisa had sent that Cardinal's Book to the Faculty of Divinity of Paris to be confuted by them; they made choice of Almain for this Drudgery, and had no reason to repent of their choice. This Doctor died very young in the Year 1515. An Edition of all his Works was published [A] at

[A] An Edition of all his Works was published.] face to it, wherein Almain is amply praised. The Officer Lugdunensis took this pains, and added a Preface to it, wherein Almain is amply praised. The best of his Works are four moral Treatises. Expositio at Paris two Years after (a). They who pretend, that he was a Monk, are mistaken [B].

(a) Launois Hist. Gymn. Navarr. p. 614.

fitio circa decisiones questionum Magistri Gulielmi Occam de potestate summi Pontificis. De auctoritate Ecclesiæ & Conciliorum. Disputata super sententias Magistri Roberti Holcot (1).

(1) Launois Hist. Gymn. Navarr. pag. 611.

[B] They who pretend that he was a Monk, are mistaken. Father Labbé (2) accuses Gesner, and his Abbreviator Simler, of having falsely advanced this Fact; Moreri did not fail, in this point, to copy after Father Labbé. Mr de Launoy is more particular in his Accusation against Gesner; he blames him for saying, in his Bibliotèque, that Almaide was of the Order of the Franciscans: He adds, that Possévin, in his Apparatus, makes him only a Monk (3). Father Labbé did not make use of this Distinction; he says that

(2) De Script. Eccles. Tom. 1. pag. 438.

(3) Ibid. pag. 614.

Almaide was a Monk, according to Gesner, but that, according to others, he was of the Order of St Francis. I do not believe, that Gesner has said what is imputed to him; for I have not been able to find any Passage in his Bibliotèque, which mentions Almaide. I find indeed a Benedictin, whose Name was Almannus; but he makes him live in the Year 890. As for Simler, it is true he says, that James Almaide, a Monk, wrote a Book against Cardinal Cajetan. Moreri was not acquainted with this Writer's Age; he flourish'd still, says he, in the beginning of the XVIIth Century. Say rather, that he did not begin to flourish 'till that time.

ALPAIDE, a Concubine of Pepin, and Mother of Charles Martel. Some Authors say, without good Grounds, that Pepin married her, after he had divorced Plectrude [A]. It is a general Opinion, that Lambert, Bishop of Liege, was never so much a Courtier, as to approve of Pepin's Amours with this Lady; and that Alpaide, enraged at the Liberty he took in censuring them, made Pepin consent to the Design she had formed against that Prelate's Life [B]. They add, that Dodon, Alpaide's Brother, executed this villanous Design, and that, having committed the Murder, he fell into a Distemper, which bred a prodigious Number of Worms in his Body, and obliged him to throw himself into the Maïse (a). Lambert has been canonized: He was the only Prelate, they say, who durst tell Pepin the Truth [C], for which he met with the Fate of St John the Baptist. His Morality was so refined, that he refused the Benediction, which was desired of him at Table, for Alpaide's Glass [D]. This Lady retired at last into a Monastery (b), where she died. A Cloister is commonly to this kind of Persons, what Legborn was formerly to Bankrupts.

(a) Mezerai, Abregé Chron. Tom. 1. pag. 171. ad ann. 707. Cordemoi, Hist. de Fr. Tom. 1. pag. 381.

(b) Moreri says, that this Monastery had been founded by Alpaide at Orp-le-grand in Brabant.

[A] Some Authors say, without good Grounds, that Pepin married her, after he had divorced Plectrude. Mr de Cordemoi (1) observes, that they built only on the Authority of the second Continuator of Fredegarus, who says that Pepin married Alpaide. "But" besides that Author, who wrote (as every one knows) by the Order of Charles Martel's Brother and Nephew, took care not to represent the Amours of Pepin and Alpaide, otherwise than as a Marriage; he does not say, that Plectrude was divorced: Nay, there are several Acts remaining, which shew that, Plectrude was never separated from Pepin; so that, according to Ecclesiastical or Civil Laws, Alpaide could not be look'd upon as his lawful Wife, and "if he married her, he had two Wives at once."

(1) Cordemoi's Hist. of France, Vol. I. pag. 381.

[B] Enrag'd at the Liberty he took in censuring them - he form'd a Design against that Prelate's Life. We need not wonder, that the second Continuator of Fredegarus should say nothing of Lambert's Conduct, nor of the fatal Consequences it was attended with. He could not touch upon it, without incurring the Displeasure of Charles Martel's Relations, who made use of his Pen; and therefore his Silence is of no Weight: But the Author of the Gesta likewise says nothing of it (2). An Author, who liv'd in those Times, says only, "That St Lambert was killed by a Lord, whose Name was Dodon, in revenge for the Death of two of his Relations, whom the Servants of that holy Bishop had slain, without his Knowledge (3)." If we knew of what Party this Author was, whether he was for Charles Martel, or for Plectrude, whether he had any thing to hope for, or to fear, we might know how to judge of his Silence. Mr de Cordemoi adds, that it does not appear "by any Memoirs of that Time, either that Dodon was the Brother of Alpaide, or that he induced him to kill St Lambert; that there are indeed some Expressions in the Martyrologies compos'd about that time, which shew, that this Violence had been done by Order from the Court, and that, as Pepin was Master of it, those, who wrote afterwards, thought they ought to explain, "to the Disadvantage of that Prince, and of Alpaide, "the conceal'd meaning of the Martyrologies (4)." The safest way, I think, is to place this in the Number of doubtful Facts. They, who tell us, that Lambert, Bishop of Liege, was the only Person, who durst reprimand Pepin, and speak openly of his Bi-

(2) Ibid.

(3) Godefr. in Vita S. Lamberti, esp. 7. apud Cordemoi, ibid.

(4) Cordemoi, ibid. pag. 382.

gamy as of a public Adultery, without suffering himself to be influenced either by the Promises, or the Threats, of Dodon, Alpaide's Brother (5), did not write 'till a long time after (6); which makes their Testimony less to be depended upon: Besides, the Son of Alpaide was so formidable a Person, that nothing can be inferred from the Silence of cotemporary Writers.

(5) Anselm. Ludovici. Canonicus. Sigibert. Monachus Gemblacensis. Nicolaus Ladic. Canonic. Vener. and others cited by Cordemoi, pag. 381.

(6) Cordemoi, p. 381.

[C] The only Prelate, who durst tell Pepin the Truth. An Author of an Historical Dictionary will have a thousand Opportunities of observing, that there are no greater Flatterers of Princes than Churchmen. Their Sermons, their Prayers, their Speeches, their Epistles Dedicatory, are so full of extravagant Elogies, that the Condition they put an honest Hearer or Reader into, cannot be better represented, than by the Proverb, Date mihi pelvium. "Give me the Basin." If it be said that Pepin was no King; I answer, that he had the Key of Tongues and Pens, Rewards and Punishments in his Hands; he only wanted the Title of Sovereign; he had the Reality, and performed the Functions of it. Flatterers do not regard a meer Title: They adore him more devoutly, who has the Power without the Title, than him who has the Title without the Power.

(7) A Proverbiat. S. saying of Tibse, who, when anything becomes to very troublesome, as not to be any longer born, (for instance, a flunkey or fullime Haraguer) call for a Flunkey, or Pot, as if they were sick, and wanted to die. See Sui-si, and Erasmus. Adag.

[D] He refused the Benediction, which was desired of him at Table, for Alpaide's Glass. Let us see how a modern Historian relates the Matter. "Ad epulas invitatur (B. Landebertus) a principe. Pippinus, ceterique illustres viri qui aderant, scyphum quicquid sum ab Antistite benedicti, aut, ut alii dicunt, de manu ejus poculum accipere, pia ambicione cupiebant. Cum Alpais (nam & ipsa pleno convivio intererat) scyphum suum à Landeberto signari optaret, indignabundus Episcopus palatio excessit, convivarum hilaritate confusa (7). — Lambert was invited by the Prince to an Entertainment. Pepin, and the rest of his illustrious Guests, were piously ambitious, that their Glasses might be bless'd by the Prelate, or, as others say, to receive the Glass from his Hand. But when Alpais (who was present at this grand Feast) desired, that her Glass likewise might receive Lambert's Benediction, the Bishop left the Palace with Indignation, to the Interruption of the Company's Mirth." Compare with this the Stories related in the new Letters against Maimbourg's History of Calvinism (8).

(7) Hærian. Valeus. Rerum Francic. lib. 33.

(8) Page 614. & c.

ALSTEDIUS (JOHN HENRY) a German Divine of the Reformed Religion, was one of the most voluminous Writers of the XVIIth Century. He was an indefatigable

(s) The word fidelitas is precisely expressed in Alstedius.

(b) Witte,
Diar. Biogr.
Tom. 1.

(c) It is in Folio, divided into 4
Tom. 1.

(d) Vossius
de Scient.
Mathem.
pag. 326.

tigable Author, and one who answered his Anagram perfectly well (a). He was a long time Professor of Philosophy and Divinity at Herborn, in the County of Nassau, from whence he went into Transylvania, to be Professor at Alba-Julia (b), where he died in the Year 1638, being fifty Years of Age. He was one of the Fathers at the Synod of Dort. His chief Employment was to compose Methods, and to reduce the several Branches of Arts and Sciences into certain Systems. His Encyclopædia (c) found Favour with the Roman Catholics [A]; for it was reprinted at Lyons, and sold very well in France. Some are of Opinion, that one of his best Works is his Theaurus Chronologicus, of which there are several Editions; others speak with Contempt of it. Vossius says nothing of it; he only mentions the Encyclopædia in general, and in particular the Treatise of Arithmetic (d). He acknowledges, that the Author had read much, and that his Learning was very extensive. They, who judge of him with the least Flattery, own that there are some good things in his Methods and Systems [B]. He did not persuade many People of what he endeavoured to prove in his Triumphus Biblicus, that the Materials and Principles of all Arts and Sciences may be fetched from the Scripture. It was impossible for him to publish so many Books, without making use of the Labours of others; but he borrowed too much from other Authors, whom he transcribed without any Scruple [C]. John Himmelius, a Divine of the Confession of Augsburg, and Divinity-Professor at Jena, is one of those who wrote against him [D]. Moreri was not acquainted with the Year of Alstedius's Death [E], and he had better have said nothing about it.

I must not omit, that he was a Millenarian. He published, in 1627, a Treatise De Mille Annis. He taught, that the Faithful shall reign, with JESUS CHRIST, upon Earth, a Thousand Years; after which will be the General Resurrection, and the last Judgment. He pretended, that This Reign would commence in the Year 1694. We are fully assured he was mistaken. His Son-in-law Bisterfeldius was of the same Opinion (e).

(f) Heidegg.
Dissert. de Chilismo,
pag. 652.

[A] His Encyclopædia found favour with the Roman Catholics.] Lorenzo Crafft places Alstedius among the great Men, whose Elogies he has published. It is very probable, that Moreri borrowed from thence the Incentive, which he bestows upon Alstedius. I find the Reader is referred to a Work of Sorrel (1), to be informed concerning this learned German. He must have been better known, and more esteemed than many others among the Roman Catholics. Father Lami, of the Oratory, is of Opinion, that Alstedius is almost the only one among all the Writers of Encyclopædias, and Systems of Sciences, who deserves to be read, and to keep his Rank in a choice Library (2). See the following Remark.

(1) Of the Perfection of a Christian,
pag. 491. a-pod König,
Bibl. p. 29.

(2) Dialogues on the Sciences, &c. ed.
by Baillet, in his Jugemens
des Savans,
Tom. 2. n.
269. p. 328.

[B] There are some good things in his Methods and Systems.] The following Quotation from Mr Baillet is borrowed by him from the anonymous German, who wrote the Bibliographia curiosa Historico-philologica. "Alstedius has indeed many good things; but he is not exact enough in many Places: Nevertheless, upon his first Appearance, he was received by the Public with great Applause, and he is of some use to those, who, being destitute of other helps, and not having the Authors, would acquire some Knowledge of the Terms of each Profession and Science. One cannot sufficiently praise his Patience and Labour, and his Judgment and Choice of good Authors, out of whom he made his Abridgments, for they are not mere Scraps and unconnected Rhapsodies; but he lays down the Principles of Sciences and Arts with great Order, and endeavours to be uniform every where, though some Pieces are better than others, and some of them are of no value, as his History, Chronology, &c. ----- It must be confessed, that he is often confused, by endeavouring to be too clear; that he is too full of Divisions and Subdivisions, and that he affects "a Method too much constrained (3)." Lorenzo Crafft says, that though there is much more of Labour, than Genius, in Alstedius's Works, yet they are esteemed, and that People admire his Industry, which gives him admittance into the Temple of Fame. "Con gloria del suo nome s'è ammirata la fatica fatta nelle Storie, & nella Cronologia de' Tempi: le quali cose, quantunque in libri diversi di Scrittori illustri sacri e profani trovansi, è vi concorra in tale

(3) Baillet,
ubi supra.

"raccolimento più sudore che ingegno, tuttavia l'ordine dato da Giovanni Errico alle sudette fatiche storiche è stato da gli huomini amatori delle antichità, & dell' erudizioni assai commendato (4). — "The great Pains he has taken in History and Chronology, is much to the Reputation of his Name: "which Sciences, though they are to be met in several Works of illustrious Authors, sacred and profane, and though more of Labour than Genius is requisite in such Collections, nevertheless the Order bestowed by John Henry, on the above said Historical Labours, has been sufficiently admired by the Lovers of Antiquity and Learning."

(4) L. Crafft
Elog. d' Hu-
omini Lette-
rati, p. 214.

[C] Whom he transcribed without any Scruple.] Read this Passage of Thomassin (5). Hunc in Paratitulis Theologicis quicquid de silentio sacrorum affert, observo prope de verbo descriptissimè à Casaubono, quod nominari tamen etiam lectoris intererat, ut sciret unde plura sibi haurienda forent. verior autem ne quercum eandem alibi quoque excussit, cum in ipso ad lectorem principio reperiam periodum unam alteramque dedicationis Casaubonianæ. — "Whatever this Author advances, in his Theological Titles, concerning the Silence of the sacred Writers, he has copied, I find, Word for Word from Casaubon; whom it was the Reader's Interest he should have nam'd, that he might know where to have farther recourse. But I am afraid, he has shaken the same Oak elsewhere; for, in the very beginning of his Address to the Reader, I find a Period or two Casaubon's Dedication."

(5) Thomassin de Plagio Literario,
n. 354. pag.
155.

• Tit. In-
cisi, pag.
166, 167,
168.

† Exerc. 16.
ad Baron. n.
43. p. 399.

[D] Himmelius — is one of those, who wrote against him.] His Work is entitled Anti-Alstedius, sive examen Theologicæ Polemicæ Johannis Henrici Alstedii. Though this Remark should serve only to give the Title of one of Alstedius's best Works, it would not be altogether useless.

[E] Moreri was not acquainted with the Year of Alstedius's Death.] Alstedius, says he, died about the Year 1645, or 46; others say in the Year 1640, being the Fifty second Year of his Age. Two of the three Authors, whom he cites (6), say nothing of it. Lorenzo Crafft, who is the third, says only, that Alstedius published the four Tomes of his Encyclopædia, at the Age of Fifty two Years (7).

(6) Vossius
& Zeiller.

(7) L. Crafft
Elog. d' Hu-
omini Lette-
rati, Tom.
2. pag. 212.

ALTAEMPS (MARK) Son of a Sister of Pius IV, was one of the Cardinals, who presided in the Council of Trent. Wolfgang Altaemps, his Father, was a Count of the Empire in the Diocese of Constance. How splendid soever the Dignity of the Pope's Legate was in That Council, this Cardinal obtained it only by the Artifices of some ill affected Persons. The Borromeo's, related to the Pope in the same Degree with

(a) See Ammon de la
H. d. 1562.
(b) 2. 1562.
(c) Letter of Altaemps to the King.
(d) 1562.
(e) The Marquis' Note of the Process of the Council of Trent.
p. 445.

with him, desiring to remove him from Court, caused him to be sent to Trent (a), where he remained from the Month of January 1562, till about the Beginning of Spring 1563 [A]. The Pope recalled him, to raise Troops; for, hearing that the Dukes of Saxony and Wurtemberg, and the Landgrave of Hesse, were raising Forces, and that the Germans had a mind to plunder Rome, where they had found so great a Booty in the Year 1527; he was not willing to be surprized (b). This Cardinal was very much displeased with Pibrac's Speech. His Opinion was, that it ought to be strongly answered; and said that the Influence of this Civilian ought to be restrained, who was accustomed to treat only with Persons of the meanest Rank (c). He was promoted to the Purple in the Year 1561, and, a little before his Legation, the Canons of Constance had chosen him for their Bishop. He had neither the Learning, nor Experience, requisite for presiding in a Council; but his Uncle, Pius IV., was not ignorant that the other Presidents would supply what was wanting in him (d), and would teach him the Intrigues of Oecumenical Councils. When That Pope sent him Nuncio to the Emperor Ferdinand in the Year 1560, he sent with him the famous Cornelius Musso, Bishop of Buonito, as his Instructor (e). Altaemps was then Bishop of Cassano. That Family rose in Dignity afterwards; for we find a Duke of ALTAEMPS, who died in the Year 1620 (f). He was a Man of Learning; and, if I am not mistaken, it was He, who collected the Library, which was so long famous at Rome, under that Name, and which was not quite sold, when Father Mabillon travelled into Italy (g). This Duke of Altaemps's Name was John Angeli, and he published the Life of Pope Anicetus. Another Duke of ALTAEMPS, whose Name was Gaudentius, and who died in the Year 1677, was no less curious in Books, nor less learned. He published the Life of St Cbrystofom, and the Persecuted Sanctity triumphant (h).

(b) E. P. 1562.
1562.
(c) Ibid. p. 494.

(d) Ibid. p. 494.

(e) P. 1562.
Hist. Conc.
Trent. 1562.
1562. cap. 13.
n. 10.

(f) Ibid. lib.
14. cap. 13.

(g) Witte.
Diar. Bi. gr.
Tom. 2.
pag. 26.

(h) In 1682.
Societ. Museum Italicum. Tom.
1. pag. 78.
79.

(i) Witte.
10. pag. 115.

[A] Where he remained from the Month of January, 1562, till about the beginning of the Spring 1563.] Pallavicini reproved Father Paul for having said, that Cardinal Simonetta, and Cardinal Altaemps, were named the Pope's Legates both at one time, to be added to the Legates that were already named. He knew not, that Simonetta was honoured with the Legation of the Council, at the same time with Ofus and Scripandus, several Months before Cardinal Al-

tacmp was made their Colleague (i). He censures him for another thing; which is, his mentioning Ofus and Scripandus, only when he is speaking of what happened a considerable time after their Legation. Such Faults are not very material; yet it cannot be thought wrong in a Censor, to take notice of them; since it is the Duty of an Historian to avoid them.

(i) Pallavic.
Hist. Conc.
Trent. 1562.
cap. 13. n.
11.

ALTENSTAIG (JOHN) Doctor of Divinity, lived in the XVIth Century. He was of Mindleheim, in Germany, and composed a Lexicon Theologicum, which is tolerably good [A].

[A] He composed a Lexicon Theologicum, which is tolerably good.] He dedicated it to the Bishop of Angsburg, the first of October, 1517. Konig places the first Edition of it in 1519 (1). I never saw it; but I have met with the second, which is of Antwerp, for Peter Bellerus, in 1576, in Folio; with this Title; "Lexicon Theologicum continens Voca"bulorum Descriptions, Definitiones, & Interpre-

"rationes peritules, Theologicæ Studioſis concinna"tum. — A Theological Lexicon, containing very "useful Descriptions, Definitions, and Interpretations
"of Words, compiled for the Use of Students in Di"vinity."

(1) Konig.
Bibl. p. 29.

ALTHAMERUS (ANDREW) a Lutheran Minister at Nuremberg, about the middle of the XVIth Century (a), published, not only some Works in Divinity [A], but likewise Notes on the Treatise of Tacitus, De Situ, Moribus, & Populis Germaniæ — Of the Situation, Manners, and People of Germany. They were printed at Nuremberg in the Year 1529, in 4to (b), and at Amberg in the Year 1609, in 8vo (c); and they were inserted by Simon Scharckius in the first Volume of the German Authors. He was so eager to reject the Doctrine of the Merit of Works, that he attacked the Apostle St James with the utmost Brutality (d). This gives us an Opportunity of examining a Passage of the Controversy between Grotius and Rivetius [B]. We shall see in this Disquisition, that our Althamerus assisted, in 1528, at the Conferences of Bern, which were the Forerunners of the Ecclesiastical Reformation in this Canton.

(a) Micron.
Hist. Eccles.
pag. 734.

(b) Gesner.
Biblioth. fol.
38. v. 16.

(c) Hertz.
Biblioth.
German.

(d) See R.
mark [B].

[A] Not only some Works in Divinity.] The Titles of them are: Conciliones Locorum Scripturæ, quæ Specie tenus inter se pugnare videntur. Annotationes in D. Jacobi Epistolam. De Peccato Originis. De Sacramento Altaris. He composed likewise a Dictionary of the proper Names, which are to be met with in the Bible, Sylva Biblicorum Nominum, &c. This Work was printed at Basil, in 1535. The Conciliones Locorum Scripturæ, was printed at Nuremberg, the same Year, and at Wittenberg, in the Year 1582. The Abridgment of Gesner takes notice of both these two Editions; but it is certain they were preceded by another, which appeared before the Year 1528 (1).

"tum; that is, I am pleased, that Rivetius does not "follow those, who reject the Epistles of St James,
"among whom some go still farther, and in plain
"Terms give St James the Lye." The second Piece is This: Rivetius demanded (3), Who are They, who talk in this manner? How many are They? and added, that, having searched among the Writings of the Jesuits, and other Controversitists, who eagerly collect Facts of this kind, whether the Protestants were ever reproached with a Blasphemy of this Nature, he had met with no such thing. The third Piece shews us, that Grotius mentioned no Author by Name, in his Reply to his Adversary (4), who had called upon him to expressly and warmly. This Silence made Rivetius conclude, that Grotius had no Author to alledge. Quod nunc Auctores non indicet harum contumeliarum, ostendit se nullis habere (5).
We find, by the fourth Piece, that Grotius, in re-joyning, cited the Words of Andrew Althamerus:
"Is, qui Jacobum accusavit Mendacii, fuit Andreas
"Althamerus

(1) Hofstadi-
ani Hist. Sacrum. part. 2.
pag. 84.

(2) Græti.
Animadv. in Notas Riveti
pag. 1019.
Tom. 3. O-
per. Riveti.

(3) Rivet.
Examen A-nimadv.
Grotius, p. g.
1029. Tom.
3. Op. ejus.

(4) Grotius.
Votum pro Fate Eccles.
ibid. pag.
1024.

(5) Rivet.
Apolog.
ibid. p. 1100.

(6) Grotii Difcu. To Apolog. t. Ri-vetiani, pag.
722. Opusc.
Grotii Edit.
Amsteloed.
apud Bleau,
ann. 1679,
in folio.

"Althamerus (6). Liber editus est Argentorati, Anno
"MDCLXXVII. Verba ejus inter cætera sunt: Vult
"nunc probare suam sententiam, sed directè contra scrip-
"turam agit. Non possumus hic defendere Jacobum. Ci-
"tat enim scripturam falsam: Et solus spiritus sanctus, Legi,
"Propheciis, Christo, Apostolicis omnibus, contradicit.
"Testimonium ipsius vanum est. Uni ipsi testi non "esse credendum, supra annotavimus, præsertim cum
"quo ipse Spiritus sanctus & tot testes veritatis dis-
"sentiant. Credendum Multitudini. Paulus multo
"dignius sanctiusque rem trahat. Si Abraham ex
"operibus justificatus, habet quod gloriatur, sed non
"apud Deum; quid enim dicit scriptura? Abraham
"credidit Deo, videlicet promissioni divinæ de semine;
"& reputatum, scilicet quia credidit, illi ad justi-
"tiam. Nonne quod ex filii immolatione justificatum
"dicit, recte mentitus est in caput suum? Quinde-
"cim enim annos ante immolatum Isaacum justifi-
"catus fuit Abraham, etiam nondum nato Isaac;
"non ex circumcissione, neque filii immolatione, sed ex
"sola Fide. Dicit enim scriptura, Credidit, &c. ut
"nihil habet Jacobus ad quod refugiat. Nos Fidei
"magistrum constitutus, & jam suis ipsissimis verbis
"scimus, nescivisse quid sit Fides. Et in fine Libri; Ne
"igitur succenseat nobis, Lector, si durius & vehementius
"calamus quandoque in Autorem invehit sumus. Meretur
"enim hoc Odium & hunc Spiritus vehementiam, dum
"aliam à nobis perfectionem atque Justitiam contem-
"dit, quam Fidei. — He, who gave St James
"the Lye, was Andrew Althamerus. His Book was "published at Strasbourg, in the Year 1527. His "Words, among others, are These. He then endea- "vours to confirm his Doctrine; but his Proof is "directly contrary to Scripture. We cannot here
"vindicate St James. For he cites Scripture falsely,
"and opposes his single Authority to That of the "Holy Ghost, the Law, the Prophets, Jesus Christ,
"and all the Apostles. His Testimony is nothing.
"I have shewn above, that his single Evidence is "not to be believed, especially when it clashes
"with That of the Holy Ghost, and so many Wit- "nesses of the Truth. We must be governed by "Numbers. St Paul treats the Subject with greater
"Dignity and Sanctity. For, if Abraham were ju- "stified by Works, he hath wherewith to Glory, but "not before God. For what saith the Scripture?
"Abraham believed God (to wit, the Divine Pro- "mise in relation to his Seed) and it was counted
"to him (namely, his Faith) for Righteousness.
"Does not St James truly lie against his own Head,
"in saying that he was justified by the offering up
"of his Son? For Abraham was justified sixteen "Years before the intended Sacrifice of his Son
"Isaac; even before Isaac was born; not by Cir- "cumcision, nor by the Sacrifice of his Son, but
"by Faith alone. For the Scripture saith, He be- "lieved, &c. So that St James is left without Ex- "cuse. I formerly looked upon this Apostle as a "Rule of Faith; but am now convinced, from his "own Words, that he did not himself know what "Faith was. And at the end of his Book, Be not
"angry with me, Reader, if I sometimes inveigh
"too roughly and vehemently against this Author.
"For he deserves these Reproaches, and this Indig-

* Rom. iv.
2, 3.

"nation of Mind, for requiring of us another kind
"of Perfection and Justification than that of Faith."
The last Piece shall be, that Rivetus, finding at last an exprefs Citation, answered (7), that it was insufficient; that Grotius had used the Plural Number; and that one is not many; unus non sunt multi. He condemns the Words of Althamerus; but he complains, that Grotius had not declared, that he was not a Calvinist. He proves, that He was a Lutheran;
and charges him with having undertaken the Popish Cause, at the Conferences of Bern, and with having maintained the Doctrine of the Real Presence. "Qui "cum in disputatione Bernensi (8), quam secuta est
"Reformatio Anni 1528, libera ei facta est dispu-
"tandi copia, volens passus est se à parte Pontifi-
"cia deligi, ut Oratoris munere in suggestu fun-
"geretur, & carnealem Christi præsentiam in cena
"defenderet. — At the Conference of Bern, which "was followed by the Reformation of the Year 1528,
"tho' he had free Liberty of Disputation, yet he suf"fered himself to be chosen by the Pope's Party, to "play the Orator in the Rostum, and to defend the
"corporeal Presence of Christ in the Eucharist."
His injurious Treatment of St James, concludes Rivetus, does not in the least affect us. The whole Disgrace of it recoils upon the Papists, and the Lutherans, whose Cause he pleaded.

From what we have here produced, it is easy to judge; I. That Rivetus engaged unnecessarily in an incidental Dispute. He might have passed by this Remark of Grotius, without any Prejudice to his Cause; and he might have been satisfied with demanding the Names of Those, who had the Boldness to treat an Apostle with such Indignity. II.
That he was mistaken, in believing, that his Adversary could not name any such. III. That, by dint of importunity, he occasioned a Discovery of his own Ignorance in a Matter of Fact; the Knowledge of which might have been to the Credit of his Reading and his Library. IV. That he flies for Refuge to little Evasions, which only serve to prolong Disputes, and to multiply unnecessary Additions. It is certain, that, in common Speech, when we know that an Author has published any thing, it is very allowable to say, that Authors have advanced it. Nor are we obliged to produce more than one Witness; unless when we expressly say, that several Persons have cast such a Reproach. But this is not Grotius's manner of speaking; his Expression is indeterminate; quidam dixerunt, there are, who have said; or, some have said. He would have fully acquitted himself, tho' the Author, whom he cited, were not a Calvinist, but a Lutheran; and it is idle in Rivetus to allege what passed in the Conferences of Bern. That is no Proof of Althamerus's being a Papist. We can only conclude from thence, that he was so opposite in Opinion to the Zuinglians, on the Doctrine of the Real Presence, that he made no
Scruple of maintaining it, even in favour of Popery.
If Rivetus was Self-content in this part of his Dispute, it is a Proof, that Controversialists know not how to distinguish between what is to the Purpose, and what is meer caviling.

(7) Rivet.
Grotian. Discuss. Dialogus, pag.
127. i. Opera
Tom. 3.

(8) He uses Hosianian's own Words,
Hist. sacr.
part. 2. p. 84.
with ut citing them.

ALTHUSIUS (JOHN) a German Civilian, flourished near the End of the XVIth Century. He wrote a Book of Politics. Some Civilians of his Country are strangely angry with him, for maintaining, that the Sovereignty of States belongs to the People [A]. He wrote a Treatise De Jurisprudencia Romana, another De Civilis Conversazione, another intitled Dicaologia, &c. I forgot to observe, in the former Editions,

[A] Some Civilians — are strangely angry with him for maintaining, that the Sovereignty of States belongs to the People. Boeclerus maintains, that Althusius's Principle is only fit to break all the Bonds of Civil Society, and that his Work is so far from deserving to be recommended to Students, as is done by several Persons, that it rather deserves to be burnt. "Omnes reges nihil aliud esse quam Magistratus — Althusio inter solennia carmina placet, cujus Politica non tradit sane, qui civitatis finis & felicitas & tranquillitas obtineri debeat, sed quibus modis omne vinculum societatis ac salutis civilis dissolvi ac everti possit. Demagogica appelles merito; & tamen, quia Jurisconsulti nomen præfert, & que-dam subinde in ostentationem ejus scientiæ jacti,

"commendari juventuti Academicæ audimus librum,
"orco dammandum, judicio eorum qui venena à
"cibis distinguere didicerunt (1). — That all
"Kings are nothing but Officers of the People — "is Althusius's darling Principle; whose Book of Po"litics is not designed to show, how the End, the "Happiness, and Tranquility of a State is best to be "obtained, but in what manner every Type of Society
"and Civil Security may be dissolved, and overturned.
"It may properly be called Democratical Politics;
"and yet, because the Name of a Civilian is prefixed
"to it, and there is here and there a pompous Dis"play of that Science in it; the Book is, we hear,
"recommended to the University Youth; though in the "Opinion of those, who have learned to distinguish
"Polity

(1) Boecler.
in Grotium
de Jure Belli, lib. 1.
cap. 3. n. 8.
pag. 235.

Editions, that he was of the Protestant Religion; that, after having been Professor of Law at Herborn, he had the Dignity of Syndic conferred upon him at Breme, and that the Jesuits, in answering the Anti-Coton, placed him in the List of those Protestants; who have spoken disrespectfully of the Regal Power [B].

"Poisson from wholesome Food, it deserves the severest Censure." The learned Conringius's Opinion of it is as follows: "Fundamentum doctrinæ suæ politicæ collocat in eo, quod summa Reip. cujusvis jure sit penes solum populum: qui error pestilens est, & turbando orbi aptus (2). — He lays the Foundation of his Political Doctrine in this; that the Sovereignty of every Republic is in the Hands of the People; which is a contagious Error, and calculated to disturb the Repose of the World." Another German Writer expresses himself with more Force: "In classem istam, says he (3), referendi sunt illi politicorum qui majestatis ἡγεῖτον δεικνύον populum faciunt, inde politici populares; & quia jugulum omnium principum ac Regum petunt, Monarchomachi dicti. Horum hominum nefanda dogmata refertum habet Althusius in sua politica, vulcano publico editio consecranda. — In this Class we must rank those Politicians, who make the People the Source of all Majesty; hence they are called Popular Politicians; and, because they would cut the Throats all Princes and Kings, they are called Anti-Royalists. Althusius has made great use of these Gentlemen's wicked Doctrines in his Politics; a Work, which deserves to be publicly condemned to the Flames." [B] The Jesuits — placed him in the List of those Protestants, who have spoken disrespectfully of the Regal Power.] I will give you the Words of Him, who presented to the Queen-Mother an Apologetical Answer to the Anti-Coton; "After History, man, says he (4), let us add the Doctrines and prels Words of John Arthusius (5), Doctor of Law, in his Politics, methodically digested, and printed at Herborn, in the Year 1603, in his Chapter of the Ephori; in which, to look no farther, he asserts, among other things, that it is lawful to detrone a Tyrant, to take from him the Administration of Affairs, with which he was intrusted; and even to put him to death, if no other Remedy can be found, and to substitute another in his Place." Althusius's Words are these (6). "Ejusmodi Tyrannum ab officio remove, administratione demandata privare, imo etiam, si alter contra vim se defendere non possunt, interficere, & alium in ejus locum substituere, possunt."

ALTIERI. The Dictionary of Moreri mentions two Cardinals of this Name: The One died in the Year 1654; the Other was Pope Clement X. We may add to these two the Cardinal Altieri, who died at Rome, the 29th of June, 1698.

ALTILIUS (GABRIEL) born in the Kingdom of Naples, flourished about the End of the XVth Century (a). He was chiefly esteemed for his Latin Verses, which shewed, that he cultivated polite Literature, and that he read the Ancients to great Advantage. This contributed to his Advancement in the Court of Ferdinand, King of Naples, which still retained some thing of the good Taste it had acquired in the Reign of King Alphonfus. He was chosen Preceptor to the young Prince Ferdinand [A]. It appears also, that he was employed in State-Affairs, and that he accompanied Jovian Pontanus to Rome, upon a Negotiation of Peace between King Ferdinand and Pope Innocent VIII (b). He had a great Share in the Friendship and Esteem of Pontanus, as appears from the Writings of the latter (c). Sannazarius gave him likewise several Marks of his Esteem in his Poems (d): These two Authors are not the only Persons, who have commended him [B]. One of Gabriel Altilius's finest Poems, is That, which he composed on the Marriage of Isabella of Arragon [C]. One would scarce believe, that Latin Poetry raised him to the Prelature; but it is certain, that it greatly contributed to his obtaining the Bishoprick of Policastro. Some find fault with him for neglecting the Muses, after his Advancement, which had [A] He was chosen Preceptor to the young Prince Ferdinand.] This is what Paul Jovius meant, when he used this Expression, junioris Ferdinandi regis (1). Ughelli makes use of it likewise (2). Toppi is of another Opinion: "Fu maestro, says he, di Re Ferdinando I. d' Aragona, è Vescovo di Policastro nel 1471 (3). — He was Preceptor of King Ferdinand I. of Arragon, and Bishop of Policastro, in 1471." I believe he is mistaken. Ferdinand I. died in the Year 1494, being above seventy Years old: So that he must have been born about the Year 1424; and Altilius must have been his Preceptor about the Year 1440. The Preceptor of a King's Son is seldom very young; he must have had time to gain the Reputation of a Man of Learning: And doubtless King Alphonfus, who was himself learned, and surrounded with learned Men, would not have chosen Altilius, without full Proof of his Abilities. Upon this Supposition Altilius must have been thirty Years of Age, in 1440; but, at that time, he was scarce born. He lived but a little more than sixty Years (4); and died in the Year 1501 (5).

[B] These two Authors are not the only Persons, who have commended him.] Gyraldus mentions him greatly to his Advantage. Basil Zanchius wrote several Verses in praise of Altilius, which are to be found in the Delights of the Italian Poets. John Mattheus Tysanus speaks well of him both in Verse and Prose (6). But if any one is desirous to see an Encomium upon his Wit and Disposition of Mind, let him read Alexander ab Alexandro, who describes at large the manner how he and some others were entertained by Altilius, when they went to wish him Joy of his Bishoprick (7). He gave them a Supper more becoming his first Condition, than the Dignity of a Bishop, with which he was then invested; he had not yet dismissed the Muses, his first Mistress (supposing he ever dismissed them); thus the Conversation turned upon some Verses of Marial, which were sung by a young Musician.

[C] One of Gabriel Altilius's finest Poems is That, which he composed on the Marriage of Isabella of Arragon.] It was by This, and by his Elegies, that he acquired his Reputation. "Ufque adeo mollior ac admirande in Elegis & Heroico carmine excelluit, sicuti ex Epithalamio Isabellæ Aragonicæ perspicitur, ut Pontani atque Actii testimonio antiquis vatibus æquaretur (8). — He was so great a Master of Elegiac and Heroic Poetry (as may be seen by his Epithalamium of Isabella of Arragon) that, in the Opinion of Pontanus and Actius, he was equal to the antient Poets." Julius Scaliger found too great a Profusion of Thought and Expression in his Epithalamium. His Opinion of it is this: "Gabriel Altilius Epithalamium cecinit longe optimum, excellentissimum vero futurum, si sibi ille temperasset. Dum enim vult omnia dicere, afficit auditorem aliquando fastidio tanto, quanta in aliis voluptate. Est enim nimius, quod vitium illi genti est peculiare. Est enim totis illis Italæ tractibus perpetua loquendi fames (9). — Gabriel Altilius composed an excellent Epithalamium; so did he

(4) Réponse. Apolog. à l'Anti cotton p. 185, 180.

(5) It should be Althusius.

(6) Althusius Politics methodicè digestæ, cap. 14.

(c) He wrote an Epitaph for Altilius, and dedicated to him his Treatise de Magnificencia. See likewise his Dialogue Regium, pag. 147.

(d) Eleg. 11. ver. 17. & Epigr. 7.

(7) Genial. dicrum, lib. 5. cap. 11.

(8) Jovius, ubi supra.

(9) Jul. Caesaris Poetic. l. 6. "beaverer pag. 735.

(c) See below the beginning of the Remark [D].

(f) See the End of Remark [D].

had been so serviceable to him [D]. They discover Ingratitude and Shamelessness (e) in the precipitate manner of his leaving them; and his Fault would seem unpardonable to them, had they not some Regard to the Excuses he might make, that Episcopacy required he should apply himself earnestly to the Study of Holy Writ. I shall endeavour to rectify what is said concerning the time of his Death (f). We find only the Epithalamium of Isabella of Arragon in the Collection of Gruterus, and in That of John Matthæus Tuscanus [E]. It is very probable that most of Altilius's other Verses are lost.

"however would have been much better, had he restrained his Genius. For, by endeavouring to say every thing upon this Subject, he becomes as tedious to the Reader, as he is entertaining upon others. He is too diffuse; a Vice peculiar to his Nation; for in all that Tract of Italy they are never tired with talking." This is not very complaisant to the Neapolitans (10).

(10) See Remark [H] of the Article ALEXANDER AN ALEXANDRO, towards the End.

[D] Some find Fault with him for neglecting the Muses, — which had been so serviceable to him. 'Tis hard of Digestion, that a Bishop should be the Author of this Reproach, and that he should express it in such harsh Terms: "Is virtutis merito Pollicastri (ea arbs olim Buxentum fuit) antistes factus, à Mufis, per quas profecerat, celeriter IMPUDENTERQUE discessit, MAGNO hercle INGRATI animi PIACULO, nisi ad spem non injustis venie ob id culpa tegetur, quod ad sacras literas nequaquam ordinis oblitus tempestivè confugisset (11). — Being raised, on Account of his Virtues, to the Bishoprick of Pollicastro (formerly Buxentum), he quickly and SHAMEFULLY deserted the Muses, his Benefactresses; Guilty, in this, of the HEINOUS CRIME of INGRATITUDE; unless he thought to screen himself from reproach, by pleading that, in consideration of his Order, he had opportunely applied himself to the Study of the Scriptures." See Mr Baillet's judicious Reflexions upon this (12). These four Verses of Latemus are not amiss.

(11) Paul Jovius, ubi supra

(12) Baillet Jugemens sur les Poët. Tom. 1. pag. 138. See also Tom. 3. pag. 82.

Audiit Altilius desertis transfuga Mufis,
In quædam tabulis nobile nomen erat.
Sed quid peccavit, si demeratur, ut olim
Carminibus Phœbum, nunc pietate Deum?

Censors the Bard Altilius may accuse
Of base Desertion from his friendly Muses
But where's the Crime,
If He, who in Apollo's Temple trod,
His Priest — now serves in pious Prose his God?

(13) Sallust says, Impudens facile suis artibus retinetur, quibus initio partum est. — Power is easily kept up by the same Arts, by which it is at first obtained.

(14) Jovius in Elog. c. 125.

Altilius would have been more to blame, if, after having obtained a Mitre by preaching, he had behaved like many others, who preach no more, after they are made Bishops. The reason is, because, to preserve this kind of Power, it is not necessary to continue the same Expedients, which are made use of to procure it (13). Paul Jovius is as unfortunate in Point of Fact. He pretends, that Altilius left off writing Verses, after his Promotion to a Bishoprick; and that the finest of his Poems is his Epithalamium of Isabella of Arragon (14). I make no doubt but this Isabella is the, who was contracted, the first of November 1472, to John Galeas Sforza, Duke of Milan. I cannot therefore persuade myself, that Altilius is guilty of the Desertion, with which he is charged. He was made a Bishop in 1471: now the best of his Poems was composed after this time: ought we therefore to complain that the Mitre made him abandon Parnassus? Observe, that He wrote this Epithalamium, not at the time of the Contract, but upon the Nuptials of Isabella of Arragon; that is, in the Year 1489 (15). This is proved by the first Lines of it.

Purpureos jam læta sinus Tithonia Coniux
Extulerat, roseoque diem patefecerat Ortu, Coruleum tremulo percurrans lumine possum,
Qui cupido sua vota viro desponsaque dudum
Connubia, OPTATOSQUE locos & gaudia serret.

Aurora now, from Tithon rising gay,
Blush'd in the Rosy East, and gave the Day;
Whilst trembling Beams upon the Ocean play;
The Day, which to the Happy Bridegroom's Arms
Consigns the PROMIS'D Fair, with all her Charms.

By this we may convict the Abbot Ugbelli of a gross Mistake; who says, that Altilius died in his Bishoprick of Pollicastro, in the Year 1484 (16). It may be proved, that he did not die 'till about the Year 1501; for Jovian Pontanus observes, in mentioning the News of his Death, that Sannazarus was upon the point of going into France with King Frederic (17).

[E] We find only the Epithalamium in the Collection of Gruterus, and That of J. M. Tuscanus. I understand by this Collection the Work, entitled Delicia C. C. Italorum Poëtarum, collectore Renato Gbero. The Collection of John Matthæus Tuscanus is entitled, Carmina illustrium poetarum Italorum. This Author says, in his Psalm, that he had only read the Epithalamium, and some few Epigrams of Altilius. He, who procured a new Edition of Sannazarus's [*] Latin Poems, in 1689, and illustrated them with Notes, observes, that he does not remember to have seen any printed Pieces of Altilius, but the Epithalamium, and an Epigram; from whence he infers, that many of them are lost, since Paul Jovius mentions this Poet's Elegies, and Sannazarus ascribes some Odes to him (18). To repair this Loss in some measure, he has given us, in the Notes on Sannazarus, three or four Pieces of Altilius, which he had in Manuscript. Toppi mentions three Pieces of Altilius inserted "ne' hori delle Rime de' Poët" illustri raccolti & ordinati da Girolamo Ruscelli, stampati in Venetia, nel 1558. in 8vo. — In "the Poetical Flowers of the celebrated Poets collected and disposed by William Ruscelli, and printed at Venice, in 1558, in 8vo." These three Pieces are, Gabrielis Altilii lamentatio, Ejusdem Epithalamium, Ejusdem Elegia.

[*] [It was the late Mr Bruckhusius. REM. CRIT.]

(15) Mr de la Monnoie communicated this Remark to me.

(16) Ugbell Ital. sacr. p. 796.

(17) Jov. Pontan. in Dial. Ægidius p. 147. 1487. Mr de la Monnoie Revised me this.

(18) Note in Sannazar. P. 184.

(19) Toppi, Biblioth. Napolit. pag. 108.

ALTINGIUS (HENRY) Professor of Divinity at Heidelberg, and at Groningen, was born at Embsen, the 17th of February 1583. His Family had been a long time very considerable in Friesland. He was designed, from the Cradle, for an Office, wherein his Father had signalized himself [A], I mean the sacred Ministry. For this end

[A] An Office wherein his Father had signalized himself. His Name was Mensio Altingius; and he was the Grandson of another Mensio, who was given in Hostage to the Duke of Gelderland by the States of Drent in the Year 1523. Another Mensio Altingius, Great Grandfather to Him, who was given in Hostage, had been Counsellor to Reinold the Fat, Duke of Gelderland, and retired into the Country of Drent, in the Year 1561 (1). Mensio Altingius, the Minister, was the first, who, with two others, preached the Reformation in the Territory of Groningen, about the Year 1566, during the Tyranny of the Duke of Alba, Sub ipsa Albani ducis grassante

(1) Vita Jacobi Alting.

Tyrannide (2). He was also the first Minister, who preached in the great Church of Groningen, after the Reduction of that Place to the Power of the States-General, in the Year 1594. He served the Church of Embsen thirty eight Years faithfully, and opposed, with great Courage, the Fury of the Anabaptists, and the Plots of the Ubiquitarians. He died, the seventh of October 1612, the same Day that his Son and Abraham Scultetus were in danger of being cast away on the Lake of Harlem. "Subita ac procellosa coorta tempestate, naufragio ac submersionali proximi (Scultetus & Altingius) agere tandem, toto corpore madentes, salve tamen, divina clementia

(2) I must acquaint the Reader, that the Duke of Alba did not arrive in the Low-Countries before 1567; and therefore the Author of Henry Altingius's Life has not been so exact in this Particular, as he should have been.

and he was sent very early to the Schools, and, after he had acquired Classical Learning, and gone thro' a Course of Philosophy at Groningen, he was sent into Germany in the Year 1602. He was three Years at Herborn, where he made so great a Progress under the famous Pfister, and under Matthias Marinus, and William Zeppernus, that he obtained leave to teach Philosophy and Divinity. He was preparing to travel into Switzerland and France, when he was made Preceptor to three young Counts (a) who studied at Sedan, with the Electoral Prince Palatine. He entered upon this Employ, the beginning of September 1605. The Storm, which threatened the Duke of Bouillon from Henry IV., and which was attended with no Consequence, induced the Electoral Prince to leave Sedan, with these young Lords, in the Year 1606. Altingius followed them to Heidelberg, where he continued to instruct the three young Counts. He was also admitted to read some Geographical and Historical Lectures to the Electoral Prince, and became his sole Preceptor in the Year 1608. We may meet with Proofs of this in the Vatican Library [B]. He accompanied him to Sedan in this Quality, and instructed him in so accomplished a manner, that the young Prince, upon his Return to Heidelberg, in 1610, being interrogated on all Points of Religion before the Duke of Deux Ponts, Administrator of the Electorate, and several other Persons of Note, answered very pertinently, and in Latin. He was one of those, who was chosen to accompany the young Elector into England, in the Year 1612, where he became acquainted with George Abbot, Archbishop of Camberbury; Dr King, Bishop of London; and Dr Hakewell, Preceptor of the Prince of Wales. He had likewise the Honour to converse with King James. The Marriage of the Elector with the Princess of England being celebrated in London in the Month of February 1613 (b), Altingius went before with his former Pupils, and arrived at Heidelberg, the First of April. In the Month of August following, he was made Professor of Divinity Common Places; and, because he could not preside in the Disputes, without being Doctor of Divinity, he took that Degree in the Month of November, with the usual Ceremonies. In 1616, he had a laborious Office conferred upon him, which was the Direction of the Seminary, if I may be permitted so to call the College of Wisdom at Heidelberg. He was offered the Professorship, vacant by the Death of Coppenius, in the Year 1618, which was the second Professorship in the Faculty of Divinity; but he refused it, and procured it for Scultetus. He gave great Proofs of his Learning in the Synod of Dort, whither he was sent with two other Deputies of the Palatinate (c). It was at that time that the Degree of Doctor, which the University of Leyden had suffered to be extinct, was revived. Altingius solemnly created the Professor, John Polyander, Licentiate in Divinity, who afterwards received his Doctor's Degree from Scultetus, by which means he became invested with the Authority requisite for conferring the Degree of Doctor on his Colleagues. Altingius, no doubt, entertained great Expectations a little after his Return to Heidelberg. The Troubles of Bohemia gave a Crown to the Elector Palatine; but these happy Beginnings were soon attended with a dreadful Ruin. Tilly took Heidelberg by Assault, in the Month of September, 1622, and suffered all imaginable Disorders to be committed in it [C]. Altingius, having escaped the Fury of the Soldiers, as it were by Miracle [D], followed his Family, which he had sent some time

(a) The Counts of Nassau, Solms, and Hienberg.

(b) Konig does not allow him a proper time, when he says visit anno 1613. His flourishing State was not then arrived.

(c) Abraham Scultetus, and Paul Tullianus. The latter was deputed by the Ecclesiastical Senate, and the other two by the University.

(1) Vir. Hen. Altingii.

"mentia in proximam ripam everserunt (3). — A sudden and stormy Tempest arising, They (Scultetus and Altingius) were in danger of being cast away and drowned; but, at last, they providentially escaped, drenched and wet to the Skin, on the next Shore." His Life, written at large by Uldo Em-

(4) Vir. Jacobi Altingii.

[B] We may meet with Proofs of this in the Vatican Library.] The Exercises of the King of Bohemia, corrected by Altingius, are preserved there, and shewn to Travellers, as the Author of That Professor's Life informs us. He adds, that these Monuments deserve as much to be shewn to the Curious, as most Relicks which they see. "Hujus magisterii ejus ne unquam apud posteros instatata queat esse industria, vel Roma, quod miremur, faciet, quæ in Bibliotheca Vaticana inter Heidelbergensia cimelia, dicam an spolia, ostentat themata & exercitia styli Regis Bohemæ Altingii manu emendata, eruditius peregrinatoribus minimeque superficialius visenda, atque non minus credo, quam pleræque ipsorum reliquæ ἀξιοθέατα, digna spectatu (5). [C] Suffered all imaginable Disorders to be committed. They plunder'd, they ravish'd, they kill'd, they tortur'd; in a Word, they committed every Outrage, which the Fury of Soldiers, animated by a false Zeal for Religion, is capable of. "Urbs — impetu & vi capta, omniaque dira exempla passa direptionis, laniænz, libidinis, quæ militaris licentia, victoris insolentia, odium religionis, barbarorum Croatarum feritas comminisci potuerit, aut patrare — Ea nocte infomni & mœsta, inter lamenta & ejulatus,

(c) Vita Hen. Altingii.

"quibus omnia undique perfrestrebant, aut sequioris sexus vim patientis, aut virorum æqualeis subditem, ac per varia tormenta ac vulnere lenta citave morte affectorum, &c. (6) — The Town was taken by Assault; and every dreadful Instance was permitted, of Plunder, Butchery, and Lust, which the Licentiousness of an Army, the Insolence of a Commander, religious Hatred, and the Brutality of barbarous Croats, could contrive or perpetrate. — In that sleepless and calamitous Night, amidst the Cries and Groans, which were heard on all Sides, either of violated Women, or Men suffering variety of Tortures, some dying a quick, some a lingering Death, &c." These are the usual Fruits of War; enough to make those tremble, who undertake to advise it, to prevent Evils, which, perhaps, may never happen, and which, at the worst, would often be less than those, which necessarily follow a Rupture. I shall have occasion, more than once, to remark the Anguish of Mind, to which great Commanders have been reduced, when their Consciences have reproached them with the Ravages they have occasioned.

(6) Ex Vita Henr. Altingii.

[D] Having escaped the Fury of the Soldiers, as it were by Miracle.] The Circumstances of his Escape deserve to be related. He was in his Closet, when he heard that the Enemy, being Masters of the City, began to plunder it. He bolted his Door, and betook himself to Prayer. One of his Friends, accompanied by two Soldiers, came to him, and advised him to retire, by the Back-door, to the Chancellor's House, which was put under a strong Guard; Count Tilly intending to secure all the Papers, which were there.

The

time before to Heilbron. He met it at Schorndorf; where with much Difficulty he abode a few Months: for the Lutheran Ministers put in practice the Doctrine of Non-Toleration against him [E]. In the Year 1623, he retired with his Family to Embsen, and went from thence to wait upon the King of Bohemia at the Diague. This Prince retained him as Preceptor to his eldest Son (d), and would not permit him to serve the Church of Embsen, which desired him for their Minister, nor the University of Francker, which offered him, in the Year 1625, the Professorship of Divinity, vacant by the Death of Sibrandus Lubbertus. This Prince was prevailed upon, with great Difficulty, to give him leave, the next Year, to accept of a Professorship of Divinity at Groningen. Altingius took Possession of it, the sixteenth of June 1627, and kept it 'till he died. It is true, that, in 1633, he was fully resolved to leave Groningen for Leyden; but it was upon this Condition, that the States of Groningen should consent to it, which they refused to do. It is true likewise, that he listened to the Proposals, which Prince Lewis Philip (e) made him in 1634, to come and re-establish the University of Heidelberg, and the Churches of the Palatinate; and that he was already arrived at Francfort, through many Dangers; but this Design proved abortive by reason of the Battel of Norlingen, which the Imperialists won. He was obliged to return to Groningen through By-ways. It does not appear, that he had any Thoughts afterwards of removing to any other Place. The last Years of his Life were full of Trouble; Grief and Diseases gave him great Uneasiness. He was so afflicted at the Death of his eldest Daughter in 1639, that he fell into an obstinate Melancholy, which brought him into a Quartan-Agüe, of which he was with great Difficulty cured, though not perfectly; for the Remains of it turned to a Lethargy in 1641. Scarce had the Physicians, by repeated Applications, removed this Distemper, when a domestic Affliction came upon him, which occasioned his bodily Infirmities to return upon him stronger than ever. Altingius lost his Wife in the Year 1643, and grieved so much for her, that he was no longer able to overcome his Melancholy. From this time to the Day of his Death his Infirmities continued.

(d) His was cut away in the Sea of Palatinate, and 1629.

(e) He was Administrator of the Palatinate, and, in 1633, refused to make Altingius Professor of Divinity, and Ecclesiastical Senator.

The Lieutenant Colonel of the Regiment of Hohenzollern guarded this House: With this Battle-axe, said he, I have killed ten Men this Day; Doctor Altingius should soon be the eleventh, if I knew where he lies hid: Who are you? continued he, directing his Discourse to the Doctor. Altingius was not so confounded, but he readily replied; I was Teacher in the College of Wisdom: an Answer not the farthest from Truth. The Author of his Elogium compares this Answer to that, which St Athanasius made, "Sanè ille Vultus, ille Habitus, ille Sermo, is rerum articulus, quemvis alium percellere poterat: at noster impetriturus, solerti tamen usui responso, nec aperte se negavit Altingium, nec tamen intempestive se prodidit, eadem fere qua olim in casu simili S. Athanasius dexteritate usus, Ego, (inquit) Ludimagister fui in Collegio Sapientie." — In truth, such a Look, such a Mien, and such Language, might have confounded any one else: But our Hero, undisturbed, returned, however, an artful Answer; neither positively denying that he was Altingius, nor unreasonably betraying himself; in which he had recourse to the same Artifice, which was put in practice, in a like Case, by St Athanasius. I was a School-master, says he, in the College of Wisdom. The Lieutenant Colonel promised to save him. The next Day the Jesuits took Possession of the House, and sent away this Officer so suddenly, that he had not time to enquire after his Teacher of the College of Wisdom. Thus Altingius found himself in the Hands of the Jesuits; but he hid himself in a Garret; and, by good Fortune, a Cook of the Electoral Court was employed by Count Tilly, whose Kitchen was in the Chancellor's House. This Man privately convey'd Victuals to Altingius in the Garret, and even gave him an Opportunity of going to see what past at his own House, attended by three Soldiers of the Bavarian Army for his Guard. Altingius found his House in great Disorder, and his Closet in the Power of a Captain; who told him, either in a bantering way, or out of Civility, that he gave him leave to carry away what Book he pleased. He declined the Offer, and only answered, that, if those things belonged to him, he desired God would give him a longer Possession of them, than their first Master had. Altingius ran many Dangers in his return; and, after three Days, Tilly gave him leave to retire. I have read, somewhere, that, had not Altingius been afraid of being thought a Plagiary, he might have saved many Books of the Electoral Library; and that he had removed many of them to the College of Wisdom; but I confess I do not understand this; I find a Contradiction in it. If he convey'd no Books out of the Electoral Library into his own Closet, for fear of being accounted a Plagiary; why do you say, that he carried away several of them to the College of Wisdom, and that he might have saved many? Besides, according to the Author of his Life, he was permitted only to carry away one Volume. Read the following Passage. "Hunc (Quintilianum) & alios illius Bibliothecæ libros sua manu in Collegio Sapientie exceperat Henricus Altingius, atque ex communi illo incendio Bavarico eripisset, nisi suis reculis timuisset, & ne plagiarius haberetur, si antiquus liber in eius suppellectile reperiretur, verius fuisset (7). — Henry Altingius had picked out this (Quintilian) and other Books of that Library, with his own Hands, in the College of Wisdom; and might have saved them from that general Bavarian Conflagration, had he not been afraid of passing for a Plagiary, if the ancient Copy was found in his Possession."

[E] The Lutheran Ministers put in practice the Doctrine of Non-Toleration against him.] At the Request of the Electors, he obtained leave of the Duke of Wurtemberg to reside at Schorndorf. He continued there 'till the Month of February, which followed the Desolation of the Palatinate. The Lutheran Ministers murmured at his living there, and at the Permission, which the Duke had given him; the Reason of their Discontent was, that Altingius was a Professor of Heidelberg. "Ibi ad Februarium usque hæsit, facultate hac per serenissimam Electricem impetrata à Duce Wirtembergico, ejus alias Ministri Lutherani, quasi Ponti Axeni accolæ, aut aves Diomedæ, quæ solos socios granter accipiunt, id ferrebant ægerime, non alia de causa quam quod Altingius Professor esset Heidelbergensis (8). — He continued there 'till February, having obtained leave from the Duke of Wurtemberg, by means of the Serene Elector; which was taken ill by the Lutheran Ministers, for no other Reason, but because Altingius was Professor at Heidelberg, resembling in this the People bordering on the Euxine Sea, or Diomedes's Birds, who receive joyfully only their Fellows." I believe they would have more strictly observed the Laws of Hospitality towards a Merchant of the Palatinate, or towards a Calvinist Professor of a very remote Country, than towards a Professor of Heidelberg. The Palatinate was near the Dutchy of Wurtemberg; the Professors of Tubingen, and those of Heidelberg, frequently attack'd each other in Disputations, and Polemical Writings. Behold the Source of Theological and Professorial Enmity! But after all, we cannot excuse their ill Treatment of Altingius. He had escaped from the Popish Flames; the Injuries he had received from the com-

(7) Lomeier de Biblioth. pag. 278. I know not whether a Man may be called a Plagiary, who steals, not the Thoughts of an Author, but a Book or a Volume in kind, without publishing it in his own Name.

(8) Vita Altingii.

continued to increase. He died christianly, and devoutly, on the Twenty fifth of August, 1644. He was a Man of great Merit. The Books he composed [F] are a Proof of his Learning, and his Application to the Discharge of the Academical Duties; and it is well known, that he employed his Abilities other ways, in serving his Neighbours. He went to see the King of Bohemia every Year, and reviewed the Studies of the Royal Family. He took a great deal of Pains in the Collections, which were made every where in the Protestant Countries for the Churches of Germany, and particularly for those of the Palatinate. He was one of the three Commissioners for the Collections from England, and disposed of the Alms of Lewis de Geer. I omit the two considerable Commissions he was charged with; one relating to the Revival, which was made at Leyden, of the new Dutch Translation of the Scripture, and the other relating to the Visitation of the County of Steinsfurt. He had Colleagues in the first; but he was sole Inspector-General in the second; the Count of Bentheim having sent for him to make Inquisition against Socinianism, which threatened his Country, and to regulate the Churches. Altingius's Elogy says, that he was not a quarrelsome Divine [G]; he did not spend his Time in trifling, insignificant, Scruples; he was not fond of Novelty; he was zealous for the ancient Doctrine; an Enemy to the Subtilties of the Schools; and relied only on the Scripture [H]. All Persons of his Profession ought to imitate his Conduct in the Management of their domestic Affairs [I]. They were spoken of no otherwise, than as being, in general, right. They afforded no other Topic for Conversation. He married at Heidelberg in the Year 1614, and had seven Children, of which one Daughter and two Sons survived him. The eldest was Professor of the Civil Law at Deventer (f). The following Article treats of the other.

(f) Taken from James Altingius's Life, among those of the Professors of Groningen, printed in France, in 1654.

mon Enemy, should have served as a powerful Recommendation of him; his Belief did not differ from that of Wittenberg, but in things not essential. If Men must hate and persecute each other for Religion, they should wait, at least, 'till they are like the People of Egypt, some in the Service of one God, and some in the Service of quite a different God.

Inter finitimos vetus atque antiqua simulas,
Immortale odium, & nunquam fanabile Vultus,
Ardet adhuc Ombos, & Tentyra, fummus utrinque
Inde furor vulgo, quod numina vicinorum
Odit uterque locus, quum solos credit habendos
Esse deos, quos ipse colit (9).

Ombos and Tentyr, neighb'ring Towns, of late Broke into Outrage of deep-seated Hate.
A Grudge in both, time out of mind, begun,
And mutually bequeath'd from Sire to Son.
Religious Spite, and pious Spleen, bred first
This Quarrel, which so long the Bigots nurs'd.
Each calls the other's God a senseless Stock,
His own Divine; tho' from the self-same Block
One Carver fram'd them. T A T E.

Thus we see, that the Promoters of Ecclesiastical Wars always suppose, that their religious Disputes are of the greatest Consequence. It is a Gangrene, say they, it is undermining the Foundations of Religion.

[F] The Books he compos'd. Those, which have been published, are as follows. Notæ in Decadem problematum Johanne Behm, de glorio Dei & beatorum cælo, Heidelbergæ, 1618. Loci communes cum dialectici tum elenctici: Problemata tam theoretica quam practica: Explicatio Catechesos Palatinæ cum cindictis ab Arminianis & Socinianis, Amstelodami, 1646, in 3 Volumes. Exegesis Augustanæ Confessionis una cum syllabo controversiarum Lutheranarum, Amstelodami, 1647. Methodus Theologiæ Didacticæ & Catechetiæ, Amstelodami, 1650. Those, which are not published, are more in Number, and some of them are imperfect: The List of them is to be seen at the end of the Author's Life. I find there, that the Medulla Historiæ Prophane, published by Daniel Pareus, is a Work of our Altingius. It is a Plagiarism, which has not been observed by Thomastius, nor Mr Almeloveen (10). The Ecclesiastical History of the Palatinate, from the Reformation down to the Administrator John Casimir, is one of the most considerable among the Manuscript Works of Altingius.

[G] He was not a quarrelsome Divine. I shall set down the very Words of his Historian. "Alienus a jurgis & vitiliigiis cuminifectorum, ab iis distinctunculis & ineptis Sophistarum, quibus mysteria solitis potius implicantur quam explicantur; a scrupulofitatibus præciftarum, qui nodum querunt in

"scirpo, colant culicem, camelum deglutientes (11). (11) Vit. Jacobii Alting. "----- He avoided all Quarrels and Disputes about "Trifles, together with the idle Distinctions of the "Sophists, in which the Mysteries of Salvation are "rather taken for granted, than explained; likewise "the scrupulous Behaviour of the Fanatics, who carry "Religion to Superstition, strain out a Gnat, and swallow a Camel." The Sect of the Fanatics made a noise in Holland, about forty Years ago (12). It is very well characterised by these Words; they strain out a Gnat, and swallow a Camel; they open a Door to Disputes, which serve only to furnish the Prophane and Libertine with Arms. To go on; "Ab omni denique xaravapovia, & novatione in Theologico, quasi illud semper Tertulliani tenens, primum quodque verissimum. — Lastly, be avoided all Innovations in Divinity, adhering always to that Maxim of Tertullian, The first is the truest." There is no doubt, but that the love of Novelty is a Plague, which, having thrown Universities and Synods into a Flame, shakes and disorders a State, and sometimes overthrows it: So that we cannot too much commend those Professors, who recommend to their Pupils, to avoid this Spirit of Innovation. I confess, the Care, which is taken to recommend the Observation of the ancient and commonly received Doctrine, seems to imply a Principle of Authority in the Church, which is constantly rejected by the Protestants, when they have occasion to dispute with the Roman Catholics. But this ought not to discourage any one from preventing Innovations; for if a Reason were never to be made use of, 'till it were free from all Difficulties, every thing would be at a stand.

[Give me leave to remark here, an Error in our English Version of this proverbial Saying. We render it strain at a Gnat, and swallow a Camel; whereas both the Greek Term διδυλίζω, and the Latin Colo, signify to STRAIN OUT any thing, out of a Cup, or drinking Vessel, for instance, into which a Gnat or other Insect may have fallen. REM. CRIT.]

[H] An Enemy to the Subtilties of the Schools, and relied only on the Scripture. See what follows: "Theologiam probabat ac tuebatur solidam ac masculam, non ex lacunis Scholasticorum, etsi illarum inextertus non esset, sed ex fontibus Siloë & Scripturarum derivatam; ut gloriæ sibi duceret, se ab imperitis nonnullis ac natus Palæmonibus traduci, tanquam Theologum Scripturarum & Biblicum (13). (13) Vita — He approved of, and maintained, a sound and manly Divinity, not derived from the standing Pools of the Schoolmen, though he was not unacquainted with them, but from the running Brooks of Siloë, and the Scriptures; inasmuch that he thought it an Honour to be traduced by ignorant and scoffing Gramarians, as a Scriptural Bible-Divine."

[I] Persons of his Profession ought to imitate his Conduct, in the management of their domestic Affairs. It was only known, that no one knew the Transac-

(12) I wrote this in 1678.

* See REM. CRIT. below.

(9) Juvenal. Sat. xv. ver. 33.

(10) He has published a Catalogue of the Plagiarists of the End of his Amnestics Theologico-Philologicæ, Amst. 1694.

(14) Ibid.(15) *Com-
p. in E-pist. Re-
m. ad Al-ting. CRU-
TUS.*

ons of his Family, farther than that all things were done decently, and according to the fear of God. "Hinc in familia ejus omnia semper pacata, omnia ordinata, de qua hoc solum sciretur, quod à nemine sciretur quid in illa fieret, nisi quod piè, compositè, decenter omnia fieri neminem lateret (14)." This is much better than that whatever is said or done in a Minister's House should be the Subject of public Conversation. Such a Piece of News was talk'd of there this Morning, says one (15); last Night such a Reflexion of a News-Writer was controverted there, will another say; he may excuse himself as Adam did, says a third, and say, The Wife whom thou gavest me, made me do it. What! says a fourth, you only heard this Circumstance at that Place; I mistrust it; it is an ill Office of Intelligence: The Nympha loquax, who prebides there, adds what she pleases to Relations:

Give me none of her Glosses, or her Commentaries; I appeal to the Text, how uncertain soever it may be. It can be no wonder, that Altingius was so inconsolable after the Death of his Spouse, if it be true, as his Historian Relates, that he lived near thirty Years with her, without any Complaint or Quarrel. Cum ea per annos prope 30 sine rixa sine querela conjunctissime vixit (16). Few Persons can make this boast, and complain, that they are ignorant, whether the Effects of Reconciliation are as sweet in Marriage, as in Gallantry.

Amantium iræ amoris redintegratio est (17).

Quarrels of Lovers only prove New Fuel to the Fire of Love.

(17) *Ter-
Addr. Act.
3. Sc. 3. ver.
23.*

ALTINGIUS (JAMES) Son of the preceding, was Professor of Divinity at Groningen. He was born at Heidelberg on the Twenty seventh of September 1618, during his Father's Deputation to the Synod of Dort. His Childhood was a perpetual change of Place [A]. He went thro' his Studies at Groningen with great Success; and, having a great Inclination to the Oriental Languages, he went to Embden, in the Year 1638, to study under Rabbi Gumprecht Ben-Abraham. He went into England, in the Year 1640; where he made himself known to the greatest Men: he preached there, and was admitted a Priest of the Church of England by the learned John Prideaux Bishop of Worcester. He had once resolved to pass his Life there; but he accepted the Hebrew Professorship, vacant by the Death of Gomar, at Groningen. He was installed there, the thirteenth of January 1643, the same Day that Samuel Des Marets was intalled in the Professorship of Divinity, which the same Gomar had exercised. Altingius's Titles and Offices increased with Time; He was admitted Doctor of Philosophy, the Twenty first of October 1645; Academical Preacher in the Year 1647; and Doctor and Professor of Divinity in 1667. He travelled twice to Heidelberg; once in the Year 1651, and afterward in the Year 1662, and had received a thousand Marks of Esteem from the Elector Palatine Charles Lewis; who solicited him several times to accept a Professorship of Divinity there; but he civilly declined it. He soon quarrelled with Samuel Des Marets, his Colleague, and it was almost impossible it should be otherwise; since their Method of teaching was quite different, nor did they agree in Principles on several Points. Altingius applied himself to the Scripture, without any Mixture of Scholastic Divinity; He was in the full Career of Glory; he still pressed forward, and wanted neither Wit nor Learning to support his Opinions. The first Lectures, which he read, at his own House, on the Catechism, drew so many Auditors, that, for want of Room in his Chamber, he was obliged to make use of the University Auditory. He had most of the Foreign Students on his side. His Colleague accustomed himself to the Distinctions and Method of the Schoolmen; he had been a long time famous; he published many Books, had a ready Wit, and great Learning; and the Students in Divinity of that Country applied themselves to him, as the surest way to obtain a Church; for all the Parishes were served by Ministers, who had studied according to his Method. This was more than sufficient to raise, and keep up a Division, tho' Temper were not concerned in it. Altingius had very great Obstacles to surmount. The Majority of Voices, and Authority of Age, were on his Adversary's side: Besides, Des Marets had an Advantage in his Favour, sufficient to arm all the World against his Antagonist, and to awaken the most venerable Prejudices; which was to represent Altingius as an Innovator; one who removed the sacred Boundaries, which our Fathers had so wisely placed on the Confines of Truth and Falshood. He set up for a public Accuser; and imputed Thirty one Erroneous Propositions to James Altingius. The Curators of the University sent the Accuser's Writing, and the Answer of the Accused Person, to the Divines of Leyden, without giving the Parties notice of it, and desired them to give their Opinion upon it. The Judgment they gave deserves to be taken notice of [B]. Altingius was declared innocent

of

[A] His Childhood was a perpetual Change of Place. For, at two Years of Age, he was sent to Christian Chytraeus, Minister of Bretten. The Year following, his Mother was obliged, on account of the impending Siege of Heidelberg, to retire to Heilborn, notwithstanding her being with Child, and she carried him with her; from whence, at the end of the Year, they were obliged to retire to Schorndorf. "Sequentem mox anno, propter imminentem Heidelbergæ obsequium, matre etiam comite, eaque tum gravidâ, Heilbornam, indeque exacto anno Schorndorfium missus est (1)." His Father, Henry Altingius, afterwards brought his whole Family to Embden, through By-ways. From Embden he removed to Leyden, where he was Preceptor to the King of Bohemia. The

(1) Viticobi Alting.

Plague obliged him to go from Leyden to Honslaerdijk; lastly, he went from Honslaerdijk to Groningen, being invited thither to be Professor of Divinity, in the Year 1627. James Altingius was then nine Years of Age.

[B] The Judgment they gave deserves to be taken notice of. I pretend not to take any part in the particular Affair here in question; and shall content myself with remarking, that, in general, one cannot forbear, on occasion of the like Disputes, to judge, as the Divines of Leyden did. They, who advance new Hypotheses, pique themselves too much upon maintaining them, to the prejudice of Peace, and of the Ecclesiastical and Academical Tranquillity. They may be as Orthodox as they please; but they have not Prudence of Herefy; they only blamed his Imprudence in framing new Hypothefes; on the other hand, Des Marets was declared to want Modesty and Charity (a). The latter refused to acquiefce in this Judgment, and would not accept the Offer of Silence. He infifted upon having the Cause examined by the Confiftories, the Claffes, and the Synods; but the Superiors would not confent to it, and prohibited writing either for or againft the Judgment of the Divines of Leyden: Thus Des Marets's Book, Audi & alteram partem, was fuppreffed. This Conteft made a great Noife, and might have been attended with bad Confequences, by the calling of Des Marets to the University of Leyden (b); but he died at Groningen (c) before he took Poffeffion of that Employ. He made a kind of Reconciliation on his Death-Bed [C]; I fhall fpeak of it in the Remarks. Altingius thought he had reafon to complain, that he was play'd upon [D]; and was not eafy after he was delivered from fo formidable an Adverfary. The Clergy murmured continually againft what they called Innovations [E]; but the Secular Power calm'd by it's Prudence thefe Synodal or Confiftorial Storms, and threatened to interdict thofe, who fhould revive the Quarrel of thefe two Champions in any Ecclefiaftical Affembly. Altingius enjoyed but little Health during the three laft Years of his Life; at length a continual Fever, which lafted but nine Days, took him out of the World on the Twentieth of Auguft, 1679. He died piously, refigning himfelf to the Will of God; and recommended the Edition of all his Works feveral times to his Coufin Menfio Altingius, Burgo-Mafter of Groningen.

(a) Cum Altingium ab omni Herefco notiafolverent, in ipfo autem prudentiam in procedendis novè inventis, in Marefio modèlliam & charitatem requirerent. Vit. J. c. Altingii.

(b) Et res miram habilitura catastrophen, Marefio quam fene ad Theologice Profefionem Lugdunum in Batavis vacato. Ibid.

(c) In May 1673.

(3) Alting. Tom. 5. Mantiffæ, pag. 425.

Prudence enough: They are guilty of Rafhnefs; for it is rafh Conduct to difturb the public Peace, without great and urgent Necessity. They, who oppofe a new Method of Teaching, betray too much Paffion: I am apt to believe, that, fometimes, they are not guided by any perfonal Confiderations in their Proceedings; but they carry matters too far, they alarm the whole Church for trifles; they fpread Apprehenfions among the People of a total Depravation of the Confeflion of Faith, when there is yet no Attempt made againft it. They are zealous, but neither moderate, nor charitable, nor equitable. Nay, they are as impudent, as their Adverfaries: They do not confider, that a new Method, of which no notice appears to be taken, falls of itfelf; whereas, if it be zealoufly oppofed, it degenerates into a Party. The new Methodift fhall have fome Relations in the Government, who will fupport him with all their Interelt; and thus you will foon fee a Combination of the Civil and Canon Law, and the Factions of the Church and State, matched together. What may not one apprehend from fuch a Conflict? How many Evils would Religion and the State avoid, if People were only contented to oppofe Fundamental Innovations?

[C] A kind of Reconciliation on his Death-Bed. A Minifter of Groningen, feeing Des Marets paff recovery, propofed to him a Reconciliation between him and his Colleague; and, having his Confent, went and propofed the fame thing to Altingius; who answered, that the Silence he had obferved, notwithstanding the Clamours, and the Writings of his Adverfary, was a Proof of his peaceable Difpofition; that he was always ready to accept of Peace on reafonable Terms; but that he defired Satisfaction for the Injuries, which had been publifhed againft his Honour; and that he did not fee, how any one could defire any Friendfhip with him, while he thought him to be fuch a Perfon, as he had reprefented him. The Mediator went away, without propofing any thing farther. A little while after, a Report was fpread all over the Town, that Mr Altingius was fo hard-hearted, as to refufe to be reconciled to his dying Colleague: So true it is, that Town Reports are little confiftent with Truth. The Mediator returned with another Minifter to Mr Altingius, and got a Formulary of Satisfaction from him. This Formulary did not pleafe the fick Perfon; and That, which the fick Perfon dictated, did not pleafe Altingius; more Goings and Comings were employed, than in the Capitulation of a Fortrefs. At laft, the Alteration, which Altingius inferted in the Formulary of Des Marets, being accepted, on condition, that Altingius fhould accept what Des Marets fhould add to it, that the Conditions might be equal on both Sides, they figned it; and this was all the Reconciliation. Note, that the Parties retracted only perfonal Injuries; as for doctrinal Accufations, the Accufer left them to the Judgment of the Church (2).

[D] Altingius thought he had reafon to complain that he was play'd upon. He founded his Complaint on the laft Edition of Des Marets's Syftem, in which he was very ill treated. He pretended, that his Adverfary was bound to fuppreff all Monuments of their Difagreement; and that, fince he had not fuppreff'd fo outrageous a Libel, his Reconciliation was not fincere. "Poftquam autem ad plures abiit (Marefius) ----- monitus fui ego (3) de Syftematis novi perpetuis annotationibus, quæ infandis maledictis cum in alios, tum in me, confarent. Liber ille paucis ante mortem ipfius diebus vendi quidem cœperat, fed nondum in meas aedes fuerat illatus. ----- Curavi ergo afferri, atque inde didici quantopere D. Marefius mihi illuiffet, quando in fpeciem concordiam redintegrari expetit. Etenim quotiefcunque verum illud est ac fincerum votum, non tantum verbis pax initur, fed etiam abolerentur omnia monumenta prioris inimicitie. Tenera namque confcientia ad fuam ipfius infamiam fpectare retur, fi, quod ipfamet damnavit, atque ex fua memoria abolitum voluit, univerforum notitiæ ac Memoriz infixum deerit, editis contumeliofis chartis per univerfum orbem difseminatis. ----- After the Deceafe of Des Marets, I was informed of the perpetual Commentary of the New Syftem, which was fraught with unjust Affperfions, both on others, and myfelf. The Book indeed begun to be fold a few Days before his Death, but had not, as yet, come to my Hands. I took Care to procure it, and was convinced by it, how greatly Des Marets impofed upon me, when he appeared to follicit a Reconciliation. For, when fuch a Defire is real and fincere, a verbal Reconciliation is not thought fufficient, but all Remains of former Enmity are abolifhed. A tender Confcience will fcruple to perpetuate and fpread over the World, by libellous Writings, what itfelf has condemned, and would willingly forget." If I m^e be allowed to fpeak my Opinion freely, it feems to me unreafonable to expect that Des Marets fhould fuppreff a whole large Volume; if he had, the Bookfellerought certainly to have been indemnified; and thus the Expence of the Reconciliation would not have been a meer unpaying, a nullo factum; it would have been a pecuniary Lofs to the Family. The Queftion was not concerning three or four Leaves only, but the whole Work, as Altingius himfelf acknowledged. "Cum in ipfius effet poteftate totum opus fuppreffiffe, quæ unica fuprerat in opere uque quaque fibi conformi emendatio (4). ----- When it was in his own Power to have fuppreff'd the whole Work; which was the only Emendation left in a Work fo uniform from Beginning to End." It was enough, that he declared in a Writing under his Hand, that he retracted whatever he might have faid or publifhed againft his Adverfary's Reputation. "Ita ut indidta velit Cl. D. Marefius, fi quæ in didtis & fcriptis ipfius in famam Cl. D. Altingii incurere videantur (5)." With that alone he might die in form; & morto canonice mente*, as they fay beyond the Alps.

[E] The Clergy murmur'd continually againft what they called Innovations. The following Words will inform us of the Matter. "Qualis fuerit utriufque ante mortem mutua reconciliatio, ipfufmet Autoris Epifola, initio Mantiffæ tomii quinti pofta, teftatur. "Quiefcente

(2) Taken from a Letter of James Altingius, in the 5th Volume of his Works.

(4) Id. ibid.

(5) Id. ibid.

* He died canonically.

(d) Ex Vita Jacobi Altingii, in lumine Operum, Edit. Amst. 1687.

(*) In Vita Jac. Alting.

(*) Hor. tit. Arte Poet. lib. 1.

(*) Vita Jacobi Alting.

(*) Ibid.

Groningen. His Request was complied with some Years after his Death, by the Publication of Five Volumes in Folio [F]. He lived a single Life, 'till he was almost Thirty Years of Age; at which time he grew weary of that State, and married [G]. He purposed, if he had lived longer, to have composed two Books, one in Latin, and the other in Dutch; the first was to have been An Apology for his Doctrine, and the other An History of his Life, from the time of his Professorship; by which means we should have seen the Injustice which was done him (d), in creating him so many Troubles [H]. This is what I have extracted from his Life, prefixed to the First Volume of his Works. If any one finds Mistakes in this Article, I desire him not to impute them to me, who have only faithfully reported what I find in the Book, which I have cited. I advertise once for all, that I will not warrant the Truth of such Accounts. I conclude with this Remark; that Altingius was a Divine much attached to the Text of the Scripture, and to Cocceianism and Rabbinism. This latter Application exposed him to a terrible Injury [I]. He preached well in three Languages, in German, Dutch, and English.

"Quiescente Marfio, non sic tamen quiescendum sibi duxerunt, qui ipsius partium fuerant. Nihil autem adeo dedisse operam videntur, quam ut via quasi ecclesiastica per Synodos, Classes, & quas dicimus Correspondencias, Altingii opinionibus obfisterent. Ita variis quidem fluctibus postea jactatus vir optimus, suæ autem sententiæ tenacissimus, tandem fere enavit; siquidem quotiescunque aliquid poneret Ecclesiasticorum ordo, illud mox procerum edito vel consulto rejectum est. Imo exaltationis etiam poena in eos constituta, qui de contro-versiis Marfio-Altingiani in cœtu aliquo Pastorum quidquam moverent. Ita factum sæpius est, ut generalibus etiam verbis concepta gravamina de periculosis novitatibus in spongiam incubuerint (6).
"What kind of mutual Reconciliation was between them before his Death, we learn from the Author's own Epistle, at the beginning of the fifth Tome of the Manitiffa. Though Des Marets laid aside his Resentment, those of his Party did not so easily quit theirs. But they had no other Aim, than to oppose Altingius's Opinions, in an Ecclesiastical Way, by Synods, Classes, and what we call Correspondencies. Thus this best of Men, but tenacious to the last of his Opinions, after being tossed with various Storms, with much Difficulty at length swam ashore; for, whenever the Order of Ecclesiastics proposed any thing against him, it was immediately rejected by the Authority of the Civil Power. Nay, the Penalty of Deprivation was decreed against those, who should, in any Assembly of Pastors, revive the Marfio-Altingian Controversy. Thus Complaints of dangerous Novelties, though couched in general Terms, often undergo the Spunge." Hence it appears, that James Altingius would have been in great Danger from the Divines, if he had not been protected by the Magistrate. It is certain that the Secular and Ecclesiastical Power stand in need of each other: The latter serves sometimes as a Spur to the former, and the former as a Bridle to the latter.

— — — alterius sic
Altera poscit opem res, & conjurat amice (7).

Thus mutually they need each others Aid.

ROSCOMMON.

[F] By the Publication of five Volumes in Folio.] The late Mr Bekker, then Minister at Amsterdam, who had been a Disciple, and good Friend of the Author's, took a particular Care of this Edition. It was published at Amsterdam, in the Year 1687, and contains several kinds of Treatises, Analytical, Exegetical, Practical, Problematical, and Philosophical, which witnesses not only the laborious Life of James Altingius, but likewise his great Knowledge. His Diligence may be discovered in another Instance. Most learned Men become at length tired of writing Letters; but he never knew this Fault: He wrote Five thousand Letters; but they published but few of them. "Loquuntur Epistolæ, quarum tam paucas ex 5000 publicari potuisset, id equidem dolendum." Erat autem ad scribendas literas impiger (8). The bare Names of the Divines, with whom he corresponded, shew that he was no Poëtion.

[G] He lived a single Life 'till he was almost thirty Years of Age — and then married.] Vitam cælibem ad annum ætatis trigesimum fere perduxit, cuius tandem peritus junxit sibi tori sociam (9). Of eight Children, which God had given him, but three were living when he died; one whereof was a Physician, another an Advocate, and the third bore Arms. The first and the last died soon after their Father.

[H] The Injustice which was done him, in creating him so many Troubles.] They, who choose the Words of the Original, rather than my Abridgment, may here be satisfied. "Dixit inter alia (Altingius) si Deus sibi vitam virelque concederet, stare sibi animum duos libellos in lucem mittendi, alterum quidem, quem orsus etiam est, quo se purgaret coram Ecclesiâ ab heterodoxis & hæreses crimine sibi intentato, alterum verò quo historiam vite suæ publicè panderet, ab eo tempore quando in Academia docere coepisset; unde cuius judicandum relinqueret, quo jure qua injuria tantum ipsi molestiarum creatum fuisset. Præ cæteris autem conquerebatur à malevolorum insidiis atque inimicitiiis stetit, quo minus ut vellet publico infervere potuisset (10). Altingius declared, among other things, that, if God granted him Life and Strength, he had determined to publish two Books; one of them (which he had even begun) in Vindication of himself, before the Church, from the Charge of Heterodoxy and Heresy, which had been brought against him; the other, the History of his public Life, from the time of his commencing Teacher in the University; from whence every one might judge, how justly, or unjustly, he had been involved in so many Troubles. But he particularly complained, that the Treachery and Enmity of ill designing Men, had prevented his being as serviceable to the Public, as he could have wished." It is certainly a very melancholy Consideration, that Civil Discord should prevent so many excellent Operators from exerting their Abilities in the Service of their Community, and against foreign Enemies; against whom all the Forces of a Party ought constantly to be kept united. I do not speak of the Scandal it occasions; for, on the contrary, we ought to be scandaliz'd at the little Scandal it gives. Is it, because to be properly diffused requires a Degree of Wit, to which few Persons attain? Is it because Custom renders Men at length less sensible; ab assuetis non fit passus? Whatever the Cause of it may be, it is certain that People have an excessive Indulgence for those, who keep up Discord, by violent, injurious, and cavilling Writings, under the false Pretence of Zeal. Nothing would more effectually correct the prevailing Itch in some People of libelling their Brethren by Book after Book, than for the World to shew they are offended in earnest at such a Conduct, and publicly to express their Contempt and Indignation. But while we see them follow the Party, which knows how to make the most Noise and Bustle, the Disease must be look'd upon as incurable.

[I] This latter Application exposed him to a terrible Injury.] He was called a half Jew; one who differed from a Jew only in the Foreskin; in short, one, who complained sometimes of not being Circumcised, and whose Foreskin was troublesome to him. The Occasion of these Abuses was, his having maintained, that the Points of the Tetragramma are not proper to That Name, and that therefore the true Pronunciation of it is not known, and that we ought not to accuse those of Jewish Superstition, who read it Adonai. The Judgment passed upon this Opinion was as follows: "Impudentia est Grammaticorum nonnullorum & filiorum Birci negare ex superstitione Judaica oriri, quod id nomen alter pronuncietur quam legitur Sed per nos homines semel Judæi doctrina, studio, affectu, commercio, & qui sole

IN WHAT the Scandal of Controversy at present consists.

"fere pondere præputi, & quo interdum se graviari dolent, distant à recutitis, infamant ut liberit—Vestra est impudentia, petulantia, & superbia in primogradu, quod austeris dicam scribere imperitiæ & ignorantia tot illustribus Ecclesiæ viris vobis etiam longe doctioribus, quod id nominis enunciat & pronunciant uti scribitur (11). — It is downright Impudence in certain Grammarians, and Sons of Bitch, to deny, that the Pronunciation of this Word differs from what it is read in owing to Jewish Superstition — But let these Men, who are Half-Jews in Doctrine, Study, Affection, and Commerce, and who differ from the Circumcised almost only in the Weight of the Prepuce, with which they sometimes complain of being burthened; let these Men, I say, be as mad as they please — Your Impudence, Sauciness, and Pride, is of the biggest Degree, in daring to charge with Unskilfulness and Ignorance so many Ornaments of the Church; whose Learning far exceeds your own; for uttering and pronouncing this Name as it wrote." Was this a sufficient Reason for being so very angry? and have we not here an Example of what an Heathen Philosopher judiciously remarked? "Crede mihi, levia sunt, propter quæ non leviter exandescimus, qualia quæ pueros in rixam & jurgium concitant. Nihil ex his, quæ tam tristes agimus, serius est, nihil magnum. Inde, inquam, vobis ira & infantia est, quod exigua magno æstimatis (12). — Believe me, we fall into a violent Passion for meer Trifles; such as set Children a fighting. None of these things, which give us so much Uneasiness, are serious; none of them of Importance. From hence, I say, arise this childish Anger of yours, that you set a great Value upon things of little Moment." Could there be a severer Censure, than this, of one who should set his Apostacy to sale, and should only wait for the Solution of three or four small Difficulties in order to turn Jew?

(12) Seneca de Ira, lib. 3. cap. 34.

AMABLE, a Priest of Riom in Auvergne, in the Vth Century, is praised by Gregory of Tours, as a Man admirable for his Holiness, and who wrought many Miracles (a). It is said he had Power over Serpents: Thus that Historian expresses himself; but he speaks of another Particular, as an Eye-Witness. I have seen at his Sepulchre, says he, a Demoniack dispossessed; I have seen a perjured Person there become as stiff as an Iron Bar, and, after confessing his Crime, become as free as before. When such a Man as Gregory of Tours makes use of as it is said, 'tis a sign, that the thing is not very certain; nevertheless this Empire over Serpents has passed for the most unquestionable Fact among all that are attributed to St Amable. One would think it was his Lot, or, to speak like a Mallebranchist (b), that God had established him the occasional Cause of the Cure of those, who were bit by Serpents. A modern Author, tho' a Canon in the City, of which St Amable is Patron (c), confesses that he does not believe all the Miracles, which are reported of him in the Lives of the Saints of Auvergne, and in several other Legends (d); but declares on the other side, that he firmly believes That Saint had a Sovereign Power over Serpents, because the wonderful Effects of it had been universally attested for the Space of 1300 Years [A]; and because he had had the Happiness of seeing some of them himself (e). He questions much the Truth of a certain Tradition, which prevailed at Riom concerning this Saint; to wit, that, when he went to Rome on foot, the Sun attended upon him as his Valet, and carried his Gloves and Cloak in the Air, like an Umbrello, during the great Heat, and kept off the Rain from him in bad Weather (f). This Tradition passeth for so certain in that Country, that they seldom draw St Amable's Picture, without his Gloves and his Cloak being supported in the Air by a Sun-Beam. Credat Judæus Appelles (g), says he, non ego. This is sufficient, without any Reflexion of my own, to give to this Article the Form, which this Dictionary seems to require. A mere Relation of such things is an Heap of Errors.

(c) Riom:

(d) Faydit, ubi supra. pag. 102.

(e) Ibid. p. 101.

(f) Ibid. p. 103.

(g) Thus he writes the Word. Horace, Sat. 6. lib. 1. grevis it Appella, which is more agreeable to the Rules of Quantity.

[A] The wonderful Effects of it were universally attested for the Space of 1300 Years.] This Calculation does not agree exactly with what is said in the following Page; that Gregory of Tours lived but about fifty or sixty Years after St Amable. It is not necessary to prove, that the Words do not signify, that he was born fifty or sixty Years after that Saint; it is plain enough that they import, that he was arrived to Manhood, when St Amable had been dead fifty or sixty Years. According to this, the Death of this

Saint should fall about the beginning of the Vth Century; for Gregory of Tours lived but about Fifty two Years, and died in the Year 594 (1). Now if the Miracles of this Saint of Riom had been seen for the Space of 1300 Years, about the end of the XVIIth Century, he must have flourished about the end of the IVth Century; and, upon this Supposition, it cannot be said that a Man of twenty Years of Age in 562 lived fifty or sixty Years after him.

(1) Father Labbé de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. p. 38. Most Authors place his Death in the Year 596.

AMAMA (SIXTINUS) Professor of the Hebrew Tongue, in the University of Franeker, was a very learned Man. He was of Friesland, and had been a Disciple of Drusus [A]. The University of Leyden, which endeavours to procure the most famous Professors of the neighbouring Universities, by offering them more considerable Advantages, endeavoured to draw him from the University of Franeker (a). It was to succeed Erpenius, who had been one of the most learned Men of his Age in the Oriental Languages. Amama did not absolutely refuse this Invitation, neither did he absolutely accept of it; he consented, upon condition of obtaining his Dismission from his Superiors of Friesland. But they did not grant it (b), and no doubt they gave him such additional Advantages, that he had no reason to repent his not being Professor at Leyden. The first Book he published was a Specimen of a noble Design he had conceived. He had undertaken to censure the Vulgar Translation, which the Council of Trent had declared authentic; and, before his whole Design was executed, he published a Criticism on the Version of the Pentateuch (c); Thus he commenced Author (d). He was preparing the Continuation of this Criticism, when he was called off

(1) Te obsecrantem (says he to Gomarus) primus ille adolecentium meæ fatus in dias luminis oras prodit. Sixt. Amama Anti-barb. Bibl. pag. 20. I believe he had already published, in 1618, a small Treatise de Decimis Mosaicis of 9 Pages in 4to, which was reprinted at London in 1660.

[A] And had been a Disciple of Drusus.] This is evident from several Passages of the Antibarbarus Biellius. As for Sixtinus, whose Disciple they make him in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, I confess he is absolutely unknown to me; and I question much whether they ever heard of him in the United Provinces.

(c) 1623.

(f) Amama ubi sup,
pag. 160.

off to other Matters; I mean to collate the Dutch Version of the Scripture with the Originals, and the exactest Translations. This Dutch Translation had been made from Luiber's German Version. He gave the Public an Account of his Labours, in a Work, which he published (e) at Amsterdam in the Vulgar Language, intitled Bybelsche Conferentie. This Work is taken notice of in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary [B]. This Care of collating was full Employment for Amama; inasmuch that the Publication of this Book, and of some Grammatical Pieces, prevented him a considerable time from applying himself to his Censure of the Vulgate (f). He resumed this Work, upon hearing that Father Merfennus had undertaken to refute him, as to the Six first Chapters of Genesis [C]. Leaving, then, every other Work, he applied himself to justify his Criticisms against that Author. His Answer is one of the Pieces, of which the Anti-Barbarus Biblicus, which he published in 1628, is composed. The other Pieces are a Criticism on the Vulgate in relation to the Historical Books of the Old Testament, on Job, the Psalms, and the Books of Solomon; with some particular Dissertations. One of them is on the famous Passage of the Proverbs, The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his Way, wherein Amama shews, that they, who accused Drusus of favouring Arianism, were downright Calumniators. The Anti-Barbarus Biblicus was intended to consist of Two Parts, each containing three Books. The Author published only the first. It was reprinted after his Death [D]; and the fourth Book was added to it, which contains the Censure of the Vulgar Translation, on Isaiah and Jeremiah. It is impossible to ward the Blows he gives to the Vulgate, and to answer the Reasons, by which he shews the Necessity of consulting the Originals. And indeed few learned Men of the Romish Communion will deny it; they only maintain (to save the Honour of the last Council) that they did not pretend to submit the Originals to the Authority of the Vulgar Translation. It is not the Question here to examine, whether this can be said in earnest. Our Sixtinus so strongly persuaded to the Study of the Original Languages of the Bible, that some Synods, influenced by his Reasons, ordered, that thenceforth no one should be admitted a Minister, without at least a moderate Skill in the Greek and Hebrew of the Bible [E]. I must not forget the Zeal he shewed in putting

[B] This Work is taken Notice of in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary.] The Supplement says, that, according to Mr Simon, The design of Sixtinus Amama, in his Book, is to shew, that the Dutch Bible, which was read among the Protestants of the Low Countries, and had been translated from the German of Luther, was full of Faults; this he shews every plainly, add they. To give the Reader fuller Information in this Matter, I shall set down the very Words of the Author, who is here cited. The Protestants of the Low Countries, says Mr Simon, in his Letter to Mr P. concerning the Inspiration of the sacred Books, Page 10. built their Reformation only on a Dutch Version, which was made from that of Luther; but at last — they resolved to set about a new Translation. For this Purpose Sixtinus Amama composed a Book in Dutch, intitled Bybelsche Conferentie, wherein he shews at large, that it was necessary to publish a new Bible for the Dutch Churches. He says, that the Dutch Translation, which they read in their Churches, and which had been taken from that of Luther, contained in certain Places more Faults than Verses; and gives a great many Examples of it in that Work. At Page 11. Mr Simon has these Words — It is true that the Calvinists of the Netherlands rejected their ancient Translation, and composed a new one. But if they followed, in their new Translation, the Method, which Sixtinus Amama proposes in his Bybelsche Conferentie, it cannot be exact; for, to make his Reformation, he only follows Pagninus, Junius, and Tremellius, the Bible of Zurich, the French of Geneva, the German of Piscator, the Spanish of Cyprian de Valera, the Italian of Diodati, the English of Geneva, and other new Translations: — which are all faulty.

[C] Father Merfennus had undertaken to refute him, as to the six first Chapters of Genesis.] Rivetus informed him of it; otherwise he had run the Risk of being unacquainted with it a long time; for he had never before heard of such a Man as Father Merfennus. These are his Words, in his Epistle Dedicatory (1). "Abstine que te fuisse, Cl. Rivete, nomen Merfenni, qui VI. priorum Genesis capitum adversus meas stricuras suscepit patrocinium, etiamnum juxta cum ignarissimis ignorassem. Tu primus mihi indicium, tu vocalum copiam fecisti, tu ad modestam & mansuetam replicationem hortamentis tuis me animasti. — Had it not been for you, Rivetus, I had known

"no more, than the most ignorant, of the Name of Merfennus, who has patronized the six first Chapters of Genesis against my Strictures. You gave me the first Notice of, you procured me a Sight of, the Work, and you animated me by your Advice to a moderate and good-natured Reply." I wonder he did not insert in his Antibarbarus the Prelude to his Answer, which he had published in the Year 1627, with this Title Epistola apud egyptu ad Marinum Marfennum (2). Cranius has inserted it in the third Part of his Animadversiones (3).

[D] It was reprinted after his Death.] At Franker, in 4to, in the Year 1656. Mr Baillet mentioned this Edition in his Anti, at the Three hundred and fiftieth Page of the second Tome. "I must not forget, says he, the Anti-Barbarus, which a Professor of Hebrew of the University of Franker, in Friesland, whose Name is Sixtinus Amama, published on the Text of the Holy Scripture, in the Year 1626, in 4to, in the Town where he taught. — The Work is intermixed with several small Dissertations and Discourses, which spoil it's Oeconomy." Note, that they have inserted in the new Edition of the Great Critic (4), his Criticism on the Vulgate of the Pentateuch, and his Notes on the Historical Books, on the Psalms, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes, which had never been printed.

[E] Some Synods, influenced by his Reasons, ordered, that thenceforth no one should be admitted a Minister without a moderate skill in the Greek and Hebrew of the Bible.] These are the Words of the Act, which was passed upon this Account by the Synod of Friesland, held at Harlingen in the Year 1624. "Decretum est, ut in posterum Theologie Candidati quotquot ad examen Ministerii Ecclesie admitti desiderabunt, præter testimonia Senatus Academici & Theologie Professorum, exhibeant etiam testimonia Professorum Ebraeæ & Græcæ linguæ, quibus doceant se in prædictis linguis eos saltem progressus fecisse, ut originalem Veteris Novique Testamenti textum mediocriter possint intelligere, utque in Classe ista, cujus examini se offerunt, ejus quoque rei specimen edere teneantur. — It is decreed, that, for the future, whatever Candidates in Divinity shall desire to be admitted to the Examination of the Ministry of the Church, besides the Testimonials of the University Senate, and the Professors of Divinity, shall produce likewise

(2) See the Oxford Catalogue, where instead of Marfennus, they have put Marfennum.

(3) Printed at Leyden in 1656.

(4) Published in Holland, 1698. See Bibliotheca novorum librorum, for July and Aug. 1698. pag. 453.

(1) It is dated Dec. 27, 1626.

putting a stop to a Vice, which prevailed as much in the University of Franker, as in those of Germany, I mean Drunkenness [F]. He made a warm Speech on this Subject in 1621. They were so well satisfied with him in Friesland, that, after his Death, which happened in the Month of December 1629 (g), they were very liberal to his Children, as Nicolas Amama, one of them, testifies with great Acknowledgment, in the Epistle Dedicatory of a certain Book [G].

rin, who supposes, Exercit. Biblic. part. 1. pag. 61, that he taught at Franker, in 1633, are therefore

(g) König, who says, he was living in 1630, and Father Marnifaken.

"Those of the Hebrew and Greek Professors, testifying, that they have made such a Progress at least in the aforesaid Tongues, as to have acquired a moderate Skill in the Original Text of the Old and New Testament; and that they shall be obliged to give a Specimen of their Abilities, in that Class, to whose Examination they offer themselves." It appears, by the same Act, that it was the Supplex Paraneſis of Amama (5), some Copies of which had been distributed among the Assembly, which occasioned the taking of this good Resolution.

(5) It is a part of the Anti-barbarus Biblicus, and had been already printed twice.

[F] The Zeal he shewed in putting a Stop to — Drunkenness. We must not ascribe the vigorous Resolutions, which were taken against this Irregularity, principally to Sixtinus Amama; it is enough if we say that he contributed to it; and had he only harangued, and publicly congratulated those, who reformed the University in this respect, he would merit great Praise. He acknowledges, that Amſius, Professor of Divinity, and Hachting, Professor of Logic, having been admitted into the Academical Senate, and finding themselves supported by the Rector of the University, undertook the Reformation of this Disorder courageously, and with happy Success. He congratulates them upon it, and dedicates his Speech de barbarie morata to them upon that account. The Reader will be pleased to see how he expresses himself, and the Difficulties which those Reformers met with. "Ad primam occasionem — intrepidus & commaculatis animis horrendas illas & feroces belluas Ebrietatem & Licentiam, quæ hic stabulantur, ex Academia ejecisti, ac Christianam disciplinam, jam desperatam, Deo supra quam à quoquam sperari potuisset benedicente, Academicæ redonasti. Cujus præclari & æternæ gratitudinis dignissimi facinoris, sicuti invidiam apud dissolutam & barbaram juventutem sustinuiſti, & quasi præpiliatis hastis objecti fuisti soli, ita & æquissimum cenſeo, ut

"vobis quoque præ aliis tam egregii operis gloria transcribatur (6). — Upon the first Opportunity — with great Courage and Resolution, you drove out of the University those horrible and fierce Monsters, Drunkenness and Licentiousness, which had here stabled, and, by an extraordinary Assistance from Heaven, restored to the University That Christian Discipline, which it despaired to recover. And as this glorious Exploit, so worthy of eternal Gratitude, exposed you to the Envy and rude Attacks of a dissolute and barbarous Youth, so I think it but just, that the Honour of so excellent a Work should be principally ascribed to you." He gives a shocking Account of the Debauchery, which reigned in some Universities. All the new Comers lifted themselves in the Service of Bacchus with certain Solemnities, and were obliged to swear by a St Stephen of Wood, that they would spend all their Money. If any one had more regard to the Oath, which he had taken to the Rector of the University, than to this pretended Bacchanalian Oath, he was so persecuted by the debauched Scholars, that he was obliged either to leave the University, or to comply with the rest. He added to his Speech some Fragments of Alfredius's Complaints on the same Subject. Bellarmin deploras, with great Vehemence, in his twentieth Sermon, the Drunkenness, which prevailed in the University of Louvain (7).

(6) Sixt. Amama, in Preliminar. Anti-barbari Bibl.

[G] NICOLAS AMAMA — testifies, with great Acknowledgment, in the Epistle Dedicatory of a certain Book. It was printed in the Year 1661. It is an Octavo of Six hundred Pages, entituled, Dissertationum marinarum decas, wherein there is much Reading; and the Author departs in many things from Aristotle's Opinions, without adding himself to the new Philosophy. He has innovated in the very Orthography.

(7) Amama observes this in the Epistle Dedicatory of his Speech de Ebrietate.

A M A S Æ U S (ROMULUS) Professor of Greek and Latin at Bologne, in the XVIth Century [A], and Secretary to the Senate (a), distinguished himself by his Learning, and his Employments. He was originally of Bologne, and born at Udine, in Frioul. Pope Paul III appointed him Preceptor to his Grandson, Alexander Farneſe (b). He was afterwards employed in more important Affairs; he was deputed to the Emperor and to the Princes of the Empire, and to the Court of Poland. No Man of Learning appeared with greater Lustre at the Court of Rome, under the Pontificate of Julius III. He was that Pope's Secretary. He gave Proofs of his Knowledge in the Greek Language by a Translation of Pausanias, and another of a Work of Xenophon (c). He composed likewise a Volume of Speeches, and a Work intituled Scholæ duæ de ratione instituendæ. As for the two Pieces he had written, in which he made it appear, that the Latin Language is more beautiful than the Italian, they were never printed (d). Some say that he died in the Year 1558, being 69 Years old [B]. He left a Son, whose Name was Pompilius, and who did not degenerate; for he understood, and translated, Greek. He was likewise Professor of that Tongue at Bologne (e). I believe he translated only

(a) See Remark [B].

(b) And not his Nephew, as Du Rier renders the word Nepos of Thuanus.

(c) His Expedition of Cyrus the younger.

(d) Thuan. lib. 21. pag. 432. and the Additions of Mr. Teiffier.

(e) Bualdus cited by Baillet, Jugem. des Savans, Tom. 4. pag. 400.

[A] AMASÆUS (ROMULUS) Professor of Greek and Latin — in the XVIth Century. Moreri was not mistaken in his Chronology: It should not therefore have been altered, as it is, in the Dutch Edition, where, instead of the XVIth Century, they have put the XIVth. Three things wanted Correction in this Article, which ought not to have been passed over. I. It was too dry, and lean. II. It should have been under AMASÆUS, not ROMULUS. III. It should not have been said, that Amasæus translated the Works of Xenophon, but that he translated the seven Books, which Xenophon composed of the Expedition of Cyrus the Younger.

[B] Some say, that he died in the Year 1558, being Sixty nine Years old. Thuanus is mistaken in placing the Death of Romulus Amasæus in the Year 1558. For this Romulus was dead from the Year 1552. We have a Proof of this in a Letter of Giovanni Antonio Serone, an intimate Friend of Romulus, dated the twentieth of October of That Year, and inserted in the Collection of Turchi, pag. 257. This is what M. de la Monnoie did me the Favour to write to me. Besides, if Amasæus died in the Year 1558, there would be reason to say, that he lived Sixty nine Years; for the Day of his Birth is marked, in the Figures of Luke Gauric, on the Twenty fourth of June 1489 (1). I have met with three or four Particulars in This Work of Gauric, which I shall insert here. Amasæus was lean, very tall, bald, and had a small Head. He was Secretary to the Senate of Bologne, and taught Eloquence in the same City, having a Salary of Three hundred Crowns per Annum. He taught afterwards at Rome in the Time of Paul III, having a Pension of Six hundred Crowns, natus Pauli III. ex lætura in urbe habebat 600 aureos. Thuanus was ignorant of this.

(1) Figures of Gauric, folio 72. Edit. Venet. 1552.

[C] Translated

(f) This is Casaubon's Judgment, in Baillet, ibid.

(g) Huetius de claris Interpretibus, pag. 122. Edit. Batav.

only two Fragments of the sixth Book of Polybius [C]; in which he discovered a greater Capacity, than Perottus and Musculus did in translating That Author (f). Yet a learned Man accused him of omitting all the difficult Passages, and contenting himself with referring the Reader elsewhere, for the Interpretation of them (g). As for his Father, it is agreed, that he was a great Lover of Elegancy, and Periphrasis; he enlarged what was too concise, and contracted what was too diffuse; and cleared up obscure Passages (b). His Translation of Pausanias stood in need of Sylburgius's Revision.

(h) This is Huetius's Judgment of him, ibid.

[C] Translated only two Fragments of the sixth Book of Polybius.] Pompeius Amasæus, having translated those Fragments, which treat of the Military Discipline of the Romans, explained them in a Commentary, which is among the Manuscripts of Tibullius's Library (2). This Manuscript is in Italian. The Author translated those Fragments both into Latin, and his Mother Tongue.

(2) Page 433.

AMASTRIS, Niece of the last Darius, and Wife of Dionysus Tyrant of Heraclea. Look for her History in the Article of That Dionysus. You will likewise find there the Town of AMASTRIS, built by this Princefs.

AMBOISE (FRANCIS d') a Parisian, deserves to be ranked among those, whom the Profession of Letters raised to worldly Honours. He was the Son of a Surgeon to Charles the Ninth, and was maintained, by the Liberality of That Prince, in the College of Navarre, whilst he pursued his Rhetorical and Philosophical Studies. He taught afterwards in That College; for we find, that, in 1572, he had already taught the second Class four Years. He was then made Procurator of the French Nation. He applied himself afterwards to the Civil Law, and became a very good Advocate in the Parliament of Paris; after which he had the Post of Chancellor in the Parliament of Brittany; lastly he was Master of the Requests (a), and Counsellor of State (b). He travelled into several remote Countries [A]. He published several pieces of French Poetry in his Youth, and some Latin Verses; which doubtless he did not think much to his Reputation, when he was advanced to Dignities; for they represent to us a Poet, who sent his Muse backwards and forwards, sometimes with Compliments of Condolance, at other times with Compliments of Congratulation; in a word, they give us the Idea of a Compliment-Bearer of Parnassus to the great Lords. You will see below the Titles of some Books of our Francis d'Amboise. They seem to me less fit to immortalize his Name, than the Pains he took in collecting the Manuscripts of Peter Abelard [C], and in adding an Apologetical Preface,

(b) In the Edition of Abelard's Works he has the Title of Equitus Regis in functione Consistorii Consiliarii, Rerum Chartarum, &c.

(a) Ex Michaele Thuriotio in laudatione Hadriani Amboisii. See Launoii Hist. Gymnasii. Navar. pag. 739. 800. See also pag. 336.

(1) La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Franc. pag. 86.

(2) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 365.

(3) At Page 42.

(4) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 365.

(5) La Croix du Maine, Biblioth. Franc. p. 87.

(6) Du Verdier, ubi supra.

(7) La Croix du Maine, pag. 87.

[A] He travelled into several remote Countries (1)] Du Verdier Vau-Privas remarks, that Francis d'Amboise made a Description of the Kingdom of Poland at Warsaw, when the Duke of Anjou, at present King of France, was elected King of Poland (2). This was one of his Expeditions. It cannot be determined by the Words, which I have cited, whether he went into Poland in the Retinue of the new King, or whether he was there, when the Duke of Anjou was elected. This latter Sense would be the only one, which ought to be given to these Words, if Du Verdier Vau-Privas were an exact Writer. See Francis d'Amboise's Treatise of Devices, where we find (3), that, at the Time of that Election, he was in That Country at the House of the Bishop of Valence. This Treatise of Devices is a Posthumous Work. It was printed at Paris, for ADRIAN d'AMBOISE, the Author's Son. This Son published, the following Year, at Paris, a little Treatise of his own, entitled Moral Devices.

[B] The Titles of some Books of our Francis d'Amboise.] Viz. An Elegy on the Death of Anne de Montmorency, Peer and Constable of France, with a Latin Panegyric, and a French Ode on the Disaster of France, in 1568 (4). A Panegyric on the Marriage of Henry of Lorraine, Duke of Guise, and Catherine of Cleves, Countess of Eu, in 1570 (5). The Tomb of Messire Gilles Bourdin, the King's Attorney-General in the Parliament at Paris, being three Sonnets, an Elegy translated from the Latin of Antony Valet, and some Latin Hendecasyllabic Verses, in 1570 (6). The Loves of Clio; in which there is a Poem intitled, The Desperadoes, or Amorous Eclogues, in 1572 (7). Comical Amours, containing several facetious Histories, and, among others, That, which he calls the Neapolitan Ladies, in 1584. The Neapolitan Ladies is a Translation of an Italian Comedy. He calls himself at the beginning of this Translation Thierry de Timophila G. Picard, and he takes the same Disguise in the Title of the Funeral Lamentations of certain Animals, which he translated from the Italian in 1576, and in the Title of the Familiar Dialogue of Young Ladies, which he published in 1583. La Croix du Maine, who informed me of this, says that this Author understood many Languages, and that he had published several Works in Latin. His Collection of Devices was published after his Death, in the Year 1620.

[C] The Pains he took in collecting the Manuscripts of Peter Abelard.] His Diligence in this deserved a public Acknowledgment. We are indebted to him for a very good Edition of the Writings of that famous Logician. It contains I. The Letters, which passed between Abelard and Heloise, to which is prefixed his own Account of his Misfortunes. II. The Letters which he wrote to other Persons; with those of St Bernard; the Abbot of Clugny, &c. concerning his Errors, his Condemnation, or his Death; and some Treatises, which one of his Disciples published for him. III. Some Dogmatical Treatises of Abelard; as his Exposition of the Lord's Prayer, That of the Apostle's Creed; That of St Athanasius's Creed; His Answer to some of Heloise's Questions; a Commentary on St Paul's Epistle to the Romans. IV. Several Sermons on the principal Holidays. V. An Introduction to Theology, containing his Book of the Trinity. VI. The learned Notes of Andrew du Chesne on the History of Abelard's Calamities. There are besides some other Works of this Author, which are not printed. You may find the Titles of them in the Supplement of Father Oudin (8), with the Libraries where they are to be found. Francis d'Amboise procured a French Translation of the Rules, which Abelard prefcribed to the Nuns of the Paraclet. His Apologetical Preface displeased several People, and it was the Opinion of some, that it occasioned the Proceedings of the Court of Rome against the Work, which he published. "And if, not long ago, the printed Works " of ABAYELARD were put in the expurgatory " Index of Rome, I believe the Fault is not so much " to be imputed to the Author, as to the Preface- " Writer, who, instead of cautioning the Reader a- " gainst such and such Passages of ABAYELARD, " undertook to defend them." They are the Words of the Author of the Antiquities of Milan, Advocate in the Parliament of Paris (9). It cannot be said, that he wrote the Life of Peter Abelard (10); he only

(8) Page 413.

(9) Sebastian Rouillard, pag. 300. His Book was printed at Paris 1623.

(10) Yet it is so said in the Catalogue Astorum Catalogum &c. of M. Telfier, pag. 290.

Preface, which is prefixed to the Edition of the Year 1616 [D]. This Preface informs me of a Particular, which I have not met with in the History of the College of Navarre; to wit, that he published a small Treatise of the Council, and a Preface to the History of Gregory of Tours [E]; in which he vindicates that Historian from the Accusations of Flaccius Illyricus; but gives him up in relation to the two Dionysius's, the Areopagite, and him of Corinth. He holds his Rank, under the fictitious Name of Thierry de Timophile, in the List of Disguised Authors, published by Mr Baillet. I have something to add concerning the Edition of Peter Abelard's Works commonly ascribed to our Francis d'Amboise [F].

only gave a short Account of his principal Adventures. There are many Errors in that Account; this is not a proper Place to take notice of them: But, without departing from the true Subject of this Remark, I may very well say, that Francis d'Amboise did not procure to Peter Abelard all the Glory he intended him by the Edition of his Works. The Public did not find, in the Writings of That Author, that great Subtlety, and Force, which rendered him so Famous during his Life. Let us hear Sebastian Roillard once more: "As to ABATELARD's Writings, they do not seem to me to answer the great Praises and Encomiums bestowed upon him by so many eminent Authors. And therefore I am persuaded, that the Excellency of That Author consisted in a ready Wit, an eloquent and copious Discourse, and a Philosophical Genius, which rendered him formidable and invincible in all kinds of Disputation. As, in our time, we have seen two or three Persons, who acquired a great Esteem by some of these Perfections; and yet what they have printed has fallen very short of what every one would have expected from them (11)."

[D] An Apologetical Preface, which is prefixed to the Edition of the Year 1616.] The Convenience of Arithmetical Figures has likewise it's Inconveniences. Printers commit a thousand Faults in them, which Correctors overlook; this multiplies Beings extravagantly, and without any Necessity. We have an Example of it here. Some place this Edition of Abelard in the Year 1606 (12), others in the Year 1626 (13). No doubt this will induce some Authors to say, that Abelard's Works were printed three times in the Space of twenty Years; and, as some tell us they were printed in Folio in the Year 1616 (14), this is another way of multiplying the Editions without Necessity.

[E] A Preface on the History of Gregory of Tours.] I question not but it is that, of which the Abbot de Marolles speaks thus (15): "His History of the French (speaking of Gregory of Tours) which is the finest of all his Works, was formerly translated by Claudius Bonnet, a Gentleman of Dauphiné (16), who filled himself Doctor of the Civil and Canon Law; on which Mr Henry d'Amboise, Master of the Requests, made a pretty long Preface, address'd to Madame Henrietta de Balzac, Marchioness of Verneuil, which was printed at Paris, in 8vo, for Claudius de la Tour, in 1610."

[F] I have something to add concerning the Edition of Peter Abelard's Works, commonly ascribed to our Francis d'Amboise.] This Remark is not my own; I give it in the express Terms of it's Author (17). "There are Copies of Abelard's Works, which carry in their Title-page the Name of Mr d'Amboise;

"but there are others, to which the Name of Andrew du Chesne is prefixed, with this Title; "Petri Abelardi, Sancti Gildardi in Britannia Abbatis, & Heloissæ conjugis ejus, quæ postmodum prima cenobii Paracletici Abbatis fuit, Opera, nunc primum eruta ex M.S.S. Codicibus, & in lucem edita; studio ac diligentia Andreae Quercetani, Turonensis, Parisiis, Nic. Buon, 1616, in 4to. ----- The Works of Peter Abelard, Abbot of St Gildas, in Brittany, and Eloisa his Wife, afterwards first Abbess of the Convent of the Paraclet, now first published from the Manuscripts, by Andrew du Chesne of Tours, Paris, N. Buon, 1616, in 4to." It is highly probable, that we are indebted to this famous Native of Tours for this Edition. In the Abstract of the Privilege, prefixed to the Copy, which bears the Name of du Chesne, we are expressly told, that these Works were printed under the Care of Andrew du Chesne, edita Studio Andreae Quercetani; whereas in the Copy, which bears the Name of Amboise, the Privilege says not a Word of the Person, who had the Care of collecting these Works. Whence, if a Conjecture may be allowed, we may infer, that, through some secret Motive, which it was not thought proper to transmit to Posterity, du Chesne made over the Credit of this Work to Mr d'Amboise, who, at that time, was in a Condition of being obliged to him for such a Sacrifice. However this be, the two Copies of du Chesne and d'Amboise, which I have seen, are not in all respects alike; for instance, that of du Chesne begins with an Epistle Dedicatory, address'd to Monf. Benjamin Brichant, Bishop of Laon, and Abbot of St Genevieve. This Dedication is wanting in the pretended Edition of d'Amboise, as well as the Preface, which du Chesne added; in which, after telling us, in general, who Abelard and Eloisa were, he gives an Account of what he had done, to render this Edition of that famous Logician as perfect as he could: He speaks respectfully of all those, who had assisted him with their Manuscripts; and acknowledges himself oblig'd to Mr d'Amboise for the Letters, and other small Pieces. After this Preface follow the Testimonia Veterum de Abelardo & Heloissa, which are wanting likewise in the Copy of Mr d'Amboise. The Edition of this Counsellor of State, on it's Part, has an Apologetical Preface for Abelard, which is wanting in du Chesne's Edition. In every thing else they are alike; and the two Copies answer Page for Page. It will not, perhaps, be unnecessary to inform the Public of this double Title, for fear it should occasion hereafter another increase of the Editions of Abelard, as has been already remarked."

AMBOISE (ADRIAN d') younger Brother of the preceding, advanced himself no less than Francis; for he was made a Bishop. He had his share likewise in the Liberty of Charles IX; who maintained him a considerable time in the College of Navarre; and he met with the same Favour from Henry III. He was of the House of Navarre (a), when, in 1579, he was chosen Rector of the University of Paris. During his Rectorship, the University petitioned the King for a Confirmation of their Privileges; and he was their Speaker, attended by a great number of Doctors. He took his Licentiate's Degree in Divinity, in the Year 1582, and was preconised* on that occasion by Michael Thiriot, who, among other Encomiums, said, that he was descended from a very noble Family [A]. He was the King's Preacher and Almoner, and

[A] Said he was descended from a very noble Family.] Nevertheless this Author mentions the Occupation of the Father, who was a Chirurgurgeon, in his Elogy of the Son. I borrow this Nevertheless from Monf. de Launoi, for thus he expresses himself. "Atamen Thiriotus ait, Hadrianum fundatissima & nobilissima satum esse familia. His enim verbis utitur: Franciscus primum in duorum inferiorum Navarre sodalium disciplinam receptus est, & Caroli IX. liberalitate ad Rhetoricæ ac Philosophicæ institutones eruditus. Deinde humaniores literas ibidem docuit, &c. (1) ----- Nevertheless Thiriot says, "that

"bilibissima satum esse familia. His enim verbis utitur: Franciscus primum in duorum inferiorum Navarre sodalium disciplinam receptus est, & Caroli IX. liberalitate ad Rhetoricæ ac Philosophicæ institutones eruditus. Deinde humaniores literas ibidem docuit, &c. (1) ----- Nevertheless Thiriot says, "that

* Preconised in French signifies to make a Report in the Pope's Confistory, that the Party presented to a Benefice is qualified for the same.

(1) Launoius Hist. Gymn. Navarr. pag. 799. 800.

CHARACTER of Abelard's Works.

(11) Hist. of Melun. pag. 343.

(12) Launoius, Hist. Gymn. Navarr. p. 801.

(13) Father Oudin. Suppl. de Script. Eccl. pag. 413.

(14) Spirelinus Specim. Biblioth. Universal. Konig. Bibl. vet. & nov. Christoph. Hendreich. Pandectæ Brandenburgicæ, initio.

(15) Preface, on Gregor. Turonensis.

(16) It is not to be found in Allard's Biblioth. de Dauphiné.

(17) A Manuscript Memoir communicated by Mr Lancelot one of the Under-Librarians of the Mazarine Library at Paris.

(a) Socius Navarricus, Fellow of the College of Navarre; Launoius, Hist. Gymn. Nav. p. 360.

(3) Id. pag.
371, 372.

and Great Master of the College of Navarre (b), when, in 1594, the University of Paris took an Oath of Allegiance to Henry the Great. About this time he obtained the Rectory of St Andrew at Paris; and, lastly, in the Year 1604, he was made Bishop of Treguier. He died the Twenty eighth of July 1616, and was buried in his Cathedral,

"that Adrian was descended from a substantial and honourable Family. For these are his Words. Francis was first initiated in the Studies of the two inferior Classes of the College of Navarre; and brought up, by the Liberality of Charles IX. to Rhetoric and Philosophy. Afterwards he taught Classical Learning in the same Place." A very good Way to reconcile these two Authors, would be to say, that Nobilissima Familia does not signify what the French call a very noble Family, a Gentleman's Family; for if Thiriot understood his Latin so, he would not have expressed himself with Accuracy. Chirurgery is not the Profession of a Gentleman in France. If Monf. de Launoi had understood it in the same Sense, he would have produced Proofs unnecessarily; nor would his Proofs have been of any Force. It is superfluous to prove that the Quality of Gentleman has been ascribed to any one, when it has been said in express Terms, that he was descended from a very noble Family, in the Sense in which the French understand this Phrase; and if, in proof of a Fact of this Evidence, any one should alledge the Quality of Fellow of a College, and that of Teacher of the second Class, which such an one had possessed in the College of Navarre, it is certain he would speak very inconsiderately. Such Proofs of Nobility were never admitted. Perhaps, then, not only Michael Thiriot, but also Monf. de Launoi, took Nobilissima Familia for a considerable Family, and which had made a good Figure, and not for a noble Family. This must be carefully remembered in reading the Latin Elogies of Men of Letters; we should be mistaken, if we should take all those to be nobly descended, of whom it is said, nobili loco, nobili genere, nobili prosapia oriundi. I am not ignorant, that Francis d'Amboise styles himself Esquire, in the Edition of Abelard; but the most this proves, is, that his Father or himself were ennobled, but not at all that his Father was both a Chirurgeon, and a Gentleman. A Conjecture is just come into my Mind, which is at the Reader's Service; and that is, that perhaps, the Predecessors of Francis d'Amboise having been degraded, he obtained the Restoration of his Family. Nay, how do we know but he might descend from a Bastard of the illustrious Family of Amboise? This seems to be the most probable Conjecture; for he tells us, that he went to the Convent of the Paraclet, to collect what he could of the Works of Peter Abelard; and that he was very well received by the Abbe de la Rochefoucault, whose Grandmother, by the Father's side, says he, Antoinette d'Amboise, Wife of the Lord de Barbezieux, Knight of the Order, was the only Daughter of Guy d'Amboise, and Grand-daughter and Heiress of Charles, Lord of Chaumont, Marshal of France: So that the whole Succession of that most ancient Family devolved upon her; and she transferred the Estate of the eldest Branch into the Family of la Rochefoucault. Totam vetustissimam familiam crevit, & primogenita nostra ad Rupificaldos transfudit (2). It is very extraordinary, that the Son of a Chirurgeon of Charles IX should speak thus. Note, that we must not absolutely deny, that a Branch of the illustrious Family of Amboise remained in, or fell into, Obscurity. The Chirurgeon of Charles IX was, perhaps, of this Branch.

[This Person's Family takes it for granted, at present, (but falsely) from a sameness of Name, that it is a Branch of the illustrious Family of d'Amboise; but we can positively affirm,

I. That JOHN d'AMBOISE, Father of Francis d'Amboise, was a Native of the Town of Douay, in Flanders; that he was successively Chirurgeon to Francis I, Charles II, and Henry III; that he was naturalized by Letters of the Twenty ninth of January, in the Year 1566, being at that Time in quality of Valet de Chambre and Chirurgeon to Charles IX; that he died on the thirteenth of December, 1584; and that he was buried in the Church of St Jervaise, at Paris, with Mary Fromager, his Wife, Daughter of John Fromager, sworn Chirurgeon to the Chatelet de Paris, and Chirurgeon to the King.

II. That FRANCIS d'AMBOISE, son of John, was Baron of Chartre on the Loire, and Lord of Hemerz and Vezoul, in Touraine, &c. Counsellor, then President of the Parliament of Bretagne; Advocate General to the Grand Council, in the Year 1586; Master of the Requests, in 1597; and Counsellor to the Privy Council; afterwards Counsellor of State, in 1604; that he married, on the 15th of January, 1594, Margaret Cousinet, Daughter of a Notary of the Town of Meaux, who was still alive in the Year 1634; that, in the Month of July, of the Year 1589, King Henry III. created him a Knight, in Consideration of his Father's Services done to four of this Prince's Predecessors. A Copy of this Letter of Knight-hood is as follows.

Letters of Knight-hood; granted by King Henry III, in the Month of July, 1589, to FRANCIS d'AMBOISE, President of the Parliament of Bretagne.

"HENRY, by the Grace of God, King of France and Poland, to all present, and to come, greeting. Whereas it is just and reasonable, that Persons of eminent Virtue should be distinguished by a Title and Degree of Honour suitable to their Merit, that others may be encouraged thereby to rise by their Virtue to the same, or greater Dignity and Exaltation; we give you to understand, that, being fully satisfied of the noble, commendable, and virtuous Deeds, Actions and Conduct, of our dear and well beloved Monf. Francis d'Amboise, Lord of Vezoul, our Counsellor, and Advocate General in our Grand Council, and President of our Parliament of Bretagne; in remembrance of the Services, which his late Father shewed to four Kings, our Predecessors, and to ourselves; and in Consideration of the great, acceptable, and faithful Services, which the said d'Amboise has done to us, as well in the several Charges and Commissions, which he has had in this our Realm, and the Journey which he took into Poland, at the time of our Election, as in the Exercise of his two Functions, in two of our supreme Courts; and which Services the said d'Amboise continues ordinarily to perform near and about our Person, in several and various Ways; and in Expectation of his farther and still greater Services; WE, being willing to reward him in some measure, and to raise him to the Title and Degree of Honour, which his said Virtues and Actions deserve, that his own Descendants, and other Persons of Honour and Virtue may be induced, by his Example, to be equally serviceable to us and our Crown; these and other Reasons moving us thereto, we have made and created him A KNIGHT; and have honoured, and do honour him with this Title, in the Presence of several Lords and Princes of our Blood, and other great and noble Personages of our Court, and have permitted him to enjoy, and for the future to assume, the said Title of Knight, with all the Rights of Nobility, Honours, Authorities, Privileges, Exemptions, Prerogatives, and Precedencies, in all honourable Assemblies, as well in Courts of Justice, as elsewhere, where it shall be needful; in like manner as is enjoy'd by other Knights, created as well by Our Hand, as by that of our Royal Predecessors. In Consequence of which, we have directed our trusty and well-beloved, the Bailiffs, Seneschals, Judges, or their Deputies, belonging to our Courts of Parliaments, and our well-beloved Justices, Officers, and Subjects, in their respective Capacities, to cause, suffer, and permit, the said d'Amboise to enjoy fully and peaceably the said Rights of Knight-hood, Honours, Prerogatives, Privileges, Franchises, and Liberties, thereto belonging, as is above declared, and as is customary upon the like Occasion. For such is our Pleasure; and to the Intent that this our present Gift and Grant may be, and remain for ever, in Force, to the Honour of the said d'Amboise, and his Successors, and that there may be a perpetual Memo-

(2) Franc. Amboisius, Prefat. Apologet. in O-per. Abelardii.

plaints, Epitaphs, Thirty Four Roundos, and Three Ballads, was printed at Paris in 1556. Another is entitled, The Encomium of the Tooth (b). The Counter Epistles of Ovid (c), that is, Letters composed in answer to those, which the Heroines of Ovid wrote to their Husbands or Gallants, seemed to promise great Entertainment; and yet they underwent the Fate of his other Poems; They are quite unknown. He undertook some Translations; he turned four Satires of Juvenal (d) into French Verse, the 10th Book of Ovid's Metamorphosis, the Eclogues of Baptista Mantano (e), and the Italian Treatise of Antonio Philereus Fregoso, entituled, Ris de Democrite, & pleur d'Heracrite (Democritus's Laughter, and Heracitus's Tears) (f). He wrote in Heroics A Lamentation for the Death of Messire William du Bellai, Lord of Langey (g), and the Standard of the Soldiery (b) in Prose. See the Bibliothèque de du Verdier-Vau-Privas.

(f) Printed at Paris, in 1547.

(g) Printed at Paris, in 1543. La Croix du Maine, Bibl. Franc. pag. 322.

(b) Printed at Paris, in 1543.

AMBROSIUS, General of the Order of CAMALDOLI. Look for CAMALDOLI.

AMELIA, a City of Italy. It was anciently called AMERIA. It is situated between the Tiber and the Nera. Cato says it was founded 964 Years before the War of Perseus (a): So that, as this War began in the Year 581 of Rome, it should follow, that Ameria was 383 Years older than Rome. Festus calls the Founder of this City Amirus. It appears from Inscriptions, that it became one of those Cities, which the Romans called Municipia. Cicero confirms this in his fine Oration in defence of Rofcius Amerinus. It acquired the Privileges of a Roman Colony under Augustus (b). It stands in a fruitful Soil; and the Hills, which surround it, are covered with fine Vineyards (c). It is not certain that the Vines of Ameria were formerly in great Esteem. My View in this Article is only to rectify That of Moreri [A], and therefore I forbear enlarging upon it. Leander Albertus wants likewise to be set right [B].

(a) Apud Plinium, lib. 3. cap. 14.

(b) See Cluverius, Ital. Antiq. lib. 2. cap. 7.

(c) Leander Alberti Descript. Ital. pag. 144.

[A] My View in this Article, is only to rectify that of Moreri. I. No Author says, that Ameria was built at the time of the War of Perseus. II. Pliny does not maintain, that it was built in 964, before that War. He only tells us, that Cato had said so. III. Cicero did not plead for a Comedian, born in that Town; Rofcius Amerinus, for whom he pleaded, was different from Rofcius the Player, whose Cause he likewise undertook. IV. These Words of Virgil, Atque Amerina parant lentæ retinacula viti (1).

— — — — — and twins
AMERICAN Twigs, to tie the straggling Vine.
DRYDEN.

do not prove, that the Vines of Ameria were esteemed in his time. This Verse only implies, that in the Territory of that City there was found a great quantity of Boughs, as pliant as Ozier, which they make use of in dressing their Vineyards. "Virgas de quibus vites religantur: quæ virgæ abundant circa Amerinum oppidum — alii genus salicis dicunt, dispari colore à cætera salice: nam est rubra & ad connoscendum aptior, quia præter morem lenta est (2). — Twigs, with which Vines are tied; they are found in great plenty about Ameria. — Others say, it is a kind of Willow, of a different Colour from other Willows; for it is red, and fitter for tying, as being uncommonly pliant."

(1) Virgil. Georg. lib. 1. ver. 265. This Verse is very ill cited by Moreri, Atque Amerina parent lentæ retinacula viti.

(2) Servius in Virgil. ibid.

[B] Leander Albertus wants likewise to be set right. He makes Cato say, that Ameria was rebuilt above Nine hundred Years before the War of Perseus, and that it was first built by the Vejentes, a People of Tuscany, under the Conduct of Amerio, Daughter of the Italian Atlas, and of Plione. He supposes, that Pliny said it was built Nine hundred sixty four Years before the War of Perseus, and represents Cato and Pliny as being of two different Opinions. Afterwards he endeavours to reconcile them; which he does in the following manner. "The Chronology of the one, says he, agrees well enough with the Chronology of the other: Cato mentions above Nine hundred Years before the War of Perseus, and Pliny speaks of Nine hundred sixty four Years before that War: So that it is easy to reconcile them. Tho' one of them uses the Term Rebuilding, and the other the Term Building, it must not be inferred from thence, that they affirm contrary things; for the Word condere, which Pliny makes use of, is indifferently taken both for Founding and Repairing. These vain and chimerical Disputes fall to the Ground, to the shame of their Author, as soon as Pliny is consulted; for it appears, that he gives no Opinion of his own; and is contented to say, "Amerium — Cato ante Persei bellum conditam annis 964 prodidit (3). — Cato gave out, that Ameria was built Nine hundred sixty four Years before the War of Perseus."

(3) Plin. lib. 3. cap. 14. in fine.

AMELIUS, a Platonic Philosopher, of the IIIrd Century, was of Tuscany. His true Name was Gentilianus; and he preferred the Surname of Amerius to That of Amelius. He was 24 Years a Disciple of Plotinus at Rome, after which he retired to Apamea, a City of Syria, where he resided, when Plotinus died. He adopted one Justin Hefysbius, born in the same City (a). This doubtless occasioned the Mistake of Suidas, who said that Amelius was of Apamea. He is not less mistaken, when he affirms, that Porphyry was a Disciple of Amelius [A]. What is certain is, that Amelius

was

(a) Porphyry in Vita Plotini.

(1) Porphyry in Vita Plotini.

[A] Suidas — is mistaken, when he affirms, that Porphyry was a Disciple of Amelius. Porphyry himself tells us (1), that, when he began to be a Disciple of Plotinus, Amelius had studied eighteen Years under that Philosopher. He adds, that he was Amelius's Fellow-Pupil six Years; after which they both departed from Rome, himself for Sicily, and Amelius for Apamea. They continued in the Places, to which they had retired, at least 'till the Death of Plotinus. Now as Porphyry was then about Thirty eight Years of Age, and was in greater Reputation at Rome, than Amelius, it is improbable he should be a Disciple of the latter. Add to this, that Amelius, in dedicating to him his Apology for Plotinus, desires him to excuse and correct the Faults of it (2). Lastly, the Silence of Porphyry is a very strong Argument against Suidas. Porphyry mentions Amelius every Moment, in the Life of Plotinus; and would he not have said something of his having been the Scholar of such a Master? Suidas might have been deceived by Theodoret, who calls Amelius the Head of Porphyry's School (3), that is, according to the Interpretation of Monf. de Tillemont, of Plotinus's School, in which Porphyry studied (4). And indeed Suidas says he was Porphyry's Master. (They are Monf. de Tillemont's Words.) We may reckon likewise among his Disciples Cassicius Firmus,

(2) Ibid.

(3) Theodor. Græcor. Affect. pag. 500.

(4) Tillemont. Hist. des Empereurs. Tom. 3. pag. 1084. printed at Brussels.

was very much esteemed by his Master, and that he returned This Esteem by a singular Veneration for Plotinus. When he began to study under This famous Philosopher, all he knew was what he had learned from one Lyfimaebus (b); but by his great Application, he soon surpassed all his Fellow Pupils. He retained Part of Numenius's Lectures by heart, having collected and transcribed most of 'em. He made likewise ample Collections of all that he had heard in the Philosophical Conferences; and out of these Collections he drew up an hundred Treatises, which he gave to his adopted Son. He had not yet ventured to produce any thing else, when Porphyry came to Rome (c); that is to say, after having profited by Plotinus's Instructions for the space of 18 Years. Afterwards he composed 40 Books against Zoſtrianus, one of those ancient Heretics, both in Philosophy, and Religion, who made such an horrible jumble of the Doctrines of the Gospel, and of the Philosophers: There arose a great number of these Heretics in Plotinus's time; which obliged him to declare War against them. He undertook the Defeat of the Gnostics, whilst Amelius opposed Zoſtrianus, and Porphyry attacked the pretended Revelations of Zoroaster. Amelius, having heard afterwards, that Plotinus was accused of adorning himself with the Spoils of Numenius, took Pen in Hand to justify his Master, and, in three days, wrote a Book, which he dedicated to Porphyry, and which the latter entituled, Of the difference between the Doctrine of Numenius and That of Plotinus. What I am going to say is sufficient to shew the Esteem, which Plotinus had for Amelius. Plotinus took no great pains to exert himself; upon which Account he generally left some doubts upon the Minds of his Hearers, and stood in need in some manner of being forced to shew the best side of his Doctrine. This made Porphyry propose several Objections to him in Writing, to prove that our Ideas are distinct from our Understanding (d). This Doctrine Father Mallebranche has revived in our days. Plotinus, having read these Objections, gave them Amelius to refute 'em. The Opponent replied; Amelius rejoined; and at last Porphyry, apprehending Plotinus's Doctrine, approved it, and read his Retraction in a full Auditory. Longinus, whose Taste was so just, and whose Censures were so formidable, found indeed Amelius's Writings to be too verbose; but ranked him nevertheless among the few Philosophers, whose Works seemed to him worthy of Consideration [B]. He wrote a long Letter in answer to That, which he had received from Amelius, concerning Plotinus's Philosophy. Amelius was a Votary of Paganism, and a great Observer of new Moons and Feasts (e) [C]. In one of his Books he cites the beginning of St John's Gospel, in confirmation of Plato's Doctrine. Eusebius alleges this Passage (f), but not so fully as Theodoret (g) and St Cyril (h).

(b) He was a Disciple of Plotinus.

(c) In 263.

(d) Διδόναι ἀντιγράφας, παραγγέλλων διακρίνας, πειράζοντας, ὥτι ἢ τὸ πρὸς ὁμοίαν τὸ νόημα. Quapropter eum contra scribendo provocare tentavi, conatus ostendere ea quæ intelliguntur extra intellectum esse. Porphyry. in Vita Plot.

(e) T. k. n. from Plotinus's Life, written by Porphyry.

(f) De Praepar. Evang. lib. 11. cap. 29.

(g) Græc. Affection. lib. 2. pag. 500.

(h) In Julian. lib. 8.

Firmus, a Man — who was very serviceable to Amelius. So that here is a modern Author, who falls into the Error of Suidas, and goes still farther; for it is plain from the Life of Plotinus, to which he refers us concerning Cassicius, that it was in Plotinus's Lifetime that Cassicius had so great an Inclination for Amelius at Rome. Now it is undeniable, that, whilst the latter was at Rome, he had no Disciples. He was Plotinus's Disciple, and did not set up Altar against Altar.

[B] Longinus — ranked him among the few Philosophers, whose Works seemed to him worthy of Consideration.] The Number of them was so small, that it comprehended but two Authors, Plotinus and Amelius. The Reputation of the latter was upon this Account the greater; yet this did not prevent his Writings from losing, in a little time, their first Reputation. Eunapius places them in the same Category with those of two other Fellow-Students of Porphyry, and passes this Censure upon them all: Συγγράμματα γὰρ αὐτῶν περισσῶς εἶναι, λόγῳ δὲ αὐτῶν ἔδῃ εἶς (5). Their Works indeed are extant, but their Reputation is nothing. He gives this as a Reason for it, that they were destitute of the Ornaments of Language, and merely dogmatical.

[C] A great Observer of New Moons and Feasts.] I am aware, that, instead of New Moons, it would be better to say, the first Days of the Month, as Marcellus Ficinus did (6), but I thought my Expression would be more easily understood. These are Porphyry's Words: φιλοζῶντες δὲ γεγονότι τῷ Ἀμελίῳ, καὶ τὰ ἱερὰ κατὰ νημυνίαν, καὶ τὰς ἑορτάς ἐκπεριόνον (7). Amelius being fond of Sacrifices, and a religious Observer of new Moons and Feasts. After this let any one say, that Philosophers are impious Men? If they had been so, they would not have wrote so much in favour of Paganism; they would not have been the only Writers, whom the Christians had to oppose; for, as for the Priests and Sacrificators, they did not concern themselves with it; their Ignorance excused them from it.

(5) Eunap. in Vita Sophistarum, pag. 20.

(6) Per Calendas sacra faceret, says he.

(7) Porphyry. in Vita Plotini.

AMESIUS (WILLIAM) an Englishman, and Professor of Divinity at Franeker, flourished in the XVIIth Century. He was concerned in the Arminian Controversy; and wrote several learned Books against That Sect [A]. He is one of the reformed Divines, who have treated Cafes of Conscience most exactly and methodically. It is almost needless to observe, that he wrote against Bellarmin (a); for no one is ignorant, that in those times the Works of that Jesuit were refuted by the greatest part of the Protestant Controversists. Ameſius wrote a Book entituled, Medulla Theologiæ. He wrote likewise against the Socinians, and against Metaphysics, and in favour

[A] He wrote several learned Books against that Sect.] He begun the Controversy vis a vice with Gravinobovius, Minister of Rotterdam; but, being prevented by frequent Interruptions from speaking his whole Mind, carried on the Dispute by Letters, and published what he had objected, and his Adversary's Replies. The Points in question were, The Redemption of Man by the Death of JESUS CHRIST, and Electio grounded on the Fore-sight of Faith. Gravinobovius published another Edition of their Dispute at Rotterdam, in the Year 1615, in 4to. Ameſius replied, in a Piece entituled, Rescriptio Scholastica & brevis, &c. He wrote a Book likewise under the Title of Coronis ad Collationem Hagienſem, in which he replied to the Answers, which the Armenians had made to the Objections of the Ministers of Holland. His favour of Puritanism, of which he was a strict Follower [B]. He published this last Work in England in 1610. I say nothing of his Lectures on the Psalms, nor of his Explication of the Epistles of St Peter. He did not die in the Year 1639, as Henningus Witte affirms in his Diarium Biographicum. The Epistle Dedicatory of his Lectures on the Psalms, in 1635, are a proof that he was then dead. We find in the same Epistle, that, after having been twelve years Professor at Franker, he had obtained his Dismission, in order to be Professor at Rotterdam.

(a) His Book is intituled, Bellarminus Enervatus.

His Work, entitled, Anti Synodalia, contains some Remarks on the Scripta Synodalia of the Remonstrants. It was printed at Franker in the Year 1629.

[B] He wrote — in Favour of Puritanism, of which he was a strict Follower. You will find in the Preface, which I cite (1), some Extracts of the Book, which he published against Episcopacy, in the Year 1610, where you will see, that, in his Opinion, there were no good Men in England, but the Puritans. They distinguished themselves by their Aversion for Stage-Plays, Oaths, Dancing, Gaming, and Treats: The rest were only Gamesters, Drinkers, Swearers, and Children of Belial. There was no Medium between these two Extreams, either to suppress Episcopacy, or to bring back the Church of Rome from Hell. "Hi scilicet foli inter Anglos virei boni, simplices, quadrati: quos ex scelerisfigio fit cognoscere, quibus ex repudio spectaculorum, iuramentorum, chorearum, alearum & commestationum, inditum sit nomen Puritanorum: reliqui vero insignes aleatores, potatores illicui, religionis officia susque deque habentes, verlati infuliores papistarum, ambitionibus pravis corrupti, iuratores impii, homines denique vani, injulii, turpes, & omnes filii Belial. Adeoque vel è medio tollendum ementium hunc Episcoporum ordinem, vel denuo Papam revocandum ab orbe (2)."

(2) Grev. ibi fol. * iii.

AMESTRIS, Wife of XERXES King of Persia. See the first Remark of the Article MASISTES.

AMYOT (JAMES) Bishop of Auxerre, and Great Almoner of France, was one of the most illustrious learned Men of the XVIth Century. He was born at Melun the Thirtieth of October 1514. His Father and Mother, who were good honest Folks, but of a very mean Condition [A], used all their Industry to maintain him at Paris, where he went thro' his School-Learning, and a Course of Philosophy, in the College of Cardinal le Moine. He had naturally a heavy Genius; but Labour and Application supplied this Defect. Having taken his Master of Arts Degree at 19 Years of Age, he continued to study under the Royal Professors, whom Francis I. had established. He heard James Tusanus, who explained the Greek Poets, Peter Danaus, who was Professor of Eloquence, and Orontius Finæus, who taught Mathematics. He left Paris at Twenty three Years of Age, to go to Bourges with the

Sieur

[A] His Father and Mother — were but of a very mean Condition. Some say that Amyot's Father, was a Currier of Melun (1); according to others he made and sold Purples, and tagged Points (2); lastly, others say that he was a Butcher. I find three good Authorities for this latter Opinion, Tbuanus (3), Pappyrus Maffo (4), and Brantome. I believe the Reader will not be displeased to see the Words of this last mentioned Author a little at length, for they contain another Particular, which deserves to be known, though it should be false. Brantome, having said, that Charles IX. in a Speech to the Parliament, said, with a courageous and threatening Boldness, "It is your Business to obey my Ordinances, without disputing or contesting them; for I know better, than you, what is fit and expedient for the Good of my Kingdom", Adds: "Being as yet beardless, he spoke these Words before those old and wise Men, who all wondered at such a bold and grave Speech; which favoured more of a generous Courage, than of the Lessons of his Preceptor, Mr Amyot; who had nevertheless instructed him well, and whom he greatly loved, and had given him very good Benefices, and made him Bishop of Lizieux (5), and called him always his Master; and sometimes, in jest, reproached him with his Avarice, telling him, that he lived only on Neats-Tongues; and indeed he was a Butcher's Son of Melun, and might well be fond of the Meat, which he had seen his Father prepare. Setting aside his Avarice, he was a Great and Learned Man, both in Greek and Latin; witness the beautiful and elegant Translation he made of Plutarch; though some envious Persons gave out, that he was not the sole Author of it; but that he was assisted by a certain great Man, well skilled in the Greek Tongue, who happened, luckily for him, to be confined in the Prison of the Palace of Paris, and in Necessity; whom he released and took into his Service; and that they two privately composed this Translation, which Amyot afterwards published in his own Name. But this is entirely false, for He alone wrote it; and they, who were acquainted, and conversed with him, can truly say, that he wanted

"no Assistance in such a Work. To conclude, he educated That brave King very well, and chiefly in the Catholic Religion." Were I to call in question the three mean Professions, which are ascribed to our Amyot's Father, my reason would not be, because his Son has mentioned none of them in the Manuscript of his Life; He was contented to say, that he was born of Parents more virtuous than rich, parentibus beneficiis magis quam copiosis (6). This Reason has no Weight with me; for there are few great Men, of mean Extraction, who are not very willing to pass lightly over the Obscurity of their Birth: Particulars on that Subject are disagreeable to them. They will own in general, that they were not Men of Quality; but you must not expect that they should give you any Memoirs, in which you may read, that their Fathers were Butchers, Cobblers, Sellers of tagged Points, or Matches; that they lived upon Alms in their Childhood, &c. They, who make such Confessions, and are willing they should be inserted in their Elogies, are so few, that, though it were true, that Amyot had begged for some time in the Streets of Paris, I should not be surprized, that he did not mention such a Particular in his Memoirs of his Life. I shall not therefore refuse by his Silence what is related of his Beggary, and of his having been a Foot-Boy, and of his Abode in the Hospital of Orleans (7). It is true, I cannot reconcile this Silence with That part of his Will, wherein he leaves Twelve hundred Crowns to That Hospital, as an acknowledgement for the Charity, which he had met with there (8). It has been observed, that in his Works he never adds his Country's Name to his own, and that, during his prosperous Condition, he had very little Correspondence with the Place of his Birth (9). No doubt he was weak enough to be mortified at That City, and to fancy that his Correspondence with Melun would make People talk of the Meanness of his Birth. Yet I have read, that he advanced some Persons of his Family. "He died invested with great Dignities, and worth above Two hundred thousand Crowns, besides a great many other means which he had of advancing his Relations, some of which shared in his Liberality (10)."

[B] He

(1) Grevin-clovii Pref.
Disserat.
Theolog. de duabus Questionibus.

(1) St Real,
Of the Life of History,
p. 74.

(2) Roulli-ard's Antiquities of Melun, pag.
605.

(3) Thuan.
Histor. lib.
100. ad ann.
1591. pag.
405.

(4) Lanli fi-
lius erat, Meloduno
oppido ortus,
vir excellen-
ti ingenio,
Latineque & Græce doctissimus.
Carolus Magistrum eum appellabat, inter jocos avaritiam obiciens & sordida, quod lingua bubulis utere-
tur. Pappyr.
Maffo in Historia Vit.
Caroli IX.

(5) This is a Mistake;
he should have said
Aux. 112. and not Lizieux.

(6) Roulli-
ard, ubi supra.

(7) St Real,
ubi supra,
pag. 76.

(8) Id. pag.
75.

(9) Roulli-
ard, ubi supra.

(10) They are la Popelinere's Words, pag.
250. of his idea of History.

(a) He was Reader of Lectures to Francis I.

(b) William Bouchetel, Sieur de Saffy.

(c) This Book is usually called Heliodorus's Ethiopic History.

Sieur Colin (a), who was possessed of the Abbey of St Ambrose in that City [B]. At the Recommendation of this Abbot, a Secretary of State there (b) took Amyot into his House to be Tutor to his Children. The Progress they made under him induced their Father to recommend him to the Princess Margaret, Duchess of Berry, only Sister of Francis I. Upon this Recommendation Amyot was made public Lecturer in Greek and Latin, in the University of Bourges. He read two Lectures every day for ten Years, a Latin Lecture in the Morning, and a Greek one in the Afternoon. It was during that time that he translated into French, The Loves of Theagenes and Chariclea (c). This Translation pleased Francis the First so well, that he soon provided the Author with a Benefice. He gave him the Abbey of Bellofane, which became vacant by the Death of Francis Vetabius [C]. That Prince died soon after; upon which Amyot thought it more for his Interest to go into Italy, in hopes of Preferment there, than to expect any thing from the Court of France. He went to Venice with Morvillier, whom Henry II. sent on an Embassy thither. Morvillier employed him in some Affairs, and sent him to carry the King's Letters to the Council of Trent, in 1551 [D]. Being recalled from his Embassy, Amyot refused to repass the Alps with him, and chose rather to go to Rome, where he met with a very kind reception from the Bishop of Mirepoix. He lodged about Two Years at his House. It was then, that, examining the Manuscripts of the Vatican, to which Romulus Amaſeus, who was the Keeper of That famous Library, gave him free Access, he discovered, that Heliodorus, Bishop of Trica, was the Author of The Loves of Theagenes. He met with a more correct and more perfect Manuscript of This Work, than That which he had translated, and was not wanting in taking proper Care to publish a better Edition. His learned Occupations did not take off his Thoughts from the Interest of his Fortune. He made his Court very dexterously to Cardinal de Tournon, and insinuated himself so far into his Favour, that the Cardinal nominated him to the King, when That Prince, having recalled him to France, desired him to recommend to him a good Preceptor for his Two Younger Sons (d). This was about the Year 1558. Thus Amyot became Preceptor to Two of Henry the Second's Sons. Whilst he was in this Post, he finished his Translation of Plutarch's Lives, and dedicated it to That Prince (e): Afterwards he undertook a Translation of Plutarch's Morals, and finished it in the Reign of Charles IX, to whom he dedicated it. Charles IX. was his great Benefactor; He gave him the Abbey of St Cornelius of Compiègne, and made him Great Almoner of France, and Bishop of Auxerre [E]; and, as the Dignity of Great

(d) They reigned successively, under the Names of Charles IX. and Henry III.

(e) He began it in the Reign of Francis I. to whom he presented some of Those Lives written in a fair hand by Adam Charles, a Writing-Master of Paris, Roullier's Antiquities of Melun, pag. 605.

[B] He left Paris — to go to Bourges with the Sieur Colin, who was possessed of the Abbey of St Ambrose in That City.] Bullart, who generally follows the Antiquities of Melun, goes out of his way here, to inform us of a Particular very little known (11), which is, that Amyot turned Monk in the Abbey of St Ambrose in the Town of Bourges. But that the Abbot, judging him worthy of a more conspicuous Life, than that of a Cloyster, brought him acquainted with the Sieur de Sacy Bouchetel. 'Tis pity he quotes no written Authority for a Particular so little known.

[C] He gave him the Abbey of Bellofane, which became vacant by the Death of Francis Vetabius.] This is altogether inconsistent with the Narrative of the Abbot de St Real. The Author will have it, that, in the Reign of Henry II, Amyot was still in the Obscurity of a small Tutorship, in the House of a Gentleman, who was a Friend of his, and that M. de l'Hospital, who did not know him, recommended him only on Account of a Greek Epigram, which was presented to That Monarch (12). This must necessarily be false, if it be true, as the Manuscript of Amyot's Life says, that this learned Man had been several Years Professor at Bourges, before the Death of Francis I; and that his Works, which were presented to That King, procured him a very good Abbey. Can any one believe, that M. de l'Hospital was unacquainted with a Frenchman, who had published, in 1549, at farthest (13), a Translation of Heliodorus's Historia Ethiopica? How are we sure, that Henry II. took a Journey to Bourges before the first Edition of That Translation? Add, that the Manuscript Life of Amyot makes him go into Italy soon after the Death of Francis I. Reconcile this if you can with the Abbot de St Real, who makes him a Tutor at Bourges at the Time of Henry the Second's Journey to That Town.

[D] Morvillier — sent him to carry the King's Letters to the Council of Trent, in 1551.] It will be necessary to correct the Author, who supplies me with this Article (14), though he tells us, that he made use of a Life of Amyot, begun by himself, and finished by his Secretary. We have a Letter of Amyot, which contains the Relation of his Journey to Trent.

A few Days after this Journey, he wrote to Mr de Morvillier, Master of the Requests. Now he is so far from saying, that Mr de Morvillier, Ambassador of France at Venice, had sent him to carry the King's Letters to the Council, that he declares in express Terms, that he was chosen for That Business by Cardinal de Tournon, and by the Ambassador de Selve. This is a convincing Proof, that Morvillier was not Ambassador at Venice, at that time: and this appears still plainer by Amyot's Letter; for it is directed to M. de Morvillier at Court. Observe well these Words of Amyot; Cardinal de Tournon, and the Ambassador de Selve, were pleased to pitch upon me to execute this Commission, when such a thing was the farthest from my Thoughts (15). — It is observable, that not only I was not so much as mentioned in That Letter (16), but the worst is, They had not so much as sent a Copy of it, by which one might know the Contents of it. So that I never saw any Thing so ill managed (17). It was not then the King, who sent him to protest in his Name against the Council; but it was Cardinal de Tournon, and the French Ambassador at Venice, who made choice of him to carry the King's Letter, and to read his Majesty's Protestation Word for Word before the Assembly. He acquitted himself very well of this Commission. You see what I am at. The Abbot de St Real takes it for granted, that Amyot was Preceptor of the Children of France, before the Negotiation, which I have just now mentioned; and he supposes that Henry II. employed him in that Business, because he had experienced the Reality of the good Character which M. de l'Hospital had given of him, when he told the King, that Amyot deserved to be Preceptor of the Children of France. All this is irreparably confuted by Amyot's Letter to Morvillier. Correct, therefore, without Fear, this Falshood, in de Saussai. "Cæterum Amyotus, adhuc Abbas, ad Concilium Tridentinum ab Henrico II. missus fuit, negotiorum magni momenti causa (18). — But Amyot, yet an Abbot, was dispatched by Henry II. to the Council of Trent upon Affairs of great Moment." Henry II. had no Part in this Translation.

[E] Made him Great Almoner of France, and Bishop of Auxerre.] The first of these two Dignities was conferred

(15) Instructions and Letters of the Most Christian King, and other Papers relating to the Council of Trent.

(16) It is that, which the King wrote to the Fathers of the Council of Trent.

(17) Instructions and Letters, &c. pag. 23.

(18) Andr. Suassaius, de Scriptis. Eccles. a. 52.

(11) Acad. des Sciences, Tom. 1. p. 266.

(12) S. Real, ubi supra, pag. 80.

(13) I express myself thus, because du Verdier Vau-Privas mentions an Edition of 1549. But this does not prove that it was the first.

(14) Sebast. Roullier's Antiquities of Melun.

(16) Thuanus, de Vita sua, lib. 4. p. 8. 1222.

(17) At the 30th Institution of this Order, on the 31st of December, 1578.

Almoner, and the Office of Curator of the University of Paris, were vacant at the same time, he presented him to them both. Thuanus complains very much of this Plurality (f). Henry III. had perhaps yielded to the importunate Solicitations of the Bishop of St Flour, who had followed him into Poland, and earnestly desired the Dignity of Great Almoner; but the Dukes of Savoy, the King's Aunt, so strongly recommended Amyot to him, when he passed through Turin, in his Return from Poland, that not only His Office was continued to him; but a new Lustre was added to it, in his Favour: for when Henry III. made Amyot Commander of the Order of the Holy Ghost (g), he ordained that, in Consideration of his Merits, all the Great Almoners of France should, for the future, be, in virtue of their Office, Commanders of That Order. Amyot, in the midst of his Dignities did not neglect his Studies; he carefully revised all his Translations, and compared them with the Greek Text, and made many Alterations in them: in a word, he designed to publish a more perfect Edition, with the various Readings of the Manuscripts; but he did not live to finish this Work. The Civil Wars and the rebellious Spirit of the People of his Diocese gave him a thousand Disquiets [G]: He was robbed, in his Return from the States of Blois, in 1589. He died the 6th of February 1593, in his 79th Year [H]. He had preached sometimes on solemn Festival days. He made use of the Latin Tongue in composing his Sermons, though he spoke them in French. He had a very particular Custom in Preaching; He turned the Door of the Pulpit towards the People, and sat in the middle of it, on a great Chair. He attempted Poetry, but without Success [I]. This is what I have extracted out

(18) Will. du Perron's Ecclesiastical History of the Court, or an Enquiry into the Antiquities of the Chapel and Oratory of the King of France, pag. 302.

ferred on Amyot, the sixth of December, 1560, by Charles IX. at Orleans. Du Puyrat, who had perused the Registers of the Great Almoners of France, mentions this Date as extracted out of the Registers of Amyot (19). It is therefore matter of Fact. Now by this means above one half of the History, which the Abbot of St Real relates concerning This Prelate's Fortune, comes to nothing. He says, that Amyot, in the Reign of his Pupils, Francis II. and Charles IX. had only the Abbey of Bellofane, with the Honour of having spoke the judicious and bold Protestation of Henry II. before the whole Council, and that his Fortune would probably have stopped there, had it not been for a lucky Chance, which raised him higher than ever he had hoped for, and which wonderfully shows the Spirit of the Court. This lucky Hit was This: It happened one Day, that, at That Prince's Table, Charles V. was praised for several things, but chiefly for having made his Preceptor a Pope. ----- This made such an Impression on Charles the Ninth's Mind, that he said, that upon Occasion he would do as much for his own. And, in fact, soon after the Place of Almoner of France became vacant, the King gave it to Amyot. All this falls to the Ground, when we consult the Registers of this Great Office, in which we find the Post of Great Almoner conferred on Amyot, the second Day of the Reign of Charles IX. Besides, Francis II. was not a Disciple of Amyot, but of Peter Danes. But to proceed; M. de St Real supposes, that the Queen-Mother, upon hearing what Charles IX. had done for his Preceptor, sent for the latter into her Closet, where she received him with these dreadful Words: "I have made the Chanciers and the Cbatillions, the Constables and the Chancellors, the Kings of Navarre, and the Princes of Conde, buckle to, and shall an insignificant little Priest pretend to oppose me." Notwithstanding the Submission of Amyot, the Conclusion was, That if he had the Office, he was not to live Twenty four Hours. The Abbot says afterwards, that Amyot absconded, and that Charles IX. immediately gussing at the Occasion of it, ----- fell into such a Passion ----- that the Queen, who had much ado to govern him, and who feared him, as much as she loved him, gave immediately Orders to look for Amyot. This is to suppose, that Charles IX. had been King, long before he gave this Office to his Preceptor. But nothing can be more false; He gave it him the next Day after his Accession to the Crown, before Catherine de Medicis had talked of the Regency, and had exerted her Power over so many Persons. Every one knows how little Influence she had in the Reign of Francis II. After all, I allow the Reflexions of M. de St Real, on this Occasion, considered in themselves, to be fine and solid. As for the Bishoprick of Auxerre, to be fine and solid. As for the Bishoprick of Auxerre, it was not given to Amyot in the Year 1568, as du Puyrat affirms (20), but in the Year 1570 (21), after the Death of Cardinal Peñbert Babou, who was possessed of it.

[F] All the Great Almoners of France were, for the future, to be, in Virtue of their Office, Commanders of That Order.] Another Author (22) gives this Account of it. "Henry III. in the Year 1578, instituting the Order of the Holy Ghost, ordained, in * Favour of Amyot, that the Great Almoner, and his Successors, should be associated in the same Order with the Title of Commanders; who nevertheless (say he) shall not be obliged to prove their Nobility; which he added, to gratify the said Amyot, who was not of a noble Extraction, but entered into the Temple of Honour through that of Virtue." See in du Saussai (23), King Henry the Second's Answer to the Courtiers, who murmured at the Promotion of a Man of such mean Birth. The same Author says, that Amyot drew up, with Skill and Learning, the Statutes and Litanies, or rather the Office of the Order; Hejus statuta & borarias preces scite & scienter composuit.

[G] The rebellious Spirit of the People of his Diocese gave him a Thousand Disquiets.] Thuanus makes a Remark, very disadvantageous to the Memory of our Amyot; for he accuses him of having forgot the Favours, which the two Princes, his Pupils, had heaped upon him, and of having too much indulged the Seditious and Factions Rage of the Inhabitants of Auxerre. The Love of Study, together with old Age, induced him to reside upon his Diocese; and he had not the Courage to oppose the Torrent of Rebellion (24). Sebastian Rouillard does not speak of him in this manner; but insinuates that he was ill used for his Fidelity. "Afflictions, say he (25), overtook him, when he left the States of Blois, in the Year 1589; for, through the Fury of the Troubles, which grew hot at that time, he was robbed and plundered half-way in his return to Auxerre; and, being arrived there, he met with great Vexation from the Inhabitants, and even his Clergy. At last, things were pacified by Degrees; so that he continued his Residence, but daily complained, that the Loss of his Estate, and of the Conveniences he enjoyed before, deprived him of the Pleasure of Study." Sammarthius owns indeed, that some ill Reports had been spread, but does not believe them to be true (26).

[H] He died the sixth of February 1593, in his Seventy ninth Year.] Thuanus applied himself to Persons, very ill informed concerning Amyot, since they could neither tell him, when he died, nor at what Age. He says, in general, that Amyot, whose Death he places in the Month of July, 1591, was above sixty Years of Age. Sammarthius places it in the Year 1592. "Triennio post Henricum tertium de testabili paricidarum coitione sublatum è vivis ex-cessit (27). ----- He died three Years after the de- testable Assassination of Henry III."

[I] He attempted Poetry, but without Success.] Sebastian Rouillard, his Countryman, would doubtless have spared him on this Head, if it had been possible. These are his Words: "As for the Latin Poem,

(22) Will. du Perron, ubi supra, pag. 335.

* The Ordinance is to be found in the 18th Book of Henry's Code, Tit. 11. Of the Holy Ghost.

(23) Saussai de Script. Eccles. de 52.

(24) Thuan. ubi supra.

(25) Rouill. ubi supra, pag. 612.

(26) Sammarthius in Per. Eloq. p. 96.

(27) Id. ib.

(28) Hist. Eccles. de la Cour. pag. 431.

(29) There is a note in the Table of Fra-Paulo's Translation, where 'tis said that Amyot went Ambassador to Rome, under the Name of Bishop of Auxerre, in 1562. The Bishop of Auxerre mentioned by Fra-Paulo was not James Amyot.

(18) It is in Latin, and has not been printed; but Sebastian Roulliard Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, who read it, published an Abstract of it in his Antiquitez de Melun, pag. 605. I have taken this Article from that Abstract.

(28) Roulliard's Antiquities of Melun, pag. 614.

(29) Id. ib.

(30) It is about two miles from the Longi Poëmenia of Thuanus, and not ceit du Ryer, The Poëmenia of Longi.

(31) Baillet's Academy of Sciences, p. 168.

(32) Du Verdier Vaufray, Protopography, Tom. 3. p. 2572.

(33) Jugem's Scavans, Tom. 4. p. 521. See also Sir Thomas Pope Blount, Censura celebr. Aut. pag. 521.

(34) Thuan. Hist. l. 100. pag. 405.

(35) Girac's Reply to Coftar, § 51. pag. 438. Dutch Edit.

* Amiotus hic Poëmenia Longi, Heliadori Æthiopiæ, Diodori Siculi Historiæ, ac postremo Plutarcho in linguam nostram Gallicam de Græcæ veritate, sed hunc majore elegantia quam fide, dum aurius nostris placere, quam de sensu veritate laborare, potius existimamus. Thuan. de Vita sua, lib. 5.

† L'Oiseau de l'Action hypothèque (Of Mortgage) back.

out of a Life of Amyot, begun by himself, and finished by his Secretary (b). His Translations are the best of his Compositions [K], though the Critics are not all favourable to him [L] upon this Account; some of whom tax him with Plagiarism [M]. Others have imputed Avarice to him [N]. The Abbot de St Real was acquainted with many curious Particulars, which are not in the Life of Amyot (i). They are to be seen in Moreri's Dictionary: Which is the Reason why I omit them, though I have no reason to question the Truth of them. If I have any Supplement, or Explication, to add to what I have said, I shall give them in the Remarks.

What Varillas relates concerning Amyot is full of Falshoods [O]. It stands in need of a Critical Examination; which may serve to disembroil the Chaos.

"Poem, which he wrote on the Coronation of King Charles IX, it appears from thence that he had read Horace very much; but he would have proved a very indifferent Poet (28)." The Translation of Greek Verses into French, to which Amyot confined himself in his Plutarch, is frightful. Charles IX thought it very coarse, in which his Opinion was followed by many others (29). Roulliard alleges a pitiful excuse; "It is, says he, a Collection out of several Authors, and of different Styles." His Opinion of Amyot's Prose is This. "In short, says he, in my Opinion he was more happy in Translation, than in Composition, either in French or Latin: for what I have seen of the latter appears to me strangely heavy and dull."

[K] His Translations are the best of his Compositions. The first was That of The Loves of Theagenes and Chariclea; but That of Plutarch procured him his chief Reputation. He translated likewise the Pastorals of Longus (30), several Books of Diodorus Siculus, and some Greek Tragedies. The Duchess of Savoy, not finding in Plutarch the Life of Epaminondas, nor that of Scipio, desired him to compose them. He did so; but they were not published. The Preface was ready. Peter Matthieu saw it (31), and therefore we may believe that Amyot had put the last hand to That Work. It is said (32), that he was afraid to undertake a Translation of Philophrastus, though King Henry III. had often desired him to set about it; but he excused himself, on the Impossibility; and, when that Prince, having seen the Version of Vigener, said to Amyot, Well, Sir! you told me that Philophrastus could not be translated; Amyot answered, that 'till then he had thought so.

[L] The Critics are not all favourable to him. Mr Baillet has happily collected the Praises bestowed upon Amyot's Translation of Plutarch (33). They are fine and greatly to his Credit. I add to them what I heard Mr Conrart say in the Year 1675, upon being told, that most of the Copies of Plutarch, translated by the Abbot Tallemant, had been lost in the burning of a Bookfeller's Warehouse; The Loss, said he, will be easily born, whilst we have the Translation of Amyot, which contains the finest Turns of our Language, and the best Economy of our Periods. Mr Baillet has not been less careful in collecting the Censures of That Work: He did not forget, that Thuanus commends This Translator's Elegancy in his Versions of Diodorus and Plutarch, more than his Faithfulness. Diodoro ac præcipue Plutarcho, licet majore plerumque elegantia quam fide, Gallice reddidit (34). But he forgot another Passage of Thuanus, mentioned by Mr de Girac. This last Author shall be the only one, whose Words I shall alledge, as a kind of Supplement to Mr Baillet's fine Collection; "As for Epitimus, says he (35), who is killed in Amyot, whereas in the Greek Text it is only his Horse; I should rather think, that this famous Interpreter made use of Copies, different from those at present, than say, as Thuanus does *, that his Versions are much more Polite, than Faithful, and that he was not so curious after Truth, as studious, even to Affectation, of pleasing delicate Ears. I know that a learned † and wife Civilian charges him with not comprehending a fine Piece of Antiquity in relation to a Law of Solon; for, instead of saying, that this Lawgiver had boasted somewhere in his Poems, that he had delivered the Athenians from all the Debts they had contracted, and taken away the Wisps of lighted Straw, or Pennons, which were fixed in many Places on the Mortgaged Lands; he had rendered it Removing the

* Οτι τῆς το προσηγορίας τῆς ὅρας ἀντὶς πολλὰ καὶ πενήματα. Quod fultus signa oppignoris Terris passim affixa.

† Marks or Signals to distinguish mortgaged Lands.

VOL. I. No. IX.

Boundaries ‡, which before separated the Inhabitants of the whole Territory of Attica. I could add several Remarks on many Passages, in which good Amyot was mistaken; but I cannot commend Mr de Meziriac, who  in a Discourse concerning Translations, after having praised the Wit, Labour, and Style of this Eloquent Translator in his Version of Plutarch, pretends to shew that he has grossly mistaken the Sense of Plutarch in Two thousand Places. [M] Some of whom tax him with Plagiarism. We have seen (36), what Brantome says on this Subject. Let us now see what others have said concerning it. "I have heard M. Patin say, says Mr Colomies (37), that he had it from the good Man Lawrence Bochel (who caused the Decrees of the Gallican Church, &c. to be printed) that Amyot had translated Plutarch's Lives from an old Italian Version in the King's Library, and that this was the Cause of the Faults he had committed. I cannot tell whether this Version be That, which Baptist Alexander Jaconel of Rieti made from the Latin, in the Year 1428, which is in the same Library." La Popeliniere censures Amyot for denying Turnebus the Honour which was due to him, in not informing the Public of the Assistance he had from him in understanding the difficult Passages (38). He pretends, that Turnebus sent him whole Passages turned into French, where Amyot was at a loss, and that several other learned Men assisted him with their good Advice (39).

[N] Others have imputed Avarice to him. I have cited a long Passage of Brantome in the Remark [A], wherein Charles IX. taxes his Preceptor with this Fault. Another Book informs me, that Amyot, asking one Day a Benefice of a great Revenue, that Prince said to him, How now Master? you told me, that if you had a thousand Crowns a Year, you would be satisfied; I believe you have that and more. Sir, answered he, Appetite comes by eating; and yet be obtained what be desired (40). You may if you please look upon the Two hundred thousand Crowns, which he amassed, as an ambiguous Proof of his Avarice (41).

[O] What Varillas relates — is full of Falshoods. He says, that, the Court of Francis I. stopping some Hours at the Castle of a Gentleman of Berry, Amyot, who was Preceptor in the Gentleman's House, took Occasion to present to his Majesty an Epigram of four Greek Verses, which he had just composed. The learned Persons, who followed his Majesty, were so well pleased with the Epigram, that it was thought improper to leave the Author of it any longer in a Province so remote from Paris. The King took him into his Service, and gave him a considerable Pension (42). This whole Account is full of Transpositions of Circumstances; for we have seen (43), that the good Effect which some of Amyot's Greek Verses, presented to Henry II, produced, is attributed to Michael de l'Hospital. Varillas relates in another Book (44), that Amyot, Professor of the Greek Tongue at Bourges, made himself known to the Court by his Politeness in writing French, and that Bouchet and Morvillier, Secretaries of State, recalled him at that time to Paris, and having brought him back to the Communion of the Catholic Church, recommended him to Cardinal de Tournon, who procured him the Abbey of Bellofane, and the Commission of Secretary to the Ambassador at Venice, from whence he set out to execute the King's Orders at Trent, in the Year 1551. Thus this Historian refutes in one Book what he advances in another. He adds, that Amyot made a Speech before the Fathers of the Council: He gives the Substance of it, and quotes Amyot's Speech. But this Speech is a Chimera; Amyot only read the King's Protest. What Assurance is it to cite Manuscripts, which never

(i) See his Treatise of the Use of History. Mr Teillier has borrowed from it whatever relates to Amyot, (always citing his Author) in his Additions to the Elgies taken from Thuanus, Tom. 2. pag. 152.

† The Word ἔπος signifies indifferently a Boundary, and a Mark of a Mortgage.

 Peliffon's History of the Academy, p. 232.

(36) Above, in Remark [A].

(37) Colomies, Opusc. pag. 124. Edit. of Utrecht.

(38) Popelin's History of the Academy, lib. 3. pag. 259.

(39) History of Histories, pag. 359.

(40) Du Verdier's Protopography, Tom. 3. pag. 2573.

(41) See Remark [A] at the end.

(42) Varillas's History of Henry II, lib. 10. pag. 310. Dutch Edit.

(43) In Remark [C].

(44) Varillas's History of Henry II, lib. 2. pag. 204.

ver were in Being? Varillas affirms, that, at the Age of ten Years, Amyot was found sick on the Road to Paris lying near a Ditch, and that "a Gentleman going by - - - - - set him upon his Horse, and carried him to a House, which was near; where he recovered, and was charitably furnished with sixteen Pence for the Expenses of his Journey home; which he afterwards repaid with Usury, by leaving to the Heirs of his Benefactor Sixteen hundred Crowns a Year (45)." 'Tis said in Amyot's Life, that he left Twelve hundred Crowns to the Hospital of Orleans (46). It was there that the Gentleman carried him; there he was cured; and there he received sixteen Pence: It was to That Hospital that he left afterwards; a Legacy of Twelve hundred Crowns, according to the Relation of Mr de St Real (47). Why does Varillas alter these Circumstances, and exaggerate Amyot's Gratitude? Why does he by his Hyperboles convert a meer Legacy of Three thousand six hundred Livres into a yearly Rent of Six thousand two hundred Livres (48). He tells us, that "Amyot, being a Student, changed his Religion, and was instrumental in seducing his School-Fellows; till, being discovered, he fled to Bourges;" where the same Volmar, who had intrusted Calvin and Beza, procured him a Tutor's Place in "the House of the Abbot of St Ambrose, whose "Nephews were committed to his Care; and chose him afterwards for his Successor in teaching Greek. Amyot was soon weary of teaching publicly." This Account cannot be reconciled with the Memoirs of Amyot's Life, published by Sebastian Roulliard. We find there, that he was about Twenty three Years of Age, when he went to Bourges with the Abbot of St Ambrose, who persuaded him to undertake That Journey (49), and therefore he went thither in the Year 1537. Now Volmar left Bourges in the Year 1535 (50), and consequently it was not He, who introduced him to the Acquaintance of that Abbot. We find in the same Memoirs, that Amyot filled the Professor's Place ten Years, and that he was often heard to say among his Friends, that he had a sufficient Maintenance; that he had never enjoyed better Times than those; and that he took great Delight in performing That Function, because he was perfectly at his Ease (51). And therefore 'tis not true, that he was soon weary of teaching publicly. Varillas observes, that Bouchetel and Morvillier represented to him the Obstacles, which his Heresy threw in the Way of his Salvation, and of his Fortune, and that he profited by their Advice. Bouchetel knew him, then, to be a Calvinist; but would he, in such a Case, have made him Tutor to his Children, as he actually did (52)?

(49) Roulliard's Antiqu. p. 607.

(50) Melch. Adam. in Vitis Philosph. p. 233.

(51) Roulliard, ubi supra.

(52) Roulliard. ibid.

AMYRAUT (in Latin AMYRALDUS) (MOSES) Minister, and Professor of Divinity, at Saumur, was one of the most illustrious Divines of France, in the XVIIth Century. He was of a good and ancient Family, which came originally from Orleans [A]; and he was born at Bourgueil, a small Town of Touraine, in the Month of September, 1596. Having performed his Course of Philosophy, he was sent to Poitiers, to study the Civil Law; and applied himself to it with so much diligence, that he spent 14 Hours every day in Study. He became a Licentiate at the end of one Year (a), but proceeded no farther. Mr Bouchereau his Countryman, and Minister of Saumur, advised him to study Divinity. The reading of Calvin's Institutions gave him an high Relish for this Advice; so that, having told his Father, who had his views in designing him for the Bar [B], that he passionately desired to be a Minister, he obtained, though with much difficulty, the Consent, which he desired. He went to study at Saumur, under Cameron, who loved and esteemed him in a particular manner; and he was for a considerable time a Student in Divinity. When he was admitted a Minister, he was presented to the Church of St Aignan, in the Country of Maine, where having lived eighteen Months, he was invited to Saumur, to succeed Mr Dailly, who quitted his Post, to be Minister of Charenton (b). At the same time, that the Church of Saumur desired to have him for their Minister, the Academic Council cast their Eyes upon him for the Professorship of Divinity. By this means the Church of Rouen and Tours, who at the same time requested him of the Synod, were disappointed in their Hopes; for the National Synods had made a Regulation, that the Interest of the Universities should be preferred to That of the Churches. His Admission to the Professorship in 1633, his Examination, which preceded it, and his Inaugural Thesis, de Sacerdotio Christi, procured him great Applause. Two other excellent Professors were admitted with him, to wit, Lewis Cappe, and Josua de la Place: Thus the University of Saumur obtained, at one and the same time, Three Persons who were extremely well qualified to make it flourish; for, besides

(45) Varillas, ibid. p. 203.

(46) See Remark [A].

(47) St Real, of the Use of History, p. 875.

(48) Varillas, ibid. p. 204.

(a) In 1616.

(b) We find in Mr Dailly's Life, that he was invited to Paris in 1626.

* A kind of Sheriff.

† The German Hof, which came into France, during the Regency of Catherine de Medicis.

(1) In his Notes upon some Extracts of Edward Dering's Speeches. This was printed at London, in 1669, with a Piece intitled, Nuncius a mortuis, (News from the Dead) which is a Dialogue between the Ghosts of Henry VIII. and Charles I.

[A] Of a good and ancient Family, which came originally from Orleans.] His Great-Grand-father, Stephen L'Amyraut, was Echevin of Orleans, when the Common Law was reformed there in 1509. The Verbal Process of the Common Law proves this. It is pretended, that the first of the Family was one L'Amyraut, on whose Tomb is inscribed the Year 1370; which is to be seen in the Church of St Pierre on Pont. His Epitaph says, that he came from Hagenau, a Town of Alsace, being Captain of a Company of Reifers †. This Family were Benefactors to the Convent and Church of the Minimes at Orleans, and, as such, their Coat of Arms is to be seen upon the Glass Windows of the Church. Let me observe, by the way, that an Englishman of the Romish Communion has very ill latiniz'd the Name of Amyraut; for, instead of Amyraltus, he calls him Amuratb. This would be but a small Fault; if, by a cold and mean Allusion, he had not added to it a very ridiculous Doubt. "Moses quidam Amuratb, says he (1), Minister Salmuriensis, homo saltem nomine (nescio an & progenie) Judæo-Turca - - - - - One Moses Amuratb, Minister of Saumur, a Man, in Name at least " (if not by Birth) a Jew-Turk." In the following Pages he calls him Amyratb. The following Words of Father Bartolucci are very surprizing. "Moses Amyraltus, says he (2), videtur Judæus Conversus ad fidem, scripturæ eruditissimus & Catholicam dissertationem de Mysterio Trinitatis, deque vocabus, & phrasibus, quibus tam in scriptura, quam apud Patres explicatur. Parti IV. quæ est de Primordiis Revelationis Mysterii Trinitatis in veteri Testamento, habetur in libro Wagenfiliis inscriptis, Tela Ignæ Satanz, pag. 140. — Moses Amyraut seems to have been a Jew, converted to the Faith; he wrote a most Learned and Catholic Dissertation on the Mystery of the Trinity, and on the Words and Phrases, by which it is explained, both in Scripture, and in the Writings of the Fathers. The fourth Part, which treats of the Beginning of the Revelation of the Mystery of the Trinity, in the Old Testament, is to be found in a Book of Wagenfilius, entitled, The Fiery Darts of Satan." Thus the most famous Authors are sometimes unknown to one another. Father Bartolucci, not knowing Mr Amyraut, otherwise than by a Piece adopted by Mr Wagenfilius, took him in earnest for a converted Jew.

[B] His Father, who had his Views in designing him for the Bar.] He intended him for the Office of Seneschal, possessed by his Uncle, who had no Children.

[C] He

(2) Bartol. Biblioth. Rabin. Tom. 4. pag. 66.

befides their great Learning, there was a wonderful Sympathy between them; which produced a very useful and happy Agreement; a Circumstance, which deserves the greater Commendation, as it is rarely to be met with in Academic Land. Mr Amyraut was deputed to the National Synod of Charenton in the Year 1631. This Assembly chose him to make a Speech to the King, and to represent to his Majesty their Complaints concerning the Infractions of the Edicts. He was particularly charged to order it so, as not to deliver his Speech upon his Knees [C], as the Deputies of the last National Synod had done; and he managed the Affair with so much Dexterity and Resolution, that he was at last admitted to his Audience according to the ancient Usage, and according to the Desire of the Assembly (c). This Deputation brought him acquainted with Cardinal de Richelieu, who was surprized to find so many Qualities in him, which did not favour of the Man of Study. Some time after he published a Piece, wherein he explained the Mystery of Predestination and Grace, according to the Hypothesis of Cameron [D]. This Piece raised a kind of Civil War among the Protestant Divines of France [E]. They, who disliked this Hypothesis, decreed it as a Novelty, especially when they saw the great du Moulin join them; who incessantly accused Mr Amyraut of opposing the Synod of Dort, and of favouring Arminianism. The Authority of this famous Divine, who had gained the Veneration

(c) The Speech, which he made to the King, is inserted in the Mercur François for 1631.

[C] He was particularly charged to order it so, as not to deliver his Speech on his Knees.] Mr Amyraut was the Person, who represented the State of the Question to the Synod; and who promised, at the same time, to make all possible Instances, if the Assembly gave him their Instructions about it. They charged him, then, to demand the Restoration of the Privilege, which the Ministers had enjoy'd, of speaking to his Majesty standing, as the Clergy of the Kingdom do. He went, accompanied by two Elders, to Monteaux, where the Court was; and, having applied to Monf. de la Vrilliere, Secretary of State, he understood from him, that the King expected, that the Deputies of the Synod should not address him in any other Manner, than those of the preceding Synod had done. There being always a Commissary on the part of the King in our Synods, he, who assisted at that Time in the National Synod of Charenton, had notified to the King, what they had commissioned the Deputies to ask; and, the Court not thinking fit to grant their Request, Monf. de la Vrilliere was ordered to declare this Resolution immediately to the Deputies. Mr Amyraut represented to him very dextrously, and, at the same time, very respectfully, the Reasons of the Synod; and above a Fortnight passed without any Concessions on either Side. Cardinal de Richelieu, being informed of this Minister's Resolution, desired to confer with him on that Subject, and endeavoured to persuade him not to insist any longer upon it. He answered, and replied to all the most plausible Reasons alleged by the Cardinal; at last an Audience was granted, in the manner Mr Amyraut desired. The Cardinal discoursed several times with him concerning the Complaints of the Protestants, and was mightily pleased with this Minister's Wit and Behaviour.

[D] He published a Piece, wherein he explained the Mystery of Predestination, according the Hypothesis of Cameron.] A Roman Catholic of Quality occasioned this Piece. He had dined, with Mr Amyraut, at Bourguet, at the Bishop of Chartres, to whom this Minister was very well known (3). After Dinner, he turned the Conversation upon a Matter of Controversy, and charged the Protestants with teaching very harsh Doctrines concerning Predestination. Mr Amyraut took up the Dispute; and there ensued a kind of Controversy, in a very civil way, between him and the Bishop of Chartres, on this difficult Question. The Evening being come, the Company parted; the next Day Mr Amyraut, in his return to Saumur, called upon the Person of Quality (4), as he had promised, and found him well affected to the Protestant Religion, but very unsatisfied with the Doctrine of Predestination, as Calvin had explained it. He removed his Scruples, as well as he could; and, in compliance with the Gentleman's Request, who desired him to write a Treatise, in which the Subject might be more fully discussed, than it could be in Conversation, he wrote and published (5) the Book, which I am speaking of. This is what I find in my Manuscript Memoirs. Mr Amyraut does not give this Reason for composing this Piece; he assigns another, which is very different (6).

[E] A kind of Civil War among the Protestant Divines of France.] This Dispute was considerable enough to furnish out a large Article in the Ecclesiastical Annals of the Protestants. The English Author of a very curious History of our Synods of France (7), can inform us of the Quarrels, which the Doctrine of Universal Grace raised there. I think it would be a cruel Reflexion, to say, that the first Movers of this Question would have done it, though they had foreseen all the Evils, which were to result from it: For where is the Use, the Cui bono of such Disputes? Will no Difficulty remain, provided the Hypothesis of Cameron be admitted? Is it not true, on the contrary, that there never was a Remedy more palliative than that? Something farther is wanting to satisfy Reason; and if you stop here, you might as well have staid where you was, and have stuck to Particularism. But granting, that Universalism has in some respects the Advantage, and furnishes the best Answers to some Objections; is that sufficient to counter-balance so many spiritual Crimes, which Factions draw after them, so many wicked Surmises, so many sinister Interpretations, so many false Imputations, so much Animosity, so many injurious Words, so many Libels, and so many other Confusions, which attend upon such a Theological War? If you believe, that Particularism damns People, you do well to refute it at any rate. I say the same to those, who may take Universalism to be a damnable Heresy. But, since, on either side, you do not pretend to refute a pernicious Opinion, dispute no farther than is consistent with the Public Peace; and be silent, when the Event shews you, that you divide Families, or that two Parties are forming. Continue not to rouse a thousand Passions, which ought to be chained up, like so many wild Beasts; and Wo be to you, if you are the Occasion of their breaking their Chains. Thank Heaven, the Civil War of universal Grace, and some others, have not deserved the Application, which was made, in my hearing, of some Verses to schismatical Disputes. The Preparations, and the auxiliary Troops of the two Leaders, were compared to these Decorations of the Stage.

Aigles, Vautours, Serpens, Griffons, Hippocentaures, & Typhons,
Des taureaux furieux, dont la gueule beante
Eût trané de frayer le grand cheval d' Atlante,
Un char que des dragons étincelans d' éclairs
Promenoient en siffant par le vuide des airs, Demogorgon encor à la triste figure,
Et l' Horreur & la Mort s'y voyoient en peinture (8).

Theatric Horrors strike upon the Sight;
Eagles and Vultures on the Scene arise;
With hissing Serpents, winged Griffins join,
Typhons with Hippocentaurs; furious Bulls, Whose gaping Mouths affright Atlanta's Horse;
A Car, by fiery Dragons drawn through Air,
With Demogorgon, dreadful to behold;
And Death and Horror close the pictur'd Scene.

Mr Amyraut had the Satisfaction to be reconciled to his most violent Opposers; and, tho' it be not necessary, that the Great should always interpose in pacifying Quarrels;

(7) John Quick, a London Minister: His book, intitled, Synodicon in Gallia reformata, was printed in Fol. 1692.

A Reflexion on the Mischiefs occasioned by Theological Disputes.

(3) He was of the House of Etampes Valengat, and was afterwards Archbishop of Rheims.

(4) A Plebeian-Ridau.

(5) In 1634.

(6) Prefat. Speciminis Animadvers. de Gratia Univers.

(8) See Æschylus's Life, written by Tanaquil Faber.

(d) Intituled A Specimen of Calvin's Doctrine.

(c) In 1637.

(f) Blondel, A. tes authent. p. 36.

(g) Blondel, Ibid. pag. 40, 41.

(b) They are the Authors of what is called Theſes Salmurienſes; a Work very much eſteem'd.

(9) *He recomciled (in the Caſtle of Thouars,
October 16, 1649) Mr
Amyraut with Mr de Champver-
neu, Miniſter of Taille-bourg, and with Mr Vincent, Miniſter of Rochelle.
See the Actes Authentiques, by David Blon-
del, pag. 85.
This Champverneu was called William Rivetus, and was the Brother of Andrew Ri-vetus, Pro-feſſor of Divinity at Leyden.*

(10) *Vindici-e Apologie, &c.
pag. 418.*

(11) *See Remark [M] of the Article
Daillé.*

ration of the People by many Books of Controversy, made such an Impression upon several Ministers, that, though Mr Amyraut had published a piece (d), in which he maintained, that Calvin had taught the Doctrine of Universal Grace, there appeared, in the National Synod of Alençon (e) several Deputies, charged with Instructions against Him; some of whom were so hot, that they talked of nothing but deposing him [F]. The Deputies of the Provinces beyond the Loire were the most violent against him. Nevertheless the Assembly, having heard Mr Amyraut, who explained his Opinion in several Sessions, and who solved the Difficulties, which were proposed to him, honourably acquitted him, and enjoyed a Silence in respect to these Questions, which was not too well observed. Complaints were made against Mr Amyraut, in the National Synod of Charenton, in 1645, for having acted contrary to the Regulation, which imposed this Silence; and He, in his turn, complained of some Violations of the same Regulations (f). The Assembly, by an holy Amnesty, suppressed these reciprocal Complaints, renewed the Injunctions of Silence, dismissed Mr Amyraut with Honour, and permitted him to oppose Foreigners, who should write against him, in what manner the Synod of Anjou should think proper. This Synod permitted him to publish an Answer to the three Volumes of Spanhemius concerning Universal Grace (g), which occasioned many other Books (g). During the National Synod of the Year 1645, Mr Amyraut was desired by the Assembly to enter into Conference with Mr de la Milletiere, in order to bring him over to His Opinion. The Conference continued several Days; but they did not come to a better Agreement in this oral Disputation, than they had done in the Books, which they had already published against each other. The Doctrine of Mr de la Place concerning Original Sin was attacked in That Synod. Mr Amyraut, hearing of it, appeared before the Assembly, to plead the Cause of his Colleague, and shewed, in a long Discourse, that the Doctrine complained of was not at all dangerous. This Action was not only extolled on account of the great Skill, with which the Doctrine of Mr de la Place was defended, but also because Mr Amyraut's only aim was the Interest of his Colleague; for his own Opinion in that point was not That of Mr de la Place. If I add, that Mr Cappel dissented from the common Opinion of the Protestants concerning the Antiquity of the Points of the Hebrew Text, I shall have mentioned all the Complaints, which were made against the Academy of Saumur. But, notwithstanding these Complaints, a great Number of Students in Divinity resorted thither; which visibly decreased, after the death of these three illustrious Professors (b). Mr Amyraut survived his two Colleagues, and had time to publish a very great Quarrel; yet the Prince of Tarentum employ'd his good Offices in this Reconciliation, in the Year 1649. I know not whether the contending Parties gave him more trouble, than the Marshals of France meet with from the Differences, which fall under their Cognisance; however he succeeded in his Undertaking (9), and perhaps better than a Synod would have done. As to his Reconciliation with Mr du Moulin, it was brought about by Mr de Langle, Minister of Rouen. Upon the first Proposal, Mr Amyraut joyfully consented, and offered to make all the Advances. He wrote a Letter first; which Mr du Moulin answered very civilly. These letters were published for the Edification of the Church. They are dated in the Year 1655. Mr Daillé has inserted Mr du Moulin's Answer in one of his Books (10). Reason and Charity allow us to believe, that they, who made so much Noise, and raised so many Storms against a Doctrine, which they afterwards acknowledged to be harmless, and the Asserter of which seem'd at last, in their Opinion, a faithful Servant of God, did not die without being covered with Shame and Confusion, at least before the Throne of the Divine Majesty, when they reflected on that mortifying Prepossession, which had represented to them an innocent, inoffensive, Hypothesis, as a dangerous and shocking Doctrine. See what follows.

[F] Some of whom were so hot, that they talked of nothing but deposing him. Had they lived thirty or forty Years longer, they must have been greatly mortified; for, at last, that Doctrine, which they judged worthy of the most thundering Anathemas, was found to be that of the greatest Men, who served the reformed Churches of France. It was the Doctrine of Mr Mestrezat, Mr le Fauqueur, Mr Blondel, Mr Daillé, Mr Claude, Mr du Bois. The Particularists were soon obliged to acknowledge the Favourers of Universal Grace for their Brethren, and faithful Ministers of JESUS CHRIST; and we have seen, that the French Ministers, who fled into Holland, and who sign'd a Formula in the Synod of Rotterdam, in the Year 1686, were not obliged to make any Declaration, which reflected in the least upon the System of Mr Amyraut (11). From whence, then, came the Clamour, which was raised at first against that System? Whence was it, that the same Doctrine was accounted at first a Monster, and afterwards an innocent Thing? Must we not in this acknowledge the Finger of Original Sin, and the Influence of a thousand dark Passions, which ought at last to produce in us, if we are of the Number of the Elect, a salutary and mortifying Humiliation? The work is, Men do not profit by what is past; every Generation betrays the same Symptoms, sometimes in a greater, sometimes in a less Degree. For we shall often have occasion to say, when we see Cafes, Denunciations, Apologies, and Disputations, take the Field, and whole Volumes of Books fly about;

Jamque faces & faxa volant — (12).

Now Stones and Brands in rattling Volleys fly,
And all the Arms, which Fury can supply.

DRYDEN.

but let them alone; they will soon agree;

Hi motus animorum, atque hæc certamina tanta
Pulveris exigui jactu compressa quiescunt (13).

Yet all these dreadful Deeds, this deadly Fray,
A cast of scatter'd Dust will soon allay,
And undecided leave the Fortune of the Day.

DRYDEN.

But this cannot always be said. Things are sometimes carried to extremities: Res in nervum erumpit.

[G] This Synod permitted him to publish an Answer to Spanhemius's three Volumes concerning Universal Grace. It is entitled, Specimen Animadversionum in Exercitationes de Gratia Universalis; and was printed at Saumur, in 1648, in 4to. It is not true, as is inserted in the Melange Critique, Tom. I. pag. 129, that Mr Amyraut attack'd Spanhemius first, nor that his Work is against the Thesis of Spanhemius. It is against a Work of the latter, in three Volumes; who was likewise the Aggressor.

(12) *Virgil.
Æneid. lib.
3. ver. 1544*

(13) *Virgil.
Georg. lib.
4. ver. 86.*

great number of Books [H]. He wrote as readily as he spoke; and this is to say a great deal; for he had a surprizing Fluency of Tongue both in Latin and French, and as well in his Divinity Lectures, as in his Sermons. He knew the World; and could furnish a great Variety of Matter for Conversation, in Points, which did not belong to his Profession: And, doubtless, it was This, which contributed, as much, or more, than the Reputation of his Learning, to the Happiness he enjoyed, all his Life, of being considered and respected by the great Men of the Contrary Religion. I have already observed, that Cardinal de Richelieu had a great Esteem for him: I shall not add, that he communicated to him his Grand Design of re-uniting the two Churches [I]; for this would not be a sufficient Proof of his great Regard for him; since the Cardinal had founded several Ministers upon this Head, who were much inferior to Amyraut. The Marshal de Breze [K], and the Marshal de la Meillerie [L], ought to be reckoned among the great Lords, who had a particular Esteem for our Amyraut. Mr le Goux de la Berchere, first President in the Parliament of Burgundy [M], and

[H] He published a great Number of Book. He published his Treatise of Religions in 1631. Five Years after he published fix Sermons on the Nature, Extent, &c. of the Gospel. He published several other Sermons at different Times. His Book concerning the Elevation of Faith, and Abatement of Reason appeared in 1641. The Defence of Calvin in relation to the Doctrine of Absolute Reprobation appeared in Latin the same Year, and in French in the Year 1644. He begun his Paraphrases on the Scripture in 1644. The Epistle to the Romans was paraphrased first; he then proceeded to the other Epistles, and concluded with the Gospels; but he had the Prudence, as well as Calvin, not to meddle with St John's Revelation. For fear his Name should hinder the Roman Catholics from reading his Paraphrases, he did not prefix it. In 1647, he published an Apology for the Protestants, a Treatise of Free Will, and another De Seessione ab Ecclesia Romana, deque pace inter Evangelicos in negotio religionis constituenda. He treated more amply afterwards of the Re-union of the Calvinists and Lutherans, in his Irenicon, printed in the Year 1662. His Book, Of the Calling of Pastors, was published in 1649. He preached on that Subject before the Prince of Tarentum, during the holding of a Provincial Synod, of which he was Moderator. This Prince desired that the Sermon might be printed, and that the Matter might be more amply treated; for it was a great Common-Place Topic among the Missionaries. For which Reason Mr Amyraut not only printed his Sermon, but published also a complete Treatise on that important Controversy, and dedicated the whole to the Prince of Tarentum. His Christian Morality, in six Volumes in Octavo, the first of which was printed in the Year 1652, was the Product of the Conversation he had often had with Mr de Villarnaul, a Lord of extraordinary Merit, and one of the most learned Gentlemen of Europe, who was Heir, in this respect likewise, to Mr du Plessis Mornai, his Grandfather, by the Mother's Side. There are but few Subjects, on which Mr Amyraut did not write. He published a Treatise of Dreams; two Volumes concerning the Millennium, in which he refutes an Advocate of Paris, whose Name is Mr de Launai, who was a great Chiliasist * (14); the Life of the brave la Noue, surnamed Bras de fer, i. e. Iron-Arm; and several other Works which I omit, or mention in the Sequel of this Article. He mounted likewise on Parnassus; for he wrote a Poem, entitled, St Stephen's Apology to his Judges. This Work was attacked from a Quarter, which was the less to be dreaded for certain Reasons; for the Attack was not made by the Poets, but by the Missionaries. They pretended, that the Author had spoken of the holy Sacrament of the Altar, with the utmost Irreverence; but he published a Piece in his Vindication, of which I can say nothing more to the purpose, that what Mr Daille has said of it. Let us hear him then. "As for St Stephen's Apology to his Judges, which you (15) make use of to convict us of having abused your Sacrament; if you and they, who are so much offended at it, had vouchsafed to read the Letter, which the Author has published in Vindication of himself, you, and they, would not have entertained so ill an Opinion of it; nay, you would perhaps have wondered at the Illusion, which your Prejudices had produced in your Mind, in pretending, that what he has written against the Extravagancy of Pagan Idolatry, was meant of you and your Transubstantiation (16)." all

[I] Cardinal de Richelieu ----- communicated to him his grand Design of re-uniting the two Churches.] The Jesuit, who discoursed with Mr Amyraut upon this Subject, was Father Audebert. Mr de Villeneuve, who was, at that time, the King's Lieutenant at Saumur, having engaged them to dine together, and with so much Complaisance for the Minister, that he gave him the upper Hand of the Jesuit, and that no Grace was said at his Table for that Time, contrived it so, after Dinner, that they had a private Conference. It is true, Mr Amyraut declared he must necessarily communicate to his Collegues the whole Subject of their Conference. The Jesuit told him, that the King, and his Eminence, had sent him to make Proposals of Agreement in Matters of Religion; and then gave him to understand, that they would sacrifice to Peace the Invocation of Creatures, Purgatory, and the Merit of Works; that the Pope's Power should be limited, and that, if the Court of Rome should refuse to consent to it, they would take occasion from thence to create a Patriarch; that the Cup should be given to the Laity; and that, perhaps, they might give up some other Points, if they found a sincere Inclination in the Protestants to Peace and Re-union. But he declared, when Mr Amyraut mentioned the Doctrine of the Eucharist, that they were determined to make no Alteration in that; upon which the other replied, that, if so, there was an end of the Affair. Their Conversation lasted about four Hours; the Jesuit would have exacted Secrecy. But Mr Amyraut protested to him, that, according to the Declaration he had made at first to Mr de Villeneuve, he must communicate their Conference to his Collegues; but that he would answer for their Discretion. That very Evening he gave them an Account of the Conference, and made no scruple to speak of it, upon Occasion, after the Death of Cardinal de Richelieu, and Father Audebert.

[K] The Marshal de Breze ----- had a particular Esteem for him.] He was Governor of Saumur, and never went thither, without sending to desire Mr Amyraut to come and visit him. He often invited him to his Castle of Milly, where he commonly resided; and, when he received the News of the Death of his Son, the Duke of Fronсар, Admiral of France, he would always have Mr Amyraut near him. He received several Visits from him in his last Sickness, and even recommended himself to his Prayers, and desired to be prayed for in the Protestant Church of Saumur. He died in the Castle of Milly, in 1650.

[L] The Marshal de la Meillerie ----- had a particular Esteem for him.] When he was a Protestant, he studied with Mr Amyraut at Saumur. He always remembered his old Acquaintance, and, the Day after his coming to Saumur, when the Court was there, in 1652, he sent to compliment this Minister; who did not fail to go and pay his Respects to him immediately; and he was received by him, as usual, with a thousand Marks of Esteem. This Marshal hearing of Mr Amyraut's last Sickness, sent a Gentleman to see him, and to tell him, that if his Gout would have permitted him to bear the Motion of a Coach, he would have paid him a Visit. He was at that time at his Castle of Montreuil-Bellai, four Leagues from Saumur.

[M] Mr le Goux de la Berchere ----- first President in the Parliament of Burgundy, &c.] He was exiled to Saumur, in the Year 1637, where he lived 'till the Year 1644. Being himself a Man of great Merit and Learning, he was fond of learned Men of

* Millenarian.

(14) See pag. 129, 130. of Tom. 1. of M. Ancillon's Mélanges Critique de Littérature.

(15) He all-dresses himself to Father Adam.

(16) Daille's Reply to two Books of Adam and de Cottibay, part 2. chap. 17. p. 108.

and the Intendants of the Province of Anjou [N], are of this Number; and we may add to them some Bishops and Archbishops [O], and, above all, Cardinal Mazarine [P], whose Civilities to this Professor were extraordinary. It is very probable he found Favour with this Cardinal, among other Reasons, because he declared openly for the Doctrine of the Obedience of Subjects to their Princes. His Declaration was of Use to the Court of France, during the Commotions, in which the Fortune of Cardinal Mazarine was so much tossed; and, on several other occasions, he shewed that it was his favourite Doctrine [Q], so far as to quarrel about it with a Minister of Rochelle all Religions. He soon desired to be acquainted with Mr Amyraut, and found him so worthy of his Friendship, that they became very intimate. They saw each other commonly twice a Week; so that it is no wonder, if this Minister could supply some Memoirs for the Life of that President. It is not necessary to observe, that Mr de la Berchère died first President of the Parliament of Grenoble, and that his Brother succeeded him; but it may be proper to remark, that the latter, desiring to have his Brother's Life written, requested Mr Amyraut to communicate his Memoirs of the Particulars, which passed between them. Mr Amyraut sent him, among other things, the Account of the Conference, which he had with Father Audbert; for, as soon as the Report was spread in Saumur, that he had a private Conference with that Jesuit, Mr de la Berchère desired an Account of it from his own Mouth. Mr Amyraut recited a great part of it, and desired him not to mention it. That part of his Memoirs was not made use of in the Life of Mr de la Berchère, which was published. In 1648 he dedicated his Book, Of the Rights of Marriage, to that illustrious Magistrate, who was at that time first President of Grenoble.

[N] The Intendants of the Province of Anjou. He never failed to wait upon them, and they all returned him his Visits, and shewed a great Respect for him. When he went, in 1638, to drink the Waters of Bourbon, he received many Civilities at Bourges, from Mr Mandat, Intendant of the Province. He might have lodged at that Intendant's House, who desired it. He dined, there, with the Archdeacon of Bourges and some other Clergymen.

[O] Bishops and Archbishops. See what is said above (17), concerning the Bishop of Chartres. I add here, that, in the Year 1662, the Archbishop of Paris, Hardouin de Percefixe, being gone to Saumur, on a Vow, which the Queen-Mother had made to Our Lady des Armoilliers (18), sent Word to Mr Amyraut, that he should be very glad to see him. Mr Amyraut was very ready to pay him a Visit, but he let him know that he would not style him My Lord. The Archbishop, agreeing to this, received two Visits from this Minister, discoursed two Hours with him every time, and treated him very civilly. They talked, among other things, of Mr Dailly's Books, which the Prelate gave a good Character of, as to the Learning in them.

[P] And above all Cardinal Mazarine. He came to Saumur in 1642, some Days after the King and the Queen-Mother; and, hearing, that a Sermon of Mr Amyraut had been much talked of at the Queen's Table, he desired the Count de Commenges to tell that Minister, that he should be very glad to be acquainted with him. This Count was Governor of Saumur, and had a great Affection for Mr Amyraut: He promised him, that the Protestants should meet on Sundays as usual, though the King was in the City; but he told him, at the same time, that they must omit their Assemblies the three first Days after the King's Arrival. This Promise was performed. Mr Amyraut preached on the Sunday, upon these Words, Fear God, Honour the King, and was heard by many Persons of the Court, who were very well satisfied with him, and spoke of his Sermon with Commendation, not only to the King, as soon as they came from Church, but likewise in the Evening, during the Queen's Supper. It was then, that Cardinal Mazarine heard of this Sermon, and was informed by Mr de Commenges of the Zeal, which Mr Amyraut, and all the Protestants of those Parts, had expressed for the King's Service in the last Troubles. The Cardinal was so desirous to see this Minister, that he sent him word of it the very next Morning, by the Judge of the Provostship: So that Mr de Commenges, finding that he was not the first Messenger, said to Mr Amyraut, smiling: I see, Sir, that we shall soon stand in need of your Intercession with his Eminence; which will convince you of the Usefulness of the Invocation of Saints. The first Visit was very short; but Mr Amyraut was desired to come again the next Morning at eight o'Clock. The Cardinal shewed him all manner of Respect, made him sit near the Fire, talked with him about State-Affairs, gave him a particular Account of all the Efforts, which were used in Xaintonge, to bring over the Protestants to the Prince's Party, and desired him to endeavour to make all those Attempts usefule. Mr Amyraut assured him, that there was nothing to fear from the Protestants of France, and that he would write to several Ministers of Xaintonge, to the end that the Synod, which they were speedily to hold, should authentically testify their Fidelity. The thing was performed. Two Days after this Audience, the Cardinal, under pretence of seeing the Protestant College, and the Library of Mr du Pleffis Mornay, had another Conference with Mr Amyraut, in that Minister's Closet. They conversed about the Edict of Nantes, and, upon Mr Amyraut's being asked, whether Henry IV. was under an Obligation of making it, and answering yes, but that, if it were a mere Favour at first, the Observation of it would be indispensable at present; the Cardinal told him, he was in the right, and cited this Maxim of Law, quod initio fuit voluntatis, ex post facto fit necessitatis. i. e. What at first is Voluntary, becomes afterwards Necessary. The Reader will be pleased to find here, what Mr de Guistaut (19) said to Madam de la Trimoille, in the Queen's Presence. "His Eminence is with the Minister Amyraut; they are both Ecclesiastics; but I am sure they will not talk of Religion; his Eminence will not find his Account in it." During the five Weeks that the King was at Saumur, Mr Amyraut paid the Cardinal several Visits, and was always kindly received by him; and, when he took his leave, his Eminence told him, that he might write to him directly, whenever he had any Request to make, either for the Party in general, or for his own private Interests. He made no use of this Permission, 'till after the Journey he took to Paris, about the end of the Year 1638. He saw his Eminence three or four times, who used him with great Civility. He spoke to him about the National Synod, the calling of which had been desired so many Years. The Cardinal answered, that the Reasons, which had prevented the granting of it, still subsisted, and desired Mr Amyraut to write to him about it. He did himself the Honour to write twice to him upon this Affair. The Cardinal answered him with his own Hand; and afterwards, whenever he returned him an Answer, he made use of his Secretary's Pen, but signed Proprio pugno, with his own Hand.

[Q] And, on several other Occasions, he shewed, that it was his favourite Doctrine. In the Apology, which he published for the Protestants, in the Year 1647, he excuses their Civil Wars in France, as well as he can; but he declares, nevertheless, "That he will not in any wise pretend to justify the taking up Arms against one's Prince, upon any Occasion whatever, — and that he always believed it much more agreeable to the Nature of the Gospel, and the Practice of the Ancient Church, to have recourse to no other Arms, than Patience, Tears, and Prayers (20). — And every time, says he (21), that I reflect upon the History of our Fathers, I cannot help sensibly regretting, that they did not crown so many other fine Virtues, of which they have left us Examples, with an Imitation of the first Christians, in that invincible Patience, which they shewed under the Persecutions of the Emperors." A Latin Piece (22) which he published two Years after, shews how he maintained his Cause against the Complaints of a Minister of Rochelle, who would have done better not to have taken notice of Mr Amyraut's Book, than to have taken Offence at it. The Book entitled, Of the Sovereignty of Kings, published

(17) In Remark [D].

(18) In the Church of the Fathers of the Oratory, at the End of a Suburb of Saumur.

(19) He was Captain of the Queen's Guard, and Uncle to Mr. de Commenges.

(20) Apology for the Protestants, page 75.

(21) Ibid. page 76.

(22) Latine loquens, Adversus Epistolam Historicam Criminatorem Moson Amyraldi Defensam.

Rochelle (i): but this did not hinder him, at the same time, from declaring, that, in Cases of Conscience, a King is not to be obeyed [R]. I need not say, that he was much respected by the great Protestant Lords. This is sufficiently evident of itself. He quarrelled with a Minister of Saumur, whose Name was Mr d'Huiffeau, and did not meet with all the Satisfaction, which he expected, in the National Synod of Loudon (k). It is thought, that his great Reputation was prejudicial to him on this occasion; like a great Tree, which shades the little ones, and whose Branches must therefore be lopped. Besides, the Relations of those, who had declared against the Doctrine of Universal Grace, favoured his Enemy as much as possible. He would, 'tis probable, have been one of those, who sat at the Table in This Synod [S]; to which he was deputed by his Province, if he had not been thought to be personally concerned in the Affairs of Mr d'Huiffeau with the Church of Saumur. He died very christianly on the Eighth of January 1664 (l), and was interred with all the Academical Ceremonies. He had a great Command of Mind in his last Sickness, which gave him an Opportunity of making several very edifying Discourses, and of giving strong Proofs of his Faith, in the Presence of many Persons of both Religions. Among his other Virtues, his Charity to the Poor ought to be observed. He gave them the Salary of his Ministry during the Ten last Years of his Life. He gave Alms without distinction of Catholics and Reformed: the Mendicant Friars, who applied to him, never went away with empty hands; and he recommended to Mr Hervart (m) the Recollects of Saumur, when they had recourse to the King's Treasury for rebuilding their Cloyster, which was burnt: They thanked him for the good Effect of his Recommendation. He left but one Son, who was a very learned Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and who fled to the Hague, after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. He had a Daughter, who died in 1645, Eighteen Months after her Marriage with Bernard de Harnont, who was afterwards the King's Advocate at Saumur. The Grief, which this Loss threw his Wife into, induced him to write a Treatise of the State of the Faithful after Death; which he dedicated to her. It was printed the Year after. The Reader will be pleased to see here the Distich which Mr du Bosc wrote with his own hand under a Print of Mr Amyraut. It is an Allusion to what the Jews have said in praise of the famous Rabbi Moses Maimonides:

A Mose ad Mosem par Mofi non fuit ullus:
More, ore, & calamo, mirus uterque fuit:

From Moses down to Moses, none,
Among the Sons of Men,
With equal Lustre ever shone,
In Manners, Tongue, and Pen.

It

published in 1650, on occasion of the Tragical Death of Charles I. King of England, is a yet stronger Proof of Mr Amyraut's Opinion in relation to Subjects taking up Arms against their Prince. There was no room to be silent; for the Catholics incessantly imputed this Tragedy to the Presbyterian Party, and drew a thousand odious Consequences from it against the Protestants of France. Mr Amyraut thought proper not to leave the Injustice of these Reproaches unanswered. During the Troubles of the last Minority, This Minister constantly exhorted the People, in his Sermons, to Obedience; and, being consulted in what manner to behave, he answered, That the only way was to adhere to the Royal Party. It is probable that the Persons, who consulted him, were sincere, and did not dive into the Artifice, which prevails in these kinds of Confusions. Rebels ever pretend, that their Aim is only to remedy Abuses, and drive away evil Counsellors from about their Master's Person. One must be very weak to be caught in this Trap, and to want the Opinion of a Casuist. The Distinction of the Pope and the Holy See is not so gross a Sophism. Lastly, Mr Amyraut spoke his Thoughts fully in the Epistle Dedicatory of his Latin Paraphrase on the Psalms. It is there that he maintains and lays down, that, according to the true Principles of Christianity, Subjects ought not to take up Arms against their Sovereigns. He declares openly for that which is called Passive Obedience. That Work was dedicated to Charles II. King of England, soon after That Prince's Restauration. The Author had made himself acquainted at Paris with one of that Prince's Chaplains, in the Year 1658. Two Years after, he expressed to him his Joy for the King's Restauration, and congratulated him on the Bishoprick of Durham. He was answered, that the King thanked him. This encouraged Mr Amyraut to dedicate to him his Paraphrase on the Psalms, but not 'till he knew from the Bishop of Durham, whether That Monarch would be pleased with it.

[R] That, in Cases of Conscience, a King is not to be obeyed.] This appeared, when the Sensibral of Saumur notified to him an Arrêt of the Council of State, which ordered all the Protestants to put out Hangings before their Houses on Corpus Christi Day. He communicated it to him, on the Eve of that Feast, and desired him to order the Protestants to conform to it, for fear their Disobedience should excite the People against them. Mr Amyraut answered, that, on the contrary, he was going to exhort his Flock, to put out no Hangings, and that he would be the first, who should refuse it; That he had always preached up Obedience to the Superior Powers; but that he never meant it in such things as concern the Conscience. Leaving the Sensibral, he went from House to House to exhort his Parishioners rather to suffer any thing, than to obey that Arrêt. The Sensibral caused it to be published with Sound of Trumpet; the Consistory met, thanked Mr Amyraut for his Conduct, and charged the Elders to take care that there should be no Hangings put out. The King's Lieutenant refused to assist the Sensibral, and prevented the Tumult, which began to be raised. The Arrêt was revoked some time after.

[S] He would, 'tis probable, have been one of those, who sat at the Table, in this Synod.] If all my Readers were French Protestants, this Remark would be unnecessary, but it will not be so to other Readers. In our Synods of France there were commonly four Persons, who formed what was called the Table. One of these four Persons was the President of the Company, and was called the Moderator, the other three were the Moderator's Assistant, the Secretary, and the Collector of the Aids.

(i) Philip Vincent.

(k) In 1659.

(l) Kon'g in his Biblioth. and Wette in his Dictionnaire, place his Death (wrong) in 1665.

(m) He was Comptroller of the Finance.

It was some Years after the Death of this Professor, that his Picture was engraved by his Son's Care (n).

Some Particulars concerning Mr Amyraut are to be found in a Work entitled Melange Critique de Literature recueilli des Conversations de feu Mr Ancillon (o).—A Critical Miscellany of Literature, collected from the Conversation of the late Mr Ancillon; by which it appears, among other things, that a Passage in a Letter of Mr Balzac (p), wherein the Author of an Apology is much praised, is to be understood of him. We find also there, that Patin esteemed him very much: But take notice, that what is disobliging in Patin's Letter does not relate to the Minister of Saumur. I shall take notice of this in a Remark, as also of some other trifling Mistakes [T].

(n) Taken from the Memoirs communicated by M. Amyraut the Son. Whoever is not founded upon public Profits, in the Remarks of this Article, is taken from the Memoirs.

(23) Melange Critique de Literature, Tom. 1. p. 333, 334.

(24) Patin, Letter 114. Edit. 1.

[T] I shall take Notice of it in a Remark, as also of some other trifling Mistakes.] Patin says, in his Hundred and thirteenth Letter of the first Edition (23), "That there was a Physician of Nyort, in 1663, whose Name was Mr Luffand, who proposed to publish an Apology for the Physicians, against those, who accused them of trusting too much to Nature: he says, that This Physician had principally in view Mr Amyraut, a Minister of Saumur, who cast this Reflexion upon them in the last Volume of his Christian Morality." — He seems (24) not to be very well satisfied with Mr Amyraut on this Account; for he adds, "If Mr Amyraut will be pleased to give himself the trouble to answer that Book, he is one who can say fine Things upon the Occasion, which Luffand is unacquainted with, and which are not in his Book. I have suggested some of them to him, says he, and among others, fine Passages, and good Authorities; but he pays no Regard to them." This plainly disguised him; for he afterwards expresses himself thus: "And indeed he is in a Province, which is not far from Gaicon, where they are generally more vain than learned, &c." I omit the rest of the Passage as it stands in Mr Ancillon, which is very disobliging; but I must inform my Readers, that the Person, so much abused by Patin, is the Physician of Nyort, and not the Divine, who makes the Subject of this Article. I must also acquaint them, that the Treatise of Religions against those who think them indifferent, is not Mr Amyraut's only Book, of which there have been two Editions (25). I am very certain, that the Apology for the Protestants was printed more than once; that the Treatise of Predication, printed in 1634, was reprinted at Saumur in the Year 1658, with the Specimen of Calvin's Doctrine, and the Reply to Mr de la Motte, concerning his offer of a Friendly Conference to examine his Method for procuring a Reunion; that these two last Treatises had been published in the Year 1638, and that the Bookseller, who reprinted them in 1658, with the Treatise of Predication, declares (26), that he republishes these three Books, because they were not to be met with. I am assured likewise, that eleven of Amyraut's Sermons on several Texts of Scripture were reprinted in the Year 1653; that the Life of la Noüe was reprinted at Leyden; that the Thebes of This Professor, and those of his Colleagues, were reprinted at Geneva; and that his Treatise of the State of the Faithful after Death, was printed at London in English, and at Utrecht in Dutch.

(o) Printed at Br. 1. 1693.

(p) The Letter to M. Conrart.

(25) As is affirmed by the Author of the Melange Critique, pag. 132. The first is in 1651, and the second in 1652.

(26) In his Epistle dedicatory to the Students in Divinity.

(a) He is called, by mistake, Amyraut, in the Supplement to Moreau's Dictionary.

(b) Leo Allatius de Perpet. Conf. lib. 3. cap. 3. pag. 935; & 1379.

(c) Guillet's Hist. of Mahomet II. Tom. 1. p. 441. & Tom. 2. p. 136.

• Proteveftarius.

AMYRUTZES (a), a Peripatetic Philosopher, born at Trebizond, was greatly esteemed in the Court of the Emperor David, his Master, and wrote in Favour of the Greeks against the Decisions of the Council of Florence (b); but he lost all his Reputation by his Apostacy. He was one of those, who accompanied the Emperor David to Constantinople, when Mahomet II. caused him to be brought thither, after the taking of Trebizond, in the Year 1461. This Philosopher, being gained over by the Promises of the Sultan, renounced Christianity, and turned Turk, with his Children; one of whom, under the Name of Mehemet-beg, translated several Books of the Christians into Arabic, by order of Mahomet II. This Prince gave Amyrutzes considerable Employments in the Seraglio, and converted sometimes about Learning and Matters of Religion with Him, or with Mehemet-beg (c). According to Allatius's manner of Expression, one would be apt to take this Philosopher for Groom of the Stole * to the Emperor of Trebizond [A]. I must not forget to observe, that Amyrutzes did not then begin to be in Esteem with Princes, when the Emperor of Trebizond honoured him with his Affection; for he had been a long time greatly respected in the Court of Constantinople. He was one of the chief learned Persons, whom the Emperor John Paleologus consulted about his Journey into Italy (d), and he accompanied that Emperor in his Expedition (e), as he himself relates (f) in his Account of what had passed in the Council of Florence, and which he inscribed to Demetrius Governor of Napoli di Romania. He affirms, among other things, that the Patriarch of Constantinople was strangled during the Session of that Council, and that the Physicians attested the Fact (g).

(d) The Political History of Constantinople names him as one before Bessarion, and Gemistus. See Allat. de Perpet. Conf. p. 283.

(e) This Emperor arrived at Venice, Feb. 8. 1438.

(f) Apud Allatium, pag. 386.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 903.

[A] According to Allatius's manner of Expression, one would be apt to take him for Groom of the Stole to the Emperor. Allatius, in the Nine hundred and thirty sixth Page of his Perpetuus consensus, speaks only by Conjecture of the Book, which this Amyrutzes composed against the Council of Florence; but, in the Additions, he tells us, that the Work itself was sent him from the Isle of Chio: Afterwards he says, that Dorotheus, Archbishop of Monembafsa, discovers the Condition of this Person *, cujusnam conditionis vir iste fuerit. He infers the Passage of Dorotheus in Greek and Latin. The Greek imports, that Mahomet caused the Emperor David, and some other Persons to embark for Constantinople, and among others τὸν φιλόσοφον Ἀμυρῦτον τὸν ἀρπυλαεὶς ἱεροφίλοσφον Ἀμυρῦτον Προτεβεστάριον. Thus Allatius translates and Points. And therefore doubtless he believed, that Amyrutzes, and the Proteveftarius, were one and the same Person, and that he understands of him the Sequel of the Passage of Dorotheus, which informs us, that this Person was first Cousin of Mahomet Bassa, that he had betrayed the Emperor David, and that, after the taking of Trebizond, he received great Honours from his Cousin, and from Sultan Mahomet; that he was Cunning, Tall, Well-shaped, a good Archer, and qualified for every thing. His Relation to Mahomet arose from his Mother's being Mahomet's Mother's Sister; these two Sisters were Daughters of Jagrus. I give no great Credit to this Account; for I find that Mr Guillet, citing the Turco-Græcia of Crusius, says, that the Name of the Proteveftarius (Groom of the Stole) of the Emperor of Trebizond was George; that he was of a graceful Mien, and had such great Skill in Archery, that he surpassed therein all the Greeks and Turks; that he was the Son of a Daughter of a Christian Prince, called Jagrus, who had married his other Daughter in Serbia, where she had a Son, who was the Renegade

* In Synopsi Historiarum.

(r) Guillet, History of Athens, vol. II. Tom. I. pag. 439. negado Macbmus (1). I would willingly therefore place | order to make This Philosopher, and the Protophysi-
a Comma, in the Passage of Dorotheus, Αμμόνιον, in | us, whom Allatius confounds together, Two Persons.

AMMONIUS. Many Writers have been called by this Name. Athenaeus cites two Works of a very different Nature, composed by an Author, whom he calls AMMONIUS. One of them treats of Altars and Sacrifices (a); the other of the Courtezans of Athens [A]. He does not positively say, that these two Books were wrote by the same Ammonius; neither does he say any thing, which intimates the contrary; besides he makes no mention of the Author's Country, nor of the Age, in which he lived. We are informed by another Author, that he, who wrote the Book concerning Altars and Sacrifices, was a Native of Lampria (b) [B]. Suidas, such as we have him at present, speaks only of Ammonius Saccas: but, without doubt, he mentioned an Ammonius different from this; for what we find in his Dictionary cannot be applied to one and the same Person. It is impossible, that the same Ammonius should have abjured the Christian Faith, and have succeeded Aristarchus in the School of Alexandria, before the Reign of Augustus. These are the two Particulars we find in Suidas concerning Ammonius. Was he so ignorant as to believe they were not inconsistent? I see no probability of it. One Author (c) conjectures, that there is an Hiat in this Passage (d), and that Suidas might have spoken in this Hiat of the Ammonius mentioned by Athenaeus. If this were true, we must say, that the Treatise of Sacrifices and Altars, or that of the Courtezans of Athens, or both, were written by a Grammarian, who was Aristarchus's Successor. The second AMMONIUS, I propose to speak of, is a Philosopher of Egypt (e). Plutarch, whose Preceptor he was, makes frequent mention of him. See particularly the 70th and 385th Pages of his Moral Works in the Edition of Francfort 1620. But it is falsely pretended in Moreri's Dictionary, that he speaks of him with Praise, particularly towards the end of the Life of Aristotle [C]. Moreri is not more successful in his Account of AMMONIUS the Son of Hermias [D]; to whom he attributes, among other Works, a Book composed in the Reign of Valentinian. That Ammonius was Son and Brother of a Philosopher (f). The Learned believe, that he flourished in the Reign of Anastasi, in the beginning of the VIth Century; and that it is He who composed the Commentaries we have, under the Name of Ammonius, on some Treatises of Aristotle, and particularly on his Book of Interpretation (g). The Author of this last Commentary says, at the beginning, that he was a Disciple of Proclus. It is to him that some ascribe the Life of Aristotle, which goes under the Name of Ammonius (b). He is the same, no doubt, who was refuted by Zacharias Mylenensis: See the Remark [H] of the following Article. He is likewise the same, of whom Jonstus (i) understands a Passage of Photius, in which he mentions One Ammonius, who took great Delight in explaining the old Poets, and making Critical Remarks on the Greek Language (k). This induces some to believe, that the Treatise Of the Difference of Greek Words ought to be ascribed to him (l). But Mr Ménage says, that Herennius Philo was the Author of it (m). The same Ammonius, to whom the abovementioned Passage of Photius relates, had an Asis of a wonderful

(a) Athen. lib. II. pag. 476.

(b) It was a Town in Asia.

(c) Jo-fius, de Script. Hist. Phil. lib. pag. 169. and in the Index.

(d) Gesner, in Biblioth. actus et exultant, that he is sensible of the Absurdity of it.

(e) Eunapius Proem. Vit. Soph.

(f) Suidas in Epist. See under the Article HERMIAS.

(g) Vossius de Phil. Sclis, p. 90. § 117. Labbé, de Script. Eccl. Tom. I. pag. 59.

(h) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 567.

(i) Vossius de Histor. Graecis, pag. 502.

(b) Jonstus, Hist. Phil. pag. 300.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Photii Biblioth. n. 242. pag. 1040.

(l) Jonstus, ubi supra.

(m) In Laert. lib. 2. n. 5.

(j) In Voss. de Phil. pag. 112.

(k) Henr. Valefius, Notis in Notis Mauffac, pag. 112.

(l) Ibid.

[A] Of the Courtezans of Athens (1). They, who, in these latter times, have wrote Books entitled The Harlotry of Rome, or of some other great City, were not original Authors. Antiquity saw many Works of this Nature, which are happily lost. Not one of them is come down to us.

[B] We are informed by another Author, that he who wrote the Book — was a Native of Lampria.] We are not indebted to Harpocration for this Information, as Mr Lloyd affirms, but to the Author of the Book De differentiis vocum. Vossius, and several others, call him Ammonius. If Mr Lloyd had translated Vossius right, he would not have said, Ammonius historicus in τῷ περὶ βασιλέων καὶ δυνάμεων titulus ab Harpocratione in Ἀμαζόνιον, uti & in voce Ἑσχαδεα. Ex quo etiam discimus Lampriensem fuisse, ut Gesnerus falso Alexandrinum vocet. — Ammonius the Historian, in his Treatise of Altars and Sacrifices, is cited by Harpocration under the Words Ἀμαζόνιον and Ἑσχαδεα; who informs us likewise, that he was of Lampria; so that Gesner is mistaken in saying that he was of Alexandria. This is one of the Faults of the Abbreviators, which I have so often mentioned. Vossius, having said, as far as the Word Ἑσχαδεα, what I have just now quoted from Lloyd, adds ἐν ἀρχῇ περὶ δυνάμεων ab Ammonio lib. de differ. voc. in βασιλ. Ubi & Ἀμαζόνιον fuisse dicitur, ut Gesnerus falso Alexandrinum vocet (2). Lloyd, being unwilling to transcribe the whole Passage of Vossius, and having skipped a Line of it, fell into a great Mistake; for it is not true, that Harpocration informs us, that Ammonius, whom he cites, was a Native of Lampria. If he had a mind to have omitted any part of it, he should have left out the last Line, in which Vossius tells an Untruth.

Gesner does not say, that Ammonius, the Author of the Book concerning Sacrifices, was an Alexandrian. There is a third Passage of Harpocration (3), in which our Ammonius is cited; Ἀμμόνιος ἐν τετραπλῇ περὶ βασιλέων γράφει ταῦτα; Ammonius in the fourth Book of Altars writes these things. The learned Mauffac has thus corrected the Text of Harpocration; he puts ἑσχαδίων (Altars) instead of κώμων (Towns or Villages), because no one ever said that this Author wrote a Book, De oppidis vel pagis. Valefius approves of this Correction (4). One might conjecture, that, since Ammonius wrote a Book concerning the Courtezans of Athens, he likewise composed one of Festivals or Revellings, περὶ κώμων; upon which Supposition, there will be no occasion to pretend, that, according to the common reading of Harpocration, the Book of Ammonius related to the Towns, or the People, of Attica: Yet Mauffac's Correction appears to me highly probable. It appeared so to Vossius, who mentions it as his own. Valefius cites a Passage of the Scholiast upon Hermogenes, in which the Author of the Book concerning Altars is called Ammonius of Lampria (5).

[C] It is falsely pretended in Moreri's Dictionary, that Plutarch speaks of him with Praise, particularly towards the end of the Life of Aristotle.] This Life of Aristotle is a Chimera. Moreri should have said Theophrastus, and not Aristotle. Now it is true, indeed, that Plutarch mentions Ammonius at the end of the Life of Theophrastus; but it is not true, that he praises him. He speaks neither well nor ill of him.

[D] Moreri is not more successful in his Account of Ammonius the Son of Hermias.] He has committed at least three or four gross Faults. 1. He is ignorant, that Proclus flourished in the Reign of Theodosius the Younger, and a long time after; for, if wonderful Taste for Poetry; for he would abstain from eating his Provender and suffer hunger, rather than interrupt his Attention, upon the reading of a Poem (n). The third AMMONIUS, of whom I intend to speak, was a Poet, who lived in the Vth Century. He composed a Poem on the War with Gainas King of the Goths, and, upon his repeating it before the Emperor Theodosius the younger, was greatly applauded (o). I propose to speak, in separate Articles, not only of some Moderns, who have born the Name of Ammonius, but likewise of an ancient Philosopher, who has given greater Lustre to it than all the rest.

(n) Phot. Biblioth. n. 242. ex Damascio, in Vita Isidori Philosophi.

(o) Socrates, Hist. Eccles. lib. 6. c. 6. & ex e. Nicephor. lib. 13. cap. 6.

(6) Proclus in the Reign of Julian; the second Ammonius, his Disciple, who wrote so well on Aristotle's Book of Interpretation, in the Reign of Valentinian. Rapin Compar. de Platon & d' Aristote, pag. 394.

he had known it, would he have said that Ammonius, Disciple of Proclus, wrote a Book in the Reign of Valentinian? Would he have been such a faithful Transcriber of Father Rapin's Errors (6)? II. What a strange way is this of denoting Emperors? There were three of this Name; and the first must be understood to be meant, when we talk of Valentinian without any Addition. The first Valentinian died in the Year 375; judge then whether the Disciple of Proclus could write in That Emperor's Reign. III. If Mrerri had understood the Author, whom he followed, I mean Father Labbé, he would have learned, that Ammonius, the Disciple of Proclus, and Son of Hermias, flourished in the Reign of the Emperor Anastasius; who did not begin to reign 'till above thirty five Years after the Death of Valentinian III. IV. Father Labbé observes, that frequent mention is made of One Ammonius in the Catena of the Greek Fathers on St John's Gospel, and other Books of the Scripture; and he believes, that Ammonius, the Son of Hermias, is different from Him. Instead of this, Mr Mereri tells us, that some Authors ascribe the Explication of the Greek Fathers on the Gospel of St John to Ammonius, the Son of Hermias.

AMMONIUS, surnamed Saccas [A], was one of the most famous Philosophers of his Time. He flourished about the beginning of the IIIrd Century. He was of Alexandria, and, as he was bred up in the Christian Faith from his Infancy, he persevered in it to the last, as his Works testify. Eusebius, who says this, accuses Porphyry of a manifest Falshood (a), in saying, that Ammonius renounced Christianity, in which he had been educated, and embraced the public Religion, when he was of Age to philosophize [B]. This great Philosopher gave a wonderful Lustre to the School of Alexandria, and put the Science, which he professed, upon an honourable Foot. He found it miserably depraved by the vain Subtilties of the Disputants. We have seen, in Christendom, what they are able to do; I say, we have seen it in the Controversies of the Thomists and Scotists, and of the Realists and Nominalists. They all professed to follow Aristotle, and yet they multiplied Disputes in infinitum. What can we think, then, of the Disputes, which prevailed in ancient times, when, the Philosophers, being divided into several Sects, under different Heads, some condemned Plato, and others Aristotle, &c.? It was a Chaos of mere Chicanery, which dishonoured the Profession. The right way to restore the Science to it's former Credit was to banish all useless Disputes, and to adhere to the Doctrines, in which Plato and his Disciples were agreed. No doubt they were the most certain, and consequently, the most important, Doctrines. This was the Reason, why Ammonius thought himself particularly obliged to reconcile these two Heads of Sects [C], and to clear up the Misunderstanding, on which their pretended Oppositions were built; and it is difficult to express the great Reputation he acquired by this manner of philosophizing. He was extoll'd as a Person inspired, as one taught by God [D]; and

(a) Euseb. Hist. Ecc. lib. 6. cap. 19.

[A] AMMONIUS, surnamed Saccas.] Ammonius Marcellinus (1) and Suidas (2) witness, that he had this Surname. It is generally believed, that, by his first Trade, he was a Carrier of Sacks, and Suidas is alleged in proof of it. These are the Words of the learned Henry Valefius: "Saccas videtur ex eo dictus Ammonius, quod mercibus ex portu Alexandrino comportandis victum sibi quaesivisset, cuiusmodi homines Saccarii antiqui vocabant; ut videre est in Codice Th. tit. de Saccariis portus urbis Romæ. Suidas, πλωτῖς, inquit, μαθητὴς Ἀμμόνιου τῷ πρώτῳ γενόμενος σακκοφόρος (3). — Ammonius seems to have been surnamed Saccas, because he gained his Living by carrying Goods from the Port of Alexandria; which kind of Men were called by the Ancients Saccarii; as may be seen in Cod. Th. tit. Of the Saccarii of the Port of Rome. Suidas says, Plotinus, a Disciple of Ammonius, who was originally a Sack-Bearer."

(1) Henry Valef. in Amm. Marcell. lib. 22.

(2) Suidas in Ἐπεὶ τῶν.

[B] A manifest Falshood, in saying that Ammonius renounced Christianity, — — — when he was of Age to philosophize.] Let us see the Original. "Ὅτε τῷ πορφυρίῳ καὶ τῇ φιλοσοφίᾳ ἡ ψαλτο, εὐδὲς πρὸς τὴν κατὰ νόμους πολιτείαν μετέβλετο (4). — As soon as he was capable of thinking for himself, and had begun to taste Philosophy, he exchanged his manner of Life for That which was agreeable to the Laws. Porphyry, in saying this, was animated by the Spirit, which I have mentioned in the Remark [E] of the Article ABULPHARAGIUS.

(4) Porphyry. lib. 3. adv. Christianos, apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. 6. c. 19.

[C] Thought himself particularly obliged to reconcile these two Heads of Sects.] We learn this from Hierocles, Author of a Book concerning Providence, of which we have some Extracts in the Bibliothèque of Photius. According to this Author, none but Men, governed by a Spirit of Contradiction, and an itching Desire of Disputation, or by their Prejudices, and the Darkness of their Minds, found any Disagreement between the Doctrines of Plato and Aristotle. Τὸς μὲν ἐκόντας ἑαδὶ καὶ ἀπορία σφῶς αὐτὸς παραδείκνυται, τὸς δὲ καὶ μετὰ τὴν ἀμαθίαν δειδωκόμενος (5). — Some voluntarily giving themselves up to Strife and Madness, others enslaved to Prejudice and Ignorance. The first of these kind of Disputants were very numerous, before the Light of Ammonius came to enlighten the World. "Donec Ammonii aliquando sapientia orbi illuxit, quem etiam divinitus eductum appellari prædicat. Hunc enim veterum philosophorum opinionibus perpurgat, & resecit quæ utrimque excreverant nugis, in præcipuis quibuscumque & maxime necessariis dogmatibus concordem esse Platonis & Aristotelis sententiam demonstrasse (6). — Till at length the Philosophy of Ammonius shone upon the World, who, he tells us, was called the Inspired. For, having thoroughly purged the Doctrines of the old Philosophers, and pared off every useless Excrecence, he demonstrated, that Plato and Aristotle agreed in the principal and most important Points."

(5) Photius Biblioth. n. 214. p. 543.

(6) Hierocles, apud Phot. ibid.

[D] He was extoll'd as a Person Inspired, as One taught by God.] I have set down a Passage of Hierocles, wherein these Words are to be found "Ὁν καὶ θεοδιδάκτορον ἐπικαλεῖσθαι οὐκ ἔστι, who, he tells us, was called the INSPIRED. I shall add another, in which the same Author relates, that the Followers of Plato and Aristotle were so fond of perpetuating their Quarrels, that they corrupted the Text of these two great Philosophers, to demonstrate more easily the Opposition between them. This Disorder, adds He, continued 'till the Time of Ammonius, and whom a Divine Instinct had guided into this Path. Moreri and many others were ignorant of the true Foundation of this Elogy [E]. Others are no less mistaken, when they say, that Ammonius taught his Disciples the Mysteries of the Gospel, under the Seal of Secrecy [F]. Some have confounded his Theological Works with those of other Writers [G]; but at last they have been distinguished. He had, among other Scholars, Plotinus and Origen. He died about the Year 230 (b). I believe we ought nus, the Disciple of the great God; for, being carried away by an Enthusiasm in search of Philosophical Truth, he dived into the bottom of both Sects, and reconciled them together, and gave his Hearers, particularly his learned Equals, Plotinus, Origen, and their Successors, a System of Philosophy free from Strife and Contention. "Εως Ἀμμόνιον τῷ Θεοδιδάκτῳ ἐπὶ τῷ γὰρ πρῶτῳ ἐνδεσίδας πρὸς τὴν φιλοσοφίαν ἀληθινὴν, καὶ τὰς τῶν πολλῶν δόξας υπεριδῶν, τὰς πλείους οὐκ ἐφ' ἐπιστοφῆς ἀφελόμενος, εἰς ἐκὼς τὰ ἐκείνους, καὶ συνήγαγεν εἰς ἓνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν νῦν καὶ ἀσάδιασεν τὴν φιλοσοφίαν παραδίδωκε πᾶσι τοῖς αὐτῷ γνωρίμοις, μάλιστα δὲ τοῖς ἀρίστοις τῶν αὐτῷ συγγεγονότων Πλωτῖνῳ καὶ Ὀριγίνῳ καὶ τοῖς ἑξῆς ἀπὸ τούτων (7). Uique ad divinitus edocuit Ammonium. Hic enim primus æstu quodam rapuit ad Philosophiæ veritatem, multorumque opinionum, qui magnum dedecus Philosophiæ attulerunt, contemnit, utramque sectam probe calluit, & in concordiam adduxit, & a contentiosis liberam Philosophiam tradidit omnibus suis auditoribus, & maxime doctissimis æqualibus suis Plotino & Origeni & Successoribus.

(b) According to Cave, Hist. Liter. pag. 724.

[E] Moreri and many others were ignorant of the true Foundation of this Elogy.] According to Mr Moreri, Ammonius "applied himself more particularly to the Divine Philosophy of JESUS CHRIST. He acquired such an Esteem by it, that he was looked upon as a Man, who had been particularly instructed by God, and for that Reason he had the Name of THEODIDACTUS given him." He is mistaken: I shall not contest with Ammonius his Theological Learning; but certainly, it was not upon that Account, that he was called Theodidactus. He was honoured with this Title on Account of his Philosophical Lectures, which spoke only of Plato and Aristotle, but made no mention of JESUS CHRIST and the Gospel. His Auditors were divided; some professed Paganism, and others Christianity; and therefore it was necessary he should set aside Matters of Religion, and chiefly those, which related to Piety. Would Hierocles, who was a Pagan Philosopher, have expressed himself in the manner he has done, if the Knowledge of the Gospel had procured Ammonius the Elogy we are speaking of? I can easily believe, that Ammonius was not accounted a Christian among the Pagans, and that it is This, which moved Porphyrus to say, that Ammonius renounced Christianity, as soon as he was capable of philosophizing. He was known to be a Christian among his Brethren, and gave Proofs of his Faith in certain Writings, which were, in all likelihood, little known to the Pagans. Would Plotinus have followed Ammonius so long, if he had believed him to be an Enemy to the Established Religion? The Christians were not yet so considerable.

[F] Others are no less mistaken, when they say, that Ammonius taught his Disciples the Mysteries of the Gospel, under the Seal of Secrecy.] I was surprized to find Father Labbé so greatly mistaken in these Words. "Idem Porphyrus, says he (8) in vita Plotini Platonice lectæ Philosophi, narrat Ammonium Religionis Christianæ arcanis discipulis suis fuisse lentius religione communicasse, & Herennium, Originemque æque Plotinum obstrictissimè, eumque Herennium primus eam fregisset, nec Originem nec Plotinum promissis fessisse. — The same Porphyrus, in the Life of Plotinus, a Philosopher of the Platonic Sect, relates, that Ammonius communicated the Mysteries of the Christian Religion, to his Disciples, upon an Oath of Secrecy; which when Herennius had first broken, neither Origen nor Plotinus stood to their Promise." Here are two notorious Mistakes: First, it is not true, that Ammonius made his Disciples swear not to impart to any one what they had learned of him. In the second place, it is false, that Porphyrus speaks of any other Doctrines, but Those of Philosophy. All that he says may be reduced to this. Erennius, Origen, and Plotinus, had agreed not to make public the Lessons they had been taught by Ammonius, and which appeared to them to be greatly laboured, and very refined. Plotinus kept his Word; but Erennius, having broke his, was soon imitated by Origen. This is not a proper place to shew, that this Origen is not He, who wrote so many Books, and who so greatly allegorized the Scripture; but, as great part of my Readers may not have a Plotinus at hand, I shall set down his own Words. Επὶνῶν δὲ καὶ Ὀριγῖνῳ καὶ Πλωτῖνῳ συνδικῶν γογόντων μηδὲν ἐκκαλύπτειν τῶν Ἀμμόνιον δόγματων ἀ δὲ ἐν ταῖς ἀποδόσεσιν αὐτοῖς ἀνεκκιδάρτο, ἔμνε καὶ ὁ Πλωτῖνῳ, συνῶν μὲν τισὶ τῶν περὶόντων, τῶν δὲ ἀνεκπυσα τὰ παρὰ τῷ Ἀμμόνιον δόγματι. Επὶνῶν δὲ πρῶτος τὰς συνδικὰς παραδόντῳ, Ὀριγῖνῳ μὲν ἠκολούθει τῷ φθόσαντῳ Ἐπὶνῳ (9). Cum vero Erennius & Origenes & Plotinus olim inter se constitissent, ne Ammonii dogmata ederent, quæ audita ab eo tanquam in primis purgata præcipue comprobarent; Plotinus quidem stetit promissis, familiariter quidem nonnullos excipientes salutantes, infututa vero Ammonii secreta integreque conservans. Erennius autem primus pacta dissolvit, & Origenes anticipantem Erennium est deinde sequutus." Another Cause of wonder is, that these two Faults of Father Labbé are to be found likewise in Lucas Holstenius (10).

[G] Some have confounded his Theological Works with those of other Writers.] St Jerom places Ammonius among the Ecclesiastical Writers, and ascribes to him, among other Works, the Invention of the Gospel-Canons (11), and adds, that Eusebius copied after this Model upon a like Design. If this were true, Eusebius would be a great Impostor, since he affirms in a Letter (12), wherein he explains the Nature and Use of his ten Canons on the Harmony of the Gospels, that he invented them, on occasion of a Book of Ammonius. This Book is entitled, Monotessaron, or Diateffaron. It's Difference from the Gospel-Canons consists in this. "These Canons are only Indices of the Passages of the Gospels, which are continued in one, two, three, or four Evangelists; whereas Ammonius's Harmony (the same with the Diateffaron or Monotessaron) contained the entire Text of the four Evangelists, which Eusebius had made use of in compiling his Canons; which related to this Harmony, and were in the Nature of an Index to it (13)." 'Tis therefore a Mistake to say, as Moreri does, that the Gospel Canons, and the Harmony of the Gospel, are the same thing. Victor, Bishop of Capua; Zacharias, Bishop of Chrysopolis, Tribemius, and several modern Authors, relying upon St Jerom's Authority, and not attending to the abovementioned Letter of Eusebius, say, that Ammonius invented the Gospel-Canons. Here is another Confusion. There are in the Bibliotheca Patrum two Harmonies of the four Gospels. One of them was ascribed to Tatian by Victor, Bishop of Capua, who translated it into Latin (14) about the Year 545, and added a Preface to it (15). Hence it came to pass, that the other Harmony was ascribed to Ammonius. But the Harmony, fathered upon Tatian by the Bishop of Capua, cannot be That Author's, since it contains all the Genealogies of JESUS CHRIST mentioned by the Evangelists; whereas Tatian left out of his Harmony all the Passages of the Gospels, which shew that JESUS CHRIST sprung from David (16). On the other hand, the Harmony, ascribed to Ammonius, wants these Passages (17). Sixtus Siensis, George Ederus, and several others have followed Victor's Error. But Zacharias, Bishop of Chrysopolis, made it appear, above Five hundred Years ago, that Ammonius is the Author of That Harmony (18), which is Baronius's Opinion. We ought to take particular notice of a Circumstance, which we learn from Father Udin, viz. that the Harmony, to which Ammonius's Name is prefixed, which is in the Bibliotheca Patrum, printed in the Year 1575, and which has been translated into Latin by Ottomarus Lufcinus, is neither Ammonius's, nor Tatian's

(7) Hierocles apud Phot. p. 251. pag. 1381.

(9) Porphyr. in Vita Plotini.

(10) Lucas Holstenius de Vita & Script. Porphyr. p. 28.

(11) Hieron. de Script. Eccl. c. 55.

(12) Ad Carpianum: Je 12 prefixed, with the ten Canons de Confonantia quatuor Evangeliorum, to the Greek Testament of Rob. Stephens, Paris 1550. See Father Labbé de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. p. 308. item pag. 58.

(13) Du Pin. Biblioth. Tom. 1. p. 120. Edit. Amst.

(14) Udin, Suppl. de Script. Eccl. pag. 15. Bellarmine de Script. Eccl. pag. 226.

(15) Labbé, de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 57.

(16) Eusebius de Theodoret affirm. ibid. See Labbé, ubi supra, p. 57.

(17) Cave, Hist. Liter. p. 72.

(18) Comm. in eam Harmoniam, apud Labbé, ibid.

(8) Labbé de Script. Eccl. Tom. 1. pag. 58.

to distinguish him from the Peripatetic AMMONIUS [H], who was, according to Philostatus, the most learned, and the best read Man of his Age.

I find a very gross Mistake in one of the Commentators upon Boetius. He says, Our Ammonius corrupted Plato's Doctrine about the Eternity of the World more than any one else: but nothing can be more false, than this Accusation [I].

(19) Oudin, ubi supra. Tatian's (19). We have lost Ammonius's Book, de consensu Mosis & Jesu. If we may believe Henry Valesius, all his other Books are also lost: Huius Ammonii, quod sciam, hodie nihil extat, says he, in his Commentary upon the last Chapter of the Twenty second Book of Ammianus Marcellinus. Had he forgot the Harmony of the Gospels, which is to be found in the Bibliotheca Patrum, or did he believe that Ammonius was not the Author of it? Hadrian Valesius, having made no Observation upon this in the second Edition, plainly shews, that he is of his Brother's Opinion.

[H] I believe we ought to distinguish him from the Peripatetic Ammonius.] A very learned Man seems not inclined to make this Distinction. "Hic esse videtur," says he (20), Ammonius Peripateticus Philolophus, quem πολυπραγματώτατος fuisse sæculi sui testatur Philostatus in Sophistæ Hippodromi vita, quo qui plura legisset neminem se vidisse. — This seems to be the Peripatetic Philolophus Ammonius, who, according to Philostatus, in his Life of the Sophist Hippodromus, was "a Man of the most extensive Reading he had ever met with." But if he had attended to the Words of Longinus, inserted in Plotinus's Life, he would have made no scruple to distinguish between these two Philosophers. Longinus observes, that some Philosophers composed Books, and others taught only viva voce. He mentions some of each of these two Classes; some are Platonists, others are Stoics or Peripatetics. He reckons Ammonius and Origen among those of the second Class, and says they followed Plato's Philosophy. He adds that he was acquainted with them, and that they surpassed all the Philosophers of their Time. Οἱς ἡμεῖς τὸ πλεῖστον τῶ χρόνῳ περὶ σοφιστῶν ἀνδράσιν ἐκ ἀλγῶν τῶν κατ' αὐτοὺς εἰς οὐκ οὐκ δὲ διενεγκῶσι (21). Quibusum nos diu versati sumus, viris profecto intervallo non parvo sui sæculi Philosophos intelligentia superantibus. Afterwards he names some Stoics, who belonged to the second Class of Philosophers, viz. of Those, who wrote nothing, or but very little. Lastly, he mentions two Peripatetics of the same Class, viz. Ammonius and Ptolemy, who exceeded all the learned Men of their Age in Philology: This he says particularly of Ammonius. Ἀμμόνιος καὶ Πτολεμαῖος φιλολογῶνται μὲν τῶν κατ' αὐτοὺς ἀμφοτέρωθεν, καὶ μάλα δ' Ἀμμόνιος. ὃ γὰρ ἐστὶν ὅτις ἐκείνῳ γέγονεν εἰς πολυμαθεῖαν παρεκκλίσις (22). Ammonius atque Ptolemeus, disciplinarum ambo profecto maxime omnium suo tempore pleni, præsertim Ammonius: nullus enim ad disciplinarum illius eptam prope accessisse videtur. Here we have the Philosopher Ammonius mentioned by Philostatus; he is therefore a very different Person from Him, who taught Philosophy at Alexandria, and who was the Master of Plotinus and Origen. It appears from Longinus's Letter, that these learned Peripatetics wrote only some Poems and Orations. This great Critic supposes they did not intend those Pieces for Posterity; for, says he, if they had, they would have been more exact in their Compositions.

(21) Longinus, apud Porphyr. in Vita Plotini. (22) Id. ib.

[I] Nothing can be more false than this Accusation.] I shall set down the Words of the Commentator at large, that the Reader may the better understand his Error. "Nulla autem Platonis sententia est, quam sædus corruperint, & obliuio defenderint, veteres Platonis interpretes; seu quia eorum alii ita sentirent, seu ut Christianam fidem impugnarent. Eorum signifer Ammonius fuit, fidus alioquin ac illustri doctrinæ Platonice assertor; quem Zacharias dialogo, cui Ammonius titulus est, confutavit. Mox ejus discipuli, Plotinus passim lib. suis; & quod mirum est, ne à magistro dissentirent, fax illi fidei Origenes; cujus errorem S. Methodius lib. περὶ τῶν γεννητῶν, ut est apud Photium, redarguit (23). — There is no Doctrine of Plato, which has been more basely corrupted, and more obstinately defended, by the ancient Interpreters of Plato, than This; either because some of them really thought so, or with a view of opposing the Christian Faith. At the Head of these is Ammonius, in other Respects a Faithful and Illustris Assertor of Platonism; whom Zacharias confuted in his Dialogue entitled Ammonius. Next to Him were His Disciples, Plotinus in several Parts of his Works, and, what is wonderful, That Luminary of Faith, Origen, who would not dissent from his Master; whose Error S. Methodius refutes in his Book περὶ τῶν γεννητῶν, as it is in Photius. You see plainly, that he speaks of Ammonius, who was Origen's Master. Would he have been guilty of such an Oversight, if he had consulted the Originals, and if he had not cited the Treatise of Zacharias upon the Authority of others? For we read at the very beginning of That Treatise, that Ammonius, against whom it was written, was still living, and taught at Alexandria with great Ostentation, after he had been Proclus's Disciple at Athens. The Author, I mean Zacharias Bishop of Mitylene, lived in the VIth Century; for he assisted at the Council of Constantinople, in the Year 536; and therefore 'tis not true, that he confuted Origen's Master. But it is true, that the Philosopher Ammonius, whom he refuted, taught, that God and the World were, and would always be, Co-eternal. This Book of Zacharias was translated out of Greek into Latin by Genebrard, and inserted in the Bibliotheca Patrum (24). Passevin observes, that Cassianus censures Gelsus, for saying, that Zacharias's Book de Mundi Eternitate was different from That, which is entitled Ammonius (25). This Censure would be very well grounded with respect to Simler, who abridged Gelsus; but it is unjust with respect to Gelsus himself, who says, in express Words, that the Dialogue, entitled Ammonius, seems to him to be the Same with the Treatise de Rerum Eternitate. I must observe, that I was surprized to find that a Heathen Philosopher was permitted to be a Professor at Alexandria, in the VIth Century, and to teach openly the Eternity of the World, in opposition to the Doctrine of the Christians. He was so far from concealing his Opinion, that he publicly maintained it in his Lectures, and no one could be ignorant that many of his Scholars imbibed This Doctrine. One of them (26), who was afterwards the chief Professor of Physic in That City, warmly maintained the same Opinion. This appears from the Treatise of Zacharias Mitylenensis.

(23) Renaud Vallinus, Not. ad lib. c. Boetii de Consolat. Philosoph. pag. 96.

(24) It is in Vol. 9. of the Bibliotheca Patrum, p. 331, Rec. of the Paris Edition 1644.

(25) Passevin, Apper. Tom. 2. p. 552.

(26) Effie Name upon Gelsus. See the Bibliotheca Patrum, Tom. 11. pag. 339.

AMMONIUS (ANDREW) born at Lucca, went to seek his Fortune in England, towards the beginning of the XVIth Century, and would probably have advanced himself there, if he had lived longer [A]. He applied himself to polite Literature, and

[A] Would probably have advanced himself there if he had lived longer.] This is not my own Conjecture; it is the Sentiment of Erasmus. "Periit," says he (1), & apud Gallos Fauftus, & apud Brianos Andreas Ammonius, quorum alter diu regnavit Lutetie, alter ad summam dignitatem emer- surus erat, si vita diuturnior contigisset. — In France died Fauftus, in England Andrew Ammonius; the former of whom flourished long at Paris; the latter would have risen to the highest Honours,

"had he enjoyed a longer Life." He gave this Judgment of him, not only whilst the Wound was fresh, that is, when, a little after the Death of Ammonius, Affliction prompted him to celebrate his Praise, but even when a considerable number of Years had effaced the first Impressions of Regret and Sorrow. "Quam multos," says he in a Letter, which he wrote in the Year 1524 (2), hic ex veteris sodalitis desiderio. "Primum Andream Ammonium Lucensem. Deum immortalẽ quanta ingenii dexteritate, quam fidei memoria

(1) Erasmus, Epist. 24. lib. 2. pag. 332. scripta anno 1518.

(2) Id. Ep. 5. lib. 21. p. 1210.

and Latin Poetry: His Merit, as an Author, arises chiefly from his Latin Verses [B]. Erasmus and He were intimate Friends, and maintained a constant Epistolary Correspondence. Ammonius lodged some time with Sir Thomas More (a), and afterwards in St Thomas's Hospital (b), for he had not Money enough to hire, and keep, a House. He declared to Erasmus, that he repented of having left Rome, and that he was not very well pleased with his Condition in England (c). The Advice Erasmus gave him was very conformable to the fraudulent Ways, which are necessary to be used in advancing ones self in the World [C]; but we must suppose that Erasmus gave it only in jest. He wrote very fine Iambic Verses in his Praise, which shew, that Ammonius had a great many Perfections both of Body and Mind (d). But we must not rely much on Poetical Elogies; Erasmus's Prose (which we shall produce in our Remarks) will be a greater Confirmation of the Worth of his Friend. Fortune becoming more favourable to Ammonius, He was made Secretary to King Henry VIII (e), and had likewise a public Character in the Court of That Monarch, conferred upon him by Pope Leo X (f). Had he not died before the Age of Forty Years, he might have been advanced higher. He was in the Army in the Year 1513 (g), when the English gained the Battel of the Spurs, and took Teroüenne and Tournay; he wrote Verses on these Victories, as also on that which they obtained over James IV, King of Scotland. He died of the Sweating Sickness in England [D], in the Year 1517 [E]. One of the greatest

(a) Erasmi. Epist. 2. lib. 8. pag. 408.

(b) Id. Epist. 23. pag. 422.

(c) Id. Epist. 25. pag. 426. Item Epist. 11. pag. 413.

(d) Id. Epist. 22. pag. 422.

(e) Balaeus, apud Similicrum Epist. Gefneri.

(f) Andreae Ammonius tunc Sanctitatis apud Anglos Nuncius litteris significabit. — — — Andrew Ammonius, your Holiness's Nuncio in England, will inform you by Letter. Erasmi. Ep. 6. lib. 2. pag. 104.

(g) Id. Epist. 40. lib. 2. pag. 434.

"memoria præditum! Tum animus quàm erat excelsus, quàm alienus à livore, quàm alienus à foribus! Hunc & suis dotibus & omni principum applausu florentem, maximis rebus destinatum, subita mors interceptit, natu minore annis quadraginta. Cujus equidem deceffum non possum non dolere, quoties in mentem venit quàm mihi fuerit jucunda ejus familiaritas. — How many of my old Acquaintance do I lament the Loss of in this Place? First, Andrew Ammonius of Lucca; a Man, blest with the Happiest Genius, and most Faithful Memory. Then his Mind, how free was it from Envy, how remote from every thing Low and Sordid! This Illustrious Man, flourishing by his own Abilities, and the general Applause of the Great, and destined to the biggest Honours, was taken off by a sudden Death, before he was forty Years old. Who's Decease I cannot but lament, when I recollect how happy I was in his Acquaintance and Conversation."

[B] His Merit, as an Author, arises chiefly from his Latin Verses. The Abridgment of Gefner's Bibliotheca gives us this Catalogue of Ammonius's Poems. Scotici consiliis Historia lib. 1. Bucolica, seu Ecolæ lib. 1. De rebus nibili lib. 1. Panegyricus quidam lib. 1. Epigrammata lib. 1. Poëmata diversa lib. 1. Balæus is quoted for it. What is called here Panegyricus quidam is a Poem on the Victories, which the English obtained, in the Year 1513, at the Battel of the Spurs, at the taking of Teroüenne, Tournay, &c. Erasmus gives his Opinion of this Poem in a Letter (3) which is dated on St Thomas's Day, 1510. This is an undeniable Proof, that sometimes they have added the date of his Letters without any care; besides they are misplaced. The Answer precedes, sometimes by several Pages, the Letter, which is the Subject of the Answer (4).

(3) The words of the 316 Book.

(4) See the Article CARMILIANUS.

[C] The Advice Erasmus gave him was very conformable to the fraudulent ways, which are necessary to be used in advancing ones self in the World. "Be ashamed of nothing, said he to him, interfere in every one's Business;

Coudoyez un chacun, point du tout de quartier (5).

Elbow each one; no Quarter ever give.

"make your Interest the Rule of your Love and Hatred; give nothing but to those, who will return it with Usury; be complaisant to every one in every thing; have two Strings to your Bow; suborn some to invite you away; pretend you are going, and seem to prepare for your Departure; produce Letters, in which you are promised a thousand Advantages." "Principio perfica frontem, ne quid usquam pudeat. Deinde omnibus omnium negotiis te misce, protrude quemcunque potes cubito. Neminem nec ames nec oderis ex animo, sed omnia tuo compendio metiare. Ad hunc scopum omnia vitæ ratio spectet. Ne quid des, nisi unde speres sœnus: assentare omnibus omnia. At ista vulgaria sunt, inquit. Age quando ista via, accipe peculiare consilium, sed heus in aurem. Nosti τὴν Βετανικὴν ἡμερολογίαν, hac in tuum bonum a-

(5) Mollere; in his Remerciement au Roi. The whole Passage is as follows: Jettez vous dans le foule, & tranchez du notable; Coudoyez un chacun, point du tout de quartier; Pressiez, Poussiez, Fourrez le Diable, Pour vous mettre le Premier.

"butere. Duabus fedeto fellis. Suborna diversos procos qui te ambiant. Minare & appara discessum. Offende literas quibus magnis pollicitis avocar. Subducito te nonnunquam, ut subtrahat copia defiderium acuat (6)." Alciatus made use of the last mentioned Artifice (7).

[D] He died of the Sweating-Sickness in England. Consult the History of the Divorce of Henry VIII. composed by Mr le Grand, and you will find there what kind of Sickness This was. It was called the Sweat, because People died Sweating. This kind of Plague began to be felt the first time in 1486, and was not known before. All the Remedies, which were used against it, were in vain, and it carried off a great Number of People, before the Physicians knew how to treat it. It was a Scourge, with which God was pleased at first to punish the English alone. In what place soever they were, they were attacked with it, without it's having any Effect upon Strangers, with whom they converted (8). Among the Proofs which Mr le Grand has produced (9), there are some Letters from the Bishop of Bayonne, the French Ambassador in England, which speak of this Distemper. Anne Bullen was infected with it, as also that Ambassador. This Distemper had already infected, for some time, others besides the English; for our Italian Ammonius died of it in the Year 1517, notwithstanding the Hopes he had conceived of preserving himself from it by his great Sobriety. Sir Thomas More wrote to Erasmus about it in these Terms. "In his, (quod tibi quoque dolori esse doleo) Andrea nostro Ammonio, in quo & literæ & omnes boni magnam fecere jacturam. Is valde sibi videbatur adversus contagionem victus moderatione munitus: qua factum putavit ut quum in nullum pene incideret ejus non tota familia laboraverat, neminem adhuc è suis id malum attigerit; id quod mihi & multis præterea jactavit non admodum multis horis antequam extinctus esset, nam hoc sudore nemo nisi primo die perit. Ego uxore & liberi adhuc intacti, reliqua familia tota revaluit. Hoc tibi affirmo, minus periculi in acie quàm in urbe esse (10). — Among those, who have died, is our Friend Andrew Ammonius, in whose Death Learning and all good Men have suffered a Loss. He thought he had sufficiently guarded against the Contagion by Sobriety, and Moderation in his Diet; which was the Reason, as he thought, why none of his Domestic had been visited with the Distemper, at the same time that he scarce met with any one, whose whole Family was not afflicted with it. This he boasted of to me and several others not many Hours before he died; for This Sweat is not mortal after the first Day. I and my Wife and Children have hitherto escaped; and the rest of my Family has recovered from it. This I affirm to you, that there is less danger in a Field of Battel, than in this City."

(6) Erasmi. Ep. 13. lib. 8. pag. 414.

(7) See the Remark [D] of the Article ALCIATUS.

(8) Le Grand's History of the Divorce of Henry VIII. He dies Goodwin.

(9) Ibid. Tom. 3. p. 137. & 138.

(10) Mori Epist. 4. lib. 7. among the style of Erasmus.

[E] He died in the Year 1517. Sir Thomas More's Letter, from whence I have just now cited a long Passage, is dated the nineteenth of August, 1520. It seems, then, as if Ammonius did not die in the Year 1517; for how unlikely is it that Sir Thomas More should pieces of Service he did Erasmus, was his supplying him constantly with the best Wines at Cambridge [F]. He uses an hyperbolical Expression in one of his Letters, in which he says, that so many Heretics were daily burnt, that it raised the Price of Wood [G].

(11) Ammonius mortem scribitur fuisse ferro. I am greatly afflicted at the Death of Ammonius. pag. 198.

Should let three Years pass without taking any notice of it to Erasmus? I answer, that this Objection can be of no Force against the Letters, in which Erasmus himself mentions the Death of Ammonius. He observes in the Twenty fourth Letter of the second Book, and in the twentieth of the third Book, both dated in the Year 1518, that That Year was fatal to learned Men, as Musurus, Paleottus, Faufus, Andrelus, and Ammonius. In the Thirty first Letter of the third Book, dated the ninth of September, 1517, he mentions Ammonius's Death (11). This Letter is dated right; for Erasmus mentions the Departure of the King of Spain as a Piece of News. Now it is well known, that the King set sail in the beginning of September, 1517. Let us say, then, that Baleus is mistaken one whole Year, when he places the Death of Ammonius in the Year 1518 (12). Erasmus might well say, in the Year 1518, that several great Men had died that Year. One of his Letters, in which he says so, is dated in March; when he said this Year, he meant the ten or twelve preceding Months. This is confirmed by a Letter of Bombafius (13), justly dated the sixth of December, 1517, in which we find, that Musurus died at Rome the last Autumn, and that Paleottus died eight Months before.

(12) Apud Simlerum Epit. Gelece.

(13) The 23d of the 2d Book.

[F] His supplying him constantly with the best Wines at Cambridge.] The Letters of these Friends frequently mention the sending of Wine; but the following Passage proves, that Erasmus was not quite averse to this Liquor, and that he rather chose to stay in a Country infected with the Plague, than drink Water. "Simul atque Anglicum solum teigi, ubi locorum esse rogare coepi, siquidem Cantabrigiensem pestem fugere te scripsisti. Unus tandem Sixtinus mihi dixit, te quidem Cantabrigiam ob pestem reliquisse, & concessisse nescio quo, ubi cum vini penuria laborare, & eo carere gravius peste duceres, Cantabrigiam appetisse, atque inibi te nunc esse.

(a) Erasmus calls him so. Valerius Andreas says Livinus.

(b) Livinus Ammonius, vir eruditio-ne juxta ac pectate insignis. Erasmus Epist. 23. lib. 23. pag. 2704.

AMMONIUS (LIVINUS) (a) distinguished himself among the Cartusians in Flanders, not only by the Character of Procurator, with which he was honoured at Ghent, the Place of his Birth, but also by his Learning and Piety (b). Erasmus had a great Esteem for him; and it appears, by two Letters (c), which he wrote to him, that he thought he was free from the Prejudices and Passions of Persons of his Rank [A]. Ammonius discovered to him the Uneasiness of his Situation, and the Resolution he had taken to submit to the Hardship of his Condition. We may easily conjecture, that he could have wished for more leisure to improve his Mind and Studies. But his Superiors were not pleased that he should; they rather desired that he might be ignorant, and attend only to the external Observances of their Order. However, he had the Credit of being an Author: The Titles of his Works are to be seen in Moreri; but there is no depending upon the Citation of Vander-Linden [B].

(14) Ammonius, Epist. 3. lib. 3. inter Erasmusianae, pag. 410.

(c) The ninth fourth of the twenty-third Book, and the twentieth of the twenty-fifth.

[A] Erasmus—thought he was free from the Prejudices and Passions of Persons of his Rank.] If he had not, he would not have taken the Liberty of telling him, that, when he recollected what kind of Persons the Monks were, he could not help thinking, that the Enemy of Mankind had a share in the Institution of Monasteries; he added, that in those Places the Ignorant acquire the greatest Esteem by placing their Merit in the exact Observation of outward Ceremonies. "Quum interdum mecum reputo, Ammonie charissime, cujusmodi ingenia premaner ac sepeli-

"O fortem Bassaei commilitonem, qui in summo periculo ducem deferere noluisset (14). — Upon my first Arrival in England, I immediately enquired the Place of your Abode; for you had informed me by Letter, that you had left Cambridge for fear of the Plague. Sixtinus at last told me, that you had indeed left Cambridge for fear of the Plague, and had retired I know not whither; but that, not meeting with plenty of Wine, the want of which you seemed worse than the Plague itself, you were returned to Cambridge; and that you continue to reside there. O valiant Fellow-Soldier of Bassaeus, who in the greatest Danger didst refuse to desert your Leader! Thus Ammonius writes to Erasmus.

[G] He uses an hyperbolical Expression in one of his Letters, in which he says, that so many Heretics were daily burnt, that it raised the Price of Wood.] They were neither those Papists, nor Protestants, who ran equal Hazard of being punished in England, under King Henry VIII, after he had renounced the Pope's Supremacy, but another Set of Men; since the Letter, which mentions these Executions, is dated in the Month of November, 1511. The Flames could not extirpate their Opinions. Read this. "Lignorum pretium auctum esse non miror: multi quotidie Haeretici holocaustum nobis praebent, plures tamen succedunt. Quin & Frater Germanus mei Thomae, stipens verius quam homo, sectam (si diis placet) & ipse instituit, & discipulos habet (15). — I do not wonder, that the Price of Wood is enhanced; for though every Day affords us Holocausts of Heretics, yet more daily spring up. Even the Brother of my Friend Sir Thomas More, a Stick rather than a Man, is, forsooth, Author of a Sect, and has his Followers."

[* They were the Remains of the Wickliffites. See Burnet's History of the Reformation. REM. CRIT.]

"antur in istis ceremoniis, interdum subit animum cogitatio fortassis humana, istiusmodi vitae ergastula non sine instinctu satanae fuisse instituta. — Ac fere fit ut quo quisque indoctior stupidiorque est, hoc in isto vitio instituto plurius habeatur, tumidus fiducia ceremoniarum, & alieni spiritus iniquus aestimator (1)."

[B] Upon the Citation of Vander Linden.] This Author did not write the Bibliotheca Belgica; he is there put for Valerius Andreas. It was the Bibliotheca Medicorum, which he composed.

(1) Erasmus Epist. 20. lib. 25. pag. 1361.

(a) In the Article AGIS.

AMPHARES, one of the Lacedemonian Ephori, was the chief Instrument in the Tragical Death of King Agis. We have observed in another Place (a), that, after the Re-establishment of his Colleague Leonidas, This Prince took Sanctuary in a Temple. Amphares was one of those, who familiarly visited him there, and accompanied him, when he went from thence to the Bath, and back again to the Temple. As he was returning one day in this manner from the Bath, Amphares seized on him, and obliged him to appear before the Ephori, and give an account of his Conduct: He carried him by force to a Prison; The Ephori, and their Assistants, immediately repaired thither to set in Judgment upon the King. He assured them, that he had no other Intention than to settle Affairs on the same foot as Lycurgus had left them, and that he should never repent of so good a Design. Whereupon he was condemned to Death, and the Officers were commanded to conduct him to the Place

(4) See the Article ALCMÆON, Son of AMPHIA-RAUS.

upon her Husband, at the Time of the Preparation for the Theban Expedition, was a villanous Action. Amphiarus, discovering by his prophetic Spirit, that he should perish in this War, concealed himself, and refused to go; but his Wife, being bribed by a Present, discovered where he was (e). He was obliged, therefore, against his Will, to accompany the other Princes to the Expedition of Thebes; which proved unfortunate; and he perished in it after a very extraordinary Manner; for, the Earth being opened by a Thunder-bolt, he was swallowed up in the Abyss, with his Chariot [B]. They (f) who pretend, that this Misfortune happen to him the same

(f) Charles Stephens, and Lloyd, in their Di-chronicles. Oliverus apud Val. Max. lib. 8. sub. finem, and many others.

Day

[B] He was swallowed up in the Abyss, with his Chariot.] Pindar and Apollodorus, are among those who say that a Thunder-bolt opened the Earth, and that it was a Stroke of Favour from Jupiter: for otherwife Amphiarus would have had the Disgrace of being killed by Periclymenus, who pursued him.

----- δ δ' Ἀμφιάρῳ
σχίσαν κεραυνῷ παμμία Ζεύς τὰν βαδύστερον χθόνα, κρύψεν δ' ἄμ' ἱπποῖς,
ἔσπε' Ἀμφικλυμένῳ πρὶν
ῥῆτα τυκίνα μαχάταρ
δυμὸν αἰσχρὸν ἔμμεν (10).

(10) Pindar. Nemean. Od. 9. pag. 611, 612. See Apollodorus, lib. 3. pag. 193.

Jove saw Amphiarus' threatened Shame,
And darted from on high the misty Flame.
The Womb of Earth, disclosing at the Blow, Alsort the Hero to the Shades below,
Quick with his Car descending: ere the Spear
Of Periclymenus, approaching near,
Had in his Back infix'd the Conard Wound,
And an inglorious Death the warlike Chief had found.

(11) Id. Pind. Od. 6. Olymp. pag. 98.

You find in this, and another Passage of the same Poet (11), that Amphiarus and his Chariot fell both together into the Precipice. This is the most general Tradition (12): But others pretend, that he fell from his Chariot during the Battle, and that the Chariot was afterwards transported empty to another Place (13). Their Reason is, because the Temple of Amphiarus was but a little distant from a certain Village, which was called *Harma, and which borrowed its Name from his Chariot. They pretended, that the Temple was built where the Prophet died, and that the Village Harma was built where the Chariot was transported (14). Pausanias calls it a Town, and says expressly, that it was built, where it is pretended that the Earth had swallowed up Amphiarus and his Chariot (15). This was the Pretension of the Tanagrarians; for those of Thebes shewed another Place, situate on the great Road from Potnie to Thebes, and encompassed with Columns, concerning which they related two pleasant Miracles. One was, that the Birds never perched on those Columns; the other, that no Beast touched the Grass, which grew in that Place (16). Stephens of Byzantium, in mentioning the Town of Harma, entirely contradicts the Tradition, and the very Author, whom he cites (17); for he asserts, that this Town was so called, because it was said, that Amphiarus retreated thither in his Chariot, and that the Inhabitants would not deliver him up to those, who pursued him (18). Is not this to pretend, that he saved his Life, and to give the Lye to a great number of Authors, who tell us, that he was swallowed up in the Bowels of the Earth? The great Salmastus imagined, that there are wanting two or three Words in this Article of Stephens; namely, that, after mentioning the Chariot of Amphiarus, he turned the Discourse to that of Adrastus; so that what relates to the Refusal of the Inhabitants, must be referred to the latter (19). This Conjecture is ingenious, and may be confirmed by a Passage of Strabo, where it is said, that the Inhabitants of Harma, in Boeotia, saved the Life of Adrastus, after his Chariot had been broke in that Place (20). The like Conjecture cannot be made in Favour of Eustatius. It must be affirmed, without any Hesitation, that, according to his Account (21), the Chief, whom the Inhabitants of Harma saved, was Amphiarus, and not Adrastus.

(12) See Di-odorus Siculus, lib. 4. cap. 68.

(13) Strabo- lib. 9. pag. 2. 8.

* Agma, in Greek, signifies a Chariot.

(14) Id. ib.

(15) Pausan. lib. 9. pag. 296.

(16) Id. ib. pag. 288.

(17) He quotes the 9th Book of Pausanias.

(18) Steph. Byzantin in voce Agma.

(19) See Berkelius's Notes upon this Passage of Steph. Byzant.

(20) Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 278.

(21) Eustatius, in Il. lib. 2. pag. 266.

Note, That Strabo has committed a Mistake, which Salmastus has not failed to censure. Ἐν τῷ δὲ καὶ τὸ Ἀμφιαράου ἐστὶ τελεμαχὸν ποτὶ μαν- τίον, ὅπου ἐν τῷ ἄλφει τὸν Ἀμφιάρεον, ὡς φησὶ Σοφοκλῆς, Ἐδῆξατο γαυῖσα Θηβαία χθίς, Ἀυλοῖσιν ὅπλοισι, καὶ τέτραρμον δίφῳ (22).

(22) Strabo, ibid. pag. 275.

Near which Place was the Oracle of Amphiarus, formerly had in Veneration, where, according to Sophocles,

The Theban Earth, wide opening, swallowed down
The sinking Chief, his Chariot, and his Arms.

Strabo would prove, that the Oracle of Amphiarus, in the Territory of Oropus, was situated in the same Place, where this Prophet was swallowed up by the Earth; and, as a Proof of this, he cites two Verses of Sophocles, which testify, that the Earth opened itself in the Territory of Thebes, to swallow up Amphiarus and his Chariot. Salmastus censures this with a great deal of Reason (23). Isaac Vossius has taken Strabo's part; but, on this Occasion, he has made it appear, that too eager a Desire of finding Faults in the Writings of an Adversary is a dangerous guide.

(23) Salmast. Exercit. Plin. pag. 167.

"Definat quoque mirari, says he (24), quod multi Oropum urbem in regione five agro Thebano collocant. Refle enim hoc ab illis factum, cum Oropus non sui juris, sed propria fuerit Thebanorum. Hoc manifeste Dicaearchus docet, ἡ δὲ πόλις τῶν Νεμεπίων οἰκία Θηβῶν ἐστὶ. -----

(24) K. Val. fous, in Pomep. Mehem. pag. 154.

"Let him cease to wonder, that many place the City Oropus in the Region or Territory of Thebes. For this is rightly done by them, since Oropus is not an independent Town, but under the Jurisdiction of Thebes. This Dicaearchus plainly teaches; The City of Oropus, says he, belongs to Thebes."

In the first place, what is advanced by Dicaearchus, being taken in general Terms, and so as to suit to all Times, is not true. Oropus was a long time a Matter of Dispute between the Athenians and the Thebans. At last the former obtained a full Possession of it, after Philip of Macedon had taken the City of Thebes (25). In the second place, because Oropus belonged to the Thebans, it does not follow, that it was in the Territory of Thebes, in agro Thebano. An Author, quoted by Plutarch, affirms that the Town of Harma was built, where the Battle was fought between the Argives and Thebans, and where Amphiarus was swallowed up (26). It is a Geographical Error; but much less ridiculous, than what the same Author relates, that, on the Day, which preceded the Battle, an Eagle carried away the Lance of Amphiarus, while the Generals were at Dinner together, and, having carried it aloft, let it fall again: It took root in the Earth, and became a Tree. Τὸ δὲ πᾶν ἐν γῇ δόρπον ἐγένετο (27). Being fixed in the Earth, it became a Laurel. The following Words of the Scholiast upon Statius have been censured. "Civitas in illo loco post est condita, in quo hiatus terræ Amphiarum recepit, quæ Amphiarum vocatur, ut Homerus ait, quod illic curru, quem Græci ἀστρα, vocant, deciderit, in quo etiam Oraculum est, quod Græcè Amphiaræon vocatur. ----- A City was afterwards built in the Place, where the opening Earth swallowed up Amphiarus, which, according to Homer, is called Amphiarum, because there he fell from his Chariot, called by the Greeks ἀστρα; where likewise is an Oracle, called in Greek Amphiaræon." Barbinius (28) pretends, that this Scholiast alleges, improperly, the Testimony of Homer, since nothing like it is to be found in the Book of the Odyssey, where mention is made of Amphiarus (29). He adds, that, perhaps, the Name of Homer crept in by the Error of the Copyists; and that, without this Supposition, we must say, that the Scholiast's Memory failed him; a Misfortune to which he is frequently subject, as well as others. "Vel alium ergo autorem nominavit intruso nunc Homeri ti-

(25) Pausan. lib. 1. pag. 31. See also Pausanias's Notes upon Stephanus Byzantinus, voce Amphiaræon.

(26) Plutarchus fane Possessus, which shows that etiam Town belonged to the Athenians.

(27) Triffrnachus, lib. 3. de conditis urbibus, apud Plin. in Parallelis, pag. 107.

(28) Id. ib.

(29) Barbinius, in Statii Theb. lib. 8. vers. 507. pag. 831. Tom. 2.

(30) Odyss. O. vers. 245.

"tulio

Day the Army drew near Thebes, are mistaken; for he did not die till the Day of the Retreat; and the Siege had continued for some time. This Tragical Adventure has been the Theme of many Writers; whence it has happened, that the Circumstances have not been uniformly related. Several weak Reflexions have been made on this kind of Death [C]. It was believed, that Amphiaras returned from Hell

"tulo Lutatius, vel errorem erravit nec ipsi Infoli-tum, nec aliis parvis momenti auctoribus infrequentem (30)." This Criticism is not just; it should have been applied another Way. Barthius should have said, in the first place, that the Town, built where Amphiaras perished, was called Harma, and not Amphiarma: Secondly, that Homer has only mentioned it, without making any Etymological Remark.

(30) Barthius,
ubi supra.

(31) Homer,
Iliad lib. 2.
ver. 499.

"Οἱ τ' ἀμφ' Ἀρμ' ἐνέμοντο" (31)

Or Harma, where Apollo's Prophet fell. POPE.

In the third place, that the Oracle of that Prophet was not at Harma.

I shall conclude this Remark with a Passage of Barthius, who informs us, that some have thought, that the Pagans alluded here to the Story of Korab and Abiram. "Placet non plane absurdum conjecturam veteris adnotatoris proponere; per hunc casum alludi a paganis scriptoribus ad vindictam divinam in "Sacerdotes Hebraei populi, Datamum nimirum, &
"Abiramum, quos, non rite rebus sacris ministrantes, Deus Omnipotens coram omni illa gente vivos
"ad inferos per hiatum terræ subitum deiecit. Ei
"rei respondere nonnihil etiam posterius dicti voca-bulum; facile enim ex Abiram gentium deliria
"Amphiarum fecisse, quem, Israëlitæ gente jam eo
"loco remota, quo loco ista absorptio acciderit, con-
"secrasse postmodum, Satana insituyente oraculum.
"Et inde cultum impii hominis aliorum longe late-
"que propagatum (32). ----- I shall set before
"you the plausible Conjecture of an old Annotator;
"namely, that the Pagan Writers, in this Event,
"alluded to the Divine Vengeance on the Hebrew
"Priests, Dathan and Abiram, whom, at the Com"mand of God, the Earth opening swallowed up alive;
"in the sight of all the People, as a Punishment for "their prophane Ministration of the Sacred Rites.
"And indeed the Name of the last mentioned in some "manner confirms this Conjecture; it being easy for "the wild Imaginations of the Gentiles, to convert
"Abiram into Amphiaras; and, as the People of "Israel were removed from that Place, where this "swallowing-up happened, they afterwards deify'd
"this Person; the Devil at the same time instituting
"an Oracle to him. Thus the Worship of an otherwise
"impious Man was spread far and near."

[C] Several weak Reflexions have been made on this kind of Death.] Some have thought, that the Order of Nature was overturned by it; That Order, I mean, according to which the Parts of a Compound, when dissolved, ought to return each to its proper Place:
For Example, when a Man dies, his Soul ought to fly up to Heaven, from whence it came; and his Body, taken from the Earth, should return thither. Amphiaras:
did not enjoy this Privilege; for the Earth swallowed him up. Body and Soul: She was not satisfied with refusing what belonged to her; she must needs determine likewise what she had no right to. The South-eyer Theodamas seems to complain of this.

----- liceat, precor, ordine belli

Pugnaces efflare animas, & reddere cœlo.
Ne rape tam subitis spirantia corpora bustis,
Ne propera: veniemus enim quo limite cuncti
Qua licet ire via (33).

(33) Statius,
Thebaid.
lib. 8. ver.
323.

Let us the common Fate of Battel share;
O! let us breath our warlike Souls in Air;
Permit the Hero's Spirit, when he dies,
Ascending to regain its native Skies;
Nor bid our Chiefs thus immaturesly go,
Alive and breathing, to the Shades below.
Forbear to hasten Life's approaching Date,
Nor thus anticipate the Hero's Fate.
Death, suited to their Lives, awaits the Brave,
And soon we all shall reach th' appointed Grave.

VOL. I.

A Commentator says hereupon, "Iniquitas manifesta
"Telluri hic exprobratur, qua animam Amphiarai cum "corpore egerit deorsum (34). ----- The Earth is "here charged with a manifest Act of Injustice, in "carrying downwards the Soul of Amphiaras, toge"ther with his Body." He had just before mentioned an excellent Doctrine of Epicharmus. Man was made by an Union of two Parts; they separate; and each returns from whence it came; the Earth to the Earth, and the Spirit on high: There is nothing amiss in this.
Καλῶς δὲ ἐπὶ χαρμῶν, συνεκρίθη, φησὶ, καὶ διςκρίθη, καὶ ἀπ' ἑαυτοῦ ἕδωκε ἑλθε παλιν, γὰρ μὲν εἰς γᾶν, πνεῦμα δὲ ἀνω. τῶν δὲ κατεστῶτων ἕδωκε ἐν. Præclarè igitur Epicharmus, concretum, in-quit, fuit, & discretum est, redditque unde venerat, terra deorsum, Spiritus sursum. Quid ex his omnibus iniquum est? nihil (35). This Thought is to be met with in the Writings of several Pagan Authors (36), and even in the Verses of Lucretius, as I have observed in another Place (37). This was at least to have a general Notion of the Truth: But they, who imagined that the Soul of Amphiaras did not enjoy the Liberty of re-uniting itself to its Principle, were grossly mistaken. Although it had not been immaterial, but of the Nature of the Stars, it would easily have found the Means of remounting. The Poets, who said, that he was yet alive, when he came into Hell, made the return of his Soul to the Celestial Regions more difficult; for it seems to be more easy to mount upwards, if the tendency that way begins but a little below the Surface of the Earth, than if we sink to the Center of it, before we begin our Flight towards Heaven.
But these Poetical Fancies are not serious enough to be regarded, and I fear my Readers will scarce excuse me, if I insert the following Lines.

(34) Barthius
in Statium, Tom. 3.
pag. 362.

(35) Platarch, de Consolat.
pag. 110.

(36) See Platarch, this; who quotes many of them, in his Comment.
upon Statius,
Tom. 2. pag.
284.

(37) In the Remark [E] of the Article
PRUDEN-TIUS.

----- alte præcepis humus, ore profundo,
Disilist, inque vicem timuerunt sidera, & umbræ.
Illum ingens haurit specus, & transire parantes
Mergit equos: non arma manu, non frena remisit;
Sicut erat, rectos derict in Tartara currus (38).

(38) Statius,
Thebaid.
lib. 7. ver.
810.

----- when lo! the Ground,
Parting, disclod'd its opening Mouth profound.
Stars trembled at the Sight; Ghosts fled dismay'd,
And mutual Fear both Heav'n and Hell betray'd.
As o'er the Plain the rattling Car he drove,
And to o're-leap th' Abyss his Horses strove,
Deep in Earth's Womb engulph'd the Hero fell,
And, arm'd, descended to the Shades of Hell.
Even in his Fall, he govern'd still the Car,
And, sinking, brandish'd still the threat'ning Spear.

He was yet alive, when he first saw the Definies:
they did not cut the Thread of his Life, 'till after their surprize at seeing the Prophet in his Chariot, in the infernal Regions.

----- quin cominus ipsa
Fatorum deprensâ colus; visoque paventes
Augure, tum demum rumpebant flamina Parcæ (39).

(39) Id. ib.
lib. 8. v. 11.

His Thread of Life not yet its Length had run;
The Wheel revolv'd, and still the Parcæ spun.
When Pluto's Courts they saw the Augur tread,
Then first th' astonish'd Sisters cut the Thread.

It will be thought less strange, that I observe the Contradiction, into which this Poet is fallen. He supposes, that Amphiaras, a little before he was swallowed up, restored to Phæbus the Prophetic Ensigns, as things, which ought not to be carried down to Pluto's Kingdom.

Accipe commissum capiti decus, accipe laurus,
Quas Erebo deferre nefas (40).

(40) Id. ib.
lib. 7. ver.
784.

Hell [D], and the Scene of his Resurrection has been described: he was placed among the Gods: Temples were consecrated to him: His Oracle was very famous [E]. The Games, which were instituted in Honour of him (b), made a great Noise.

'Tis

(b) See Bemedius apon Pindar.
Od. 7. O-
lymp. pag.
143.

and now,
Receive these Laurels, Phœbus, from my Brow.
To Death, thus crown'd, your Prophet must not go,
Nor bear these Honours to the Shades below.

In another place, he supposes, that Phœbus confessed, that his Prophet descended into Hell, with all the Ensigns of his Office:

utinam indulgere precanti
Fata darent! en ipse mei (pudet) irritus arma
Cultoris, frondeſque ſacras, ad inania vidi
Tartara, & in memet verſos deſcendere vultus (41).

(41) Id. ib.
lib. 9. ver.
652.

O! that Apollo might have lent an Ear,
Propitious, to his dying Prophet's Prayer!
But Fate withſtood: Unable to aſſiſt,
I ſaw deſcend to Hell my facr'd Prielt.
MY Laurels grac'd him, in that fatal Hour,
And all the ſacred Enſigns of my Power.
In vain with ſupplicating Looks he pray'd;
In vain Apollo's Prielt implor'd Apollo's Aid.

Barthius, who has taken notice of this Miſtake, obſerves, that there are ſeveral of the ſame Nature in the Thebaid of this Poet. "Hoc genus plurima con-nivēt magnanimitas hic Vates: & duodecim tamen annorum linam referre vult ſuam Thebaidem (42).
— This lofty Poet has inadvertently let ſlip ſe-veral Errors of this kind: and yet he pretends, that his Thebaid carries the Poſſiſh of twelve Years."

(42) Barth.
in Stat.
Tom. 3.
pag. 773.

[D] It was believed that Amphiaraus returned from Hell.] Some Authors affect to ſay, that he diſappeared: Ἀμφιάρεω δὲ χάρινος τῆς γῆς ἐμπιστῶν οἷς τὸ χάσμα μέγα τὴν ἀρμαλὴν ἀφάνης ἐγένετο (43). Amphiaraus vero debilitatus terra cadens in biatum cum curru inconspicui evaſit. Apollodorus adds this Reaſon, becauſe Jupiter had immortalized him.
Ὁ δὲ σὺν τῷ ἀρμαλὶ --- ἐκρύφθη, καὶ Ζεὺς ἀθάναλον αὐτὸν ἐποίησεν. Is vero cum curru abſorptus eſt, & poſtea nunquam viſus: illum enim Jupiter immortalitate donavit (44). This was ſufficient to induce the (43) Diodor.

Sicil. lib. 4.

(44) Apollo-
dor. lib. 3.
pag. 193.

Hebraizers to ſay, that the Pagans alluded in him to the Hiſtory of Enoch. Some other Authors are poſitive in the matter: They ſuppoſe that Amphiaraus died, and that he actually deſcended into Pluto's Kingdom; but that, afterwards, he re-aſcended to the upper Regions; nay they marked the very place, where he aſcended; which was a Fountain near the Temple, which the Inhabitants of Oropus (45) built in Honour of him. The Devotion paid to this Fountain was remarkable: No Sacrifices were offered there; the Water of it was not uſed, either in Purifications, or in waſhing of Hands; only thoſe, who were healed of any Diſeaſe, by means of the Oracle, caſt a piece of Gold or Silver into it. "Εἰς δὲ ὁρματίους ἀνὴρ πλυσίον τὴν νύξ, ἢν Ἀμφιάρεω καλῶσιν, ἕτε δὲ οἷον ἔδεν ἐς αὐτὴν, ἐδ' ἐπικαθάρτοις ἢ χερσὶν χερσὶν νομίζοντες. Νόον δὲ ἀκισθίους ἀνδρὶ μαλ' ἰσχυρῶς γινόμενος, καθίστηκεν ἀργυροῦ ἀπείρου καὶ χρυσίου ἐπίσημον ἐστὶν ἀνὴρ. ταῦν γὰρ ἀνελθόντων τὸν Ἀμφιάρεον λίσσονται ἢ δὲ δόν (46). Eſt etiam apud Oropios fons templo proximus, quem Amphiarai nuncupant: ad quem neque divinum rem faciunt, neque aut ad luſtrandum, aut ad manus lavandas, aqua ea uti fas patant: Solum, qui morbo oraculi monitu levati fuerint, ſignatam aurum argentumque more majorem in fontem abijciunt. Hinc enim jam deum Amphiaraum aſcendiſſe tradunt. Note, that the Reſurrection of Amphiaraus was not univerſally believed, and that there were ſome, who ventured to deny it upon the Stage: Witneſs this Verſe, quoted by Cicero.

(45) A Town ſituated between Attica and Boeotia.

(46) Pauſan.
lib. 1. p. 53.

Audiſne hæc, Amphiarae ſub terram abdite (47)?

From Earth's dark Womb, O Prophet, doſt thou bear?

(47) Cicero
Tuſcul.
Quæſt. 1. 2.
ſub fin.

[E] Temples were consecrated to him: His Oracle was very famous.] The Inhabitants of Oropus were the

fiſt, who deified Amphiaraus. They built a Temple to him, twelve Stadia from their Town, in the place where the Earth opened and ſwallowed up him, and his Chariot (48). We have already ſeen (49), that there were divers Opinions about the true Situation of the Place, where he was ſwallowed up. However it be, all Greece joined with the Oropians (50), in the Apotheoſis of this Prophet. They agreed, that the Oracle of this new God was to be conſulted in the Temple, which they had built to him. Pauſanias informs us, that a Collection of Oracles in Hexameter Verſe contributed greatly to give the People an high Opinion of Amphiaraus; becauſe the Author of this Collection inſerted the Anſwer, which this Diviner had given, concerning the War of Thebes. This was much to his Reputation; for People were prejudiced with an Opinion, that, in former times, only Perſons inſpired by Apollo gave Anſwers viva voce; I mean, after the manner of an Oracle. Other Soothſayers were employed only in explaining the Prefaſes of Birds, and Victims, or Dreams. But, whatever Advantage this gave our Amphiaraus over his Fellows, yet People were not perſuaded, that his true Function was the ſame with that of the Divinity of Delphi; for they conſulted him only to receive Anſwers from him by Dreams; which is a Proof, that, during his Life, he chiefly applied himſelf to the Interpretation of Dreams. This ſeems to me to be the Subſtance of Pauſanias's Narrative (51). I do not find that Romulus Amſeus has rightly tranſlated it; and I chuſe to depend upon the Verſion of Vigenere, though not very exact. It is this. "Jophon Cnoſſien, l'un des interpretes des Oracles, publica ceux d'Amphiaraus, en vers hexametres, &c. i. e. Jophon of Cnoſſus, one of the Interpreters of Oracles, publiſhed thoſe of Amphiaraus in Hexameter Verſe; which had ſuch an Influence upon the People, that they flock'd to them on a ſudden from all Parts. For none of the Soothſayers, except thoſe, who formerly were inſpired by the Enthuſiaſm of Apollo, pronounced any Oracles, but were all Interpreters of Dreams, or foretold things to come by the Flight of Birds, or by the Entrails of ſacrificed Beaſts. Whence it appears, that Amphiaraus addiſted himſelf chiefly to the Interpretation of Dreams; which we infer from hence, that, after his Deification, he inſtituted this manner of Divination. And, in the firſt place, thoſe, who go to his Oracle, muſt be well and duly purged: Which Purgation or Cleaning conſiſts in orderly ſacrificing to this God, and performing the requiſite Ceremonies as well towards him, as towards all the reſt, whoſe Names are written there. After this, having offered a Sheep, they ſtretch the Skin on the Ground, and ſleep upon it, expecting the Anſwer to their Requeſt, which they are to receive in a Dream (52). Philoſtratus informs us of ſome other Ceremonies, which were obſerved in that Place. "The Gods, ſays he (53), are wont to grant Oracles to thoſe, who are ſober; for there was once a Prophet in Greece, whoſe Name was Amphiaraus. I believe, interrupted the King, who mean him, who was the Son of Iſetes, who, in his return from Thebes, was ſwallowed up by the Earth. Him, and none eſe, answered Apollonius; who, to this Day, pronounces Oracles in the Arabian Territory, and ſends to thoſe, who require it of him, an Anſwer to their Demands by Dreams. But the Prieſts of the Place enjoin thoſe, who come thither to conſult him, to abſtain a whole Day from all manner of Fleſh, and three Days from Wine, to the end that they may the better conceive and retain in their pure Thoughts the Reaſons of the Things, which ſhall be declared to them in Dreams. If Wine were a proper means to cauſe Sleep, the ſage Amphiaraus would, without doubt, have preſcribed it to the Dreamers; and would have enjoined them to eat and drink to exceſs, before they deſcended into the moſt private Reſſeſſes of the Temple, where ſuch Oracles were given." Obſerve, that Philoſtratus aſſures us, that, in the Time of Apollonius, the Oracle of Amphiaraus was ſtill in Repute; and yet Plutarch confeſſes, that all the Oracles of Boeotia (54), among (48) Pauſan.

ubi ſupra.

(49) In Remark [B].

(50) Pauſan.
ibid.

(51) Id. ib.

(52) Vigenere upon the Amphiaraus of Philoſtratus,
p. 400.
Tom. 1.

(53) Philoſtratus Vita
Apollon. lib.
2. cap. 11.
pag. 476.
agreeable to the Tranſlation of Vigenere.

(54) Plutarch, de O-ratorum defectu,
pag. 411.

'Tis thought that he chiefly excelled in Divination-by Dreams; but this was not all; for he was the Inventor likewise of Divination by Fire [F]. He conceived such an inveterate Hatred against his Wife, that he commanded the Children, whom he had by her, to kill her (i), as soon as their Age would permit. Great Praises have been bestowed upon him; and among others This, That he endeavoured to be an honest Man,

(i) This was executed by his Son Alcmæon. See his Article.

(57) He executed of Lebædia.

(56) See Pausanias, lib. 1. p. 33. and Strabo, lib. 9. pag. 255.

(57) Clemens Alexandrinus, mentions That of Amphiaræus by Name (57); thus here is a second Evidence against the Hero of Philostratus. Let us remark by the Way, that he takes notice of it in another Place, which his Translator has perverted. It is this: "Ἡ τὸν Ἀμφιάρεον τὸν σὺν τοῖς ἐπὶ Θήβας ἐξελθούσας μὲν γενεὰ τῆς Ἰλίου ἀλώσεως προσέβλεπον φερόμενον." The Translator says Amphiaræum, qui, cum septem qui adversus Thebas bellum gesserunt, fertur Troja capta una generatione fuisse posterior. He should have said prior (58). The Sense is; Or Amphiaræus, who, with the seven, who warred against Thebes, is said to have lived one Generation before the taking of Troy.

(58) Id. Strom. lib. 1. p. 134. C. Barthius in Stat. Tom. 2. pag. 138. adopts the Fault of the Translator, and imputes it to Clemens Alexandrinus.

(59) Herodotus, lib. 1. cap. 45. & seq.

(60) Id. ib. cap. 52.

(61) Id. lib. 8. cap. 134.

(62) Barthius, ubi supra, pag. 137.

(63) Plutarch de Oric. defectu, pag. 412.

(64) Aristides Orat. in Aſclepiadas, apud Barthium, in Statium, pag. 133.

(65) Valer. Maximus, l. 3. sub fin.

(66) Cicero de Divin. l. 1. cap. 4.

among which he reckons this; were ceased (55). Let us lay no Stress upon Apollonius's placing this Oracle in Attica, and not; as Plutarch does, in Bœotia. They both mean the same Place; for the Country of Oropus being contested between the Athenians and the Thebans, the former pretending it belonged to Attica (56), and the latter, that it was part of Bœotia; hence it was, that some Authors tell us, that the Temple of Amphiaræus was in Bœotia, and others, that it was in Attica. Clemens Alexandrinus, object- ing to the Pagans the Cessation of their Oracles, mentions That of Amphiaræus by Name (57); thus here is a second Evidence against the Hero of Philostratus. Let us remark by the Way, that he takes notice of it in another Place, which his Translator has perverted. It is this: "Ἡ τὸν Ἀμφιάρεον τὸν σὺν τοῖς ἐπὶ Θήβας ἐξελθούσας μὲν γενεὰ τῆς Ἰλίου ἀλώσεως προσέβλεπον φερόμενον." The Translator says Amphiaræum, qui, cum septem qui adversus Thebas bellum gesserunt, fertur Troja capta una generatione fuisse posterior. He should have said prior (58). The Sense is; Or Amphiaræus, who, with the seven, who warred against Thebes, is said to have lived one Generation before the taking of Troy.

Herodotus can inform us, how much this Oracle was esteemed; for he says, that of all those, which Cræsus, King of Lydia, sent to consult, this alone, and That of Delphi, returned proper Answers, and received noble Gifts from that Monarch (59). I am surprized at what he observes, that the Presents, sent by Cræsus to the Oracle of Amphiaræus, were deposited in the Temple of Apollo Ismenius, in the City of Thebes (60). Why were they not consecrated in Amphiaræus's own Temple? Or why, in default of this, were they not rather carried to any other City, than Thebes, whose Inhabitants had incurred a Mark of Ignominy, with respect to this Oracle; for they were forbidden to sleep in the Temple of Amphiaræus; which was the only way to be informed of future Events in that Place? The Reason of this Prohibition was, that, Amphiaræus having offered the Thebans to be their Soothsayer, or their Fellow-Soldier, they made choice of the latter. You will find these Particulars in Herodotus (61), with so clear a Distinction between the Temple of Apollo Ismenius, and that of Amphiaræus, that I wonder how Barthius (62) could say, there was no Difference between them. Herodotus relates this, speaking of an European, who was sent by Mardonius, to consult the Oracles of Greece. He could not tell by what Dream Amphiaræus discovered to this General of the King of Persia the ill Fortune which attended him. Plutarch was better informed of it; for he relates the Dream (63). Some Authors say, that Amphiaræus appeared to those who consulted him.

Ἀμφιάρεος μὲν γὰρ καὶ Τερψιφῶ ἐν Βοιωτίᾳ καὶ Ἀμφιλόχῳ ἐν Ἀλβιδίᾳ χρησμοδῶσι τε καὶ φαίνονται. ἔτοι δὲ πανταχὲ τῆς γῆς διατέττυεν ὥστε ἀέρες ἀερίπολοι (64). I believe they mean, that he appeared to them in a Dream. However it be, his Oracle was no less esteemed, than that of Delphi, or that of Dodona, or that of Jupiter Hammon. Valerius Maximus tells us this. "Eadem gens summo consensu ad Amphiaræum decorandum incubuit, locum, in quo humatus est, in formam conditæque templi redigendo, atque inde oracula capi instituendo. Cujus cineres idem honoris possident, quod Pythicæ Cortine, quod aheni Dodonæ, quod Hammonis fonti datur (65). -----

"The same People were unanimous in honouring Amphiaræus, by building a Temple over the Place, where he was buried, and ordering that he should be enquired of, as an Oracle. The same Honour was paid to his Abode, as to the Pythian Tripod, the Cauldron of Dodona, and the Fountain of Jupiter Hammon." Cicero does not say so much; yet he speaks with Commendation of it. "Amphiaræum sic honoravit fama Græciæ, deus ut haberetur, atque ut ab ejus solo, in quo est humatus, oracula peterentur (66). ----- Amphiaræus was so honoured by Greece, that he was deified, and the Place, where he was buried, became oracular."

Note, That there was at Corinth a Temple of Amphiaræus (67); but give no credit to Pomponius Mela (68), nor to Solinus (69), who say there was one at Rhannus; for they are mistaken: It was not there, but near Oropus, as I have already observed, and as may be proved from Diæarchus, Strabo, and Panjanias, &c. See Isaac Vossius, pag. 151 of his Commentary on Pomponius Mela.

[F] He chiefly excelled in Divination by Dreams ----- for he was the Inventor likewise of Divination by Fire.] As to this Invention, I can only cite these Words of Pliny: "Aruspicium Delphus invenit ignificia Amphiaræus, auspiciæ avium Tiresias Thebanus, interpretationem ostentorum & fontium Amphictyon (70). ----- Delphus was the Inventor of Divination by the Entrails of Beasts, Amphiaræus of that by Fire, Tiresias the Theban of that of Birds, and Amphictyon of the Interpretation of Prodigies and Dreams." Statius makes no mention of this Particular; though he is pleased frequently to take notice of the Ability of Amphiaræus, in prophesying by several Methods. His Words are;

Quis mihi fidereos lapsus, mentemque sinistri
Fulguris, aut cæcis saliat quod numen in extis, Quando iter, unde moræ, quæ sevis utilis armis,
Quæ pacem magis hora velit, quis jam omne futurum Proferet? aut cum quo volucres mea fata loquentur (71)?

Who now shall read the Omens of the Skies,
Or tell the Thunder's meaning, as it flies?
Who in the panting Entrails shall explore
What Heaven decrees, and read each lucky Hour;
For journeying which or best or worst is found;
When War or Peace shall with Success be crown'd?
Who, after him, Futurity shall scan,
And from the Birds enquire the Fate of Man?

Thus he expresses the Grief of the whole Army for the Death of this Prophet. He says, in another place:

----- quantum subito diversus ab illo,
Qui tripodis lauribus sequi, qui doctus in omni
Nube salutato volucrum cognoscere Phæbo (72).
How on a sudden chang'd from him, who late Learn'd from the Tripod the Decrees of Fate;
Skillful (due Honours first to Phæbus paid)
The winged Oracles of Air to read!

I omit several other Passages of the same Nature; chusing rather to observe, that this Poet does not insist on the chief Character of this Prophet, which was to foretell by Dreams, as I have already observed (73). He was the first who abstained from Beans, as being prejudicial to this Science (74). Ἰπέρτω δὲ ἀπὸ χειρὸς κρυμμένον Ἀμφιάρεος δια τὴν δὲ δόξαν μαντικῆν. Amphiaræus primus abstinuit a fabis ob divinationem per somnia (75). It will not be improper to take notice, in this place, how he became a Prophet. "He went into a certain House, as ignorant of Futurity as any one else; but the next Day he came out of it perfectly qualified to be a Prophet. The House was shut up from that time, and was called Fatidica, The House of Prediction." It had, with respect to Divination, the same Virtue, which the Poets ascribed to Parnassus, with respect to Poetry.

Nec in bicipiti somniasse Parnaso
Mèmini, ut sic derepente Poeta prodirem (76).
Nor on Parnassus (well I know it)
Slept I myself into a Poet.

It made a Man a Prophet in one Night; and it might then be said, that Good comes by sleeping. We learn this from a Passage of Pausanias; and that this Metamorphosis

(67) Pausan. lib. 2. p. 65.

(68) Pomponius Mela, lib. 2. cap. 3.

(69) Solin. cap. 7.

(70) Philopon. lib. 7. c. 56.

(71) Statius, Thebaid. l. 8. ver. 176.

(72) Id. ib. lib. 7. ver. 706.

(73) In Remark [E].

(74) See Remark [I] of the Article PARNASSUS.

(75) Geoponic. lib. 2. apud Barthium, ubi supra, Tom. 2. pag. 137.

(76) Persius, in Prologo.

Man, and not to appear so [G]. A noble Subject for Reflexions [H]. If I am not mistaken,

(77) ΑΤουμ
of Peloponneus.
Metamorphosis of Amphiarus came to pass at Phthia (77). "Ὅτιον δὲ τῆς ἀγορᾶς, ἔστιν οὐκ ὀνομαζόμενος ὑπὸ Φλιασίων μαρτυρικός. ἐς τῶτον Ἀμφιαρεὺς ἐλθὼν, καὶ τὴν νύκτα ἐγκατακοιμῶν, μαντεύσθαι τῷ πρῶτον, ὡς οἱ Φλιασίοι φασιν, ἡξάλο. τῶς δὲ ἦν Ἀμφιαρεὺς τῷ ἐκείνων λόγῳ, ἰδίῳ τῆς καὶ ἡ μαντικῆς, καὶ τὸ οἰκνῆμα ἀπὸ τῆς συγκύλλεισας τὸν πᾶντα ἡδὴ χρόνον. In phica fori parte domus est, quam Pbliasti Fatidicam nuncupant: in eam enim ingressus Amphiarus (quemadmodum ipsi narrant Pbliasti) cum noctem unam obdormisset, statim divinare cepit, cum ante indoctus plane fuisset. Id cum ita evenisset, in reliquum omne tempus oculos ille aedes fuerant.

[G] Great Praises have been bestowed upon him
----- that he endeavoured to be a Virtuous Man, and not to appear so.] Adrastus, in his Complaint for the Death of Amphiarus, declares, that he had lost the Eye of his Army, both a Prophet, and a good Soldier.

Ποθὼν φερτιάς
Ὀφθαλμὸν ἐμὰς, ἀμρότερον,
Μαντίν τ' ἀγαθὸν
Καὶ δὲ μὲν μαρτυράσθαι (78).

(78) Pindar.
Od. 6. O-
lymp. p. 99.

Desidero exercitus oculum mei
Utrumque vatem bonum et ad pugnandum basta.

Indeed he was a Diviner, not active in Mind alone; His Arm of Flesh was formidable, and he excelled in bodily Exercises. It is said that he made a terrible Slaughter of the Enemy the Day in which he died.

Ardet inexpleto sævi mavoris amore,
Et fruitur dextra, atque anima flagrante superbit.
Hic hominum casus lenire & demere fatio
Jura frequens, quantum subito diversus ab illo, (80).
Innumera ferro plebem, ceu letifer annus,
Aut jubar adverſi grave fideris, immolat umbris
Ipse suis (81).

(80) What is wanting,
be e, but is en-cited in the foregoing Remark.

(81) Statius,
Thebaid.
lib. 7. ver.
703.

Insatiate Love of Battle fires his Breast,
And his Soul's cruel Transport stands confest.
He triumphs in his own unconquer'd Might,
Exults in Slaughter, and enjoys the Fight.
He, who was wont to mitigate, of late,
The Woes of Mortals, and controul their Fate,
How on a sudden chang'd, &c.
By his dire Sword, with Blood of thousands red,
(So baleful Stars their murderous Influence shed),
To his own Ghost, e'er yet it sunk to Hell,
Whole Hecatombs of human Victims fell.

In a Word, he was an Hero, as well as a Prophet; a Quality proper for one, who to Royalty joined the Knowledge of Futurity. Statius calls him the Royal Prophet.

Jamque erit ille dies, quo te quoque conscia fati
Templa colant, reddatque tuos responsa sacerdos, Talia FATIDICO pergant solennia REGI (82).

(82) Id. lib.
l. 8. v. 206.

Altars and Temples soon shall rise to Thee,
And Priests, thy own, reveal the Fates' Decree:
Such Rites be thine, as at his Votaries Hands
Even now the sage PROPHETIC KING demands.

As for what concerns his Dexterity in the Exercises, in which the Greeks strove so much to obtain the Victory, I need only observe, that our Amphiarus obtained the Prize of the Race, and That of the Discus, in the Nemean Games, which the Generals celebrated in their March against the City of Thebes (83). Take notice of these Words of Stesichorus:

Ὁρώσκων μὲν γὰρ Ἀμφιαρεῶ
Ἀκροῖ δὲ νίκασιν Μελισσῶν (84).

Amphiarus bore away the Prize in Vaulting, Melager in throwing the Lance.

(83) Apollo-
dor. lib. 3.
pag. 189.

(84) Athen.
lib. 4. c. 21.
pag. 172.

As to the rare Qualities of his Soul, see the eighth Book of the Thebaid, and the Tragedy of Æschylus, entitled ἑπτὰ ἐπὶ Θέβας, septem contra Thebas, out of which I shall produce a Passage in the Remark [I], and three fine Verses in the following Remark. See likewise the Commendations bestowed on his Modesty, in a Fragment of the Emperor Julian (85).

[H] A noble Subject for Reflexions [The Matter of Fact, according to Plutarch, is this. " Arifides " was never puffed up with any Honour which was " paid him, nor dejected and troubled at any Re- " pulse or Refusal; being always of Opinion that a " good Citizen ought to offer himself Body and Soul " for the Service of his Country without hoping or " expecting the mercenary Hire either of Riches or " Glory. For which Reason it was, that, at the re- " cital of these Verses of Æschylus, on the Stage, in " Commendation of the old Agur Amphiarus,

(85) Pape
305; Of Ju- lian's Works,
Edit. Lips.
1696.

Οὐ γὰρ δοκῶν δεῖσας, ἀλλ' εἶναι θέλει,
Βαδύην δόξα διὰ φρονὸς καρπόμενος,
Ἐξ ἧς τὰ κατὰ βλαστάει βουλευματα *.

* Æschyl.
Ævva in Θέβας, v.
554.

He aims at being just, not seeming so;
The Fruit of Virtue grows up in his Mind,
Whence sage Advice and prudent Counsels spring;

" The Eyes of all the Spectators were immediately " turned on Arifides, as if the Elogium of this Vir- " tue was particularly applicable to him. For he was " a most strenuous Champion for Justice, nor was " ever induced to violate it, either by Favour and " Friendship, or by Hate and Repentment (86)." This is the finest Encomium in the World. Amphiarus was worthy of Admiration, if he deserved it: Arifides, who seemed to deserve it, is an incomparable Man.

(86) Plu-
tarch. in Vita Arif.
pag. 150.
Arifides
pag. 156. &
de Arifides.
Post. p. 54.

Let us make a few Reflexions on a Subject, which will afford an infinite Number, and observe, I. That if the Pagans did not practise true Virtue, at least they perfectly understood it; for they praised those, who, in doing a good Action, did not propose to themselves either a pecuniary Interest, or public Applause; and they despised those, whose End, in the Exercise of Virtue, was Reputation, Glory, or the Applause of their Neighbour. Be as disinterested as you please with respect to Riches and Employments; if you are not so, with respect to Praise, you still act meanly; you are not recovered from the Disease of Self-love; you are only disengaged from the grossest Snare; you only wear finer Chains: In a word, you will find your Picture drawn in the Treatise of Mr Esprit, concerning the Deceitfulness of human Virtues. Apply to all Virtues the excellent Rule, which Seneca has prescribed concerning Liberality, and then they will be True; but, without That They will not be so. The Philosopher answers this Objection, May not he, to whom I have done good, know of whom he has received it? " Quid ergo? " ille nesciet à quo accepit? " Primum nesciat, si hoc ipsum beneficii pars " est: deinde multa alia faciam, multa tribuam, per " quæ intelligat & illius auctorem. Denique ille " nesciat accepisse se: ego sciam me dedisse. Parum " est inquis; parum, si scenerare cogitas; sed si dare " quo genere accipietis maxime profuturum erit, da- " bis, contentus eris te teste. Alioquin non benefa- " cere delectat, sed videri beneficisse. Volo, inquis, " sciat: debitorem queris. Volo utique sciat: quid, si " illi utilis est nescire? si honestius? si gratius? non in " aliam partem abibis? Volo sciat: ita tu hominem " non servabis in tenebris? Non nego, quoties pa- " titur res, percipiendum gaudium ex accipientis " voluntate: sed adjuvari illum & oportet, & pudet; " si quod præstamus, offendit, nisi absconditur: be- " nificium in acta non mitto. Quidni? ego illi " non sum indicaturus me dedisse; cum inter prima " præcepta ac maxime necessaria sit, ne unquam ex- " problem, imo ne admodum quidem? Hæc enim " beneficii inter duos lex est, alter statim oblivisci " debet dati, alter accepti numquam (87). — What? " Shall he not know to whom he is obliged? I answer, " first, no; if this very Ignorance be Part of the Be- " nefit. I will continue to be his Benefactor, I will " oblige him farther, till by repeated Services he " discovers the Author of them. Nay, let him not " even know, that he has received a Favour, so long " as

(87) Seneca de Benefi-
lib. 2. c. 16.

mistaken, Apollodorus is the only Author, who has inserted him in the Catalogue of the Argonauts (k); for neither Apollonius, nor Hyginus, nor Valerius Flaccus; have done so. He is ranked among the wife Men, who have had the misfortune to be engaged in Undertakings directed by hot-head Men [L]. This is without doubt a very deplorable

(k) Apollod.
lib. 1. pag.
53.

"as I am conscious of having conferred one on him. This is too little, you say. Too little indeed, if you propose to lend out your Favours to Usury; but, if you will bestow them in the manner most advantageous to the Receiver, you will freely give them; you will be satisfied with your own Conscience. Otherwise you are not pleased with being serviceable, but with appearing to be so. Still you insist upon his knowing it. But, What if it is more to his Advantage not to know it, if it is more honourable, if it is more acceptable? Will you not alter your Opinion? Still you persist. Will you not even upon these Accounts keep him in the Dark? I do not deny you the Pleasure, which arises from the Disposition of the Receiver, whenever it is proper: but, if your Assistance be required, where it is inconsistent with Decency to let it be known; if the Service you do offends, unless it be concealed; the Benefit must not be made public. Why not? Shall I not let him know, that I am his Benefactor, because it is one of the principal and most necessary Precepts, that I must never reproach another with, nor even hint at, the Favours I have once conferred upon him? For This is a Law between the Giver and Receiver, that the former ought immediately to forget, that he has bestowed, the latter never, that he has received, a Benefit."

My second Reflexion is, That it seldom happens, that the Desire of Applause is the only End of those, who are not satisfied with the Testimony of their own Consciences. Observe the Persons, who aspire to these two Things: the one to be virtuous, and the other to appear so; and you will find, that the Ambition of the former is not contented with the Reality, nor That of the latter with the Appearance, of Virtue. The meer Steam of Incense does not satisfy their Desires; they wish for something more solid to attend it. Reputation alone seems to them a Reward too spiritual; they endeavour to incorporate it with the Conveniences of Life: They soon make a Merit of the Praise and Approbations of the World to those, who have the Distribution of Honours and Employments, and then make use of this Credit, to enrich themselves, or to gratify all their Passions. The surest way therefore to preserve the Purity of the Soul, is to follow the Example of Amphiarus and Aristides. Endeavour to be a virtuous Man; let That be your chief End; seek not to appear so, for such an Endeavour is attended with more dangerous Consequences, than you are aware of.

III. Socrates is reported to have said, "That the shortest way of attaining to Virtue, was to endeavour to be such as one would desire to be thought." Semper id egisti, ut qualis haberi velles talis esses: quam viam ad gloriam proximam Es quasi pendiarium Socrates esse dixit (88)." Socrates's own Words are: Συντομωτάτη τε καὶ ασφαλέστατη καὶ καλλίστη ὁδὸς, ἣ κελεύεται, ὅτι ἂν βέλῃ δοκῆν ἀγαθὸς εἶναι, τὴν τοιαύτην γενέσθαι ἀγαθὸν πεπρωμένον (89). "Velim, O Critobule, scias hanc esse brevissimam, securissimam, optimamque ad hæc omnia viam, in quocunque volueris bonus apparere, in eodem effici quoque bonus conari." So likewise Horace

Tu rectè vivis, si curas esse quod audis *.

This Advice is very judicious; for the Desire of appearing with Lustre, and of obtaining public Applause, is so strong and common, even among those, who have no great Inclination to be internally virtuous, that we may expect great Advancements in Virtue from him, who will endeavour to produce a perfect Conformity between the real State of his Soul, and the Opinion he would have others entertain of Him. But it must be confessed, that there is less diffidence in This way, than in That of Amphiarus. "Seem to be an honest Man, and be so: enjoy a fair Reputation, but deserve it; do not usurp the Esteem of your Neighbour." This is the Counsel of Socrates: He would not deprive any one of the Incense of Praise. Amphiarus would have said, "Be an honest Man, and do not trouble yourself whether it be known to others, or whether you are praised for it."

IV. You will say, perhaps, that these two things generally go together, and that, if a good Reputation may be acquired by false Virtues, that is to say, by the Art of concealing a bad Heart under the Appearance of Honesty, it may be more certainly obtained by real Virtues. You will conclude from hence, that Amphiarus, and others like him, valued themselves upon despising a thing, which they very well knew they could not want. I answer, that oftentimes it is easier to be an honest Man, than to be accounted so; and that there is no necessary Consequence from one of these things to the other, wherever you begin. To become a virtuous Man, you have nothing to do but to conquer your own Passions; but to appear so, you must conquer those of others, and triumph over them. You have cunning and violent Enemies, who spread many ill Reports of you: Those who hear them give Credit to them, and become new Spreaders of Calumny: If they are incredulous, they form Difficulties, by which they teach your Enemies how to propose their Calumnies after a more plausible manner. Sometimes you are ignorant of these Machinations; and, if you knew them, either wholly, or in part, can you go from place to place to justify yourself? If you are an honest Man, as I suppose you to be, are you able to discover the Contrivances of your Enemies, and the oblique ways of working upon the Minds of the Vulgar? Had you not rather leave the Vulgar in an Error, than spend all your Leisure in disputing the ground with Calumniators? Will your Vigilance be sufficient to remove the Impressions, which their Malignity has made upon credulous Men, who are infinitely more susceptible of Calumny, than of the best Reasons you can alledge in your Vindication?

You may see in the Remark [L] of the Article CÆSAR, that the same Commendation, which Æschylus bestows upon our Amphiarus, was bestowed by Sallust upon CATO of Utica.

[I] He is ranked among the wife Men, who have had the Misfortune to be engaged in Undertakings directed by hot-headed Men.] It is of little Consequence, whether I myself, or another, furnish a Commentary on this Text. We are not here to consider Style, but Facts, and Sentiments. I shall therefore boldly produce the Old French of the Commentator on Philoptratus (90). "Icy pouvons nous remarquer, qu'il appert par ces échantillons de nostre pauvrete, et nostre misere, &c. i. e. Here we have an Instance of our Wretchedness and Misery; since prudent and good Men are obliged to suffer for the Folly of those, who are inconsiderate and wicked. Is it not strange, that Tideus, a hot-headed, peevish, quarrelsome, and brainless Fool, a disturber of the public Quiet, though a Stranger, and notwithstanding all the Remonstrances, Predictions, and Admonitions of the wisest Man of Greece, who was also accounted a Prophet, should have a Voice in the Council, and be so far credited, as to cause a War to be undertaken, which was no way necessary, and would turn to the Ruin and Destruction of them all? Nay, those who oppose the same with the most probable and best Reasons, must be Partakers of, and even have a great share in, the Danger of these giddy-headed Men. So true it is, that bad and pernicious Counsels have always prevailed over good and wholesome ones! Wherefore, not without Reason, or at Random, the Poet Æschylus, in the Tragedy, entitled Septem contra Thebas, laments, in the Person of Eteocles, the good and wise Amphiarus, in this manner:

Φηὶ τὸ ἑυαλλάσσοτος ἔργους βεγτοῖς
Δίκαιον ἄνδρα τοῖσι δυσσεβέσιν.
Ἐν παντὶ παρὰ γὰρ δ' ἑσθ' ὁμιλίας κακῆς
Κακίῃ, ἔδεν καρπὸς ἡ κομισίος.

"What an unhappy thing it is, says he, that a good Man should be associated with impious and wicked People! Certainly there is nothing worse than bad Company; from whence no Good can come

(88) Petrus Alcyonius, in Medice legatio priore, circa finem.

(89) Xenophon. Memorab. 1. 2. pag. 474. See also Plato, Epist. 4. pag. 1274. and Cicero, de Officiis, lib. 2. c. 12.

• Lib. 1. Epist. 16. See Postel on this Passage, in the Epistle Dedicatory to his Oriental History.

(90) Vigenere upon the Amphiarus of Philoptratus, p. 473, 404. of the first Vol. Edit in 4^{to}.

(U) In Remark [F] of the Article MÆLAM-PUS.

deplorable Case, and is but too common. The manner, in which he comforted a Woman, who bewailed the Death of her Son, deserves a Remark [K]. I would willingly see the Particulars of the Action, which the Farmers of the Taxes * brought against his Priests [L]. I have shewn, in another place (I), the Invalidity of an Argument,

* In French Les Particuliers.

(91) The Thebans were usually to blame in this War, and yet they came off victorious in the Battle.

(92) See Remark [C] of the Article BRUTUS (MARCUS).

(93) Cicero, Epist. 6. lib. 6. ad Famili- har. p. 319.

(94) See the Commentary on the Life of Apollonius, translated into French by Vigenere, Book 2. chap. 11. p. 488.

(95) Plutarch. de Consolatione ad Apollonium, p. 210, 111. Mr Bayle cites the French Version of Amyot; which therefore was fit to be.

" come - - - - This Soothsayer (I mean the Son of Oedipus) a prudent, just, sincere, and devout Man, a Foreteller of things to come, by keeping Company with Men, wicked and presumptuous, and deprived of all Sense and Reason, who endeavoured to come against us with a great Army, (Jupiter permitting it to be so) shall be drawn in with them to his final Perdition and Ruin." This is what Vigenere says. We must not imagine that Amphiarus was in hopes, that the Errors of the Managers would be repaired by the Justice of the Cause (91). He was too understanding a Man to believe This: he knew that a just War stands as much in need of Human Assistance, as an unjust one (92), and that, without being at least very near as powerful as the Defenders of Injustice, we shall generally come off by the work. He is therefore justly alleged as an Example of the Sacrifice, which upon some Occasions we ought to make of our Lives or our Prudence to other Considerations. Read these Words of Cicero (93). "Valuit apud me plus pudor meus, quam timor. Veritus sum deesse Pompeii salutem, cum ille aliquando non defuisset me. Itaque, vel officio, vel fama bonorum, vel pudore, victus, ut in fabulis Amphiarus, sic ego prudens & sciens ad pettem ante oculos positam sum profectus. — Upon this Occasion, Shame had a greater Influence on me than Fear. I was afraid of being wanting to Pompey's Health, who once was not wanting to mine. Therefore, being prevailed upon by Duty, or Reputation, or Shame, like Amphiarus in the Fable, I ran prudently and knowingly into the midst of a Plague, which was before my Eyes." To conclude: there is some Reason to upbraid this Prophet with the Imperfection of his Knowledge, and to rally him upon this Account. He foresaw, that, if he went to the War, he should be killed; but he did not foresee, that he should go, and that, notwithstanding his Precautions, he should be forced to engage in the Undertaking (94).

[K] The manner in which he comforted a Woman - - - - deserves a Remark.] Plutarch, having mentioned the Reasons, which ought to be employed in comforting those, who are afflicted at the untimely Death of their Children, adds (95): "And Amphiarus, in a Poem, seems to me to offer no imperfect Consolation to the Mother of Archemorus, who was uncommonly afflicted for the Loss of her Son, who died unexpectedly: For he says to her: 'No Man was ever happy all his Life; he produces Children upon the Earth; then buries them; at last he dies himself; and Men always lament those, whom they carry in their Coffins to their Grave, in like manner as Ears of Corn grow out of the Earth, and are afterwards cut down. Thus it must be, that some, newly born, come into Being, and others go out of it. Why then should Men grieve for all this, which, according to the Course of Nature, ought always to be so? It is never grievous to suffer, or do, what cannot be avoided by Man. In general, every one, whether in meditating by himself, or in discoursing with others, should take this for a Rule, that not the longest Life is the best, but That, which is the most virtuous.' Plutarch seems to me to have alleged this Passage improperly; for it doth not relate more to the Death of young People, than of others. I might observe likewise, that the Comparison drawn from Ears of Corn would be absurd, if the Design was to moderate an Affliction, grounded on the Youth of the Person, who is bewailed; for, according to the usual course of things, the Harvest of Corn is not 'till the Ears are ripe. It would be more proper to make the afflicted Person consider the State of Fruit-Trees. Count the Apples, when they are in the Bud; and count them every Week afterwards, and you will find that the Number of them is always decreasing. It is extraordinary if one half of them remains 'till the time of gathering. As for the other Reasons of Amphiarus, they are good enough; but there is nothing in them but what is common; nay, he concludes with a Maxim, which in one Sense is more apt to encrease Grief, than to cure it (96). We shall see presently how the Philosopher Carneades censured this Reasoning.

Amyot has not justly rendered the Greek of Plutarch, ὁ παρὰ τῇ μοιρῇ Ἀμφιάρεως, by Amphiarus, in a Poem *. This Version manifestly insinuates, that Amphiarus wrote a Poem; but Plutarch means, that there was a Poet, who introduced Amphiarus making use of those Reasons. It was Euripides. "Dicuntur nonnulli in mœrore, quum de hac communi animi conditione audivissent, ea lege nos esse natos, ut nemo in perpetuum esse posset expers mali, gravius tamen tulisse. Quo circa Carneades, ut video nostrum scribere Antiochum, reprehendere Chryppum solebat laudantem Euripideum carmen illud:

Nemo mortalis est, quem non attingat dolor, Morbusque: multi sunt humandi liberi, Rursus creandi, morisque est finita omnibus. Quæ generi humano angorem nequiquam afferunt. Reddenda est terræ terra (97). Tum vita omnibus Metenda ut fruges, sic jubet necessitas.

"Negabat genus hoc orationis quicquam omnino ad levandam ægritudinem pertinere. Id enim ipsum, dolendum esse dicebat, quod in tam crudelem necessitatem incidissemus. Nam illam quidem orationem ex commemoratione alienorum malorum ad malevolos consolando esse accommodatam (98). — It is said, that some Persons in Affliction, when they have been put in mind of the common Fate of all Men, that the Condition of our Birth is such, that no Man can be perpetually exempt from Misery, instead of receiving Consolation, have thought this an Aggravation of their Misfortunes. For which reason Carneades, as Antiochus informs us, was wont to reprove Chryppus for commending these Verses of Euripides;

No mortal lives, whom Grief does ne'er attack,
Or whom Disease spare; our Children die;
Others are born; and Death attends us all.
No Anguish hence the human Breast should feel;
Earth must to Earth, and Dust to Dust, return;
And Life be gathered like matur'est Fruits:
Such is th' inevitable Law of Fate.

"He denied that this way of speaking tended in the least to mitigate Sorrow. For this very thing, he said, was matter of Affliction, that we are obliged to so cruel a Necessity: For such a Consolation, as arises from the Recollection of other Men's Misfortunes, can administer Relief only to the Ill-natured." Let us now produce the Answer to this Criticism of Carneades. "Mihî vero longe videtur secus. Nam & necessitas ferenda conditionis humane quasi cum deo pugnare cohibet, admonetque esse hominem, quæ cogitatio magnopere luctum levat: & enumeratio exemplorum, non ut animum malevolum oblectet, affertur, sed ut ille, qui mœret, ferendum sibi esse sentiat, quod videt multos moderate & tranquillè tulisse (99). — I am of a different Opinion. For the Necessity of submitting to the Condition of Humanity both restrains us from fighting, as it were, against God, and admonishes us, that we are Men; a Consideration which contributes greatly to mitigate Affliction: Besides which, the setting Examples before our Eyes is not intended to gratify a malevolent Ill-natured Disposition, but to convince the afflicted Person, that his Grief is to be born, by shewing him that many have endured the like with Patience, and Composure of Mind."

[L] The Action which the Farmers of the Taxes brought against his Priests.] Give me leave to apply this Application to those, who levy'd the Tribute of the Roman Republic in the Provinces. There was a Law, which exempted the Lands consecrated to the immortal Gods from all Taxes; upon which Amphiarus's Priests pretended to this Exemption,

(96) See Remark [E] of the Article FOUL-QUES.

* Amphiarus, en un Poem. Ami-α.

(97) The Greek Verse mentioned by Plutarch, which answers this, is, αὐτὸν ὅσον ὅσους ἄνθρωποις ἔσται. — Barthius in Statium, Tom. 3. p. 275. conjectures that it should be read, αὐτὸν ὅσον ὅσους ἄνθρωποις ἔσται.

(98) Cicero Tulci. Quæst. 1. 3. cap. 25.

(99) Id. ib.

gument. by which they pretended to prove the Certainty of his Prophecies. He left several Children [M], one of which was the Founder of Tibur in Italy. Pliny makes this Remark in a Passage, wherein he relates several curious Particulars concerning the long Life of Trees.

and maintained, that the Lands, which belonged to that Deity, were not subject to any Taxes; and without doubt they pretended, that the Text of the Law was clear and express in their Favour. The Farmers replied; that these Lands did not come within the Intent of the Law; since they were consecrated to a dead Man, and that it was plain, that a Person, who is dead, is not one of the immortal Gods. This Argument, though suggested to them by Covetousness, and not by a Zeal for Religion, which such Men seldom regard, where their Interest is concerned, yet it was so demonstrative, that they ought to have carried the Cause: But I believe they lost it. It is pity all the Records of this Trial are not extant: All we know of it is this; "An Amphiarus Deus erit & Trophonius? Nostri quidem publicani, cum essent agri in Bœotia deorum immortalium excepti lege censoria, negabant immortales esse ullos, qui aliquando homines fuissent (100) — The Question was, whether Amphiarus and Trophonius should be esteemed as Gods. Our Publicans, allowing the Censorial Law, by which the Lands in Bœotia, consecrated to the immortal Gods, were exempt from Taxation, denied those to be Immortals, who had once been Men." If they had been suffered to go on, they might have affected most of the Gods, and have subjected much consecrated Ground to Taxes; for what Titles to Divinity or Immortality would have been Proof against their Exceptions? What would they not have obtained at the Tribunal of an Intendant, who should have had Orders to favour their Proceedings? If Farmers of the public Revenues were ordered to make an Enquiry into false Worship, the Number of them would quickly decrease. But where would such Inquisitors be safe? We shall see in another place (101), how solid this Argument appeared to many Heathens; He is dead, therefore he ought not to be worshipped as a God.

[M] He left several Children.] I have composed the Articles of ALCMÆON and AMPHILOCHUS, who were his Sons. I do not find that any Greek Author, now extant, mentions Tiburtus, who was likewise his Son; but they mention Eurydica, Demomassa, and Alcmena, Daughters of Amphiarus and Eriphyle (102). Pliny speaks of Tiburtus in this Manner: "Tiburtes originem multo ante urbem Romam habent. Apud eos exstant lices tres, etiam Tiburto conditore eorum vetustiores, apud quas inauguratus traditur. Fuisse autem cum tradunt filium Amphiarai, qui apud Thebas obierit una ætate ante Illicum bellum (103). — The Tiburtes are more ancient than the building of Rome. They show three Oaks, older than Tiburtus their Founder, where Tradition says he was inaugurated. They tell us he was the Son of Amphiarus, who died in the Expedition to Thebes, about an hundred Years before the Trojan War." I fancy Pliny's Account of this Matter is not true: how could the three Oaks, under which Tiburtus, Founder of Tibur, and Son of Amphiarus, was inaugurated, have remained 'till the Time of Vespasian? Note, that Solinus says, that Tiburtus was Grand-Son, and not Son of Amphiarus. I shall set down his Words in the Article TIBUR.

(101) In Remark [A] of the Article TROPHONIUS.

(102) Pausanias, lib. 5, pag. 165.

(103) Plinius, lib. 16, cap. 44.

(100) Cœro de Nat. Deorum, lib. 3, pag. 631.

(a) Pausan. lib. 5, pag. 165.

(b) Apollod. lib. 3, pag. 295.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 297.

(d) Pausan. lib. 1, p. 33.

AMPHILOCHUS, the Son of Amphiarus and Eriphyle (a), was a famous Soothsayer. He accompanied his Brother Alcæon to the second War of Thebes (b), and some say he assisted him in the Murder of Eriphyle (c); but most Authors are of a different Opinion. The Altar, which was consecrated, to him at Aibans (d) contributed much less to the Glory of his Name, than the Oracle which he had at Mallus in Cilicia [A]. He and Mopsus founded That City after the Trojan War (e); afterwards they quarrelled, and kill'd each other in a Duel, as I have observed elsewhere (f). Some affirm, that Amphilochus was kill'd by Apollo (g). He was both a King and a Prophet (h), for he reigned at Argos. It is true he could not support himself in That Kingdom, but left it in discontent, and built a City upon the Gulph of

(c) Strabo, lib. 14, pag. 454. See also Cicero, de Divinat. lib. 1, c. 40.

(f) In the Article MÆSUS.

(g) Strabo, lib. 14.

(h) Cicero, ubi supra.

[A] The Oracle which he had at Mallus in Cilicia.] Pausanias affirms, that, in his Time, there was no Oracle so much to be depended upon as this: From whence we may infer, that all the Pagan Oracles did not cease upon the planting of Christianity. Τὸ δὲ Ἀμφιλόχου καὶ πατρὸς Ἀδριανοῦ ἐστὶν ἐν τῇ πόλει Βωμοῦς, καὶ Κλητείας ἐν Μάλλῳ μυστικῶν ἀφαιδύεσθαι τῶν ἐπ' αὐτῷ (1). Amphilochus in ipsa urbe apud Athenienſes ora sua eff: in Cilicia vero urbe Mallo ejusdem oraculum quod omnium est quæ ætate mea extant minime fallax. The Answer of this Oracle were given by Dreams. Ἐστὶν ἐν Μάλλῳ πόλις τῆς Κιλικίας Ἀμφιλόχου χρηστέων, καὶ πατρὸς δι' ὀνειράτων (2). Est Malli, quod est optatum Ciliciæ Oraculum Amphilochi, quod per somnia consulentibus respondit. They, who consulted it, passed the Night in the Temple, and what they dreamed was the Resolution of their Question. Dion Cassius mentions a Picture, wherein Sextus Condianus caused the Answer, which he had received from this Oracle, in the Reign of Commodus, to be represented (3). The following Passage of Lucian, induces me to believe, that Amphilochus was accounted a great Prophet at that time. Οἷός τε γὰρ ἔξ' Ἀλφειοῦ ὑπερῆεν οἰκαδε, αὐτὸν τὸ ἐν Μάλλῳ τετὸ μυστικῶν ἐπιφανέσθαι τε καὶ ἀνδύεσθαι οἶμαι, καὶ χρᾶν ὑπερῶν πρὸς ἑτοῖς ἀποκρινόμενον, οἷς ἂν ἐγγράφας τις εἰς τὸ γραμμαστεῖον παραδῶ τῷ περὶ τῆς, καλῶς δ' ἔχῃν ὑπὸ σάμνῃ ἐν παραπλῶν περὶ δεινῶν τῷ χρηστικῷ, καὶ τι περὶ μελλόντων συμβεβησέναι τῷ δῶ (4). — When I returned from Egypt, and was informed that the Oracle at Mallus was the plainest, and at the same time the truest, and that it's Answers were so clear, as to give a particular and distinct Solution of all Questions, which were proposed to the Prophet, written on a scroll of Paper; I thought it would be right, as I sailed by, to try the Oracle, and propose some Questions to this Divinity, concerning future Events. Take notice of the Circumstance mentioned by Lucian, which is, that the Questions, to which an Answer was demanded of Amphilochus, were proposed in Writing. Let no one say, that Lucian forged the Stories, which he relates in this Work; for this does not weaken our Proof; since it is certain he would not have said, that this Oracle was famous, if it had never been consulted for the space of an hundred Years. Thus Mr Van Dale solves this Objection (5). He cites another Passage, taken out of the History of the false Prophet Alexander, wherein Lucian testifies, that the Oracle at Mallus was famous. He might have quoted a third Passage, which I find so favourable to this Observation, that I will give it at length. Τὸν Τροφόνιον, ὃν Ζεὺς καὶ ὁ μάλας με ἀποκρίνομαι, τὸν Ἀμφιλόχον. ὅς ἐνεργῶν ἀνδρώων, καὶ μυσταίων ὡς ὧν, θεοπιδεῖ ὁ γυναικῶν ἐν Κιλικίᾳ, φερόμενος τὰ πολλὰ, καὶ γονεῖων τῶν δυνὸν δολοῦν ἄνεκα (6). — I am more angry, O Jupiter, with Amphilochus, than with Trophonius; for the former, though the Son of a Villain and a Parricide, yet is famous for prophesying in Cilicia, lying much, and playing the Wizard for two Obols. I shall examine hereafter what Lucian says, that Amphilochus was not the Son, but the Grand-son of Amphiarus. In the mean time I shall observe, that the Oracle of Amphilochus was still famous in Plutarch's Time. Ἐστὶν ἡμεῖς ἐν αὐτῷ παρὶς τοῖς, καὶ τὸ Μόλυ καὶ τὸ Ἀμφιλόχου μυστικῶν (7). Cum autem esset in Patria, staret adhuc Mopsi & Amphilochi Oracula.

(5) Van Dale, de Oraculis, pag. 98.

(6) Lucian. in Deor. concilio, p. 957. Tom. 2.

(7) Plut. do Oraculis. Defectus, p. 434. C.

(1) Pausan. lib. 1, p. 33.

(2) Xiphilinus in Eptome Dionis, pag. 285, 286.

(3) Id. ib.

(4) Lucian. in Philopseude, pag. 500. Tom. 2.

of Ambracia [B]. Livy has mistaken him for another, in a Passage which I shall quote [C]. Moreri too is liable to Censure [D]. We must not confound our Sooth-layer with one Amphilochus, whom a Goofe fell in Love with [E]. In the Remark below I shall give Pliny's, and other Authors, Account of this Matter.

[B] He left Argos in discontent, and built a City upon the Gulph of Ambracia. We have this from a grave Historian. Ἀργεῖοι τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν καὶ Ἀμφιλοχίαν τὴν ἄλλην ἐκτίσεν μετὰ τὰ τρωικά δικάδ' ἀναχωρήσας, καὶ ἐκ ἀρεσκόμενος τῇ ἐν Ἀργεὶ κατ' αἶσάν τε Ἀμφιλόχος ὁ Ἀμφιδάμω, ἐν τῷ Ἀμπερχικῷ κλάπῳ, ὁμῶν μόνον τῇ ἐαυτοῦ πατρίδι Ἀργεῖ ὀνομάσας. Καὶ ἢ ἡ πόλις αὐτῷ μεγίστη τις Ἀμφιλοχίας, καὶ τὸς δυνάμειδ' εἶχεν δακτύλους (8). Amphilochus, the Son of Amphiarus, returning home, after the Trojan War, and being dissatisfied with the State of Affairs at Argos, founded Amphilocheian Argos, and all the Region of Amphilocheia, upon the Gulph of Ambracia, calling the City, after the Name of his native Town, Argos; which City was the largest and most powerful of the whole Amphilocheian Territory. Strabo alleges this Testimony of Thucydides; but adds a Circumstance to it; to wit, that Amphilochus, being dissatisfied with the Government established in Argos, went into Atarnania, where he took possession of his Brother's Estate (9). Thucydides does not say this; and consequently Strabo is in the wrong to ascribe it to him. They, who pretend, that he follows the Opinion of Thucydides (10), are mistaken; for he seems to prefer the Historian Ephorus, who said, that the City of Amphilochian Argos was built by Alcmaeon, and that it's Founder gave it the Name of his Brother. Μετὰ δὲ τὴν Ἀμπερχικὴν τὸ Ἀργεῖοι τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν ἐκτίσεν Ἀλκμαίωνος καὶ τῶν παίδων (11). After Ambracia follows Amphilochian Argos, a City built by Alcmaeon and his Sons. It cannot be said, that Amphilochus has neither followed Thucydides, nor any other Writer, when he says that Amphilochus was the Son of Alcmaeon (12); for he reports this only on the Credit of Euripides (13). Note. He observes, that this Amphilochus went, by the Advice of Apollo, to live at Amphilochian Argos.

I must take notice of a great Difference between Thucydides and Strabo. The one says, that Amphilochus, being returned to Argos, after the taking of Troy, and not finding Affairs in such a Condition as he could have wished, retired towards the Gulph of Ambracia, where he built a Town (14). The other tells us, that Amphilochus, having built Mallus in Cilicia, after the taking of Troy, returned to Argos, and being displeased with the posture of Affairs there, went back into Cilicia, where he was killed, and buried (15). But there are other Difficulties still. Euripides says, that Alcmaeon, being mad, lay with Menis, the Daughter of Tiresias, by whom he had a Son and a Daughter; the Son was called Amphilochus, and the Daughter Tiphone (16). This Amphilochus, in Obedience to an Oracle, settled in Amphilochian Argos. We have seen (17), that Lucian says, that Amphilochus, whose Oracle was so famous at Mallus, was the Son of Alcmaeon; others say that he was the Son of Amphiarus. Amidst all this Confusion there are two ways to choose. One is, to say, that there was but one Amphilochus, whose History has only been related by Piece-meal, that is, by Authors who have omitted part of his Adventures. The other is to assert, that there were two Amphilochus, the one the Son of Amphiarus, and the other the Son of Alcmaeon; and that Authors have sometimes ascribed to one what belonged to the other. I could easily believe that Amphilochus, whose Oracle was in Cilicia, was the Son of Amphiarus; and that he, who settled in Atarnania, was the Son of Alcmaeon. The City of Argos, in that Country, was built by Alcmaeon and his Sons. Τὸ Ἀργεῖοι τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν ἐκτίσεν Ἀλκμαίωνος καὶ τῶν παίδων (18). Argos Amphilochicam Urbem ad Alcmaeonem ejusque liberis condita. This is my first Argument. Amphilochus, the Son of Alcmaeon, was admonished by the Oracle to go and reside in this City of Argos (19). This is my second Argument. Pausanias observes, that the Posterity of Melampus reigned in Argos, till Amphilochus, after the taking of Troy, retired into the Country, which was called, from his Name, Amphilochia (20). This is the Amphilochian Argos, and the adjacent Country. Now there are six Generations from Melampus to this Amphilochus; Ἀπὸ δὲ Μελαμπεδοῦ γενεαὶ τεῖς καὶ ἀνδρες ἐσσι μάχης Ἀμφιλόχου τὸ Ἀμφιλοχικὸν (21). A Melampede sex per t. idem etatis usque ad Amphilochum Amphiarai filium; and therefore the latter cannot be the Son of Amphiarus, as Pausanias affirms, but of Alcmaeon. And indeed Melampus was the Father of Antipater, who was the Father of Oicles, who was the Father of Amphiarus, who was the Father of Alcmaeon, who was the Father of Amphilochus. If you end with Amphilochus, the second Son of Amphiarus, you will not find the six Descendants which Pausanias mentions. This is my third Argument.

[C] Livy has mistaken him for another, &c.] He has mistaken the Son for the Father, in these Words of the Forty fifth Book: "Oropum Atticæ, ubi pro Deo vates Amphilochus colitur, templumque vestrum est fontibus rivisque circa æmœnum (22). — "Oropus of Attica; where the Prophet Amphilochus is worshipped as a God, whose Temple is pleasantly situated amidst Fountains and Rivulets." It is certain that the chief Deity of the Temple, which this Historian mentions, was Amphiarus; he should therefore have said, ubi pro Deo vates Amphiarus (not Amphilochus) colitur. Pausanias, who made these things his particular Study, and had a Genius capable of Success therein, is much more to be credited than Livy. Now he not only affirms, that the Inhabitants of Oropus built a Temple to the Sooth-layer Amphiarus; but seems likewise to say, that Amphilochus had no share in the Altar, which was divided into five Portions, each of which belonged to some Hero or God (23). Indeed we find in this Partition the Children of Amphilochus, but not Amphilochus himself. I confess, the Sequel of the Reasoning might induce one to believe, that Pausanias has not omitted him. I could willingly make a Correction in the Greek Text of this Author; I would read, καὶ τῷ πατρὶ Ἀμφιλόχῳ, & filio Amphilochi, and not καὶ τῶν παίδων Ἀμφιλόχῳ, & filii Amphilochi; see the Margin (24). But, after all, this is no Proof, that Amphilochus was the God of the Temple of Oropus.

[D] Moreri too, is liable to Censure.] I. Amphilochus is not a certain Greek Captain, whom Homer mentions in his Odyssey; for Homer only says, that Alcmaeon and Amphilochus were the Sons of Amphiarus (25). II. This being so, Moreri should not have expressed himself in this manner. It is said that he was the Son of Amphiarus and of Eriphyle. He should have had more regard to the Authority of Homer; and no Author, ever so little acquainted with the Ancients, would have made use of an, It is said, upon this Occasion. III. Amphilochus, mentioned by Plutarch, is not different from the Amphilochus of Homer: It was the same, whose Oracle was consulted at Mallus in Cilicia. IV. He ought not to have said, that he carried the Oracle to one Thespius of Solos (26). This is to metamorphose a God into a Messenger. V. He has omitted a Circumstance, which should have been express'd, viz. That this Thespius led a good Life after his Resurrection. See Plutarch (27).

[E] One AMPHILOCHUS, whom a Goofe fell in Love with.] Pliny's Account is this: "Quin et fama amoris (anferi) Egii dilecta forma pueri Olenii (28). — It is reported that a Goofe fell in love with an Olenian Youth at Egium." Thus Father Hardouin has corrected this Passage. In the other Editions it runs thus; Argis dilecta forma pueri nomine Oleni. Thus two Errors had crept into the Text of Pliny; one concerning the Place, where the Goofe was in Love, and the other concerning the Name of the beloved Youth. This Adventure did not happen at Argos, but in the Town of Egium (29). The Goofe's Favourite was called Amphilochus, and not Olenus; but, because he was born at Olenus, he had the Appellation of Olenius. A Passage of Ælian enabled Father Hardouin to correct the Passage of Pliny. Ἐν Ἀργεῖο τῆς Ἀχαιῆς πατρὶς Ὀλενίου γένος ἵνα μὲν Ἀμφιλόχῳ ἐσθλὸς γυν. οὐρεγος λέγεται τῷ τῷ (30). At Egium, a Town of Achaia, a Goofe fell in love with a Youth of Olenus, named Amphilochus.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Titus Livius, lib. 45. c. 27.

(23) Pausanias, lib. 1. p. 33.

(24) Perhaps the Words of Pausanias should be rendered thus, & ex filio (Amphiarai) Amphilochi.

(25) Homer. Odysseia l. 15. ver. 248.

(26) This Error has been corrected in the Dutch Editions.

(27) Plutarch de Senarum nominibus vindicta, pag. 563. & seq.

(28) Plinius lib. 10. cap. 22. p. 408.

(29) Situated in Achaia, near Sicyon. See Pausanias lib. 7. p. 230.

(30) Ælian. Hist. Anim. lib. 8. c. 20. See Father Hardouin's Emendat. 21. in l. 1. Plinius, pag. 474.

(8) Thucydides, lib. 2.

(9) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 225.

(10) Berkeley, in Steph. Byzant. p. 124.

(11) Ephorus apud Strabonem, lib. 7. pag. 225.

(12) Yr Berkeley (1791) in his Notes on Steph. Byzant. p. 124.

(13) Apollodorus lib. 3. pag. 201.

(14) Thucydides, lib. 2.

(15) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 424, 425.

(16) Euripides apud Apollodorum, l. 3. p. 201.

(17) In the preceding Remark, Citation (6).

(18) Strabo, lib. 7. pag. 225.

(19) Apollodorus, lib. 3. pag. 201.

(20) Pausanias, l. 2. pag. 60.

enius. Theophrastus relates this. Athenæus relates the same Story, and quotes Clearchus and Theophrastus; but correct a Fault, which has crept into his Book. Read ἐν Ἀργίῳ, and not ἐν Ἀργείῳ. Were it not for this, it might be said, that Father Hardouin is too bold in these Words, “Neque enim Argis sed Ægii

"prope Sicyonem res gesta narratur (31). — The "Affair did not happen at Argos, but at Ægium "near Sicyon." Do we not find in the Translation of Asineus, apud Argivos puerum amavit asner, and in the Greek, ἢ Ἀργείων δὲ παῖδα ἐν νῆσσοις χρῖν (32)? At Argos, a Gase fell in love with a Boy:

(31) Har-doun, ibid.

(72) Athen.
lib 13. c. 8.
pag. 6. 6.

AMPHITRYON, the Son of Alcaeus [A], Son of Perseus, is less known by his Exploits, than by the Adventure of his Wife Alcmena, who afforded a Subject to the Comic Poets [B]. She was the Daughter of Electryon, King of Mycene. The Sons of Pterelaus had made an Incurfion into the Territories of This Prince, which proved fatal to them; for they all perished in it (a); but they had before destroyed, all the Sons of Electryon (b). The latter, making the necessary Preparations to revenge the Death of his Sons, left his Kingdom and his Daughter Alcmena in the hands of Amphitryon, and made him promise, with an Oath, not to lie with his Daughter. They, who accompanied the Sons of Pterelaus, had brought the Flocks of Electryon into the Country of Elis. The Flocks were recovered by Amphitryon; but, in delivering them up to their Master, he had the Misfortune to be the innocent Cause of the Death of That unhappy Prince [C]. Upon this, being obliged to leave the Country of the Argians (c), he retired with Alcmena to Creon King of Thebes, and received from him the Ceremonies of Expiation. After this he made Preparations for a War against the *Teleboe*s [D], in Revenge for the Death of Alcmena's Brothers; a Condition, which she required of the Person, who desired to marry her [E]. In order to engage Creon to follow him, he agreed to free him from a Fox, which did him a great deal of Mischief: This he did by the Assistance of Cephalus, who lent him the Dog, which Procris had brought from the Isle of Crete. Amphitryon, assisted by several Nations, entered the Territories of Pterelaus, and ravaged them; but the great Success of this War was owing to the Treachery of Cometba, the Daughter of Pterelaus. This Lady fell in Love with Amphitryon; for whose sake she plucked off the golden Lock of Hair from her Father's Head, on which his Life depended. The unhappy Father died immediately; and Amphitryon took possession of all his Dominions. He caused Cometba to be put to death, and returned to Thebes, loaded with Booty. The first News, with which he was greeted, was, that He had spent the last Night with Alcmena, tho' he had good reason to be assured, that it was false. At last it was discovered, that Jupiter had play'd this Trick, by assuming the Shape of Amphitryon. The latter, without any Concern for the matter, lay with Alcmena, and made her an instance of Superfætation, which has been quoted a thousand times. She had already conceived Hercules, and became pregnant with another Son. But, to distinguish which was his own Son, and which was Jupiter's, he threw two Snakes on their Beds. Hercules was not afraid of them; but the other fled. There wanted no other Proof, to shew, that Hercules was not the Son of Amphitryon. It is said, that Alcmena put an Ornament on her Head, which informed the World, that Jupiter had

(4) Except Lievman us a Barrard. Id.
pag. 99.

(c) It is not true, as is said in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, that Amphitryon succeeded Electryon.

(x) Except one, who stand behind to guard the ships. Apol-lodorus. lib. 2.
pag. 97.

[A] The Son of Alcæus. Apollodorus says, that (1) Apollod. Hippomene, the Daughter of Menæceus, was the Mother of Amphitrion (1). Others make him the Son of

(2) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 248. Lyfdice, the Daughter of Pelops; and others say, that Laonome, the Daughter of Guneus, was his Mother (2). Note, that he was Uncle to his Wife; for his Sister

(3) Id. ib. [B] Who afforded a Subject to the Comic Poets. Ambitryon is one of the best of Plautus's Comedies, in the Opinion of Madam Dacier, who translated it into French with excellent Notes. See the last Remarks of the Article TELEBOES. Moliere wrote a Comedy with the same Title; which is one of his best Pieces. He has borrowed many things from Plautus, but gives them a different turn: And, were a Comparison between these two Pieces to decide the Controversy, which has been raised of late Years, about the Superiority or Inferiority of the Ancients, I believe Mr Perrault would soon carry his Cause. There are many fine Turns in the Ambitryon of Moliere, which greatly exceed the Pleafantry of the Latin Ambitryon. How many things in the Comedy of Plautus were necessary to be omitted, which would not have succeeded on the French Stage? How many Ornaments and Touches of a new Invention has Moliere been obliged to insert in his Work, to procure it the Applause, which it has received? The bare Comparison of the Prologue is sufficient to adjudge the Advantage to the modern Author. Lucius has furnished the Subject, on which the Prologue of Moliere turns, but not the Thoughts. A good Judge will never say upon this Occasion, that of a good Original he has made a bad Copy, applying the Words of Terence.

Qui bene vertendo, & eas describendo male, ex
Græcis bonis Latinas fecit non bonas (4).

(4) Terent.
Prol. Eu-nuch.

I beseech the Reader not to take me wrong: I grant, not only that the Ambiphryon of Plautus is one of his best Pieces, but also that it is most excellent in some Respects. It seems it was still acted in the Time of Arnobius. "Ponit animos Jupiter, si Ambiphryon fuerit actus pronuntiatusque Plautinus (5)."
"Jupiter lays by haughty Carriage, in the Representation of the Ambiphryon of Plautus." I wish we had the Ambiphryon of Euripides, and the two Ambiphryons of Archipous.

(5) Arnob.
lib. 7. pag.
238.

[C] In delivering up the Flocks to their Master, be bad the Misfortune to be the innocent Cause of the Death of that unhappy Prince.] The thing fell out thus: "Cum bos una aufergeret, in ipsam Amphitryonem tam quam manibus forte clavam gestabat immisit, quæ de bovis cornibus repulsa in Electryonem caput reiliens ipsum vita privavit (6). ----- One of the Cows endeavouring to run away, Amphitryon threw a Club after it, which be happened to have in his Hand; which rebounding from the Horns of the Cow dashed against Electryon's Head, and killed him." In the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary instead of a Club it is a Stone.

(6) Apollod.
lib. 2. p. 99.

[D] He made Preparations for a War against the Teleboæi. I observe in another Place (7), who the Teleboæi were, and wherein Apollodorus, whom I follow, differs from the Scholiast on Apollonius.

[E] A Condition, which he required of the Person, who desired to marry her.] We shall see in the Article, to which I refer the Reader in the foregoing Remark, that Alcmena chiefly required, that the Death of her Father should be revenged.

(7) In the Article TE-LEBOES.

B b b b

[F] Pub

tripled the length of the Night, in order to carefs her the longer [F]. It is not true, that Amphitryon taught Men to mix Water with their Wine [G]. Alcmena survived her Husband (d). The Ruins of their House were still to be seen at Thebes, in the Time of Paufanias (e). We must remember, that Amphitryon was born at Argos (f). Some Authors call him King of Thebes (g).

(d) Paufan.
lib. 1. p. 39.

(e) Id. lib. 5.
pag. 29c.

(f) Apollod.
lib. 2. p. 97.

(g) Virgil.
Æneid. l. 6.
ver. 785.

[F] Put an Ornament on her Head, which informed the World, that Jupiter had tripled the Length of the Night, in order to carefs her the longer (8).] This is very singular. She might have been satisfied with seeing the Head of her Husband loaded with Horn-work and half Moons, which might have vied with the Towers of the Goddess Cybele.

----- qualis Berecynthia mater

Invehitur eurna Phrygiæ turrita per urbes (9).

High as the Mother of the Gods -----

Then, when in Pomp she makes the Phrygian round,
With Golden Turrets on her Temples crown'd.

DRYDEN.

Why did she wear three entire Moons on her Fore-head?

----- parvoque Alcmena superbit

Hercule, tergemina crinem circumdata Luna (10).

Proud of her Son, behold Alcmena wear

Three Moons, an Ornament to grace her Hair.

Most Interpreters understand these three Moons to be a Symbol of the three Nights, which Jupiter passed with her. A fine Trophy for poor Amphitryon! A noble Monument of the Safety of his Honour! Would he have every one, who looked on her Head-dress, remember the triple Night, which her Charms had produced. Her Husband could not be well pleased with such a Dress. I appeal to Mother, who makes him approve the Reflexions of his Servant. Amphitryon's Friends being informed, that Jupiter was willing to make amends for the Injury, began to express their Joy: But Sofia interrupted them.

Messieurs, voulez-vous bien suivre mon sentiment?

Ne vous embarez nullement,

Dans ces douceurs congratulantes:

C'est un mauvais embarrquement,

Et d'une & d'autre part, pour un tel compliment.

Les phrases sont embarrassantes.

Le grand Dieu Jupiter nous fait beaucoup d'honneur,

Et la bonté sans doute est pour nous sans seconde,

Il nous promet l'infailible bonheur,

D'une fortune en mille biens seconde,

Et chez nous il doit naître un fils d'un très-grand cœur;

Tout cela va le mieux du monde.

ANABAPTISTS, a Sect, which sprung up soon after the Rise of Lutheranism. Nicolas Storch, Mark Stubner, and Thomas Munzer, gave birth to it, in the Year 1521. It was founded upon the Abuse of a Doctrine, which they had read in a Book, published by Luther, in the Year 1520, De Libertate Christianâ. This Proposition, which they met with in it, A Christian Man is Master of every thing, and is subject to no one, and which Luther intended in a very good Sense [A], seemed to them

[A] It was founded upon the Abuse of a Proposition ----- which Luther intended in a very good Sense.] Namely That, which he affixed to it, in explaining his meaning, when he perceived in what manner these People perverted his Expressions. "Quæ verba sano sensu à Luthero — Scripta & "prolixè ἐξηγήτης declarata, oppositæque aphorismo, eundem omnium seruum esse, & omnibus "subiectum, exposita, detorta fuere in sensum sequiorem ab hominibus suæ pariter & alienæ quietis impatientibus (1). — Which Words, written and "interpreted by Luther in a good Sense, and explained "by the opposite Abhorism, The same is a Servant "of All, and Subject to All, were perverted to a "worse meaning by Men, impatient of their Own, "and the Peace of Others." His most zealous Adversaries confessed, that he disapproved of a seditious

Mais enfin coupons aux discours,
Et que chacun chez soi doucement se retire.
Sur telles affaires toujours
Le meilleur est de ne rien dire.

Gentlemen, will you please to follow my Advice?
— By no means embark in these Congratulations: 'tis a scurvy Venture: and both one side and t'other is at a loss to find Expressions for such a Compliment. The great God Jupiter does us abundance of Honour, and his Goodness towards us is, undoubtedly, not to be equalled; he promises us the certain Felicity of a Fortune, abounding with a thousand Blessings; and in our House shall be born a mighty stout-hearted Son. — All this goes on the best that can be. But, in short, let's cut the Discourse off here, and let every Body go Home in Peace. In these kind of Affairs, 'tis always best to say nothing.

MOLIERE translated by several Hands.

Amphitryon found this so reasonable, that by his Silence, he gave entire consent to it.

[G] It is not true, that Amphitryon taught Men to mix Water with their Wine. If Athenæus may be believed, this Invention is another's (11). But this other's Name being Amphitryon, a learned Critic has confounded him with the Husband of Alcmena. I make no doubt, that the like Mistakes often occasion the various Opinions, which are to be found among Authors. Read Athenæus, and you will say that Amphitryon, King of Athenæ, invented the mixing of Water with Wine. Read Cassaubon and you will ascribe this Secret to Amphitryon, King of Thebes. Whence it will happen, that some pretty good Compilers will form two Opinions: Some, will they say, ascribe this Invention to Amphitryon, and others to Amphitryon. Cassaubon's Words are: "Quod mox de Amphitryonis (I make no Alteration in the Orthography of the Words) invento temperandi vinum sequitur quo pertinet subobscure est. Spectat autem eo, ne quis miretur, quod postea dicit Homerum varia temperamenta vini habuisse nota, cum τὸς τὴ οὖν κρητῶνος inventor sit Amphitryon, quem ante Iliacæ Tempora Thebis regnasse nemo dubitat. (12). — The Design of mentioning Amphitryon's Invention of tempering Wine is to prevent any one's being surprized, to find, that Homer was acquainted with the various ways of mixing Wine, since no one doubts, that Amphitryon, the Inventor, reigned at Thebes before the Trojan War."

(f) Plaut.
Amphitr. in Prolog.

(g) Servius
in Æneid.
lib. 8. ver.
103.

(11) Athenæ.
lib. 4. cap.
27. p. 179.

(12) Cassaub.
in Athenæ.
p. 323, 324.

(1) Frider.
Spanhemius,
de Origine, Progressu,
Sectis, & Nominibus, Anabaptis-
tarum, p. 106.
I made use of the Edition inserted in the Gan- græna Theo-logiæ Ana-baptistice of Cloppenbourg.

(2) Maim-
bourg's History of Lutheranism, Book 1.
pag. 114.
Dutch Edit.

Behaviour, which seemed to be accidentally owing to his Doctrine. Father Maimbourg relates, that the Rebels, having sent their public Declaration to Martin Luther, were disappointed in their Expectation of it's receiving his Approbation (2): "For, adds "he, Luther perceiving that many accused him of "giving Occasion to this Rebellion, by the Books, "which he had written in the Vulgar Tongue, in "Defence of Evangelical Liberty, against the Ty- "ranny of those, who overlaid it by human Tradi- "tions, answered this Accusation in a long Dis- "course, in which he shews them, that the Scrip- "ture enjoins Obedience to Princes and Magistrates, "even though they should abuse the Power, "which God has intrusted them with; that they "ought to address themselves to God, and in "the mean time suffer with Patience, in Expecta- "tion them calculated to influence the Vulgar. This they employ'd all their Industry in doing, each according to his Abilities. Storch, being wholly illiterate, boasted of Divine Inspiration. Stubner, who had Wit and Knowledge, looked out for crafty Explanations of the Word of God. Munzer, who was bold and vehement, trusted to Assurance, and gave the Reins to the most restless and disorderly Passions. They were not satisfied with decrying the Ecclesiastical Tyranny of the Court of Rome, and the Authority of Consistories; they taught likewise, that the Power of Princes was meer Usurpation, and that, under the Gospel, Men ought to enjoy full and absolute Liberty. They re-baptized their Followers; and, the better to encourage this Practice, they taught that Infant-Baptism was invalid. As to the rest of their Tenets, they insisted much on strict Morality; they recommended Mortifications, Fasts, and a Simplicity of Dress; by which means they gained a prodigious number of Followers. After these successful Beginnings, Munzer became so rash, as loudly to exhort the People to resist Magistrates, and constrain Princes to divest themselves of their Authority. A Gospel of this kind was so pleasing to the Peasants of Germany, who were weary of their Masters Yoke, that they rose in several Places, and committed infinite Disorders. They were soon reduced, and great numbers put to death. Munzer, who had seduced them by his Pretences to Inspiration (a), was taken, and beheaded, in the Year 1525 (b). His Disciples, whom he had left in Switzerland, increased the Sect in that Country, and were the occasion of great Troubles; inasmuch that the Magistrates were obliged to have recourse to the most severe penal Laws, to stop the Progress of Anabaptism. The same was necessary in several Towns of Germany, and other Places. The Protestant Clergy, it is true, were very diligent in refuting these Sectaries; but as this was found not effectual, the Magistrates interposed, and supplied this Defect by their Authority [B]. The

(a) See his Article.

(b) Munzer is mistaken in saying, that this Heresiarch pretended, about the Year 1542, that the Holy Ghost revealed to him, &c.

Anabaptists

"tion of his good Pleasure; and that the Way of "Arms, which they had taken up, would be the "Occasion of their Damnation, if they refused to "lay them down." We shall see in the Article MUNZER, that he rejected the Propositions of this Fanatic.

[B] The Protestant Clergy were very diligent in refuting these Sectaries; but — the Magistrates interposed — with their Authority.] It would have been difficult for the most violent Opposers of Lutheranism to conceive a more effectual way of stifling it in the Birth, than this Schism of Munzer and his Adherents. They preached up a Doctrine destructive of all Society, and they put it in practice with inconceivable Havock and Devastation. They had been united to Luther, and agreed with him in this, that Christianity ought to be reformed according to the pure Word of God (3). Thus the Resultment, conceived against them, recoiled upon him, and his Followers; and, when Men beheld the fatal Consequences, which the Enterprize of the Reformation had so soon produced, they were tempted to believe, that it was not the Work of God. This, no doubt greatly retarded the Progress of The Reform.
We are not to wonder, that the Protestant Divines called it the Depths of Satan; and said, that the Enemy of our Salvation had made use of this Artifice to support his Kingdom against the new Apostles, which God had raised up against him (4). This Language is the natural Result of Theological Hypotheses. The Disputants of the Romish Party took Advantage of this Conjunction with extraordinary Addresses, to cry down the Reformation, and to animate all the Powers against it. But the Reformers were not less vigilant to guard against the Odium, which their Enemies attempted to throw upon them.
They exclaimed with all their Force against the Ana-baptists; they refuted them by Writing; they engaged them in Disputation as much as possible. "Ut
"labem istam sibi eque ac doctrinæ Evangelicæ ad-
"spersam abstergerem, Heroes illi Dei causam
"publicis scriptis sibi agendam censuerunt. Quod inter al-
"ios alacriter præstitere *Lutherus, Melancthon, Zwing-
"lius, Bullingerus, Menius, Regius*, alii; et in seditiones
"et seditiosos graviter investiti, subditos peruelles, de
"suo erga potestates superiores officio ex Dei verbo
"monendo, tribunitios istos concionatores perstrin-
"gendo, & omnes ad quietam & debitam Principibus "suis reverentiam hortando, nihil reliqui fecerunt, ut im-
"petum hominum ad scelera & cruces furibundis ani-
"mis ruentium sufflaminarent. Lutherus vel impi-
"mis concitator non παροτρυντικὰ tantum scripta
"contra seditiosos, verum etiam κατακλιτικὰ emisit,
"et peculiari libello contra Saturnos & Homicidas
"Russicos vulgato ipse classicum in illos cecinit, Fris-

"cipes hortatus, ut vi & armis atrociorum islo-
"rum impetum sicerent, & eos ad quietem coge-
"rent, qui persuaderi nollent (5). — To wipe off
"these Aspersions from themselves and the Doctrine "of the Gospel, these Heroes determined publicly to "write in Defence of the Cause of God. This was "readily undertaken, among others, by Luther,
"Melancthon, Zwinglius, Bullinger, Menius, Re-
"gius, &c. who inveighed strongly against Sedition
"and the Seditious, admonishing rebellious Subjects,
"from the Word of God, of their Duty towards
"the higher Powers; reproving those turbulent Ha-
"ranguers of the Mob; and exhorting all to a peace-
"able and due Reverence for their Princes: in short
"they omitted nothing, which might restrain the Fury
"of Persons, rubbing on to Acts of Villany and Out"rage. Luther in particular, more zealous than the "rest, published not only Exhortatory Writings, but "even Invectives against the Seditious; and, in a "singular Work against the rustic Robbers and Mur"derers, sounded the Alarm against them, exhorting
"Princes to repress by Force of Arms their violent "Proceedings, and oblige those to be quiet by Com"pulsion, who refused to be so by Persuasion." The "Minister, whose Latin I cite, mentions certain Towns,
"in which these Sectaries were confounded in Dispu"tation; but the Burden of the Song is always, that "at the last the Magistrates exerted their Authority.
"He tells us, that, at Zurich, the Heads of the Ana-baptists, having disputed three times, to their Confu"sion, with Zwinglius (6), were condemned to Silence
"by a solemn Decree. "Senatus Tigurinus solenni
"Edito Pædobaptismum facit, & Anabaptismi Do-
"ctrinæ silentium & quietem imperat (7). — The "Senate of Zurich confirms Infant-Baptism by a "solemn Edit, and enjoins the Teachers of Anabap"tism to be silent." Balthasar Habmeyer, one of "them, having promised to make a public Recantation,
"yet continuing to preach up his Errors, was com"pelled to abjure them, and then expelled the City (8). (8) Id. ib.

(5) Spanh.
ubi supra,
pag. 198.

(6) In January, March, and November, 1525.

(7) Spanh.
ubi supra,
pag. 202.

(8) Id. ib.

(9) Id. ib.

"cit;

(3) See
Spanhem.
ubi supra.

(4) See the Remark [KK] of the Article
MAHO-MET.

Anabaptists made a considerable Progress in Moravia, and would have done so more, in spite of the Severity, with which they were opposed by the Secular Arm, had they not been divided into two Factions (c). No Town was more infested with these People, than That of Munster [C]. Every one knows, that they became Masters of it; and that John of Leyden, King of this New Jerusalem, defended himself as long as he could; but that at length, the Town being taken, he was put to death in the Year 1536. The Anabaptists of Friesland and Holland disapproved, in many things, of the Conduct of their Brothers of Munster; and yet they were the occasion of great Troubles (d). One of their principal Chiefs was named Mennon. The most effectual Means that could be thought of were put in practice for the Extirpation of this Sect; but in vain (e). It still subsists in the United Provinces. It is true, the principal Follies of the Sect have by degrees been worn off [D]: It no longer pretends to

Enthusiasm;

(c) That of the Hutterians, and that of the Gabrielists.

(d) See Remark [D] of the Article PICARDS.

(10) Spanhemius, ubi supra, pag. 203.

(11) Id. ib. p. 203, 204.

(12) Turbines urbe ejecti fuerunt. Id. ib. pag. 204.

(13) Id. ib.

(14) Id. ib. pag. 205.

(15) Id. ib. pag. 212.

(17) Hornbeek summa Controversie. pag. 381.

(18) Id. ib.

(19) Id. ib. citing Strada's Hist. Belg. lib. 4.

* An invincible Argument is proverbially called Argumentum Achilleum. See the Article ACHILLES, Remark [L]. REM. CRIT.

(20) He was Governor of the Sons of the Duke of Cleves, and afterwards Counsellor to the Duke, and was at the Siege of Munster.

"cit; actoribus vero pervicacibus non item; ita in prudentissimi senatus, & strenui Gloriar divinarum vindicis, in Anabaptistarum sectariis coecondendis auctoritate, Ecclesiarum Basilienfis tranquillitati simul & puritati confulendum ibidem fuerit (10)." They were refuted at Bern, in a public Disputation, in the Year 1527; yet they privately declared, that their own Reasons still appeared to them to be good. In order therefore to confirm the Triumph of Truth, another Disputation was appointed; which lasted nine Days. The Acts of it were published. This had great Effect; but the rigorous Edicts of the Senate of Bern were incomparably more useful (11). These seditious Persons would have established their safe Retreat at St Gall, had not the Magistrates banished them from thence (12). It was there, that Thomas Schucker cut off his Brother's Head, in the Year 1527. He called together a numerous Assembly, and declared to the Company, that he perceived himself under the Influence of the Spirit of God. Upon which, he commanded his Brother to kneel down, and took a Sword. His Father, and Mother, and some others, demanded what he was about to do. Be satisfied, replied he, I will do nothing but what is revealed to me by our heavenly Father. The Company waited impatiently for the Event; when they saw him draw the Sword, and cut off his Brother's Head. He was punished by the Magistrates as his Crime deserved; but he shewed no Signs of Repentance, and declared upon the Scaffold, that he had only executed the Orders of God. You may imagine, that the Decrees of Banishment were repeated with greater Severity, upon such an Instance of Fanaticism (13). At Strasbourg, there were both Disputations, and rigorous Edicts, against this Sect (14). Melchior Hofman, one of it's Ringleaders, was confined there, and died in Prison (15). The Sect spread itself over Moravia, Bohemia, Poland, Hungary, Austria, and Silesia. Some of it's Heads were delivered over to the Executioner. Balthasar Hubmeyer, being conducted to Vienna, was burnt there. This Execution passed with the Sect for a Martyrdom, and inflamed their Zeal.

Add to this, that, upon their first Arrival in England, in the Year 1560, Queen Elizabeth, by a Proclamation, commanded them instantly to leave the Kingdom (17). The Elector Palatine drove them out of his Dominions, in the Year 1594. The Diets of Spire, in the Years 1529, and 1544, and That of Ausbourg, in the Year 1551, put out cruel and bloody Decrees against them (18). Philip II. ordered the Governours of the Netherlands to be very severe in punishing the Anabaptists (19). Consult the Annals of this Sect, composed by Henry Ottius; you will there find an ample Recital of all the Edicts published against them in several Parts of Europe. What is sometimes said of Artillery, that it is the last Argument of Kings, Ratio ultima Regum, is applicable to penal Laws: they are the Ratio ultima of Divines, their most convincing Argument, their Abilities, &c.

[C] No Town was more infested with these People, than that of Munster.] What passed in this Town, from the time that Anabaptism got footing in it, to the Death of John of Leyden, is one of the most memorable Events of the XVIth Century. We meet with an Account of it in several Books. See particularly the Letter, which was written to Erasmus by Conrad Heresbachius (20), in the Year 1536, and which was printed at Amsterdam, in the Year 1637, cum Hypomnematis ac notis Theologicis, Historicis, ac Politicis, Theodorici Strachii, Pastoris Padericensis. See likewise Lambert Hortensius's Book, De Tumultibus Anabap- tistarum, That of John Wigand, De Anabaptismo Publicato, and the Relation of Henry Dorpius, a Citizen of Munster, published in the Year 1536.

[§ Mr BAYLE has omitted, through inadvertence I believe, a Latin Heroic Poem in two Books, composed by Herman Kersebroeck, recited by the Author in a full Assembly of the University of Cologne, and printed at Cologne in the Year 1445, in 8vo. This Piece is dedicated to the Bishop of Munster and Osnabrug, Francis, Count of Waldeck; and the Title is, Belli Monasteriensis contra Anabaptistica Monstra Geſti brevis atque succincta descriptio. REM. CRIT.]

[D] The principal Follies of this Sect have by Degrees been worn off.] It is upon this Account, that the Anabaptists of these times complain, that they are refuted in the same manner their Ancestors were. An illustrious Divine of the Dutch Academy found himself exposed to this Censure, in a Letter, which an Anabaptist published in Dutch; but he replied to the Author, that he did not pretend to impute all the Errors he had taken notice of to the Sect in general. "Has (Sectis) ut minime confundimus in controversiis singulis, ita nec notatos errores omnes omnibus imputamus ---- minus volumus imputatos illis qui intra Waterlandorum dictas confessiones, bona fide, procul fallaciis Mennoniticis, hæerere sese profitentur. Absit ut cuicumq; invito & deprecanti Hæresim impingamus! Sed nec illi aliorum apologiam suscipiant, aut alios esse ac fuisse negent, quos hic Elenchus sub generali Enthusiastarum & Anabaptistarum nomine, ne sciat Juventus nostra, coarguit. Factum tamen novissime, ut diximus modo, à Rypensi scriptore Epistolæ in modum Belgico sermone mihi opponenda. Qui errores hic complures notatos dum à suis Waterlandis amolitur, si modo verè & sincerè, hoc ipso non se aut suos in talibus controversiis peti, sed familias alias ex dicto grege, intellexisse debuit. Frustra ergo est omnis ipsius expostulatio, quasi ignorem quid Rypenses Anabaptistæ sentiant, aut quasi Lectoribus meis imponam (21). ---- As I do not confound these several Sects in particular Controversies, so neither do I impute all the Errors, which I remark, to All without Distinction ---- much less would I impute them to those, who profess to adhere to the aforeſaid Confessions of the Waterlandians, in Sincerity, and free from the Fallacies of Mennon. Far be it from me to fix Heresy upon any Man against his Will, and against his express Declaration to the contrary. But let not such Men undertake the Defence of others, and deny that there are, or ever were, such others, as this Table, for the Information of our Youth, reprehends under the general Name of Enthusiasts and Anabaptists. Yet this was lately done, as I observed before, by the Rypensian Author of an Epistle against me in the Dutch Language. Who, whilst he endeavours to vindicate his own Waterlandians from many Errors here taken notice of, if indeed he does it with Truth and Sincerity, might in this very Attempt have seen, that neither himself nor his Friends were aimed at in such kind of Controversies; which were levelled against other Folds of the aboveſaid Flock. All his Expostulation therefore, insinuating that I am unacquainted with the Opinions of the Anabaptists of Rypen, and that I impose upon my Readers, is nothing to the Purpose." Hornbeek has been so just, as not to impute the Heresies of particular Persons to the Sect in general. "Hic quidem imprimis à communibus illorum & singularibus cœtum dogmatibus discernenda sunt propria aliqua doctorum ipsorum (22). ---- We must here distinguish between

(c) T. Ken from a Dissertation of Frider. Spanhem. ubi supra, De Origine, Progressu, & Nominibus Anabaptistarum; printed at Leyden. John Clappenburg has inserted it in his Gangæne Theologie Anabaptistice, printed at Francfort in 1556, in 4to.

(21) Frider. Spanhem. F. filius, in Elencho Controversiarum pag. 87. Edit. Amst. 1694.

(22) Hornbeek summa Controversie. pag. 183.

Enthusiasm; it does not oppose Magistrates; nor does it at present preach up an entire Freedom from all Subjection, a Community of Goods, and the like. It has been split into a great Variety of Subdivisions [E]; as must always happen to every Sect, which is not supported by Authority. It boasts of a great number of Martyrs [F]; It's Martyrology is a large Volume in Folio. I believe no Author has represented this Sect with so much Justice, as George Cassander [G]. The Protestant Divines

"the particular Opinions of some learned Men among them, and the common and singular Tenets of the Self." He mentions two by Name, the Opinion of James Outreman, and That of Wicks Wallis. The former admits three Essences in the Deity, and pretends, that the Essence of the Father is confined to Heaven, and does not pass this Boundary. The other teaches, that Judas was a good Man, and that he was saved; that he committed no Crime in betraying JESUS CHRIST; that the Priests and Scribes were no more guilty, in persecuting our Lord even to Death; and that both the Thieves were saved. Outreman taught at Harlem in 1605. Wallis taught in the Territory of Groningen, in 1673. He was banished from the Province; and, as he retired into Friesland, the Protestant Synod, which was held at Franker, in the Year 1644, caused him to be expelled that Country.

[E] It has been split into a great Variety of Subdivisions. I should be afraid of tiring my Readers, were I to produce here the Catalogue of the several Anabaptist Sects: I shall content myself therefore with pointing out a Book, where the Curiosity of those, who desire to see this List, may be satisfied. Consult, then, the Preface to John Henry Ottius's Annals of Anabaptism.

[F] It boasts of a great Number of Martyrs. Could it only produce those, who were put to Death for Attempts against the Government, it's bulky Martyrology would make but a ridiculous Figure; but it is certain, that several Anabaptists, who suffered Death courageously for their Opinions, had never any Intention of rebelling. Give me leave to cite an Evidence, which cannot be suspected. It is that of a Writer, who has exerted his whole Force in refuting this Sect (23). He observes, that it's great Progress was owing to three Things. The first was, that it's Teachers despatched their Hearers with numberless Passages of Scripture: The second, that they affected a great Appearance of Sanctity: The third, that their Followers discovered great Constancy in their Sufferings and Deaths. He shews, that not one of these three Particulars is a Mark of Orthodoxy. Concerning the last, he expresses himself thus. "The third Distinction, by which the Anabaptists seduce the Simple and Wavering, is their Contancy in Sufferings and Death. But this can never make their Anti-Christian Doctrine good and wholesome; since, according to St Cyprian, it is not the Punishment that makes the Martyr, but the Cause, for which he suffers. The Scripture (24) assures us, that those only are truly Martyrs and Saints, who suffer for Righteousness, for Truth, and for the Name of CHRIST. But the Anabaptists, which is to be lamented, do not suffer for this Truth, but for a Doctrine of Anti-Christ. And surely Princes and Kings do not take the proper Method to extirpate this Sect, when they put to death these ignorant Wretches, the greatest part of whom have been seduced. They should rather imitate the good Kings Exechias and Josias, who extirpated all kinds of Idolatry out of their Kingdom, and, as far as they could, reformed the true Religion. Thus they should cause the true Apostolical Doctrine to be publicly preached; and, when this done, I am of Opinion, there would be no Occasion for so much Fire, to put to death these poor, ignorant, seduced, People (25)." Afterwards he alleges Examples of Persons, who have suffered courageously, though not in the Cause of Justice. He instances in the impenitent Thief, the Essenians, the Popish Martyrs, Arians, Mahometans, and the Philosophers Zeno, and Socrates. But he gives not the least Hint, that the Anabaptist Martyrs suffered Death for taking up Arms against the State, or stirring up the People to Rebellion. He represents their Martyrs, as weak, ignorant, People. See what is cited below, in relation to George Cassander.

Observe, by the Way, that this Author refutes his Adversaries, just as the Catholics refute the Protestants.

V O L I.

"The first Mark, says he (26), by which they impose upon so many People, is, when, without Sense, Judgment, or Reason, they quote numberless Texts of Scripture at random, as if they fed upon the Bible; whereas, generally speaking, they know not an Hawk from an Handlaw, according to the Proverb. However, the poor Wretches are at a stand, and amazed at such a Profusion of Scripture; and believe they have met with most learned Instructors. But I beseech these poor Wretches to consider, that there never was an Heresy, which did not make use of Scripture, by corrupting and perverting it, to support it's Blasphemies. The Knowledge of Scripture is not the Occasion of Error and Heresy, but the contrary, according to Christ. Do ye not therefore err, because ye know not the Scripture? As to the second Mark, by which the Anabaptists seduce and subvert the Minds of the Simple, namely, the Appearance of Sanctity,"

he proves by Examples, that it is often the Character of false Teachers. It is certain, that the Catholics had to reply to these three Difficulties, I. That the Protestants talk of nothing but the Bible, and are for ever citing it; II. That they condemn Dancing, Finery, frequenting Taverns, &c. III. That many among them die courageously for their Religion. They refute these Difficulties, just as the Protestant Author above-mentioned has refuted them. This is a farther Proof, how greatly prejudicial the Sect of the Anabaptists has been to the Protestants; who were obliged to refute it by Arguments, which were turned against themselves by the Papists.

There are some Anabaptists, likewise, in the Martyrology of Geneva. Take notice, that they have published two Martyrologies, one at Harlem, in the Year 1615, the other at Horn, in 1617. These two Works discovered the Disagreement between the Anabaptists; for those of Horn censured (27) the Martyrology of Harlem, as an unfair Work. In answer to this Censure (28), they had recourse to Recrimination; they charged the Compilers of the Martyrology of Harlem with inserting Persons, who had subscribed the Confession of the Reformed, in relation to the Article of the Incarnation of JESUS CHRIST (29). The principal Compiler of the Martyrology of Horn, was one James Outreman. The Preface to this Work is as injurious to the Lutherans and Calvinists, as to the Papists: It accuses them all of Tyranny (30).

[G] No Author has represented this Sect with so much Justice as George Cassander. He says, that the Mennonites discovered an honest Mind, a pious Mind; and that they erred from the Faith through a mistaken Zeal, rather than an evil Disposition; that they condemned the outrageous Behaviour of their Brethren of Munster; that they taught, that the Kingdom of JESUS CHRIST was to be established only by the Cross: They deserve therefore, adds he, to be pitted and instructed, rather than to be persecuted; and he applies to them a fine Passage of St Austin. "Hujus, quem dixi, Mennonis, cui nunc hic Theodoricus successit, Seditores ferè sunt omnes, qui per hæc Belgicæ & Germaniæ inferioris loca huic Anabaptistice Hæresi affines deprehenduntur; in quibus magna ex parte pii cujusdam animi Argumenta certas, qui, imperito quodam zelo incitati, errore potius quam animi malitia à vero divinarum literarum sensu, & concordati totius Ecclesiæ consensu, desciverunt; quod ex eo percipi potest, quod Monasterienfibus & Batenburgicis furoribus, novam quandam restitutionem regni Christi, quod in delatione impiorum per vim externam positum sit, meditantibus, acerrimè semper resisterunt, & in sola Cruce regni Christi inlaurationem & propagationem consistere docuerunt; quo fit, ut qui hujusmodi sunt, commiseratione potius & emendatione quam insectatione & perditione digni videantur. His enim multo magis convenire videtur, quod de Manichæis disputans inquit Augustinus †. Quan-

(26) Ibid. pag. 5.

• Mark xii. 24.

(27) In the Preface to the Edition of 1625.

(28) They answered it in a Dutch Piece printed at Harlem in 1630, and compiled by Haris Alenfon.

(29) Ottius's Annals, ad ann. 1615. num. 6. pag. 233.

(30) Id. ib. ann. 1626. num. 2. pag. 251.

† Contra E-pistolam Fundamentis

(23) Guy de Bres, Epistle Dedicatory to his Racine, Source & Fondement des Anabaptistes. This Book was printed in 1565.

(24) Matth. v. 11. 1 Pet. iv. 20. 1 Joh. iv. 3.

(25) Guy de Bres, ubi supra, p. 9.

Divines have zealously opposed It in the United Provinces, and have obtained at different Times several Edicts to restrain it [H]. Yet it continues to be tolerated there. They say that Mr van Beuning reasoned one Day upon this Affair with Mr de Turenne [I] in a very strong and lively manner. The Books, which have been wrote concerning

"quam Dominus per servos suos regna subvertat Erroris, ipsos tamen homines, in quantum homines sunt, emendandos esse potius quam perdendos jubet. — Atque Utinam, qui atrociores in hocce miseros sunt animo, mansuetudinem & prudentiam hujus sancti viri imitentur, qui in disputatione adversus Manichæos — his verba est usus §. Illi, inquit, in vos sæviant, qui nesciunt cum quo labore verum inveniunt, & quam difficile caveantur Errores. Illi in vos sæviant, qui nesciunt cum quanta difficultate sanetur oculus interioris Hominis, ut possit intueri solem suum. Illi in vos sæviant, qui nesciunt quibus suspiriis & gemitibus fiat, ut ex quantalacunque parte possit intelligi Deus (31). —

(31) G. Casfander, Præfat. Tractat. de Baptismo Infantium.

"Almost all those of Lower Germany, who lean to the Anabaptist Herefy, are followers of Mennon, who is now succeeded by Theodoric; in which People you may, in general, discover Marks of a certain pious Disposition of Mind; who, carried away by a Zeal, not according to Knowledge, have, erroneously, not maliciously, departed from the true Sense of the Inspired Writings, and the general Consent of the whole Church; which is evident from hence, in that they always strenuously opposed the rash Attempts of those of Munster, who were contriving a new sort of Establishment of the Kingdom of CHRIST, which consisted in destroying the Impious, by external Force; and have always taught, that the Establishment and Propagation of CHRIST's Kingdom depended solely upon the Cross; whence it is, that such Persons as these seem rather to merit Pity and Instruction, than Persecution and Extirpation. And indeed St Austin's Words, in his Controversy with the Manichæans, is more applicable to these People. Though the Lord, says he, overthrows the Kingdom of Error by his Servants, yet he commands that Men, considered as Men, should be instructed and set right, not destroyed. — And I heartily wish, that they, who are so very angry with these poor Creatures, would imitate the Temper and Prudence of this holy Man, who, in his Controversy with the Manichæans, expressed himself thus. Let those, says he, be angry with you, who know not the Difficulty of coming at Truth, and avoiding Error. Let those be angry with you, who know not the Difficulty of curing the Mind's Eye, and enabling it to bear the Light of it's proper Sun. Let those, I say, be angry with you, who know not what sobat Groaning and Pains the least Knowledge of the Deity is acquired." Thus our Author expresses himself in a Book, which he dedicated to the Duke of Cleves, in which he proves, that Infant Baptism was always allowed by the Primitive Church. He looked upon the universal Consent of all Christians for many Centuries, as so strong, a Proof that a Doctrine is Apostolical, that he thought the Anabaptists could not be better refuted, than by the force of this Argument. He had experienced it's Virtue; for he tells us, that an Anabaptist Teacher, who was Prisoner in the Castle of Cleves, together with several of his Adherents, were converted, upon seeing this Collection of Testimonies, in proof of the Antiquity of Tradition in this Point. It was this, which induced Cassander to publish his Work. Let me observe, that he had two Conferences with the Anabaptists, the first at Cologne, with one Matthias, in the Year 1556; the other with John Kremer, who was Prisoner in the County of Mark, in the Year 1558. I transpose the Method of the Writer I borrowed this from; for his Iterum is a Contradiction. "Georgius Cassander, says he (32), bis cum illis coram disputavit, de quo inter cetera Operasol. "1227: semel cum Johanne Kremer, a. c. 1558 LVIII, captivo in comitatu Marciæ, iterum, a. c. 1558 LVI, cum Matthia aliquo, Coloniae."

(32) Hornbeck, summa Controversæ. p. 394.

[H] The Protestant Divines have zealously opposed this Sect in the United Provinces, and have obtained several Edicts to restrain it. They have often challenged the Anabaptists to Disputation. The Synod of Horn passed an Act hereupon, and even had recourse to the Authority of the Governor. "Ecclesie nostræ semper bonum ac utile censuerunt, Adversarios ad Disputationem & Colloquia provocare. Synodus

"Hornana, a. c. 1558 LXXX, & a. c. 1558 LXXVI, implorata eum in finem Gubernatoris Theod. Sonoyi auctoritate — decernit provocandum, &c. (33)" Three or four Synods passed like Acts before the End of the XVIth Century (34). The Churches thought proper, in the Year 1599, to compose a Work, comprehending a Body of Anabaptist Controversies. Arminius, Minister of Amsterdam, undertook it, and began it; but laid it aside, when he was made Professor of Divinity at Leyden; and alledged the Reasons, in the Synod of Alenar in 1605, why he could not go on with such a Work. The Synod of Enchuse, in the Year 1624, employed two Ministers to examine the Confessions of the Mennonites, and discuss the Points in question. One of them being left alone, in the Year 1626, demanded a new Partner; the Synod of Amsterdam, in 1628, appointed Dorellaar to be his Assistant. They applied themselves diligently to their Commission, and published a very good Book, in Dutch, in the Year 1637. It is a Body of Anabaptist Controversies; in which the Variations of this Sect are exactly distinguished (35). The Author, who tells us these Particulars, observes, that the Churches, in Conjunction with the Secular Arm, took care, that this Sect should not encrease; they stand Centinel, says he, to check it, if it produces new Branches, or attempts to exceed it's Bounds. Pro cœrendis aut noviter pullulantibus aut sua pomaria extendentibus juxta cum Politicis Ecclesiæ vigilant (36). He adds, that the Synod of Friesland is perpetually solliciting the States of that Province, to revive the Edict, which was published against the Anabaptists, in the Year 1598; and that they press the Execution of it, with regard to the new Assemblies, and new Places of Worship, which this Sect has ventured to set up. He adds farther, that it being discovered, that the Synod of the Anabaptists, held at Haerlem, in the Month of July, 1649, had set up several new Congregations, it behoved the Orthodox Pastors to restrain, by some Means or other, these Innovations; and the rather, as they were authorized so to do, by an Edict of the Year 1651, by which their High Mightinesses decree, that the Sects should be restrained, and not suffered to spread. Sectas cobendas & in ordinem redigendas, neque permittendum ut in plura loca quam bodie sunt diffundantur (37). After the same manner, the Protellants, in France, were forbid all Places of religious Worship, which they could not prove they were in possession of at the time of the Edicts. See Fotius's Politica Ecclesiastica (38), in which he examines, whether this Sect ought to be tolerated; he distinguishes upon it; but, generally speaking, he inclines most to the Negative.

[I] Mr van Beuning reasoned one Day upon this Affair, with Mr de Turenne. Mr de Turenne, being in a Coach with this Ambassador, expressed to him his dislike at the Toleration, which the States General granted to all sorts of Religions. I omit Mr van Beuning's Answer, with regard to the other Sects; and confine myself to that Part of it, which respects the Mennonites: "Why are you, says he, averse to a Toleration of this Sect? They are very honest People, and the most easy in the World; they never aspire to Employments; they thwart no Man's Ambition; they traverse no Man's Views, by Competition or Intrigues. It were to be wished, that in every Country half the People would make a Conscience of aiming at Dignities; the other half would arrive at them with less Difficulty, and without employing so many mean Arts, and unlawful Methods. We have no reason to apprehend the Rebellion of a Sect, one of whose Articles of Faith is, that it is unlawful to bear Arms. How great a Security is it to a Sovereign, to know that his Subjects are restrained from mutinying by such a Bridle, whatever Imposts or Tallage are laid upon them? The Mennonites contribute their Share to the Charges of the Government. This is sufficient; with this we levy Troops, which are more useful to us, than these People would be, were they to enlist themselves. They edify us by the Simpli-

(33) Id. ib. Note, that he transposes the Order of Time: he places the Synod of 1556, after that of 1580.

(34) Id. ib.

(35) Id. ib. p. 395, 396.

(36) Id. ib. p. 391.

(37) Id. ib. p. 392.

(38) B. 4. Part 1. pag. 538.

concerning this Sect, and against its Tenets, are innumerable [K]. I must not omit, that they have not been able as yet to extinguish it in Switzerland, notwithstanding the rigorous Methods made use of at different times (f). I shall produce some of the Reasons alledged in Justification of their Severity [L]. The Dutch E(f) See Stoupe. Reliq. of Hol. Lett. 4. pag. 100, &c. But, principally, See (Ntius) Annals of Anabaptism, printed at Basil, 1672.

"city of their Manners; they apply themselves to Arts and Business, without squandering away their own Patrimony, or the Wealth they acquire, in Luxury and Vice. Other Communions behave differently: Voluptuousness, and the Expenses of Vanity, are in them a constant Source of Scandal, and a weakening of the State. But they refuse to swear; a mighty matter indeed. The Authority of the Tribunals receive, no Prejudice thereby. These People think themselves as much obliged by an Affirmation of the Truth, as they could be by an Oath. All the use of administering an Oath consists in this, that the Person, who violates it, is in fear of being the more severely punished by God, and exposes himself to Infamy, and even corporal Punishment from Men. The Mennonites fear the same Consequences, if they violate their Affirmation; they are therefore bound by the same Obligation with other Men."

[K] The Books, which have been wrote concerning this Sect, and against its Doctrines, are innumerable. I have pointed out some in the Remark [C]. Others are as follows. Herman Modeus wrote a Book de initiis Sectæ Anabaptistice. Andrew Meibovius wrote, in Latin, An History of the Anabaptists. An anonymous Author published, in Dutch, The Anabaptistic Succession, printed at Cologne, in the Year 1603. There is likewise a Book in Dutch, De Origine & Progressu Sectarum inter Anabaptistas. Mr Ottius, Protector at Zurich, compiled the Annals of this Sect, down to the Year 1671. All these Works are taken notice of, either by Hornbeck (39), or by Micrahus (40), or by Spanheim (41). I do not find, that they mention a Book, which Cassander describes after this manner. "De Origine vero hujus Anabaptistice Sectæ, ejusque Progressu, & quæ ex hoc capite monstra quam varia & absurda atque inter se pugnantia prodierunt, luculente, copiose, summaque cum fide scripsit Nicolaus Bleidick, qui, quod aliquando hujusmodi errore per imperitiam ætatis deceptus fuerit, eo nunc instructior & vehementior est in its erroribus resellendis, id quod et cum B. Augulino commune est (42). — As to the Origin and Progress of this Sect, with the various, absurd, and discordant Manners, which it has produced, they have been clearly, fully, and faithfully described, by Nicolas Bleidick, who, having been formerly deceived by this Error, through the unskillfulness of Youth, was the better qualified, and the more eager to oppose it; a Circumstance common to him with St Austlin." Hornbeck mentions only an History of Saint George, composed by Nicolas Bleidick, Son-in-law of this David, and published by Revius (43). An History of the Anabaptists, in French, was published at Amsterdam, in 1695, and one more ample in 1700. The Authors, who have wrote against them, are Zuvinglius, Luther, Calvin, Melancthon, Oecolampadius, Urban Regius, Justus Menius, Bullinger, John Lascus, Guy de Brie, Tassinus, Hannius, Osiander, Cloppenbourg, Spanheim, and several others, whom it would be tedious to recount (44). But I must not forget a Book called Babel, published in the Year 1621, by Herman Fautellius, Minister of Middelbourg, and one of the Fathers of the Synod of Dort. He shews, in this Work, the prodigious Variety of Opinions, which prevail among the Anabaptists. The latter appealed from him to a Confession of Faith, which they published in the Year 1624, at Amsterdam. They made Reprizals; for they published a Babel of Pædobaptists (45). The Author of it was Antony Jacob (46). Observe, that, at first, they wrote but few Books; at length they produced several Authors, and published many Books, some Didactic or Historical, others Polemical. They printed, at Horn, in 1624, A Confession of Faith, which they confirmed by Passages of Scripture, and other Authorities. At the end of twelve Years, they published another (47), to shew the Agreement of their Sentiments. There have appeared Apologies for their Confessions; likewise Catechisms, and Manuals of Religion. They refute the Declaration of Zurich, in 1644. Abraham de David (48), one of them, published a Book, the same Year, against a Minister of Haarlem, named Bontemps, entitled, "Sinegna Holandicum contra maculas quas P. Bontemps Mennonitis adscripsit. — The Dutch Soap against the Apherions, which Peter Bontemps has thrown upon the Mennonites." The same Minister was attacked in other Works; in the Absteris Accusationum gravium Petri Bontemps, facta per P. V. K. 1643; the Consultatio argumentorum quibus P. Bontemps probare conatur, Anabaptistas injuriosos esse in Deum & Homines, 1643; the Spongia ad ablundas Maculas Petri Bontemps contra certam Anabaptistarum Sectam; the Judicii Henrici Lixivii contra ejusdem maculas; and the Probatio Lixivii D. Bontemps ubi per G. V. V. fidei positum Autoris & Methodus agendi sollicitatur (49).

[L] Some of the Reasons alledged in justification of their Severity. Let me produce here the Substance of a Letter, written the Twenty first of August, 1642, to Mr Hotten, Minister of the Wallon Church at Amsterdam, by Mr Breitinger, Dean of the Ministers of the Church of Zurich. A War being kindled almost all over Europe, in 1622, the Magistrates of Zurich gave orders, that, conformably to the usual Practice of all times, in the like Cases, the People of that Canton should be exercised to the Trade of Arms by Reviews. The Anabaptists refused to obey, and repesented to those, who were preparing to comply, that a War ought to be considered as a divine Chastisement, and that the State was to be defended by a good Life, and not by taking up Arms. They intimated, that they should chuse to abandon their Country, their Wives, their Children, and all their Possessions, rather than repulse the common Enemy by Arms. The good Subjects conceived such Indignation at this, that they were for extirpating the whole Sect; but the Magistrates tried Expedients of a milder Nature. They employed the wisest Heads of the Senate, to regulate with the most moderate Divines, what was to be done in this Conjuncture. This Committee began with recommending themselves to the Prayers of the whole Church; after which they came to these Resolutions; that nothing should be omitted, which might seem proper to remove the ill-grounded Scruples of the Anabaptists; that none of them should be condemned either to Death, or to the Gallies; and that nothing should be done, which favoured of Cruelty, Precipitation, or Passion. After this, it was thought proper to confer with them; and they had their choice of three Places to assemble at, where they might hear what was to be proposed to them. They met at an appointed Place; where the principal Points of the Christian Faith were proposed to them, both by Word of Mouth, and in Writing; all of which they admitted, except one, which related to Magistracy. The Senate, being informed of what passed in these Assemblies, sent for some of their Heads. They appeared; they gave in their Reasons, which were answered with Calmness; but nothing could influence them; yet they were dismissed with a great deal of Clemency. They retired, however, as if they were afraid of some Design upon their Persons; which they confessed the next Day, when they were asked why they shewed a Distrust of the safe Conduct, which the Magistracy had granted them. This Mildness of the Government was displeasing to many Persons; however, it was resolved to try moderate Methods still farther. The principal Heads of the Anabaptists were called together; they were assured, that the usual Oath upon these Occasions should be dispensed with, and that the Government would be satisfied with their Affirmation, or Negation; that they should be excused from bearing Arms, provided they would contribute, by their Prayers, and other pious Means, to the public Good; and that, in requiring of them to be present at the Sermons of the Ministers, they did not pretend to abridge them of the Liberty of disapproving what they should judge contrary to the Word of God; that they only desired they would not pass their Censures, till they had conferred either with their Pastors, or with some other Ecclesiastical Person. They concluded with Promises of Protection, and pathetic Exhortations. But when

(39) In Summa Controversiarum.

(40) In Synagmæ Histor. Eccles.

(41) In Elencho Controversiarum.

(42) G. Cassander, Epist. Dedicat. Tractat. de Baptismo Infantium.

(43) Hornbeck, Summa Controversiarum, p. 373.

(44) Id. ib. pag. 394. and John Vagert, in the Theses which he maintained at Wittenburg in 1688, de Secta Mennonitarum.

(45) These, who bold false Baptism.

(46) An Anabaptist Teacher, and Physician at Amsterdam.

(47) At Dort.

(48) He professes the three initial Letters G. V. V. i. e. Gerard Vryburg, Hoogerkerk, Biblioth. Theolog.

(49) 11. ib.

dition of Moreri distinguishes the Tenets, which are at present peculiar to the Anabaptists; for which reason I shall not give a particular Account of them. It is certain, that the Description, which the Sieur Moreri gives of this Sect, does not agree with the Time, in which he wrote; and I doubt a little, whether ever there was reason to charge them with two Doctrines, which he imputes to them [M]: one is, that they held, that a Woman was obliged to consent to the Passion of those, who desired to obtain her; the other is, that they condemned the Marriage of Persons, who did not adhere to their Sentiments. We must consider as a Legendary Tale what is reported by some Authors, that there have been Roman Catholics, who, upon becoming Anabaptists, have immediately been able to read, and discourse on Matters of Religion; but who, upon returning to Popery, have forgot every thing, and become as ignorant as before (g).

(g) Lindanus, Dial. 3.
Dubitantii, & Thyreas de Demoniacis, cap. 21.
apud The-oph. Raynaud. Theologie Natur.
Diff. 4. n.
33. p. 4c4.

when they found, that these People persisted in their Opinion, they civilly entreated them to retire somewhere else; they gave them permission to carry away as much of their Effects, as was necessary for their Subsistence; they promised Restitution to those, who, being cured of their Errors, should return; and they declared, that the Children and Wives, who should renounce the Sect, and continue in the Country, should enjoy a suitable Portion of the Goods of their Fathers and Husbands. The Anabaptists replied, that the Earth is the Lord's, and not the Magistrate's, and rejected the Conditions. Then they had recourse to Murders and Fines; and, upon their refusal to pay them, and protesting against the Tyranny of these Proceedings, they confiscated their Estates. They now murmured more; they assembled by Night; they petitioned Heaven to repress the Madness of the Government by Plague, Famine, and such other Calamities. It was now absolutely necessary to have recourse to more effectual Remedies; several were imprisoned; most of whom made their escape (50) thro' a Breach, which they made in the Wall, and appeared no less turbulent than before: They were remanded to Prison; they were exhorted from time to time to submit, or willingly to quit the Country; they persisted to demand unconditional Liberty. They offered to give an account of their Doctrine before the whole People; this was denied them; but it was thought proper to offer them a Disputation in Writing, and even to propose to them the Points of Controversy: Their constant Answer was, that they could not defend themselves, whilst they were in Prison. Note, that those of them, who escaped, spread grievous Complaints every where, of the barbarous Treatment they pretended to have met with, during their Imprisonment.

This Apology, you see, is founded upon that long Patience, which preceded so rigorous a Treatment; but there are other more particular Reasons, resulting from the Nature and Constitution of the Government of this Country. The Swiss do not repulse the Enemy with auxiliary or hired Troops, but by fighting every Man in Person; and one way of their Substance is the Permission they give, of levying Troops among them, for the Service of Strangers. It is therefore for the Interest of their Governors, that all their Subjects should be trained to Arms, and be fond of War. This is the Reason, why the Anabaptists were disagreeable to them; People who would neither wound nor kill any one, and who endeavoured to intimidate the most Warlike, by inspiring them with Scruples of Conscience, in relation to the effusion of human Blood, and the Passions inseparable from the Trade of Arms.

[M] I believe there never was reason to charge them with the two Doctrines, which Moreri imputes to them. He learned from Prætorius, that, according to the Anabaptists, the Women were obliged to lend the Use of their Bodies to every Man, who demands it of them; and that the Men, in their turns, are obliged to satisfy the Desires of every Woman, who requires it. Dicunt postremo quolibet mulierem obligatam esse ad cõundum cum quolibet viro eam petente. Et contra eodem vinculo adstringunt omnem virum ad tantundem reddendum cuilibet mulieri hoc ab illo petenti (52). Upon this Principle, there would be a natural Marriage between all Men, and all Women; I mean, that the Sexes would be mutually obliged, in point of Duty, to gratify each other upon Demand. The Duties, which St Paul lays down (53), which teach, that the Husband has not Power over his own Body, and that he ought to consider it as transferred to his Wife; and that she, in like manner, ought to consider the Power over her Body, as transferred to her Husband; those Duties, I say, so just and reasonable in the Marriage of one with one, would have no Bounds; they would extend to the Power of every Man over every Woman, and of every Woman over every Man; a Doctrine so extravagant, so villanous, so abominable, that it is difficult to conceive, that any Sect of the Anabaptists really taught it. The Laws of Nature would, upon this Foundation, be much more difficult to be fulfilled, than the Laws of the Gospel; and we might justly, upon this Account, renew the Complaint, It is a Yoke, which neither we, nor our Fathers, were able to bear. In a Word, it cannot be a Law of Nature; for Nature obliges us to nothing impossible (54). Beauty, and a tender Conscience, united under such a Law, would be a Weight, under which the most Vigorous and Robust would sink. The Handsome, and the Conscientious would have the most reason to complain. And observe, that the Doctrine of a Community of Wives, is much less shocking than this. That does not deprive us of the Liberty of refusing; it does not tie down the Conscience to an indispensable Compliance.

Perhaps I shall not be mistaken, in conjecturing, that the Writers of Heretical Catalogues, Prætorius's Originals, have forged this Chimæra, by giving a bad turn, through Ignorance or Malice, to one of the Consequences of the Doctrine of Equality of Condition. It is certain, that the Anabaptists, at first, taught this Equality; the Consequence of which was, that a young Lady, of a good Family, ought not to refuse Propositions of Marriage from the Son of a Peasant, and that a Gentleman ought not to decline the Courtship of a Country Girl. If our Catalogue-Writers build the absurd Doctrine, which they impute to the Anabaptists, upon this Foundation, are they less impertinent, than the Doctrine itself?

I am as little satisfied, that these Sectaries looked upon the Marriage of other Christians as unlawful; and that they confounded Bastards with the Children of married Persons; that they thought, for instance, that the Birth of Calvin was not less sullied, than that of Erafmus. But Mr Moreri did not look so nearly into the Matter; and, provided he could diffame Heretics, he was satisfied.

ANACREON, a Greek Poet, born at Teos, a Town of Ionia [A], flourished, when Polycrates reigned in Samos [B], and when Hipparchus enjoyed at Athens the Dominion

[A] Teos a Town of Ionia. In the Article TEOS I confute those, who say, that Anacreon was a Native of Teos, on the Euxine Sea.

[B] Flourished when Polycrates reigned in Samos. I have not set down the Olympiad; for I think we need not be so very exact, in regard to a Person who lived Eighty five Years; and indeed those, who pretend to it, differ very much. Eusebius (1), who pitched upon the LXXII Olympiad, could not hinder Suidas from chusing the XXXIId, and Tanquil Faber (2) from pitching upon the LXXIId. But I shall decide nothing as to Suidas; for his Text is certainly corrupted, and his Translators are unpardonable, for having suffered the horrid Blunder, which (52) Prætorius in Elem-cho Herese-ôn.

(53) 1 Cor. vii. 4.

(54) Impossibile necesse tenetur.

(1) Calvisius makes him say, that Anacreon flourished in the 22nd Olympiad, I don't find this in Eusebius's Chronicon, published by Scaliger.

(2) Life of the Great Poet.

tion, which his Father Pisistratus had usurped. This cannot be doubted of, if we read Plato and Herodotus; for we find in Plato, that Hipparchus invited Anacreon to come to Athens (a) [C]; and Herodotus says, that Anacreon was in the Chamber of Polycrates, when Audience was given to an Envoy of Oretes, Governor of Sardes (b) [D]. Cambyses was then King of Persia: This I observe, that my Reader's may more readily apprehend the Time, in which Anacreon lived. This Poet had a delicate Genius; and there are inexpressible Graces, and Charms, in his Poetry: but he was too fond of Pleasures; and of such an amorous Complexion, that he must have Boys, as well as Girls [E]; and, besides, he was addicted to drinking. Doubtless this last Fault made him very remarkable at Athens; since his Statue, which was erected there, represented him as a drunken Man singing (c). If we had all his Poems, we should find in them many Strokes of his voluptuous Humour [F]; but the few Remains we have of them sufficiently prove it. There

(a) Plato in Hipparcho.
Ælian. Var. Hi. l. lib. 8. cap. 2.

(b) Herodot. lib. 3. cap. 121. See also Pausanias, lib. 1. p. 2.

(c) Pausan. ibid. p. 23.

we

is found in his Book, to pass uncorrected. It is said there, that Anacreon lived in the Time of Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, in the LIIId Olympiad; or, according to others, in the time of Cyrus and Cambyses, in the XXVth Olympiad. It appears from Herodotus, that Polycrates and Cambyses died much about the same time (3). Eusebius makes them Contemporaries under the LXIIId Olympiad; and he is in the right: Therefore it is not true, that we ought to reckon Twenty seven Olympiads between these two, and bring back Cyrus from the LVth Olympiad, in which the Epoch of the Persian Monarchy is generally fixed, to the XXVth. Vossius makes Suidas say, that Anacreon lived in the LXIst or LXIIId Olympiad (4), which is not to be found in the printed Suidas. As for Tanaquil Faber, who pitched upon the LXXIIId Olympiad for the exact time of the Life of Anacreon, it is easier to confute his Arguments, than to shew that our Poet did not live at that time. That Critic argues thus: Anacreon came to Athens in the time of Hipparchus: The latter had a Brother, whose Name was Hippias, who solicited Darius, the Son of Hystaspes, to undertake the Expedition, which he made against the Athenians. This being so, says he, you see exactly the Year 489, before JESUS CHRIST, and the LXXIIId Olympiad. I confess, that the Expedition of the Persians against the Athenians, spoken of here, in which Darius was not in Person, though the Expression of Tanaquil Faber implies that he was, belongs to the LXXIIId Olympiad, and the Year 489 before JESUS CHRIST (5). But we must remember, that this pretended Expedition of Darius was not 'till twenty Years after that Hippias was expelled from Athens (6), and that his Exile was in the fourth Year after the Death of Hipparchus, and the eighteenth after the Death of Pisistratus; from whence it must be concluded, that Hipparchus had reigned fourteen or fifteen Years. It is therefore very possible, I. That he might have invited Anacreon to come to Athens thirty Years before Darius the Son of Hystaspes complied with the Instigations of Hippias against the Athenians. II. That the Death of Anacreon might have fallen out some Years before the LXXIIId, and the Four hundred and eighty ninth Year before JESUS CHRIST, which is so precisely set down by Tanaquil Faber, as the time, in which Anacreon lived. I have another Remark to make. He wrote his Lives of the Greek Poets in 1659 (7). Now in his Anacreon, printed in 1660, he makes this Poet flourish Five hundred and fifty five Years, or thereabouts, before JESUS CHRIST; and he agrees with Suidas, that Anacreon might have lived in the LIId Olympiad. Since, says he, he lived very familiarly with Polycrates, who flourished at the same time that Amasis reigned in Egypt. This Critic has been therefore a little too inconsistent in his Chronology as to Anacreon. It can never be said, without a Mistake, of one, who might have flourished in the LIId Olympiad, that he lived precisely in the LXXIIId Olympiad. Besides, it is a wrong way of proving, that a Man might live in the LIId Olympiad, to allege his Intimacy with Polycrates, who was Contemporary with Amasis: For the latter died at the end of the LXIVth Olympiad; and the former two Years after (8).

[C] Hipparchus invited Anacreon to come to Athens. I pretend not to censure Tanaquil Faber for saying, that "Hipparchus, the Son of Pisistratus (9), sent a Ship of fifty Oars to Teos, with very civil and obliging Letters, in which he invited An- creon to cross the Ægean Sea, and make a Voyage to Athens; assuring him that he would find there some Admirers of his Virtue, who were good Judges of the value of noble Compositions, and of the Merit of excellent Persons." I shall not censure these Words, on pretence that I find nothing in Plato but this; "Επ' Ἀνακρίοντα τὸν Θίων πεινυκόντοσιν εἰλάς ἐκόμενον εἰς τὴν πόλιν (10). He caused Anacreon, born at Teos, to come to our City, by sending a Vessel of fifty Oars for him; nor on pretence that Ælian uses the same general Expression (11). For, besides that Faber might have read, in Books unknown to me, the Particulars, which he relates; the Rules of Probability will allow, that Hipparchus wrote, or caused obliging Letters to be written, to Anacreon; and then we may adopt the Supposition of this Critic; I say, we may adopt it with the less scruple, because a Narrative would generally be jejune and ungrateful, if the Originals were literally translated. But I confess I cannot forbear censuring him, when he alleges Plato as his Author.

[D] He was in the Chamber of Polycrates, when Audience was given to an Envoy of Oretes, Governor of Sardes.] This is all the Account Herodotus gives us of it; nevertheless I am very sure, that Tanaquil Faber might say, as he did, That Polycrates, Tyrant of Samos, generally kept Anacreon near his Person, and would have him bear a share both in his Business and Pleasures. For, it being certain on the one hand, that Anacreon (12) was in great Favour with Polycrates, and on the other, that the chief Employment of this Tyrant (13) was his Diversions, we run no great Risk in believing Faber's Account. You know it (adds he); for 'tis not two Years ago since Herodotus was read at your Father's Table. This to me does not seem exact: since there is nothing in Herodotus, from whence we may reasonably infer, that Anacreon had any concern in the Affairs of Polycrates. I am sorry, that some Men of good Parts, and great Learning, should believe, without examining the Matter, that Plato and Herodotus have said all that this learned Critic has fathered upon them. They should have distinguished the Text from the Flourishes and Glosses of the Author, who quotes it.

[E] Of such an amorous Complexion, that he must have Boys, as well as Girls.] Besides Bathyllus, and Smerdias, of whom more hereafter (14), he was in love with the fair Cleobulus. He had like to have killed him in the Arms of his Nurse, by rudely jostling her, as he reared one Day through the Streets, when he was in his Cups; and, not content with this, he abused the Child with railing Language (15). The Nurse wished, that he might one Day commend him more, than he had then abused him. Her Wishes were fulfilled; for Cleobulus grew to be a beautiful Youth; Anacreon fell in love with him, and wrote several Verses in his Commendation (16). Behold a pretty kind of Punishment, and a Nurse finely revenged!

[F] Many Strokes of his voluptuous Humour.] The following Passages, among others, mention the general Theme of his Poetry. "Ἀποτῷ δ' Ἀνακρίων, ὁ αἰῶν αὐτῷ τὴν ποίησιν ἐξαρτίσας μὲν (17). Foolish Anacreon, whose Poetry turns upon nothing but Drinking. "Ἀνακρίων ὁ τῷ αἰῶνι παρὰ μετὰ Σαπφῶ τὴν Ἀσσίαν τὰ πολλὰ ἐν ἑστραπείᾳ ἐρωτικῶν ποίησας (18). Anacreon of Teos, who first, after Lesbian Sappho, spent the greatest Part of his Poems in Love Matters. Let us hear what Horace says of the Amours of Anacreon;

D d d

Non

(3) Herod. lib. 3. cap. 120. & seq.

REMARKS on Tanaquil Faber.

(4) Vossius, de Poët. Græc. p. 22. Hofman says the same of Ter him; but Moreri, who transcribes him likewise, says 60 instead of 61.

(5) See Calvinius.

(6) Petav. Ration. Temporum, lib. 3. cap. 2. & part. 2. lib. 3. c. 9.

(7) See the End of the Preface.

(8) See Calvinius.

(9) Moreri and Hofman say Philostatus.

(10) Plato in Hipparcho.

(11) Ælian. Var. Hi. lib. 8. c. 2.

(12) Pausan. lib. 1. p. 2. Ælian. ubi supra, l. 9. cap. 4. Strabo, l. 14.

(13) Athen. lib. 12. cap. 9, 10.

(14) In Remark [G].

(15) Maximus Tyr. Orat. 11. circa init.

(16) Dion Chrysostom mentions some of them.

(17) Athen. lib. 10. c. 7. pag. 429.

(18) Pausanias, lib. 7. pag. 23.

we meet with his violent Passion for Bathyllus [G]; and if, as this sort of Love was not then branded with Infamy, as it is among Christians, he does not merit such Detestation, as a Christian Poet would in the like Case, the hardened Age he lived in ought to suffer for him: I mean, That the Reader ought to vent his Indignation against the Times, when it cannot discharge itself against particular Persons. Anacreon, notwithstanding his Debaucheries, lived Eighty five Years, if we may believe Lucian, who places him among the long-lived. It is said, that he supported himself, at this great Age, by eating dry Grapes; and that a Grape-Stone, happening to stick in his Throat, choaked him. Valerius Maximus ascribes to easy a Death to a particular Favour of the Gods [H]. No Author that I know of has remarked either the Time or Place of his Death [I], or decided what was his Father's Name [K].

There

Non aliter Samio dicunt aruisse Bathyllo Anacreonta Teium,
Qui persæpe cava testudine flevit amorem (19).

(19) Horat.
Epod. 14.
ver. 9.

Thus soft Anacreon for Bathyllus burn'd,
And oft his Love he sadly mourn'd;
He to his Harp did various Grief rehearse,
And wept in an unpolish'd Verse.

CREECH.

See also Cicero in the fourth Book of his Tusculan Questions, and Suidas.

[G] His violent Passion for Bathyllus.] This Instance refutes the excessive Charity of Ælian, who will not allow us to entertain any ill Suspicion of our Poet's Love for Smerdias, one of Polycrates's Minions (20). What is most to be wondered at is, that Ælian goes upon this general Reason, that we ought not to accuse Anacreon of Incontinency, and Intemperance. Μὴ γὰρ τις ἡμῖν διαβαλλέτω πρὸς Θεῶν τὸν Πονητὴν τὸν Τεινὸν, μὴ δ' ἀνόλασόν εἶναι λεγέτω (21). I intreat that no one would slander the Teian Bard, or call him intemperate. Polycrates became furiously jealous, when he perceived, that our Poet had insinuated himself very far into the good Graces of Smerdias, by the flattering Verbes he made on him; and his Jealousy rose to high, that he caus'd the Youth to be shaven (22). The Rival, apprehending very well the meaning of this, very complaisantly wrote a Poem upon the Occasion, in which he took care not to displease Polycrates. They, who remember these four Verses of Petronius,

Quod solum formæ decus est, cecidere capilli,
Vernantefque comas tristis abegit hyems.
Nunc umbra nudata sua jam tempora mœrent,
Areæque * attritis ridet adusta pilis.

* Area, Ulcus
genus est in capite.
Cell.
A Sore in the Head, which makes the Hair fall.
REM. CRIT.

His Form's sole Ornament, his Locks are shed;
Crupt are the springing Honours of his Head,
And his vex'd Temples mourn their ravish'd Shade.
Whilst the gall'd Wound rejoices to be bare,
Free from the fretting Load of cumbrous Hair.

will conclude, from the Action of Polycrates, that he had rather his Minion should lose his Beauty, than find him unfaithful. Strabo observes, that Anacreon perpetually mentions this Tyrant of Samos in his Verses; τὸν συνδίδωσεν Ἀνακρεὼν ὁ μελοποιεὺς, καὶ δὴ καὶ πᾶσα ἡ ποίησις πλήρης ἐστὶ τῆς περὶ αὐτοῦ μνήμης (23). Cum hoc vixit Anacreon Lyricus, & mentione ejus preplevit sua carmina; from whence Fossius had Reason to conclude, that it was no wonder he was beloved by him. "Polycrates, says he (24), carus" suit. Quod mirum? cum versibus suis cum celebraret? It should be quid mirum? cum versibus suis eum celebraret? — He was dear to Polycrates; and no wonder, since he celebrated him in his Verses." We shall see, in the Article BATHYLLUS, how Tanaquil Faber has justified the Amours of Anacreon.

[H] A Grape-Stone — choaked him. Valerius Maximus ascribes so easy a Death to a particular Favour of the Gods. His Words are these: "Cui quidem (Pindaro) crediderim eadem benignitate Deorum & tantum poeticae facundiae, & tam placidum vitæ finem attributum; sicut Anacreonti quoque, quamvis statum humanæ vitæ modum supergresso; quem vitæ passæ succo tenues & exiles virum reliquias soventem unius grani pertinacior in aridis faucibus humor absorpsit (25). — This

(25) Valer.
Max. lib. 9.
cap. 12. See also Plin. l.
7. cap. 7.

"Poet (Pindar), in my Opinion, owed his great Genius for Poetry, and the easiness of his Death, to the same Kindness and Favour of the Gods; as was likewise the Case of Anacreon, though he had exceeded the usual Bounds of human Life; for, as hecried his little Remains of Strength with dried Grapes, the Stone of one, which he endeavoured in vain to swallow, was the cause of his Death."

[I] No Author that I know of has remarked the Time or Place of his Death.] It is true, Suidas says, that Anacreon, being driven from Teos, on account of the Revolt of Hippias, retired to Abdera, in Thrace: But this does not imply, that he died there; we can only conjecture from it, with some Probability, that he did. And, indeed, Anacreon must have been very old at that time, since the Victories, which the Persians obtained over the Favourers of the Revolt of Hippias, are much later than the Death of Hippias, and fall under the LXXXIst Olympiad. It may be conjectured from this Passage of Suidas, that, after Anacreon had left Athens, whither Hippiarchus had invited him, he retired to Teos; which makes it probable, that he retired also to Teos, after the Ruin of Polycrates; and that Hippiarchus sent him thither the Fifty-Oar'd Vessel, as Tanaquil Faber asserts. We need not wonder, that Anacreon made choice of Abdera for his Retirement; it being a Town, which those of Teos had built, after they had left their Habitations, when Harpagus, the Lieutenant of Cyrus, made himself Master of Ionis (26). Strabo does not speak of their Transmigration in this manner: He only says, that the Teians, in the time of Anacreon, being unable to bear the Insults of the Persians, retired to Abdera (27). This may be the same Event, mentioned by Herodotus; for Harpagus invaded Ionis in the LXIth Olympiad, at which time Anacreon made some Figure in the World.

(26) Herod.
lib. 1. cap.
168.

(27) Strabo,
lib. 14.

[K] No Author has ——— decided what was his Father's Name.] Suidas mentions four Persons, who have passed for the Father of Anacreon. If it be a Compliment to Homer, that several Towns contended for his Birth; it must be confessed, that this is a very poor one to Anacreon; for, in short, it is a Proof of the Obscurity of his Family, rather than any thing else. For had his Father been a noted Man in Teos, Authors would not so easily have lost sight of him, or have confounded him with others. Nevertheless I find, that Madam Dacier cites Plato to prove, That Anacreon was a Man of great Birth, and related to Solon, whose Father was of the ancient Family of King Codrus, and his Mother Cousin German to the Mother of Pisistratus (28). He pretends to prove this from a Passage in the Dialogue of Temperance, where she finds, that the Father of Charmides descended from the ancient Family of Dropidas, and of Anacreon, and Solon, which had been always distinguished from others by their Beauty, Virtue, and Riches. Persuaded as I am of the Learning of this Lady, I find myself reduced to believe one of these three things; either that her Plato is very different from mine; or that she has not taken this Passage from the Original; or that she has too closely followed the ill Translation of Serranus. I find in my Plato nothing more, than that the paternal Family of Charmides had been celebrated by Solon, Anacreon, and several other Poets, as being remarkably endowed with the Advantages of Beauty, Virtue, &c. "Ἡ τε γὰρ πατὴρ σου οὐκ οἶκία ἢ Κερτίη τῷ Δρωπίδῃ καὶ ὑπὸ Ἀνακρεὼτος καὶ ὑπὸ Σόλωνος καὶ ὑπ' ἄλλων πολλῶν Παιστών ἐγκωσμαιμένη παρρησιάζεται ἡμῖν ὅς διαφέρουσα καλλῆς τε καὶ ἀρετῇ καὶ τῇ ἀλλῇ λεγομένη εὐδαιμονία." This is the Passage, as it stands in the Edition of Frankfort in 1603. That of Serranus differs

Whether A-NACRE-
ON was a Man of great Birth.

(28) Life of Anacreon.

(d) Tanaquil, Faber, Notis in Anacreon. Madam Dacier bis, Daughter, does not always agree with him in this. See her Preface to Anacreon.

There are several Translations of his Poems [L]: But some Critics will not allow, that all the Verses, which are at this day extant under his Name, are His (e). They, who have mentioned his Love for Sappho, have not regarded Chronology, as I shall prove in the Article of That Lady. It is said that a Present of Money, which Polycrates sent him, gave him so much disturbance, that he could not sleep for several Nights; and that he returned it to That Prince. This is not very probable, tho' Stobæus gives us Aristotle for his Voucher. Gyraldus cites only the Greek Collections of Arsemus in proof of it (e).

(e) Gyrald. Hist. Poet. Dial. 9. pag. 471.

fers only in the Word ἰγνακισμῶν, which, by a Mistake of the Printers of Frankfort, has been put instead of the ἰγνακισμῶν of the Edition of Serranus; but Ficinus's Version is much better, though perhaps not so good as the following. "Nam, quæ paternum vobis genus est, domus Critiæ filii Dropidæ, tum ab Anacreonte, tum à Solone, multæque aliis Poetis laudata nobis tradita fuit, ut præcellens forma, virtute, cæterisque quæ felicitatis nomine veniunt. — For we find, that the House of Critias, the Son of Dropidas, from which you are descended by the Father's side, was celebrated by Anacreon, Solon, and many other Poets, as being remarkable for Beauty, Virtue, and other Perfections, which Happiness includes." Serranus's Version is as follows. "Nam Paternum quidem Genus, quod cum isto Critia commune habes, à Dropida, Anacreonte, Solone, & aliis multis celeberrimis Poetis, deductur, & vobis traditur, veluti robore & virtute & alio omni genere felicitatis instructissimum. — For your paternal Descent, which is common to you with Critias, is derived from Dropidas, Solon, and many famous Poets, and descends to you adorned with Strength, Virtue, and every kind of Happiness." I omit observing, that one might be defended, by the Father's Side, from Solon and Anacreon, without Solon and Anacreon being related to each other. Every Person has two sorts of paternal Relations, the Family of his Father's Father, and That of his Father's Mother.

[L] There are several Translations of his Poems. Those, which Madam Dacier has mentioned, are as follows. The Reader will be pleased to see her Opinion of them. "It is a long time, says she, since Anacreon was translated into French by Remi Belleau; but, besides that his Translation is in Verse, and consequently very unfaithful, it is in such an antiquated Style, that it is impossible to find any Pleasure in reading it. It was translated into Italian some Years since; but the Translator has no more kept to the Greek, than Remi Belleau; nevertheless his Translation is pleasing enough, tho' it is sometimes very different from the Sense of Anacreon, and though he takes every Moment so great a Liberty, that it ought rather to be accounted a Paraphrase, than a Translation. The Latin Version, part whereof was done by Henry Stephens, and the other by Elias Andreas, which is generally used, seems to me to be the best; yet it is not without Faults, and, being also in Verse, it is often very obscure, and, in several Places, attributes to Anacreon what he never thought of."

This is what Madam Dacier says, in the Preface to her Anacreon, published at Paris, in the Year 1681, with the Greek Text on one side, and the Translation in French Prose on the other, and some Remarks on each Piece of Anacreon. Give me leave to add, that the Translation of Remi Belleau appeared in the Year 1556. It has been said, that Daurat was the true Author of the Translation, which Henry Stephens ascribed to himself. Colomies assures us, that Isaac Vossius told him, That he had an Anacreon in his Possession, in which Scaliger had remarked with his own Hand, that Henry Stephens was not the Author of the Latin Version of the Odes of That Poet, but John Dorat (29). The Italian Translation, which Madam Dacier speaks of, is That of Bartholomew Corsini, which Mr Regnier des Mairais caused to be printed, at Paris, in the Year 1672 (30). I do not wonder, that Madam Dacier takes no Notice of the Translation of Anacreon done by a Youth, who is since become very famous under the Name of the Abbot de la TRAPPE; for I believe That Translation was never printed; Mr Baillet informs us of many things relating to it. "He knew so well,

"ten Years of Age, he understood the Greek Poets very well, especially Homer; and he had scarce attained to the Age of twelve or thirteen Years, when he published a new Edition of the Works of Anacreon, with Greek Remarks, which were admired by the Learned. This Edition appeared in 8vo, at Paris, in the Year 1639; and Time has not in the least diminished the Astonishment, which these Remarks still give to those, who compare them with the tender Age of the Author. I say nothing of a French Translation, which he then composed of the same Poet; tho' it pleased very much those, who, at that time, were perfecting our Language, and showed, that he could write as politely in French, as he understood Greek and Latin." Mr Baillet mentions neither the Place, nor the Year of the Impression, and does not so much as say, in general, that the Work had been published; which makes me believe, that it had only appeared in Manuscript. I am the more confirmed in this Thought, by finding, that Mr de Longe-Pierre says not a Word of this Translation; though he takes notice, that Henry Stephens rendered the same same Odes of Anacreon into French Verse, which he afterwards turned into Latin. He observes likewise, that Ronsard translated many of them; he says this in the Preface to his Version. His Work was published in the Year 1684. The Greek (2) is on one side, and the French Translation in Verse on the other: And there are critical Remarks at the end of each Piece. Mr Regnier des Mairais, perpetual Secretary to the French Academy, gave, in the Year 1693, a Version of Anacreon in Italian Verse, with Remarks.

(32) See the Nouvelles de la République des Lettres, for Novemb. 1783. Art. 85.

The following curious Supplement is taken Word for Word out of a Letter, which I have received from Mr de la Monnoie. "No earl has been taken, hitherto, to collect, and examine several curious Particulars, concerning the Poems, which are extant, of Anacreon. It has been said, that Henry Stephens first brought them to light; but, Where or How, few Persons know. He met with the Ode Ἀντακρίναι αἱ γυναικες, on the Cover of an old Book, as we read in Vislorius, who inserted it in the seventeenth Chapter of the twentieth Book of his Varie Lectiones. 'Till then, nothing had been seen of Anacreon, but what Aulus Gellius and the Anthologia had preserved. By chance two Manuscripts, containing several Pieces of this Poet, fell into the Hands of the same Henry Stephens. He was obliged for the first to Joh. Clement, an Englishman, Servant to Sir Thomas More; and he brought the second, after a long Journey, from Italy into France. And, having carefully compared the one with the other, he formed the Edition, which he published, the first time, at Paris, in the Year 1554. This Book met with a Reception attended with different Opinions. Most of the Learned looked upon it as an happy Discovery; some distrusted it. Robertel, in his Dissertation concerning the Art of correcting Books, did not acknowledge it to be genuine. Fleisius Ursinus inserted no other Poems of Anacreon in his Edition of the Greek Lyrics, but those, which he found mentioned by the ancient Authors, as specifying the rest. It were to be wished, that the two Manuscripts, before mentioned, and which are the only ones, which have been seen, had been preserved. But Henry Stephens, unhappily falling into a kind of Distraction towards the latter end of his Days, suffered them to perish with several others, which he communicated to no one, not so much as to his Son-in-law Casaubon. He translated into French Verse the same Odes of Anacreon, which he rendered into Latin Verse. Eas Anticreontis Odas, says he, in the Preface to his Annotations upon the Paris Edition of Anacreon, in 4to, 1554, quas jam ante Gallicas feceram, in a (29) Colomies, Opusc. pag. 108.

(30) See the Acta Erudit. 1693. pag. 236.

(31) Baillet, Enfance célèbre, p. 359. "Affiduity and Application to his Studies, that at

"liquet amicorum gratiam Latinè quoque aggressus
 " sem vertere. What has been reported of Isaac Vof-
 " fius, who said, that he had an Anaxoron in his " Possession, wherein Scaliger had noted with his " own Hand, that John Dorat was the Author of the " Latin Translation of this Poet, ascribed to Henry

 " Stephens, ought not to be regarded. Either Vof-
 " fius was mistaken, or Scaliger was misinformed.
 " Henry Stephens, who was no Plagiary, was very " capable of making such a Version as That; and,
 " if it had been Dorat's, he would not have failed
 " to have laid claim to it. It was from this that " Remi Belleau made his in Frenib Veris, which " perhaps appeared so fine to Henry Stephens, that,
 " after he had read it, he durst not publish That,
 " which he had composed in the same Language.

" Richard Renvoisy, Master of the singing Boys of " the Holy Chapel at Dijon, made, according to " the Testimony of Antony du Verdier, page 34 of " his Bibliotèque; another French Version of the " Odes of Ana reem. In This probably du Verdier is " mistaken. I take it to be the Version of Belleau,
 " which Renvoisy set to Music in the Year 1558,
 " or 1559; which du Verdier himself gives us suf" ficiently to understand, when, at Page 1222, he " quotes this Renvoisy only as a Musician. As for " the French Version of the same Poet, composed by
 " Mr Boutbillier de Rance, at the Age of twelve
 " or thirteen Years, it was never printed; and it " is very likely, that, if there was such an one,
 " it was in Prose, though the Authors, who have
 " mentioned it, do not positively say so."

(a) In Latin Taberna.
 Hence it is called Ta-bernas.

ANANIA (JOHN LAURENCE d') a Native of Taberna (a) in Calabria, lived about the End of the XVIth Century. He is Author of a Geographical Book in Italian, and a Latin Work, intitled, De Natura Dæmonum, which was printed at Venice, in the Year 1582, in 8vo. The other Work is intitled Cosmographia, ovvero l'universale Fabrica del Mondo—Cosmography, or the Universal Fabric of the World, and was printed at Venice, in the Year 1576, in 4to (b). Vossius has omitted this Author in his Catalogue of Geographers.

(b) Bandrad
 Tom. 2.
 pag. 446.
 mentions only the Edition of Venice in 1584.

ANAXAGORAS, one of the most illustrious Philosophers of Antiquity, was born at Clazomenæ, in Ionia, about the LXXth Olympiad, and was a Disciple of Anaximenes. His noble Extraction, his Riches, and the Generosity, which induced him to resign his whole Patrimony to his Relations [A], made him very famous. He applied

[A] To resign all his Patrimony to his Relations.
 Before the Gospel had taught Men to renounce the World and it's Riches, in order to make a swift Progress towards Perfection, some Philosophers were sensible of this, and parted with their worldly Goods, to attend more freely to the Study of Wisdom, and the Search of Truth. They believed, that the Cares of a Family, and an Inheritance, were Clogs, which hindered our Advancement towards the End most worthy of our Esteem. Anaxagoras and Democritus (1), were of this Opinion. "Quid ergo, (says Cicero) (2), aut Homero ad delectationem animi ac voluptatem, aut cuicumque docto desuisse unquam arbitramur? An in ita se res haberet, Anaxagoras, aut hic ipse Democritus, agros & Patrimonia sua relinquissent, huic discendi quærendique divinæ delectationi toto se animo dedissent? — What then can we think wanting to complete the Satisfaction and Pleasure of Homer, or any other learned Man? Without this perfect Happiness, would Anaxagoras, or this Democritus, have resigned their Possessions and Patrimones, and given themselves up entirely to the divine Pleasure of acquiring Knowledge?" It was to such a Renouncing of the World, that Anaxagoras thought himself indebted for his Learning, or, to use his own Expression, for his Safety. "Quali porro studio Anaxagoram flagrare credimus? Qui, cum de diutina pregrinatione patriam repetisset, possessioneque deserta vidisset, 'non essem,' inquit 'ego salvus,' nisi ista perisissent (3). — How eager after Knowledge must we suppose Anaxagoras to have been; who, upon returning home, after a long Absence from his native Country, and seeing his Possessions lying desolate and in ruins, made use of this Expression, 'Had not these perished, I myself should not have been safe.' Socrates, with his usual Irony, shews, that "the Sophists of his Time were wiser than Anaxagoras; for, instead of quitting their Patrimones, as he had done, they took a great deal of pains to enrich themselves, being convinced of the Folly of the old Times, and persuaded, that the principal Wisdom consisted in promoting one's own Interest; that is to say, in the Art of heaping up great Riches." *Τὴν αὐτὴν γὰρ Ἀναξαγόρα φασὶ συμβῆναι ἢ ὕμιν. καὶ λαλοῦσθαι γὰρ αὐτὸ πολλὰ χρημάτων καὶ μαλίσσας, καὶ ἀπολίσσαι πάντα, ὥστε αὐτὸν ἀνίστασθαι λέγεσθαι. λέγουσι δὲ καὶ περὶ ἄλλων τῶν παλαιῶν ἐτεσὶ τοιαῦτα. τὸ τοῦ μὲν ἐν μοι δεκάς καλὸν τεκμεῖον ἀποφαίνει περὶ σοφίας τῶν νῦν πρὸς τὴν περὶ τῶν καὶ πολλοῖς συνδεκῆναι, οὗ τὸν σοφὸν αὐτὸν αὐτὸ μάλα δὲ σαφὲν εἶναι. τὴν δ' ὅρα ἵσθαι ὅτι ἐὰν πλείονος ἀργύρου σίρῃσθαι (4). Cum Anaxagoras, contra ac vobis*

contigit, amplum patrimonium cum accepisset, neglexisse dissipasseque dicitur, adeo stulte philosophatus est: deque cæteris illorum sapientibus alia quædam bujusmodi tradunt. Quapropter optimam banc attulisse conjecturam videris, quod sapientes nostri superioribus præstant, multique in hoc consentiant, sapientem in primis sibi ipsi sapere oportere. Hujus autem hæc est summa, ut argentum plurimum acquiratur. This puts me in mind of a Distinction which I have read in Aristotle. "We find, says he (5), that Anaxagoras, and Thales, and such like Philosophers, were wise, but not prudent Men, because they were ignorant of what was useful to them (6): They were acquainted with abstruse, lofty, wonderful, and divine Things; but they turned to no account; for they disregarded the good things, and Advantages of this Life." This is the Sense of a great many Men; they condemn all Employments, which do not tend to raise a Fortune. Whatever does not treat de pane lucrando, or is of no use, ἀπὸς τὰ ἀναγκαῖα, that is, in the vulgar Phrase, to make the Pot boil (7), entersquidem seems to them vain and superfluous. Anaxagoras had quite another Notion. He abandoned his Lands to the Mercy of the Sheep, that he might apply himself wholly to Astronomy and Physic. Philo (8), Plutarch (9), vident con Philostatus (10), Himerius (11), and Suidas, speak of this. Democritus and Crates are seldom forgot upon this Occasion. The Fathers of the Church likewise mention it (12): But St Chrysostom (13) declares, that the Conduct of these Philosophers was mere Folly, and not a Contempt of Riches. The Devil, says saire bailliver he, has always been studious to depreciate and defame God's Creatures, because of the Incapacity of some Men to make a right use of their Money. This is paying the Heathens in their own Coin, who accounted all the Christians, who parted with their Possessions, and retired into Solitudes, Fools and Madmen (14). Thus things are praised or blamed, according to the different Prejudices of Men. Observe, that Apollonius [?] of the Tyaneus censured the Conduct of Anaxagoras, as the Action of a Philosopher, who had more regard to the MOCR Advantage of the Brasts, than that of Men (15). Vig nere has miserably rendered the Passage of Apollonius: he makes him say, that Anaxagoras, giving himself up to the feeding of Camels, and white Cattle, employed his Philosophy rather in the Service of the Brute Creation, than of Men. The Latin Version of Rhinucci is equally bad. Aiebat Clazemenius Anaxagoram gregibus & camelorum armentis nutriendis intentum pecorum gratia magis quam hominum philosophatum esse.

(1) See Remark [B] of the Article DEMOCRITUS.

(2) Cicero, Tusculan. lib. 1. cap. 10.

(3) Valer. Maxim. l. 3. cap. 7. n. 6. in extern.

(4) Plato, in Hippo a major, (and not in Phædo, as Menage quotes it, in Diog. Laert. lib. 2. n. 6.) pag. 2346.

(5) Arist. Eudem. l. 1. lib. 1. cap. 7. pag. 184.

(6) Enchiridion, lib. 1. cap. 1. § 1. Enchiridion, lib. 1. cap. 1. § 1. Enchiridion, lib. 1. cap. 1. § 1.

(8) Philo de Vita con-

(9) Philo de Vita con-

(10) Philo de Vita con-

(11) Himer. apud Philo. pag. 1087.

(12) Laet. l. Enchiridion, lib. 1. cap. 1. § 1.

3. cap. 22. Origen. contra Celsum, lib. 2. 1. cap. 2.

(13) See lit 7th

(14) See Rutilius

(15) Philostr. in Vita Apollon. li. 1.

applied himself wholly to the Study of Nature, without intermeddling in any public Affairs; which occasioned some One to ask him, whether he had no Concern at all for his Country. His Answer was admirable; nor could a Christian Philosopher have given a better; Yes, said he, stretching his Hands towards Heaven, I have an extraordinary Concern for my Country (a). He was asked, another time, To what End are you born? he replied, To contemplate the Sun, the Moon, and the Heavens (b). Accordingly he placed the supreme Good, or the End of Human Life, in Contemplation, and that Freedom of Condition, which it produces (c). He was but Twenty Years of Age, when he began to philosophize at Athens (d). Some Authors say, He was the First, who removed the School of Philosophy thither, which had flourished in Ionia from the Time of it's Founder Thales; which I shall examine in the Article of the Philosopher ARCHELAUS. It is certain he had several Famous Disciples at Athens, and particularly Pericles, and Euripides; and some add Themistocles and Socrates. But Chronology is against them as to Themistocles (e). There is scarce any thing, which gives us a greater Idea of his Ability, than the Nature of the Progress, which Pericles made under him; for he inspired him with those grave and majestic Manners, which enabled him to govern the Republic (f); he qualified him for that sublime and victorious Eloquence, which made him so powerful (g); and he taught him to fear the Gods (h) without Superstition. Add to this, that his Counsels assisted him greatly in supporting the Weight of Government (i). He distinguished himself by the Novelty and Singularity of his Doctrines. He taught, that there were Hills, Vallies, and Inhabitants

(f) Id. in Pericles, pag. 154.

(g) See Remarks [E] of the Article PERICLES, at the end.

(h) See Remarks [A] and [B] of the same Article, etc.

(i) See Citation (19).

in

This Censure looks like a Caviil; for, to say nothing of the Profit, which public Pasturage bring to Men, is it not plain, that Anaxagoras had reason to believe, that those Lands, which he forsook, would be cultivated by his Relations? The four Verses in the Life of Virgil, which begin with Sic vos non vobis, contain a great Truth, which is, that the Care, which is taken of Sheep, Oxen, &c. redounds to the good of Men. Eusebius has been more just to Anaxagoras, than Apollonius Tyaneus; for he represents the abandoning of his Lands, as a greater Proof of his Attachment to Philosophy, than all the other Philosophers had ever given. Φασι γὰρ ὅς τις ἀπὸ τῶν ἀγρῶν ἀποστρέφεται, καὶ τὴν αὐτῆς χώρας δι' αὐτὴν εἰσὶν ἰσχυρὰν ὠφελίαν (16). Et vero superiores omnes quantum in Physiologia studio superavit, vel ex eo intelligi, quod agros ipse suos magnitudine passionis uberrimos ejus amore reliquerit. I make use of the Vulgar Version, which is that of Francis Vigerus; but I observe, that it is faulty as to μολύβδον γάλακτος, which ought to be rendered agros ovibus depascendis, and not agros magnitudine passionis uberrimos.

There remain still some Remarks to be made on the Disinterestedness of Anaxagoras. He was one, who would have very well discharged the Duties of public Offices; for his Counsels were not only very serviceable to Him, who governed the Athenians, but even necessary (17); yet he always avoided interfering with the Government. He would never make use of the Authority and Credit of Pericles, to raise himself to Employ; but confined his Desires to Philosophical Speculations, being altogether free from all Ambition, which many other learned Men are incapable of subduing, even when they have not, as he had, an insight into Affairs of State, or the Protection and Favour of those in Authority. I question not but Cicero had our Philosopher particularly in view, when, speaking of several great Men, he says, That it was a Misfortune to the Commonwealth, that they wholly applied themselves to the Study of Nature. His Words are, "Eadem autem alii prudentia, sed con- filio ad vitæ studia dispari, quietem atque otium sequuti, ut Pythagoras, Democritus, Anaxagoras, à regendis civitatibus totos se ad cognitionem rerum transferunt; quæ vita propter tranquillitatem, & propter ipsius scientiæ suavitatem, quæ nihil est hominibus jucundius, plures quàm utile fait rebus publicis delectavit (18). — With the same Prudence, but with a view to different Studies, others, seeking for Retirement and Ease, as Pythagoras, Democritus, and Anaxagoras, have quitted the Government of States, to give themselves wholly up to the Study of Nature: a Life, which, on account of it's Tranquillity, and the Sweetness of Knowledge itself, has engaged more Persons to embrace it, than the public Good can spare." He not only slighted all Honours, but was careless, even with regard to the Necessaries of Life. He considered not, how easy it was for him to heap up Riches, by the Credit and Friendship of Pericles; nor did he provide against the Wants of old Age. His Enquiries into the Secrets of Nature swallowed up all his other Passions. He found, at last, that his Contempt of Riches ought not to have been so great; for, in his old Age, he was reduced to Want, and, in this Necessity, he took up a calm Resolution to starve himself to death; but Pericles, having notice of it, prevented it. Let us hear Plutarch: "Pericles, says he (19), assisted several poor People with his Riches, and, among others, Anaxagoras; of whom it is related, that, Pericles being so busy, that he had no leisure to think of him, he found himself forsaken by every one in his old Age, and, having muffled up his Head, laid himself down with a Resolution to die of Hunger. Pericles, being informed thereof, went immediately to him in great Concern, and earnestly entreated him to alter his Resolution, and live, bewailing, not Anaxagoras, but himself, that he should lose such a faithful and wise Counsellor in the Occurrences of public Affairs. Anaxagoras, upon this, uncovered his Face, and said to him; 'They, Pericles, who desire the Light of a Lamp, put Oil into it to keep it alive.' Would you see another Proof of the little Ambition of this Philosopher? They offered to pay to his Memory all the Honours he could desire; but he rejected the Favour, and only desired, that the Day of his Death might be a Play-day for School-Boys. Τὰς διδασκάλους ἀπὸς τιμῆς, ἡττοῦσθαι τὴν ἡμέραν ἐκείνην καὶ τὴν ἀν' τελευτῆς τὴν παιδείαν ἀπέναι παίζον σχολάζειν ἀπὸ τῶν μαθημάτων (20): Honoribus qui offerbantur recusavit, postulatque ut ea qua decessisset vivis die pueris scholarum vocatio et discendi concederetur. Was not this to wish, that his Death might be a Subject of Pleasure to many, and not of Affliction; and that he had an extraordinary contempt for every thing, which flatters most the Vanity of Mortals?

I shall make two short Reflexions on this Passage of the Life of Pericles. It informs us, that Anaxagoras was very well skilled in Politics, though he only made Profession of speculative Philosophy. Why then should we not believe, that he composed the Treatise de Regno, out of which Ælian alleges a Sentence (21)? Granting it to be the Work of another Anaxagoras, as Meursius and Menage suppose (22), yet the Reason, which Menage gives for it, is not a good one (23): He himself would have been sensible of it, if he had recollected this Passage of Plutarch. This is my first Reflexion. The other is, that the old Age, ascribed to our Philosopher, does not agree with the Account of those, who say, that he came to Athens at twenty Years of Age, and that he lived there thirty Years. He must then have received Pericles's Visit, mentioned by Plutarch, at about fifty Years of Age. I shall conclude with a Passage of Ovid, which tells us, that the first Astronomers must needs have been free from Sensuality, and from the (19) Plutarch in Vit. Pericli, pag. 162.

(20) Id. in Præcept. Reip. gerend. p. 820.

(21) Diog. Laërtius, as appears by the Text of this Article, relates the Circumstances somewhat differently.

(22) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 4. c. 14.

(23) See Kuhniius's Notes upon this Passage of Ælian.

(24) Allius igitur fuerit ab Anaxagora postro, &c. Menage, in Laërt. l. 2. n. 7. He draws the Conclusion from Anaxagoras's never applying himself to Affairs of Government.

(a) Diogen. Laërt. l. 2. n. 6, 7.

(b) Id. lib. n. 10.

(c) Clem. Alexandrin. Stromat. lib. 2. pag. 416.

(d) Diogen. Laërt. ibid. n. 7.

(e) Plutarch. in Themist. pag. 112.

(16) Euseb. Prepar. Evang. lib. 14. cap. 14. pag. 730.

(17) See below, Plutarch's Words, Citation (19).

(18) Cicero de Oratore, lib. 3. c. 16. (and not lib. 2. as Mr. Menage quotes it in Diog. Laërt. n. 7.) fol. 91. B.

in the Moon; and that the Sun was a fiery Mass of Matter [B], and bigger than Peloponnesus (k). He said, that Snow was black (l), for which he assigned a very poor reason; for he built his Notion, on the one Side, upon this, that Snow is condensed Water; and he supposed, on the other side, that black is the true Colour of Water (m). He believed, in general, that our Eyes are incapable of discerning the true Colour of Objects, and that our Senses deceive us; and that therefore it is the business of Reason, not of our Eyes, to judge of things (n). He held that the Heavens were made of Stone (o), and that it was the Swiftness of their Motion, which hindered them from falling (p). Others assure us, that he believed the Heavens to be of the Nature of Fire as to their Essence; and that the Stones of the Earth being snatched upwards, and set on fire, by the Rapidity of it's Revolution, became Stars (q); and that, at the beginning, Animals were formed out of the Earth, and a warm Moisture (r), and that afterwards they produced each other, the Males on the right side, and the Females on the left (s). He admitted as many sorts of Principles, as compound Bodies; for he supposed, that each kind of Body was made up of many similar Particles, which he called Homœomeria, by reason of this Conformity. But this led him to grant a thing, which perplexed his System; namely, that the Seeds, or Principles, of all Species, are to be found in each Individual. Moreri has misrepresented this Opinion [C]. Lucretius has well explained, and solidly refuted

(k) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 8.

(l) Cicero, Acad. Quæst. lib. 2. c. p. 23. & 31. Laërt. lib. 5. cap. 3.

(m) Sextus Empiricus, Pyrrhon. Hypotypos. lib. 1. c. 13.

(n) Id. adv. Mathem. l. 7. p. 133.

(o) See the beginning of the Re-marks [I].

(p) Diogen. Laërt. s. lib. 2. n. 12.

(q) Plutarch. de Placitis Philosph. lib. 2. c. 13.

(r) Diogen. Laërt. ibid. n. 12.

(s) Id. ib. n. 9.

Care of attaining to Honours and Riches: Anaxagoras is a pregnant Instance of it.

Felices animos, quibus hæc cognoscere primis,
Inque domos superas scandere cura fuit!
Credibile est illos pariter vitiosique locisque
Altius humanis exeruisse caput.
Non Venus & vinum sublimia pectora fregit;
Officiumque fori, militiæve labor.
Nec levis ambitio, persufusque gloria fuco;
Magnarumve fames sollicitavit opum.
Admovere oculis distantia fidera nostris;
Ætheraque ingenio supposuere suo.
Sic petitur cælum: non ut ferat Ossan Olympus;
Summaque Pelicæ fidera tangat apex.
Nos quoque sub ducibus cælum metabimur illis,
Ponemusque suos ad statâ signa dies (24).

(24) Ovid. Fast. lib. 1. ver. 297.

Twice happy they, who first, with Souls refin'd,
To these Pursuits their generous Care confined;
Who, nobly spurning Earth's impure Abodes, Assay'd to climb the Mansions of the Gods.
Such Breasts, sublime, Intemperance never broke;
Such ne'er submitted to Love's shameful Yoke.
Such fled the wrangling of the noisy Bar,
The hideous Din of Arms, and painful Tails of War;
Foes to Ambition, and her idle Lure,
From Thirst of Fame, from Thirst of Gold, secure.
Such Souls, examining the distant Skies,
Unveil'd it's bidden Lights to mortal Eyes.
Let huge Olympus lofty Ossa bear;
Let Pelion tow'r on Ossa high in Air;
Mountains on Mountains short of Heav'n must rise;
This only Ladder reaches to the Skies.
Led by these Guides, to measure Heav'n we try,
And to each Sign it's stat'd Days apply.

[B] He taught — that the Sun was a fiery Mass of Matter. I make use of this general Expression, because the Interpreters do not agree about the true Sense of these Words of Diogenes Laërtius; Τὸν ἥλιον μὲν ὡς πῦρ λέγειν (25). Some will have them to signify a Mass of burning Iron; others rather understand by them a flaming Stone; and others, a fiery Globe, neither of Iron nor Stone. Videtur mihi Anaxagoras, (thus speaks Cassianus) per μῦθον διαπύρον non tam lapidem aut ferrum, quàm globum quendam ignem, λέγοντα ὡς πῦρ, ut ait Plutarchus, intelligere voluisse (26). Most of those, who have mentioned this Doctrine of Anaxagoras, have adhered to the second Explication; which agrees perfectly with the Hypothesis of this Philosopher, as will appear hereafter (27). I begin with Xenophon's Words. Φάσκον δὲ τὸν ἥλιον λίθον διαπύρον εἶναι, καὶ τὸ τοιοῦτον ὅτι λίθος μὲν ἐν πυρὶ ὡς ἔτε λυμπεῖ, ἔτε πολλὸν χρόνον ἀντέχει. ὁ δὲ ἥλιος τὸν πᾶν χρόνον πᾶν ἡμεραν λαμπρύνει ὡς διαμύειν (28).

(25) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 8.

(26) Id. Ca. fab. 1. hunc I cum Diog. Laërt.

(27) In Re-marks [I].

(28) Xenophon. Memorabil. l. 4.

This is, according to Mr Charpentier's Translation, Saying also, That the Sun was only a fiery Stone, he did not consider, that a Stone does not shine in the Fire, neither can it continue long there, without being consumed; whereas the Sun continues always, and is an inexhaustible Source of Light. Plato shall be my second Evidence. He introduces Socrates, who, finding himself charged with saying, that the Sun was a Stone, and the Moon an Earth, answers, They take me for Anaxagoras, whose Books are full of such Discourses; and they fancy that I am so foolish as to teach young People these Absurdities: They would laugh at me, if I should ascribe to myself a Doctrine, contained in the Works of another Man, which are sold very cheap (29). I have only given a general Notion of the Words of Plato; and therefore I shall set down the very Words of that Philosopher, for the Satisfaction of those, who are not contented with the Substance of an Evidence. Ἀναξαγόρου οἱ καὶ ἡγοῦσιν ὅτι φέρεται. καὶ ὅτι καὶ ἀπορροῖς τὸν ἥλιον, καὶ οἱ αὐτοὶ ἀπείρους γραμμάτων εἶναι, ὥστε καὶ εἶναι ὅτι τ' Ἀναξαγόρου βιβλία τὰ Κλασικῶν γράμματα τῶν λόγων. καὶ δὴ καὶ οἱ νῦν ταῦτα παρ' ἐμὲ μαρτυροῦνται ὡς ἐξ ἐστὶν ἐνίοις, εἰ πάντων πολλὰ, διαχρῆται ἐκ τῆς ἀρχῆς γενομένης, Σωκράτης καὶ ἀγαθῶν, τὰν περὶ σοφίας αὐτοῦ εἶναι, ἀλλὰς τὴ καὶ ὅτις ἀποστα ὄντα (30). Anaxagoras tu quidem, o amice Melite, accusare tibi videris, atque ita vos parvi facis, existimares literarum ignarus esse, quasi nesciant libros Anaxagore Clazomenii ejusmodi opinionibus esse plenos. Jovenes vero hæc id me dicant? quibus liceret interdum, etiam si multa sint, unius drachmæ pretio ementibus ex archestra Socratem deridere, si sua esse fingeret, præsertim quum tam absurda sint. You will find in Plutarch, that Anaxagoras was condemned as an impious Man, for having said, that the Sun was a Stone (31). St Cyril of Alexandria (32), and St Austin (33), are to be reckoned among those, who have said, that, according to Anaxagoras, the Sun was a fiery Stone. Suidas renders μῦθον διαπύρον, in Diogenes Laërtius, by πῦρον λίθον. And therefore I wonder, that Mr Charpentier chose rather to say, that Anaxagoras maintained, that the Sun was only a fiery Mass of Iron (34).

(29) Tō μὲν ἥλιον, λίθον φέρεται εἶναι, τὸν δὲ ἀλλόθεν, γὰρ ἐκ αὐτοῦ, ὡς ἐστὶν ἐνίοις, εἰ πάντων πολλὰ, διαχρῆται ἐκ τῆς ἀρχῆς γενομένης, Σωκράτης καὶ ἀγαθῶν, τὰν περὶ σοφίας αὐτοῦ εἶναι, ἀλλὰς τὴ καὶ ὅτις ἀποστα ὄντα. Plato in Alcibiades Socratis, p. 21. A.

(30) Id. ibid.

(31) Plutarch, de Superstitione, pag. 169. E.

(32) Cyrillus lib. 6. contra Julian.

(33) Augustine, de Civitat. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 41.

(34) Charpentier's Life of Socrates, p. 7.

[C] Moreri has misrepresented this Opinion. Lucretius has well explained, and solidly confuted it. I shall sum up, in this Remark, all the Mistakes of Moreri. I. He supposes, that Anaxagoras taught, That the first Causes of Things had in them the Characters of the Parts; for, as Gold is composed of small Particles united together, so likewise this great World is composed of similar Particles, which make up the whole, and are the Primum Mobile of all things. What Nonsense! What Darkness! Did ever Heracitus express himself so obscurely? To what purpose is the Example of Gold composed of small Particles united together? Does this belong to Gold, more than to any other compound Body? He should have added, that those little Particles, of which Gold is compounded, are also Gold themselves. This Anaxagoras taught: He believed, that a visible Bone was composed refuted it. This will give us an Opportunity of making some Reflexions on this Doctrine. What was most excellent in his System, was, that, whereas, till then, they had reasoned about the Formation of the World, by admitting only, on one side, unformed Matter, and, on the other, mere Chance; or a blind Fatality, which put it posed of several invifible Bones, and that the Blood, which we fee, was compofed of divers fmall Drops, each whereof was Blood; and therefore he called his Principles ἰσχυρῆσαι (35), fimilarity. Read thefe Verfes of Lucretius.

(35) Plu-
tarch. de Placit. Philofoph. l. 1.
c. 3. p. 876.
Diog. Laërt.
lib. 2. n. 8.

Nunc et Anaxagoræ scrutemur Homœomerian,
Quam Græci memorant, nec noſtrâ dicere linguâ
Concedit nobis patrii fermonis egeſtas.
Sed tamen ipſam rem facile eſt exponere verbis,
Principum rerum quam dicit Homœomerian.
Oſſibus; ſic & de paucillis atque minutis
Viſceribus viſcus gigni; ſanguenque creati
Sanguinis inter ſe multis coctantibus guttis;
Ex aurique putat micis conſiſtere poſſe
Aurum; & de terris terram concreſcere parvis;
Ignibus ex ignem; humorem ex humoribus eſſe.
Cætera conſimili fingit ratione, putatque (36).

(36) Lucret.
l. 1. v. 830.

Now let's examine with a curious Eye
Sage Anaxagoras' Philoſophy,
By copious Greece term'd Homœomery.
For which our Latin Language, poor in Words,
Not one expreſſive ſingle Voice affords.
Yet by an eaſy ſhort Periphrasis
We plainly can diſcover what it is.
For this it means: That Bones of minute Bones,
That Fleſh of Fleſh, and Stones of little Stones,
That Nerves take other little Nerves for Food,
And Blood is made of little drops of Blood.
That Gold from parts of the ſame Nature roſe,
That Earths do Earth, Fires Fire, Airs Air compoſe;
And ſo in all things eſe alike to thoſe.

CREECH.

I will not repeat all the Arguments alledged by Lucretius againſt this Doctrine: I ſhall only inſiſt on the firſt. He ſhews, that, upon this Hypotheſis, the firſt Principles of things would be as corruptible as the moſt Compound Bodies themſelves. This Conſequence draws two great Inconveniencies after it; one is, that the Difference, which ought to be between Principles and Compounds, is not to be found in Anaxagoras's Hypotheſis. The Difference I ſpeak of is, that the firſt Principles (37) ought always to continue the ſame, how often ſoever Compound Bodies be deſtroyed. Compound Bodies alone are born, and die, and paſs through a thouſand Viciffitudes of Generation and Corruption; but Principles retain their Nature unchangeably under all the Forms, which are ſucceſſively produced. Anaxagoras could not ſay this of HIS Principles; for (to give an Inſtance) if thoſe of Fleſh had the Nature of Fleſh, they would be no leſs ſubject to Deſtruction, than a great Maſs of Fleſh; and ſo of the reſt, for he admitted no indiviſible Parts in Matter.

(37) Underſtand by This Word the Matter, or Subjectum ex quo.

Nec tamen eſſe ulla parte idem in rebus inane,
Concedit, neque corporibus finem eſſe ſecundis (38).

(38) Lucret.
lib. 1. v. 843.

But he admits no void, he grants no leaſt,
And therefore errs in that, with all the reſt.

CREECH.

(39) In Re-
mark [C].

We ſhall ſee hereafter (39), whether he could have ſuppoſed, that Principles, being eternal and uncreated, ought to be Incorruptible. The other inconvenience is, that the Deſtruction of firſt Principles is the ſame with what is called Annihilation; for when they ceaſe to be, they do not reſolve themſelves into other things, of which they are compoſed, ſince the Simplicity, which is peculiar to them, will not admit of any Composition. They periſh therefore entirely, and are annihilated. Now the Light of Nature cannot conceive the Poſſibility of ſuch a Change.

At neque recidere ad nihilum res poſſe, neque autem
Creſcere ex nihilo, teſtor reſ ante probatas (40).

(40) Lucret.
ib. ver. 857.

But former Arguments have clearly taught,
That things nor periſh to, nor riſe from, nought.

CREECH.

The Deſtruction of Compound Bodies is not liable to this Difficulty; they ſubſiſt always in their Principles; for inſtance, Wood, when deſtroyed by Fire, ceaſes not to exiſt as Matter, or extended Subſtance. Thus there is a great Defect in the Syſtem of Anaxagoras: His Principles are compoſed of Matter and Form, and have not conſequently the Simplicity and Immutability, which Order requires. This Defect could not be remedied, by ſuppoſing, that the Intelligence, which preſides over Generations, never ſuffers them to be deſtroyed. Was it not a ſufficient Inconveniency, that of their own Nature they were ſubject to Corruption, and could not be preſerved from it but by a Privilege, or, rather, by a Miracle? I ſay nothing of their great Number, which is likewiſe a remarkable Defect; for it is eſſential to a good Syſtem, that an infinite number of Effects ſhould flow from a very few Cauſes.

Lucretius was not aware of an Objection, which would have deſtroyed the very Foundation of Anaxagoras's Hypotheſis. This Philoſopher's Motive, in his Suppoſition of the Homœomeries, or Homogeneties, was, that no Being can be made out of Nothing, or reduced to nothing (41). Now if the Earth, for Example, was formed of Things, which were not Earth, it would be made of nothing; and if, having been Earth, it ſhould ceaſe to be Earth, it would be annihilated: It muſt then be formed of what is Earth, and, in that which is called Deſtruction or Corruption, it muſt needs be reduced to, or reſolve itſelf into, Parts, which are Earth: According to this, there is no Generation, or Corruption, properly ſo called; no Birth, or Death. The production of an Herb is nothing eſe but the Aſſemblage of ſeveral ſmall Herbs: The Deſtruction of a Tree is nothing but the Separation and Diſperſion of ſeveral Trees. "We ſee, added he (42), that the ſimpleſt Food, as Bread and Water, is converted into Hair, Veins, Arteries, Nerves, Bones, &c. there muſt be therefore little Hairs, Veins, and Arteries, &c. which indeed our Senſes do not diſcover; but they are not invifible to our Reaſon or Underſtanding." It is evident, that he went upon this falſe Suppoſition, to wit, that ſomething would be made out of nothing, if the parts of Bread, which ſupply the Bones with Nouriſhment, had not the Nature of Bones, in the Bread itſelf. It is ſurprizing, that ſo great a Genius ſhould reaſon in this manner. Could he not perceive, that a Houſe is not made out of nothing, though it be built with Materials, which are not an Houſe? Do not four Lines, none of which are ſquares, make a Square? Is it not enough, that they are placed in a certain manner? Is not a Doubler made of ſeveral Pieces of Cloth, none of which is a Doubler? Is there any Creation in this? Since, then, in artificial Things, the bare change of Figure, and ſituation of Parts, is ſufficient to form a whole, which, as to it's Species and Properties, differs from each of it's Parts; could he not apprehend, that Nature, which infinitely exceeds human Art, can form Bones and Veins, without putting together Parts, which are already Bones and Veins; and that it need only work upon ſuch Particles, as are capable of receiving ſuch or ſuch a Situation or Figure? By this means, without any Creation, properly ſo called, That, which was not Fleſh, will become Fleſh, &c. This is what Lucretius might have objected to our Anaxagoras; and by this he would have entirely deſtroyed his Hypotheſis of the Homœomeria. I proceed to other Faults of Moriri (43).

II. Anaxagoras, ſays he, was ſurnamed Νῆς, or the Mind, on account of the Subtlety of his Doctrine. Diogenes Laërtius ſays nothing of this Reaſon; he only tells us, that he had this Surname given him, becauſe he taught, that an intelligent Being had cleared up the

it in order; he was the First, who supposed, that an Intelligence produced Motion in Matter,

(45) Diog. Laert. lib. 3. n. 6.

(45) Timon Philistius, in Silis, apud Laert. lib. 2. n. 6.

(46) Harpocrat. in voce Αναξαγόρας.

(47) Plutarch's Words may be seen in the Remark [D], Citation (62).

(48) See, above, the Words of Lucian, in the Citation (36).

(49) In the Remark [K], Citation (156).

(50) Theodoret. de Græc. Affect. serm. 2. pag. 489.

(51) Diog. Laert. lib. 2. n. 9.

(52) Plut. de Placit. Phil. lib. 2. cap. 8. pag. 887.

(3) Diog. Laert. lib. 2. n. 15.

(54) Id. ib. n. 8.

Chaos (44). Timon (45), and Harpocratation (46), say the same. I do not deny, that Plutarch mentions the Reason alleged by Moreri; but, since he alleges also That, which we find in Diogenes Laërtius (47), and which is the more probable one, Moreri should not have suppress'd it.

III. He falsely charges our Anaxagoras with having admitted of Atoms (48). This Error is so much the grosser, because he had before said, that Anaxagoras admitted of infinite Parts in all Bodies. These two Opinions destroy each other; for, though, generally speaking, the Atomic System may admit of an infinity of Corpuscles; yet it requires, that their Number should be determinate in each Body; since one of the Reasons of the Atomists, in their System, is, that they avoid the Absurdities of a Divisibility in infinitum, which necessarily follows from the Supposition, that each Body is composed of an infinite Number of Parts.

IV. It is not true, that Lucian feigns, that Jupiter struck Anaxagoras dead with a Thunder-bolt. We shall see, below, the Words of Lucian.

V. I know not upon what Foundation Moreri says, that Anaxagoras travelled into Egypt, where he learned the Secrets and Mysteries of the learned Men of that Country: I do not remember to have read this in any ancient Author. For I desire I may be allowed to place Theodoret among the Moderns, in this respect; Theodoret, I say, who mentions this Journey of Anaxagoras (50), but who is otherwise mistaken, in supposing this Philosopher to be cotemporary with Pythagoras. However, I shall have still reason to censure Moreri, since he has not quoted Theodoret, nor any Author, who mentions this Journey.

VI. He believed, that the Stars (they are Moreri's Words) had at first a confused Motion, which was afterwards regulated. This was not at all the Opinion of Anaxagoras. According to Diogenes Laërtius, he believed, that, at first, the Stars moved in such a manner, that the Heavens, being in the Form of a Vault, the Pole, which never sets, was vertical to the Earth, but that it inclined itself afterwards (51). By his leave, this was to have a very imperfect Knowledge of the Sphere. He was ignorant, that the North Pole, inclining to the Horizon of Ionia, and several other Countries, is no less vertical to the Earth, with respect to a certain Place, than it could be at the beginning. If Anaxagoras meant, that this Pole, being formerly in the Zenith of Ionia, afterwards declined towards the Horizon, he expressed himself very ill, and must have believed, that Ionia was formerly a very miserable and unhappy Country. Plutarch relates this somewhat differently. He says, that Anaxagoras believed, that, after the World was created, and the Earth had produced living Creatures, the Earth of itself (ἐκ τῆ αὐτομάτης) inclined towards the South; perhaps provisionally (ὡς οὐκ ἀεὶ νοεῖται) that there might be habitable and uninhabitable Parts, through excessive Cold, scorching Heat, and Temperature (52).

VII. It is not true, that Diogenes Laërtius mentions an Orator, whose Name was Anaxagoras, and who was Disciple of Socrates. He makes him a Disciple of Isocrates (53).

VIII. It is still faller, that our Anaxagoras taught, that the similar Parts were the Primum Mobile of all Things. We shall see, in the following Remark, that, according his Opinion, the first Mover was a Spirit, distinct from the Homœomeria. If Moreri had understood the Author of the Life of this Philosopher, he would not have fallen into this Mistake. "Ἐκ τῶν ὁμοιομερῶν μικρῶν σώματων τὸ πρῶτον συγκροτῆσαι, καὶ οὐκ αὐτὸν ἀρχὴν κινήσεως (54). Ex parvis similibus partium corporibus hoc totum esse compositum, MENTEMQUE INITIUM ESSE MOTUS.

IX. Moreri has misrepresented the Sense of the first part of this Greek of Diogenes Laërtius. All this great World, says he, is made up of similar Parts, which constitute the whole. I have already complained of the Non-sense of these Words; but I shall here consider them more fully, in order to shew, in what manner a Modern Writer ought to guard against Ambiguities, to which he is liable, when he forgets, that an Expression, which was clear to the Greeks, may be very obscure at present, unless expressed by a Periphrasis.

I say this, without intending to justify good Diogenes Laërtius, who generally did not know what he said, when he abridged the Opinions of the Philosophers. I wish Moreri had expressed himself thus: The World is the Effect or Result of the Choice of small similar Parts. According to his own Expression, one would take the World to be an Whole, each of whose Parts has the same Name and Quality with all the rest (55). This is so false, that it is but opening one's Eyes, to be convinced of it. The very Blind may know it, and cannot be ignorant of it; for they know, that they are composed of Flesh and Bones; and that their Hair is not like their Nails. They, who have the least Tincture of School-Philosophy, know, that an Homogeneous Compound is That, whose Parts have the same Nature and Qualities with the Whole; and that an Heterogeneous Compound is That, whose Parts are not named as their whole is, and have not each the same common Properties. Water, Milk, Wine, Flesh, and Bones, are Homogeneous Compounds; for Instance, each drop of the Liquid, which composes a River, is called Water, and has the Essence of it. But it is quite otherwise with an Heterogeneous Compound; its Parts have not its Name, nor its Nature; neither have they the Names and Qualities of each other. Such, for Example, is the Body of an Ox; it is composed of Blood, Flesh, and Bones, and of several other Parts, which have each their distinct Names and Qualities. This being so, no one can say, that the Universe is an Homogeneous Compound. Some of its Parts are opaque, and others transparent; some liquid, and others hard: Here is Earth; there Air and Water; here a Meadow, and there a Wood. Anaxagoras would have been more extravagant, than the most absurd Visionary that ever was put into a Mad-House, had he entertained any Doubts about it; and yet Moreri's Expressions plainly intimate, that he taught, that the Universe was Homogeneous; and therefore he falsely charges him with a shocking Absurdity. He should have made use of another Phrase to describe his Opinion, and pitched upon such Terms, as would not confound the collective Sense of the Word Whole, with the distributive (56). I will explain myself by an Example. Let us suppose, that all the Citizens of a great City are divided into ten Classes; and that those, who have Twenty thousand Livres are placed in the first, those, who have Fifteen thousand, in the next, and the rest accordingly. Now whoever should say, This Town is composed of Inhabitants equally Rich, must intend it only in a distributive Sense. His meaning must be, that the ten Parts, which constitute this People, are each of them composed of Men equally Rich; But his Thought would be involved in improper, obscure, and intricate Words; and, to make himself understood, he ought to add, That this equality of Riches is only to be found, in comparing the People of the same Class with each other; for if he be of the tenth Class, he compared with those of the first, there will be a great Inequality. This is the ill Office, which those do our Anaxagoras, who maintain, that he said, that the Universe was altogether composed of similar Parts: They make their Readers suspect, that he advanced a ridiculous Enigma; and, if the Writer does not explain himself by a that is to say, they are at a loss to understand him, and grow very angry with such an Author. To free them from such a Perplexity, I will endeavour to explain the Sentiment of this Philosopher.

His meaning seems to me to be, that the Intelligence, which formed the World, had, in infinite Matter, found infinite Kinds of minute Corpuscles, which resembled each other; but which by a confused Mixture were surrounded with other Corpuscles, or small Bodies, not of the same Nature. The Intelligence united the several Corpuscles of the same Species; and, by this means, formed here a Planet, there a Stone, in other places Water, Air, Wood, &c. This Action divided the Universe into several Masses of similar Parts; but in such a manner, that the Particles of one Mass did not resemble those of another. And, therefore, the Word All or Whole, must not be taken in a Collective, but in a Distributive Sense; otherwise you will have as much Reason to say, that the World is made of Dissimilar, as of Similar, Parts. Ludovicus Vivès, having observed, that this Passage of St Austin, Anaxagoras

(55) That is, according to Anaxagoras's Opinion.

(56) Mr Arnauld, in his Difficulties to Mr Steyner, part 6. pag. 122, &c. makes some Observations on the two Senses of the Word WHOLE.

AN EXPLANATION of the D. H. of ANAXAGORAS.

Matter, and reduced the Chaos into Form [D]. This was, without doubt, the true Reason, Anaxagoras — dixit ex infinita materia quæ confaretur dissimilibus inter se particulis, &c. — Anaxagoras — said, that of infinite Matter, consisting of dissimilar Particles, &c. — was read in the old Manuscripts, Similibus inter se particulis — of similar Particles — adds, utramque rectè — both Readings are right.

As to the Objections, which Anaxagoras had to fear, I shall take some notice of them in the Remark [G].

[D] He was the first, who supposed that an Intelligence produced motion in Matter, and reduced the Chaos into Form.] These are Facts well attested. Πρῶτον τὴν ὅλην νῦν ἐπισκεύον, ἀρχαίον ὅτι τὴν συγκολλημένην, ὡς ἐστὶν ἡδὴ καὶ μεταμορφώσας πρὸς αὐτὴν. πᾶν ἄνθρωπος ἡν ὁμοί, εἴτα νῦν ἐλθὼν αὐτὸ διέκοσμος (57). He was the first, who superadded a MIND to Matter, expressing himself at the beginning of his Work, in this pleasing and sublime manner: "all Things were confused; afterwards an Intelligence, interposing, reduced them into Form and Order." I thought it proper to begin with this Passage of Diogenes Laërtius, because it contains Anaxagoras's own Words (58).

Let us take a view of Aristotle's Remarks on this Subject. He condemns the Philosophers, who, treating of the Principles of Things, stopped at the material, without searching for the efficient, Cause of Generation and Corruption. The material Cause, says he, never changes; Brass does not convert itself into a Statue, nor Wood into a Bedstead; there is another Principle of this Change. To search after this Principle, is to ascend to the first Mover. His Words are so remarkable, that it is proper to repeat them.

Εἰ γὰρ ὅτι μάστις πᾶσα θορόα καὶ γίνεσθαι ἐκ τῆς, ὡς ἐνός ἢ καὶ πλεόντων ἐστίν, διὰ τί τὴν συγκολλημένην, καὶ τὴν αἰτίαν ἐστὶν γὰρ δὴ τὴν συγκολλημένην αὐτὴ ποιεῖ μεταβάλλειν ἑαυτῇ. λέγων δ' οἷον, ὅτι τὸ εὐλογεῖται ὅτι ὁ χαλκὸς αἰτίον τὸ μεταβάλλειν ἑαυτῇ αὐτῶν. καὶ δὲ ποιεῖ τὸ μὲν εὐλογεῖται, ὅτι ὁ χαλκὸς ἀνδραγαθία, ἀλλ' ἑτέρου τῆς μεταβάλλει τὸ αἰτίον. τὸ δὲ τὴν ἡσίων, ἐστὶν τὴν ἐτέραν ἀρχὴν ἡσίων, ὡς ἂν ἡμῖς φαίμεν, ὅταν ἡ ἀρχὴ τῆς κινήσεως (59). Nam est quædam maxime omnis corruptio, & generatio ex aliquo ut ex uno aut ex pluribus sit, cur hoc accidit, & quæ causa est? Non enim ipsum subiectum sese mutari facit, ut puta, dico quod neque lignum, neque æs causa est, ut utrumque eorum mutetur. Neque lignum quidem lectum, æs vero statum facit, sed aliud quippiam mutationis causa est. Hoc autem querere, aliud principium querere est, perinde atque id, quod non unde principium motus dicimus. He adds, I. That, when the Insufficiency of the Elements came to be known, the Force of Truth obliged the Philosophers to look for another Mover. II. That it is not probable, that Fire and Earth, &c. are the Causes of the beautiful State of certain Beings, and of the Generation of others; nor that those ancient Philosophers believed it. III. That it would be unreasonable to attribute too grand an Effect to Chance and Fortune. Οὐδ' αὐτὰ αὐτομάτῳ καὶ τύχῃ τὸ πᾶν ἐπιστρέφει ἀπράγμα καλὸς ἔχει. Nec rursus Cæsi & Fortunæ tantam attribueret rem probè se habet (60). IV. That, for this Reason, Anaxagoras, who said that there is a Spirit in Nature, as well as in Animals, which is the Author of the World, and of Order, seemed to be a Person of good Sense, in comparison of the Philosophers his Predecessors, who were great Talkers about nothing. There is more Force in the Original, than in the Idea which I give of it. Those, who are able to understand the Greek, which I am going to produce, will find my Confession sincere. Νῦν δὲ τις εἰπὼν εἶναι, καθάπερ ἐν τοῖς ζώοις καὶ ἐν τῇ φύσει τὸν αἰτίον καὶ τὸ κόσμον, καὶ τὴν τάξιν πᾶσιν, διὸν ἦσαν ἰσάμην παρ' εἰκὴ λόγοντας τὴν πρῶτον. φανερὸν μὲν ἐν Ἀναξαγόρῳ ὅτι οἷον ἀλάμουν τῶν τῶν λόγων (61). Wherefore he, who said, that an Intelligence, in Nature, as well as in Animals, produced the World, and the Order of Things, appeared a sober Reasoner, in comparison of the vain Discourses of the more ancient Philosophers. We know, that Anaxagoras was the Person, who openly taught this Doctrine. If these Testimonies are express, That of Plutarch is, perhaps, still more so. Let us produce the Words of That Author.

Ὁν (Ἀναξαγόρῳ) ἐστὶν τὸν ἀνθρώπον νῦν πρὸς αὐτὸν, εἴτα τὴν εὐνοίαν αὐτὸν μεταβαλὼν ἐκ φυσιολογίας καὶ περὶ τὴν διατάξιν αὐτῶν διαμορφώσας, εἰς τὴν τοῖς ἀνθρώποις πρῶτον ἐστὶν τὴν ἀνθρώπου, διακοσμήσας ἀρχὴν, ἀλλὰ νῦν ἐπισκεύον καθάρην καὶ ἀνεκρίνον, ἐμμετρίμηνος πᾶσι τοῖς ἄλλοις, ἀποκρινοῖς τὰς ὁμοιομορφίας (62). Who (Anaxagoras) was by his Contemporaries filed The Mind, either because they admired his singular and excellent Penetration in Natural Philosophy; or, because he was the first, who did not ascribe the Formation of the Universe to Chance or Fate, but to a simple and uncompounded Intelligence, which separated the similar Particles of Matter from all others, with which they were confused. This Passage is quoted by some Authors, as if it ought to be read ἐμμετρίμηνος, instead of ἐμμετρίμηνος; but I choose to reject both these readings, and substitute ἐμμετρίμηνος. So the Author of the Latin Translation supposes it ought to be read, Quem (Anaxagoram) illius temporis æquales Mentem appellaverunt, vel quod perfectiorem ejus singularem excellentemque in Natura perfectiorem admirarentur; vel quod universitatis, non Fortunam neque Fatum ordinatæ descriptionis Principium, sed mentem principem ac sinceram præferret, cum omnibus aliis confusas secerentem particulas similes. Though Vossius quotes this Passage in Greek, with the Word ἐμμετρίμηνος, yet he renders it as if it was ἐμμετρίμηνος: This is his Translation (63): Non fortunam neque fatum ordinatæ descriptionis principium, sed mentem puram ac sinceram præferret, ab aliis omnibus admixtis similes particulas secerentem. Within a few Pages after, he makes use of the same Passage, to prove, that Anaxagoras taught, that God is entirely blended with Matter. Quare ex ejus sententia opifex mundi Deus est, at ex Plutarcho antea monitum, nec καθάρης καὶ ἀπείρου ἐμμετρίμηνος πᾶσι, Mens pura ac sincera omnibus permixta (64). I do not believe, that Plutarch intended any Mixture of the Divine Nature with the parts of Matter; this would be inconsistent with the Epithets καθάρης & ἀπείρου, which he had just before made use of, and by which he clearly shews, that Anaxagoras believed, that God is a pure and unmixed Spirit, distinct and separate from Matter. His meaning, in my Opinion, is, that this Immaterial Spirit separated the Homœomeries, or similar Parts, which lay confused with all other Bodies. Thus we see how difficult it is for the most learned Men, such as Vossius was, to write much, and to be always upon their Guard: Their Attention frequently fails them, and they forget, in one Place, what they have said in another: Nay, sometimes what they say in the beginning of a Period does not perfectly agree with the Conclusion of it.

I have farther Reason to believe, that Plutarch meant what I attribute to him; for, besides what I shall alledge out of Tertullian (65), I find in Aristotle, that Anaxagoras said, that the Spirit, which had put Matter into Motion, was free from all Mixture. Πλὴν ἀρχὴν γὰρ τὸν νῦν τίθεσθαι μάστις πᾶσιν. μὴν γὰρ γὰρ οἷον αὐτὸν τῶν ὄντων ἀπλὴν εἶναι, καὶ ἀμειγρὴν τε καὶ καθάρην. ἀποδείξωσι δ' αὖ μὴ τῇ αὐτῇ ἀρχῇ, τὸ, τε γινώσκον καὶ τὸ κινεῖν, λέγων νῦν κινῶσα τὸ πᾶν (66). He lays down an Intelligent Mind as the Principle of all Things; and says, that That alone, of all Things, is simple and unmixed, pure and uncompounded. And to this Principle he ascribes two Properties, to wit, Knowledge and Motion; saying that the Mind put the Universe into Motion. This is more clearly expressed in the following Words. Φησὶ (Ἀναξαγόρῳ) δ' εἶναι μίμνησιν πάντα, πλὴν τὸν νῦν τῶν δὲ ἀμειγρῶν μόνον καὶ καθάρην (67). Anaxagoras taught, that all things were compounded, except the Mind, but that This was unmixed and pure. The next is the Testimony of Plutarch; from which it manifestly appears, That Anaxagoras ascribed to God the first Production of Motion and Order. Ὁ δὲ Ἀναξαγόρας φησὶν ὡς εἰρήνη καὶ ἀρχὴ τὸ σάμα, νῦν δὲ αὐτὰ διέκοσμος ἐστίν, καὶ τὰς γίνεσθαι τῶν ὄντων ἐποίησεν. ὁ δὲ Πλάτων ἔχ' ἐγκότα υπὲρ τὸ πᾶν σάμα, ἀτάλως δὲ κινῶμενα. διὰ καὶ τοῦ (φησὶν) ἐπισήσας ὡς τάξις ἀτάλως ἐστὶν βελίον, διακοσμήσας τὰς

(62) Plut. in Pericle, pag. 1. 4. B.

(63) Vossius de Origine & Progressu Idololatriæ, lib. 1. c. 10. pag. 5.

(64) Id. ib. cap. 2. p. 12.

(65) In Remarck [E].

(66) Aristotle de Anima, lib. 1. cap. 2. pag. 4. n. D. See also the 4th Chapter of the 3d Book p. 553. G. where we find, that Anaxagoras said, that the Intelligence must be free from all Mixture, in order to be Mover.

(67) Anaxagoras taught, that all things were compounded, except the Mind, but that This was unmixed and pure. The next is the Testimony of Plutarch; from which it manifestly appears, That Anaxagoras ascribed to God the first Production of Motion and Order. Ὁ δὲ Ἀναξαγόρας φησὶν ὡς εἰρήνη καὶ ἀρχὴ τὸ σάμα, νῦν δὲ αὐτὰ διέκοσμος ἐστίν, καὶ τὰς γίνεσθαι τῶν ὄντων ἐποίησεν. ὁ δὲ Πλάτων ἔχ' ἐγκότα υπὲρ τὸ πᾶν σάμα, ἀτάλως δὲ κινῶμενα. διὰ καὶ τοῦ (φησὶν) ἐπισήσας ὡς τάξις ἀτάλως ἐστὶν βελίον, διακοσμήσας τὰς

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(67) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. c. 7. pag. 651. E.

(57) Diogenes Laërt. in Anaxagora, init. lib. 2. a. 6.

(58) They are to be found likewise in Plutarch, de Placitis Philosophor. lib. 1. c. 3. pag. 576. D.

(59) Aristotle Metaphys. lib. 1. cap. 3. pag. 645. H.

(60) Id. ib. pag. 645. C.

(61) Id. ib.

Reason, why this great Philosopher was firnamed Νῆξ, that is to say, The Mind, of Understanding (u). But his Orthodoxy was not sufficiently refin'd [E]; there remained still

(68) Plutarch. de Placit. Philosph. l. 1. cap. 7. pag. 381. A. τα (68). Anaxagoras taught, that, in the beginning, Matter was without Motion, and that the Mind of God put it in order, and gave rise to every thing. Plato laid it down, that the first Bodies were not motionless, but that they moved irregularly. But God, says he, perceiving that Order was preferable to Confusion, adjusted them. You see here a remarkable Difference between Anaxagoras and Plato. The first supposes, that God found Matter at Rest. The second, on the contrary, that God found it in Motion. I am amazed at the Reflexion, which Plutarch makes upon these two Doctrines; it not only contains an horrible Impiety, but likewise a very gross Contradiction. He had blamed the Philosophers, who acknowledged but one Principle. He had said (69), that "it is impossible, that Matter should be the sole Principle of all things, and that an efficient Cause must be added to it; for Silver alone is not sufficient to produce a Vessel, unless there be a Workman to make the Vessel. The same may be said of Brass, Wood, and of all other Materials." In the same Page he had commended Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which had united the similar Particles; Τὰς μὲν ὁμοιομερείας ὕλης, τὰ δὲ ποικίλους τὸν νῦν τὰ πᾶν/α διατάξα- μένους (70). Homœomerias statuit materiam, causam vero efficientem mentem quæ disponeret universa; that is, for adding the efficient Cause to the passive Subject, and the Artificer to the Materials. Ἀποδεικ- τὸς ὅτις ἐστὶν ὅτι τὴν ὅλαν τὸν τεχνίτην ἀποδεί- ζουσιν (71). Hic Approbandus est, quod materia Artificem adjunxerit. What does he mean then, when, five Pages after, he censures Anaxagoras and Plato; the first for having attributed to God the Motion and Disposition of Bodies, and the latter for having attributed to Him the ranging of them? Their common Error, says he, is in thinking, that God takes care of human Things, and that he has framed a World to that end. Κοινὸς ἔν ἀμαρ- τανῶν ἀμώρτησι, ὅτι τὸν ὅλον ἐποίησαν ἐκιστορεῖν τὸν ἀθανάτων, ἢ καὶ τότε χάζον τὸν κόσμον κατασκευάζοντα (72). Com- munis ambobus hic est error, quod deum faciunt res humanas curantem, ac ea de causa mundum adornantem. After which, he lays down the most specious Reasons, which an Atheist can alledge, against those, who attribute to God the Creation and Government of the World. How then? Does he approve of Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which was the first Mover of Matter, and the efficient Cause of the World; and does he blame him for taking this first Mover to be God? Can any one reason in a more pitiful and incoherent manner than he does? And, should we suppose, that there is no Contradiction in this, must we not confess at least, that he has confused, in this Place, a great many other Passages in his Books, in which he supposes a Providence?

(69) Id. ib. cap. 7. pag. 381. A. that "it is impossible, that Matter should be the sole Principle of all things, and that an efficient Cause must be added to it; for Silver alone is not sufficient to produce a Vessel, unless there be a Workman to make the Vessel. The same may be said of Brass, Wood, and of all other Materials." In the same Page he had commended Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which had united the similar Particles; Τὰς μὲν ὁμοιομερείας ὕλης, τὰ δὲ ποικίλους τὸν νῦν τὰ πᾶν/α διατάξα- μένους (70). Homœomerias statuit materiam, causam vero efficientem mentem quæ disponeret universa; that is, for adding the efficient Cause to the passive Subject, and the Artificer to the Materials. Ἀποδεικ- τὸς ὅτις ἐστὶν ὅτι τὴν ὅλαν τὸν τεχνίτην ἀποδεί- ζουσιν (71). Hic Approbandus est, quod materia Artificem adjunxerit. What does he mean then, when, five Pages after, he censures Anaxagoras and Plato; the first for having attributed to God the Motion and Disposition of Bodies, and the latter for having attributed to Him the ranging of them? Their common Error, says he, is in thinking, that God takes care of human Things, and that he has framed a World to that end. Κοινὸς ἔν ἀμαρ- τανῶν ἀμώρτησι, ὅτι τὸν ὅλον ἐποίησαν ἐκιστορεῖν τὸν ἀθανάτων, ἢ καὶ τότε χάζον τὸν κόσμον κατασκευάζοντα (72). Com- munis ambobus hic est error, quod deum faciunt res humanas curantem, ac ea de causa mundum adornantem. After which, he lays down the most specious Reasons, which an Atheist can alledge, against those, who attribute to God the Creation and Government of the World. How then? Does he approve of Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which was the first Mover of Matter, and the efficient Cause of the World; and does he blame him for taking this first Mover to be God? Can any one reason in a more pitiful and incoherent manner than he does? And, should we suppose, that there is no Contradiction in this, must we not confess at least, that he has confused, in this Place, a great many other Passages in his Books, in which he supposes a Providence?

(70) Id. ib. (70) Homœomerias statuit materiam, causam vero efficientem mentem quæ disponeret universa; that is, for adding the efficient Cause to the passive Subject, and the Artificer to the Materials. Ἀποδεικ- τὸς ὅτις ἐστὶν ὅτι τὴν ὅλαν τὸν τεχνίτην ἀποδεί- ζουσιν (71). Hic Approbandus est, quod materia Artificem adjunxerit. What does he mean then, when, five Pages after, he censures Anaxagoras and Plato; the first for having attributed to God the Motion and Disposition of Bodies, and the latter for having attributed to Him the ranging of them? Their common Error, says he, is in thinking, that God takes care of human Things, and that he has framed a World to that end. Κοινὸς ἔν ἀμαρ- τανῶν ἀμώρτησι, ὅτι τὸν ὅλον ἐποίησαν ἐκιστορεῖν τὸν ἀθανάτων, ἢ καὶ τότε χάζον τὸν κόσμον κατασκευάζοντα (72). Com- munis ambobus hic est error, quod deum faciunt res humanas curantem, ac ea de causa mundum adornantem. After which, he lays down the most specious Reasons, which an Atheist can alledge, against those, who attribute to God the Creation and Government of the World. How then? Does he approve of Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which was the first Mover of Matter, and the efficient Cause of the World; and does he blame him for taking this first Mover to be God? Can any one reason in a more pitiful and incoherent manner than he does? And, should we suppose, that there is no Contradiction in this, must we not confess at least, that he has confused, in this Place, a great many other Passages in his Books, in which he supposes a Providence?

(71) Id. ib. (71) Hic Approbandus est, quod materia Artificem adjunxerit. What does he mean then, when, five Pages after, he censures Anaxagoras and Plato; the first for having attributed to God the Motion and Disposition of Bodies, and the latter for having attributed to Him the ranging of them? Their common Error, says he, is in thinking, that God takes care of human Things, and that he has framed a World to that end. Κοινὸς ἔν ἀμαρ- τανῶν ἀμώρτησι, ὅτι τὸν ὅλον ἐποίησαν ἐκιστορεῖν τὸν ἀθανάτων, ἢ καὶ τότε χάζον τὸν κόσμον κατασκευάζοντα (72). Com- munis ambobus hic est error, quod deum faciunt res humanas curantem, ac ea de causa mundum adornantem. After which, he lays down the most specious Reasons, which an Atheist can alledge, against those, who attribute to God the Creation and Government of the World. How then? Does he approve of Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which was the first Mover of Matter, and the efficient Cause of the World; and does he blame him for taking this first Mover to be God? Can any one reason in a more pitiful and incoherent manner than he does? And, should we suppose, that there is no Contradiction in this, must we not confess at least, that he has confused, in this Place, a great many other Passages in his Books, in which he supposes a Providence?

(72) Id. ib. cap. 7. pag. 381. A. (72) Com- munis ambobus hic est error, quod deum faciunt res humanas curantem, ac ea de causa mundum adornantem. After which, he lays down the most specious Reasons, which an Atheist can alledge, against those, who attribute to God the Creation and Government of the World. How then? Does he approve of Anaxagoras for admitting an Intelligence, which was the first Mover of Matter, and the efficient Cause of the World; and does he blame him for taking this first Mover to be God? Can any one reason in a more pitiful and incoherent manner than he does? And, should we suppose, that there is no Contradiction in this, must we not confess at least, that he has confused, in this Place, a great many other Passages in his Books, in which he supposes a Providence?

(73) Plato, in Phædon, pag. 72. (73) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(74) Tertull. de Anim. (74) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(75) Clem. Alexandr. Stromat. l. 2. pag. 354. (75) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(76) Euseb. de Prepar. Evang. l. 14. cap. 14. pag. 750. (76) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(77) Themist. Orat. 23. (77) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(78) August. de Civit. Dei lib. 8. c. 2. (78) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(79) I set down his Words at the end of Remark [F]. (79) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(80) Proclus in Timæum Platonis. (80) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(81) Simplic. in Aristotel. de Physic. auct. cult. (81) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(82) Cicero, de Nat. Deorum, lib. 1. cap. 10, 11. (82) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(83) He was the 4th Predecessor of Anaxagoras. (83) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(84) Id. ib. pag. 36. (84) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

"of Anaximenes, was the FIRST, who held, that "the Disposition and Order of all Things was planned and effected by the Power and Understanding of an infinite Mind. In which he is not aware, first, that there can be no Motion joined with Sense in what is infinite, nor any Sense at all, which cannot affect it: Nature. In the next place, if he would have this Mind to be a kind of Animal, there will be something more internal, from whence to denominate this Animal. But what is there more internal than a Mind? It is therefore surrounded with an external Body. Though you will not allow this, I am of Opinion, that an un bodied, simple, Mind, unaffected by any thing, which may have Sense, is beyond the Force and Comprehension of our Understanding." It is somewhat surprizing, that Cicero should say, that Anaxagoras was the first Philosopher, who acknowledged such a Doctrine, since he had before told us, that Thales (83) had acknowledged a Mind, or a God, who had formed all things out of Water. "Thales Milesius, qui primus de talibus rebus quæsit, aquam dixit esse initium rerum: deum autem, eam mentem, quæ ex aqua cuncta fingeret (84). How could Cicero so soon forget his own Words? Can it be imagined, that he meant, that Thales only ascribed to God the Power of converting Water into other Bodies; but that Anaxagoras made God the Author of the Order and noble Symmetry of the Parts of the World? This does not seem to me to be probable, and I should rather suspect that this Passage is corrupted. The Confusion and Obscurity, which is to be found in the following Words, may confirm this Conjecture. However it be, I would not have this Testimony of Cicero be opposed to those of so many ancient and celebrated Writers, who unanimously affirm, that Anaxagoras was the first, who superadded the efficient Cause to the material, that is to say, who acknowledged an Intelligence to be the Author of the Oeconomy, or Architecture, of the Universe. St. Austin paid so little regard to this Testimony of Cicero, that, in the very Place, where he mentions the Opinion of the Philosophers of the Ionian Sect, agreeably to that of Cicero in other Respects, he expressly contradicts him as to what concerns Thales. "Iste autem Thales, ----- rerum naturam scrutatus, suasque disputationes literis mandans, eminuit ----- aquam ----- putavit rerum esse principium, & hinc omnia elementa mundi ipsumque mundum, & quæ in eo gignuntur, existere. Nihil autem huic operi, quod, mundo confiderato, tam admirabile afficimus, EX DIVINA MENTE præposuit (85). — This Thales, examining into the Nature of Things, and committing his Disputations to Writing, taught that Water was the Principle of all Things; and that to this the several Elements of the World, the World itself, and all things in it, owed their Existence. He supposed NO DIVINE MIND to preside over the wonderful Works of the Creation." Observe, that Cicero himself, in another Book, denies, that Thales was the first, who taught the Doctrine we are speaking of, and that he ascribes it solely and absolutely to the Philosopher Anaxagoras. I shall set down his Words in the Remark [F].

(83) He was the 4th Predecessor of Anaxagoras. (83) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(84) Id. ib. pag. 36. (84) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(85) August. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2. pag. 711. (85) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(86) LeCarp. in Cic. de Nat. Deor. p. 40. (86) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

(87) See the 56th Letter of St. Austin, pag. 2. l. 1. & seq. (87) I should be tedious, were I to set down all the Testimonies, which prove one or both of these Truths. I. That Anaxagoras admitted an Intelligence, which put Matter in Motion, and formed the World, by the choice of the Homogeneity. II. That he was the first Philosopher, who advanced this System. Let it suffice, then, to point out Plato (73), Ter- tullian (74), Clemens Alexandrinus (75), Eusebius (76), Themistius (77), St. Austin (78), Theodoret (79), Proclus (80), and Simplicius (81). I shall not do the same with respect to Cicero; but I shall produce his Words; because they furnish a Particular, which ought to be examined. "Inde Anaxagoras, says (82), qui accepit ab Anaximene disciplinam, PRIMUS omnium rerum descriptionem & modum mentis infinite vi ac ratione designari ac confici voluit. In quo non vidit, neque motum sensui junctum & continentem in infinito ullum esse posse, neque sensum omnino, quo non ipsa natura pulla sentiret. Deinde si mentem istam quasi animal aliquod esse voluit, erit aliquid interius ex quo illud animal nominetur. Quid autem interius mente? Cingitur igitur corpore externo. Quod quoniam non placet, aperta simplexque mens nulla re adjuncta quæ sentire possit, fugere intelligentiæ nostræ vim & notionem videtur. — Anaxagoras next, who was brought up at the Feet

[E] His Orthodoxy was not sufficiently refin'd. Ter- tullian blames him for being inconsistent with himself; for, on the one hand, he said, that God was a pure and simple Intelligence, and, on the other, he mixed and confounded him with the Soul. "Quam Anaxagoræ turbata sententia est! initium enim omnium commentatus animum, universitatis oscillum de

The Jesuit LeCarpelier (86) endeavours to reconcile this Contradiction, by supposing, that Anaxagoras was the first, who published this Doctrine; the Philosophers, who lived before him, having only taught it in their Auditories. This is no very good Solution; for, since the Doctrines of the Predecessors of Anaxagoras were known, and wherein they differed from each other; I say, since this was known, tho' Anaxagoras was the first, who published Books, it might as well have been known what they taught concerning the efficient Cause of the World. As to the Objections against the Doctrine of this Philosopher, contained in the above-cited Passage of Cicero, I refer you to St. Austin, who confutes them solidly (87).

[E] His Orthodoxy was not sufficiently refin'd. Ter- tullian blames him for being inconsistent with himself; for, on the one hand, he said, that God was a pure and simple Intelligence, and, on the other, he mixed and confounded him with the Soul. "Quam Anaxagoræ turbata sententia est! initium enim omnium commentatus animum, universitatis oscillum de still many Imperfections in it; which is less to be wondered at, than to find, that the Philosophers, who lived before him, were ignorant of the great Truth, which he discovered; a Truth so very plain, and so often sung by the Poets [F]. It will be proper

"de

" de illius axe suspendens, purumque eum adfirmans,
 "& simplicem & incommiscibilem, hoc vel maxime
 " titulo segregat ab animæ commissione, & tamen
 " eundem alibi animæ addicit (88)." Aristotle had

of Heterodoxy, with respect to the universal Interposition of God, the first Cause of all Beings. Therefore, if no other Complaint could be brought against Anaxagoras, but that, in explaining several Effects of Nature, he reasoned ill, and without Sense; it would have been unjust to reproach him with abandoning or spoiling the Hypothesis, in which he admitted of an Intelligence, which presided over the Production of the World. This Reproach therefore must have been grounded, not upon the impertinent Explanations, which he gave, but upon what he advanced to the Prejudice and Exclusion of that Intelligence. In the second place, Eusebius alleges, as his Authority, a long Passage of Plato, which contains a Complaint, that Anaxagoras explained Things, without having Recourse to an Intelligence, or to the Causes of the Beauty and Order of the Universe; but that he stopped at the Air, the Æther, the Water, &c. as the Causes of Beings (93). Who does not perceive from hence, that 'tis very probable Eusebius meant the same Defect? In the third place, I observe, that Anaxagoras, as Plutarch informs us, taught, that certain things come to pass by Necessity, others by Destiny, others by Deliberation, others by Fortune, and others by Chance. "Α μὲν γὰρ αἱ καὶ ἀνάγκη, αἱ δὲ καὶ δέσμιαι, αἱ δὲ καὶ βουλευαῖαι, αἱ δὲ καὶ τυχῆς, αἱ δὲ καὶ δὲ εὐχαιαῖ (94). Fort enim alia necessitas, alia fatus, alia infinitum animi, alia forte fortuna, alia casu. There is no question, but that, in the detail of these inexplicable Distinctions, he robbed the Divine Intelligence of several Events; and that this was the Reason of the Complaint of Clemens Alexandrinus, copied by Eusebius.

I know not whether what Anaxagoras said of our Hands ought to be placed among his Errors. He asserted, that they have been the Cause of the Wisdom and Industry of Man. Plutarch takes him to task for this. "The contrary is true, says he (95), for "Man is not the wisest of Animals because he has "Hands; but, because he is naturally rational and "ingenious, he has obtained such Tools from Nature." The Books of Anaxagoras are not extant; and therefore it cannot be decided, whether he gave occasion for this Censure; but I am apt to think he did not deserve it. His System engaged him to think quite otherwise in this Matter, than those Philosophers did, who attributed to Chance all the Beings, of which the World is composed. This impious Tenet induced them to maintain, that Organs were not given to Man for his Use, but that, finding them fit for certain Purposes, he employed them to such Uses. See the fourth Book of Lucretius (96).

Observe these Words of a Father of the Church: "Anaxagoras autem, qui & THEUS cognominatus est, dogmatizavit facta animalia decedentibus & cœlo in terram feminibus, quod & hi ipsi in matris fœtu transulerunt semina, & effe hoc semen feipsum & tim conficentes apud eos qui sensum habent, & ipsos esse quæ sunt Anaxagoræ IRRELIGIOSI semina (97). But Anaxagoras, firmated the ATHEIST, taught, that Animals were formed of Seeds, which fell from Heaven; which these Persons have transferred to the Seeds of their Mother, readily acknowledging to Men of Sense, that this Seed is 'Themselves, and that Themselves are IMPIOUS 'Anaxagoras's Seeds.' You see here, that Anaxagoras was firmated the ATHEIST; and that St Iræneus treats him as an IMPIOUS Man. Vossius does not complain of this; he only says, That Justin Martyr, in his Exhortation to the Greeks, calls this Philosopher an Atheist; and he makes some Reflexions upon it (98). I meet with nothing like it in this Work of Justin Martyr; and I think Vossius had better have reserved his Excuses for St Iræneus. If Justin Martyr stands in need of them, it is only for having misrepresented the Doctrine of Anaxagoras. He suppresses the beautiful Part of it; and says nothing of the Intelligence, the first Mover, but only speaks of his Homœomeria (99).

[F] The Philosophers, who lived before him, were ignorant of the great Truth - - - - so often sung by the Poets. We might bring a Cloud of Witnesses in proof of this Fact, that Anaxagoras is the first Philosopher.

(88) Tertullian
de Anima.

(89) Aristot.
de Anima,
lib. 1. c. 2.
pag. 478. G.

(90) Id. Metaphys. lib.
I. cap. 4.
pag. 646. H.

(or) Clem.
Alexandrin.
Stromat. lib.
2. pag. 364.

(62) Euseb.
Præpar. E-
vang. lib. 14.
c. 14. p. 750.

(.3) See Remark [R].

(94) Plut. de Placit. Philo-soph. l. 1. r.
cap. ult. p.
885. See l.
so the Passage quoted by Menage
in Diog.
Laert. lib. 2.
n. 6. and taken from a Book falsely ascribed to Galen 'Tis
the Philosoph-ou icopia.

(95) Plut. de Amicitia
fraterna init.
pag. 478.

(96) Lucret
lib. 4 ver.
821. & seq.

(17) Irenæus
lib. 2. adv.
Hæres. c. 19.

(38) VoTus
de Orig. &
Progr. idolo-
lat. lib. 1.
cap. 1. page 52.

(cc) Just.
Martyr. O-
rat. ad Grecos, pag. 4v

per to examine, whether the Doctrine of the Homœomeria does not imply many Contradictions

(100) See the Remark [D].

(101) Cicero, Acad. Quest. lib. 4. cap. 37.

(102) Pererius, de communibus omnium rerum naturalium principiis, lib. 4. cap. 4. pag. 206.

(103) Thomassin: Method of studying Philosophy, Book 1. chap. 14. pag. 162, 163. See also pag. 165.

who ascribed the Arrangement of Matter to the Wisdom of a first Mover (100). Thales, Anaximander, and Anaximenes, who preceded him in the School of Ionia, endeavoured to explain every thing without it. "Principes Thales, unus ē septem, cui sex reliquos concessisse primas ferunt, ex aqua dixit constare omnia. At hoc Anaximandro populari & sodali suo non persuasi. Is enim infinitatem naturæ dixit esse & qua omnia gignerentur. Post ejus auditor Anaximenes infinitum aëra, sed ea quæ ex eo orirentur definita: gigni autem terram, aquam, & ignem, tum ex his omnia. Anaxagoras materiam infinitam, sed ex ea particulas similes inter se minutas, eas primas confusas, postea in ordinem adductas mente divina (101). — Thales, one of the seven, whom they say the remaining six acknowledged as their Master, was the first, who taught, that all Things were formed of Water. But he could not convince his Countryman and Companion Anaximander of this. For the latter held, that all things sprang from an infinite Nature. After him, his Scholar Anaximenes taught, that Air was infinite, but that those things, which were produced from it, were finite; that Earth, Air, and Fire, were first produced; then all things out of these; Anaxagoras held the Infinity of Matter; but that it's minute similar Parts, which were at first confused and blended together, were afterwards reduced into Order by a divine Mind." Who can forbear wondering, that such great Men should be guilty of such gross Ignorance? This Reflexion has not been neglected by the Jesuit Perrerus. "Ferunt primos Philosophorum, says he (102), Pherecydem Syrum & Anaxagoram, illum quidem, immortalitatem animi nostri, hunc autem, Deum, quem ipse Mentem vel Intellectum vocabat, esse mundi cunctarumque rerum opificem, Græcos docuisse: ut permixtum sit, priores Philosophos, qui hæc ignorarunt, sapientium nomen, & honorem habuisse; & duas has res, quarum cognitio cunctis mortalibus optatissima est, & ad bene pique vivendum maxime necessaria, tam ferè ad Græcorum notitiam pervenisse. — "The Chief of the Philosophers, Pherecydes and Anaxagoras, are said to have taught the Greeks, the one, that our Souls are immortal; the other, that God, whom he calls the Mind or Intelligence, created the World, and all things in it; whence it is very strange, that the preceding Philosophers, who were ignorant of these things, were honoured with the Name of wise Men; and that these two Principles, the Knowledge of which is so highly beneficial to all Mankind, and so necessary to a good and pious Life, should so late come to the Knowledge of the Greeks." Father Thomassin has a remarkable Sentiment upon this Occasion. "All the Poets, says he (103), who were the most ancient Philosophers, and all the Sages of the fabulous Times, as they are called, not having mentioned, or celebrated, in their Writings, any other Cause, than the first and supreme Deity; how came it to pass, that, presently after, Thales, and his immediate Successors, were ignorant of, or passed over in Silence, that which had employed all the Sages, and every Age 'till then? It is therefore probable, that these first Ionian Philosophers, presupposing what was incontestable, and 'till then uncontested, concerning the first efficient Cause of all Things, treated only of second Causes, which were 'till then unknown, and had not been so much as enquired after. They were afraid, that, if they should refer all particular Effects to God, Men would fall again into the old Custom of neglecting to enquire into second Causes, and resting contented with the first. The same may be said of Angels. Homer, and the other ancient Poets or Philosophers, made them the sole Authors of all Things, under God. The Disciples of Thales, to establish the Power of corporeal or immediate Causes, omitted the mention of Angels. — But, at last, Anaxagoras judged, that, in his time, the World was able to apprehend the Subordination of corporeal Causes to angelical Substances, and of both to the Wisdom and Power of God. — It was purely on a Supposition of the Truth of these Parts of Philosophy, in which the World had been sufficiently instructed, that Thales

and his Disciples made no mention of Ethics, or Metaphysics; and with a View of engaging Mens Attention wholly in cultivating that Branch, which 'till then was unknown. But, when it was perceived, that the Knowledge of second Causes was very uncertain, and that it was to be feared it would make Men forget the Knowledge of God, of Angels, and Morality, which was more constant, useful, and necessary, Anaxagoras, Socrates, and Plato, restored Theology and Morality to their ancient Lustre and Credit."

This is a fine Sentiment; an ingenious Notion: But perhaps it has more of Brilliant than Solid; for we see, that Anaximenes, the Master of Anaxagoras, did not treat of Philosophy, as one, who supposed, that the Existence of God, in quality of the first Cause, was so well known, that there was no occasion to mention it. He spoke of the Gods; but he was so far from considering them as Principles, that he maintained, that they themselves owed their Existence to the Principle, which he established. "Qui (Anaximenes) omnes rerum causas infinito aëri dedit: nec deos negavit aut tacuit: non tamen ab ipsis aërem factum, sed ipsos ex aëre ortos cre-

(104) August. de Civ. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2. See also Cicero, lib. 1. de Nat. Deorum, pag. 38. ubi Thales & Anaximenes aërem Deum statuit, eumque signat.

(105) Thales Anaxagoram & Diogenem Apolloniæ.

(106) August. ubi supra. See also Cicero, ubi supra. ubi Thales & Anaximenes aërem Deum statuit, eumque signat.

(107) See Cicero Tuscul. 5. circ. init.

• Virgil. Ecl. 6. v. 31.

and his Disciples made no mention of Ethics, or Metaphysics; and with a View of engaging Mens Attention wholly in cultivating that Branch, which 'till then was unknown. But, when it was perceived, that the Knowledge of second Causes was very uncertain, and that it was to be feared it would make Men forget the Knowledge of God, of Angels, and Morality, which was more constant, useful, and necessary, Anaxagoras, Socrates, and Plato, restored Theology and Morality to their ancient Lustre and Credit."

This is a fine Sentiment; an ingenious Notion: But perhaps it has more of Brilliant than Solid; for we see, that Anaximenes, the Master of Anaxagoras, did not treat of Philosophy, as one, who supposed, that the Existence of God, in quality of the first Cause, was so well known, that there was no occasion to mention it. He spoke of the Gods; but he was so far from considering them as Principles, that he maintained, that they themselves owed their Existence to the Principle, which he established. "Qui (Anaximenes) omnes rerum causas infinito aëri dedit: nec deos negavit aut tacuit: non tamen ab ipsis aërem factum, sed ipsos ex aëre ortos cre-

(104) August. de Civ. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2. See also Cicero, lib. 1. de Nat. Deorum, pag. 38. ubi Thales & Anaximenes aërem Deum statuit, eumque signat.

(105) Thales Anaxagoram & Diogenem Apolloniæ.

(106) August. ubi supra. See also Cicero, ubi supra. ubi Thales & Anaximenes aërem Deum statuit, eumque signat.

(107) See Cicero Tuscul. 5. circ. init.

• Virgil. Ecl. 6. v. 31.

and his Disciples made no mention of Ethics, or Metaphysics; and with a View of engaging Mens Attention wholly in cultivating that Branch, which 'till then was unknown. But, when it was perceived, that the Knowledge of second Causes was very uncertain, and that it was to be feared it would make Men forget the Knowledge of God, of Angels, and Morality, which was more constant, useful, and necessary, Anaxagoras, Socrates, and Plato, restored Theology and Morality to their ancient Lustre and Credit."

This is a fine Sentiment; an ingenious Notion: But perhaps it has more of Brilliant than Solid; for we see, that Anaximenes, the Master of Anaxagoras, did not treat of Philosophy, as one, who supposed, that the Existence of God, in quality of the first Cause, was so well known, that there was no occasion to mention it. He spoke of the Gods; but he was so far from considering them as Principles, that he maintained, that they themselves owed their Existence to the Principle, which he established. "Qui (Anaximenes) omnes rerum causas infinito aëri dedit: nec deos negavit aut tacuit: non tamen ab ipsis aërem factum, sed ipsos ex aëre ortos cre-

(104) August. de Civ. Dei, lib. 8. cap. 2. See also Cicero, lib. 1. de Nat. Deorum, pag. 38. ubi Thales & Anaximenes aërem Deum statuit, eumque signat.

(105) Thales Anaxagoram & Diogenem Apolloniæ.

(106) August. ubi supra. See also Cicero, ubi supra. ubi Thales & Anaximenes aërem Deum statuit, eumque signat.

(107) See Cicero Tuscul. 5. circ. init.

• Virgil. Ecl. 6. v. 31.

Namque canebat, uti magnum per inane coacta
Semina terrarumque, animæque, marisque, fuissent,
Et liquidi simul ignis; ut his exordia primis
Omnia, & ipse tener mundi concreverit orbis*.

*He sung the secret Seeds of Nature's Frame;
How Seas, and Earth, and Air, and active Flame Fell thro' the mighty Void, and in their Fall
Were blindly gather'd in this goodly Ball.*

DRYDEN.

It was therefore necessary that they should explain themselves about the Nature of God, and exhaust the whole Doctrine of first Principles; after which they might be permitted to account for the particular and constant Effects of Nature, without going back to the first Cause. At present the Philosophers consider only second Causes, Matter, and Form, &c. But it is not, because they suppose, that the Knowledge of God, as the first Cause, is sufficiently established. It is, because they treat of it at large, in a part of their Courses of Philosophy, distinct from Physics Contradictions [G]. It seems to me to be full of them; and, in general, the Ideas of (108) In their Metaphysics.

Physics (108). However, we may be sure, that these ancient Philosophers were not ignorant of what the Poets had said of God. Why then did they not imitate them? Was it, because they laid no great stress on Poems, in which they found so many Trifles, and so many popular Opinions, which were not proof against a philosophical Enquiry (109)? Aristotle insinuates this Reason (110). Did they judge of the Poets, as Socrates did, when he said, that they resembled Fanatics, and that, like them, they understood not what they advanced? Ἐβαν ἔν αὖ καὶ περὶ τῶν ποιητῶν ἐν ὀλίγῳ τῦτο, ὅτι ἡ σοφία ποιοῖεν, ἀλλὰ φύσει τινι, καὶ ἀνδυσιαζόντες, ὥσπερ οἱ θεομάνεις καὶ οἱ χρησμοδοί. καὶ γὰρ εἰσι λῆναι μὲν πολλὰ καὶ καλὰ, ἵσασι δὲ ὅδ' ἐν ἡμῶν λῆναι. τοιούτων γὰρ ἐκείνων παρὰ θεοῦ καὶ ποιητῶν παρὰ θεοῦ (111). I soon discovered this in the Poets; namely that they were not directed by Wisdom, but by a kind of natural Enthusiasm; not unlike those, who prophesy by Inspiration. For these indeed utter many excellent Things; but understand nothing of what they say. After the same manner the Poets appear to me to be affected. It is certain, that the most Orthodox Poets have greatly erred concerning the Nature of God; for Orpheus, who sung, that God made Heaven, calls him only the Firstborn of all Creatures, and says, that the Air was his Father, Πρωτογενὸς Παῖτων ἀερίπνεος ἥρος υἱός (112).

Primo-genitus Pæhton, Alti Aeris filius.

Diogenes Laërtius pretends, that Anaxagoras borrowed one of his Tenets from the Poet Linus (113), but it was not with respect to the Intelligence, the first Mover. Note, that Aristotle, in this Particular, makes a great Difference between Anaxagoras and Thales (114). I shall conclude with a fine Passage of Theodoret, from whence it appears, that the Philosophers, who lived before Anaxagoras, were altogether ignorant of the first Cause. Ἀναξαγόρας - - τῶν πρὸ αὐτοῦ γεννημένων φιλοσόφων ἐδὲν παραίτερον τῶν ὁραμένων νενοκῶτων, πρῶτον μὲν ἔφησαν ἵσταναι τὸ κόσμον, καὶ τῶτον εἰς τὰς ἐν ἐκ τῆς ἀταξίας ἀναλεῖν τὰ τοιοῦτα (115). Anaxagoras - - - observed the Philosophers before him carried their Thoughts no higher than the Visible Creation, was the first, who taught, that an Intelligence presided over the World, and reduced the Elements from Confusion into Order.

[G] Whether the Doctrine of the Homœomerizæ does not imply many Contradictions. I shall not make use of Aristotle's Arguments (116), however solid and refined they may be; and, if it appears that my Reflexions agree with his, it will be merely accidental.

I. We have seen (117), why Anaxagoras taught, that every thing was composed of similar Particles: This he asserted, to shew, that Bodies were not made out of nothing. Now, as the simplest Food may administer Nourishment to all the Parts of an Animal, he was necessarily obliged to acknowledge, that the Grains of a Meadow contains Bones, Nails, Horns, Blood, Flesh, Skin, Hair, &c. It is not therefore composed of similar Particles; it is rather a Collection of all kinds of Heterogenities: To what purpose then was the Doctrine of the Homœomerizæ? Was he not obliged to depart from it in all particular Cases, after having supposed it in general? What I have said of Grains, may be applied likewise to Milk, Wine, Water, Bread, and many other things. Is there any Body, which does not serve as Matter to several others, in the Changes, which are called Generation and Corruption? Therefore these first Principles both are, and are not, Homogeneous. They are Homogeneous, according to the Supposition of Anaxagoras; but in reality they are not so; for since compound Bodies, according to his Opinion, ought to be of the same Nature with their Principles, and are only a Mixture of dissimilar Parts, it follows, that the Principles are Heterogeneous. I shall retouch this Argument in the Vth Paragraph.

II. Besides, it will be found, that, upon this Supposition, Names have been wrong imposed; for (to give an Instance of it) if the Blood of Animals was contained in the Herbage they have fed upon, it would better deserve the Name of Blood, than that of Hay. Anaxagoras answered, that certain Particles being more numerous in a compound Body, or placed on the Surface, made it appear uniform, and procured it a specific Name (118). Lucretius has refuted this Answer by the false Consequences which arise from it. It would result from hence, says he, that, when Corn is bruised, some Particles of Blood may be drawn from it, or of some other Organs, of which our Body is composed. But this is contrary to Experience.

Linquitur hic tenuis latitandi copia quædam;
Id quod Anaxagoras sibi sumit, ut omnibus omnes
Res putet immixtas rebus latitare; sed illud
Apparere unum, cujus sint plura mixta,
Et magis in promptu, primæque in fronte locata.
Quod tamen à verâ longe ratione repulsum est.
Conveniebat enim fruges quoque sæpe minutas,
Robore cùm saxi franguntur, mittere signum
Sanguinis, aut aliûm, nostro quæ corpore aluntur.
Consimili ratione herbas quoque sæpe deceptat,
Et laticis dulces guttas, similique sapore,
Mittere, lanigeræ quali sunt ubera lactis:
Scilicet & glebis terrarum sæpe friatis
Herbarum genera, & fruges, frondeque videri,
Dispertita, ac in terris latitare minute:
Postremo in lignis cinerem fumumque videri,
Cum præfracta forent, igneque latere minuitos.
Quorum nil fieri quoniam manifesta docet res,
Scire licet non esse in rebus res ita mixtas (119).

But there's a little Shift, a slight Excuse,
Which Anaxagoras's Scholars use.

Tho' such lie mix'd in All, That Part alone
Appears, That only to the Sense is shewn,
Which, in the Composition, does comprize
The greatest Part, and on the Surface lies.
But this is false; or, through the weighty Mill,
From broken Corn wou'd bloody drops distil,
Or some such Parts, as in our Bodies grow,
From Herbs and Flow'rs a milky juice would flow;
In broken Clods each searching Eye might see
Some lurking, scatter'd, Herb, or Leaf, or Tree;
And in cleft Wood, and broken Sticks, admire Smoke, Ashes, Flame, and little Sparks of Fire.
But, since, on strictest Search, no Parts appear,
We must not fondly fancy they are there.

CREECH.

This Confutation is not amiss; for, in short, mix several Sorts of Grain together as you please; take an hundred times more Wheat, than Barley; put as many Grains of Barley as you can in an Inclosure of Wheat; what will you get by it? Will you make People believe, that there is nothing but Wheat there? Will any one continue in this Error, even after your Heap is scattered? Will no Grain of Barley appear? Nothing can be more foolish, than such an Assertion. Anaxagoras could not have solved this Objection, but by supposing, that each sensible Part of a Grain of Corn is so qualified, that the Heterogenities are there in a less Number, and wrap up in the Particles of Corn; and that this is the Reason why, when Corn is bruised between two Mill-Stones, we never discover the Heterogeneous Parts; but that, if we could proceed in the Division as far as the insensible Particles, then the Blood, the Flesh, the Bones, &c. would appear to Eyes finer than ours. In a word, he could not get clear of this Difficulty, but by the divisibility of Matter in Infinitum; which is to imitate a Man, who, to avoid the thrust of a Sword, throws himself headlong down a Precipice of an inconceivable Height. But I will insist only on the Difficulties, which imply some kind of Contradiction.

III. I say, in third the place, that Anaxagoras ought to have supposed, that the similar Particles are found, both in greater and lesser Numbers, in Bread: In greater Numbers, because the Compound is called Bread; in lesser Numbers, because a few Hours after the Bread of the Ancients, who have mentioned the Chaos, were no less confused than the Chaos itself.

is eat, it becomes Chyle, and discovers nothing in all its sensible Particles, but the Qualities of Chyle. This Objection will be more easily apprehended, if Dough be compared with Corn, or Bread with Dough. It will appear, that this Philosopher must have owned, that the Homogeneities are both more and less numerous in the same mixed Body; In Dough, for Instance; for, while it is Dough, it contains more Corpuscles of Dough, than of any other Species of Body; But, when it is converted into Bread, it contains fewer Corpuscles of Dough, than of Bread; and yet the Corpuscles of Bread are only derived from Dough.

IV. Here follows another Contradiction. It is contradicting one's self, to lay down an Hypothesis, which involves on one side the same Inconvenience it removes on the other. This is the Misfortune of Anaxagoras's System. This Philosopher, having supposed, that the Parts of Matter had eternally been in a State of Confusion; that is to say, that the smallest Homogeneous Particles had been every where surrounded with Heterogeneous ones, supposed, that, at last, an intelligent Being put an end to This Disorder, by separating the similar Particles from those, which were dissimilar. But He himself overthrew his own Supposition; being obliged to confess, that all the kinds of Homomeries were blended together in all kinds of Bodies; and This even with respect to the insensible Particles. According to His Opinion, there is an Infinity of small Bones, and little Drops of Blood, &c. in each Blade of Grass, and in each Morfel of Bread: Every thing was mixed with every thing, since every thing was made of every thing.

Διὸ εἰσι πάντες ἐν παντί μίχθεται, διότι πάντες ἐκ πάντων ὡσαν γένεσιν (120). Qua propter inquit quodque in quolibet esse mixtum, quia quodlibet ex quocvis oriri videbunt. Anaxagoras μίχθεται πάντες ἐν παντί φησι (121). Anaxagoras omne in omni miseri ait. Can there be a greater State of Confusion? It was Plato's Opinion of it; for more than once he alleges the Doctrine of Anaxagoras as a Symbol of the Chaos. Kān ei sunkripnoiso mēn pantiā, diakripnoiso dē mē, tachō an tō tū Anaxagorē gignous ēin, oūk pantiā chrēmata (122).

Moreover, if all things were confused, and never separated, Anaxagoras's Doctrine would presently be verified, that all Things were together. He says, in another place, Tō tū Anaxagorē an polū ēn, ē zēle pōle --- ōmē an pantiā chrēmata epureō ēn tō anō, akritōn t' oūsan tōn te ōrganōn kai iatritōn kai o-panōnlikōn (123). That of Anaxagoras would come to pass, Friend Polus. --- All things would be blended together, Those which relate to Medicine, and Health, and Those which relate to Cookery. Menage tells us, that Luther called those Divines Anaxagorists, who find every thing in every Text of Scripture. "Atque inde est, quod 'Luthero Theologus Anaxagoristicus dicitur is, qui quodlibet in quolibet loco scripturæ sacre invenire possit' (124).

V. His first Principles were, and were not, such: they were first Principles, according to his Supposition; and were not in reality so; since they were as much compounded and corruptible, as any other Body. He admitted of a Divisibility in Infinitum; and therefore must have believed, that there is an Infinity of Corpuscles in the least Drop of Water; and consequently that it contains as many of them, as the whole Earth. Besides, this infinite number of Corpuscles was an Heap of all kinds of Heterogeneities. It was not, then, more simple than a Tree; and, in this respect alone, it differed from mixed Bodies, that human Eyes could not discover the dissimilar Parts, as they discover them in a Tree. Lastly, the Intelligence, which moved Matter, could as easily have divided these pretended first Principles, as Fire divides Wood: They were, then, as perishable as Wood; from whence it follows, that, if they existed in the Nature of things, it was not in quality of first Principles. Besides, can any thing be more absurd, than to lay down for Principles what has no Existence at all? Now, according to the Hypothesis of Anaxagoras, it is certain there were no Homomeries in the Universe.

Let us examine an Answer, which he might have made: He might have supposed, that the Essence of the Homomeries does not consist in the Resemblance of all their Parts, but in the Conformity, which is found, between the Contexture of the Heterogeneities of a small Bone, for instance, and the Contexture of the Heterogeneities of any other Bone. He might have said: "I do not pretend, that a Bone of ten Inches, divided into an Hundred thousand Parts, or, which is the same thing in my Hypothesis, into an Hundred thousand Bones, does not absolutely contain any Particle, but what is similar to all the rest; I own, that each of these small Bones is a Mixture of all kinds of Principles; it contains Flesh, it contains Blood and Membranes, &c. But, because these different Materials are ranged according to the same Symmetry in each of these small Bones, I have reason to maintain, that the Collection of an Hundred thousand of these small Bones is an Homogeneous Compound, or an Heap of Homomeries; and, whereas I suppose, that the Intelligence, which made the Choice of them, found them ready made; I may very well assert, that each of them, taken separately, is incapable of Destruction; for they always existed of themselves."

This Answer consists of two Heads: one is the Explication of the Hypothesis with respect to the Sense of the Word Homomeries; the other concerns the Incorruptibility of these Homomeries. I am going to illustrate the first by an Example. Put all the Copies of the same Book, bound after the same manner, into a Library: it will be a Collection of Books, which are all alike; an Homogeneous Collection; not because each of these Volumes is composed of Parts, which are perfectly alike; but because the White and the Black, the Spaces, Letters, Accents, Points, Comma's, and the other Heterogeneous Parts, have the same Symmetry in one, as in all the rest. Setting aside this Explication of Anaxagoras, I shall only argue against the second Part of his Answer.

VI. I ask him not, why the Intelligence, which he acknowledged, left the Homomeries in Confusion, from all Eternity; nor how it came to think so late of moving and uniting them; nor why he denies, that something may be formed out of nothing; he, who confesses, that Motion had a beginning? These three Objections, and some others, strangely puzzle those, who admit of a Matter, eternal, uncreated, and distinct from the divine Being; but, because these Difficulties may be urged against other Philosophers, as well as against Anaxagoras, it will not be proper to insist upon them. I will only illustrate the last. It is certain, that the Production of a Quality, distinct from its Subject, does not differ from a true Creation. This the modern Philosophers (125), prove demonstratively against the Aristotelians; who admit an Infinity of substantial and accidental Forms, distinct from Matter; for, since they are not composed of any pre-existent Subject, it follows, that they are formed out of nothing. The best Answer, that the Followers of Aristotle can make, is to resort to this Objection, and to say, that the Cartesians are obliged to acknowledge, that Motion cannot be produced, but by Creation. The Cartesians own this Consequence; and attribute the Production of Motion only to God; and they say, that to put Matter in Motion, is to create it at every Moment, in different Places. Let us conclude from hence, that Anaxagoras, and several others, contradicted themselves, when, on the one side, they would not acknowledge, that something might be made out of nothing, and owned, on the other side, that Motion, or some other Modification, had a beginning in the eternal Chaos (126). But, waving this, I shall only insist on the Difficulties, which relate particularly to Anaxagoras.

VII. I allege this Maxim against him: All things, which are distinct between themselves, may be separated or divided from each other; and from hence I conclude, that each Homomery may be divided in infinitum; for it is composed of all Kinds of Principles jumbled together. And, therefore, since Motion is a necessary Principle of Division, and God has produced Motion in Matter, it follows, that, by this moving Force, he might disunite each part of the Universe, and break in pieces any Homomery whatever, which you would take for an Unit. If it was an Epicurian Atom, a Body perfectly simple, single, and free

(117) Arist.
Ph. Physic.
lib. 1. c. 4.
p. 236. G.

(121) Id.
A'cuphy.
lib. 3. c. 5.
p. 571. C.

(122) Plato,
in Phædone,
p. 54.

(123) Id. in Gorgia,
317.

(124) Men-
in La-
crt. lib. 2.
p. 73.

(125) See
Collected
Phys. § 1.
lib. 7. c. 2.

(126) See
Methodus, apud Phot.
cod. 236.
p. 943.

itself. I may venture to say, without an Hyperbole, that they are not just, and that these Philosophers free from all Composition, I own, that nothing could divide it: but Anaxagoras does not acknowledge any such Bodies, nor any Homœomeria, be it ever so little, but what contains an Infinity of distinct Corpuſcles, and even different from each other in their Qualities. It is therefore true, that what he calls first Principles are as subject to Destruction, as the most compounded Bodies; for instance, an Ox; this, I say, is very true, even though it be supposed, that the Homœomeria exist eternally of themselves; for it is sufficient, that an external Cause can make them pass from Motion to Rest; though it has not the Power of giving them Being, or of annihilating them. To recur to a Progress in infinitum, would be unnecessary upon this Occasion. It cannot be said, in answer to this Objection, that, the Homœomeria being composed of an Infinity of Corpuſcles, those, which compose a small Bone, may be divided in infinitum, without ceasing to be a small Bone, and that they only become a smaller Bone, after each Division. This is no good Reply; for there are two things to be considered in each Homœomeria: I. That it contains an Infinity of Particles; this is common to it with others. II. That the Particles are ranged after a certain Manner; this is peculiar to it; this is it's specific Form; it's Essence; by this it is either a little Bone, or a drop of Blood, rather than any other Species of the first Principles. And, therefore, in order to take from the Homœomeria of a Bone it's Essence, and it's Species, it is sufficient to range the Particles, which compose the same, after another manner. Now, if it be admitted, that the Intelligence, which was the first Mover, could divide Bodies, and disentangle them from each other, it might also have divided the Corpuſcles of each particular Homœomeria, and given them another Combination; it would therefore change their Species, as Flower changes it's Species, when it is kneaded; that is, when it's Particles are jumbled and combined in a different manner.

I do not object to this Philosopher, That he acknowledged a Difference between the Parts of Matter, before they were put in Motion. This Objection always appeared to me very weak. I conceive very clearly, that a Division supposes a Distinction, and that an Iron Pin, fixed into a piece of Wood, and perfectly at Rest, is as different from the Wood, as if it moved together with the Wood.

VIII. I proceed to the last Objection. What would be the Consequence, if we should grant this Philosopher, That the same necessity, which causes Bodies to exist, causes them to exist distinct, in an infinite Number of Homœomeria; each of which must necessarily continue for ever entire; the Nature of things being such, that there must be fixed Bounds in each Species; as we usually say, there is a minimum quod sit (127), in each Species of living Bodies? Would not such a Concession be of great Service to the Hypothesis of Anaxagoras? Would it not allow him the Incorruptibility, and internal Immutability, of his first Principles? Would they not be so small a Bone, that, becoming less by the actual Division of their Parts, they would cease to be a Bone; and so with regard to other Species? And would it not signify, that natural Necessity made them Indivisible? I allow all this; but it is only avoiding one Inconvenience by another: I should still find this Fault with the System; that the Nûs, or Intelligence, would come in, against all Rules, to undertake the easiest Task, after the most difficult was performed by a blind Necessity. It is incontestably true, that every Philosopher, who will give a good Account of the Order, which appears in the several parts of the Universe, must suppose an Intelligence as the Author of this beautiful Regularity. He need not fear, that reasonable Persons will reproach him with imitating certain Poets, who introduce a God, a Σίσυφ'ος, upon the Stage, to unravel Difficulties, which are not worth his Trouble. But if, after having supposed, that the Homœomeria were formed without the Direction of an intelligent Cause, he pretends, that such a Cause disentangled, and put them in order, he may be told, that he imitates such Poets, contrary to all Rules.

Never presume to make a God appear,
But for a Business worthy of God.

ROSCOMMON.

To be sensible of the Force of this Objection, we need only observe, that it is much more difficult to make good Watches, than to separate them from: a parcel of Medals and Shells, with which they are intermixed, and then to range and mix them after a better manner. A young Apprentice, a Child, could make this Choice, and produce this new Regulation. Every one will grant me, that the Formation of Men (129) is a Work, which requires more Direction and Ability, than the Art of ranging them according to Military Evolutions. The greatest part of modern Philosophers suppose, that the general Laws of Nature are sufficient to make a Fœtus grow, provided it has been well formed, and well organized, in the Seed; but they suppose, that the Animalcula, which are organized in the Seed, are the Work of a most wise and powerful Creator. They believe, therefore, that the principal Difficulty, which stands in need of the Direction of an Intelligence, consists in the first formation of an organized Machine; that is to say, in the forming those Animalcula, which they suppose to be in the Seed. To speak properly, each of these Animalcula is an Homœomeria of Anaxagoras. It is, therefore, more difficult to form Homœomeria, than to cause Animals to grow by the help of Nourishment. It is, therefore, in order to explain the Formation of the Homœomeria, that the Direction of an intelligent Being is chiefly requisite; for every Homœomeria is a certain Collection of infinite kinds of Bodies: And this Collection must be made according to certain Proportions and Situations: The Collection, necessary for the Homœomeria of a Bone, is different from that, which is necessary for the Homœomeria of Flesh; and, if you were not exactly to follow this Symmetry, you would not have the first Principles of Blood or Marrow, but those of some other Mixture. Now Anaxagoras did not suppose the Necessity of an Intelligence, towards the Formation of infinite Species of Homœomeria; each of which is a certain Conjunction of all kinds of Bodies, mixed together in such a manner, that those of one Species must prevail in Number, and be placed in one certain manner, rather than in any other, and that, in general, one Proportion and Symmetry must prevail more than another. He has therefore assigned a blind Necessity as the Cause of what was most difficult. And therefore he did not reason consequentially, when he believed an Intelligence to be necessary for what was less difficult. According to his Doctrine, the whole Function of the Intelligence consists in ranging what was confused, in moving what was at Rest, in separating such things as were mixed, and adorning those, which were destitute of Ornament. Ἀναξαγόρας - - - ταῦτα καὶ εὖτε, ἀρχὴ πάντων ὁ νῦς, καὶ ἐπὶ διττῷ καὶ κινεῖται τὸν δαόν, καὶ παρὰ τὴν ταύτην τοῖς δακτύλοις, καὶ κινεῖται τοῖς αὐχνοῖς, καὶ διακρίνει τοῖς μεμυσμένοις, καὶ ἕκαστον τοῖς ἀλόγοις (130). Anaxagoras hæc docet: Mens omnium est initium, eaque causa & omnium minima est, & ordinem sensus præbet, & motionem immutabilibus, & discernit commixtis, & ornatum innovat. He might have been attacked both in Front and Rear. He might have been told, You say both too much, and too little. If you believe, that Nature, without any Direction or Knowledge, formed all the Homœomeria, you must believe, that she could have moved, separated, and distributed them: And therefore your Intelligence is superfluous. But if you believe it necessary for the Separation and Distribution of these Homœomeria, you ought likewise to ascribe their Formation to it; you do not extend it's Influence wherever it is wanted. Thus one part of your System destroys the other: It is not made up of well sorted and well connected Pieces (131). If this Philosopher's Works were extant, or all those of Theophrastus (132), we might perhaps find, that he answered some of the Difficulties, which I have just now started; that he owned he was not satisfied with his own Hypothesis; and that he sunk under the weight of the Myſteries of Nature. He said, that every thing was surrounded with Darkness. Anaxagoras προσηύχεται περιεσπῆσθαι ἐστὶν ὁμίαντα (133). Several other Philosophers make the same

(129) I do not mean what Parents contribute towards it; I do not mean the Material, but the Efficient Cause, which organizes it's Fœtus, and forms this admirable Machine.

(127) That is a Degree of Smallness, below which an Animal, for instance, an Ant, could not be an Ant.

(130) Herminius in Philoſoph. Irriſione. This Work of Herminius is to be found in the Bibliotheca Patrum, and at the end of Justin Martyr's Works, Paris, 1636, and Cologne, 1686.

(131) See a Passage of Aristotle in Remark [R].

(132) He wrote a Book upon τὸν Ἀναξαγόρου, de Anaxagoræ decretis. See Lacert. in Theophrast. lib. 5. n. 42.

(133) Laërt. lib. 3. c. 8. pag. 217.

(128) Florent. de Art. Poet. ver. 191.

Nec Deus interit, nisi dignus vindice nodus Inciderit (128).

Complaint;

Philosophers could not pretend, with any shew of Reason, that this state of Confusion subsisted no longer [H]. It is related, that Anaxagoras foretold, that the Stone, which fell from Heaven into the River Ægos, and was preserved and honoured as a holy Relick, would fall from the Body of the Sun [I]. Some other Predictions are likewise ascribed to him (x). He applied himself very much to Geometry (y); and it was found, that, in Prison, he wrote concerning the Quadrature of the Circle (z). His vast Genius was equal to every thing; the most difficult Phænomena of Nature, Comets, the Milky-way, Earthquakes, Winds, Thunder, Lightening (aa), the overflowing of the Nile (bb); Eclipses, and such like things, which he accounted for. All These, together with his Astronomical and Geometrical Speculations, did not prevent his reading the Poems of Homer, with the attention of a Man, who was desirous of making Discoveries, and improving Litterature. He was the first, who supposed them to be Moral Works, in which Virtue and Justice are explained by Allegorical Narrations (cc). The Circumstances and Issue of the Action, which was brought against him at Athens for Impiety, are variously reported; some say, that he was condemned;

(aa) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 9.

(bb) Diod. Sicul. lib. 1. cap. 38.

(cc) Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 12.

others,

Complaint; so far as to imagine, that the removal of the Darknels mentioned by Moses, which was upon the Deep, before God created the Light (134), was only with respect to the corporeal Eye; for, say they, the Darknels of the Mind still covers the Face of the Deep. The Light of Truth, concentered in this Abyss, never emerges from it; it only sends out a few Rays, which reach our Minds, after so many Reflexions and Refractions, and after having mixed their Brightness with so many obscure Corpuscles, in the dark Spaces, through which they pass, that they are only proper to form false Images.

[H] They could not pretend, with any shew of Reason, that this State of Confusion subsisted no longer. I had resolved to make some Reflexions on this Subject; but since the foregoing Remarks, and those which remain to be made, will sufficiently, if not too much, enlarge this Article, I have altered my Resolution, to avoid Prolixity. I shall not want an Opportunity of giving, in another Article, what I suppress here.

[I] Anaxagoras foretold, that the Stone — would fall from the Body of the Sun. This is related by Diogenes Laërtius (135); and Plutarch mentions this Prodigy in these Words: “Others fancied, that a Stone, which seemed to fall from Heaven, was an Omen of this great Overthrow (136). It was of a vast bigness; and fell by the River Ægos. The Peloponnesians esteem it very much; and shew it among their Curiosities to this Day. And it is said, that the Philosopher Anaxagoras foretold, that one of those Bodies, which are fixed to the Vault of Heaven, should one day be loosened by a violent Shock or Convulsion of the whole Machine, and fall to the Earth. For he said, that the Stars were not in the very places, in which they were first formed; seeing they were heavy Bodies, and of the Nature of Stones; and that they shone by the Reflection of the elementary Fire, and had been drawn up by force and were kept there by the Impenetrability and Violence of the circular Motion of the Heavens; having been placed there at the beginning of the World, and hindered from falling upon the Earth, when cold and heavy bodies were separated from the other substances of the Universe (137).” I have set down the whole Passage, that the Tradition of Anaxagoras, may be seen at the same time. The Words of Pliny deserve no less to be quoted. “Ce-lebrant Græci, sibi be (138), Anaxagoram Clazomenium, Olympiadis septuagesimæ octavæ secundo anno, prædixisse cœlestium literarum scientiæ, quibus diebus saxum casurum esset de Sole. Idque factum interdictum in Thraciæ parte ad Ægos flumen. Qui lapis etiam nunc ostenditur, magnitudine veldis, colore adusto, comete quoque illis noctibus flagrante. Quod quis prædictum credat, simul fateatur necesse est, majoris miraculi divinitatem Anaxagoræ fuisse: solvique rerum naturæ intellectum, & confundi omnia, si aut ipse Sol lapis esse, aut unquam lapidem in eo fuisse credatur: decidere tamen crebro, non erit dubium. In Abydi gymnasio ex ea causa colitur hodieque, modicus quidem, sed quem in medio terrarum casurum idem Anaxagoras prædixisse narratur. Colitur & Cassandra, quæ Potidæa vocitata est. — The Greeks have a Tradition, that, in the second Year of the Seventy eighth Olympiad, Anaxagoras of Clazomenæ foretold, by his Knowledge of the Heavens, at what time a Stone would fall from the Sun; which came to pass in the Day-time, in a part of Thracæ, by the River Ægos. This Stone is still seen, of the bigness of a Bar, and of a burnt Colour, and as having been attended with the Appearance of a Comet. But if any one really believes, that this Prodigy was foretold, he must own, at the same time, that the divine Knowledge of Anaxagoras, is the greater miracle of the Two; and that the Knowledge of natural Causes is destroyed, and all things confused, if it be believed, either that the Sun is a Stone, or that there ever were Stones in it; though there would be no room to doubt of their frequent fall. Upon this Account a Stone is at present had in reverence by the School of Abydos; it's Size is but small; but it is that, whose fall to the Earth was foretold by Anaxagoras. It is revered likewise at Cassandra, now called Potidæa.” By this you see, that Anaxagoras had more than once foretold the falling of these Stones, and that the Worship of them increased proportionably. Note, that Ammianus Marcellinus, and Tzetzes, make use of the Plural Number, in relation to the Prodigy of the River Ægos. They pretend, that Anaxagoras foretold, that Stones would fall from Heaven (139). Philostratus has expressed himself after the same manner. I shall set down his Words at length, because they will afford Matter for Criticism. “Apollonius, then, would have been unjustly charged with Impiety and Error, for having foreseen several things, and foretold others, after the same manner as Socrates was fully informed of them by Spirits, before they came to pass. And Anaxagoras also; for who knows not, that, once upon a time, being gone to the Olympic Games, covered with a Cloak, as a Prediction that it would Rain (140), though the Day was so clear and serene, that there was no probability of it; yet a little while after it rained violently? Having, another time, foretold that a House would fall in a few Days, it fell accordingly. Again, having foretold, that the Day at Noon would in an Instant become as dark as Night; and, another time, that great Stones would fall from Heaven into the River Ægos, it came so to pass. Now, if it be acknowledged, that these Things, and others of the like Nature, foreseen by Anaxagoras, were only a Proof of his very great Skill, how can they be imputed to Apollonius, as Art Magic (141).” Upon this a Commentator has made a very ridiculous Observation. “There are no Astrologers at present, though ever so mean, who cannot do as much as Philostratus says Anaxagoras did, in foretelling Rain, and the fall of a Stone from Heaven, and the like (142).” What an Absurdity is this! As great Fools as the Astrologers of our Days may be, they have not the Rashness to foretel, that Stones will fall from Heaven. Our Almanack-makers, and our most renowned Calculators of Horoscopes, are careful not to hazard their Reputation so shamefully. They know too well, that to foresee such Falls surpasses all their Skill. Pliny had reason to say, that the Prediction of Anaxagoras would have been a greater Miracle, than to see the Stone fall from the Body of the Sun (143). Observe, that there is an Interval of about sixty Years between the Time of this Prediction, according to Pliny, and it's Accomplishment, according to Plutarch. I have another Observation to make.

(139) Amm. Marcellin. lib. 22. c. 8. pag. 308. Tzetzes. chil. 2. ver. 892.

(140) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 10. Ælian. de Animal. l. 7. cap. 5. and Suidas, mention it likewise.

(141) Phil. in Vita Apollonij, lib. 1. cap. 2.

(142) Artes Theomag. Sr. d'Embriz, Annotations on the Life of Apollonius, Tom. 1. p. 91.

(143) See his Words above, Cicet. (128).

Photius,

(x) See Remark [I].

(y) Proclus Diadachus, lib. 2. in I. librum Euclidis.

(z) Plutarch. de Exilio, pag. 607.

(134) See Genesis 1.

(135) Diog. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 10.

(136) Names by the Destruction of the Athenian Fleet by Lyfander.

(137) Plutarch. in Lyfandor, pag. 439.

(138) Plin. lib. 2. c. 58.

others, that he was acquitted [K]. Pericles, who protected him on this occasion, was suspected of Atheism, for having been instructed by such a Master. I have taken notice of this in another place (dd). Diogenes Laërtius, in reporting a witty Saying of Anaxagoras, (dd) In the Remarks [C] and [D] of the Article PERICLES.

Photius, in his Abstract of the Life of Apollonius, pretends, that Anaxagoras was accounted a great Prophet, for having foretold, by Magic, that it would rain (144). I cannot believe, that Photius so little understood Philostatus's Meaning; I ascribe this egregious Mistake to the ill State his Work has been put into by Transcribers. And I cannot sufficiently wonder, how the Translator (145) could resolve to let this Passage be printed. His Translation is a Series of such gross Impertinence, and monstrous Reasoning, and withal so expressly contrary to the Original of Philostatus, that we can comprehend nothing of his Conduct. Did he believe, that the Text of Photius was correct? He must, then, have dream't of something else. Did he believe his Readers would be so stupid as to think his Performance a good one? He was, then, strangely secure. I desire those, who are qualified for it, to examine this Passage of Photius; they will find such Wounds in it, as require the Dexterity of the ablest Hand; and perhaps they may heal them, by the Assistance of the Manuscripts, compared with the Text, of Philostatus.

[K] Some say that he was condemned, others that he was acquitted. He was accused of Impiety, by Cleon, for having said, that the Sun was a Mass of inflamed Matter; and, notwithstanding Pericles's Protection, he was condemned to Banishment, and fined five Talents, as Sotion relates (146). But others say, that Thucydides informed against him, and accused him not only of Impiety, but of Treason likewise; and that the Accused was condemned to Death for Contumacy (147). Others relate, that he was in Prison, when Sentence of Death was pronounced against him. They add, that Pericles, addressing himself to the Judges, said, Do you find that he has committed any Crime? And, perceiving that none was imputed to him, he said, I am his Disciple; destroy him not, therefore, through Prejudice; believe me rather; and give him his Liberty. He obtained his Request; but the Accused took his Trial so much to heart, that he resolved to die (148). Others report, that he was brought before the Judges by Pericles; and that his Melancholy had reduced him so low, that he could scarce walk; inasmuch that he was discharged; not on account of his Innocence, but because of the Compassion, which he excited (149). I have observed elsewhere (150), that Pericles found no better means of saving this Philosopher, than by causing him to leave Athens.

Take notice of four Things. I. The Accusers of Anaxagoras (151) were Men of a Faction contrary to Pericles. It was not, therefore, out of Zeal for Religion, that they persecuted this Philosopher; but with a Design of supporting their Cabal, and weakening the Authority of Pericles, by maliciously causing the Suspicion of Irreligion to fall upon him. The most probable means of succeeding in this Design was to accuse Anaxagoras of Impiety. This is generally the first Inducement to this kind of Accusations; we want to be revenged of some one, or to remove an Obstacle to our Authority, and Fortune; we call the Passions of the People to our Assistance, and pretend, that the Honour of God is concerned in our Cause.

II. It is not true, that the Accusers of Anaxagoras grounded their Accusation on his acknowledging, that the divine Intelligence created the World; they proceeded upon this, that, in saying the Sun was a Stone, he robbed it of it's Divinity; which was likewise the Foundation of his Sentence of Condemnation (152). And therefore Vossius is guilty of an Error in these Words. "Laërtius industria nobis ipsa Anaxagoræ verba conservavit. Sunt autem hujusmodi: ἡλίου χρηματὰ ἢ ὀκνῶ, εἴτα ὕς ἐστι θὼν αὐτὰ δεικνύμενα. Omnia simul erant: deinde cessit Mens, eaque composuit. Quam aperte hic officem ab officio distinguit! Hoc ferre non potere Athenienses, ac ἀθεύοντα vel ἀσέβειαν vocarunt (153). — We are obliged to the Care of Diogenes Laërtius, for preserving the very Words of Anaxagoras; they are these: All things were confused; afterwards an Intelligence, interposing, reduced them into Order. How plainly does he distinguish here between the Workmanship and the Artificer! The Athenians could not bear this; and charged him with Atheism or Impiety." Anaxagoras was not condemned merely for distinguishing between God, and his Works; but for not teaching, as the Poets did, that the Sun was both the Work of God, and itself a God: For, according to the Belief of the People, grounded upon the Writings of the Poets, the Sun was Apollon, the Son of Jupiter, and one of the great Deities. Vossius's Error is, as if one should say, That the Inquisition has condemned a Person to death, for teaching, that God alone, the Author, Preserver, and sovereign Lord of all things, deserves the supreme Worship, θεολογία, and that no Creature in Paradise merits our Invocation, or the Worship δωλεία. This Doctrine comprehends two Points; and a Man would be punished in Salamanca only for the second. Would not a Protestant be in the wrong to say, that such a Man was punished for maintaining the first Point? However, Eusebius had reason to think it strange, that Anaxagoras was in danger of being stoned, as an Atheist, notwithstanding his Orthodoxy as to the Existence of a God, the Author of this World; a Doctrine, which he was the first who taught, among the Greeks. Θαυμάσας δ' ἐστὶν ὡς ἐπὶ πρῶτον παρ' Ἑλλήσις τῶτον θεολογῶσας τὸν τρώτοιν, δόξας ἀθναίους ἀθεῖν εἶναι, ὅτι μὴ τὸν ἥλιον ἐθελοῖεν, τὸν δὲ ἥλιον ποιεῖν, μισοῦ δὲ αὐτὸν κατὰλευθεῖν ἔθαιεν (154). In quo sane permixtum illud est, quod princeps apud Græcos eam theologicam rationem intulerat, eam Atheniensibus, quod non jam Solem, at Solis ipsius effectorem Deum statueret, atheum esse visum, ac propterea parum abfuisse, quin ab iis lapidibus necaretur. This, I say, is astonishing; for, in short, (which is my third Remark) it is scarce conceivable, that, in so learned a City as Athens, a Philosopher could not explain the Properties of the Stars by Physical Reasons, without running the risque of his Life. Is it not a deplorable thing for a Man to be more knowing than a superstitious Mob, conducted by senseless Men? To what purpose serves this Superiority of Genius and Knowledge among such a People? Is it not rather a Crime? Does it not expose a Man to a thousand Infamies and Dangers? And might we not enjoy the Conveniences of Life much better, by following the Current of Ignorance and Superstition? Οἱ περιεσσευμένοι τῷ Χριστῷ κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον λόγον πεισθέντες τὰ πρῶτα μάλ' ἀπειροῦν καὶ ἐλπίσαι, ὡς ἀσέβεις καὶ ἀθεοῖς εἰς δικαστήρια ἤχθησαν (155). The Pericles before CHRIST were dragged before Tribunals, as impious and officious Persons, for endeavouring to speculate upon, and explain, things, to the Understanding of Men. I observe, in the fourth Place, that we cannot but wonder, that so remarkable a Trial as That of Anaxagoras, in which Pericles, the chief Man of Athens, was so far concerned, was not better known to Historians. They mention it with a Thousand Variations; nay, some of them, in the principal Points, assert what others deny; which is not for the Honour of Antiquity.

I must not omit a fine Passage of Lucian, in which he supposes, that the greatest of the Gods endeavoured to crush Anaxagoras to pieces, but that he missed him; and that the Thunder-bolt, being averted by Pericles, burnt a Temple, and was almost broken to pieces against a Rock. Δίῳιν δῶσαντος ἐπειδὴ τὸν κερμαίνον πισχυδῶν κατὰσφραῖναι γὰρ αὐτὴν, καὶ ἀποσυρμέναι εἰσι δύο ἀκτίνες αἱ μέσσαι, ὅπῃτε φιλομύθεον ἡνέλιον παρὼν ἐπὶ τὸν σοφιστὴν ἀναγκάζοντες, ὡς ἐπαθεῖ τὰς ὀμνίαντας μὴδὲ δῶας εἶναι τίνας ἡμᾶς τὸς θεοὺς. ἀλλ' ἐκείνη μὲν δὴν μαρτυροῦν ὑπερίσχετο γὰρ αὐτὴ τὴν χεῖρα Περικλέους. ὁ δὲ κερμαίνων, εἰς τὸ ἀνάκλιον παροικηλάς, ἐκείνῳ τε κατέφαλε, καὶ αὐτὸς ὀλίγῳ εἰν συνερίσθη παρὰ τὴν αὔρεαν (156). They shall smart for it, as soon as my Thunder is in Order. For two of it's largest Forks were bent and broken; when, not long ago, I darted it too eagerly at the Sophist Anaxagoras; who endeavoured to persuade his Acquaintance, that there were no such Gods, as we Gods. I missed my aim, it is true; for Pericles interposed with his Hand, and protected him; and the averted Bolt, falling on the Temple of Castor and Pollux, burnt it down, (144) Phot. Biblioth. cod. 241. p. 1017.

(145) Andr. Schottus.

(146) Sotion, in Successionibus Philosophorum, apud Diogen. Laërt. lib. 2. n. 12.

(147) Satyrus, in Vitis apud Diogen. Laërt. ubi supra.

(148) Hermyppus, in Vitis apud Diogen. Laërt. ubi supra, n. 13.

(149) Hieronymus, in secundo libro Commentariorum. Varior. apud Diogen. Laërt. ubi supra.

(150) In Remark [M] of the Article PERICLES.

(151) Cleon, or Thucydides. See Plutarch in the Life of Pericles, p. 270, & 155.

(152) See Josephus, l. 2. contra App. p. 1079. F. S. Cyril. lib. 4. contra Julian.

(153) Vossius de Orig. & Progr. Idolol. lib. 1. cap. 1. p. 5.

(154) Eusebius. Prepar. Evang. l. 14. cap. 14. p. 750. C.

(155) Just. Martyr. A. pol. 1. p. 48.

(156) Lucian. in Timon. p. 65. Tom. 1. O. perum.

Anaxagoras, has committed a Blunder in Chronology [L], which I wonder has been so long unobserved. The Confrancy of this Philosopher on the News of his own Condemnation, and at That of the Death of his Sons, was wonderful [M]. He was very little concerned, whether he lived and died out of his own Country (ee); and he had a true Discernment of human Happiness [N]. Some Authors pretend, that he was never feign to laugh, or even to smile (ff). Cicero ascribes a remarkable Gravity to him; Maxima fuit & gravitatis & ingenii gloria (gg). He died at Lampfacus, where he had an honourable Burial, and a very glorious Epitaph; nay, they went so far as to build

(ee) See Remark [M].

(ff) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 8. c. 13. Plutarch in the Life of Pericles.

(gg) Cicero, Quæst. 2. Acad. dem. lib. 2. cap. 23.

down, and was itself almost broke in pieces against a Rock. Vossius, who says only, that Jupiter darted his Thunder-bolt against this Philosopher (157), occasioned Moreri to say, that Anaxagoras was crushed to pieces by it. It was very natural to believe so; for we cannot easily conceive, that a Thunder-bolt, designed for the Death of any Person, should not kill him. But this should teach us to have recourse to the Originals, and not to stop at modern Authors, who mention only such Circumstances of a Fact, as they have present Occasion for. Vossius, for Example, who had no occasion, in this Place, to tell us, whether Jupiter succeeded or not, suppressed Lucian's Rallery. This Omission led Moreri into a Snare, which he might have avoided, if he had but translated the Latin of Vossius. Why did he left the part of a Paraphrase? Lambert Barleus, commenting on this Passage of Lucian, asserts, that Anaxagoras was accused of Atheism, on account of his Doctrine concerning the divine Intelligence, The first Mover, &c. (158). This is an Untruth, which he borrowed from Vossius, and which I have already confuted. He says, farther, that a Talent was promised as a Reward to any one, who should kill this Philosopher (159). This seems to me to confound Anaxagoras with the Atheist Diogenes. Lastly, in point of Orthodoxy, he compares Anaxagoras with Lucian, and complains, that Justin Martyr ranks Lucian among the Atheists. "Anaxagoras — goræ non æbulis fuit Lucianus nofter, quem immerito ἀθεος vocat Justinus Martyr, in oratione contra Græcos (160). — Our Lucian was not unlike Anaxagoras, whom Justin Martyr, in his Oration against the Greeks, unjustly files The Atheist." But his Comparison is as false, as his Complaint; the Occasion of his Error was as follows. He had read in Vossius, "Lucianus, in Timone, ait "Jovem in Anaxagoræ caput — — — sed Lucianum quid dico? Ecce Justinus Martyr, oratione ad Græcos, eum ἀθεος vocat (161) — — — Lucian, in his Timon, says, that Jupiter darted on the Head of Anaxagoras — but why do I mention Lucian? "Justin Martyr, in his Oration against the Greeks, calls him an Atheist." And he did not apprehend, that eum (him) relates to the Philosopher Anaxagoras, and not to Lucian.

(157) Vossius de Orig. & Progr. Idol. lib. 1. cap. 1. p. 5.

(158) Diogenes Laërtius, in reporting a witty Saying of Anaxagoras, has committed a Blunder in Chronology. He says, that Anaxagoras, seeing the Tomb of Mausolus, cried out, It is a Monument of the Conversion of Gold into Stone. I do not confine myself to a literal Translation; but these are the Greek Terms: Τὸ αὐτὸ χρυσοῦν ἐκ χρυσοῦ ἐστὶν ὡς ἐκ χρυσοῦ (162). Monumentum pretiosum in lapides conversarum divitiarum imago est. We may suppose, that he really expressed himself thus, at the Sight of a sumptuous Sepulchre; but it was not upon seeing That of Mausolus; for his Death preceded the building of that Monument by several Olympiads. "Anaxagoras — — — *Olymp. LXXXVIII. mortuus est. Mausoli autem sepulchrum ante Olymp. CVII. conditum non est. Aut igitur hæc verba Philosophus ille non dixit: aut alia certè occasione dixit: Mausoleum enim nunquam vidit: quod ab Illustratoribus Laërtii nondum opinor observatum est. Verba sunt Joannis Pearsonii viri undecunque doctissimi, in libro de epistolis Sancti Ignatii, pag. 9. secundæ partis; quibus ego assentior. Id ipsum observatum à Gifferto Cuperio in antiquis numismatibus explicatis viro elegantissimi ingenii (163). — *Anaxagoras died in the LXXXVIIIth Olympiad. But the Sepulchre of Mausolus was not built 'till the CVIth Olympiad. Either, therefore, our Philosopher did not speak these Words; or he spoke them on some other Occasion; for he never saw the Mausoleum; which I think has never been observed by the Commentators on Laërtius. They are the Words of John Pearson, a Man of great Learning, in his Book concerning the E-

(161) Me-nage, in Diogenes Laërtius. p. 77. col. 2.

"pistles of St Ignatius, p. 9. Part II. with which I agree. "The same Observation was made by That great Genius "Gisbert Cuperus, in his ancient Coins explained."

[M] The Confrancy of this Philosopher on the News of his own Condemnation, and at That of the Death of his Sons, was wonderful. On the first News, he said, Nature has long ago pronounced her Sentence as well against them (164), as against me; and on the second, I knew very well, that I begot them mortal (165). Diogenes Laërtius intimates, that he lost them all; and adds, that, according to Demetrius Phalereus, his Sons buried him with their own Hands (166); which would be a Contradiction among Authors. But it may be cleared up, by supposing, that, after he had shewed this Confrancy, he had other Children; or that he gave this Answer, only upon hearing of the Death of one of his Sons. Cicero employs the singular Number. "Quem (Anaxagoram) ferunt nunciata morte filii, dixisse, sciebam me genuisse mortalem (167). — Who (Anaxagoras) is reported, ed, upon hearing of the Death of his Son, to have said, I knew that I begot him mortal." Valerius Maximus (168), Plutarch (169), and Simplicius (170), use the same Number; but Ælian observes, that Anaxagoras had only two Sons, and that he spoke these Words, upon hearing of the Death of both (171). Note, that he received this News, whilst he was reading a Lecture in Philosophy (172).

I shall insert here his Answer to his Friends, who asked him, at Lampfacus, whether he desired, after his Death, to be carried to Clazomenæ, where he was born. That is unnecessary, said he, the Infernal Road is as short from one Place, as from another. Præclare Anaxagoras, qui quum Lampiaci moriretur, querentibus amicis, velletne Clazomenas in patriam, si quid ei accidisset offerri, nihil necesse est, inquit, undique enim ad inferos tantundem via est (173). Diogenes Laërtius supposes, that he said this to a Person, who was unwilling to die out of his own Country (174). I have often wondered, that the fine Sayings of the Ancients are so variously reported: I have enquired into the Reason of it; and the most probable seems to be this. Readers retain the Subtance of a Fact better than the Circumstances; and therefore, when they have a mind to relate it, they supply what they have forgotten in the best manner they can; and, as their Tastes are different, it happens, that some supply one thing, and some another. I say nothing of the Supplements, which are designedly made to accommodate things better to the Subject in hand. They are artificial Variations, and proceed from Insincerity: I say nothing of them. What I have said of Readers, may be universally applied. We are still more apt to falsify what we hear, than what we read.

[N] He had a true Discernment of human Happiness. He believed those to be most happy, who seem least to be so; and that we must not look, among the Rich and Great, for Persons, who taste true Happiness; but among those, who till a small Parcel of Ground, or apply themselves to the Sciences, without Ambition. Valerius Maximus will express it better than I can. "Nec parum prudenter Anaxagoras interroganti cuidam, quisnam esset beatus: Nemo, inquit, ex his quos tu felices existimas: sed eum in illo numero reperies, qui à te ex miseris constare creditur. Non erit ille divitiis & honoribus abundans: sed aut exigui rursus, aut non ambitiosæ doctrinæ fidelis ac pertinax cultor, in secessu quam in fronte beator (175). — Anaxagoras, being asked, who was happy, replied, with great Prudence, none of those, whom you esteem to be so, but He, whom you think to be miserable, will be found to be of the number. He will not be one, who abounds with Riches and Honours; but either one, who cultivates a small Farm, or is a true and constant Follower of unambitious Sciences, happier in his Retirement, than he appears to be."

[O] He

(164) Thucydides, against his Judges.

(165) Diogenes Laërtius. lib. 2. n. 13.

(166) Id. ib.

(167) Cicero, Tuscul. Quæst. 1. 3. fol. 261.

(168) Valerius Max. lib. 5. in fine.

(169) Plutarch Consol. ad Apollon. p. 118. de cohib. ira, p. 463. &c. de tranquill. Animæ pag. 474. His Menage in Laërtius. lib. 2. n. 13. q. 2. as reported by Plutarch, the Treatise de cohibenda ira, and æpist. dædyp. etæc.

(170) Simplicius. in Epictet. Enchirid. c. 22.

(171) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 3. cap. 2.

(172) Plutarch. de Consol. ad Apollon. p. 118.

(173) Ælian. supra. Stobæus Serm. 105.

(174) Cicero Tusculan. Quæst. 1. 2. fol. 253. D.

(175) Diogenes Laërtius. lib. 2. n. 11.

(176) Valerius Max. lib. 7. cap. 2. n. 9. in externa. pag. 504.

I have to make on his Discourse. One of the Reasons, why he neglected Astronomy, was, because Anaxagoras, who had extremely applied himself to it, was very much mistaken

"me; and only to enquire, with respect to the "Proportions of Swiftneſs and Revolution, &c. which "are found between the Sun, Moon, and other "Planets, what is the beſt Reaſon that can be al-
"ſigned, why theſe Bodies, in Quality of Agents "and Patients, are what they are; for I could never "have imagined, that a Philoſopher, who ſays, that "an Intelligence governs all theſe Things, would "allege any other Cauſe; but prove, that the State,
"in which they are, is the beſt that can be. I be"lieved likewiſe, that, having in this manner ex"plained the particular Nature of each Body by ſuch
"a Cauſe, he would, in general, explain their com"mon Good. Full of this Hope, I applied myſelf "with the greateſt Eagerneſs to the reading of his "Writings, that I might ſpeedily know what is moſt
"excellent, and what is wrong; but I found that
"this Philoſopher does not employ an Intelligence,
"nor any Cauſe of Arrangement; but refers all "Things to the Air, the Æther, the Water, and ſuch
"other impertinent Subjects, as to their Original "(192). This is juſt as if any one, after having
"ſaid, that whatever I do, I do by my Underſtand-
"ing, ſhould afterwards account for all my parti"cular Actions after this manner. Socrates ſits, be-
"cauſe his Body is compoſed of Bones and Nerves,
"which, by the Rules of Mechanifm, are the Cauſe,
"that he can bend his Limbs. He ſpeaks, becauſe the "Motion of his Tongue impels the Air, and con"veys it's Impreſſion to the Ear, &c. Such an one "would forget the true Cauſe, to wit, that the "Athenians having judged it beſt to condemn me,
"I thought it better for me to ſit down here; and "that it was more juſt, that I ſhould ſuffer the "Puniſhment, which they have ordained. Now, if "any one objects, that, without my Bones and "Nerves, &c. I cannot perform what I would, he "judges right; but if he pretends, that I perform
"it, becauſe of my Bones and Nerves, &c. and not
"thro' a Choice of what is beſt, ſince he ſuppoſes
"that I aſt by my Underſtanding, his Diſcourſe is "very abſurd (193).

You ſee plainly the Taſte of Socrates. He had for"gotten the Study of Natural Philoſophy, and applied
"himſelf wholly to Moral; wherefore he required,
"that all Natural Things ſhould be explained by moral
"Reaſons, and by the Ideas of Order and Per"fection. I dare aſſert, that he cenſured Anaxago"ras improperly. Every Philoſopher, who has once
"ſuppoſed, that an Intelligence has moved Matter,
"and ranged the Parts of the Univerſe in order,
"is no longer obliged to have recourſe to This
"Cauſe, when he is to give a Reaſon for each Effect
"of Nature; his Buſineſs is to explain, by the Action
"and Re-aſtion of Bodies, by the Qualities of the "Elements, by the Configuration of the Parts of Mat"ter, &c. the Vegetation of Plants, Meteors, Light,
"Gravity, Opacity, Fluidity, &c. Such is the Me"thod of the Chriſtian Philoſophers, whatever Sect they "are of. The Schoolmen have an Axiom, That a "Philoſopher ought not to have recourſe to God, *Non
"eſt Philoſophi recurrere ad Deum*: They call this Re-"cource the Sanctuary of Ignorance. And indeed
"what could you ſay more abſurd, in a Piece of Phy-
"ſics than this: Stones are hard, Fire is hot, and Cold "freezes Rivers; becauſe God has ordered it ſo? The "Carteſians themſelves, who make God not only the firſt
"Mover, but alſo the only, continual, and perpetual
"Mover of Matter, make no uſe of his Will and Ac"tions in explaining the Effects of Fire, the Properties
"of the Loadſtone, Colours, Smells, &c. they only "conſider the ſecond Cauſes, the Motion, Figure, and "Situation of the Corpufcles. So that if the Remark
"of Clemens Alexandrinus, mentioned above (194),
"was grounded only on this Diſcourſe of Socrates, it "would be very unjuſt. To approve of it, we ſhould "know, not that Anaxagoras explained many Things
"without mentioning the Divine Intelligence; but that "he expreſsly excluded it, in explaining part of the "Phænomena of Nature. Perhaps, he had ſaid in ſome "Parts of his Writings, what his Diſciple Euripides after"wards ſaid, viz. that God concerns himſelf only with "great Things, and leaves the leſſer to Chance: Τῶν
"ἀγᾶν γὰρ ἀπείλει Θεὸς, τὰ μικρὰ δ' εἰς τύχην

ἀνείξεται, κατὰ τὴν Εὐριπίδην (195). Summa (196) Plu- procurat modo Deus, inque fortunam minora rejicit, ut ait Euripides. As if the World was like the Tri"bunal of the Prætors; de minimis non curat Prætor.
We have obſerved above (196), that this Philoſopher
"attributed ſome Effects to Chance, and others to Ne-
"ceſſity, &c. and that he only called the ſupreme
"Intelligence to his Aſſiſtance, when he could not "make it appear, that Neceſſity had produced a Thing
"(197). It may be ſuppoſed, in general, that he had "not fully explained his Syſtem, and that he had left
"many Parts of it ill connected. Ariſtotle intimates
"as much, when he ſpeaks of the firſt Philoſophers,
"who acknowledged two Cauſes, the Material, and "the Efficient. He compared them to Men, who have "not learned the Art of Fighting, and yet often wound
"their Enemies; which they do, without obſerving
"the Rules of That Art. In like manner theſe Phi-
"loſophers were not Maſters of their Subjects. Οὗτοι
"μὲν ἔν----- δυνὶ αἰτίαν ἐπιβαλο-----
"τῆς τε ὕλης, καὶ τῆς δυνάμεως ἡ κινήσεως. ἀμυνδρῶς
"μὲν τοὶ καὶ ἰδὲν σαφῶς, ἀλλ' οἷον ἐν ταῖς μάχαις
"οἱ ἀγυμναστοὶ ποιοῦσι. καὶ γὰρ ἐκείνοι περιεφρο-
"μένοι τυτῆσι πολλάκις καλὰς πληγὰς. ἀλλ'
"ὅτε ἐκείνοι ἀπὸ ἐπιτήδεως, ὅτε οὗτοι εὐκασιν εἰ-
"δόςι λίσσιν ἀλίσσιν (198). Atque hi quidem----- duas causas----- attingunt, materiam, & unde motus obicitur tamen, & non clare: sed quedammodo inexercitati in prælio faciunt. Etenim illi cir-cumstantes, egregias plerumque plagas infligunt. Sed nec illi ex scientia, nec isti videntur scire quid dicant.
You will ſee in another Place (199), that there are
"ſome Things, which Anaxagoras did not explain, and "which he would infallibly have admitted, if any one "had made the Diſcovery to him; and, laſtly, that "many fine Doctrines would reſult from his Principles,
"if they were cleared up and explained.

I ſhould not condemn Socrates for deſiring ſuch
"an Explication of the Univerſe, as he mentions; for "what could be more excellent, or curious, than to "know diſtinctly and particularly, why the Perfection
"of the Machine of the World required, that each "Planet ſhould have the Figure, Magnitude, Situation,
"and Swiftneſs, which it has, and ſo of all the reſt?
"But this Science was not deſigned for Man; and it "was very unjuſt to expect it from Anaxagoras. And "unleſs we had the Idea, which God followed in creat"ing the World, it will be impoſſible to give the Ex"plications, which Socrates deſired. All that the great-
"eſt Philoſophers can ſay, upon this Occaſion, amounts "to this: That, ſince the Earth is round, and ſitu-"ated at ſuch a Diſtance from the Sun; This
"Figure and Situation were neceſſary to the Beauty
"and Symmetry of the Univerſe; the Author of "this vaſt Machine having an infinite Intelligence,
"and Wiſdom. From hence we know, in general,
"that every thing is right in this Machine, and that "there is no Defect in it: But, if we ſhould under"take to make it appear, Piece by Piece, that every "thing is in the beſt State it could poſſibly be in,
"we ſhould infallibly aſſign very wrong Reaſons. We "ſhould aſt like a Peaſant, who, having no Notion of "a Clock, ſhould undertake to prove, that the Wheel,
"which he ſees through a Chink, muſt neceſſarily be of
"ſuch a Thickneſs, and Bigneſs, and precieſly placed
"there; becauſe if it were leſs, thinner, and ſet in another "Place, great Inconveniences would follow. He would "judge of this Machine, as a blind Man doth of Co"lours, and without doubt he would be a wretched Rea-
"ſoner. The Philoſophers are not much better quali"fied to judge of the Machine of the World, than this "Peaſant of a Clock. They know but a ſmall part of "it, and are ignorant of the Model of the Artiſt, his "Deſign, his Ends, and the reciprocal Relation of "all the Parts. If you ſay, that the Earth muſt be "round, that it may turn the eaſier on it's Axis, you "may be answered, that it would be better if it were
"ſquare, that it might turn more ſlowly, and af"ford us longer Days. What could you reaſonably
"reply, if you were obliged to ſpecify the Inconve-"nencies the World would ſuffer, if Mercury were "greater, or nearer the Earth? Would Sir Iſaac New- ton, who has diſcovered ſo many Methematical and "Mechanical Beauties in the Heavens, pretend to warrant,

(192) Ὅμοια ἄνθρω-πὸν καὶ τὸν οὐρανὸν ἡμεῖς τινὰς αἰτίας ἐκαστοῦ ἐν εἰς τὸ διανεμεῖν τὰ πράγματα, ὡς ἂν καὶ αἰθέρας καὶ ὕδατα αἰ-τιώμενον καὶ ἄλλα
πολλὰ καὶ ἀόρατα. Ho-minem video mente nisiquam uti, omnibusque
rerum causis
afferre nul-
las; Sed acreas natura & ætheras aqueasque & alia multa abſorda pro
rerum causis
affigere. Id.
ib. pag. 73.
D.

(193) Πολλὰ
δὲ καὶ κατὰ τὴν θεοῦ φύσιν
καὶ ἀγνοῖ.
Negligens
admodum ac ſupina fu-tura eſt hæc
eius oratio.
Id. ib. pag.
74. A.

(194) In Remark [E]
Citat. 194.

(196) Plu-
tarch. in Reip. ser.
p. 811. D.

(196) In Remark [E]
Citat. 194.

(197) Abſol.
Citat. 197.

(198) Ariſt.
Metaphyſ.
lib. 1. c. 4.
pag. 146. G.

(199) Id. ib.
cap. 7. pag.
651. C.

WHY we cannot de-monſtrate by particular Reaſons, that each Body in the Univerſe is in the beſt
State it could poſſibly be
in.

This is to rob him of his Doctrine of the Homœmeria. It was not unknown to Sidonius Apollinaris; but he ascribed it, without Reason, to the Philosopher Anaximander. He attributed likewise to him the σπέρμια, that is, the Seeds of all things were every where: a Doctrine, which belonged to the Philosopher Anaxagoras. It was likewise Democritus's Doctrine, as Aristotle has observed, in the fourth Chapter of the third Book of his Physics.

----- sed rebus inutile ponit

Principium, dum credit aquis subsistere mundum.
Hujus discipuli versa est sententia, dicens,
Principiis propriis semper res quaque creari,
Singula qui quosdam fontes decrevit habere
Æternum irriguor, ac rerum semine plenos.
Hunc etiam sequitur, qui gignere cuncta putabat
Hunc ærem, pariterque Deos sic autumat ortos.
Quartus Anaxagoras Thaletica dogmata servat:

Sed divinum animum fecit, qui fecerit orbem (202).

An useless Principle to Things He (208) gives,
Who Water makes the World's Original.
A different Sentiment his Scholar held;
That all Things had their proper Principles;
Each Principle it's everlasting Spring,
From whence the Seeds of all things ever flow'd.
Him follow'd That Philosopher, who taught,
That this surrounding Air gave Nature birth,
And peopled Heaven itself with all it's Gods.
The fourth in order, Anaxagoras,
Subscribed to Thales' Doctrine; yet acknowledg'd
A Mind Divine, Creatress of the World.

(207) Sidonius Apollinaris. Carm. 15. ver. 81. P. 153, 157.

(208) Thales.

The learned Savaron has taken no Notice of these Mistakes in his Remarks on this Poem of Sidonius Apollinaris.

ANAXANDRIDES, King of Lacedemon, the Son of Leo, was the only Man of his Country, who had two Wives at once (a). It was not so much his own Fault, as That of the Ephori, who would have obliged him to divorce his Wife, because she was barren, and to marry another, who might bring him Children: As he was very fond of his Wife (b), he protested, that he would never divorce her. The Ephori, finding him resolute, propos'd to him to marry another Wife, without divorcing the first; and gave him to understand, that, if he refused, it would be the worse for him. He accepted the second Proposal; but would not lodge his two Wives under the same Roof, but in separate Houses. His new Spouse was soon delivered of Cleomenes: This good Fortune of Anaxandrides extended likewise to his first Wife: she also proved with Child. The Domesticks of the other Queen, being displeased at this, spread many scandalous Reports, and pretended it was but a Feint to deceive the World by a supposititious Child. These Slanders had such an Influence on the Ephori, that, when the time of her Delivery drew near, they placed Guards about the Queen (c), to prevent being deceived. It proved no Feint; for the Lady was delivered of a Boy, who was named Dorieus. Some time after she was delivered of Twins, one of which was the brave King Leonidas, who died so gloriously at the Streights of Thermopylae; the other's Name was Cleombrotus (d). The Son of the second Wife had scarce common Sense; on the contrary Dorieus surpassed his Equals in every thing. Nevertheless his Pretensions, which were, that they should pay more regard to Merit than Birthright, were rejected; and Cleomenes, notwithstanding his Unworthiness, succeeded to the Crown (e): the Laws of the Country required it, and were observed. Anaxandrides was more favoured by Fortune, than the Kings his Predecessors, with respect to the Tegeates; for the Lacedæmonians began to conquer them in his Reign (f); I mean about the LXth Olympiad [A]. Plutarch has left us a Collection of the Apophthegms of Anaxandrides among those of the Lacedæmonians. The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is full of Mistakes on this Head [B].

(a) Paulinus. lib. 3. p. 84.

(b) She was the Daughter of Anaxandrides's Sister.

(c) The words of Herodotus may be rendered so as to import, That They themselves were the Queen's Instructors, or Guards.

(d) Some say, that Leonidas and Cleombrotus were born at different Times.

(e) Herodotus. lib. 1. c. 39. & seq. See also Paulinus. lib. 3. p. 84.

(f) Paulinus. lib. 1. c. 67.

[A] The Lacedæmonians began to conquer the Tegeates about the LXth Olympiad. Historians observe, that the Tegeates were not overcome by the Lacedæmonians, till the latter had transported to their City the Bones of Orestes, who was buried at Tegea. This Translation was made in the LVIIIth Olympiad. "Prætorum autem testantur molem etiam 'Orestis suprema, cujus ossa Olympiade quinquagesima & octava Tegeæ inventa à Spartanis Oraculo monitis discimus implevisse longitudinem cubitorum septem (1).—The Ancients inform us likewise of the 'Statue of Orestes; whose Bones, which the Spartans, 'by the Advice of the Oracle, found at Tegea, in the 'LVIIIth Olympiad, were seven Cubits long." We know farther, that Cleomenes, the Son and Successor of Anaxandrides, was exhorted to wage War against Polystrates, Tyrant of Samos (2), who died a miserable Death, in the second Year of the LXIVth Olympiad (3). I omit, that Cleomenes had reigned a considerable time, when the Successors of Pisistratus were obliged to leave Athens, which happened about the LXVIIth Olympiad (4). Moreri ought not to have said, That the Time, when Anaxandrides lived, is unknown, nor that the Ephori obliged him to divorce his first Wife, nor that the eldest Son of his first Wife was called Dorieus. He should have called him Dorieus. I say nothing of his Omissions, tho' they are not inconsiderable. I must not pass over in Silence, that it is not difficult to reconcile Solinus and Herodotus, with respect to Chronology. Solinus places the Translation of Orestes's Bones in the LVIIIth Olympiad. But, according to Herodotus (5), the Lacedæmonians had already obtained several Advantages over the Tegeates, after this Translation, when Cræsus courted their Alliance; which he did, before he made War with Cyrus; and his Expedition against Cyrus fell out at the end of the fifty sixth Olympiad (6); how then can the Chronology of Solinus be reconciled with That of Herodotus? However it be, Moreri ought not to have said, that the time, when Anaxandrides reigned, is unknown; for do we not find in Herodotus, that he reigned in the Days of Cræsus (7)?

[B] The Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary is full of Mistakes on this Head. To the Three Faults of Moreri, which I have mention'd, I add those of his Continuator. I. It is not true, that Anaxandrides was the Son of Euryclides the Second: He was his Grandson, (8) and the Son of Leo. II. It is not true, that Anaxandrides took the City of Tegea, before the Bones of Orestes were carried away from thence. It was not till after this Translation, that Fortune caus'd to favour the Tegeates. How then could their Capital City have been taken before the Removal of these Bones? Is not the taking of the Principal City the entire Ruin of such little Republics? III. It is not true, that Glycas (9) made his Entry into Tegea in the Retinue of the Victorious Anaxandrides: He enter'd it, as People, in peaceable Times, do the Cities of their Neighbours. IV. It was not He, who found the Tomb of Orestes, and carried his Bones away; He only reported, at his Return to Lacedæmon, that he

(1) Lib. 1. cap. 68, 69.

(2) See Calvisius, ad Annum mundi 339.

(3) Herodotus. lib. 1. c. 67.

(4) Paulinus. lib. 3. p. 83.

(5) It should be Lychas, as before.

believ'd

believ'd, that the Sepulchre of Orestes was at a Blacksmith's in Tegæ. For this Blacksmith had inform'd him, that, as he was digging a Well in the Court of his House, he met with a Tomb of seven Cubits, and that it appeared, by the Bones, that the Person, for whom it was made, was of That Stature. Lyctas concluded from hence, that it was the Tomb of Orestes, because the Oracle had said, that it should be found at Tegæ, in a Place, where two Winds were driven with Violence, and where a Representation of a Fight, and Wounds upon Wounds, were to be seen. He applied all this to the Smith's Bellows, Hammer, and Anvil. He only conjectur'd this, and communicated it to his Superiors, who thereupon banished a Criminal. This Man retired to Tegæ, and hired of the Blacksmith the Place, where the Tomb of seven Cubits had been discover'd; and took away the Bones of Orestes, and brought them to Lacedæmon. V. It is not true, that the Oracle had said, That, in order to this Translation, the Winds, the Striker, and the Strick- en, were to be removed, with the Plague and Ruin of Men. Herodotus, who is quoted in the Supplement, says no such Thing. VI. There was no occasion to remove all these things, in order to find the Tomb of Orestes; for it was not under the Forge; but in a Court, where the Smith set himself to dig a Well. VII. The War did not cease as soon as the Bones of this Prince were buried at Lacedæmon. Herodotus says only, that from That time the Lacedæmonians had the Advantage in all their Wars with the Inhabitants of Tegæ. Ἀπὸ τῆς τῷ Χρόνῳ ὕστερ ἐπερῶν] οἱ ἄλλοι πολλὰ καὶ ὑπὲρ τῶν πολλῶν ἐγίνοντο οἱ Λακεδαιμόνιοι (10). Quæ ex tempore Lacedæmonii, quoties cum Tegæatibus congressi sunt, superiores existerent. VIII. And therefore it is not true, that the latter were wofully subdued by the Lacedæmonians, as soon as the Bones of Orestes were buried in Lacedæmon. IX. There was no occasion to quote Plutarch; for he says nothing of what the Article imports.

(10) Herod.
lib. 1. c. 68.

ANAXANDRIDES, a Comic Poet, a Native of Camirum [A], in the Isle of Rhodes, flourished about the Clift Olympiad [B]. According to Suidas, he was the first, who brought upon the Stage Love-Adventures, and the Disgrace, which attends young Ladies, who forfeit their Virginity (a). I can easily believe, that it was not till the Cth Olympiad, that they began to introduce upon the Stage a Character so difficult to support as is That of such young Ladies; but I cannot believe they deferred till that time intermixing Love in their Comedies. Anaxandrides was tall, and of a graceful Mien; he was very careful of his Hair, and dressed magnificently; he wore a purple Gown fringed with Gold (b). This Equipage did not suit with a Poet. He affected Pomp to such a degree, that, on a day, when he was to read a Poem at Athen, he rode to the appointed Place, and recited part of the Piece on Horseback. This Behaviour makes what is farther said of him probable; viz. That he was extremely disgusted, whenever his Pieces did not obtain the Prize (c). He did not, like Others of his Profession, revise and correct his Comedies, that they might enter the Lists again with more Advantage. This capricious and morose Behaviour towards his Audiences occasioned the Loss of several fine Comedies of his Composition. But his Disguist must have often given way to paternal Affection; for he carried the Prize but ten times (e), and we find above twenty of his Plays quoted (see, in the Remark [C], the Reflexion of Athenæus); he composed Sixty five (f). The Athenians condemned him to be starved to Death, for censuring their Government [D]. Perhaps the Comic Poet Alexandrides is only a Fault of the Transcriber; if so, we may substitute our Anaxandrides wherever we meet with the other [E].

(a) Πρώτος
ἦν οὗτος καὶ πρῶτος ἔθηκεν αὐτοῦ γένους.
Primus amores, & stu-
pra virginum introduxit
in scenam.
Suidas.

(b) Chamæ-leon Heraclæotes, l. 6.
de Comædia apud Athen.
lib. 9. pag.
374.

(c) Οὐ γὰρ μὴ νικῶν λαμβάνει ἱκανὸν ἀεὶ τὸν λιβανωτὸν καταμαίνουσθαι. Ὥθεν βέβαια συμπεριτίθεται. His Plays to be sure so pleased, and so were up Franklin's with 14. lib.

(d) Suidas.

(f) Idem.

[A] A Native of Camirum (1.). Suidas says so as well as Chamæleon; but he observes, that it was not the Opinion of all Authors. They were divided in their Sentiments concerning it; some of them would have Anaxandrides to be a Colophonian; others a Rhodian.

[B] He flourished about the Clift Olympiad. The anonymous Author of the Olympiads agrees, in this, with Suidas; and, as the latter observes, that Anaxandrides assisted at the Games of King Philip of Macedon, he gives us a Matter of Fact, which fixes this Age of Anaxandrides. Besides, it is well known, that this Poet abused Plato (2), and that some of his Comedies were cited by Aristotle (3). He must, therefore, have lived at the time mention'd by Suidas.

(2) Laërtius,
in Platon.
lib. 3. n. 26.
Edit. 1692.

(3) Aristot.
Rhetor. l. 3.
cap. 12.

(4) Athen.
l. 9. p. 373.

[C] See in the Remark the Reflexion of Athenæus. Having quoted (4) a Verse out of the Tereus of Anaxandrides, a Piece of no great Value, he takes an opportunity of mentioning what I have quoted from Chamæleon; after which, he asks, with an Air of Astonishment, how it came to pass, that the Tereus, and such other Pieces of the same Author, which had not come off with Victory, were preserv'd? He might have found the Solution of this Difficulty in the very Words of Chamæleon; for they clearly intimate, that Anaxandrides did not vent the Spleen, he had conceived from the Judgment of the Spectators, against his own Pieces, till he was an old Man. He, therefore, spared several of his vanquish'd Comedies, before Old Age had sour'd his Temper. Πολλὰ ἔχοντα κομ-μῶς τῶν δραμάτων νεανίεζε, δυσχαλαινὸν τοῖς θεαταῖς διὰ τὸ γῆρας (5). He destroy'd many excellent Performances, being exasperated, through the jealousy of old Age, against the Spectators.

(5) Id. lib.
p. 374.

[D] The Athenians condemn'd him to be starv'd to Death, for censuring their Government. In one of his Comedies he has this Verse,

Ἡ πόλις ἐκυλεῖ ἥ νόμον ἔδην μέλει,
that is,

The State will have it so; the State, which pays no regard to the Laws.

He only alter'd a single Word in this Verse of Euripides.

Ἡ φύσις ἐκυλεῖ ἥ νόμον ἔδην μέλει (6).

that is
Nature, which observes no Laws, will have it so.

(6) Euripid.
ver. 295. inter incerta in Edit. Barneæ.

See Euphratius, on the Tenth Chapter of the Sixth and Seventh Books of Aristotle's Morals. It is thought, that Ovid intended this Punishment of Anaxandrides, when he said in his Poem, in lib. ver. 523.

Utque parum stabili qui carmine læsit Athenas, Inivis percas deficiente cibo.

Depriv'd of Food, may starving be thy Fate,
Like His, whose Satire lash'd the Athenian State.

[E] We may substitute our Anaxandrides wherever we meet with the other. This is the Opinion of Cassaubon (7). His Reason is, because Suidas makes no mention of Alexandrides; and because the same Piece (8), which he ascrib'd to Alexandrides, in the Eleventh Book of Athenæus (9), is cited under the Name of Anaxandrides, in the Fourteenth Book (10). Cassaubon adds a Third Reason. Pollux, in the Sixth Chapter of the Ninth Book, quotes the Architis of Alexandrides: Now it is certain, that Anaxandrides compos'd a Piece with this Name; Athenæus cites it in the 18th Chapter of his 6th Book (11). Meursius is altogether of Cassaubon's Opinion. He will have the two or three Dramatic Pieces, which are ascrib'd to Alexandrides.

(7) Cassub.
in Athen. l.
6. cap. 18.
pag. 455.

(8) Entitled μαλακωτος.

(9) Cap. 2.
pag. 460.

(10) Cap. 20.
pag. 654.

(11) P. 263.

- (12) Suidas in 'ΑΒΙΑΤΟΡΕΣ.
(13) Id. in 'ΑΡΧΟΝΤΕΣ.
(14) Vossius de Poët. Gr. pag. 49.
(15) Diogen. Laërt. l. 3. n. 26.
(16) In Alcestid. init.
(17) Plut. in Lyandro, pag. 443.
(18) Id. in Quæst. Romanis, pag. 232.
Alexandrides, in the Editions of Athenæus, to belong to Anaxandrides. And he ascribes the Helena (12) and the Pisander (13), mention'd by Suidas, under the Name of Alexandrides, to Anaxandrides. See page 87. of his Treatise of the Isle of Rhodes. Vossius is of the same Opinion (14). So that, according to this Account, which is probable enough, there are Thirty Pieces of Anaxandrides quoted. His Trojæus, mention'd by Diogenes Laërtius (15), was unknown to Mæursius. There is the like Confusion with respect to one ANAXANDRIDES of Delpbos. The Scholiast upon Euripides cites him, (16) Αναξανδρίδης ὁ Δελφός, in relation to the Penalty, impos'd on Apollo, of serving Admetus for Wages, as a punishment for having kill'd the Serpent Python. Plutarch cites him, (17) Αναξανδρίδης ὁ Δελφός, in relation to the Money, which Lyander deposited in the Temple of Delpbos. He mentions elsewhere (18) an Anaxandrides, in speaking of the Times, when the Priests of Delpbos delivered her Oracles. At first she delivered them but once a Year. A long time after, she delivered them once a Month. It is very probable, that, in these two Places, Plutarch quotes the same Author, and that this Author is the same with Him, who is mention'd by the Scholiast upon Euripides. The Question is, whether his Name be Alexandrides or Anaxandrides. Vossius cannot tell what to think of it (19). Without doubt, The Work, mention'd in the Collection of Proverbs, publish'd by Andreas Schottus, from a Manuscript of the Vatican, must be ascrib'd to the same Anaxandrides. The Subject of the Work, mention'd in That Collection, relates to the Sacrileges committed in the Temple of Delpbos, Περὶ τῶν συληθέντων ἐν Δελφοῖς ἀναθημάτων, de anathematibus quæ sacrilegis Delphi fuisse sublata; and was written by one, whose Name was Anaxandrides. He relates a Story, which occasion'd the Greek Proverb, ἄνω λῆξαι, καὶ μέσον ἔχειν, Take the upper Part, and you'll be sure of the Middle. See Vossius, pag. 320. de Historicis Græcis.

(19) Voss. de Hist. Græc. pag. 502.

A N C H I S E S, a Trojan Prince, descended from Dardanus, and the Son of

- (a) Homer. Il. lib. 20. vers. 239.
(b) Ἀνχίσην τὴν Φιλότητος. Imperfecti verberis concessi s. Homer. in Hymno Veneris.
(c) Ἐπὶ τῇ Φιλότητι μὲν γυναικὶ αὐτῆς ἐννέων. Quæ minus tibi in amore miscere stitit nunc. Id. ib.
(d) Ἀνχίσης (d) Id. ib.
Carys (a), pleas'd Venus so much, that she appeared to him in the Shape of a Nymph, in order to declare her Passion to him. She told him, that her Destiny oblig'd her to offer herself to him in Marriage; assuring him, that he should find her a Virgin (b), and intreating him to present her to his Relations, that the Contract of Marriage might be speedily drawn up. Anchorises replied, like a brisk Man, that, since she was no Goddess, nothing should hinder him from enjoying her upon the Spot (c). She took him at his Word, and to Bed they went, &c. Towards Evening, Anchorises fell asleep, and, when he awaked, he perceived, that he had lain with a Goddess. He feared he should not long survive such an Adventure [A]; but Venus revived his Spirits, and told him, she should have a Son by him, whose Name should be Æneas; that she would employ the Wood-Nymphs to nurse the Child, 'till he was five Years of Age; and that, then, he should be put into His Hands. She desired him to beware of boasting, that he had lain with Venus; and assured him, that if ever he should be so indiscreet, he would be Thunder-struck by Jupiter (d). It is said, that Anchorises could

[A] He fear'd he should not long survive such an Adventure.] It was a Tradition, in those Times, that Mortals, who lay with Goddesses, were not long liv'd. Wherefore Anchorises, discovering his Adventure, supplicated Venus to have Compassion on him.

Ἄλλα σε πρὸς ζῆνός γυναιζομας αἰσιόχοιο
Μή με ζῶντ' ἀμνηστὸν ἐν ἀνθρώποις ἰδῆς
Ναίειν ἄλλ' ἰταίης, ἐπεὶ δὲ βιοθάλαμῳ ἀνδρὸς
Γίγνηται, ὅς ἐστις ἰναζέταται ἀθανάτης (1).

(1) Homer. in Hymno Veneris pag. 345.

By Jove I beg, the Pow'r who gave thee Birth,
Let me not drag a wretched Life on Earth;
But, O! some pity shew; since short the Date
(Such is th' irrevocable Will of Fate)
Of Him, who takes a Goddess to his Arms,
And boasts th' Enjoyment of immortal Charms.

This Sentiment of the Antients appears, at first View, to be ill-grounded; for this intimate Union of Mortal with Immortal Beings, this Mixture, this Confusion of Principles, ought to have been look'd upon as productive of Immortality, not as tending to shorten Life. Hence it is, that the most refined Cabala teaches, that the Elementary Inhabitants repair the Misfortune of their Destiny, which subjects them to Annihilation, by the Alliance, which they contract with Mankind—Thus a Nymph, or Sympid, becomes immortal, and capable of the Beatitude, to which we aspire, when she is so happy as to be married to a Philosopher: And a Gnome, or Sylphe, ceases to be mortal, as soon as he marries one of our Females (2). But if we consider the Matter in all its Lights, we shall find, that Anchorises's Fear, and the Maxim he alledged, were founded upon a specious Reason. According to the Notions of the Pagans, The Gods were jealous of their Superiority, and took great Care, that Men should not forget their Inferiority: It was therefore their Business to exclude them from the Enjoyment of Goddesses, to make them understand, that such dainty Mortals were not for Them. It was proper to threaten an exemplary Punishment, such as a speedy Death, if they presumed to taste a Pleasure of this Nature, which the Gods reserv'd for themselves. It was requisite to deter Mortals, not only from being so bold as to tempt a Goddess, but even from yielding to Declarations of Love made them by Goddesses, tho' under the Appearance and Disguise of Women. Don't we see, that Human Laws punish with Death Servants, who debauch their Masters Wives, or Daughters? 'Tis in vain for them to alledge in their Excuse, that they have resisted repeated Solicitations; and that so many Advances have been made them, and so many Threatnings denounc'd against them, that it was impossible for them to avoid the Snare; the Judge delivers them up to the Executioner, even upon a Supposition that their Excuses are real and undeniable. The Gazettes have lately (3) inform'd us, that a Footman was hang'd at Paris for such an Act. And, as, in some Cases, the Publick Interest requires, that the Rigour of the Law should go beyond Justice, because an Injury done to a private Person (4) is less an Evil, politically speaking, than the Publick Advantage, which accrues from it, is a Good; I do not believe, that Judges, animated with a rigorous Zeal for the Preservation of Chastity in Families, would regard the Apology of a Servant, who should alledge, that his Master's Daughter, or Wife, came to him in the Disguise of a Servant-Maid, &c. It is necessary, that Lacqueys should have no Pardon to hope for, even when they can plead Ignorance; because such Severity will keep them more upon their Guard, and make them look with Horror upon the pretended Advantage of being belov'd. It will serve them as a Precaution against Promises, Threats, and cunning Disguises. If they could promise themselves Impunity, in case they debauch'd a Lady in Disguise, they would expect it in the Case of Simple Seduction; and, might they hope to go unpunished, by pleading Solicitation, they would quickly venture to turn Solicitors themselves, wherever they had the least Hopes of Success. It is necessary, therefore, to keep them in awe as much as possible; for a Master, who has no reason to believe, that his Servant will be so honest as to resist all Solicitation, can never be entirely free from Suspicion. Now, as the Pagans look'd upon Men of the highest Rank to be more inferior to the Gods, than a Lacquy is to a Great Lord, we cannot wonder, that the Courts above expos'd Anchorises to a severe Punishment, tho' he enjoy'd Venus under the Disguise of a Woman.

(4) See Tacitus, Annal. l. 14. c. 44.

(2) See the Comte de Gabalis, p. 54.

could not keep the Secret of his good Fortune [B]; and that it escaped him, as he was one day drinking with his Friends. Venus's Menace had it's Effect; he was struck with a Thunder-Bolt; but was not killed by it [C]. Some say he only lost his Sight by it [D]; others pretend, that the Wound could never be closed [E]. It is [B] It is said, that Anchises could not keep the Secret of his good Fortune. Yet Venus's Menace was very terrible.

Εἰ δὲ καὶ ἐξείπης καὶ ἐπεύξῃαι ἄφρονι θυμῷ
Ἐν φιλότῳ μιγῆναι εὐσεφάνῳ Κυθερείῳ, Ζεὺς σε χολώσεται. Βαλλεῖς πολέοντι καρῶν.
(5)

But, indiscreet, should'st thou reveal my Love, Thunder shall blast Thee from the Hand of Jove.

(5) Homer.
in Hymn.
Vener. sub finem.

This Adventure is a Picture, which is often copied. Ladies of the highest Quality, who fall in Love with their Inferiors, are obliged to make all the Advances. They exact Secrecy, and threaten Indiscretion with terrible Punishment: And yet The Favourite, when he is a little heated with Wine, will be blabbing. Sometimes Vanity prompts him to say too much, even when he is sober. I shall quote some Authorities in relation to this Indiscretion of Anchises. "Fulminatus est Anchises, quia se cum Venere concubuisse jactabat." — Anchises was thunder-struck for boasting, that he had lain with Venus. They are Servius's Words (6). Hyginus says, "Venus Anchisem Affraci filium amasse, & cum eo concubuisse dicitur: Procreavit Æneam, eique praecepit ne id apud homines enunciarret. Quod Anchises inter fodes per vinum est elocutus. Ob id à Jove fulmine est ictus (7)." — "Venus is said to have fallen in Love with Anchises, the Son of Affracus (8), and to have lain with him. She conceived Æneas by him, and enjoy'd him not to reveal it to Men. But Anchises in his Cups disclosed the Secret to his Companions; for which Reason he was thunder-struck by Jupiter."

(6) Servius
in Æneid.
lib. 2. ver.
643.

(7) Hyg.
cap. 94.

(8) Hyginus should have said that Cappys was his Father, and not Affracus, who was Cappy's
Father.

[C] He was struck with a Thunder-bolt, but was not killed by it. Venus, discovering that Anchises had boasted of the Favours he had bestowed upon him, made her complaints to Jupiter, and obtain'd that he should be Thunder-struck: But, not being willing to destroy him, and knowing he could not recover from the Stroke of a Thunder-bolt, she took care to turn it aside. "Cum inter æquales exultaret Anchises, gloriatus traditur de concubitu Veneris, quod cum Jovi Venus quæstæ effect, emeruit ut in Anchisem fulmina mitterentur. Sed Venus eum cum fulmine posse vidisset interimi, miserata juvenem in aliam partem detorsit. Anchises tamen afflatus igne coësti semper debilis vixit (9)." This is another Original, of which Copies have been taken in all Ages. The Fair are angry with an indiscreet Gallant, and are fond of making him sensible of his Fault; but They do not carry it too far; there is room left for Repentance.

[D] He only lost his Sight by it. Servius informs us, that Anchises's Sight was blasted by Lightning for boasting of the Favours he had received from Venus; Quod cum jactaret Anchises afflatus est fulmine, oculoque privatus est (10). The Singular Oculo must not make us think, that he lost but one Eye; for, in another Place (11), Servius makes use of the Authority of Theocritus to inform us, that it was a real Blindness.

[E] Others pretend, that the Wound could never be closed. In Virgil, he complains only of a great Weakness, which the Thunder had occasioned in him.

Jampridem invitus divi & inutilis annos
Demoror, ex quo me divum pater atque hominum Rex Fulminis adflavit ventis, & contigit igni (12).

'Tis long, since I, for my celestial Wife,
Loath'd by the Gods, have dragged a lingering Life;
Since ev'ry Hour and Moment I expire,
Blasted from Heav'n by Jove's avenging Fire.

DRYDEN.

I wonder, that Scarron, whose Burlesque Paraphrase of this Passage of Virgil, shews that he was not ignorant of the Cause of this Misfortune, has not given it a more humorous Turn; the Subject, I think, was capable of being set in a very ludicrous Light, especially in the Hands of such a Poet. However, this is his Translation.

Vieil, cassé, mal propre à la guérre,
Je ne fers de rien sur la terre;
Spectre qui n'ai plus que la voix,
J'y suis un inutile poids.
Depuis le tems que de son foudre
Jupin me voulut mettre en poudre,
Depuis le tems qu'il m'effraya
Ce grand Dieu qui me giboya,
Par une vengeance secrète;
Mais je suis personne discrète,
Je n'en dirai point le sujet;
Suffit que j'aurois eu mon fait Sans Venus qui faura ma vie.
J'ay depuis eu cent fois envie
De m'aller pendre un beau matin,
Et finir mon chien de destin.

Crazy, and old, I curse my Birth,
An useless Load to Mother Earth;
Since Jove, to crush Anchises dead,
Darted his Thunder at my Head.
A secret Vengeance on me fell;
The Reason why ----- I must not tell ----
A Vengeance, which had been my end,
Had not Dame Venus flood my Friend.
An hundred times I have intended
This wretched Corps should be suspended;
And, hanging on some fatal Tree,
To end That Birth, my Destiny.

If we compare together a Passage of Plutarch, and another of Dionysius Halicarnassus, we shall prove, that the Thunderbolt inflicted a Wound, which never closed up. Plutarch says (13), that if Musk gives a good Scent to the most ragged Cloaths (14); on the other hand, an Ulcer makes the richest Garments stink. This is his Thought; but, whereas I make him speak in general, he instances particularly in Anchises. The Greek runs thus;

Τὸ δ' Ἀρχίσε τὸ ῥάκος ἱχῶρα πορνῶν ἐξεδίδυ,
Μοτὴ καλὰ δ' ὄντα βύσσινον φάρος.

Now, since, according to the common Acceptation, the Word ῥάκος signifies Rags and Tatters; it is not probable, that it is the true reading of the Greek Text: Wherefore a learned Critic reads ἔλκος, a Wound, or an Ulcer, instead of ῥάκος (15). The Sense, then, is This; Anchises's Wound, oozing thro' the dressing, disstained his Linnen Garment. It is not sufficient to know, that Plutarch quotes the Words of a Poet; we should know who he is (16). Meziriac will inform us of this: He found them in Dionysius Halicarnassus (17), who quotes some Lines of Sophocles, the third whereof is the same which Plutarch quotes.

Νῦν δ' ἐν πύλαισιν Ἀνείας ὁ τῆς Σεῦ
Πλάγης ἐπ' ὤμων παλῆρ' ἔχων, κερῶν
Μοτὴ καλὰ δ' ὄντα βύσσινον φάρος (18).

Next the Son of Venus appeared at the Gates; carrying his Father on his Shoulders, whose Wound, caused by Thunder, still continued to stain his Linnen Garment.

Meziriac has corrected a Fault in the beginning of the third Verse of Sophocles; instead of νῦν, as we read in all the Editions Dionysius Halicarnassus, he has put μοτὴ. In which there is nothing contrary to the Rules of Criticism. The comparing of Authors, who

(13) Plutarch de Virtute & Virtute, Oper. moral. pag. 100.

(14) I keep to the Sense, not the Words, of Plutarch.

(15) Meziriac, Ovid's Epistles, p. 671.

(16) Ibid. pag. 670.

(17) Dion. Halicarn. lib. 1. c. 48.

(18) The Verses of Sophocles are taken from his Laocoon.

(9) Servius upon Æneid. two Lines of the first Book of the Æneid; & Tunc ille Æneas, quem Dardanio Anchise Alma Venus Phrygiæ genuit Simoentis ad undas?

(11) In Æneid. lib. 2. ver. 687.

(12) Virgil. Æn. lib. 2. ver. 647.

is said he lived to the Age of Eighty Years, and was buried on Mount Ida [F], where his Tomb was honoured by the Shepherds. This Opinion differs very much from That of Virgil; for, according to That Poet, the same Night that Troy was taken, Aeneas took his Father upon his Shoulders [G], and carried him to a Place of Safety; nor did the old Man die, before the Trojans, who joined Aeneas, arrived in Sicily, after innumerable Fatigues. This Affection of Aeneas for his Father, and the Care he took to save the Penates, are the Foundation of the Character, which distinguishes him from other Heroes: This Character consists in Piety (e). Some say, that Anchoris lived 'till his Son's Arrival in Italy, That Land of Promise, which the Destinies commanded him to go in search of, amidst a thousand Dangers (f). Cato, Dionysius Halicarnassensis, and Strabo, are of this Opinion. See the end of the Remark [F]. Lastly, the Love of Venus for Anchoris was not a transient Passion; her first Lying-in did not satisfy her; she bore a second Son to Anchoris, as Apollodorus tells us in the third Book of his Bibliotheca.

(e) Virgil often calls him Pius Aeneas.

(f) See among other Passages the first Book of the Aeneids,
ver. 205, &
258.

who have, at different times, quoted the same Passage, often discovers the true Reading. Sylburgius, who revised the Latin Translation of Dionysius Halicarnassensis, done by Sigismund Gelenius, has not corrected the third Verse of Sophocles. Gelenius's Version of the three Lines is This;

*Nunc in porta est Aeneas Deae filius, Humeris bajulans Patrem fulminata
Terga amicum fluxa veste byssina.*

Here is nothing of the suppurating Wound; besides, Anchoris is represented as wounded in the Back; that is, the Translator has omitted what Sophocles said, and added what he did not say. If the ancient Writers were to return into the World, they would be amazed to find so many things in their Books, which they never dreamt of.

[F] He was buried on Mount Ida.] Eustathius relates this (19), but Pausanias is of a different Opinion. He says, that Aeneas, going to Sicily, put into Laconia, and built there two Cities; and that Anchoris, dying at the Foot of a Mountain in Arcadia, was buried there; for which Reason the Mountain was called Anchoris (20). Pausanias adds, That the Ruins of a Temple of Venus were seen near this Sepulchre of Anchoris; and that the Inhabitants of Troy could no where shew the Tomb of This old Man. Stephen of Byzantium says, that Anchoris was buried in a City of Thrace, built by Aeneas (21); or rather, he quotes an old Scholiast, whose Name was Theon, who said so. Tertius is of the same Opinion; only he says, that This City was in Macedonia (22). Virgil carries the good Man as far as Sicily, where he makes him die; with this he concludes the long Story, which his Hero related to Queen Dido.

(19) Eustathius, in Iliad. l. 12.

(20) Pausanias,
lib. 8. pag.
247.

(21) Steph.
Byzant. in "Arvensis."

(22) In Lycoph.

*Hinc Drepani me portus & illætabilis ora Accipit. Hinc pelagi tot tempestatibus actus, Heu genitorem, omnis curæ casusque levamen,
Amitto Anchisen. Hic me, pater optime, fessum Deferis, heu tantis nequiquam crepte periculis* (23).

(23) Virgil,
Aen. lib. 3.
ver. 707.

*At lengb on Shore the weary Fleet arriv'd;
Which Drepanum's unhappy Port receiv'd.
Here, after endless Labours, often tost
By raging Storms, and driven on ev'ry Coast,
My dear, dear Father, spent with Age, I lost;*

*Ease of my Care, and Solace of my Pain,
Saw'd thro' a thousand Toils, but sav'd in vain.*

DRYDEN.

Servius tells us, that Anchoris's Tomb was on Mount Eryx near Drepanum (24). I have named three Writers, who say, that Anchoris died in Italy. Cato (25), Dionysius Halicarnassensis (26), Strabo (27), are my Authorities.

(24) Serv. in
Aen. lib. 1.
ver. 570.

(25) Apud
Servium ib.

[G] Took his Father upon his Shoulders.] The Words of Virgil are so excellent, that they deserve to be inserted in this place.

(26) Antiq.
lib. 1. c. 64.

*Ergo age, chare pater, cervici imponere nostræ,
Ipse subibo humeris, nec me labor iste gravabit* (28).

(27) Lib. 5.
pag. 158.

*Hæc fatus, latos humeros subjectaque colla
Veste super, fulvique interior pelle leonis, Succedoque oneri. Dextræ se parvus Iulus
Implicuit, sequiturque patrem non passibus æquis* (29).

(28) Virgil,
Aen. lib. 2.
ver. 707.

(29) Ibid.
ver. 724.

Nunc omnes terrent auræ: sonus excitat omnis Suspensum, & pariter comitique onerique timen- tem (30).

(30) Ibid.
ver. 728.

*Haste, my dear Father, ('tis no time to wait)
And load my Shoulders with a willing Freight.*

*Thus, ordering all that Prudence could provide,
I cloath my Shoulders with a Lion's Hide,
And yellow Spoils; then on my bending Back
The welcome Load of my dear Father take:
While on my better Hand Anchoris hung,
And with unequal Paces trips along.*

*At ev'ry Shadow I am seiz'd with Fear,
Not for myself, but for the Charge I bear.*

DRYDEN.

The Poets have highly extolled this Action; and it deserved it. They say, that the Flames had a regard for Aeneas, and that, for fear of hurting a Son, who shewed so great an Affection for his Father, they divided, and left a free Passage for him (31).

(31) See several authorities for this in La Cærdæ's Commentary upon this Passage of Virgil.

(a) Discourse on the Life
of Mr.
Ancillon, p. 6.

(b) Ib. p. 3.

(c) Ib. p. 9.

(d) Ib. p. 13.

(e) Ibid. p.
13, 14.

(f) Ibid.
pag. 14.

(g) Ibid.
p. 13.

(b) Ibid.
pag. 20, 21.

(f) Ibid.
pag. 31.

(k) Ibid.
pag. 31.

ANCILLON (DAVID), Minister of the Reformed Church at Metz, was born in that Town (a), the Seventeenth of March, 1617. At Nine or Ten Years of Age, he studied in the College of the Jesuits, which was then the only One at Metz, where good Literature was taught (b); and from the very first he proved so hopeful a Youth, that the chief Persons of the Society neglected nothing to give him a Relish of their Religion, and make him one of their Order; but he vigorously opposed them; and from that time took up a Resolution to study Divinity (c). He was so indefatigable in his Studies (d), that it was often necessary to employ the paternal Authority to interrupt them; for he was excessively, and, if I may so say, intemperately studious (e). He took a Journey to Geneva, in the Year 1633 (f), where he went through a Course of Philosophy under Mr du Pan (g), and studied Divinity under the Professors Spanheim, Deodati, and Tronchin, who had a particular Love and Esteem for him (h). He left Geneva, in the Month of April 1641, and presented himself to the Synod of Cbarenton, to be admitted into the Ministry (i). His Examiners admired his Capacity, and the Ministers of Paris his Modesty (k); and the whole Af-sembly was so well pleased with him, that they gave him the most considerable vacant Benefice (1); which was That of Meaux. He exercised his Ministry there, with all imaginable Satisfaction, 'till the Year 1653. He was tenderly beloved by his Flock; and He married very advantageously [A]. He acquired a great Reputation by his Learning, Eloquence, and Virtue; and the Roman Catholics themselves had a particular Esteem for him. He display'd his fine Talents, with greater Lustre and Success, at Metz, where he was Minister from the Year 1653, 'till the Revocation of the Edict of Nantz in 1685. After this fatal Blow, he retired to Francfort (m), and, having preached in the French Church at Hanaw, the whole Congregation were so edified, that they immediately desired a meeting of the Heads of each Family, to request him to afford them his Ministry (n).—He agreed to the Proposal, which was made to him by some Deputies, who obtained all that they desired. He began to exercise his Ministry in That Church, at the end of the Year 1685 (o). We shall see, why he soon returned to Francfort [B]; where he would have taken up his Residence, had not the Condition of his Family, which was numerous, obliged him to go where he might settle them (p). He made choice of Berlin, and met with a very favourable Reception from his Electoral Highness of Brandenburg (q). He was made Minister of Berlin, and had the Satisfaction to see his eldest Son appointed Judge and Director of the French, who were in that City (r); and his other Son gratified with a Pension, and maintained in the University of Francfort on the Oder, and at last Minister in Ordinary of the Capital (s). He had likewise the Satisfaction of seeing his Brother made Judge of the French, (t) Ibid. pag. 366.

[A] He married very advantageously.] The manner how this Affair was managed is very curious. The chief Heads of the Families at Meaux, being sensible of the great Worth of their Minister, and hearing him often give out, that he would return to Metz, to visit his Father, and his Relations, whom he had not seen for several Years, were afraid of losing him. They sought a thousand Expedients to engage his longer Continuance among them. The surest way, they thought, was to marry him to a rich Person, worthy of him, and whose Estate lay in that Country, or in the Neighbourhood. Some one recollected, that he had heard say, that Mr Ancillon, having preached one Sunday Morning at Charenton, met with a general Applause; but that, above all others, Mr Macaire, a venerable old Man, of an exemplary Virtue and Piety, and who had a great Estate in Paris, and about Meaux, bestowed on him a thousand Benedictions, and Praises, and said in the hearing of many, who sat near him at Church, That he but one Daughter, his only Child, whom he tenderly loved, but that, if That Gentleman, meaning Mr Ancillon, should come and demand her of him in Marriage, he would give her to him with all his Heart. They went to him, and asked him, whether he continued in the same Mind. He answered, that he did; and added new Testimonies of Esteem and Affection for Mr Ancillon; inasmuch, that the Marriage was concluded in the Year 1649, and consummated a little while after. D. Mary Macaire, his Spouse, was very young, being but fourteen Years of Age. But, having, at these tender Years, every growing Virtue, it will appear, by the Sequel of this Discourse, that she proved not only an Help to him in Piety, and an agreeable Companion; but that he relied upon her entirely in the Management of his domestic Concerns (1).

[B] He soon returned to Francfort.] His Sermons were soon the Subject of Conversation at Hanaw (2). Several Persons, who had left the French Congregation out of Discontent, returned to it again. The Professors of Divinity, the German and Dutch Ministers, were often his Hearers. The Count of Hanaw himself, who had never been seen in that Church, was pleased to come and hear Mr Ancillon: They came thither from the neighbouring Places, and even from Francfort. ----- People, who did not understand French, came thither in Crouds, saying, it was a Pleasure to them to see him speak. Inde ira & lacrymæ. This Distinction gave Jealousy to the other two Ministers: Nature, disordered by this Passion, forgot her Duty (3). They took Umbrage at the Marks of Esteem and Affection, which were shewn to this new Colleague; they were chagrined at it; and created him a thousand Disquiet, to oblige him voluntarily to quit a Post, from which they could not drive him. The Virtue of Mr Ancillon was exposed to a second

Trial. For his two Relations (4), who had shewn a great Readiness to oblige him, and seemed to wish they could turn Stones into Bread, for his Comfort, all the Time he was in their City, as a Stranger, began to shun him, when he had the Direction of their Flock: They created him a thousand Mortifications; and, if it had been in their Power, they would willingly have turned Bread into Stones, to expel him; so burthenfome was he grown to them. ----- This Conduct produced two considerable Effects (5): One was, That the Roman Catholics, and the Prophane, made it a Subject of Raillery. The other, that it exasperated the People (6). Mr Ancillon was their Favorite, and, if he would have made use of it, might, perhaps, have surmounted the Malice of his Enemies; but, as he was of Opinion, that a faithful Pastor ought not to establish himself at the expence of a Division between the Flock, and their Ministers, and as he had ever been an Enemy to Parties, and exclaimed against Cabals and Factions, he would take no Advantage of the Disposition of the People towards him, nor suffer them to stir in the Affair. ----- Having, therefore, tried whatever Charity and Honesty suggested to him, in Order to bring these two Men to their Duty, he resolv'd to leave Hanaw; a Town, which he had looked upon as a Place of Refuge, or a secure Harbour, after a Storm; but which was now become a Field of Battel, in which he must continually fight, and where his Patience, which had already undergone several great Trials, might at last be overcome; he therefore determined to abandon it (7). ----- He left Hanaw, without Noise, when it was least expected; or rather, he suffered himself to be rescued out of the Hands of his Enemies, and of his Friends (8). The former, holding him, as it were, by one Hand, treated him ill; the latter, holding him by the other, endeavoured to rescue him from Oppression; and both were ready to come to an Engagement, and try their Strength. To avoid this Scandal, he sacrificed his Interest to the Public Peace; he went away privately, least his Friends, by endeavouring to stop him, should kindle a Fire, lurking under the Ashes, which he was willing to extinguish.

I have observed, I think, elsewhere (9), that the Jealousy of Eloquence is of all the most violent; the scandalous Divisions it produces are but too frequently the Reflexions, which may be made upon it, are only fit to be suppressed. The Subject is too nice, and too invidious. I shall only remark, without alluding to any particular Case, that, in this Affair, the People do not behave with due Prudence and Charity. They should chuse Pastors of nearly equal Abilities; or, if one among them is remarkably superior to his Colleagues, they should not distinguish him in so particular a manner. They have no regard to human Weakness; they run in Crouds to the Sermons of one Preacher, and leave the Auditory of the rest

(1) Discourse on the Life of Mr Ancillon, pag. 75. & seq.

(2) Ibid. pag. 354.

(3) Ibid. pag. 356.

(4) One of them had been married to Mr Ancillon's Sister, and the other was actually married to his Niece. Ibid. pag. 353.

(5) Ibid. pag. 357.

(6) Ibid. pag. 359.

(7) Ibid. pag. 360.

(8) Ibid. pag. 361.

A REMARK upon the Jealousy of Eloquence.

(9) In the Remark [B] of the Article ATTILUS.

(r) Ibid.
p. 395.

(u) Ibid.
p. 487.

French, in the States of Brandenburg [C]; and Mr Cayart, his Son-in-law, Engineer to his Electoral Highness (t). He enjoyed these Comforts, and several others, 'till his Death, which he underwent with all the Sentiments of Piety of a true Minister of JESUS CHRIST, at Berlin, on the 3d of September 1692, being Seventy five Years of Age (u). I could have made this Article much longer than I have done; for the Book, out of which I have taken it, contains many Particulars: But it being a Work, which it will be more easy to consult, than to procure this Dictionary, I thought it more advisable to refer the Reader to it, than to make too many Extracts from it (x). I should take another Method, if I had only Manuscript Memoirs. I shall insist but upon two Particulars; one of which relates to the Library of the late Mr Ancillon, and his manner of studying [D]; the other relates to the Books, which

(x) It is intitled, A Discourse on the Life of the late Mr Ancillon, and his last Moments. It was printed at Basil in 1698, and contains 500 pages in 12mo.

(10) See the full wing Cistation.

(11) Est apud Heraclitum physicum de principio Ephemorum Hermo. 1. 10. Universos ait Ephoros esse morie mulcandos, quod quam civitate expellerent Hermo. 1. 10. ita locuti sunt: Nemo de nobis una excedat, si q. existerit, alio in loco, et apud alios sit. Cicero, Tuscul. Quæst. 1. 5. fol. 278.

(12) Discourse on the Life of Mr Ancillon, p. 93.

(13) He was Mr Ancillon's Cistation at Metz.

(14) He had been a firm as Advocate at Metz.

(15) Discourse, &c. pag. 102, 332, 393.

(16) He often said, of himself, that he was Book-mad, ibid. pag. 105.

(17) Ibid. pag. 77.

rest almost empty. They take so little Care to conceal their Preference, that their Imprudence may be accounted the chief Cause of the Discord. It is a Seed of Diffension: wife Men are not so indiscreet: All Auditors should follow this Model; but, because it can scarce be expected that the People will be so prudent, perhaps the best way would be, that those, who proceed to Elections, should avoid too great an Inequality of Talents, and consider, that, in some Professions, many Persons approve of this Law of the Ephorians; Let no one among us excel; and, if any one has this Advantage, let him be rather any where else, than in our City (10). This Law was condemned by Heraclitus (11); but he was a Philosopher. The following Remark was made by the Author of the Book, which I have often quoted. "Mr Ancillon, says he (12), having none of the Faults, which have been observed to be the usual Cause of the Divisions, which happen among Ministers of the same Church, viz. I. A fond Conceit of one's own Opinions, and a Desire of spreading them; II. A love of Esteem and worldly Glory; III. A love of Power; IV. A love of Interest; and having besides a respect for Mr Ferry's old Age (13), and his Merit, which was Proof against a great Number of Years, forced, as it were, that great Man to remain constantly united to him."

[C] He had the Satisfaction of seeing his Brother (14) made Judge of the French, in the States of Brandenburg. "An Office, which he still actually exercises with Honour; but, as laborious as it is, it does not so wholly engross his Time, as to prevent him from publishing several solid and judicious Pieces, in the Journals of Berlin, which shews the Solidity, and vast Extent, of his Knowledge and Learning (15)."

[D] The Library of the late Mr Ancillon, and his manner of Studying. The Estate, which he gained by his Marriage, having put him in a Condition of gratifying his favourite Passion (16), he bought all the capital Books, which may be called the Pillars of a great Library; such as the most curious Bibles, either for the Editions or Notes; several Dictionaries; the most excellent Commentaries on the Scripture; the Works of the Fathers; Collections of Councils; Ecclesiastical Histories; and several others of the like Nature; all of the best Editions (17). He observed this Maxim ever after, and gave good Reasons for it. An Account of which would be too tedious; however, the Substance of them, in few Words, is this. He said, that the less the Eye is fatigued in reading a Book, the more at liberty the Mind is to judge of it. That, as the Beauties and Faults of it are more easily perceived, when it is printed, than in Manuscript; so the same Beauties and Faults are more clearly seen, when it is printed in a fair Character, and upon good Paper, than when it is printed on bad Paper, or with a bad Letter. Having thus laid a good Foundation for a Library, he increased it with all the good Books, which came out afterwards. He had the Pleasure of reading all the new Books; for his Friends in Paris, Holland, England, Germany, Switzerland, and Geneva, with whom he kept a strict Correspondence, sent them to him, as soon as they were exposed to Sale. The Opinion of those, who say, that the first Editions are the least valuable, because they are of no use, but to make the Works of an Author appear in a fairer Character, did not abate his Curiosity. He was not ignorant, that the famous Mr Menage, Dean of St Peter's, at Angers, in his Epistle Dedicatory to his Etymologies of the French Tongue, speaking to Mr Du Pay, tells him, That he had formerly learnt from him, that Mr Loyzel, a famous Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, used to say of first Editions, That they only serve to make the Works of an Author appear in a fairer Character; that it was very probable this Judicious Gentleman said this of all sorts of Books, but that it was more true of Dictionaries, than of any other kind of Books. He knew very well, that others were of Opinion, that the first Editions of Books were only to be looked upon as imperfect Essays, which Authors propose to the Learned, to have their Opinion of them. But this was no restraint to his Eagerness; and, the Event teaching him afterwards, that he ran no great risque (18), he did not discontinue it. And, indeed, we have seen, hitherto, but few Authors, in this respect, like Cardinal du Perron, who spared neither Pains nor Expence in his Works, and who had them twice printed; the first time, to distribute only a few Copies to particular Friends, on which they might make their Observations; and the second time, to give them to the Public, such as he at last determined to publish them; and who, to prevent their being published against his Will, after the first Manner, caused them to be printed in his own House, where he set up a Printing-Press for that purpose."

Mr Ancillon's Library was "very curious and large; he increased it, daily, with all that appeared new and valuable in the Republic of Letters; in such a manner, that, at last, it became one of the finest of any private Man in the Kingdom. Foreigners of Curiosity did not fail to see it, as they went through the City of Metz; it being the greatest Rarity of that Town (19)." As soon as he saw the Catalogue of the pretended Heretical Books, drawn up by the Archbishop of Paris, in the Year 1685, he selected all the Books, "which were ordered to be suppressed, which made up his Library in foreign Countries (20); his own having been, as it were, given up to be plundered, after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. None would have remained, if those, which he concealed, had not escaped the Greediness, with which the rest were carried away. — The Monks, and the Clergy of Metz, and the adjacent Towns, had long coveted Mr Ancillon's Library (21); his forced and hasty Departure supplied them with a fair Pretence to appropriate it to themselves. Some proposed to buy it in the Grois; others would have it sold by Retail; but neither of them intended to pay for it; they only desired to get it into their Possession. The last Expedient was followed, as being more proper to favour this unjust Design: A Crowd of Ecclesiastics of all Orders came in, from all Parts, to this noble and rich Library; which had been Forty four Years in collecting, with Pleasure and Choice; and which consisted only of rare Books, and worthy of the Curiosity of the most learned Men: They made several Parcels of them, and, going away, they gave Money to a young Girl, of about twelve or thirteen Years of Age, who was looking upon them, that they might say they had paid the Price of them. In this manner Mr Ancillon saw his precious Collection dispersed, which he had made, and on which he had set his Affections, and, as we may say, his very Heart." Note, That the loss of this Library was attended with the loss of a vast Number of Letters, which were designed for the Press (22), and which Mr An-

(18) See below Cistation.

(19) Discourse, &c. p. 102, 103.

(20) Ibid. pag. 328.

(21) Ibid. pag. 383.

(22) Ibid. pag. 342.

which he published [E]. As to the rest, I shall observe, in general, that the Discourse, which

(24) Instead of the usual Tale Monsieur, they called each other My Dear Atticus. Ibid.

REFLECTION on the Fate of some Libraries, and the Indolence of those, who wait for second Editions.

Acillon had received from many learned Men. He designed chiefly to print those, which Mr Dailly, his intimate Friend (24), had wrote to him. What a Loss was this!

This may afford copious Matter for Reflexion: For is it not a deplorable Consideration, to think, that a single Day may undo, what has been compleated with a thousand Cares, and, at a vast Expence, during many Years? Is it not a melancholy Fate, to be exposed to lose, in a Moment, what has been a long time purchasing, by innocent Means, and been treasured up, as a perpetual Source of very lawful Pleasure, and honest Instruction? To be deprived, in a Moment, of a vast Number of Volumes, which have been so carefully collected, and so much one's Delight, is it not as hard and cruel Destiny? If the Flames had devoured them, one could more easily bear the Loss; but, without a special Grace of God, one cannot support, that they should become the Prey of an unjust Possessor, who is at no other Trouble, than that of transporting them to his own House. The Triumvirate, which dispossest of their Lands, those, who had cultivated them, during their whole Life, and gave them to others, who had contributed nothing towards their Improvement, did not occasion so sensible a Grief, as that of the Learned, who have seen their Libraries plundered, and fallen into the Hands of a Persecutor, worthy of hatred, if he acted against his Conscience, and deserving of Pity, if his false Devotion persuaded him, that it was a thing acceptable to God.

Impius hæc tam culta novalia miles habebit, Barbarus has fegetes (25)?

(25) Virgil. Ecl. 1. v. 71.

Did we for these Barbarians plant, and sow?
On these, on these, our happy Fields bestow?

D R Y D E N.

This was the Complaint of those good People of Italy, who found themselves obliged to surrender their Patrimony to the Soldier of the Triumvirate.

- - - en! queis consuevimus agros!

(26) Id. Ib.

Inferre nunc, Melibæe pyros, pone ordine vites (26).

Now let me graft my Pears, and prune my Vine;
The Fruit is theirs, the Labour only mine.

D R Y D E N.

- - - vivi pervenimus advena nostri,

Quod nunquam veriti sumus, ut possessor agelli

Diceret, hæc mea sunt, veteres migrate coloni (27).

(27) Idem, Ecl. 9. v. 2.

The Time is come, I never thought to see,
(Strange Revolution for my Farm and me)
When the grim Captain, in a surly tone,
Cries out, pack up, ye Rascals, and be gone.

D R Y D E N.

Mr Acillon, and many others, might have adapted most of these Expressions to their Fortune. Perhaps it were better to have no Affections, than to set them on a Library; when, perhaps we may be reduced to address it in this manner:

Nuper sollicitum quæ mihi tædium,

Nunc desiderium, curaque non levis (28).

(28) Horat. Od. 14. lib. 2. v. 17.

O! lately, thou, my anxious Fear,
Now my sad Loss, and heavy Care!

But, if possible, let us forget the unhappy and fatal Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which was attended with so many Acts of Injustice. Let us rather cast our Eyes on Objects, which do not raise the Passions into a Ferment. Let us praise the good Taste of this able Divine. He was for having the first Editions of Books, though it was very probable they would be reprinted, with Additions and Corrections (29). This was to understand things; this we may call Love of Books, and Eagerness after Instruction: But they, who can rest satisfied without a Book, 'till it be reprinted, make it appear, that they are satisfied

(29) He often found that this probable was without any Effect. See, above, Gilet. (18).

VOL. I.

with their Ignorance, and that they had rather save a few Pistoles, than acquire Instruction. I speak of those, (and the Number of them is very great) who are persuaded, on the one side, that a new Book will afford them much Information; and who, though they are able to purchase it, defer the buying of it, because they are told, that there will be published better, or cheaper, Editions. This Delay cannot be sufficiently blamed: It is a shameful Neglect of Learning. Mr Bigot told me, one Day, that a Man of Roüen, who applied himself to the Study of Genealogies, would willingly have improved by the Works of Father Angelm; and yet he did not purchase them; but waited for the second Edition, which never came out; thus he died, without satisfying his Curiosity. Mr Bigot represented to him, several times, that it was better to have two Editions of a Book, than to deprive one's self of the Advantage, which might accrue by reading the first; and that a Man judges wrong of the value of things, who prefers three or four Crowns to such a Profit. They, who can afford it, ought to provide themselves with the first Editions. I confess the foreign Editions of Books are not so expensive: But are they faithful? Is there nothing altered in, or added to, them? Did not the Abbot de la Roque publicly complain (30), that the Printers of Holland had corrupted his Book? I have been assured, but a few Days ago, that the History of Davila, and That of Strada, printed in the Netherlands, are not exactly the same with the Italian Editions; the Bookellers of Flanders having suppressed, or altered, some things, out of Complaisance to some illustrious Families. I may be told, that the Author often corrects his Faults in the second Edition; I own it: But they are not always real Faults; they are Alterations, which he sacrifices to prudential Reasons, to his Repose, and to the Injustice of his too powerful Censurers. The second Edition, which Mezzerai publish'd, of his Chronological Abridgment, is the most correct; for he left out some Mistakes; but he omitted likewise some Truths, which were ungrateful; and, for this Reason, the Curious endeavour to get the Edition in Quarto, which is the first; and pay a great Price for it. I say nothing of the Advantage of comparing Editions. It is so great, when an able Writer has carefully revised his Work, that his first Essay deserves to be kept. All this will make you sensible, that Mr Acillon knew very well what belonged to a Library.

I proceed to his Method of Studying. "He spent "no time in vain and useless Studies. He read, "indeed, all sorts of Books, even the ancient and "modern Romances. He believed, that there was "no Book; but what might be useful; and used to "repeat these Words, ascribed to Virgil, Aurum ex "stercore Ennii colligo (31). — "I collect Gold out "of Ennius's Dung. We find, said he sometimes, "even in neglected Authors, very curious Particulars, "which are not to be met with elsewhere; and, if "it were only the Style, there is always something "to be got by the reading of them. But he did not "apply his Mind to them; he made only important Books, and serious Things, the principal Subject of his Studies. — He made a very great Difference between the reading of Books, which, as "he himself said, he only looked into, that he might "not be ignorant of any thing, and the reading of "those, which were useful to his Profession. He "read the first but once, and curiously, perfunctorily, "and, as the Latin Proverb says, sicut canis ad Nilum bibens & fugiens; but he read other Books "several times over, with Care and Application: "The first time, he said, served only to give him a "general Notion of the Subject, and the second enabled him to observe the Beauties of it. Indexes; "which other great Men have called The Soul of "Books, were entirely useless to him, because he "read them with Application, and oftener than once. "Besides, he had a very happy Memory, and, particularly, a local one, of great use to Men of Letters. He read them exactly, without omitting the "very Title, the Name of the Printer, or the Place, "and Year, of the Impression: In his Opinion, "every thing was of some use. He marked his Books "with his Pen, as he read them, and placed in the Margin References to other Authors, who had treated

(30) In a Preface to his Journal des Savans. See also the Remark [F] of the Article PELISSON, towards the end.

(31) Discourse on the Life of Mr Acillon, p. 107.

which has been published, on his Life, represents him as a Person of extraordinary Merit. It is, properly speaking, the Idea of an accomplish'd Pastor. He appears in it Learned, Eloquent, Wise, Pious, Modest, and Charitable; dispensing his Censures meekly, or rigorously, according to the Exigency of the Case; practising what he (32) Ibid.

pag. 109.

† Πίσις πατασθῶν αὐτοῦ ἱεροῦ ἀνασταύσαντος.

(33) Ibid.
pag. 111.

"the same Subject, or had made use of Expressions akin to what he read (32). — Sometimes he changed his Readings, which served him instead of Rest. He did not read every Book through; sometimes he studied the Subject thoroughly, and then consulted Authors, who had treated of it; he often met with the same thing in different Books, at which he was not disgusted; on the contrary, he said, they were so many new Strokes, which completed the Idea he had conceived, and brought it to an entire Perfection. He had a great Table in the middle of his Chamber, which was commonly full of Books, most of them open (33). The famous Fra-Paolo, whom I have mentioned, studied also in the same manner; and, as the exact and faithful Author of his Life informs us, he never left off, 'till he had seen all; that is to say, 'till he had confronted Authors, Places, Times, and Opinions. He persisted in this Practice, that he might have no more Occasion to doubt, or think again on the same Subject; and that he might know what to depend upon. Thus Mr Ancillon studied sometimes, and he has often been heard to give the same Reasons for it. As he read much, he found many things worth taking notice of; and, though he had an admirable Memory, he had Books, in which he collected what he thought most considerable. He was not ignorant, that Goveau, for Example, who would not have so much as an Ink-horn in his Study, Salmajus, Menage, and several other great Men, have condemned Collections, and that, so far from thinking, that they facilitated the Acquisition of Learning, on the contrary, they looked upon them as an Obstacle, which interrupted the Course of Reading and Meditation, and destroyed the Effect of them. But he was of Opinion, that, since, thro' the Unhappinefs of the present Age, it is not sufficient to be Master of a Subject, and all the Reasons, on which it is built, but it is necessary likewise to produce Authorities, and express Texts; there was occasion for a Book, which, like a Vein, or Stream of Water, may direct one to the Fountain Head, and the rather, because, being to speak in public before certain People, who were rather his Spies, than his Hearers, and who often demanded of him Authorities and Proofs for what he advanced; it was in some fort necessary to have a Repertory, to assist his Memory, and to prevent his looking a long time for what he wanted, according to the different Conjunctions he was in." These Particulars may, I think, be of use to many Readers. I shall speak below (34), of his constant Application to Study.

(34) In Remark [F].

(35) Ibid.
pag. 218.

(36) Ibid.
p. 207, 208.

(37) Ibid.
pag. 212.

(38) Ibid.
pag. 213.

(39) Ibid.
pag. 214.

(40) Ibid.
pag. 217.

[E] The Books he publish'd. In the Year 1657, he publish'd a Book in Quarto at Sedan, wherein the subtle Controversy concerning Traditions is fully and solidly examined (35). 'Tis a faithful Relation of what passed in the Conference, which he had with Mr de Bedacier, Doctor of the Sorbonne, Bishop of Augusta, and Suffragan of the Bishop of Metz (36). He disputed with him; First, in his own House (37), in the Presence of many Persons, and afterwards at the Bishop's Palace (38), before a Crowd of People. All the Articles were committed to writing, and sign'd. "He maintain'd this Disputation with Honour, and finish'd it with Success. Having answer'd, methodically, all the Objections, which were made to him, he represented, that He was likewise to propose his Arguments, in his Turn; but, as he had given several Mortal Blows to Error, in his Answer, it was fear'd he would utterly destroy it, if he was allow'd to establish what he pretended to be the Truth. Mr de Bedacier resolv'd to break up the Conference, and, in order to conceal the real Motive of his Conduct, he pretended, that, for the future, it would be better to carry on the Dispute in Writing, than by Word of Mouth; Nevertheless in this agreed, on both Sides, that neither Party should cause the Acts of this Conference to be printed (39)". But there was a Monk, who publish'd spurious Acts of it (40). And whose Impudence was so great, that, though Mr Ancil-

lon had obtain'd very great Honour in This Conference, he endeavour'd to persuade the Publick, that it had prov'd fatal both to him and his Party, and that he had been entirely vanquish'd (41). This oblig'd Mr Ancillon to publish the Work I have mention'd. Hottinger commends it very much, in the 6th Chapter of the 3d Book of his Bibliothecarius Quadrupartitus (42). Father Clavier, a Minime, and Provincial of his Order, undertook to confute this Work; in order to which, he compos'd a Book, intitled, Le Port des Traditions abbatu par les Maximes de Mr David Ancillon. — The Port (or strong Hold) of Traditions demolish'd by the Maxims of Mr David Ancillon. Others wrote Satires against it; but all these Libels were unsuccessful (43). The Roman Catholics themselves advis'd Mr Ancillon not to answer them, as he had undertaken to do; they assur'd him, that He, and his Book, were so far superior to these Hackney Writers, that it was beneath him to enter the Lists with them (44). As soon as the Method of Cardinal Richelieu came out, "He wrote a large and excellent Answer to it. But he was inform'd, that Mr Martel, Professor at Montauban, had wrote one, which was just upon the Point of being publish'd; and that Mr Claude, who had the same Design, had laid it aside for the like Reason, as it now appears by the Sixth Letter, in the Collection of his Letters, in the Fifth Volume of his Posthumous Works. He, therefore, suppress'd what he had wrote; and nothing of it was made Publick, but a few Sheets, which contain'd an Answer to the 6th Chapter of That Method, or, to speak more properly, an Apology for Luther, Zuinglius, Calvin, and Beza, which is the Title of it in the Edition of Hanaw, 1666. Mr Ancillon wrote the Life of William Farel; or, The Idea of a Faithful Minister of Christ. The famous Mr Conrart, who was one of his intimate Friends, read, and approv'd of it, and with his own Hand wrote some Notes in the Margins of the Manuscript. It was a Work, which deserved to be publish'd; but he could not be persuaded by any means to give his Consent to it; and his Refusal occasion'd a Copy, full of Errors, to be taken from it, which fell into the Hands of a Bookseller in Holland, who put it to the Press, on the Reputation of the Author. Every one was surpris'd to see such a wretched Edition, as That was; and, if ever the same Book should be printed from the Copy, revised by Mr Conrart, This Piece will appear so mangled, that it will not easily be known again. Tho' Mr Ancillon had expounded some entire Books of the Holy Scripture, and committed all his Sermons to Writing, he could never be persuaded to print them --- (45) All of this kind, which was printed, is a Sermon, which he preach'd at Metz, on a Fast-day: His Consistory exerted some Authority over him, to force it out of his Hands, and caus'd it to be printed at Paris in the Year 1676. This Sermon, was compos'd on the 18th and 19th Verses of the third Chapter of St Paul's Epistle to the Philippians, and is intitled, The Tears of St Paul. Lastly, he wrote an excellent Answer to the Pastoral Advice, the Circular Letters, and the Method, which the Clergy address'd to the Reformed of France, in the Year 1682; but he kept it close in his Study, till, some considerable Persons having oblig'd him to publish it, he sent it to his old Friend Mr Turretin, Professor of Divinity at Geneva, giving him full Liberty to dispose of it, as he should think fit; but it is probable, that the Copy miscarried; for it has been never heard of since. Mr Ancillon had so little concern for his own Works, that he never enquir'd after it; and yet this was the Answer, which the Public expected, and of which mention is made in the Preface to a solid and judicious Book, intitled, Examen des Methodes, &c. in the Place, where it is said, There will be publish'd an Answer by an able Hand at Metz (46).

(41) Ibid.
pag. 218.

(42) Ibid.
pag. 220.

(43) Ibid.

(44) Ibid.
pag. 221.

(45) Ibid.
pag. 225.

(46) Ibid.
pag. 227.

[F] Ed

(9) See, considering the activity of preaching & discourse;
Discourse,
Sec. p. 175,
& seq.

he preached (9); wholly employ'd in the Discharge of his Ministry [F], without interfering, as many others do, with what belongs only to Laymen; or keeping his Doors open to Informers, and Newsmongers [G]. How learned his Conversation was [H],

[F] He was wholly employ'd in the discharge of his Ministry. They, who devote themselves to the Pastoral Office, "Stand in need of all their time, to study, labour, and to perform worthy the Duties of their Calling; and, without doubt, this is the reason, why the Sixth Canon, among those which are call'd Apostolical, imports, that no Bishop, Priest, or Deacon, shall meddle with Secular Matters, or engage in any Public Office; and that the Sixth Canon, among those of Africa, forbids Persons of This Character to take upon themselves the Management of the Affairs, or Law-Suits, of other People. The Loss of time, which is spent in these Worldly Occupations, is not the least Motive of these excellent Constitutions; but I believe they are not the only Considerations, which occasion'd them. Experience has made it appear, that the Intrigues of the World, the Hurry of Business, and the Ambition of making their Court to great Persons, are three Rocks, which have always been, and ever will be, fatal to them. They depart insensibly from That Apostolical Simplicity, which ought to be one of their chief Ornaments; they learn the Maxims of the World; they accustom themselves to its Subtilties, and Artifices, and are led insensibly to practise them (47)." The Minister, I am speaking of, shunn'd all these Rocks; he lov'd Study, Repose, and Retirement; and never embarrass'd himself with Worldly Affairs (48). "He was appointed, by the Laws of his Country, and against his Will, Guardian to his Brother and Sister: But he left the Administration of the Estate, and the Management of Affairs, to his Brother, who, though under Age, was already a very able Man——So that, the Pupillage being ended by the Majority of the Orphans, the Minor gave an Account to his Guardian, and the Guardian, for Form sake, did the like to his Minors; quite contrary to the usual, natural, and common Custom. He absolutely renounced all Worldly Affairs, and, like a true Anchorite, banish'd himself from the Conversation of Men, and employ'd his whole Thoughts on God, and his Church (49). He had a very curious and large Library——He was always to be found in it——(50). He never went out of his House, but in order to go to Church, or to perform, elsewhere, some other Function of his Office. He never left his Books, but upon this Account; and, as if the Day were not long enough, he spent part of the Night in Meditation, or Study. Though he had several Country Houses, and One had been purchas'd for him very near the City, the more easily to engage him to spend a few Days, or at least Hours, at it; yet he was never seen there above three or four times, in two and thirty Years, that he exercis'd his Ministry at Metz. He was constantly in his Chamber, being a Stranger to Jealousy, which makes other Men pass so many uneasy Moments: In this manner he liv'd peaceably at home, regardless of the Credit which is got by frequent Visits, troublesome Cares, and great Measures, which are exactly to be observ'd."

This is the Model, by which all Ministers of the Gospel should regulate their Lives. They have all, like Mary, chosen the good part (51); but some of them imitate Martin, who was craggy and troubled about many things (52). They meddle with State Affairs; They enter into the Intrigues of the Town; They are inquisitive after all kinds of News; They traffick in them, and make use of them in making their court to their Superiors. Nay, They sometimes venture to suggest Advice, in regard to War, or Negotiations; and are not discouraged at the Contempt, which is artfully shewn for their idle Projects. They are often seen in the Anti-Chambers of Princes; and wait impatiently for an Opportunity of being introduced; not upon Matters of Conscience, but to ask a thousand Favours, to recommend their Children, their Relations, and their Friends, with respect to honourable and profitable Places. They have the first Intelligence of a Vacancy, and endeavour to get it fill'd up upon their Recommendation. They would deserve Commendation, if they employ'd their Credit only in procuring Bread to those, who want it; but they employ it chiefly in favour of those, who are already rich, and who would not dare to have recourse to their Solicitations, if they believ'd them to be true Ministers of JESUS CHRIST; for then they would expect a Censure; they would be afraid of being put in Mind of St Paul's Precept, that, provided we have Food and Raiment, we should be therewith content (53). It is not the Duty of a Pastor to procure to his Flock a stronger Attachment to worldly Things; he should rather endeavour to draw them off from it, and combat their Covetousness and Ambition; and no doubt he would do so, were he himself free from the gnawing Cares of Vain-glory. But, because, in order to gratify his Passions, he wants to have the Offices of a Town in the Hands of Men, who may be obliged to him for them, and who, by way of Acknowledgment, or in hopes of new Favours, will always be ready to serve him, he uses his utmost endeavours to raise them; he commends their ambitious Views; and, to support himself in the Management of Affairs, he is obliged to be a Man of Intrigue, and to have his emissaries every where. Such a Man stands in need of being threatened, as Bishops are sometimes, when they set against the Canons, which oblige them to Residence; and little thinks, that his Office is of such a Nature, that the utmost Human Ability is scarce sufficient for it. They, who consider this, will imitate Mr Ancillon, and not throw away so much time in Visits of Interest.

Forumque vitat, & superba civium
Potentiorum limina (54).

The Clamours of contentious Law,
And Court and State be wisely shunn;
Nor, brid'd with Hopes, nor dar'd with Aims,
To servile Salvations run.

DRYDEN.

Note, that they, who do not imitate his Conduct, sometimes employ their Interest for Persons, who are distress'd in their Circumstances; but if you observe, you will find, that these Persons are servicable Men, fit for any thing, and inclin'd to consecrate all their Leisure to the Passions of Him, whose Protection has procur'd it for them. He is their Deity;

----- Deus nobis hæc otia fecit;
Namque erit Ille mihi semper Deus; illius aram
Sæpe tener nostris ab oculibus imbuet agnus (55).

These Blessings, Friend, a Deity bestow'd;
For never can I deem him less than God.
The tender Firrings of my woolly Breed
Shall on his Holy Altar often bleed.

DRYDEN.

They acknowledge themselves his Creatures, and perform all the Duties, which This Character requires.

[G] His Doors were not open to Informers and Newsmongers. "He neither loved Tales, nor Tale-bearers; and laid it down as a Maxim, that little Credit was to be given to them; saying, that a Report is never so pure, but it relishes of the Passions of him, who makes it; and that it is like Water, which always retains the Quality of the Veins of Earth, or Minerals, through which it runs. He had, particularly, a vast Aversion to those, who go into Houses to learn what passes there, and to let People a talking, and then report what they have, as it were, extorted from their Mouths by Cunning and Artifice——(56). He said, that it was very dangerous lightly to believe what is said of others. He was upon his Guard in this Respect (57). The House of such a Pastor was far from being a Place of Resort for News-Writers. I have consider'd this matter above, in the Remark [H] of the Article ALTING

(53) 1 Tim. ii. 8.

(54) Horat. Epod. Qd. 24. ver. 7.

(55) Virgil. Eccl. i. v. 6.

(56) Discourse on the Life of Mr Ancillon, p. 229.

(57) Ibid. pag. 230.

(47) Ibid. p. 95, 96.

(48) Ibid. pag. 100.

(49) Ibid. pag. 102.

(50) Ibid. pag. 103.

(51) Luke x. 42.

(52) Ibid. ver. 41.

(z) In Remark [F] of the Article FERRI.

(aa) Difficult, &c. pag. 7.

(c8) See the Acta Eruditorum for June 1698. pag. 287.

(59) He published several Books; most of them anonymous.

was [H], cannot be better known, than from the Book mentioned in the Remark [G]. I shall, in another Place (z), examine some Particulars concerning a Print of Him. But I must not pass over in silence, That he was the Son of a Learned Civilian; that one of his Ancestors was formerly President au Mortier in one of the chief Sovereign Courts of France; and that Georgin ANCILLON, one of the Principal Members of the Church of Metz, was also one of the first Founders and Governors of it (aa).

"(HENRY); and I shall farther confider it in the Remark [N] of the Article GRUTERUS (JANUS).

[H] How Learned his Conversation was.] The Work, from whence we have our Information, is intitled, Melange critique de Litterature, and was collected out of Mr Ancillon's Conversations (58). It was printed at Basil, in the Year 1698, in Two Volumes in Twelves, by the Care of Mr Ancillon the Advocate, eldest Son to This Minister, who had already distinguish'd himself in the Common-Wealth of Learning (59). I shall have frequent occasion to speake of this Miscellany; and if, sometimes, I do not find every thing in it so exact as it should be, I do not intend to prejudice, thereby, the Author or Publisher of these Pieces. It is much more surprizing, that the late Mr Ancillon, in speaking off-hand, should be so exact in many things, than strange, that his Memory fail'd him in some particulars. As to his Son, it was his Duty to deliver things as he had them from Mr Ancillon's Mouth. See what I have observed concerning the Menagiana (60): the Case here is the same. You may see, in the Preface to This Miscellany, why it was intitled Ancilloniana.

(60) In Remark [A] of the Article MENAGE.

ANCRE (The Mareschal d'). Look for CONCINI.

ANDLO (PETRUS AB), a fictitious Name, under which a Cartesian disguised himself, in order to write against the Dissertation De Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ surreptente, & vitando in rebus Theologicis & Fidei. Mr Des Marets, Professor of Divinity at Groningen, the Author of this Dissertation, published it in the Year 1670, to represent to the Protestant Churches the great Evils, which were to be feared, if the Opinions of Des Cartes were suffered to pass from the Schools of Philosophy to those of Divinity. Some Months after, there came out a Piece intitled, Petri ab Andlo Batavi Specimen Confutationis Dissertationis de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, &c. Never was any Confutation written in a more vehement Style. Des Marets was treated in it after the most disobliging manner. He quickly published an Apology, intitled, Vindiciae posteriores Dissertationis de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, in which he loaded his Adversary with all kinds of Abuse. He treated him as a most impudent Socinian, a Spinozist, an impious and unchristian Man, and an Atheist. Petrus ab Andlo speedily published a Reply, intitled Animadversiones ad Vindicias Dissertationis, quam Samuel Maresius edidit, de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ. If he was passionate in his first Dissertation, he was still more so in his second; intermixing, nevertheless, as he had done at first, several Strokes of Raillery with his Anger. He positively denied, that he had any Acquaintance with Spinoza, that he had ever seen him, or that he approved his Opinions (a). Des Marets received this second Piece of Petrus ab Andlo, the Nineteenth of December 1670, and confuted it so speedily, that his Rejoinder was finished the Third of January following (b). It was intitled, Samuelis Maresii Clypeus Ortbodoxiæ, sive Vindiciarum suarum priorem pro sua Dissertatione de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ, &c. The Author declared, that he would write no more against so obscure an Author [A], but should be always ready to enter the Lists, in Defence of Truth, with a Learned, and Honest Adversary, who was not ashamed of his Name. He kept his Word; for he left the third Piece of Petrus ab Andlo unanswered; It was intitled, Specimina Bombomaciæ Samuelis Maresii se defendentis Clypeo Ortbodoxiæ, seu vindiciæ vindiciarum Dissertationis de Abusu Philosophiæ Cartesianæ. This ended this Controversy, which verified the Proverb, Nullum violentum durable,—Nothing violent is of long Continuance; tho' it frequently proves false in a Paper-War [B]. Des Marets could never discover the true Name of his Adversary [C]. There appeared, in 1673, a small Book in 4to, intitled DANIELIS AB ANDLO, Petri filii, κατ' ὄνομα ἀδελφῶν ἐλεγχόμενος, sive ad Clarissimi Theologi Samuelis Maresii Traictatum brevem de Studio Theologico Notæ breves.

(a) Spinozism nec novit Petrus, nec vidit, nec audivit, nec absurda eius dogmata probat. Animado. ad Vindicias, pag. 7.

(b) Vindiciæ Vindiciarum Dissertat. sub fin.

(c) Petrus de Andlo.

(d) Mich. Hertzius, Biblioth. German. n. 224.

(1) Maresii Vindiciæ Vindiciarum Dissertat. sub fin.

(2) Id. in Iudicio de Theolog. Pacifica Wittichii sub fin.

[A] Declar'd he would write no more against so obscure an Author.] The Term he makes use of, is the same, which the Scripture uses against the Gods of the Gentiles, calling them Gods of Dung. "Animo non ulterius hanc ferram cum hoc sterco reo homine recipiendi (1) — Having resolv'd to dispute no longer with this dirty Fellow". "In antecessum me protestari nihil amplius mihi futurum negotii cum hoc hominis sterquilino & infami nebulone quem pudet sui ipsius (2). — I protested before-hand, that I wou'd have nothing more to do with this Dung-bill of a Man; this infamous Rascal, who is ashamed of being known.

[B] The Proverb nullum violentum durable frequenter proves false in a Paper-War.] I need not go far to find an Instance of what I say. The Quarrels between Des Marets, and Voëtius were extremely violent, and continued near thirty Years, as long as the German War, which ended at the Peace of Munster.

[C] Des Marets could never discover the true Name of his Adversary.] All his Conjectures, and the Enquiries of his Friends, were to no purpose: So that, being weary of such an unsuccessful Chase, he resolv'd to leave his Adversary masked. Quis sit ille larvatus Petrus ab Andlo, Batavus — ut nec haëanus conjectura assequi, nec amicorum diligentia rescire potui.

*gatus, ita nolo amplius inquirere. — Who this disguised Petrus ab Andlo Batavus is — as I could never get guess, nor discover by the Diligence of my Friends, I resolve to make no further Enquiry after him. This is what he says, at the beginning of his Chypus Orthodoxie. He had Friends every where, who, being more zealous than discreet, which is the usual Character of those, who are accounted the Flail of Innovators, made him believe, that there was a Minister in Zealand, whose Name was Petrus ab Andlo, married to the Daughter of Cocceius. He published this News; but, being informed, that the Son-in-law of Cocceius was called Anselae, he caused his Excuses to be made to him. "Apud R. D. Anselae curavi me honestè excusari, quod id mihi exisset ex relatione honesti cujusdam R. viri,*

"etiam in Cartefianisimū ----- prioris, cui non erat cur ultro asserenti fidem detractarem (3). — "I took care to excuse myself honourably to Anselae for spreading a Report, the Truth of which I could not question, as it came from a Reverend and Honourable Person, and one who was even inclined to Cartesianism." He says somewhere (4), that there was a Report, that three Persons had been concerned in the Defence of Wittichius, and that they had published their Work under the feigned Name of Petrus ab Andlo. We shall see, whether Mr Placcius, or Mr Baillet, will be more lucky, than I have been, in unmasking this Pseudonymous Writer, whom I take to be Regnier Manfvelt, Professor of Philosophy at Utrecht.

(3) Vindicia-Vindicia-rum, pag. 6.

(4) In Judicio de Theol. Pædism. Wittichii.

ANDRADA (DIEGO DE PAYVA D'), in Latin Andradus, a learned Portuguese, born at Coimbra, signalized himself in the Council of Trent, whither King Sebastian sent him, as one of his Divines (a). He preached before the Assembly, the second Sunday after Easter, 1562. He was not contented with the Service he did, in explaining the Matters, about which he was consulted; he employed his Pen likewise in Defence of the Canons of That Council. This he did in a Book, intituled, Orthodoxarum Explicationum Libri X (b). In which he particularly answers a Piece published by Chemnitius against the Doctrine of the Jesuits [A], before the breaking up of the Council of Trent; and, as Chemnitius took this Opportunity to write a very large Book, which he intituled, Examen Concilii Tridentini; Andrada thought himself obliged to vindicate his first Piece against this learned Adversary [B]. He, therefore, composed a Book, which his two Brothers published after his Death at Lisbon, in the Year 1578. It is intituled, Defensio Tridentinae Fidei Catholicæ, quinque Libris comprehensa, adversus Hæreticorum calumnias, & præsertim Martini Kemnitii. These Works of Andrada have been printed several times (c), and yet they are so scarce at Paris, that Mr Pellisson could not meet with them in the Rue de St Jacques * [C]. There is scarce any Catholic Author, who has been more quoted by the

(b) Printed at Cologne in 1564. The first of these ten Books, which is an Appendix for the Jesuits, was printed in French, at Lyons, in 1565. Du Verdier. Bibl. Francoise, pag. 266.

(c) Ex Nicolaï Antonii Bibliotheca Hispan. Tom. 1. p. 236.

* St James's Street.

[A] A Piece published by Chemnitius against the Doctrine of the Jesuits. A Lutheran Minister, who wrote an Encomium upon Chemnitius, expresses himself thus; "Breve quidem, sed nervosum scriptum, durante adhuc Concilio Tridentino, Jesuitarum Theologiz opposuit, cujus opusculi cum Andradus Lusitanus in se suscepisset refutationem, Chemnitio occasione subministravit conscribendi insigne illud ----- opus, quod Tridentini Concilii examen nuncupavit (1). ----- During the Session of the Council of Trent, he wrote a short, but nervous, Piece against the Doctrine of the Jesuits; which when Andradus the Portuguese undertook to refute, Chemnitius laid bold of the Opportunity of writing That famous Work, which he called, "An Enquiry into the Council of Trent." To which I add a Passage of Eisengreinus, because it will give occasion to a small Remark. This Author pretends, that Andrada did Wonders against the Heretics, in his Orthodox Explications, and chiefly against Chemnitius: "Præsertim contra Martini Kemnitii petulantem audaciam, qui Coloniensem censuram quam à viris societatis Jesu compositam esse ait, una cum ejusdem sanctissimæ Societatis vitæ ratione temerè calumniandam suscepit (2). — Particularly against the insolent Boldness of Martin Chemnitius, who took upon him to abuse the Censure of Cologne, which he says was drawn up by the Jesuits, together with the manner of Life of the Gentlemen of That venerable Society." Nicolas Antonio, having quoted this Passage, censures Eisengreinus, for believing that Andrada was a Jesuit. Hæc ille, says he, falsus, saltem in eo quod Andradam nostrum unum ex Jesuitico sodalitate credidit. If this Censure be only grounded upon the Words, quoted by Don Antonio, I believe it to be false.

[B] Though himself obliged to vindicate his first Piece against this learned Adversary. This Epithet is due to Chemnitius; and, at the Bottom I say no more in his Favour, than Don Nicolas Antonio does. At first Sight, indeed, these Words of the Spanish Author, "Cui cum reposuisset profligatissimus hæreticus liberum, in quo gravissimas adversus universalem Ecclesiam contumelias intorquebat, descendere de novo in campum sibi opus esse Paiva vidit, ut immanem hostem totis viribus profigeret. — This abandoned Heretic having published a Reply, in which he most scandalously abused the whole Church,

"Payva thought himself obliged to enter the Lists once more, and exert his whole Strength in demolishing this Gigantic Adversary." These Words, I say, at first Sight, appear not very much to the Credit of Chemnitius; but, if they be well considered, they will be found to redound greatly to his Honour; for must it not be very pleasing to a Man, to find himself represented as the Goliath, or the Polypemur, of his Party, by those of the contrary Side, when, besides, he believes himself engaged in a good Cause?

[C] That Mr Pellisson could not meet with them in the Rue de St Jacques. An Account of this Matter will not displease the Curious. Mr Leibnitz, in his Remarks on the Reflexions on the Disputes in Religion (3), alledged, among other things, that Andrada had composed a Work intituled, Explicationes Orthodoxæ de controversis Religionis capitibus; in which he teaches in express Terms, "That the Philosophers, who used all their Industry to come at the Knowledge of the true God, and to honour him religiously, had That Faith, by which the Just live. — That it would be the greatest Cruelty in the World (neque immanitas deterior ulla esse potest) to condemn Men to eternal Torments, for wanting a Faith, which they could not attain to (4)." Mr Pellisson immediately replied, "That he had never met with This Author, and that, to satisfy his Curiosity, he would enquire after his Book, when he came to Paris (5)." Some time after he acquainted the Public, that he had carefully enquired after the Book of the Portuguese Doctor, Payva Andradus; but he added, "It is no easy thing to find it in Paris: It is unknown in the Rue de St Jacques; nor is it to be met with in the most voluminous Libraries; no, not in That of the Jesuits; which is very remarkable, because he wrote in their Favour. At last, It has been found in the Library of the Sorbonne. The Abbot Pirart, a Person of Merit, if there be one this Day in France, or elsewhere, and one of the most eminent and illustrious Members of that House, who knew as little of the Author, as myself, has given himself the Trouble to peruse it at my Request. — This Writer has Merit, and is no dry or jejune Scholastic, as so many others are; he discovers a more than ordinary Elegance, and Vivacity; in a Word, he answers the Reputation, which he bore in the Council of Trent (6)." It is surprising,

(3) It is the Title of a Book of Mr Pellisson.

(4) See Mr Pellisson's Book, entitled, Of a Toleration of Religions, pag. 19. It was printed at Paris, in 1692.

(5) Ibid. pag. 71.

(6) Ibid. printing, pag. 83.

(a) Palavic. History of the Council of Trent, lib. 19. cap. 16. p. 7.

(1) Spizellus, in Temple Honoris pag. 4.

(2) In Catalogo Testium Veritatis, apud Nicolas Antonii. Bibl. Hispan. Tom. 1. pag. 235.

Protestants, than He, because he maintained some Opinions a little too extravagant, concerning the Salvation of the Pagan Philosophers. He was a Preacher; His Sermons have been published in three Parts; the second of which was translated out of Portuguese into Spanish, by Benedict de Alarcon (d). The Bibliothèque of the Spanish Writers does not mention all his Works [D]. Many Encomiums have been bestowed upon Andrada [E], which may be seen in the Remarks.

(d) Id. lib.

(c) At the end of his Treatise concerning the Virtue of the Hebræan.

prizing, that a Book, so little known to the greatest Bookellers, and scarce to be found in the largest Libraries, should be quoted by an hundred Authors, whose Collections are very small. This, I say, is surprizing to those, who are ignorant, that the Enquiry into the Council of Trent, by Chemnitius, is a very common Book, and that Dr Andradus is frequently quoted in it. An hundred other Authors have expressed them as positively as he has done on this Subject, as la Morbe la Payer shews in one of his Books (7). How comes it, then, that they have not been quoted so often as Andradus, when the Question was to excuse Zuinglius, by way of Recrimination, or to object to the Papists, that they have leaned towards the Pelagian Heresy? What, I say, can be the Reason of this, if I have not hinted at the true Cause of the frequent Quotations of Andradus?

[D] The Bibliothèque of the Spanish Writers does not mention all his Works. The Book he wrote concerning the Pope's Authority, during the Council, in the Year 1562, is not to be found in it (8). The Pope's Legates, being very well pleased with This Work, sent it to Cardinal Borromeo. The Court of Rome liked it extremely, and the Pope very obligingly returned the Author Thanks. I believe this Work is the same with That, which is entitled, De Concilio Autoritate, the first Book of which has been quoted by Palavizini (9).

[E] Many Encomiums have been bestowed upon Andrada. You have already seen Mr Pellissier's Opinion of him. Oforius, in his Preface to the Orthodox Explications of Andradus, ascribes to him a great Wit, an eager Application, a Knowledge of Languages, and the Zeal and Eloquence of a good Preacher. Rojewide speaks of him thus: "Ad Concilium Tridentinum & profundissimi Theologi mentem, & linguam eloquentissimi Oratoris, attulit (10). — He carried with him to the Council of Trent the Understanding of a most profound Divine, and the Eloquence of a consummate Orator."

(8) Palavizini. lib. 19. cap. 16. n. 7.

(9) Id. lib. 24. cap. 10. n. 17.

(10) In Legge Talionis Catubono retaliata, apud Nicol. Antonium, Tom. 1. pag. 236.

ANDREAS (JOHN), a famous Canonist of the XIVth Century, was the Son of a Priest [A], and was born at Mugello, near Florence. He was yet very young, when he went to study at Bologne (a); where he would have scarce been able to maintain himself, had he not met with a Tutor's Place; but, by the help of this Employment, he was in a Condition to apply himself, at his Ease, to the Study of the Canon Law, in which he made a great Progress, under the Professor Gui de Baif (b). He had always a particular Respect for the Person, and Glosses, of this Professor; He paid as great a Deference to his Glosses, as to the Text itself. He was beholden to him in a Particular, which we are, generally, more thankful for, than for Instruction. Gui de Baif, perceiving, that, for want of Money, he durst not petition for his Doctor's Degree, put him upon demanding it, and obtained it for him gratis. Andreas himself confesses this (c). The same Gui encouraged him likewise to stand for a Professorship; which was attended with all the Success he could wish. Our Andreas, we find, was Professor at Padua, about the Year 1330, and also at Pisa; but he was recalled to Bologne (d), where he acquired a greater Reputation, than any where else. We are told wonderful things concerning his austere Life [B]. He mortified

(a) Bononi- am admodum adole- cens venit, ubi ob pau- peritatem Paedagogum gessit, Scrip- ptam filii- um Maiori- di Ubaldini erudiendo. Valterr. lib. 21.

(b) He is now known by the Name of Archidia- conus, which was that of the Ecclesiastical Dignity he was possessed of at Bologne. Donatus Pren. Canon. pag. 602.

(c) In prim. Sexti Decretal. apud Dujat. ibid. pag. 603.

(d) Panzi- rol. de cla- ris legum Interpret. lib. 3. cap. 19.

[A] Was the Son of a Priest.] All Authors agree, that the Father of John Andreas was a Priest, but not that he was so, when he begot this Child. "Patrem constat Presbyterum fuisse; an filium ante, an post Sacerdotium genuerit, incertum. --- It is certain, that his Father was a Priest, but uncertain whether he begot his Son before, or after, his Priesthood." Thus Mr Dujat speaks of him (1), after having read Panzirus, who positively asserts, that John Andreas was born, before his Father was a Priest. "Is ex Andrea Presbytero, antequam Sacerdos fieret, & matre nomine Novella, genitus (2)." It is a Sign Mr Dujat laid no great Stress on Panzirus's Decision of the Matter; and for what Reason, I desire to know, should the latter be credited in it, rather than Volaterran, who has affirmed the quite contrary? "Joannes Andreas patre Andrea Presbytero & matre concubina natus, apud Mugellum agri Florentini Oppidum, juris scientia virtutibusque aliis natalium pudorem contexit (3). — John Andreas, Son of John Andreas, a Priest, and his Concubine, born at Mugello, near Florence, covered the meanness of his Birth by his Knowledge of the Law, and his other Virtues." He has expressly said, that John Andreas was the Son of a Concubinary Priest; and no one will venture to affirm, that Novella was ever married to the Father of John Andreas. It is, therefore, past doubt, that our celebrated Canonist was, at least, born, like Erasmus, out of lawful Marriage, of a Father, who was a Priest. We must not imagine, that Forster says he was not ordained a Priest, 'till after he had begot this Child. He only means, that the Father of John Andreas was a Priest, in the Place, where he was born. "Patre Joanne Andrea, cive initio, deinde Presbytero Mugellano; natus est (4). --- Son of John

(1) Prenot. Canon. pag. 604.

(2) De clari- legum interpret. lib. 3. cap. 19. init.

(3) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. 81.

(4) Forst. Histor. Juris Civil. lib. 3. cap. 26.

"Andreas, first a Citizen, afterwards a Priest, of Mugello."

[B] We are told wonderful Things concerning his austere Life.] The following Commentary has been communicated to me (5): I make no Alteration in it. "What you observe concerning the austere Life of John Andreas, is attested by good Authors. "But if the Story, which Poggius tells of him, in his Facetiae be true, there is Reason to believe, that afterwards this Doctor degenerated very much from his former Continence. Joannem Andream, says Poggius, Doctorem Bononiensem, cujus fama admodum vulgata est, subagitantem ancillam domestice uxore deprehendit. Re infusa suspensa mulier in virum versa: ubi nunc, ait, Joannes, est sapientia vestra? Ille nil amplius locutus, in vulva istius, respondit: loco admodum sapientie accommodato." Perhaps the Translation of these Words into French Verse will not be unacceptable to the Reader.

(5) Fy Mr de la Memoire.

Jean dit André, fameux docteur és loix,
Fut pris un jour au péché d'amourette:
Il accolloit une jeune soubrette.
Sa femme vint, fit un signe de croix.
Ho ho, dit-elle, est-ce vous? non je pense;
Vous, dont par tout on vante la prudence.
Qu'est devenu cet esprit si subtil?
Le bon André, poursuivant son negoce,
Honteux pourtant: ma foi, repondit-il,
Prudence, esprit, tout gît dans cette fosse.

In English, thus,

A learned

tified his Body with Fasting and Prayers, and slept every Night, for twenty Years together, on the hard Ground, wrapped in a Bear's Skin (e). He pretended, that he had obtained several things by his Prayers (f). He married a Woman called Milantia, whom he mentions sometimes in his Writings; and confesses, that he had learned several things of her; and, among others, that, if Names were to be sold, Fathers and Mothers ought to buy fine ones for their Children (g). I forgot to tell you, that his Mother's Name was Novella, and that he had a Daughter of the same Name, who was so learned, that she read Lectures for him [C], when he had no leisure to mount the Chair. It was out of Love to his Mother and Daughter, that he intitled his Commentary on the Decretals of Gregory IX, Novellæ (b). He had a Natural Son, whose Name was Baniconcius, who published some Books [D]; and it is said, that, having lost him, he adopted John Calderini, a learned Canonist, and married him to his Daughter Novella [E]. He had another Daughter, whom he married to a celebrated Professor of the Canon Law at Bologne. Her Name was Betina; and she died at Padua, in the Year 1355 (i), whither her Husband had been invited, to accept of the like Professorship. Andreas died of the Plague at Bologne, in the Year 1348, after he had been Forty five Years Professor, and was buried in the Church

(e) Volaterr. lib. 21. pag. 781.

(f) Apud Panzirol. ubi supra.

(g) In cap. cum secundum, Ex. travag. de prebend.

(b) Panzirol. de claris Legum Interpret. lib. 3. cap. 19.

(i) His Epitaph is to be seen in Panzirolus, ubi supra.

*A learned Canonist, of Fame,
(John Andreas was the Doctor's Name)
Once on a time in bed was laid,
Solacing it with Madam's Maid.
When Chance, That Sower of all Strife, Brought in, curst Luck! the Doctor's Wife.
And is it you, the Lady cries?
Blest me, I scarce can trust my Eyes.
Inconstant Wretch, of shameless Brow!
Where is your boasted Wisdom now?
'Tis here, the Doctor, blushing, cries,
'Tis here, dear Wife! my Wisdom lies;
A proper Place (the Place he shows)
For wearied Wisdom to repose.*

Since it is agreed, on all Hands, that John Andreas had a Bastard, this Story might be true at the bottom, and perhaps his Wife surprized him with the Mother of Baniconcius: If it be so, we may place him in the List of the Menagiana (6).

(6) See the Remark [E] on the Ad teile BRISSEIS.

[C] His Daughter read Lectures for him.] I have met with this Particular, not in Forster, or Panzirrolus, or Mr Doujat; but in the Cîte des Dames, written by Christina de Pise. This Book was printed at Paris, in the Year 1536, and composed in the Reign of Charles VI. The following Passage is taken from it. "To speak of the late times, without quoting ancient Histories, about sixty Years ago John Andreas, a noted Civilian at Bologne, did not think there was any harm in a Woman's having some Learning. For he took care, that his handsome Daughter Novella, whom he was very fond of, should be bred a Scholar; and so well versed was she in the Knowledge of the Law, that, when he had not leisure to read Lectures to his Scholars, he sent his Daughter Novella, to supply his Place in the Schools; and, to prevent her Beauty from diverting the Thoughts of the Auditors, a little Curtain was drawn before her. Thus she sometimes assisted her Father, who loved her so well, that, to preserve the Memory of her, he wrote a famous Book of Law, which he intitled Novella, it being the Name of his Daughter (7)." It is strange, that a Particular of this Nature, so singular and rare, should not be found in all the Authors, who mention John Andreas, or at least in most of them; and I confess this inclines me to doubt of the Truth of it. But, be that as it will, it may occasion a diverting Problem, viz. Whether this Lady promoted, or retarded, the Improvement of her Hearers, by hiding her handsome Face. An hundred things may be said pro and con. I am apt to think the Scholars would have amused themselves so much with her Beauty, as to be little attentive to her Lectures; but, on the other hand, what proceeds from a fine Mouth, is much more taking, and persuasive; and some Women, though charmed with the good Air and Mein of a Preacher, remember, nevertheless, what he says. What an ancient Poet says of Virtue, that it is more pleasing in a beautiful Body, Gratior & pulchro veniens in corpore virtus (8); may be applied to Learning. However it be, if the Daughter of the Professor, John Andreas, drew a Curtain between her and

(7) Cite de Dames de Christine de Pise, part 2. cap. 38.

(8) Virgil, Aen. lib. 5. ver. 344.

her Hearers, least the Darts of her Beauty should wound their Hearts, and interrupt their Attention, she made them a considerable Sacrifice, which they would willingly have dispensed with. They would, probably, have been very well pleased to see her; and she, on her part, would not have been displeased to be seen, had she not preferred their Improvement to her own Satisfaction. This is a probable and natural Account; since she was not one of those learned Women, who have reason to say, with Sappho,

Si mihi difficilis formam natura negavit,
Ingenio formæ damna rependo meæ (9).

(9) Ovidius Epist. Sapph. ver. 31.

To me what Nature has in Charms deny'd,
Is well by Wit's more lasting Charms supply'd.

P O P E.

[D] Baniconcius, who published some Books.] It was the Name of his Grandfather. The Books he published are, De privilegiis & immunitate Clericorum: De accusationibus & inquisitionibus: De appellationibus. This I find in Panzirrolus.

[E] And married him to his Daughter Novella.] The ancient practice of Adoption would not have permitted such a Marriage (10): And perhaps the Adoption of Calderini is only to be understood in this Sense, that John Andreas made him his Son-in-law. It is said, that Calderini frequently consulted his Wife. Is conjugem velut eruditus parentibus (Milentia, the Wife of John Andreas, was a learned Woman) ortam prudentem natum sepe ob sapientiam consuleret consueverat (11). But, if we may judge of other Points, in which he had recourse to this domestic Oracle, by that which Calderini has mentioned, we shall find nothing, which comes up to the Character Christina de Pise gives us of Novella; and most Women may be said to be as knowing, as she was. The Fact is this. "Calderini asked his Wife, one Day, whether he, who gives an Invitation, ought to send to the Persons invited, when the Hour of Eating is come?" She answered, that this ought to be done to Ladies and Strangers, but not to others, unless they "happen to be Persons of Importance." Francis Hotomanus tells us this Story in his ludicrous Way. Vtrum enimvero medius fidius, says he (12), nequaquam inficiandum aut dubitandum est quin mulieres concilium dare possint, quando quidem (ô dignam bisforiam & digito ligandam) refert Job. Calderinus Canonist. famosissimus, quod semel consuluit suam uxorem, an convicator teneatur hora prandii mittere ad conivas, at veniant; quæ sapienter & tanquam altera Sybilla respondit, ad faminas & extraneos esse mittendum, qui se facile non ingerunt, sed non ad alios nisi essent graves persone. Joban. Calderin. in c. ult. de renunt. & post eum Agid. Bell. in c. quidam col. 3. vers. tertio quæro. eo. ti. & Panormit. in c. cum inter universas in fin. de elect. & de hoc etiam per Collect. in cap. à crapula, Ext. de vit. & bon. cleric. & Bal. in præm. Gregor. col. 5. vers. quære, quidam scholaris. What most inclines me to believe, that Calderini was married to a Daughter of John Andreas, is, that one John Calderini, who caused the Tomb of John Andreas to be repaired, in the Year 1501, calls him his fourth Grand-Father, his Atacus; and says, that one John Calderini was his

(10) Octavianus Claudius, antequam Neroni traderet, ne sororem in suam ducere videretur, Claudii & ipse filius adoptivus, in aliam familiam adoptandam dedit. — before he gave Octavia in marriage to Nero, lest it should seem as if he married his Sister, being himself etc adopted Son of Claudius, gave her to be first adopted into another Family. Torrensius in Sueton. Claudii, cap. 3. ex Xiphil. & Zonara.

(11) Panzirol. lib. 3. cap. 21.

(12) Adversus Italogillum Martellii, pag. 214.

Church of the Dominicans. He wrote many Books [F]. Extravagant Commendations have been bestowed upon him [G]; but he is said to have been an egregious Plagiary [H]. We are told, that the excessive Smallness of his Stature made the Cardinals laugh heartily [I], at the Audience, which Boniface VIII. gave him in a full Consistory. It is said, that he foretold his Death a Year before it happened (k).

(h) Ex Panzirolo. ibid.

(i) See Panzirol. lib. 3. cap. 19.

his third Grand-Father, his Aboas (13). I question whether the Adoption of these latter Ages has laid down such Degrees of Kindred, to the fifth Generation. And I scarce think, that, if Mademoiselle de Gournai had left a Family, her Descendants would, at this Day, simply and absolutely stile themselves, in a public Inscription, the Grand-Children, or Great-Grand-Children, of Michael de Montagne.

[F] He wrote many Books. His first Work was a Gloss on the sixth Book of the Decretals. He was very young, when he composed it; afterwards he revised, and enlarged it. He wrote also some Glosses on the Clementines, and afterwards a Commentary on the Decretals, which he entituled Novelle, for the Reason above-mentioned. He published a Commentary, In regulas Sexti, which he entituled Mercuriales; either because he wrote it on Wednesdays, or because he inserted his Wednesdays Disputations in it. He enlarged the Speculum of Durandus, in the Year 1347. I omit some other Treatises, which he published. It is pity he followed so closely the Method of the Pyrrhonists; for he very strongly confirmed his own Opinion, when he thought proper; but this he very seldom did; he chose rather to report the Sentiments of others, and to leave his Readers in the middle of a Controversy (14).

[G] Extravagant Commendations have been bestowed upon him. In the Epitaph of his Daughter Betina, he is called Archidoctor Decretorum — Arch-doctor of the Decretals; in his own Epitaph, he is stiled Rabbi Doctorem, lux, censor, normaque morum. — The Rabbi of the Doctors, the Light, Censor, and Rule of Manners. It is reported, that Pope Boniface VIII. called him Lumen Mundi — — — — — the Light of the World (15).

[H] He is said to have been an egregious Plagiary. Most of his Additions to the Speculum of Durandus were taken, Word for Word, out of a Work of Oldradus (16); inasmuch, that Baldus, who discovered it, could not forbear calling him a notorious Pisifer of other Men's Works, insignis alienorum fur (17). This was the more inexcusable, because, in these very Additions, he proves Durandus to have been a great Plagiary (18). He is accused likewise of having stolen the Treatise De Sponsalibus ac Matrimonii, composed by John Anguissola of Cesena (19).

[I] The excessive Smallness of his Stature made the Cardinals laugh heartily. Some Decretals, they say, being suspected of Falsity, the University of Bohlogne deputed James de Castello, a little ugly Man, to Boniface VIII. He came into the Consistory, attended by a great many Persons. The Pope received him very graciously; and, thinking that he was still upon his Knees, ordered him, three times successively, to rise (20). The Deputy was so ashamed, that he had not a Word to say. A Cardinal said, That he was another Zacchus; which raised a general Laugh. Many Writers affirm, that it was not Castello, but our Andreas, a Man of small Stature, and very ugly, who met with this Adventure (21).

(15) Id. ib.

(16) Intinled Confilia.

(17) Panzirol. de Claz. Leg. Interp. lib. 3. c. 19.

(18) See Thomafius, de Plagio Literario, n. 359, 414.

(19) Panzirol. ubi supra. Donatus Prens. Conon. p. 604.

(20) See Remark [I] of the Arch-ALBERTUS (MAGNUS).

(21) Panzirol. ubi sup.

(14) Ex Panzirolo, ubi supra.

(a) The Presbyter's Name was Marques A. de laza.

ANDREAS (JOHN), Author of a Book, intituled The Sect of Mahomet demolished, was born a Mahometan, at Xativa, in the Kingdom of Valencia, and succeeded his Father in the Dignity of Alfauqui, in the same Town. He was converted to the Christian Faith, by a Sermon, which he heard in the Great Church of Valencia, on the Day of the Assumption of the Blessed Virgin, in 1488 (a). He demanded Baptism, and, remembering the Call of St John and St Andrew, he obtained the Name of John-Andrew, or Andreas. "Having received Holy Orders (says he) (b), "and, from an Alfauqui, and Slave of Lucifer, become a Priest and Minister of "CHRIST, I began, like St Paul, to preach and publish the contrary to what I "had falsely believed and affirmed; and, by the Assistance of the most high Lord, "first converted, and led to Salvation, several Souls, among the unbelieving Moors, "who would otherwise have lost them in Hell, under the Power of Lucifer. After "which I was invited by the most Catholic Princes, King Ferdinand and Queen "Isabella, to come and preach to the Moors of the Kingdom of Granada, which "they had conquered. By my preaching, and the Will of GOD (who would have "it so) a prodigious Number of Moors renounced Mahomet, and were converted "to CHRIST. A little after I was created a Canon by their Bounty, and was "again invited by the most Christian Queen Isabella, to come into Arragon, and "endeavour the Conversion of the Moors of that Kingdom; who, to the great Con- "tempt and Dishonour of our crucified Saviour, and the Peril of the Christian "Princes, persevere to this day in their Error; but this most pious Intention of Her "Highness was prevented, by her Death, from taking Effect." He adds, that, to employ his leisure Hours, he translated, out of Arabic into the Language of Arragon, the whole Law of the Moors, to wit, The Koran, and it's Glosses, and the Five Books of Suna. He did this at the Command of Martin Garcia, Bishop of Barcelona, and Inquisitor of Arragon (c). After he had finished this Undertaking, he wrote the Work, which I mentioned at the beginning [A]; and which has been thought tolerably good [B].

(b) John Andreas's Preface to The Sect of Mahomet demolished, fol. 3. verso.

(c) Taken from the same Preface. —

[A] The Work, which I mentioned at the Beginning. I mean the Book, entituled, The Sect of Mahomet demolished. It contains twelve Chapters; in which the Author has collected The fabulous Inventions, Impossibilities, Follies, Absurdities, Inconsistencies, Impossibilities, Lies, and Contradictions, which the Impostor Mahomet, to deceive the ignorant People, scattered up and down in the Books of the Sect; particularly in The Koran; which, he tells us, was revealed to him, in one Night, by an Angel, in the City of Mecca; though, upon the other Occasions, he affirmed, in Contradiction to himself, that he was twenty Years in composing it; which aforesaid Work I have intituled, The Sect of Mahomet demolished (1). He informs us (2), that he composed this Work, so the end, that Christians, not only the Wise and Understanding, but the Simple and Ignorant likewise, may, on the one side, laugh at such Follies and Absurdities, and, on the other side, express their Concern for the Blindness and Perdition of this People.

This Work, which was first published in Spanish, has been translated into several Languages; particularly into French, by Guy de la Boderie, from the Italian; and was published at Paris, for Martin le June, in the Year 1574, in 8vo.

[B] This Work — has been thought tolerably good. All the Writers against Mahometanism cite it frequently. Among others, see Hornbeck in his Disputatio de Muhammedismo (3); Hottinger, in his Historia Orientalis, and Samuel Schultetus, in his Ecclesia Muhammedana breviter delineata.

[A] Where

(3) It is part of his Summa Controuersiarum.

(1) John Andreas's Preface, fol. 4.

(2) Id.

ANDREAS (TOBIAS) Professor of History, and the Greek Tongue, at Groningen, was born at Braunfels, in the County of Solms, the Nineteenth of August 1604. His Father was Minister of the Count of Solms-Braunfels, and Overfeer of the Churches dependant on That Count. His Mother was the Daughter of John Piscator, a famous Professor of Divinity at Herborn, in the County of Nassau. He went through his School-Learning at Herborn; and, then, studied Philosophy, in the same Place, under the Direction of Alstedius, and his Uncle Piscator (a); after which, he went to Bremen, where he lived seven Years [A]. He was one of the most constant Attendants on the Lectures of Gerard de Neuville, a Physician, and a Philosopher; and, as he aspired to the Office of Teaching publicly, he prepared himself for it, by reading private Lectures in Philosophy. He returned to his own Country in the Year 1628; and, after a short Stay, he went to Groningen, being invited thither by his good Patron Henry Altingius. He read there, for some time, private Lectures in all Parts of Philosophy: After which Altingius gave him his Children to instruct; and, when they had no longer occasion for a Tutor, he procured him the same Employment with a Prince Palatine; this continued three Years, which he spent partly at Leyden, and partly at the Hague, in the Court of the Prince of Orange. In the Year 1634, he was invited to Groningen, to succeed James Gebhardus, who had been Professor of History, and the Greek Tongue (b). He discharged the Duties of this Employ with an extraordinary Application, till his Death, which happened the Seventeenth of October 1676 (c). He had been Library-Keeper to the University, and a great Friend of Des Cartes [B]; which he testified, both during the Life [C], and after the Death, of that Illustrious Philosopher [D]. He wrote some Books in his Vindication, as will appear in the Remarks. He married the Daughter of a Swede (d), who, among other things, was famous for his Charity towards those, who suffered for the sake of the Gospel.

(a) Son of the Professor of Divinity.

(b) See the Lives of the Professors of Groningen, pag. 124.

(c) Witte, Diar. Biograph.

(d) Lewis de Geer.

[A] Where he lived seven Years.] My Reader ought not to have believed this, if the Author of the Lives of the Professors of Groningen had not been more exact in this Calculation, than he is, as to the time, when Tobias Andreas was at Herborn. It is strange, that a Corrector of the Press should overlook such Errors in the Space of five or six Lines, though the Avocations of the Author hindered him from perceiving them. You will find, in the Life of our Andreas, that he went to Herborn, in the Year 1610 CXVIII; that he studied five Years, there, in the Schools, and one Year in Philosophy, and that he pursued the same Studies at Bremen, for seven Years; and that, afterwards, having taken a turn home, he came to Groningen, in the Year 1615 CXVIII. There is nothing written in Cyphers, the Errors, probably, were in the Copy. Paul Freberus has very innocently transcribed it (1), without perceiving any Error in the Calculation.

(1) Theat. Vincom II. Indr. pag. 2538.

THE EXCELLENCE of Indulgence towards him, who accused Des Cartes of Atheism.

(2) The Condemnation of Schoockius fell indirectly upon Voetius.

(3) See the Life of Des Cartes by M. Baillet, Tom. 2. p. 212. & seq. ad annum 1645.

(4) Tom. 3. of his Letters pag. 17. ap. Baillet, ubi supra, pag. 257.

[B] A great Friend of Des Cartes.] He heartily served him in his Law Suit with Martin Schoockius, Professor of Philosophy at Groningen. This Professor was prosecuted by Des Cartes for Scandal, in having publicly accused him of Atheism. Though Des Cartes had not seen our Andreas more than once in his Life, he recommended his Cause to him, perceiving, that he was very much in his Interest. The French Ambassador, Monf. de la Thuillerie, and Des Cartes's Friends acted on one Hand (2); the Enemies of Voetius, at Groningen, acted on the other; and by this means Des Cartes had Justice done him. His Accuser acknowledged his Innocence (3), and was thereupon acquitted; which was a scandalous Indulgence, and a bad Example: For, if they had made him suffer the Punishment of Retaliation, as he very well deserved, it would have restrained, in some measure, the boldness of those seditious Writers, who so readily, and so rashly, accuse so many honest Men of Atheism. "Des Cartes wrote, the Twenty sixth of May, 1645, to Mr Andreas, to thank him for his good Offices, and to desire him to return his most humble thanks to the Judges. Seeing how mildly his Adversary had been treated, though he deserved to be punished as a Calumniator — he nevertheless acknowledged, that the Judges had given him all the Satisfaction he desired, or could lawfully pretend to. For, said he (4), to the Magistrates of Utrecht, private Persons have no right to demand either the Death of their Enemies, or that they should suffer in their Honour or Estates. It is sufficient they are indemnified by the Judges. Any thing farther does not concern them, but the Public alone." The Text of my Remark necessarily obliging me to mention the good Offices done by Andreas to Des Cartes; I believed the Reader would be pleased to know, in general, the Issue of this Affair, without turning to another Page.

[C] Which he testified during the Life, &c.] We have just seen a Proof of this. I add, that he favoured Des Cartes's Disciples, and procured him as many Followers as he could. It was by his Advice, that Claubergius became a Cartesian (5); which was a glorious and useful Victory for the whole Party.

(5) Clauberg. Epist. Dedicat. Logice.

[D] And after the Death of that illustrious Philosopher.] He wrote in his Defence, against a Professor of Leyden, whose Name was Reuvius, and published a vigorous Reply, in the Year 1653, entitled, Methodi Cartesianæ assertio opposita Jacobii Revii — Praef. Methodi Cartesianæ considerationi Theologicæ. The second Part of this Answer came out the following Year. He wrote also, in the Year 1653, against Mr Regius, in Vindication of the Remarks, which Des Cartes had made on a Programma, containing an Explication of the human Mind (6). He taught, in his own House, the Cartesian Philosophy, though his Profession did not require it of him, and even when Age had very much impaired his Strength. Mr Des Marets informed me of these Particulars, on account of a Swiss Student in Divinity, who durst not attend the Philosophical Lectures of Andreas, for fear it should be known in his own Country, and should prove an Obstacle to his Promotion to the Ministry. "Nec desuit unus ex illis, cujus nomini parco, bene alias doctus, & in Philosophiam Cartesianam valde propensus, qui, dum hic esset, professus est, non audere se frequentare Collegia Cartesianæ Cl. Tobiae Andree (qui, Cilenicus licet, quod summopere doleo, Deumque venero ut illi suas vires restituat, ea solet habere in superpondium suæ professionis, nec enim ad philosophiam, sed ad linguam Græcæ & Historias est vocatus) ne hoc in sua patria recitetur, & suæ promotioni obesse (7). — Nor was there wanting one, among them, whose Name I forbear to mention; a Man, otherwise, of good Learning; who, during his abode here, declared, that he durst not frequent the Cartesian School of Tobias Andreas, lest it should be known in his own Country, and binder his Promotion; I mean the Cartesian School of That Andreas; who, tho' almost Bed-ridden (which I am very much concerned for, and beg of God to restore him to his Strength) yet continues to teach a Science, over and above his Profession; which requires of him a Knowledge of History, and the Greek Tongue, not of Philosophy."

(6) This Piece is intitled, Brevi Replicatio brevi Expositioni Mentis Humanæ Dn. Henrici Regii reposita.

(7) Maresius, in Justicio de Theologia pacifica Witichii, printed in 1671.

(a) See the Epidemics of Pavia as called.

(b) See the Epic Dedicatory of the second Part of her Poems.

(c) See Remark [A].

(d) See the Verses written in her Praise, prefixed to her Poems.

ANDREINI (ISABELLA) born at Padua, was, towards the end of the XVth and beginning of the XVIIIth Century, one of the best Actresses of Italy. This was not the only Qualification, for which she was admired; she was likewise a compleat Poetess. This we learn, not only from the Praises, which many learned Men, and great Wits, have bestowed upon her, (tho' this would be but a doubtful Proof) but also by the Works, which she published. The Intensi (a) of Pavia thought it an Honour to them to admit her into their Society; and, to testify her Acknowledgment, she never forgot, among her Titles, That of Academica Intensa; but, without doubt, she looked upon it as an Honour done to her. Her Titles were, Isabella Andreini, Comica Gelofo, Academica Intensa, detta l'Accesa. In one thing she excelled the most excellent Actresses; for she was a beautiful Woman; so that, on the Stage, she charmed, at once, the Eyes and Ears of the Audience [A]. Cardinal Cinibio Aldobrandini, Nephew to Clement VIII., had a great Esteem for her, as appears by many Poems, which she composed for him, and by the Epistle Dedicatory of her Works. She came into France, and was graciously received by their Majesties, and Persons of the first Quality at Court (b). She composed many Sonnets in their Praise, which are to be seen in the second Part of her Poems. She died, at Lyons, the Tenth of June 1604, of a Miscarriage, in the Forty second Year of her Age. Her Husband, Francis ANDREINI, buried her in the same City; and honoured her with an Epitaph [B], which imports that she was very pious and chaste. Since That, he discovered, how greatly he regretted [C], and esteemed her. The Death of this excellent Actress set all Parnassus in Tears. Nothing but Funeral Elegies appeared, in Latin and Italian. Many of them were prefixed to her Poems, in the Edition of Milan, 1605. Nor did they forget the ingenious Inscription, made in her Praise, whilst she was still alive, by Erycius Puteanus, at that Time Professor at Milan (c). Besides her Sonnets, Madrigals, Songs, and Eclogues, there is a Pastoral of her Composition, intitled Myrtilla. There are extant likewise some of her Letters, which were printed at Venice, in the Year 1610. She sung well, and play'd admirably on several Instruments; she was not ignorant of Philosophy (d), and understood French and Spanish.

[A] She charmed, at once, the Eyes and Ears of the Audience.] This supplied Flatterers with many Thoughts. These Words were wrote under her Picture, "Hoc Histricæ eloquentiæ caput, lector admira-
" ris? quid si auditor fies? — Do you admire,
" Reader, this Head of Theatrical Eloquence? What " would you have done, had you been her Hearer?"
The Antiticks and Witticisms of Erycius Puteanus turn chiefly upon this.

Hanc vides, & hanc audis;
Tu disputa, Argus esse malis, ut videas,
An Midas, ut audias.
Tantum enim sermonem vultus,
Quantum sermo vultum commendat.
Quorum alterutro æterna esse potuisset,
Cum vultum omnibus simulacris emendatorem,
Et sermonem omni Suada venustiore possidet.

You see her; and you hear her;
Consider now, whether you would be an Argus, to see,
Or a Midas, to hear.
For her Looks as much recommend her Voice,
As her Voice her Looks.
Either of which might have rendered her Immortal;
Since no Painting can equal the Charms of her Face;
No Music the Harmony of her Voice.

[B] Her Husband — honoured her with an Epitaph.] If it be but to undeceive those, who talk so much of the Rigour of the Church, in regard to the Burial of Players in Holy Ground, I shall copy the Epitaph of Isabella Andreini, in which her Profession, as an Actress, is mentioned next to her Hopes of the Resurrection

D. O. M.

Isabella Andreina, Patavina, mulier magna virtute prædita, honestatis ornamentum, maritalique pudicitie decus, ore facunda, mente secunda, religiosa, pia, Musis amica, & artis Scenicæ caput, hic resurrectionem expectat.

Ob abortum obiit 4. Idus Junii 1604. annum ægens 42.

Franciscus Andreinus mœstissimus posuit.

Isabella Andreini, of Pavia, a Lady remarkable for Virtue, Honour, and Conjugal Fidelity, Eloquent, and Ingenious; Religious, and Devout; A Friend to the Muses, and Head of the Theatrical Art; lies Here, in expectation of the Resurrection.

She died of a Miscarriage, June 10, 1604.
Ætat. 42.

This Monument was erected by Francis Andreini, her afflicted Husband.

You will see, in the next Remark, how tenderly she was beloved by her Husband Francis Andreini.

[C] Since That, he discover'd, how much he regretted her.] The Preface to his Bravure del Capitano Spavento, informs us, that he was born at Pistoia, and that, whilst he was among the Company of Comedians Gelosi, he took great delight in acting the Part of a Braggadocio. He took upon him the Title of Captain Spavento da Vall' Inferna, Captain Bluff of the Infernal Vale; and left off personating the part of a Lover, in which he had chiefly signaliz'd himself: io lasciai di recitare la parte mia principale, laquella era quella dell' innamorato. This Company of Players acquir'd a surprizing Reputation; which began to decay after the Death of Isabella Andreini. Her Husband thought it best from a Player to turn Author; and, for the Subject of his Works, he made choice of That, in which he had distinguish'd himself on the Stage, I mean the Rhodomontades of a Captain Bluff. He publish'd some Dialogues, or Regionamenti, in Prose, with the Title above-mentioned. The 4th Edition, which I make use of, is of Venice, 1623, in Quarto; but, the Licence being dated in the Year 1607, the first Edition ought to be placed in That Year. The Complaints of the Shepherd Corinto alla desunta sua Filide (he calls her his Wife) & alla sua Boscareccia Sampogna, are prefixed to the Book. Never did Lover utter more tender Expressions, or complain more strongly of the inexorable Rigor of Destiny. They are Andreini's Lamentation for the Death of his Isabella; the following Words put it past doubt: "Finito che fu quel termine, e venuto meno il vi-
" vere d' Isabella mia dilettaissima consorte (la quale
" fu lume e splendore di quella virtuosa e honorata " compagnia) fui da molti amici miei consigliato à
" scrivere alcuna cosa e donarla alla stampa per lasciar
" qualche memoria di me, e per seguitare l'honorato
" grido della moglie mia, la quale haveva lasciato al
" mondo

(a) Preface to the Capitano Spavento.
 "mondo can-tanta sua gloria e con tanto suo honore
 "il suo bellissimo Canzoniero, la sua bellissima Mir-"tilla Favola Boscarea, e il compendio delle sue "bellissime lettere (1). — After the Death of my "dearest Canſor Iſabella (who was the Light and "Ornament of this ingenious and honourable Com"pany); I was adviſed by many of my Friends to
 "write, or publiſh ſomething, to perpetuate my Me"mory, and to emulate the Reputation of my Wife,

 "who, left behind her, ſo much to her Glory,
 "and ſo much to her Honour, her beautiful Col"lection of Sonnets, her Paſſional of Myrtilla, and "the Abridgement of her beautiful Letters." There is one John Baptiſt ANDREINI, who wrote a Tragedy, entituled La Florinda; printed at Milan, in the Year 1606.

ANDRELINUS (P. FAUSTUS) born at Forlì, in Italy, was a long time Profeſſor of Poetry in the Univerſity of Paris. Lewis XII. made him Poet Laureat (a). I know not, whether Queen Anne of Bretagne, or ſome other Queen, honoured him with her ſpecial Protection; but I am not ignorant, that Erasmus, who was intimately acquainted with him, ſays, that he was not only Laureat to the King, but to the Queen likewiſe [A]. He was not contented with Poetry; He wrote likewiſe ſome Moral, and Proverbial, Letters in Proſe, which have been printed ſeveral times. They were printed at Straſburg, in the Year 1517, and again, from the ſecond Reviſal of the Author, in the Year 1519 (b). Beatus Rhenanus prefixed a Preface to them, in which he greatly commends them [B]. John Arboreus, a Divine of Paris, wrote a Commentary upon them. Moſt of his Poetry conſiſts of Diſtichs; they have been printed, with a Commentary of Jodocus Badius Aſcenſius, being tranſlated, Verſe for Verſe, into French by a Poet of Paris, whoſe Name was Stephen Privé (c). This Tranſlation came out in 1604, and is only fit to bring the Original into Contempt. John Paradin had before turned (d) into French Tetraſtichs about an hundred Diſtichs, which Andrelinus ſcrib'd to John Ruſé, Treafurer-General of the Finances of King Charles VIII, to return him Thanks for a large and honourable Penſion, which that Prince cauſed to be paid him with extraordinary Care; and which did not deſerve the Contempt this pleaſant Poet deſigned to throw upon it, by leaving us room to think he was paid for his Verſes by the Quarter, or the Hundred (e) [C]. The Poems of Andrelinus have been infer'd in the firſt Volume of the Delights of the Italian Poets; tho' good Judges ſet no

(a) Faustus Andrelinus item, Poeta ſuaviſſimus, à Ludovico XII, Francie regis, laurea coronatus. Leon. Albert. Deſcript. Ital. pag. 478.

(b) Gefner. Biblioth. pag. 573.

(c) Baillet, Jugem. ſur les Poetes, Tom. 3. p. 121.

(d) In 1545.

(e) Baillet, ibid. who quotes Colletet, p. 118, 125, 126. Art. Poët.

[A] Erasmus, who knew him very intimately, ſays, that he was not only Laureat to the King, but to the Queen likewiſe. [B] Theſe are his Words. "Faustus Andrelinus Foroliviensis, poeta non ſolum laureatus, verum etiam regius, atque etiam, ſi diis placet, regineus, vetus congero meus, qui plus quam triginta jam annos in celeberrima Pariſiorum Academia poetice docet, in carmine quod de Pavimento Pariſienſi inſcripſit, adagionem (Syracuſana Menſa) in Anglos derivavit, Menſa, inquam, Britannia placet (1). — My old Friend, Fauſtus Andrelinus, of Forlì, Poet-Laureat both to the King and Queen, who has taught Poetry more than thirty Years in the famous Univerſity of Paris, in his Poem de Pariſienſi Pavimento, applies the Adage Syracuſana Menſa to the Engliſh, ſaying, Give me a Britiſh Table".

(1) Erasmus. Adag. 68. cent. 2. child. 2.

* A Syracuſian Table. The People of Syracuſe were remarkably luxuri-ous.

(2) Lib. 5. pag. 316. Edit. Londiniensis.

(3) Epist. 23. lib. 5. pag. 321.

(4) Epist. 10. lib. 5. pag. 315.

AUTHORS cenſured, who uſe the indefinite Term. See Remark [B] of the Article ABULFE-DA, n. 4.

There are, among Erasmus's Letters (2), two or three Billets, which Andrelinus wrote to him, in ſuch a Laconick Style, that Brutus's Letters, if compar'd with them, would paſs for long ones. Erasmus, who anſwer'd him in the ſame Style, is ſomewhat more diſcuſe, when he deſires him to promote the Sale of his Adagies (3); and when he deſcribes the Pleaſures of England, to induce him to take a Journey into that Country (4). I ſhall, by the way, take notice of an ill Cuſtom, which prevails among Authors, of denoting the time, when they write, by ſuch general Words only as, Nunc, jam, &c. whereas they ought preciſely to mark the Year; for, beſides that ſome Books take up an Author ſeveral Years, or are not publiſh'd till a long time after they are finiſh'd, are there not many printed ſeveral times? How, then, can a Reader know, at what time a Book was written, when he meets only with theſe Words, hoc anno, nunc, and the like? Erasmus ſpeaks of Andrelinus as one, who was then alive, and had taught Poetry at Paris, for the ſpace of 30 Years. This he ſays, in a Book printed in 1546; there is no Date to the Preface; but the Epistle Dedicatory is dated the 13th of Auguſt 1528. Wou'd not this induce one to believe, that Andrelinus was alive in the Year 1528? and muſt we not infer from hence, that the greateſt Men, when they reviſe their Works for a new Edition, leave a great many things in them, which ceaſe to be true? I have obſerved this Fault in the laſt Edition of the large Hiſtory of Mezerai.

[B] Beatus Rhenanus — greatly commends them.] Theſe are Gefner's Words. "Beatus Rhenanus, in præſatione, commendat has epistolâs tanquam eruditâs, lepidâs, & utiles; "eſt enim hic Author (inquit) in nonnullis opusculis genuino poetarum more liſticiuſculus ſit, hic tamen integrum ac mo-

"deſtum oratorem agit (5). — Beatus Rhenanus, in "his Preface, commends theſe Epistles, as being learn- "ed, entertaining, and uſeful. For "Tho' this Au- "thor (ſays he) like other Poets, is a little too obſcure, "in ſome of his Works; yet here he aſſumes the per- "fect and modeſt Orator.

(c) Gefn. in Biblioth. fol. 573.

[C] By leaving us room to think, he was paid for his Verſes by the Quarter or the Hundred.] M. Baillet proves it by theſe four Verſes, tranſlated from the Latin of Andrelinus, by Paradin (6).

(6) Jugem. of the Poets, Tom. 3. p. 122.

Croiffez mes vers, foyez en plus grand nombre,
 Car c'eſt aux frais & ſalaries du Roi.
 Seure richeſſe, empechant tout encombre,
 Exige vers en copieux arroi.

A freſh Recruit, my Muſe, of Numbers bring;
 'Tis at a Monarch's ſole Expence you ſing.
 The ſure Reward, which bids each Care retire,
 With copious Fewel feeds the Poet's Fire.

We meet with a remarkable Inſtance in the Tenth Eclogue of Andrelinus; I mean of a Poet, who, far from complaining of the Ingratitude of the Age, or finding fault with the Muſes for not taking care to maintain thoſe, who engage in their Service, acknowledges that he had a large Penſion, and that, when he recited his Poem on the Conqueſt of Naples, before Charles VIII, that Prince preſented him with a Bag of Money, which he had much a-do to carry upon his Shoulders.

Dum ſtupro totus viſu deſixus in iſto,
 Jupiter ecce venit magno ſtipatus honore,
 Ipſe olim vultus inter nutritus agreſtes.
 Admiror primo aſpectu; mox poplite flexo
 Ante ipſum quæſita Jovem modulamina fundo;
 Scilicet ut bello claram expugnâvit aperto
 Parthenopem, patrios victorque redivit in agros, Quamvis Heſperio vetitus foret orbe reſgreſſus.
 Neſcio qua noſtri captus dulcedine cantus
 Ipſe fuit, fulvi ſacrum donavit & æris;
 Vix iſtis delatum humeris, cunctoſque per annos
 Penſio larga datur, qualem non lentus habebat
 Tityrus umbroſis reſonans ſua gaudia ſylvia.

Whilst on this Sight, with fixt Regard, I gaze, See Jupiter in ſplendid Pomp appear;

Himſelf

(f) Morhof.
Polyhist.
pag. 258.

no great Value on them [D]. His Death is placed in the Year 1518 [E]. The Letters, which he wrote, by way of Proverbs, were thought worthy of a new Impression at Helmstadt, in the Year 1662, after the Edition of Cologne of the Year 1509 (f). The Morals of this Author, tho' none of the best, were not taken notice of, because he was an Ornament to the University of Paris. He was so happy, that the Liberty he took of offending the Divines brought him into no Trouble. Erasmus informs us of these Particulars [F].

Note, That I have left this whole Article, in this Edition, just as it stood in the first, tho' I have been informed, that it stood in need of Correction in several Places. I thought it would be more modest to give the Corrections, which have been since imparted to me, by themselves [G]. You'll find them in the Remark [G].

Himself once conversant with Rustic Looks;

At first, in Admiration lost, I stand;

Then, on my Knee, present the Verse, required;

The Verse, which paints Parthenope's deſtrojd,

And from Hesperia † Charles's bleſt Return,

In vain forbidden, to his native Land.

Pleas'd with the Numbers, which his Conquests sung,

A Load of Gold the generous Prince bestow'd,

Too weighty for the sinking Bard to bear;

A Pension too, larger than what of old,

Reclin'd at Ease, gay Tityrus † enjoy'd,

Courting his Muſe beneath the Beachen Shade.

* Naples.

† Italy.

¶ VIRGIL, under the Character of TITYRUS.

[In this Poem, Andrelinus says, that the Brand (the Stigmata) of Charles VIII's Victories, appeared still imprinted on the Brows of the Italians. Brantome, who, instead of vera Stigmata, read vera Stemmata, makes this Poet say, that the Victories and warlike Actions of Charles VIII appeared on the Brows of the Italians, as so many Crowns or Laurels. See Brantome's Illustrious Frenchmen, Tom. 4. pag. 25. REM. CRIT.]

[D] God Judges set no great Value on them. Fausſus mentions three Authors, who abounded in Words without Meaning (7); the first is the Orator Anaximenes; the second is Longolius, who was likewise an Orator, and the third is the Poet Andrelinus. As to the first he says, that Theocritus of Cibies, seeing him about to make a Speech, cried out, A River of Words begins to flow with but a Drop of Sense. Ἀρχαίαι λίζων μιν πῶταμος, ὅς δὲ σαλαγμός. He lays, upon the Authority of Francis Luſſinus, that Constantin Lascaris passed the same Judgment upon Longolius; and that Andrelinus was still more liable to Censure, in whose Poems there was wanting but one Syllable, as Erasmus very ingeniously observed. This Syllable was νῦν, which signifies Sense, Understanding, Wit. If I knew where this Passage of Erasmus, so little agreeable to the great Compliments and Praises he bestows upon Andrelinus (8), is to be found, I would inform the Reader. I make no doubt, that the Judgment, which Julius Scaliger passed on the Poet Fausſus, relates to our Andrelinus, rather than Gerhardus Fausſus. "Fausſi facilitas, says he (9), "viventis in scribendo secundo plausu excepta est; "scholas tamen sapit illa juniorum, à qua nihil aliud "quam hoc ipsum expectas. . . . The Knack of "Writing, which Fausſus, when alive, was Master of, "was received with Favour and Applause; yet it savours of the Schools of Youth; from which you can expect nothing farther."

[E] His Death is placed in the Year 1518. I shall not cite König's Bibliothecque, nor the Letters of the learned Reineſius to Dauminius (10). I can produce a cotemporary Writer, who, in a Letter, dated the sixth of March, 1518, takes notice, that That Year had carried off several learned Men. "Hic annus "multos eximios viros tui similes absumpsit, Marcum Musurum Romæ, jam Archiepiscopum designatum, " & ante hunc Palcotum Canillum, Lutetie Fau- "rum immortalitate dignum (11). — Several great "Men, like yourself, have died this Year; particu- "larly, Marcus Musurus, Archbishop Eleſ, at Rome, "and, before him, Palcotus Camillus; at Paris, Fau- "flus, worthy of Immortality." It cannot be concluded, from these Words, that Andrelinus died in the Year 1518; for it is certain, that Musurus died in the Year 1517 (12).

[F] Erasmus informs us of these Particulars. The Reader will not be displeased to see the Original. "Parifensis Academicæ candorem ac civilitatem jam "olim sum admiratus, quæ tot annos Fausſum tulerit,

"nec tulerit solum, verum etiam aluerit exeveritque. "Cum Fausſum dico, multa tibi succurrunt quæ no- "lim literis committere. Quæ petulantia solius est "ille in Theologorum ordinem debacchari? Quam "non casta erat illius professio? Neque cuiquam ob- "secrum erat qualis esset vita. Tantum malorum "Galli doctrinæ hominis condonabant, quæ tamen "ultra mediocritatem non admodum erat progressa " (13). — I have long wondered at the Good nature "and Courtesy of the University of Paris, which bore, "so many Years, with Fausſus; and not only bore "with, but supported, and advanced, him. When "I mention Fausſus, many things occur to you (14), "which I avoid committing to Writing. How viru- "lently was he wont to twinge against the sacred "Order? How far from Chast was his Profession? "Nor was his manner of Life a Secret to any one. "The French, however, pardoned his bad Qualities, "in respect to his Learning, which yet did not very "far exceed the Bounds of Mediocrity." You may ob- serve, that Erasmus's Letters to Andrelinus, and those he wrote to others concerning him, are written in a very different Strain. However, it cannot be denied, that he sometimes commends him in his Letters to other Persons (15).

[G] Give the Corrections, which have been imparted to me, by themselves. The following Remarks were communicated to me by Monſ. de la Monnoie. "I. Instead of P. Fausſus, it should be Publius Fausſus, at length; least any one should think that P. signifies Petrus, Paulus, or some such other Christian Name. It is probable, that Fausſus assumed the Name of Publius at Rome, in imitation of those Academicians, great Lovers of Antiquity, of whom Pomponius Laetus was the head. II. It ought not to be said, in a Dictionary, that Fausſus was only Professor of Poetry in the University of Paris. He taught, there, not only Poetry, but Rhetoric, and the Doctrine of the Sphere, and even explained the Psalms of David. III. It was at Rome, long before the Reign of Lewis XII, that Fausſus, who was not then Twenty two Years of Age, carried the Laurel (16). His Love Verses divided into four Books, entitled, Livia, which was his Mistress's Name, appeared so fine to the Roman Academy, that they adjudged him the Prize of the Latin Elegy; which was the Reason why, when he printed his Livia in 4to, at Paris, in the Year 1490, and his three Books of Elegies, four Years after, in the same City, he styled himself Poëta Laureatus, and afterwards Regius, and Regineus, with respect to Charles VIII, Lewis XII, and Queen Anne. IV. To find the thirty Years that Fausſus was Professor at Paris, we must suppose, that Erasmus made this Computation in the Year 1517. By this means we go back as far as 1487, at which Time, or thereabout, Fausſus settled at Paris. This Chronology is so much the more certain, because there was an Edition of Erasmus's Adagies (17), in 1517, which he mentions in the Chronicæ as inserted. V. Fausſus did not compose above two hundred Distichs, and consequently they were but a very small part of his Poems; for, besides the four Books of his Love Verses, and the three Books of Miscellaneous Elegies, which I have mentioned, there are twelve Eclogues of his writing, printed in 8vo, in the Year 1546, in the Collection of Thirty eight Bucolic Poets, published by Oporinus. Fausſus promised several other Pieces in Prose and in Verse; Ten moral Satires; an hundred Epistles; and the Christian Advent; (which, perhaps, is the same with what he calls, in another place, a Treatise of the true Religion;) a Dialogue on the Sphere; and Observations on the Latin Tongue."

(13) Erasmus.
Epist. 20.
lib. 21. pag.
1090.

(14) He writes to Lan- dovicum Vares.

(15) See Remark [E].

(16) This concerns Le- ander Albertus, whom
I have quoted.

(17) Eras-
mus's Fausſus, as I have observed in the Remark [A] has in this that he did not alter the Chronology, in the last Edition.

(8) See the 2nd Letter of the 1st Book of Erasmus.

(9) Jul. Caſſ.
Scalig. de Poët. l. 6.
pag. 266.
See Baillet,
ubi supra.

(11) Eraſm.
Epist. 20.
l. 1. ad Pe-
trum Barbi-
rum. See also Epist.
24. lib. 2.

(12) See the Remarks in
lib. 1. d.

I should certainly have supplied the Defects of my Article of ANDRELINUS, if I had had the Works of this Author; but, not being able to procure them, I was obliged to follow those, who have mentioned him, without consulting them; and thus the Blind lead the Blind. It is a great Misfortune, not to have all the necessary Books, in the Composition of such a Dictionary, as this; but it is a Misfortune, I cannot avoid, in the Situation I am at present in.

ANDRINOPE, or ADRIANOPE, a City of Thrace. It owes its Name to the Madness of the Emperor Hadrian. Moreri mentions this; but very confusedly [A]. It has been said, that this Town was built by Orestes, and bore his Name [B]. It was also called Uscudama (a). The two Latin Verses, quoted by Moreri, serve only to shew, that he was a careless Writer [C]. I omit what he further says of Andrinople: The Reader may have Recourse to his Dictionary.

(a) See the Remark [C].

[A] Moreri mentions this; but very confusedly. These are his Words. "Some Pagan Authors say, that this Prince, having been cured there of a Dropsy, by invoking the mad Orestes, took delight in beautifying this City." These Pagan Authors are not Spartian, and Ammianus Marcellinus, the two cited by Moreri; and I am very much mistaken, if we must not reduce them to Ælius Lampridius alone. Let us see then how the latter expresses himself. "Et Orestam quidem urbem Adrianus suo nomini vindicari iussit, eo tempore quo furore cooperat laborare, ut ex responso quum ei dictum esset ut in sacrosi aliquid domum vel nomen irreperet. Nam ex eo emollitum infaniam ferunt, per quam multos fenatores occidi iusserat (1)." If we compare these Words with Those of Moreri; we shall find him guilty of three, or four, gross Mistakes. I. It is not true, that Hadrian was cured in the City of Andrinople. II. It is not true, that his Distemper was a Dropsy. III. It is not true, that he recovered his Health, by invoking Orestes. IV. It is not true, that he took delight in beautifying This City, after his Recovery. Lampridius only says, "That Hadrian, being fallen into a Phrenzy, commanded the City Orestia to be called by his Name, in Obedience to an Oracle, which advised him to seize on the House, or Name, of some Mad-Man;" and we are told, that by this Means his Fits of Madness went off.

(7) Lampridius, in Antonino Hellagabalus, pag. 809.

[B] That it was founded by Orestes, and bore his Name. I shall cite only Lampridius for this. "Et Orestem quidem ferunt, says he (2), non unum simulachrum Dianæ, nec uno in loco posuisse, sed multa in multis. Postquam se apud tria flumina circa Hebrum ex responso purificavit, etiam Orestam condidit civitatem, quam sæpe cruciari hominum sanguine necesse est. Et Orestam quidem urbem Adrianus suo nomini vindicari iussit, &c. --- They say likewise, that Orestes erected, not one Statue alone of Diana, or in one Place only, but

(a) Id. ib.

"many in several. And after that, in Obedience to the Oracle, he had purified himself at three Streams, near Hebrus, he built, likewise, the City Orestia, which must frequently be polluted with human Blood. This City, Orestia, Hadrian ordered to be called by his own Name, &c." I have let down this Passage at length, to shew what City of Andrinople is here meant. The Emperor Hadrian gave his Name to several Towns at a great Distance from each other (3): But it is plain, that Lampridius meant That of Thrace; and that Orestes built it, where the Hebrus receives two other Rivers. Note, that Pinedo makes Lampridius say, that Hellogabalus built a Town near the Hebrus, which he called Orestia; and that, afterwards, Hadrian gave it his own Name (4). This is an Instance of the usual Distraction of Mind, from which the most learned Writers are not free.

(3) *Quum titulus in operibus non amaret, multas civitates Andrinopolis appellavit, ut ipsam Carthaginem & Athenarum partem. Spartianus in Adriano cap. 20. Sic liberius Orestia Thesauri Geographici cur."*

[C] The two Latin Verses, quoted by Moreri --- shew, that he was a careless Writer. These are his Words. "It is said to have been built, first of all, by Orestes, who called it Orestia; which Name was afterwards changed into That of Uscada or Uscudama."

Tandemque Uscudamæ mutato nomine præco Matricida suo de nomine dixit Orestam.

(4) Pinedo, in Steph. Byzant. pag. 211. n. 43.

At length the Parricide Orestes, changing it's ancient Name Uscudama, called it Orestia, after his own Name.

These two Verses prove quite the contrary to what Moreri produces them for. They evidently prove, that Orestes found This Town with the Name Uscudama; and that he afterwards changed it to his own. Ammianus Marcellinus, cited by Moreri, at Lib. 4. (5); informs us, in the fourth Chapter of the Twenty seventh Book, that Andrinople had been called Uscudama. Post hanc Æmimentus Hadrianopolim habet; quæ dicebatur Uscudama.

(5) The thirteen first Books of this History are lost.

ANDROMACHE, Wife of the Valiant Hector, was the Daughter of Ætion, King of Thebes in Cilicia (a). She was advantageously married on all accounts; for, besides that her Husband was accounted the Bulwark of his Country, and the greatest Support of the Throne, he proved very kind to her; and they say, that she was free from the Difficulties, which commonly attend the Wives of Great Heroes; I mean, that he ever preserved his Conjugal Fidelity towards her [A]. Euripides denies this; but, at the same Time, he informs us, that it did not in the least disturb the Happiness of this Lady; her Disposition being very easy and complaisant in this respect

(a) Homer, li. lib. 6. This Cilicia was not far from Troy.

[A] Hector ----- ever preserved his conjugal Fidelity towards her.] Andromache, in some Verses of Euripides, declares, that she loves the very Mistress of her Husband, to please him, and that she gave suck to his Bastards (1): The Scholiast upon this says, that Anaxicrates gave out, that Hector left behind him two legitimate Sons (2), who escaped from the Hands of the Greeks, and a Bastard (3), who was taken at Troy (4), but he pretends, that Euripides and Anaxicrates advance a Falshood; and maintains against them, that Hector never had a Bastard; and that it must be very incongruous to advance the contrary. Ovid represents Hector as a good Husband; who overlooked every thing, that was disagreeable, in his Wife.

(1) Euripides, in Andromach.

(2) Amphitruus, and Scamandrius.

(3) Called Palæteus.

(4) Anaxicrates, Argolicor. lib. 2.

(5) Ovidius, in Epist. Oenone, ad Parisem, ver. 107.

Felix Andromache, certo bene nupta marito!
Uxor ad exemplum fratris habenda sui (5).

Happy Andromache, who justly art
Possessed of a firm and loyal Heart.

A Faith like Hers Thou hast beheld in me,
And Hector's Virtue should have shined in Thee.

Mr J. COOPER.

Thus he makes Oenone, the Wife of Paris, express herself. In another Place he says, that every one thought Andromache too tall; but that she seemed to her Husband to be of a middle Stature.

Omnibus Andromache visa est spatiosior æquo.

Unus, qui modicam diceret, Hector erat.

(6) Id. lib. 2. de Arte Amandi.

Colomies has rightly observed (7), that Mercerus, in his Notes on the fourth Book of Diogenes Cretensis, should not have said, That Antiquity knew nothing of Hector's loving any Woman beside his Wife, or that he had Children besides those she brought him. Mercerus had forgot the Historian Anaxicrates, and the Poet Euripides. But Colomies, who farther observes, that this Historian was unknown to Vossius, should have told us, that he had from Mexiriac the Passages

(7) Bibl. chois. pag. 109.

spect [B]. The Death of Hector proved, therefore, a terrible Blow to Andromache; yet she survived it, as well as the Grief she conceived, some time after, upon the taking of Troy, upon the Loss of her dear Son Astyanax, who was thrown headlong from the Top of a Tower, and her own Slavery. She fell to the Lot of a Master, who, tho' of a fierce and bloody Disposition, used her very kindly. Pyrrhus, the cruel Son of the cruel Achilles, proved gentle and tractable towards Andromache; shared his Bed with her [C], and made her Condition so happy, that the beautiful Hermione, whom he married some time after, grew very jealous at it (b). After the Death of This Prince, or even in his Life-time, Andromache married Helanus [D], the Son of Priam, her Fellow-Captive; and reigned with him in part of Epirus. She had Children by Pyrrhus [E], and one likewise by Helanus. Some Authors are of Opinion, that the Kings of Epirus down to That Pyrrhus, who made War with the Romans (c), descended from a Son of Pyrrhus and Andromache. This Princess had seven Brothers, who were slain by Achilles, together with their Father, in one and the same Day (d). An Author tells us, that she accompanied Priam, when he went to beg of Achilles, that he would sell him the dead Body of Hector (e); and that, to excite the greater Compassion, she carried with her her two Sons, who were but Infants (f). She has been the Subject of many fine Tragedies both Ancient and Modern

(b) Euripid. in Andromache.

(c) See the Remarks [E].

(d) Il. lib. 6. ver. 414. & seq.

(e) Diogenes Cretensis, lib. 3.

(8) Parallelopom. de Hellen. Græciæ, pag. 5.

Passages alleged by him, and that Mallinacut (8) mentions Anaxerates, without saying any thing of the Work quoted by the Scholiast upon Euripides: He only says, that Strabo alleges the Authority of Anaxerates, in speaking of Arabia, in the fourteenth Book.

[B] Her Disposition was very easy and complaisant in this Respect.] See the foregoing Remark. It does not appear from hence, that Andromache carried her Complaisance so far, as Livia and Cromwell's Wife did. The latter, out of Ambition, favoured the amorous Intrigues of her Husband (9). Livia occasionally acted the Part of a Bawd to Augustus, to keep up her Credit. "Circa libidines hæsit (Augustus) postea quoque ut ferunt, ad vitandas Virgines promptior, quæ sibi undique etiam ab uxore conquirentur (10). . . . Augustus continued after wards his Debaucheries, being fond of violating young Women, whom even his Wife procured for him from all Parts." Andromache proposed only domestic Peace, by giving her Husband no Disquiet.

(9) Let's Life of Cromwell, in Monf. de Beauval's Journal, 1692, pag. 499.

(10) Sueton. in Aug. cap. 74.

[C] Pyrrhus . . . feared his Bed with her.] Virgil, in order to preserve a Decorum, introduces Andromache grieving chiefly at This; for Aeneas no sooner asked her, whether Hector's Widow was married, but she cast down her Eyes, and told him, blushing, that she was so against her Will; and that she envied the Fate of Polyxena, whom Death had freed from the like Necessity. We are not obliged to understand this altogether in a literal Sense.

Hectoris, Andromache, Pyrrhin' continubia servas?
Dejecit vultum, & demissa voce locuta est,
O felix una ante alias Priamæa Virgo,
Hostilium ad tumultum Trojæ sub mœnibus altis
Jussa mori, quæ fortitus non pertulit ullos,
Nec victoris heri tetigit captiva cubile!
Nos, patria inœnsa, diversa per æquora vectas
Strepis Achilleæ fastus, juvenemque superbum, Servitio enixæ tulimus, qui deinde secutus
Ledaam Hermionem Lacedæmonioque Hymenæos,
Me famulam famuloque Heleno transiit habendam (11).

(11) Virg. Æneid. lib. 3. Ver. 320.

Still are you Hector's, or is Hector fled,
And his Remembrance lost in Pyrrhus's Bed?
With Eyes dejected, in a lowly Tone,
After a modest Pause she thus began.
Oh only happy Maid of Priam's Race,
Whom Death deliver'd from the Foe's Embrace!
Commanded on Achilles's Tomb to die;
Not forced, like us, to hard Captivity,
Or in a baughty Master's Arms to lie.
In Grecian Ships unhappy we were born;
Endur'd the Victor's Lust, sustain'd the Scorn.
Thus I submitted to the lawless Pride Of Pyrrhus, more a Handmaid, than a Bride.
Closet with Passion, he forsook my Bed,
And Helen's lovely Daughter sought to wed.

Then Me to Trojan Helenus resign'd,
And his two Slaves in equal Marriage join'd.
DRYDEN.

But we must do her Justice; she is not represented as a Woman of an amorous Complexion. Tho' she was a Mother, Ovid could scarce believe, that she had lain with her Husband.

Nunquam ego te, Andromache, nec te, Tecmessa, rogarem,
Ut mea de vobis altera amica foret.
Credere vix video, cum cogar credere partu,
Vos ego cum vestris concubuisse viris (12).

When youthful Heat, inspir'd by female Charms,
Prompts me to take a Mistress to my Arms;
Nor you, Andromache, should gain my Voice,
Nor you, Tecmessa, be the Poet's Choice.
Scarce can I think such cold and lifeless Dames
(But that the Fruit the sure Embrace proclaims)
'Ere blest the Nuptial Bed, or burnt in Hymen's [Flames.]

(12) Ovid. de Arte Amandi, lib. 3. ver. 519.

[D] Or even in his Life time.] I thought this Alternative necessary, because Authors are not agreed about the Time, when Andromache married Helanus. We have just now seen, that, according to Virgil, this Marriage preceded the Death of Pyrrhus. Justin is of the same Opinion (13). But, according to Servius, the only Reason for her becoming Helanus's Wife, was, that Pyrrhus ordered it so upon his Death-bed (14). Pausanias likewise places their Nuptials after the Death of This Prince. Τῷ γὰρ Ἀρδποῦ μὲν ἀνέπαυσε ἀπὸ δουλείας ἐν Δελφοῖς Πύρρῳ (15). Huic enim Andromache nupsit, morituro Delpho Pyrrho.

(13) Justin lib. 17. cap. 3.

(14) Servius in lib. 3. Æneid. ver. 519.

(15) Pausan. lib. 7. p. 10.

[E] She had Children by Pyrrhus.] Some compute, that she had three Sons by him, viz. Molossus, Pielus, and Pergamus (16); or Pyrrhus, Molossus, and Æacides (17). Others mention only Molossus (18), from whom, according to Euripides (19), the Kings of Molossia descended. Pausanias says, they sprung from Pielus. As for Pergamus, the same Pausanias informs us, that he went into Asia; that his Mother Andromache followed him thither; and that he killed Atreus, Prince of Teutrania, having fought with him in single Combat for the Sovereignty; that he called the Town by his Name; and that his Tomb, and That of his Mother, were to be seen there. Servius, upon the Seventy second Verse of the sixth Eclogue of Virgil, gives a very different Account of the whole Matter. As for the Son of Helanus, by Andromache, his Name was Cestrinus; and he went and settled, with a Company of Epirots, who willingly followed him, in a Province situated above the River Thyatis: This he did after his Father's Death, and when the Kingdom had been restored to Molossus, Son of Pyrrhus (20).

(16) Id. lib.

(17) Schol. in Æneid. lib. 3. ver. 319.

(18) Servius in lib. 3. ver. 319.

(19) In Andromache.

(20) Pausan. lib. 7. p. 10.

[F] She

Modern [F]. Her lofty Stature was known to all Posterity [G]. Her Dialogue with Hector, in the sixth Book of the Iliad, is one of the best Passages of That Poem [H].

She was so careful of Hector's Horses, that she fed and watered them, before she served Him (g). Some have alledged this Example, to shew, that Women ought to condescend to the most servile Offices of a Family [I].

(g) Homer. Iliad. lib. 6. ver. 138.

[F] She has been the Subject of many fine Tragedies both ancient and modern. That of Euripides is still extant; and, if the Reader desires to know what was the Success of That, which was acted upon the French Stage at Paris, he need only read what Montfauy, a famous Player, says, in the Parallèle Reformé; to which he may add a Passage of a modern Poet. "If any one desires to know what I died of, (they are Montfauy's Words) he must not ask, whether it was of a Fever, a Dropsy, or the Gout: No, it was of Andromache ---- I with all those Writers of Tragedies, who invent these murderous Passions, had to do, like Corneille, with such a Man as the Abbot d'Avignac; they would abate of their Fury. But what vexes me most, is, that Andromache will grow more famous by the Circumstance of my Death; and that, for the future, every Poet will want to have the Honour of killing a Player once in his Life (21)." Add to this these few Verses.

(21) Guenee's Parallèle Reformé, pag. 108, 109.

----- Un Marquis
Eaist de son savoir chez les Dames aigis,
Ennemi du bon sens qu'à grand bruit il attaque,
Va pleyer au Tartuffe & rire à l'Andromaque.

----- A Marquis
Vain of Experience, gain'd among the Fair,
And Eye to Sense, which rudely by attack,
Shall, by inverted Rule, make Tartuff war,
And paint Andromache a laughing Dame.

[G] Her lofty Stature was known to all Posterity. I have already produced two Verses of Ovid upon this Subject, in the Remark [A]. Here are two more of the same Author.

Parva vehatur equo: quod erat LONGISSIMA, nunquam

Thebais Hectoreo nupta refedit equo (22).

The Dapper only shoud the Steed bespide;
The Wife of Hector walk'd, too tall to ride.

Martial refutes Ovid, as well in this Particular, as in what has been already cited. These are his Words,

Mastrabantur Phrygii post ostia servi,
Hectoreo quotes federat uxor equo (23).

Behind the Doors the Phrygian Slaves were fed, Oft as on Hector's Horse his Consort rode.

Journal was not ignorant of Andromache's Stature; for, speaking of those Ladies, who raised several Stories of Ornaments and Hair upon their Heads, he says, they resembled so many Andromache's before, but appeared very little behind.

Tot præmit ordibus, tot adhuc compagibus altum Ædificat caput. Andromachen à fronte videbis, Post minor est (24).

With Curls on Curls they build her Head before,
And mount it with a formidable Tower.

A Giants * she seems; but look behind,
And there she dwindles to the Pigmy kind.

DRYDEN.

Thus the old Roman Ladies wore something like our Top-Knots. Another Poet expresses himself in the following Manner,

----- Celsæ procul apice frontis honores Suggestumque comæ (25).

----- behold the tow'ring Honour of her Head,
The rising Mount of Hair.

The Mother of the Gods, with her Towers upon her Head (26), would be nothing to our Ladies, if once they should enlarge the Mode of their Top-Knots. See Mr. Almeloveer's Amanitates Theologica-Philolo- gica, where you will find (27), a Collection of curious Learning about the Antiquity of Top-Knots. See also the Article Canache, and this Passage of Æneid. Μένειν γὰρ (28), speaking of a Bride, καὶ εἰς τὴν ἡδίσταν ἐδύμην ταῖσι νύμφαισι τε καὶ αὐτοῖσι φόβον καὶ δάπτειν ἢ ἑὸς ἑλάν πεισθέντος εἶναι. She will be adorn'd with this Head-dress, those seven Days; and walk about, like Cybele, with Turrets on her Head. But, to return to Andromache, I must observe, that Dares Phrygius says, she was endowed with many fine Qualities; and he does not forget her tall Stature, "Andromacham oculis claris, candidam, longam, formosam, modestam, sapientem, pudicam, blandam. ----- Andromache, Fine-Eyed, Fair, TALL, Handsome, Modest, Wise, Chaste, and Good-natur'd."

(27) Bag. 106, &c.

(28) Synes. Epist. 3.

[H] Her Dialogue with Hector --- is one of the best Passages of That Poem. This is the Judgment Mr. Perreault passes upon it. He translated This Dialogue into French Verse, and read his Version to the French Academy, when the Abbot Fenelon was admitted into it (29). He first made a short and ingenious Discourse, in which he declared, that he believed Homer to be the most Excellent, the most Copious, and the finest Genius, Poetry ever knew; and that, in order to convince the Incredulous, that he honoured him according to his Merit, he had translated This Part of the Iliad into French. He owns, that he has left out some Digressions, which seemed to him too languid. This is Homer's Fault; he is too talkative, and too downright; though otherwise a Writer of great Genius, and so full of noble Thoughts, that were he now alive, he would write an Epic Poem, free from all Defects. He would not introduce Andromache, among other Complaints for the Death of her Husband, lamenting, that young Astyanax must no longer eat, upon his Father's Knees, the Fat and Marrow of Sheep. This is to paint after Nature, it must be confessed; but such Simplicity is not allowable, at present, in Epic Poetry; it appears to us too Citizen-like; and only fit for Comedy. I believe our Countesses and Marchionesses would think they expressed themselves too much like City Dames, should they say, as the Queen of Carthage does in Virgil,

A REFLECTION on the Epic Poetry of the Ancients.

(29) On the Thirty first of March, 1693. This Version was printed in the first part of the Recueil de Pièces curieuses, at the Hague, for Moetteux, 1694.

----- si quis mihi parvulus Angles Luderet Aeneas.

This Fault is not to be ascribed to the ancient Poets; but to the time they lived in. Properly speaking, the Question is not, whether Men have better Parts now, than they had in former times; but whether we have better Notions of Perfection, and may apply to Homer what Horace says of another Poet.

----- sed ille,
Si foret hoc nostrum fato dilapsus in ævum,
Detereret sibi multa, recideret omne, quod ultra Perfectum traheretur (30).

Yet did he now again new Life commence,
He wou'd correct; he wou'd retrace his Sense,
And pare off all that was not Excellence.

CRÆÆUS.

[I] Some have alledged this Example, to shew, that Women ought to condescend to the most servile Offices of a Family. Read these Words of Tiraquellus (31). "Quæ loca Franciscus Barbarus in suo libello de re uxoria quem apud Gallos imprimendum primi omnium dedimus, solerter sciteque annotavit, monens 'his exemplis uxores ne res hujusmodi contemnant quas Andromache, &c. ----- & hoc quoque è nostris commemoravit Jo. Lupus in rep. rubr. de don. inter vir. & uxor. & Bo. Curtil. in tract. nobilitatis, in 38. privilegio. --- Which Passages Franciscus Barbarus, in his Traité de re Uxoriz, first published by me in France, wisely distinguished, putting Women in mind, from these Examples, not to overlook those things, which Andromache, &c. --- The same Remark has been made by our Countryman Jo. Lupus, in his Rep. Rubr. &c. and by Bo. Curtil. in his Traité"

(30) Horat. Sat. 10. lib. 1. ver. 67.

(31) Andr. Tiraquel. de Nobilit. cap. 20. n. 101. pag. 78.

(22) Juv. Sat. 6. ver. 500.

* An Andromache.

(24) Stat. Silv. 2. lib. 1. ver. 113.

(26) Qualis Beroë abia mater Trochiter curru Phrygiæ turris per urbes. Virg. Æn. lib. 6. ver. 785.

"Treatise de Nobilitat. &c." Tiraquellus made no thought this Example would prove too much; and Reflection upon this Circumstance, viz. that Andromache's Husband was not first served. Doubtless he such a Notion.

ANDROMACHUS. I shall mention but six Persons of this Name. The First ANDROMACHUS, born in Sicily, was the Father of the Historian Timæus, and the Founder of Tauromenium, now called Taormina. He was a Man of Courage, and very rich. He gathered together (a) upon a rising Ground, called Taurus, near Naxos, the Inhabitants of That Town, who had fled away, when the Tyrant Dionysius destroyed it. He supported himself a long time in this Post; which was the Reason why he called it Tauromenium. The Fugitives of Naxos were very prosperous in this new Habitation; so that in a little time it became a very considerable Town (b). Andromachus received Timoleon into it, and permitted him to make it a Place of Arms. This Corinthian General came only to deliver Sicily from the Tyrants, who oppressed it. Andromachus was a professed Enemy to Tyrants, and had a long time solicited the Corinthians to undertake the Deliverance of Sicily. He, therefore, and Timoleon, quickly resolved to act in Concert, in order to restore the Public Liberty (c). The Second ANDROMACHUS served under Alexander the Great, and was Governour of Calo-Syria. The Samaritans burnt him alive; but Alexander punished the Authors of this cruel Action according to their Deserts (d). I find no other Andromachus in Quintus Curtius, tho' Moreri pretends there are many Persons of this Name mentioned by That Historian. The Third ANDROMACHUS was Brother-in-law to Seleucus Callinicus King of Syria, and had a Son (e), who invaded the Provinces, situated on this side of Mount Taurus, and caused him to be proclaimed King, in the time of Antiochus the Great. This Andromachus was kept Prisoner a considerable time in Egypt. The Rhodians obtained his Liberty, not from Ptolemy Evergetes, as is said in the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary, but from Ptolemy Philopator [A]. The Fourth ANDROMACHUS was a Traytor, who discovered to the Partians all the Designs of Craffus, and, being chosen as a Guide, led the Roman Army into a Place, where they could not avoid being cut to pieces. See Plutarch, pag. 562, of the Life of Craffus. The Fifth ANDROMACHUS was Nero's Physician, who makes the Subject of the following Article. The Sixth ANDROMACHUS was a Sophist, who taught in Nicomedia under the Reign of Dioclesian; as we read in Suidas.

(a) In the Cyris Olympiad, about the Year of Rome, 395.

(b) Diodor. Siculus, lib. 16. pag. 411.

(c) Plutarch. in Timoleonte, pag. 240. See also Diodorus Siculus, lib. 26.

(d) Curtius, lib. 4. cap. 9. Eusebius ad Olympiad. c. xii.

(e) His Name was ACHÆUS. See his Article.

[A] The Rhodians obtained his Liberty, not from Ptolemy Evergetes — but from Ptolemy Philopator. The Fault of the Supplement to Moreri's Dictionary will be manifest to any one, who considers, that, when the Rhodians obtained Andromachus's Liberty, his Son had been gone, two Years, over Mount Taurus, with Seleucus Ceraunus, King of Syria, to make War upon Attalus, King of Pergamus. Now this Expedition was undertaken the same Year, that Ptolemy Evergetes died, and was succeeded by Ptolemy Philopator (1). It was therefore Ptolemy Philopator, who set Andromachus at Liberty, to please the Rhodians, who wanted to deprive the City of Byzantium of the Favour of Achæus, and who thought, that the most effectual way to make a Friend of that Prince, was to procure the Liberty of his Father. See the Remark [A], of the Article ACHÆUS.

(1) See Calvinus ad ann. 3. Olympiad. c. xxi.

ANDROMACHUS, a Native of the Isle of Crete, and Physician to the Emperor Nero (a), is chiefly known by the Antidote, which he invented, by mixing the Flesh of Vipers with Mitridate (b). This Antidote was called Theriace, on Account of this Mixture. We call it Treacle. Onpior signifies a Beast; but Physicians understand by Onpior particularly venomous Beasts (c). This Antidote banished the use of Mitridate, which 'till then had been in great Esteem (d). Andromachus wrote a Description of his Antidote in Elegiac Verse, and dedicated it to Nero (e). His Son, whose Name was ANDROMACHUS, wrote the like Description in Prose (f). Democritus did it in Iambic Verse, in a Poem which he wrote concerning Antidotes (g). We read, in Galen, that Andromachus, the Father, wrote a Treatise De Medicamentis compositis ad adfessus externos (h), and that he was a Learned and an Eloquent Man (i). Erotian dedicated his Lexicon to him. I wonder how Meursius could forget so famous a Physician, in his List of the Illustrious Men of the Isle of Crete, in the fourth Book of his Treatise of That Island. Some will have it, that this Physician was a good Astrologer [A].

(a) Galen. lib. 1. de Theriaca, ad Pisonem.

(b) Vossius de Philosophia, cap. 12. pag. 95.

(c) Galen de Ther. ad Pampphilum.

(d) Vossius ubi supra.

(e) Galen. lib. 1. de Antidotis. Tzetzes Chil. 12. n. 397. pag. 224.

(f) Galen. lib. 1.

(g) Id. de Theriaca ad Pisonem.

(h) Apud Vossium de Philosoph. pag. 96.

(i) Lib. 1. de Antid. cap. 1.

[A] That this Physician was a good Astrologer. I begin with Vossius's Words. "Circa Olympiadem CXL, (the Printer has left out a C; it should be CCXL) ad deinceps, nempe extremis Neronis temporibus, & sub Vespasiano, magnum sibi decus hac scientia peperit Andromachus, Cretensis, qui primus dicitur edidisse theoricas Planetarum. — About the CCXLth Olympiad, and afterwards, namely, about the end of the Reign of Nero, and in that of Vespasian, Andromachus, of Crete, acquired great Reputation in this Science, who is said to be the first, who published Theories of the Planets." This is Vossius's Text in the Hundred sixty first Page of his Book, de Scientiis Mathematicis, to which he adds the following Commentary, according to his usual Method. "Consentiant de eo Lucas Gauricus, & Christophorus Clavius, nisi quod Gauricus perperam Andronicum vocat, qui Clavio rectius Andromachus. Illum vide in Calendario Ecclesiastico. hunc Commentario † in Sphæram Joan. de Sacrobosco. — Luke Gauric, and Christopher Clavius, agree in relation to this Person; except that Gauric, by mistake, called him Andronicus, whom Clavius rightly calls Andromachus. See the former in his Ecclesiastical Calender, the latter in his Commentary on the Sphere of John de Sacrobosco. I wonder Vossius did not tell us, whether, or no, he believed this Andromachus, the Astrologer, to be the same, with him, who invented Treacle. The Time, wherein he places him, and the Country, he says he was born in, would induce one to think he means one and the same Andromachus. I am apt to believe, that

* Fol. 16. Edit. Venet. apud Juntas, ann. 1550.

† Commentar. in cap. 1. pag. 4.

that Vossius's Silence in this matter was the Effect of Prudence: He wanted farther Information; and therefore would not venture to decide peremptorily. Moreri, a much bolder Author, affirms, that Andromachus, Nero's Physician, and Andromachus the Astrologer, the first who wrote concerning the Theory of the Planets, are one and the same Person. Andromachus, the Astrologer, seems to me to be a Chimera; for Mr Drelincourt, whom I never consulted, without admiring his vast and accurate Learning, was pleased to acquaint me, among many other things, which I make use of in this Article, that the Words Inventor Theoricarum, in Clavius, ought to be read Inventor Theoricarum. This Correction utterly destroys the two Authorities alleged by Vossius, as to what concerns the Theory of the Planets; one speaks only of Andromachus, and the other ascribes the Invention of Treacle alone to Andromachus. We have here a plain Instance of the Mistakes of learned Men, occasioned by the Errors of Printers and Transcribers. Blancanus places Andromachus among the Mathematicians: "Andromachus Cretensis, quem Theoricarum inventorem facit Clavius (1). — Androma-

"thus of Crete, whom Clavius makes the Inventor of 'Theories.' The same may be said of Vossius. So that they, who pretend, that Andromachus was the first, who wrote concerning the Theory of the Planets, have no Ground for it, but a False-Print, by which the Word Theoricarum has been changed into Theoricarum. Mr Drelincourt alleged this Reason, among others, for his Conjecture, viz. that the Epithet Inventor has nothing to do with the Theory of the Planets; which, besides, was known before Nero's Reign; whereas Inventor, added to Theoricarum, is very properly applied to Andromachus. Perhaps the same kind of Mistake of the Printers, or Transcribers, occasioned our Andromachus to be taken for an Astrologer, by Clavius, or by the Author, whom Clavius, mediately, or immediately, followed. The Word Andromachus was, perhaps, printed instead of Andronicus, or some such Name. Whence it was, that they, who knew, that one Andromachus, of Crete, was Nero's Physician, and the Inventor of Treacle, added these Titles and Encomiums to the Word Andromachus, in their Lists of Astrologers.

(1) Blancanus. In Mathem. Chronol. pag. 50.

ANDRONICUS, a Peripatetic Philosopher, born in the Island of Rhodes, came to Rome, in the time of Pompey and Cicero [A]; where he laboured powerfully to raise the Credit of Aristotle, whose Works he brought into request [B], after having regulated, and disposed them after a better Method [C]. There was something very singular in the Fate of these Writings, as I shall shew in another place (a). One cannot sufficiently express, what great Service Andronicus did to the Sect of the Peripatetics. Perhaps, It had never been so famous, if he had not taken a particular Care of the Works of it's Founder. Andronicus acquired a great Reputation by it (b). Some learned Men do not ascribe to him the Paraphrase upon Aristotle's

(a) In the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION.

(b) Quem cum acutum diligentemque Aristolicorum librorum & judicem & repertorem judicaverit antiquitas. Boetius Proem. Libri de interpretatione.

[A] Came to Rome in the Time of Pompey and Cicero.] This may be inferred from two Passages of Plutarch; one in the Life of Sylla (1), and the other in the Life of Lucullus (2). The first informs us of three things; I. That Sylla sent, from Athens to Rome, Apellicon's Library, in which most of Aristotle's Works were to be found. II. That the Grammarian Tyrannion took many Books out of Sylla's Library. III. That Andronicus, the Rhodian, had Aristotle's Works from Tyrannion. We learn, from the second Passage of Plutarch, that Tyrannion was taken by Lucullus, when Mithridates was defeated, and that Murena, having asked him of Lucullus, gave him his Freedom. We know, besides, that this Grammarian enriched himself at Rome, and collected a large Library. Andronicus must, therefore, have been at Rome, at the time I have mentioned, since he had Aristotle's Works from Tyrannion. We shall see, in the Remark [C], whether Father Rapin is in the right, to say, that Andronicus did not come to Rome, 'till after the Death of Tyrannion.

(1) Pag. 468.

(2) Pag. 584.

[B] Whose Works he brought into request.] This supposes they were before unknown at Rome; and I have reason to affirm it, since Cicero does; nay, Plutarch tells us, that they were little known to the Athenians, when Sylla seized on Apellicon's Books (3). Father Rapin has before observed, what I here suppose. "It was That Andronicus, says he (4), who brought Aristotle into request at the time, when Cicero was raising himself, by his great Reputation, to the most considerable Dignities of the Republic. — Cicero had heard of Aristotle in Greece. He was acquainted with part of his Merit, which was not very well known at Rome; as appears from the Surprise of Trebatius, who paid a Visit to Cicero, at his Country Seat of Tusculum, and going into his Library with him, happened to light upon Aristotle's Topics, of which Cicero had a Copy. Trebatius asked him, what Book it was, and what it treated of; for, though he was no ignorant Man, he had never heard of Aristotle. Cicero told him, That it was no wonder, since that Philosopher was known to very few (5). I cannot forbear saying, that this agreeable Writer is not exact, in reporting this Passage of Cicero. This, I think, ought not to be ascribed to Inadvertency; but to a Desire of Brevity. It is an Inconvenience inseparable from exact Writers; they cannot avoid a Prolixity, which tires the Reader; who is better pleased with an easy and short Account of a thing, though not perfectly exact, than with a long one, though ever so

(3) Οὗτος ὁ ἀπὸ τοῦ Ὑποκρίτου τῶν βιβλίων τοῦ Σύλλας. Ηὐδ δὲ μὲν σὺν τοῖς βιβλίοις. Plut. in S. I. l. 1, pag. 458.

(4) Rapin. Comparaison de Platon, & d'Aristot. pag. 374.

(5) Father Rapin quotes the following Words in the Margin. Quod quidem minime sum admiratus cum Philo-phum Trebatium non esse cognitum, qui ab ipsis Philosophis, præter admirandum puerum, ignoretur. Cicero's Epist. ad. int.

accurate. Father Rapin, in order to give the Substance of Cicero's Passage, should have said, that Trebatius, turning over several Books in Cicero's Library, met with Aristotle's Topics; that, being surprized at the Title, he immediately asked Cicero what Book it was, and, being informed, desired him to explain it to him; that Cicero advised him to read it himself, or to get it explained to him by an able Rhetorician; that Trebatius tried both these Methods without any Success, being himself discouraged by the Obscurity of the Book, and being told by the Rhetorician, that Aristotle was an Author unknown to him; that Cicero was not surprized at it, though such an Ignorance appeared to him inexcusable; and that, at the Request of Trebatius, who was a learned Civilian, he wrote upon Aristotle's Topics (6). "Utrumque, ut à te audiebam, es expertus. Sed à libris te obscuritas reject. Rhetor autem ille, magnus ut opinor, Aristotelica se ignorare respondit. Quod quidem minime sum admiratus, cum Philosophum rhetori non esse cognitum, qui ab ipsis Philo-sophis præter admodum paucos ignoretur. Quibus eo minus ignoscendum est, quod non modo rebus iis quæ ab illo didicæ & inventæ sunt allici debuerunt; sed dicendi quoque incredibili quandam cum copia, tum etiam suavitate (7). — You have, as you yourself informed me, try'd both these Methods. But the Obscurity of the Book deterred you. Besides which, your Rhetorician, of great Fame, I think, replied, that he knew nothing of Aristotle. Which I was not at all surprized at; namely, that a Rhetorician was unacquainted with this Philosopher, who is unknown to the Philosophers themselves, a very few excepted. This they are the less to be forgiven; since not only the Subject of his Writings, but even the wonderful Copiousness and Elegance of his Style, ought to have engaged them to read him." To conceal nothing from the Reader, I must acquaint him, that Strabo informs us (8), that the Library-Keeper of Sylla permitted the Book-sellers to get Aristotle's Works transcribed; but that they made use of ignorant Transcribers, who, besides, did not compare the Copies with the Originals; which occasioned these Works to be published with abundance of Faults. This cannot be alleged in confutation of what I have said; for I may answer, that Andronicus's Edition, being more correct, raised the Curiosity of the Learned, who made no account of the faulty Editions. See the Marginal Note (6).

(6) He compared this Work, after Cæsar's Death; whence we may infer, that the Edition of Andronicus did not immediately make Aristotle's Works commonly known at Rome.

(7) Cicero initi Topi-corum.

(8) Lib. 13. pag. 419.

[C] Disposed them after a better Method.] Plutarch says, that Andronicus, having received Aristotle's and Theophrastus's

Aristotle's Ethics [D]; others pretend he is the Author of it, and likewise of a small Treatise on the Passions, published by David Hoefbelius, in 1593. It is certain, that Andronicus was an Author; for Aulus Gellius, in a Chapter (c), wherein he mentions the two kinds of Lessons, which Aristotle gave his Scholars, sets down word for word a Letter of Alexander to Aristotle, and Aristotle's Answer; and informs us, that he met with these two Letters in a Work of the Philosopher Andronicus. No one can say, whether this Work was the Paraphrase upon the Categories, or That on The Physics. It is well known, that Andronicus paraphrased those two Treatises of Aristotle [E]. I am not of Opinion, that he was Strabo's Master [F].

(c) It is the fifth of the twentieth Book.

(g) Plutarch in Sylla, pag. 468.

(10) Porphyry in vita Plotini.

(11) Rapin. Comparaison de Platon & Aristot. pag. 373, 374.

(12) Ammonius apud Joannem de Scriptor. Hist. Philol. pag. 60.

Theophrastus's Books from Tyrannion, published them with Indexes. Παρ' αὐτοῦ τὸν Ῥόδιον Ἀνδρόνικον εὐπορήσαντα τῶν ἀντίγραφων εἰς μέσον θήσας, καὶ ἀναγράφει τὰς τῶν φεγμένους στίχους (9). The following Passage of Porphyry may be added to this of Plutarch. Μιμησάμενος δ' Ἀπολλόδορον τὸν Ἀθηναῖον, καὶ Ἀνδρόνικον τὸν Πειραιεῖσιον, ἐν ὧ μὲν Ἐπιχαρμὸν τὸν κωμωδιστὴν εἰς δέκα τόμους φέρον συνήσας, ὃ δ' Ἀετοσίλῳ καὶ Θεοφράστῳ βιβλία εἰς πενταστίχους διείλετο, τὰς οἰκίας ὑποθέσεις εἰς ταῦτ' συναρτάσας. ἔτω δὲ καὶ ἐξώ (10). Imitatus Apollodorum Atheniensem & Andronicum Peripateticum, quorum ille Epicharmum Comicum in decem collegit tomos, iste vero Aristotelis & Theophrasti libros in tractatus distribuit, proprias suppositiones in idem conduens; sic & ego. I confess I do not very well understand the Greek Words, τὰς οἰκίας ὑποθέσεις εἰς ταῦτ' συναρτάσας. Much less do I understand the Translation, proprias suppositiones in idem conduens; but I think either of the two following Senses may be allowed. Porphyry means, either that Andronicus collected into one Body all the Tracts, which belonged to the same Subject, or that he added a proper Summary to each Tract. The first Sense seems to me the best, and agrees better with Plutarch, and the Comparison, which Porphyry makes between Andronicus and himself; for Porphyry only prefixed Titles to the Writings of his Master Plotinus, and digested them into several Classes. I have not met with any Author, who says what I have read in Father Rapin; and, as he quotes only Plotinus, I know not, whether he had it from a Work, which I have not consulted, or whether he paraphrases Plotinus and Plutarch. However it be, these are his Words, which have been faithfully transcribed by Moreri. "After Tyrannion's Death, Andronicus, the Rhodian, came to Rome, and, being sensible "of Aristotle's Worth, having been bred up in the "Lyceum, he bought those Writings of Tyrannion's "Heirs, and examined them so carefully, that he "was, in a manner, the first Restorer of them, as "Porphyry affirms in Plotinus's Life. For he not "only restored what had been injured by length of "Time, and the Carelessness of those, who were in "possession of these Works, but took them out of "that strange Confusion they were in, and got them "transcribed (11)." The beginning of this Passage contradicts Plutarch, who affirms, that Andronicus had Aristotle's Works from Tyrannion himself. I confess, Plutarch is not so exact, but we may give up his Authority in Circumstances; but, since we have no Author, who says, that Tyrannion's Heirs, and not Tyrannion himself, sold to Andronicus the Writings of Aristotle; I think we had better adhere to Plutarch, since Chronology is not against him. See the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION. Some say, that Andronicus was the tenth Successor of Aristotle, and that he flourished in the CLXXXth Olympiad (12).

[D] Some learned Men do not ascribe to him the Paraphrase upon Aristotle's Ethics. Daniel Heinsius, who translated this Paraphrase into Latin, plainly enough intimates, that he takes it to be the Work of this famous Peripatetic. He published it, in Greek and Latin, at Leyden, in the Year 1607, in 4to. It had never been printed before, either in Greek, or Latin. Many Errors crept into this Edition, which were corrected, at least in part, in That of the Year 1617, in 8vo. Heinsius prefixed the Name of Andronicus Rhodius to the second Edition. He was contented, in the first, to ascribe this Work to an ancient Philosopher, who was a famous Peripatetic. There is a Parenthesis in a Passage of Naudé, which may serve to vindicate him against Placcius. "Cui se Danielis Heinſii ----- diligentia socium "non ita pridem adjunxit Andronicus Rhodius (aut

"potius Olympiodorus); talem enim appellationem in "posteriori editione consulto fortius est, cum in priori "ab eodem Heinſio facta Lugduni Batavorum sub "anonymi nomine latens ----- fuisset ----- avide "à cunctis receptus. ----- To whom Andronicus "Rhodius joined himself, by the Care of Daniel "Heinsius; (or rather Olympiodorus); for this Appellation was purposely assumed in the latter Edition; since, in the former, publish'd by the same Heinsius at Leyden, though without a Name, He was "eagerly received by the Public." They are Naudé's Words, in his Bibliographia politica; upon which Placcius makes this Remark: "Ubi lapsus memorie "sit oportet, quod de Olympiodoro memorat, cum "ejus nullam unquam in alterutra editione mentionem Heinsius fecerit (13). ----- Where his Memory certainly fails him, as to what he says of "Olympiodorus; since Heinsius makes no mention "of him in either Edition." It appears from Naudé's Parenthesis, that the Words Andronicus Rhodius only, and not Olympiodorus, are to be referred to Heinsius. Meurſius does not doubt, that Andronicus is the Author of this Paraphrase, and of the Treatise περὶ παθῶν, published by Hoefbelius, from two Manuscripts; one of which he received from Margunius; the other was sent to Sylburgius, from Spain, by Andrew Schottus (14). Vossius ascribes this last Work to one Andronicus, not so ancient, as He who makes the Subject of this Article (15). Reinesius is of Meurſius's Opinion (16); but Salmassius asserts, that Andronicus Rhodius was not the Author of the Paraphrase, translated by Daniel Heinsius (17). They, says he, who first published this Paraphrase, injudiciously ascribed it to Andronicus; and he laughs at them for boasting, that they had met with very good Proofs of it, in the ancient Interpreters of Aristotle (18). He shews, that the true Andronicus, in Aulus Gellius, explains Aristotle's ἐξωσπικά and ἐκποσπικά differently from the Paraphrast. Salmassius enlarges very much upon this; and adds, that This Paraphrast does not agree with Aristotle in many things (19). "In tam multis ab "à mente Aristotelis, ut Andronici esse genuinum "opus soli possint credere, qui nihil in literis his "vident. ----- He departs in so many things from "Aristotle's meaning, that They alone, who are wholly unacquainted with these Studies, can possibly mistake it for the Genuine Work of Andronicus. He cannot believe, that so great a Philosopher as Andronicus would have mispent his time so far as to paraphrase a Book the most intelligible in the World. Quis credat tanti nominis Peripateticum otium suum occupasse in Ethicis Aristotelis paraphrasi elucidandis, quo libro nihil lucidius? This last Proof seems to me to be very weak.

[E] Andronicus paraphrased those two Treatises of Aristotle. Simplicius witnesses this in several Passages of his Commentaries. See Franciscus Patricius (20).

[F] I am not of Opinion, that he was Strabo's Master. I know not, whether the Printers have omitted some Words, or Lines, in Reinesius's Copy, or whether Reinesius be the true Author of these Words, pag. 312 (21). Amasia Magister (Andronicus Rhodius) Strabonis: hic lib. XIV. They mean, that Strabo says, in his fourteenth Book, that he was Andronicus Rhodius's Scholar at Amasia. But it appears, that he was the Disciple of the Grammarian Aristodemus at Nysa (22), and of Xenarchus, the Peripatetic Philosopher, in another Place (23). And, if I am not very much mistaken, all that he says of Andronicus, in his 14th Book, is, That he was one of the illustrious Men of the Island of Rhodes (24); and I dare affirm, that he no where says, in his Writings, either that he was Andronicus's Scholar, or that Andronicus taught at Amasia.

(13) Placcius de Anonymo, pag. 62.

(14) Meurſius de Rhodo, lib. 2. cap. 5. pag. 88.

(15) Vossius de Philoſophia, cap. 5. pag. 36.

(16) Reinesius Epist. ad Rupertum, pag. 312.

(17) Salmassius in Epictet. & Simplicio, pag. 227.

(18) Ibid. pag. 228.

(19) Ibid. pag. 241.

(20) Dikufionum Peripateticorum, Tom. 1. lib. 4. pag. 40, 41.

(21) Of his Letters to Rupert.

(22) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 447.

(23) Ibid. pag. 401.

(24) Pag. 451.

ANDRONICUS (MARCUS POMPILIUS) a Syrian, taught Grammar at Rome. His too great Application to the Study of Philosophy [A] disqualified him for performing the Part of a Grammarian as diligently, as he ought to have done; which occasioned his School to be neglected. When he saw, that Antonius Gniphon, and even some Grammarians, inferior to himself, were yet preferred to him, he quitted his School, and retired to Cumæ, where he spent his time in writing Books. This Employment was no Relief to him in his wretched Condition. His great Poverty obliged him to sell the Best of his Works at a very low Price [B]. This Work was suppressed; but Orbilius repurchased it, and published it under the Author's Name; at least he pretended so to do. Andronicus followed the Sect of Epicurus, and lived in Cicero's time (a). Moreri has been guilty of many Errors in relation to this Person [C].

(a) Ex Suetonio de Illustrib. Grammaticis, cap. 8,

[A] His too great Application to the Study of Philosophy. Suetonius makes use of very proper Terms. "Studio Epicuræ sectæ desidioſior in profeſſione Grammaticæ habebatur, minufque idoneus ad tuendam ſcholam. - - - His Attachment to the Sect of Epicurus was thought to have rendered him too indolent for the Profeſſion of Grammar, and unfit for the Care of a School." This ought to ſerve as a Leſſon to thoſe, who deſire to have a great many Scholars. They ought to apply themſelves entirely to their Profeſſion, or take care, at leaſt, that no one knows they follow other Studies. A Philologiſt, who ſets up for a Philoſopher, who is curious after Phyſical Experiments, and carefully examines, whether Dei Caritas has been more ſucceſſful, than Gaiſendus, runs a great hazard of ſeeing his Claſs deſerted. A Phyſician, fond of Medals, Mathematics, and Genealogies, muſt not expect to have a great many Patients. And this was the Reaſon, why Dr Span thought fit to acquaint the Public, that they would be very much miſtaken, if they thought, that he made the Study of Antiquity his principal Employ (1). He found, by Experience, that this Opinion was very prejudicial to him, in reſpect to his Practice, as a Phyſician. Beſides, it is certain, that a Profeſſor, who is known to write many Books, is not looked upon as a Man fit to improve his Scholars; and therefore they, who deſire to grow rich by teaching Youth, will not ſucceed in it, if they ſet up for Authors.

[B] Obligated him to sell the best of his Works at a very low Price.) Suetonius calls it a small Treatise. Opiſculum, ſays he (2). Annalium Eleucorum. The Title, therefore, of this Work muſt have been Eleucii Annalium. Some Manuſcripts of Suetonius have the following Reading, Opiſculum ſuum Annalium Ennii eleucorum (3). Acillius Statius (4), and Vofſius (5), declare for this Reading; and I think they are in the right. Whatever Reading we follow, it appears, that Andronicus had cenſured an Annaliſt.

[C] Moreri has been guilty of many Errors, in relation to this Person.) I. He calls him Pompinus, instead of Pompinii. II. He falsely says, that Andronicus had been Preceptor to Julius Cæsar, and that Cicero, though a Prætor, was very well pleased to be one of his Hearers. III. He renders Annalium Elenchi, Annals digested into Tables. IV. He says, that some have ascribed these Tables to Ennius. Thus he misunderstands these Words of Vossius, in quibusdam tamen libris est annalium Ennii Elenchorum. V. He weakens Suetonius's Argument. This Historian mentions two Circumstances, which plainly discover Andronicus's Poverty: One of them is taken from the Importance of what was sold; viz. the best of the Author's Works; the other from the small Price, at which it was sold. Moreri thought he expressed the whole Sense of Suetonius in these Words: He was so poor, that he was obliged, in order to support himself, to sell a small Treatise, which he had composed. How came he not to perceive, that he enervated, in a great Measure, the Proof of This Historian? The Reader will not be displeased to see what was the Occasion of his second Mistake, which contains two or three notorious Fallhoods. He did not apprehend Vossius's Argument. That Author was to prove, that Andronicus lived in the time of Sisenna, and Quadrigarius, and some others. He proves it by this Reason; because Antonius Gniphon, and Andronicus, lived at the same time; and, because Gniphon, as Suetonius relates, taught in the House of Julius Cæsar, and had Cicero among his Hearers. He taught in Cæsar's House, when Cæsar was but a Child. Cicero, who was Prætor, went to hear him: Here are two Circumstances of Time, which Vossius alleges out of Suetonius to fix the Age of Pompinus Andronicus; to which he adds another Particular, attested by Suetonius, viz. that Andronicus and Gniphon kept School at the same time. Moreri misunderstands Andronicus's what Vossius says of Gniphon. Besides, he thought that the keeping of a School in a Person's House meant only being Tutor to his Son.

ANDRONICUS, of Theſſalonica, was one of the Fugitive Greeks, who reſtored Learning in the Weſt, in the XVth Century. He paſſed for the beſt Profeſſor, next to Theodorus Gaza; and perhaps he exceeded him in the Knowledge of the Greek Tongue; for he had read all the Authors, who had wrote in that Language, and was a perfect Maſter of Ariſtotle's Philoſophy. He taught at Rome; and lodged in Cardinal Beſſarion's Houſe. His Salary was ſo inconſiderable, that Poverty obliged him to leave Rome. He went to Florence, where he was Profeſſor a conſiderable time, and had a great many Hearers; but, hoping to meet with better Fortune in France, he removed into That Country, and died there ſoon after, being very far advanced in Years. He had a bad Pronunciation; and regarded nothing but his Studies (a). Platina gives him the Character of being perfectly ſkilled in the Greek and Latin Tongues (b). I ſhall take notice, in the Remarks, of a Miſtake of Gabriel Naudé [A].

(a) Taken from Vola-tarran. lib.
21. pag.
775.

[A] A Mistake of Gabriel Naudé. Having said, that one Hermomymus of Sparta taught at Paris, he adds; Afterwards there arrived another, called Tranquillus Andronicus Dalmata, who was the last of those, who came thither in the Reign of, Lewis XI. (1). It is plain, that he confounds Andronicus of Thessalonica with him, who is the Subject of the following Article. Moreri has committed the same Fault; and, by endeavouring to distinguish, he is become more embroiled. He will have it, that Tranquillus Andronicus, Professor of the Greek Tongue at Paris, was not the same, who had a great Share in Cardinal Bessarion's Friendship; and yet 'tis certain, that the Client of That Cardinal is the same with him, who was Professor at Paris. Moreri should not have called him Calixtus Andronicus, but Andronicus Calixtus. Consider these Words; which inform us, that he was related to the famous Theodorus Gaza. "Gau- deo deoquidem plurimum, they are Philippus's Words, "in a Letter, which be wrote, from Milan to Gaza, "the Twenty first of January 1469. Eruclitissimum virum mique amissimum Andronicum Kallitum, "necessarium tuum, apud vos agere, id est in Mu- sarum & sapientie domicilio, quem ut verbis meis "salvere jubeas ab te peto, meque tuis opti Dno- "capitula τῆς δ'ισωθῆτος commenda (2) "

(2) Philoph. Epistol. lib. 29. See also a Passage of the sixteenth Book, and another of the seventeenth. These Passages were printed out to me, by Monsr. de la Moignon.

ADVICE to those, who exercise any particular Profession.

(1) See the Letter, which he wrote to the Auteur of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, fr January, 1685, Art. 5.

(2) Sueton.
de Illust.
Gramm.
c. 10. §.

(3) See Ca-laubon, upon this Passage of Suetonius.

(4) In Sue-
ton. ibid.

(c) De Histor. Latins.
pag. 42.

(b) Græci & Latinâ linguâ apprimè erudi-tus *Platina in Pane-
gyr. Boffa-riensis.*

(1) Naudé's Additions to the History of Lewis XI,
pag. 187.

There was, at the same time, another ANDRONICUS, a Native of Constantinople, who taught at Bologna [B].

"am overjoyed, that my dear Friend, and your Relation, the learned Andronicus Callistus, is with you, that is in the Residence of Philosophy and the Muses; whom I desire you to commend in my Name; and commend me to Bellarion's Family." This Andronicus Callistus was a Peripatetic, and wrote a Book de Physica scientia et fortuna, another de misera Constantinopoli, and some other Tracts mentioned by Father Labbé (3). Once more; Moreri should not have distinguished between him and the other, who taught at Paris; nor should he have said, that the latter was Professor at Basil. The Author of the Athenae antiquae et novellae places Antonius among the learned Greeks, who came into Italy, about the middle of the fourteenth Century (4). He meant, doubtless, Andronicus, and put [B] There was, at the same time, another ANDRONICUS, a Native of Constantinople, who taught at Bologna.] Philippus commends him in several of his Letters. I shall transcribe but one Passage out of the first Letter of the Twenty fourth Book, dated the last of October, 1464. "Quare non possum vos omnes, qui Bononiæ agitis, non mirari plurimum, quod cum vobis viri doctissimi eruditii copia data sit ad Græcam disciplinam penitus consequendam, malitis indocti esse quam docti. Nunquam equidem discendi gratia trajecissem in Græciam Constantinopolim, qua in urbe septennium egi, si istiusmodi mihi Andronicus Byzantius esset oblatum. ----- Wherefore I cannot sufficiently wonder at all you, who live at Bologna, who chuse to continue in Ignorance, when the Presence of one of the most learned Men puts it in your Power to acquire a perfect Knowledge of the Greek Tongue. For my own Part, I should never have passed into Greece, as far as Constantinople, where I resided seven Years, for the sake of learning it, if it had been in my Power to have had Recourse, at Home, to such a Byzantine Andronicus."

ANDRONICUS (TRANQUILLUS) born in Dalmatia, towards the end of the XVth Century, was about a Work, which he promised to publish [A]. He taught in the University of Leipzig, at the same time with Mosellan [B]. It will appear by my Remarks, that he was an Author (a). Erasmus wrote a Letter to him: It is the Tenth of the fourth Book.

[A] Was about a Work, which he promised to publish.] Paul Jovius having said, that the sad Condition Dalmatia had been reduced to, by the Turks, was an Obstacle to the Study of Literature; and that, therefore, he would not mention any learned Men of That Country, adds, unles Tranquillus Andronicus acquaints us with the Merit of his Countrymen. Let us produce the very Words of Paul Jovius. "Sic ut nemo dignus elogio comparatur, nisi in Lucem studiosè producat cives suos." Tranquillus Andronicus, præclarus Ciceronis æmulator, dum gravissimarum actionum ac Othomanicæ legationis obscurorumque nobis itinerum Commentaria perscribit (1). — Inasmuch that there seems to be no one worthy of an Elogy, unles Tranquillus Andronicus, the famous modern Cicero, shall display the Merits of his Countrymen, in his Commentaries on the important Transactions of the dark Embassy to Turkey." This Passage intimates, that Andronicus took a Journey to Constantinople, either as Envoy, or in the Retinue of an Ambassador. König is not so reserved; he says positively, that Andronicus was deputed to Turkey, and wrote a Book concerning his Negotiation: Legationem ad Turcam obiit, eamque suis commentariis illustravit. Authors, who amplify what they quote, cannot be sufficiently censured for it. Jovius speaks only of a Work, which Andronicus was about; König converts it into a Book actually published.

[B] He taught in the University of Leipzig, at the same time with Mosellan.] This I find in Simler: Hic, says he (2), litteras docuit Lipsiæ Pet. Mosellani tempore. He calls him Tranquillus Partebinius Andronicus, Dalmata, and makes him the Author of a Speech, printed at Ausburg, in 1518, and at Vienna, in 1541. The Subject of this Speech is to exhort all the Princes of Germany to make War against the Turks. There is another Speech of his de Laudibus Eloquentiæ, and some Latin Verses (3). Du Verdier's Supplements mention a Dialogue of the same Author, entitled Sylla (4): The Interlocutors are Cæsar, Sylla, Pompey, and Minos. It was printed at Leipzig in 8vo. The Year of the Impression is not set down in Du Verdier's Supplements.

(1) Jovius in Elog. pag. 299.

(2) Epitoma Biblioth. Gessneri, p. 806.

(3) Id. ibid.

(4) Id. ibid.

(a) See the History of Mahomet II, by Guallet, Tom. 2. pag. 210, 218, 234.

(b) König, Bibl. vet. & nova, voce Angiello.

(c) See the Catalogue of the Bodleian Library.

(d) In the first Part, pag. 400.

ANGIOLELLO (JOHN MARIA), a Native of Vicenza, wrote an History of Mahomet II, in the Italian and Turkish Languages; which he dedicated to him. It was very well received by that haughty Sultan, who not only greatly caressed Angiolello, but gratified him likewise with a Reward. The Author had been an Eye-witness of what he related; for, being one of the Slaves of the young Sultan Mustapha, he followed him in the Expedition to Persia, in the Year 1573. I speak of the dreadful War, which Mahomet made, in Person, with near Two hundred thousand Men, in the States of Ussun-Cassan. We may well wonder, that Angiolello, who doubtless knew the Haughtiness of this Turkish Emperor, ventured to insert, in his History, the injurious Words, spoken by Ussun-Cassan against Mahomet; when, discovering his Army from a rising Ground, near the Euphrates, he reproached him with Illegitimacy. Perhaps Mahomet never knew, that these Reproaches were perpetuated in this History; for Princes are not acquainted with every thing, which is contained in Books dedicated to them. However it be, Angiolello's Work was kindly received, and well rewarded (a). They, who say, that he flourished in 1524 (b), are not exact; but what they add, that he wrote the Life of Ussun-Cassan, is more accurate. A Work of Giov. Mario Angiolello, della vita e de' fatti di Re di Persia, — J. M. Angiolello, of the Life and Actions of the King of Persia, was printed at Venice, in 1553 (c). And I find in the Catalogue of Tbuanus's Library (d), Relatione della vita e de' fatti del Signor Ufuncassan, — A Relation of the Life and Actions of Ufuncassan, by our Angiolello. The Year, and the Place of the Impression, are omitted.

ANGLUS (THOMAS) an English Priest, distinguished himself no less by the Singularity of his Opinions, than by a Multitude of small Books, which he published in the XVIIth Century. He was of a very good Family; which he took Care often to acquaint the World with, in the Title-Pages of his Books [A]. He went by several Names [B]; and made some stay in most parts of Europe. He was Principal of a College at Lisbon, and Sub-Principal at Douay (a). Rome and Paris afforded him long Stations. He was a considerable time a Domestic of Sir Kenelm Digby's, for whose Opinions he had a very particular Value [C]. He resolv'd to continue a Peripatetic, and to oppose the Lights, which Mr Des Cartes would have afforded him [D]. Nay, he undertook to clear up the most impenetrable Mysteries of Religion by Aristotle's Principles; and, in order to it, he discuss'd the Doctrines of Liberty, and Grace; in which he entangled himself; and, because He gave free Scope to his private Opinions, he pleas'd neither the Molinists, nor the Jansenists. He was a Man of a penetrating and vast Genius; but he had not the Talent of distinguishing those Ideas, which are proper to serve as a Rule and Foundation, or of clearing up Difficulties (b). There was something Irregular in his Philosophy and Theology. Some of his Works were censur'd at Rome by the Congregation of the Index, and by some Universities [E], elsewhere.

(a) See the Book, entitled, Statera appensæ, pag. 52.

(b) See the Remark [D] in regard to his Objec-tions.

He

[A] Which he often took care to acquaint the World with, in the Title-Pages of his Books.] For Instance, his three Dialogues De Mundo, printed at Paris in 1642, have these Words in the Title-Page, Aubere Thoma Anglo, à generosa Albionum in Oriente Trinobantium præcipua oriundo.

[B] He went by several Names.] Mr Baillet's Remark (1) on this Subject is This. "Sir Kenelm Digby entertained the famous Thomas Anglus, an English Gentleman, and a Catholic Priest, of one of the most ancient Families in England. He had an Irish Outlook, and lived in great, but voluntary, Poverty. His true Surname was White; which he disguis'd sometimes under That of Candidus, sometimes That of Albius"; sometimes he called himself Bianchi, and sometimes Rich-worth; but he is scarce known in France by any other Name, than That of Thomas Anglus. . . . "Des Cartes generally called him Mr Vitus." Thomas Anglus subscribes himself, at the end of several Epistles Dedicatory, Thomas ex Albis.

(1) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. p. 245. ad ann. 1644.

[C] For whose Opinions he had a very particular Value.] This is the Title of one of his Books, printed at Lyons, in 1646. Institutionum Peripateticarum ad mentem summi viri clarissimi Philoſophi KENELMI EQUIITIS DIGBYÆ. — Peripatetic Institutiones, according to the Opinions of the Great and Famous Philosopher Sir Kenelm Digby. The Reason of this Title is to be seen in the Preface; "Quod ad mentem summi viri & clarissimi Philoſophi Kenelmi Equitis Digbyæ scripta pronunciem, inde est quod cum invidendo illo de animæ immortalitate labo totam naturæ compositionem à prima corporis ratione usque ad invisibiles animæ spiritualis articulos deſcenderit, & in omnium oculis intulerit, alia quam ipse præceſſerat incedere neque volui neque potui. Quicquid itaque de illo subjeſto vides, inde translatus est. — The Reason, why I say, they are according to the Opinions of the Great and Famous Philosopher Sir Kenelm Digby, is, because, in that admirable Book, of the Immortality of the Soul, This Great Man having dissected, and explain'd, the whole Human Composition, from the first OEconomy of the Body, to the invisible Construction of the Spiritual Soul, I neither would, nor could, tread in a different Path from him. Whatever, therefore, you meet with, in relation to this Subject, is borrowed from That Work". He acknowledged himself indebted to him, not only for his Philosophical Knowledge, but likewise for his great Skill in Divinity, with respect to the greatest Mysteries; as appears from his Book, intitled, "Quæſtio Theologica, quomodo secundum principia Peripateticæ Digbæanæ, five secundum rationem, & abſtrahendo quantum materia patitur, authoritate, humani arbitrii libertas sit explicanda, & cum gratia efficaci concilianda (2). — A Theological Enquiry; How, according to the Principles of the Digbæan Peripateticism, or according to Reason, and by abſtrahing from the Passiveness of Matter, Free-will is to be explain'd, and reconcil'd with Effectual Grace." He publish'd, in 1652, his Institutiones Theologicæ, super fundamentis in Peripateticâ Digbæana jactis, extractæ.

[D] And to oppose the Lights, which Mr Des Cartes would have afforded him.] Thomas Anglus (to have recourſe once more to M. Baillet.) (3) "was a Peripatetic, more extraordinary still, than Sir Kenelm Digby; and certainly he exceeded him in the Obscurity of his Notions, and the Incomprehensibility of his Thoughts. He was, otherwise, one of the most subtle Philosophers of his time, and had shaken off the Yoke of the Schools, which most Peripatetics submit to. Des Cartes — conceiv'd an high Esteem for him, from the advantageous Character given of him by Sir Kenelm Digby. He willingly suffer'd Thomas Anglus to propole his Objections. The Nature of these Objections, and the high Idea Sir Kenelm had given him of his Genius, made Des Cartes hope, that he would soon be one of the Followers of his Philosophy; but it appear'd, by the Event, that he depended too much on the Tractableness of Thomas Anglus. Anglus puzzled his Brains with the knotty Questions concerning Predestination, Liberty, and Grace, which began to make a noise in the Universities of Louvain and Paris. Being perswaded, that Des Cartes was not a Man appointed by God to give him the Solution of these Supernatural Difficulties; he chose rather to have recourſe to the Lights of Aristotle, in order to dispel this mysterious Darkness. What he wrote concerning these Matters, by the help of Aristotle, is not unlike the Obscurity of Oracles; which, perhaps, made him unintelligible to the Roman Congregation of the Index (4), and was the Reason, why the Jesuits consider'd him as a savage Divine (5). It will not be improper to take notice, in this Place, of his Answer to those, who charg'd him with being an obscure Writer: It will farther discover to us the Character of his Genius. "I value, myself, said he, (6), upon a Brevity, which becomes the Masters and Dispenſers of Sciences. If my Writings are obscure, it is the fault of the Divines, who give me no Opportunity of explaining myself. In short, either the Learned understand, or do not understand, me: If they understand me, and find me in an Error, they may easily confute me: If they do not understand me, they have no reason to exclaim against my Doctrine". This favours of one, who is extremely desirous of being talk'd of; and concern'd, that he has not a sufficient number of Adversaries to excite the Attention of the Publick. Risurunt aliqui bonum quod evidentiam jactet, cum tamen perobscure ipsum scribere, quotquot eum legant, queruntur. Respondet ille, se brevitati scientiarum traditoribus apte studere: Theologos in causa esse quod obscura maneant ipsius scripta, dum sese explicandi anſam præbere recusant. Adit vel doctos cum intelligere posse, unde & si errares scribat, ipsum confutare in proclivi est; vel non intelligere, & sic neque debere ipsi occulmitare; cum pessimus sit animi morbus calumniarii quod nescis. This Dilemma is somewhat sophistical.

[E] Some of his Works were censur'd at Rome, by the Congregation of the Index, and by some Universities.] This Congregation, by a Decree of the 10th of June 1658, condemn'd these Four Treatises of Thomas Anglus; Institutiones Peripateticæ; Appendix Theologica de origine mundi; Tabula suffragialis de terminandis fidei libris ab Ecclesia Catholica fixa; Tesseræ Romanæ vulgaris. The two last Pieces were publish'd against the famous Father Mareda, who, in a Paper War, was a perfect Knight-Errent; always ready to enter the Lists. He attack'd Thomas Anglus (7), but, instead of replying to the Tabula suffragialis, and to the Tesseræ Romanæ vulgaris, he made use of Intrigues, by which he caus'd these Pieces to be condemn'd by the Congregation of the Index (8).

(4) Decret. sacr. congr. collect.

(5) Iabbæo dicitur Theologaster.

(6) Prefat. Statera appensæ.

(7) He published, in 1654, Sonus litui adversus sonum tubæ. Thomas Anglus had publish'd, in 1652, Sonus buccinæ, c. m. appendice adversus mentem divinitus inspiratam Innocentio X.

(8) See the Preface to the Book, entitled, Statera appensæ, quod sit litus aequandæ facilitatem, printed in London, in 1651, in 12mo.

(2) It is a Book in 12mo, without the Place, or the Year, of the Impression. It appears, from the Preface, that the Author was, at that time, an old Man.

(3) Baillet, ubi supra.

He held a very particular Opinion, in relation to the State of departed Souls, and the Easiness of obtaining Salvation. I know not in what Year he died: He was still living, when Charles the Second was restored to the Throne of England. I have seen some Works of His, written after the Marriage of That Prince with the Infanta of Portugal. He was no Friend to the Jesuits; and he would willingly have been thought worthy of their Repentment [F]. I have been told, that, in the beginning of the War between Charles the First, and the Parliament, he wrote an English Book, in Defence of Passive Obedience, according to the Doctrine of the Church of England.

The Divines of Douay censured Twenty two Propositions, extracted out of Thomas Anglus's Institutiones Sacre.

He publish'd a Supplicatio postulativa Justitie, in Opposition to their Censure; wherein he complain'd, that they had been contented with an indeterminate Censure, attended with a respectivè, without particularizing each Proposition (9). He shews them, that they acted like prevaricating Divines. And, in truth, all simple People are by this means in danger of being mistaken, or of flandering their Neighbours. If you pronounce, in general, on Thirty Propositions, that they are respectivè rash, dangerous, and heretical, may not any one take That to be heretical, which is only rash, and That, which is downright Heresy, to be only a rash Assertion? This Reflexion will appear more strong in the Words of an anonymous Writer, who seems to be a Man of Parts and Judgment. He speaks in the following manner concerning the Decree of the Inquisition, of the 7th of December 1690, against Thirty one Propositions. "I know not, Sir," says the Prelate, addressing himself to the Doctor, "whether you have observ'd all the Address and Art of the Censure. You are not ignorant how these Gentlemen usually style Propositions; they do not say, that Each of them, in particular, is scandalous, or erroneous, &c. but they set them all down, one after another, though there were Five hundred, and then qualify these Propositions, thus placed in a heap, as they think fit; adding a respectivè at the end. So that private Divines are left to guess which of these Propositions have been condemn'd only as Scandalous, and which as Heretical, or in another Sense (10)". In the next Page a Counsellor of the Parliament is introduc'd expressing himself thus: "We should think it a Contempt of Justice, and a just Cause of being laugh'd at, and expos'd to the Indignation of the Publick, should we, when we give Judgment in a Cause, set down, on one side, all the Heads of it, and all the Claims of the Parties; and, on the other, the different Decisions confus'dly, and in a heap, with a respectivè; by which means the Judgment, being unintelligible, would occasion a thousand endless Suits". See the Reflexions, made on the same Decree of Alexander VIII, by the Author of the Difficulties propos'd to M. Steyaert (11). To return to Thomas Anglus; he rais'd several Doubts in relation to each Censure of the Divines of Douay; pretending, that, if they were not vindicated, it would rebound to Their shame, and his own Glory (12). When Intrigue has a greater share in the Censure of a Book, than Reason, the censured Person seldom fails to get the better of his Censors. We need only remember the Letter written by M. Arnauld, in 1683, to the University of Douay.

I have something more to add, concerning the Censures pass'd upon Thomas Anglus's Books. His Statera morum no sooner appear'd, but the Archbishop of Mechlen, and the Bishop of Antwerp, complain'd of it to the Internuncio at Brussels. A pragmatical Fellow went into England, to extort Subscriptions against the Doctrine of This Author (13), and it appears, that the Bishop of Chalcedon disapproved of the Treatise de medio animorum statu; and that a Report was spread, that he had publicly censured it (14). Father Baron observes, that the Sonitus buccinæ was censur'd, and that the Author maintains in it, that the Church has not the Power of determining, but only of giving her Testimony, concerning Tradition (15).

[F] He would willingly have been thought worthy of their Repentment.] This appears from the Preface, I have so often quoted (16). The Author of the Preface, and of the Book printed with it, is, perhaps, The same with Thomas Anglus. Perhaps he himself wrote against his Statera morum, as well to clear up some Difficulties, as to make the Publick take notice of a Book, which was in danger of being confounded with the Multitude of new Books. However it be, the Author of That Preface seems to be well acquainted with Anglus's Opinions, and well affected towards him. He expresses himself thus concerning the Jesuits. "Increbuerunt sæpiusculè rumores comminatos esse doctam illam Societatem se contra D. Albi Opera striduram calamum. Hoc idem ab iis maxime expectabant omnes, ut quos præcipue ac pene unice scriptis suis lacefferat. Attamen, si ex motivis prudentialibus suppressi sint libri illi jam scripti, si nulli omnino scripti fuerint, nihil dum editum est. Hic triumphat maxime D. Albius, & causam suam hoc discursu tueri solet; Minas illas, quas intendebant, clamores, quibus ipsi passim obstrepebant, manifesta esse indicia non desuisse voluntatem illum confutandi: Neque eo genio esse PP. Societatis ut quicquam fama sua charius habeant; unde evidenter constare solam eis desuisse potentiam, postquam ad tam insignem ignominiam propellendam adeo tardi extiterint. — It was frequently given out, that This Learned Society had threaten'd to draw their Pens against the Works of D. Albius. This was generally expell'd from them, and for this Reason in particular, because This Author had principally, and almost solely, exerted himself against the Jesuits in his Writings. But, whether the Books, already written, were suppress'd for prudential Reasons, or whether none were ever written, nothing as yet has been publish'd against him. In this Albius chiefly triumphs; to this he appeals in Defence of his Cause; that the Threatnings, which they gave out, and the Clamour, which they every where rais'd against him, were plain Proofs, that they did not want the Will to confute him; that their Reputation was the dearest Thing to the Society; consequently, that they wanted only the Power; since they enter'd the Lists so late in Defence of themselves, against so strong an Attack upon their Reputation." This Man, you see, who could not procure himself the Honour of being attack'd by the Jesuits, takes Advantage of their Silence, by imputing it to their Inability, not to their Infensibility.

(13) In eadem Pref. Statere.

(14) See the Epistle Dedicatorij of Th. Anglus's Book, entitled, Vellicatio-nis sue de medio animorum statu Ratio, printed in the Year 1653.

(15) Baron: lib. 4. Apolog. pag. 144.

(16) Statere apponit. See Cit. low (8).

(9) See the same Preface.

A REFLEXION ON Censures of Propositions, extracted from Books.

(10) Letter of an Abbot, to a Prelate of the Court of Rome, pag. 20. See Title-Page of my Edition has according to the Copy, printed at Toulouse, 1691.

(11) Difficult. à Steyaert Part. 9. pag. 249.

(12) Pref. Statere. See Citation (8).

(a) Plin. lib. 33. cap. 1.

(b) See Sili-gonius de Fastis Roman.

ANICIUS, a Roman Family. It was more Illustrious under the Christian Emperors, than in the time of the Republic, though it produced some Consuls before the Birth of Julius Cæsar. We read, in Pliny, of one Q. ANICIUS Prænestinus, who was made Curule Edile in the Vth Century of Rome (a). L. ANICIUS Gallus was Prætor in the following Century; viz. in the Year 585, and was so successful in Illyricum, that, in a Month's Time, he conquer'd it, and took King Gen-tius Prisoner [A]. He obtained the Honour of a Triumph the Year following (b). One

[A] In a Month's time he conquer'd Illyricum, &c.] and yet Anicius was oblig'd, in carrying it on, to take Scodra, a very strong Place. His Victory was so complete, that the King of this Country fell into

One of the Consuls of the Year 593 was called L. ANICIUS Gallus. I find, under the first Emperors, but one ANICIUS Cerealis, who was nominated to the Consulship in the Year of Rome 818 (c). He was engaged in a Plot against Nero; and killed himself in the Year of Rome 819. His Death was the less lamented, because it was remember'd, that he had discovered to Caligula a Conspiracy carried on against his Life (d). Many Persons of this Family were raised to the Consulship, after Diocletian's Reign; and it had never been seen, that two Brothers were Consuls at the same time, before the Year of CHRIST 395, when Probinus and Olybrius discharged this Office. They were the Sons of Probus, of whom I shall speak in his proper Place, and descended from ANICIUS, the first Great Man of Rome, who turned Christian [B]. The great Riches of this Family exposed it to many Slanders, as I shall shew, in speaking of Probus. The Benedictine Monks pretend, that the Founder of their Order was of the Family of the Anicii, and have published some Books, wherein they endeavour to prove, that the August House of Austria likewise derives it's Pedigree from it. This Fable was confuted by Streinius, in a Book intituled Anti-Anicianus, which was never printed: the Manuscript Copy is in the Emperor's Library (e). I shall take notice of a curious Particular in relation to the Subject of this Work [C].

(c) Tacit. Ann. lib. 15. cap. 74.
(d) Id. lib. 16. cap. 17.

(e) Lambecius, Commentar. Biblioth. Vindobon. Tom. 1. n. 50.

his hands, together with his Mother, his Wife, his Children, his Brother, and all the chief Persons of his Dominions; and he obtain'd a considerable Booty. This is Livy's Account of the matter: Anicius bello Illyrico intra triginta dies perfecto nuncium victoriæ Perpernam Romam misit, Et post dies paucos Gentium regem ipsum cum parente, conjuge, ac liberis, ac fratre, aliisque principibus Illyricorum. Hoc unum bellum prius perpetratum, quam captum Romæ auditum est (1). "Hoc Bellum (says Florus) (2) ante finitum est, quam geri Romæ nuntiaretur. — This "War was at an end, before it was known at Rome, "that it was begun." These Prisoners of Quality were only part of the Ornaments of the Triumph: The Wealth, and Spoils brought from Illyricum, and the Liberalities bestowed upon the Soldiers, made it very considerable. The General was more applauded by his Army, than Paulus Æmilius, who had triumphed not long before, was by his. Lætiior hunc triumphum esse secutus miles, multisque dux ipse carminibus celebratus (3). Lloyd observes, that the Consul of the Year 593 is the Son of Him, who conquered Gentius; but he quotes no Authority for it.

[B] ANICIUS, The first Great Man of Rome, who turned Christian.] These Words of Prudentius are the only Proof I can alledge for it:

Fertur enim ante alios generosus Anicius urbis Inlustre caput (4).

The Noble Anicius is reported to be the First Ornament of the City.

Baronius conjectures, that this Poet meant Anicius Julianus, who was Consul in the Year 322. Lloyd, being more positive, affirms, without quoting any Authority for it, that Anicius Julianus was the first Roman Senator, who embrac'd the Gospel; and that this was the Reason why most of the Emperors, from that time, took the Sirname of Flavius, and most of the Senators That of Anicius. I should be glad to see some Proofs of this. If Baronius's Conjecture be well grounded, Anicius Julianus may be compared to That French Lord, who procured himself to be the first baptiz'd in Imitation of Clovis, and took this Motto, God preserve the first Christian. 'Tis said, that the Lords of Montmorency are descended from Him; for which Reason they stiled themselves the first Christian Barons.

[C] I shall take notice of a curious Particular, in relation to the Subject of this Work.] Mr Baillet is of Opinion, that Streinius's Manuscript will never be printed, for two Reasons: One is That mentioned by Lambecius, viz. that it is an imperfect Work; the Second, more important than the First, and of which he took care to say nothing, is, that the "Anti-Anicianus does "not favour the Prejudices of the Vulgar, in the "hereditary Countries, nor the Notions of those,

"who, to make their Court to the Emperor, have "derived the Pedigree of the House of Austria "from the Anicii of ancient Rome. — The Author "undertook this Work, in Opposition to the Benedictine Monks, who seem to be infatuated with "their being related to the House of Austria, and "particularly to confute the Book of a Flemish Benedictine, called Arnold Wion, who, by a Concatenation of extravagant Conceits, produced the two "Branches of the Roman Family Anicia, one, as the "Origin of the Princes of the House of Austria, the "other of his Patriarch St Benedict (5). Mr Baillet adds, that Streinius said nothing of the Anicii, in his Book concerning the Roman Families, because it was not one of the Families of the old Stock. He informs us, that "Lambecius designed to answer "Streinius's Anti-Anicianus, in his Prologomena to the "Annals of Austria, which he promised." — And that it seems, he "had chosen for the Ground and "Model of his Answer (6), the Book, which a Benedictine Abbot, but of the Order of the Cisterciens, "whose Name was John Seyfrid, published twelve "Years after Streinius's Death, under the Title of "Arbor Aniciana; but that, though Seyfrid had intended to write against the Anti-Anicianus, it may be said, that Streinius would have been sufficiently revenged by Scioppius, who published, in the Year 1651, a small Dissertation, to ridicule this Seyfrid, and those of the same Stamp; at the very same Time, that another Monk, called Bucelin, to increase the Number of the Ridiculous, published his "Aquila Imperii Benedictæ. Scioppius, (Mr Baillet goes on) was not, upon this Occasion, the slanderous and satirical Writer he usually is; he appears "a faithful and zealous Servant of the House of "Austria; a Counsellor to the Emperor, and the King of Spain; engaged in the Interest of the Princes of their Name, upon several Accounts: infinitely more learned, than these idle Dreamers; and who had made himself formidable, in point of false Genealogy, above forty Years before, by his "Scaliger Hypobolimeus. If, therefore, Scioppius, though otherwise devoted to the House of Austria, thought himself obliged to oppose the Vanity and idle Fancies of these Monks, concerning the Anician Genealogy; we may very well infer from hence, that their Inventions are not for the Honour of the Princes of the House of Austria, or of St Benedict's Disciples; and that Streinius's Anti-Anicianus, must needs be a considerable Work. — Though Seyfrid gave out, that St Thomas was descended from the illustrious Family of the Anicii; it is not to be expected, that a French Dominican will ever publish an Aquila Imperii Thomistica. This is reserved, perhaps, for some German, or Spanish Dominican, a zealous Friend to the House of Austria. I desire the Reader to consider me, in this whole Matter, as a bare Transcriber.

(c) Tom. 2. of the Antia, n. 14. pag. 228, & seq.

(6) Tom. 2. Comment. Biblioth. Vind. pag. 418, & seq.

ANNA, the Name of some Persons, mentioned in the Scripture. The Mother of the Prophet Samuel was called ANNA or HANNAH. She was a very pious Woman, and very much beloved by her Husband Elkanah. She was barren; and this Misfortune afflicted her the more sensibly, as it exposed her to the Raillery and Insults

(1) Livius, lib. 44. cap. 32.

(2) Florus, lib. 2. cap. 23.

(3) Livius, lib. 45. cap. 43.

(4) Prudent. in Symm. lib. 1. ver. 553.

Insults of the other Wife of Elkanab. She so importunately petitioned Heaven for a Son, that her Prayers were at length heard (a); for God gave her Samuel, and afterwards three Sons, and two Daughters (b). The Book of Tobit, an Apocryphal Book among the Protestants, mentions one ANNA, the Wife of Tobit, and Mother of Tobias. In St Luke's Gospel, we read of ANNA the Prophetess, Daughter of Pbaniel (c). She was a very devout Woman, about Eighty four Years of Age, and had lived but Seven Years with her Husband. Baronius, who makes her a Cloyster'd Religious, is mistaken [A]. The Gospel mentions, likewise, a Man named ANNAS, who was High-Priest, among the Jews, in our Saviour's Time. His Son-in-law, Caipbas, had the same Dignity, when CHRIST was put to Death. As for SAINT ANNE, Mother of the Holy Virgin, and the most celebrated Lady of this Name, among the Roman Catholics, she is no where spoken of in the Scriptures, nor in the Writings of the Three first Centuries. St Epiphanius is the first, who mentions her; and yet the following Ages trumped up a long Legend concerning St Anne, as may be seen in the Article of S. JOACHIM, her Husband. I am surprized, that Erasmus met with but three Women of the Name of ANNA in ancient Books [B].

(a) 1 Sam.
chap. i.

(b) Ibi d.
chap. ii. ver.
53.

(c) Lu'e
chap. ii. ver.
22.

* Catech.
10.

(1) Baron.
in Annal.
Eccles.
Tome. 1. ad
ann. 1. n.
41.

(2) Οὐκ
ἀφ' ἑαυτοῦ ἀλλ' ἐκ τοῦ ἐκείνου καὶ θεοῦ λατρεῖν καὶ
ὑμῶν

She departed not from the Temple, but served God with Fasting and Prayers, Night and Day.

(3) Cysau-
ben. Exer-
cit. 2. n. 13.

(4) Ruthe-nensis.

[A] Baronius, who makes her a Cloyster'd Religious, is mistaken.] These are his Words: "Quo- modo autem Anna nunquam ē templo discessisse dicatur, ut merito eandem S. Cyrillus * Hierosoly mitanus religiosissimam monilem appellet, consule quæ superius dicta sunt de præsentatione Dei genitricis in templo (1). --- How Anna is said never to have departed from the Temple, upon which account St Cyril of Jerusalem justly calls her a most devout Nun, consult what has been said, above, concerning the Presentation of the Mother of God in the Temple." Here are two things: I. Baronius takes in a literal Sense St Luke's Phrase, She departed not from the Temple (2). II. He thinks S. Cyril very much in the right in calling Anna a most religious Nun. But it is plain, that St Luke's Words ought not to be stretched beyond the Sense, which is commonly put upon such Expressions, when, to signify that a Man goes frequently to any Particular House, we say, That he never stirs from it, that he is there Night and Day. This is particularly said of your devout Ladies, who go to Church several times in a Day; we usually say, that they never stir from Church, that they are continually praying at Church. As to what concerns St Cyril, it is not true, that he calls the Prophetess Anna a Nun. The Latin Translator of That Father should have considered, that the Words ἀσκήτης, ἀσκήτρια, were used, not only to denote Monks and Nuns, but all those, likewise, who exactly practised religious Exercises. This is what the learned Cajaubon clearly shewed against Baronius (3).

[B] I am surprized, that Erasmus met with but three Women of the Name of Anna in ancient Books.] The first is Dido's Sister; she was called Perenna; and he says, she was placed among the Gods, on account of the extraordinary Affection she shew'd for her Sister. The Adventures of this Anna are so fully related in other Dictionaries, that I think it unnecessary to mention them. The second is Elkanab's Wife: It is sufficient Commendation of her, says he, to say, that, by the particular Favour of God, she brought forth, in her old Age, Samuel, who was a very pious Priest, and a most uncorrupt Judge. "Cujus ad laudem abunde satis est, quod & anus, & auspice Deo, Samuelem pepererit, non utique sibi sed Deo quidem sacerdotem religiosissimum, populo vero iudicem incorruptissimum (4)." The third is the Mother of the Holy Virgin. He says, that this last Anna was greatly celebrated by Rhodolphus Agricola, and Baptista Mantuanus. Thus Erasmus is guilty of Errors both of Omission and Commission. How came he to forget Pbaniel's Daughter, and Tobia's Mother? Where did he find, that Samuel's Mother was an old Woman? The sacred Writer says no such thing; but rather gives us to understand, that she was still young enough. Had she not five Children, after she had weaned Samuel? The same Historian makes her reply to the High Priest Eli, who charged her with Drunkenness, that she had drank neither Wine, nor Beer. Josephus, not thinking this Answer extraordinary enough, furnishes her with another, to wit, that she never drank any thing but Water. Mr Moreri chose to follow the Jewish Historian, rather than the Scripture. By the way, the Lady, to whom Erasmus wrote the Letter, which mentions these three Anna's, might very well deserve an Article: He calls her Anna Bersala Principis Veriana. If I can discover her Family and Adventures, I here engage myself to take Notice of her.

Since the first Edition of this Work, I have made some Discoveries in relation to this Lady. See the Article BERSALA.

(4) Erasmi.
Epist. 38.
lib. 9. p. 88.
500.

ANNAT (FRANCIS), Confessor to Lewis XIV, was a Native of Rovergue (a). He was born the fifth of February, 1590, admitted Jesuit in February 1607, and professed the fourth Vow, in the Year 1624. He taught Philosophy at Toulouse, for the space of six Years, and Divinity for the space of seven; and, having honourably discharged the Duties of those Places, he was invited to Rome, to exercise the Function of Censor-General of the Books published by the Society, and That of Theologist to the General of the Order. Being returned into his own Country, he was made Rector of the College of Montpellier, and afterwards of That of Toulouse. He assisted, as Deputy of his Province, at the eighth General Assembly of the Jesuits, held at Rome, in 1645, and gave so many Proofs of his Merit, that Father Vincent Carafa, General of the Jesuits, found no one better qualified to fill the Place of Assistant of France, which became vacant sixteen Months after. The ninth General Assembly gave him again the same Employment, under Francis Piccolomini, General of the Society; after whose Death he was made Provincial of the Province of France. Whilst he was invested with this Dignity, he was chosen Confessor to Lewis XIV; and, after he had been sixteen Years in this Post, he was obliged to demand his Dismission, his great Age having very much impaired his Hearing. As the King was very well pleased with him, it was with Reluctance He granted his Request. Father Annat lived but four Months, after his leaving the Court, and died in the Maison Professe de Paris, the fourteenth of June, 1670. Father Sotuel, who supplies me with these Particulars, represents him as a Man endowed with great Virtues; as perfectly disinterested, modest, and humble; and exact in practising the

Observances

Observances and Discipline of his Order; as never employing his Interest for his own Advantage, or in order to raise his Family; and as expressing a great Zeal for Religion (b). He was the Flail of Heretics, (says Sotuel) (c), and particularly attacked, with incredible Zeal, the new Heresy of the Janfenists; he left nothing unattempted to get their Heresy condemned by the Pope, and restrained by the Authority of the Most Christian King; besides, he wrote with such Force of Reason against it, that his Adversaries have not been able to make any solid Reply. Some will not grant Father Sotuel this last Point; but as to what concerns the Disinterestedness of Father Annat, it will easily meet with Credit; for they, who would be informed, may know, that this Father Confessor never raised his Family. It is reported, that the King had been heard to say, that he did not know, whether Father Annat had any Relations (d). Some he had, who did not forget themselves, and who paid him a Visit at the Louvre; but they did not return with any Preferment. There are times, when the Greater and Lesser Nepotism, are both in vogue; sometimes the Lesser Nepotism prevails, whilst the Greater is suppress'd. In Father Annat's Time, the greater Nepotism was at it's Height (e); but the Lesser, with regard to the Father Confessor's, was, in Paris, at it's lowest Ebb. I make use of this Restriction, because there are many other dignified Clergymen, who heap upon their Relations all the Preferments they can procure. Many, no doubt, followed the usual Course, whilst Father Annat gave no Encouragement to his greedy Relations of Roüergue. We may read, in the Amours du Palais Royal, that he desired to lay down his Place [A], when Madam de la Valiere was taken into Favour. Were this true, it would be the finest Circumstance of his Life, and the noblest Subject for Encomium, that the Life of a King's Confessor can afford. The Author of this Satire, who, according to the Nature of this kind of Works, made it his Business to give a malicious Turn to every Thing, was very sensible of this; and, therefore, took care, that the Reader should find nothing commendable in it. A Satire of a much later Date has been handed about, which, besides Father Annat's desiring his Dismission, whether true or not, contains so many notorious Falshoods [B], that it is hard to conceive how any Man can tell publick

Lyes

(1) Intrigues of the Court. This Book made it's first Appearance about the Year 1665.

[A] We may read, in the Amours du Palais Royal (1), that he desired to lay down his Place. Here is the Passage. "Poor Father Annat went also to him, by the Suggestion of the Queens, and pretended a Desire of quitting the Court, artfully insinuating, that it was on account of his Amours. The King fell a laughing, and immediately granted him his Dismission. The Father, finding himself taken at his Word, would fain have accommodated the Matter; but the King, laughing on, told him, that, for the future, he would have no other Confessor than the Rector of the Parish. It is difficult to express, how vexed the whole Society was at his Indiscretion." Upon this, I may be asked three Questions. I. Whether it be true, that Father Annat desired to lay down his Place. II. Whether it was a mere Feint, and, out of Complaisance to the Queens. III. Whether he actually left the Court; or whether the Jesuits made up the Matter. All I can say, in Answer to the first Question, is, that I know nothing of the Matter, and that the Authority of a Satirist is of no Weight. I believe him, no further than he proves what he advances. Writers of History are disappointed from taking an Oath, and producing their Witnesses (2); their Word is sufficient to procure Credit to what they say; but as to Writers of Libels, it is a Favour, a piece of Civility, to believe them, even upon their Oath, confirmed by Witnesses. I am still more ignorant, as to the second Question: I do not pretend to dive into the Hearts of Men. And, as to the third, I only know what is publicly known, viz. that Father Annat was the French King's Confessor, without Interruption, till the Spring of the Year 1670.

(2) Entwined, History of Father La Chaise, a Jesuit, and Confessor to Lewis XIV. Cologne, for Peter Marten, 1693, in 12mo. The second Part was printed two Years after.

(4) Pag. 106.

[B] A Satire of a much later Date (3). — contains so many notorious Falshoods, &c. The Author of this Satire supposes, that Father La Chaise was very instrumental in moving the Pope to grant what the King desired of him, and that Cardinal Mazarin, as an Acknowledgment for this Service, was very kind to him, recommended him to the King, and even got him admitted into the Council of Conscience, which was properly to make him the Confessor's Coadjutor (4). The Year 1663 is set down in the Margin, for the Date of the Cardinal's first Marks of Favour, and the Year 1665, for the Admission into the Council of Conscience. What an Ignorance of modern History is here? Who does not know, that Cardinal Mazarin died, in 1661? The Author adds, that Father La Chaise supplanted Father Annat, by excusing the King's Love for Madam de la Valiere, from the Infirmity of Human Nature, whilst the Confessor trained the King every Day on that Account, and would never suffer him to rest (5). He farther adds, that Madam de la Valiere, being informed of Father La Chaise's Maxims, desired to have him for her Confessor, and proposed it to him, by Mr de Montausier (6); but, having afterwards discoursed with this Jesuit, she chose rather to procure him Father Annat's Place; and, having spoke to the King about it, the Affair was concluded in a few Days; Father Annat, who denounced the dreadful Judgments of God, and desired leave to retire, being taken at his Word (7). The Year 1667, is set down in the Margin. This is an unaccountable piece of Assurance; for it is notorious, that Father Annat did not take leave of the Court, till the Year 1670; and that a Jesuit of Roüergue, called Father Ferrier, succeeded him in his place of Confessor to the King; and that Father La Chaise had not this Employ, till after the Death of Father Ferrier, who died the Twenty ninth of October 1674 (8). What do these Writers mean, when they publish such gross Falshoods? Do they not perceive, that they act contrary to their main Design? For do they not prejudice the Reader against their Books, when they appear so ignorant of Things, which are publicly known, or so void of Shame, as boldly to publish evident Untruths? Do they approve the Maxims of those, who preach up pious Frauds to a numerous Congregation, reasoning with themselves in this manner? For one Hearer, who will know that I am mistaken, a thousand will not discover it; a thousand, therefore, will be edified by my Fraud; one only will be offended at it; the mischief, therefore, will be trifling, in comparison of the Advantage, which will accrue from it: It is therefore a Point of Clarity and Prudence, to maintain such a Falshood before this numerous Assembly. I know not whether our Libellers argue in the same manner; but I am sure they would succeed better in their Design, if they took more care to observe Chronology, and the Rules of Fiction. Est ars etiam maledicendi, says Scaliger (9), there is an Art of Slandering; they, who are ignorant of it, do not so much defame their Enemies, as how few desirous they are of defaming them. To conclude, I make this Remark, rather for the Advantage of the Publick, than for the Interest of any private Person. It is fit, that, in our Age, we should be able to judge of the Satires, which have been published within these thousand Years; and that Posterity should know how to judge of those, which appear in

(b) Biblioth. Scriptor. Societ. Jesu, pag. 211.

(c) Hereticum malleum, & nominatim Janenitarum hæresis oppugnator acerrimus. Ibid.

(d) Adeo ut dixisse aliquando perhibetur sua Majestas nescire se an P. Annatus haberet aliquos sanguines sibi conjunctos. Id.

(e) Trist. of the Court of Rome.

(1) Pag. 107.

(5) Pag. 108.

(7) Pag. 115.

(8) Ex Nathan. Sotueli Biblioth. Societ. pag. 449.

SOME Thoughts concerning Satire.

(9) Scaligeriana 2. pag. 10.

(f) See the
and the Remark [C].

Lyes with so little Caution. Father Annat wrote many Books [C] both in French and Latin. The Latin are much more in Esteem, than the French; because he was more capable of handling a Point of Divinity, according to the Dogmatical Method of the Schools, than of turning it according to the Genius of the Age he lived in. Nevertheless his French Works are very much commended in an Answer to the Lettres Provinciales (f). What I have said in general of the Nephews of this Father Confessor, ought not to prejudice any one against them; for One of them, who is General of the Fathers of the Christian Doctrine, is accounted a very learned Man, and has published a Latin Book of Divinity, which is very much esteemed. It is a Metbodical Apparatus to Positive Divinity (g). You will meet with an Abstract of it in the Journal des Sçavans, of the Thirteenth of September, 1700.

(g) Nouvelles de la Repub. des Lettres, for April, 1700.
pag. 477.

our Days. In order to judge rightly of them, we must pay no regard to this Principle, It is not probable, that, if this thing were evidently false, any one would dare to publish it.

This will, no doubt, be the principal Use of this Remark; for, in short, the best grounded Reflections or Conclusions will never be able to stop the Pens of this Species of Writers. Notwithstanding the Indignation of honest Men against the fabulous and satirical History of Father la Chaise, another Piece, much worse than this, appeared five Years after. It is, from beginning to end, an Heap of Falshoods and chimerical Adventures, related with the utmost Impudence, and in a Style stuffed with Obscenities. The Title of this fine Performance is as follows. Histoire des Intrigues amoureuses du P. Peters, &c. — The History of the amorous Intrigues of Father Peters, a Jesuit, Confessor to James II, late King of England, containing his most private Adventures, and his true Character, and likewise the Counsels he gave to that Prince, concerning his Government. Cologne, for Peter Marteau, junior, 1698. As long as there are Persons, who take a Pleasure in purchasing this kind of Books, there will be Bookellers, who will be at the Charge of the Composition and Impression of them, and, consequently, base and mercenary Writers will never be wanting for such a Work. It is therefore an incurable Disease.

[C] Father Annat wrote many Books. His Latin Treatises, published at several Times, were collected into three Volumes, in 4to, and printed at Paris, for Cramoisy, in 1666. The first contains a Work entitled De Scientia media contra novissimas impugnationes, una cum exercitatione scholastica sub nomine Eugenii Philadelphi, & appendice ad Guilielmum Camerarium. — Of the middle Science, against it's new Opposers; together with a Scholastic Discourse, under the Name of Eugenius Philadelphus, and an Appendix to William Camerarius. The second contains a Piece entitled. Augustinus à Jesuitis, hoc est Janenensis, vindicatus. — St Austin vindicated against the Janenists. The following Treatises are in the third. Catholica disputatio de Ecclesia præsentis temporis. — De incoacta libertate contra novum Augustinum Iprentis Episcopi, Vincentium Lenem, Apologiam Janenii & Commentatorem quinque propositionum. — Informatio de quinque propositionibus ex Theologia Janenii collectis, quas Episcopi Gallicæ Romano Pontifici ad censuram obulerunt. — Janenius à Thomistis gratiæ per se ipsam efficaciæ defensoribus condemnatus. — Cavilli Janesegianorum contra latam in ipsa sede Apostolica sententiam, seu consultatio libelli trium Columnarum (to). i. e. A Catholic Disputation concerning the present Church. — Of unrestrained Liberty, against the new Augustin of the Bishop of Ypres, Vincentius Lenes, Apologist for Janenius, and Commentator on the five Propositions. — An Information concerning five Propositions collected from the Divinity of Janenius, presented by the French Bishops to the Pope, for his Censure. — Janenius, condemned by the Thomists, Defenders of the Notion of Grace efficacious of itself. — The Cavils of the Janenists against the Sentence pronounced against them by the Apostolical See; or a Confutation of the Book of three Columns. Thus there are five Treatises in the three Volumes; to which are prefixed some Advertisements to the Readers, and some Notes on the Journal de Santi-amour. The following are the Titles of some of his French Works. An Answer to a Book entitled, la Théologie morale des Jésuites. — An Answer to some Queries about Mr. Arnauld's first Letter. — The Fairness of the Janenists, is getting their Authors. — A Collection of several Falshoods, and Impostures, contained in the Journal of what passed in France, on Account of the Morality and Apology of the Casuists (11). Remedies against the Scruples, which hinder the subscribing the Formula, &c. — Remprois on the Conduct of the Janenists, in printing and publishing the New Testament, printed at Nions. — Janenius's Doctrine contrary to the Holy Apostolical See, and to St Augustin. I omit the Titles of some other Books, which, may be seen in Father Sotuel. But, let me observe, by the way, that He, and Alegambus his Predecessor, have forgot one thing, which should not have been omitted. They should have set down the Titles of Books in the Language the Author made use of, and then have translated them into Latin. It is a common thing to be disappointed, when we enquire after a Book, not by it's true Title, but by the Sense of it, when, perhaps, it is really in the Bookeller's Shop or Warehouse. To conclude, though Father Annat was a very old Man, at the time of the Dispute with the Janenists about subscribing the Formula, and the Version of Mons, he published several small Works, in 4to. He was not contented to use his Interest with the Prince, in order to serve the Cause, but defended it, likewise, with his Pen, to the last Drop, of his Ink.

I must not forget the Praises, bestowed upon him, in an Answer to the Lettres Provinciales of Mr. Pascal, which was reprinted in Holland, in the Year 1696 (12). "As for the Jesuits, who ventured to write against Pascal, what do you think of Father Annat, who is the Author of the Book, entitled, La bonne foy des Janenistes, and to whom the seventeenth and eighteenth Provincial Letters are inscribed? Father Annat, answered Cleander, was, in my Opinion, a Man of very good Parts: The Jesuits published nothing better, than what he wrote on the Points controverted at that Time. This good Man (for I knew him to be such; and indeed he was: Modesty itself) would have been qualified for a Writer, even in French, if he had but applied himself a little more to the Study of our Language. He has some Strokes as elegant, as lively, and as agreeable, as any I ever met with in other Authors. I am of your Opinion, replied Eudoxus; And, not to mention his Virtue, for which I have heard him commended even by some of the contrary Party, I have besides observed in him an accurate Judgment, and sometimes such a Delicacy of Expression and Rallery, as is seldom to be met with in a Scholastic Divine."

(11) The Clergy of Paris made an Apology for this Journal, in their eighth Writings.

(12) Entre-tiens de Cleandre & Eudoxe, pag. 70, So. Dutch Edition.

(to) It is in Father So-tuel Calamnismum.

ANNIUS of Viterbo, a famous Impostor. See NANNIUS.

(a) Cave's
Historia Literaria Scriptorum Ecclesiasti-
pag. 627.

ANSELM, Archbishop of Canterbury, one of the most illustrious Prelates of his Times, died the Twenty first of April, 1109, in the Seventy sixth Year of his Age (a). He wished to have lived a little longer, to finish a Treatise on the Origin of

the

(b) He calls himself Mon. Peter to show his Work was printed in 1668, in 12mo.

the Soul [A]. His Article is very long in Moreri's Dictionary; to which I refer the Reader. The Monks of Lerins, who placed this great Prelate in the Chronology of their Saints and famous Monks, are confuted by the Author (b) of a Book, intitled, The Monks investigated (c). We shall see, below, that he made use of an Argument for the Existence of a God, which Mr Des Cartes very much improved [B].

(c) Mémoires Trévoux, Tom. 1. pag. 49.

[A] He wished ----- to have finished a Treatise on the Origin of the Soul. This Wish of his made a Doctor of Louvain say, That the Doctrine of the Propagation of Souls substituted to the end of the eleventh Century. These are his Words. "Imo utique ad tempora S. Anselmi, hoc est Annum Christi M. C. in Occidente durasse videtur hæc de immutabilitate traditione dubitatio. Nam cum paulo post mortuus S. Pater decumberet, dixisse scribit familiaris & confessor ejus Edimerus, Si Deus mallet, me adhuc inter vos saltem tam diu manere, donec questionem, quam de anime origine mente revoleo, absolvi possim, gratissus acciperem: eo quod nescio, utrum aliquis eam, sine defectu, sit absoluturus (1). ----- This doubtful Opinion concerning the Propagation of Souls; ex tradidit, seems to have continued to the Time of St Anselm; i. e. to the end of the eleventh Century. For Edimerus "his Acquaintance, and Companion, informs us, that the Holy Father, on his Death-bed, said; I should be thankful, if God would grant me a longer Life: at least 'till I have finished the Question, which employs my Thoughts, concerning the Origin of the Soul; since I know not, whether, after my Decease, any one will undertake to finish it." I have elsewhere (2) cited Thomas Bar- tholin, who has made a Reflexion on this Thought of Anselm.

[B] He made use of an Argument for the Existence of a God, which Mr Des Cartes very much improved. The Catalogue, which Mr Baillet has given of the Authors, whom they say Mr Des Cartes pirated, contains these Words. "St Anselm likewise is placed in the Number of the Ancients, to whom Mr Des Cartes was obliged for his Argument, in proof of the Existence of a God; drawn from hence, That a most perfect Being, or at least the most perfect that we are able to conceive, implies Existence. The Argument is to be found in a Book, which this Saint wrote against The Fool, in Answer to an anonymous Author, who had wrote in Defence of The Fool, against an Argument, which St Anselm had advanced in his Book, entitled, Prologion (3). Observe, that Huetius remarks, that Thomas Aquinas refuted this Argument. Celebris illa argumentatio ----- tota est Anselmi, & in Prologio, & in Apologetico contra Gaunilonem, eandemque expoluit Thomas Aquinas, & refellit (4). ----- This famous Argument belongs solely to Anselm; but in his Prologion, and his Apologetic against Gaunilo; it has been explained and refuted by Thomas Aquinas."

† Tom. 2. of 111 Letters, pag. 276, &c.

|| With Leibnitz. Epist. MS. Tom. 3. Oper. Anselm. Edit. Colonien.

(3) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. pag. 336.

(4) Huetii Conf. Philol. Cartes. pag. 204.

(1) Libertus Eberhardus Philosoph. Christ. de Anima; lib. 41 cap. 3. pag. 812.

• Edimer. in the Life of S. Anselm apud Suriem, April 21.

(2) In the Remark [E] of the Article AVERROES.

ANSELM, a bare-footed Augustin, born at Paris, will be too often quoted in this Dictionary, and has supplied Mr Moreri with too many Materials, not to deserve a Place here. He died at Paris, the seventeenth of January, 1694, in his Sixty ninth Year. He passed fifty Years of this Time, free from all Monastical Offices, and applying himself wholly to the Duties of a religious Life, and the Writing of Books. He was preparing a second Edition of his Genealogical History of the House of France [A], and the great Officers of the Crown, with Corrections and Additions, which had employed him a long time. He had also undertaken a Work, which treats of the Royal Houses, and other most illustrious Families, of Europe, and had already put the finishing Hand to it (a). I know not what will become of his Manuscripts; but I wish they may be published.

(a) Moreri's Généalogie, for the Month of January, 1694. See also the Journal des Savans, of the eighth of February, 1694, pag. 257.

[A] He was preparing a second Edition of his Genealogical History of the House of France, &c. He published it, together with That of the great Officers of the Crown, in the Year 1674, in two Volumes in 4to. A large Work of his had already appeared, entitled, The Palace of Honour, or the Historical Genealogies of the Illustrious House of France; and of several noble Families of Europe. This Work was printed at Paris in the Year 1668. It contains an Abstract of several Particulars, relating to Hereditary, the Coronation of Kings, solemn Entries, Baptisms of the Children of France, Royal Funerals, Military Orders, &c. This large Volume was not so correct; as the two which followed it, though they all stand in need of a new Edition, Revised, Corrected, and Augmented. They have certainly been of great Use; and it is difficult to conceive the Pains this good Monk must needs have taken, to collect so many Names, so many Marriages, so many Births, and so many Dates. It is in vain to resist; where Nature strongly inclines to any one Thing, the Monk's Habits never cures a Man of it. Father Anselm was born with a Talent for tracing Genealogies. The little Relation such Matters have to That kind of Life, which he had vowed, did not alter the Bent of his Inclination. One of his Brethren, though not of the Barefooted Order, was perpetually running after Geographical Discoveries (1). This was his natural Inclination; the Habit of an Augustin did not change it.

(1) Father Lubin. He died at Paris, the seventh of May, 1695. See his Elogy in the Journal des Savans, March 23, 1695.

ANTESIGNANUS (PETER), born, if I mistake not, at Rabastens [A], a small Town of Languedoc, in the Diocese of Albi, was one of the best Grammarians of the XVth Century. He had his Employ so much at Heart, that he chose to render himself serviceable to Youth, by applying himself to the Explanation of those Things, which render the first Entry upon Study difficult, rather than aim at Honour, by the Explanation of greater Difficulties [B]. He acquired Reputation enough to provoke

(1) Catel affirms this in the 366th Page of his Memoirs of the History of Languedoc. Mr. Baurand mentions this Town under Rapistanum. (2) At the Four hundred ninetieth Page of the Decriptio Fluminis Gallie, Edition of Paris, 1685. (3) Catel, ubi supra.

[A] Born, if I mistake not, at Rabastens. What induces me to believe so, is his writing himself Rapistanensis at the beginning of his Works. I know no Town, which can better give this Appellation, than That of Rabastens; which is called in Latine Rapistanum, or Rapistanum (1). I take it for granted, that the Printers have committed an Error in the Place, where Papyrus Masson speaks of this Town. They have put Rapistanum incolæ, instead of Rapistanensis (2). The three Radicals, which are the Arms of Rabastens (3), persuade me, that Papyrus Masson, or the Printers, have put the Letter a for the Letter e.

[B] He chose to render himself serviceable to Youth ----- rather than aim at Honour by the Explanation of greater Difficulties. Let him inform us of this Himself; and let us cite his own Words at length: They are Indications of a good Heart, and may perhaps be an useful Lesson to those ambitious Minds, who aim only at gaining the Applause of Those like themselves, but never study the Advantage of those, who stand most in need of Instruction. He had observed just before, that several learned Commentators had written on Terence; and provoke the Lash of Envy [C]. What he published on Terence may convince us, that he was the most indefatigable Man in the World [D]. I believe he taught a considerable time at Lyons. The Epistle Dedicatory of his Terence is dated from thence, in August 1556 (a). He inscribes it to three Brothers, whom he taught. His Greek Grammar has been reprinted several times. He understood Hebrew well enough to deserve a Place in the Gallia Orientalis of Colomies (b); and yet he is forgotten in it.

(a) Idibus Augusti.

(b) He wrote a Letter in this Language to Peter Colus, which has been printed. See Gessner's Epitaph.

and then adds, "Verum pueri novitii, ad quos maxime hujus laboris fructus pertinebat, vix ullum ex accuratis & meditatibus istorum commentationibus emolumentum percipere poterunt. Videntur enim viri illi graves incubuisse in eam curam & cogitationem, quæ sibi summam dignitatem & gloriam esset alitura. Itaque ardua tantum & obscuriora interpretando explanasse contenti, minutiora cetera, quorum doctrina & tractatio præcedere, vel certe conjungi deberat, leviter attigerunt: Ut Adolescentuli, qui his studiis initiatur, se ad cognitionem hujus rei, quam ex communi quadam hominum opinione reconditissimam arbitrantur, desperare posse pervenire. Ut igitur eos ab hujusmodi desperatione ad spem revocarem, ad minima ista me demittere non recuavi. Neque hic difficilia tantum enodavimus, sed ne unam quidem totius Terentii syllabam reliquimus intactam, quam ad unguem non excusserimus, idque absque ulla verborum pompa aut magnificentia, sed nudis literarum notis, & methodo quam potuimus brevissima & facillima. Doctrinæ opinionem affectent alii: Ego pro mea virili parte me puerorum & formandis & promovendis studiis omnem meam operam addidisse aperte & ingenue fateor (4). --- But School-Boys, who have the best claim to the Fruit of these Labours; reaped scarce any Advantage from such accurate and laboured Commentaries. For these great Men seemed to have studied only their own Honour and Reputation. Upon which account, they were contented to explain the more difficult and abstruse Points, but passed lightly over those of less Importance: the explaining and bandling of which ought to precede, or, at least, accompany That of the others: inasmuch, that Boys, when they are initiated in these Studies, despair of acquiring the Knowledge of what, from the general Opinion, they are taught to look upon as very difficult and abstruse. In order, therefore, to remove this Despair, I have contented to explain the most trifling Passages: I have, here, not only cleared up what was difficult: but have left not a Syllable of Terence untouched, or not fully examined; and That without a pompous Shew of Words; but by simple literal Marks, and as briefly as possible. Let others affect the Reputation of Learning: I freely own, My whole Care has been to form and promote the Studies of Youth." Compare with this the following excellent Passage of Erasmus. They relate to the Pains he had taken in enlarging a Dictionary: "Scimus hoc laboris genus esse maxime gloriosum, præsertim quum pauci reputant quot auctores sint excutiendi, ut voces aliquot ab aliis præteritis felicias. Verum hoc plus debetur illis gratiæ qui publicæ utilitatis

(4) Petrus Antesignanus, Epist. Dedicat. Terentii init.

"gratia non detrectant ingloriam ac molestiæ plenam industriam (5). --- I know very well that there is little Reputation to be gained by this kind of Labour; especially since so few consider, how many Authors are to be turned over, in order to select certain Words omitted by others. But, for this very Reason, They deserve the greater Thanks, who, for the sake of public Utility, do not decline an inglorious and troublesome Task."

(5) Erasmus præfatione in Lexicon. It is the 218th Letter of the 28th Book, pag. 1722. See, likewise, the end of the first Chapter of the 18th Book of Pliny's Natural History.

[C] He acquired Reputation enough to provoke the Lash of Envy.] This he insinuates by a Common-Place Topic, which is seldom omitted in Epistles Dedicatory. He says, that They, to whom he dedicated his Terence, seemed to him the properest Persons to screen him from the Attacks of his Enemies. "Digni maxime atque idonei videbami, qui nostra à moris malevolorum fortiter & industrie tutari possitis (6)." There are few Compliments saller than this. Critics have no regard to the Dignity or Capacity of the Person, to whom a Book is dedicated. The Sieur des Accords ridicules, wittily enough, the Hopes grounded on the supposed Protection of those, to whom Books are dedicated (7). D'Aubigny found the Reflexions of this Author too just, that, after giving them a new Turn, he adopted them for his own (8).

(6) Antesign. Epist. Dedicat. Terentii.

(7) See the Preface to the Bignarræ de dea Accords.

(8) See the Epistle Dedicatory to the Classification of Sanci.

[D] What he published on Terence may convince us, that he was the most indefatigable Man in the World.] He published the Comedies of this Poet three several Ways: First, he published them with short Notes, and Contents at the Head of each Scene, marking the Accents of all the Words of above two Syllables; and setting down the Measure, and way of scanning each Verse, by it's Side. In the second Place, he published them with the Annotations of almost all the Authors, who have written on Terence. Lastly, he published them with new marginal Notes, and with a French Translation, and Paraphrase, on the three Comedies. He included every thing in the Translation, which was not in express Terms in the Original, between Crotchets; he marked all the References from the Translation to the Paraphrase with Letters. The varie lectiones have each their Parentheses, and Notes of Reference. This is sufficient to shew, that our Author was extremely laborious. Note, that, in the two last Impressions of his Terence, he inserted all that was contained in the first. Matthieu Bomhomme, a Bookseller of Lyons, was the Person he employed in this tripple Edition. The King's Licence is dated in 1556. The indefatigable Pains of the Author appears no less in his Treatise intitled, Thematis verborum investigandi ratio, and in his Præcis Præceptorum Lingue Græcæ. They are to be found in divers Greek Grammars.

ANTHERMUS, a Sculptor, and Native of the Isle of Cbios, was the Son of Micciades, and Grandson of Mahas, who had both been Sculptors. He left two Sons, who were of the same Profession; the Name of the one was Bupalus, and That of the other Athenis [A]. It was against Them that Hipponax wrote some very satirical Verses, in revenge for the ridiculous Representation they had made of his Deformity (a). I speak of this, more at large, in the Article of That Poet. See likewise the Article BUPALUS.

(a) Plin. lib. 36. cap. 5.

(1) In Ἰστ. πύνατ.

[A] The name of the one was Bupalus, and that of the other was Athenis. So Suidas calls him (1). In the Editions of Pliny, he was call'd Anthermus; But Father Harduin has struck out this Word, and put Athenis in the room of it. See the Remarks [C] and [E] of the Article HIPPOXAX. The Dictionaries of Charles Stephens, Lloyd, Moreri, and Hesman, call him Anthermus, in spite of Suidas.

ANTINOË, or ANTINOPOLIS [A], a Town in Egypt, on the Nile

[A] ANTINOPOLIS. Mr Baudrand says, twice in the same Page, that Stephen of Byzantium calls it so. I have not found it so, either in the Edition of Pinedo, or in that of Berkelius: I find in both of them, nothing more, than that the City

Ἀντινόεια, Antinoia, was likewise call'd Adrianopolis. Mr Moreri was not aware, that the latter Name, and Adrianople, are not different; he gives them as if they were.

Nile [B], and built, or repaired, by the Emperor Hadrian, in Honour of Antinous. If we may believe an Author of the IVth Century (a), it was once the Metropolis of Thebais. The same Author adds, that it was so populous, that, in his Time, it contained twelve Monasteries of Women (b). Ammianus Marcellinus mentions it as one of the three most celebrated Towns of all Thebais (c). It is not true, that Leo Africanus said it was called Antibios [C]. See the Remark [D] of the Article ANTINOUS; you will meet with some Particulars there concerning this City.

(a) Palladius, Histor. Lausac. cap. 4^{to}. apud Trifan. Comment. Histor. Tom. 1. pag. 541.

(b) Id. cap. 13^{to}. apud eundem lib.

(c) Amm. Marcell. lib. 22. cap. 16.

[B] A Town in Egypt, on the Nile. Dion Cassius positively asserts, that Adrian caus'd it to be built in the same Place, where Antinous died. 'Οὗ καὶ πάλιν ἐν τῷ χωρίῳ ἐν ᾧ τὸν ἔταβη, συνοικίσαι καὶ ὀνομασάσθαι αὐτὸν. Ururbem in eo loca, in quo ille obijt, restitutam ex eo nominari voluerit (1). He had said, that, according to Adrian's Relation, this unhappy Youth fell into the Nile. Since Adrian, then, would have the World believe, that Antinous was drown'd in this River; we must conclude, that the Town, which he dedicated to this Favourite, was built on the Banks of the Nile, and near the Place, where he said the young Man was lost. Pausanias expressly remarks, that This Town stood on the Nile: 'Εν τῷ Νείῳ πάλιν Αἰγυπτίῳ ἐστὶν ἱερὸν αὐτοῦ Ἀντίνου (2). In Egypto apud Nilum urbs de Antinoi nomine est appellata. From hence we may conclude, that the Ruins, which are seen Ten Leagues from the Nile, as Moreri says, are not Those of Antinopolis. At the same time, likewise, this concludes more strongly against the Ruins of the Town, which Mr Baudrand has situated Forty Nine Leagues from the Nile.

(1) Xiphil. in Adriano.

(2) Pausan. lib. 8. pag. 244.

[C] It is not true, that Leo Africanus said, It was call'd Antibios. This is another of Mr Baudrand's Mistakes. I believe I shall not judge amiss, if I ascribe his Mistake to the Liberty some take of paraphrasing Authors, whom they make use of. Consider well these words of Ortelius; "Antbios hoc die cix Joannis Leonis Africæ descriptione

"deprehenditur: — It appears from John Leo's Description of Africa, that it is at present call'd "Antbios". Compare them with these of Mr Baudrand, "Nunc in ruinis jacet, Antibios dicta teste "Leone Africano; — It now lies in Ruins, "having been call'd Antibios, according to Leo Africanus." You will perceive, that if this latter Writer had scrupulously confin'd himself to the Terms of the former, he had not made such a Slip. Ortelius might have disputed the Point, by wresting Leo Africanus's Words to his own Purpose; but Mr Baudrand cannot have recourse to Applications or Conjectures; it is incumbent upon him to shew, that Leo has positively said, that the Ancient City of Antinoe is call'd at present Antbios. Now this can never be made out; for Leo Africanus says only, that Antbios was built by the Romans on the River Nile, on the side of Affa; and that several Latin Inscriptions in Marble are yet to be seen there (3). He speaks of it as a very beautiful City, rendered considerable by the Industry, and good Disposition, of the Inhabitants; so far is he from being able to quote him as a Proof, that it is now quite ruin'd. Mr Baudrand adds, that it lies Forty Nine Leagues Eastward from the Nile. It is not, then, the Antbios of Leo Africanus. Mr Moreri deducts Thirty Nine of these Leagues; it's Ruins, he says, are to be seen Ten Leagues from the Nile. We have prov'd, in the preceding Remark, that Antinopolis stood upon This River.

(3) Leo African. Descript. Africæ, lib. 8. fol. 360.

ANTINOUS, Minion of the Emperor Adrian, was a Native of Bytbyne, in Bytbinia (a). We meet with nothing concerning his Family. His Beauty inflamed the Heart of Adrian in such a manner, that a more unbridled or extravagant Passion, than That of the Emperor for this young Man, has scarce been known. It never broke out so furiously, as after the Death of Antinous; for there were no Divine Honours, which Adrian thought too sublime for this Object of his Love [A]. Some say, that Antinous had given him the highest Instance of Affection, that is, had died for him [B]. Others affirm, that he drowned himself in the Nile, during the Stay which Adrian made in Egypt, about the CXXIII^d Year of the Christian Era. However it be, the Emperor mourned for him with the most effeminate Grief (b), and ordered Temples and Altars to be erected to him; which was performed with all

(a) This City was also called Claudiopolis. Xiphil. in Adriano.

(b) Multibriter flevit, Spartian. pag. 135.

[A] There were no Divine Honours, which Adrian thought too sublime for this Object of his Love. I insist not on the great Number of Statues, or Representations, which he caus'd to be made of him, almost in every Part of the World (1). I appeal to the Temples, which he order'd to be built to him; to the Priests, which he appointed him, and to the Sacred Games (2), and Mysteries, consecrated in Honour of him (3). Pausanias observes, that, by the particular Care of this Emperor, the Worship of Antinous was settled at Manitinea, because Antinous's Country was a Colony of it (4). Games were celebrated there every five Years, in honour of this Favourite; but the Mysteries consecrated to him were celebrated every Year. They, who build upon this, that there were Priests of Antinous, who assum'd the Title of Prophets; they, I say, who build upon this, and thence conclude that he had an Oracle, seek for Mysteries where there are none (5). These Prophets were only the Priests of Antinous, in That particular Town, which bore his Name in Egypt, and which was the Mother Church, and Center of this New Religion (7). Now, in the Colleges of the Egyptian Priests, They were call'd Prophets, who were in the Nature of Deans, or Superiors. See the Proofs of this, which the Learned Henricus Valefius furnishes, in his Annotations on Eusebius (8). There is an Inscription preserv'd, in which Antinous is placed on the same Throne with the Egyptian Gods, οὐδέποτε τὸν ἐν Ἀργυρῶν θεῶν (9). The Dignity of an Assessor to the Gods was much inferior to This. I shall not dissemble, what the Philosopher Celsus insists on, that the Egyptians would never suffer Antinous to be compar'd with Jupiter and Apollo (10). Origen maintains the contrary; but I confess he advances it without any Proof; or I do not understand his Reasoning.

[B] Some say — that Antinous — died for him. Adrian did not say so much; But Dion has no regard to the History of That Emperor, where he had read, that Antinous fell into the River Nile, and was drown'd. He delivers it as a constant Truth, that a certain Magic Operation, on which Adrian was employ'd, requir'd, that some one should voluntarily lay down his Life, and that Antinous accepted the Condition. The Abbreviator Xiphilinus, probably, has robb'd us of some Circumstances, which might clear up this Mystery a little; for it is not to be imagin'd, that Dion Cassius should report a Circumstance of this Nature in so concise, or rather so maim'd, a Manner. However it be, we cannot infer from the Narration of Xiphilinus, that Antinous laid down his Life, to save, or prolong, That of Adrian. We should rather conclude, that he submitted to Death, that the Augurs, by inspecting his Entrails, might be enabled to discover That Point of Futurity, which the Emperor searched for. Nor let it be alledged, after one of our Antiquaries (11), "That, had the Emperor been only curious to consult the Entrails of some Youth, in a Point of Divination, there had been no Necessity of making the Experiment on Him, whom he loved of all Men living: There were Youths enough, besides him, of exquisite Beauty, in That great Em-

(10) Apud Origen. lib. 3. pag. 133.

(11) Trifan. Comment. Histor. Tom. 1. pag. 541.

(1) Xiphil. in Adriano.

(2) Hegeippus, apud Eusebium Histor. Ecclef. lib. 4. cap. 8.

(3) Pausanias, lib. 8. pag. 244.

(4) Ibid.

(5) See Castaubon, and Salmon, upon Spartian, in the Life of Adrian, pag. 137, 143.

(7) See Hegeippus, apud Eusebium, Histor. Ecclef. lib. 4. cap. 8.

(8) See the Remark [D].

(9) See Spanhem. de Numism. pag. 657.

the Diligence, which might be expected from a Nation accustomed of old to the grossest Flatteries [C]. He would fain have persuaded the People, that Antinous delivered Oracles; and some were published in his Name; but it was generally believed, that Adrian had forged them (c). He caused the Town, in which his Favourite died, to be rebuilt, and called it after his Name [D]. He was overjoy'd, when they told him, that a new Star had appeared in the Heavens, supposed to be the Soul of Antinous [E]; and he himself was wont to say, that he had seen the Star of

Antinous

(c) See the Remark [D], towards the end.

(12) He ought not to have expressed himself doubtfully in this Point. See Apuleius, Apolog. pag. 301.

"pire (had Beauty been material (12) who might 'have serv'd for this Infamous Mytery.'" Let not this, I say, be alleged; for this Writer was himself apprized of the Invalidity of this reason, when he added these Words immediately after; But, perhaps, "The Secret of the Necromantic Art required, that He alone, as being his best beloved, should be sacrificed, to make the Ceremony more efficacious." He should have added the Words of Dion, that it was necessary the Victim should be a voluntary one. Now, Other Youths, whom the Emperor might have design'd for this Sacrifice, would not voluntarily have submitted to it. Do you not think it was necessary to use extreme Violence towards those beautiful Youths, whom Heliogabalus delivered to his Magicians? "Cœdit & humanas hostias, læstis ad hoc pueris nobilibus & decoris per omnem Italian patrimis & matrimis, credo ut major effect utrique parenti doctor. Omne denique magorum genus aderat illi, operabaturque quotidie hortante illo, & gratias diis agente quod amicos eorum invenisset, quum inspicere ret exa puerilia, & excuteret hostias ad ritum gentium talem suum (13). — He sacrificed, likewise, but man Victims, selecting for this purpose noble and beautiful Youths, whose Fathers and Mothers were still living; I suppose, that both Parents might feel the greater Affliction. Lastly, he was attended by all sorts of Magicians, whom he daily employ'd, returning the Gods Thanks, that he had met with their Friends, when he inspected the Entrails of the Children, and examin'd the Victims after his own Pagan Rites". The Magic of those Ages requir'd Victims of this kind; and St Justin observes, that it made choice of Youths of unspotted Chastity. Νεκυομαντῆσαι μὲν γὰρ καὶ αἱ ἀδιαφόρων αἰδῶν ἄνθρωποι. Necyomantie ipsæ & incorruptorum puerorum speculari inspectiones (14). Antinous would, in this respect, have been very unfit. To return to Adrian, I think we must suppose, I. That the Necessity was extremely pressing, which made him consent to the sacrificing of his Favourite. II. That the Desire of avoiding Death was to him a stronger Motive, than the Curiosity of diving into Futurity: I chuse therefore to follow Aurelius Victor, rather than Xiphilin. Aurelius Victor expresses himself thus, "Quæ quidem alii pia volunt religiosaque, quippe Hadriano cupiente fatum producer, cum voluntarium ad vicem magi propolissent, cunctis retractantibus Antinuum obsecravit referunt (15)". — "Others look upon it as a pious and religious Act; for, Hadrian being desirous of seeing into Futurity, and the Magicians requiring a voluntary Sacrifice for this Purpose, when all others declin'd it, Antinous, they say, offer'd himself." Add, if you please, these Words of Spartian. "De quo (Antinoo) varia fama est, aliis cum devotum pro Hadriano afferentibus (16). — Concerning whom (Antinous) there are various Reports, some affirming that he devoted himself for Hadrian".

[C] Accusom'd to the grossest Flatteries.] Among the Instances of base Complaisance for the Passions of Adrian, Cassaubon reckons what the Poet Panocrates did (17). He shew'd Adrian, as a Miracle, the Lotos Flower, which is not unlike a Rose, telling him it ought to be named the Antinoian, and that it grew on the very Spot, which had been sprinkled with the Blood of a Lyon, which He, the Emperor, had kill'd in Hunting. The Emperor was so pleas'd with this Discourse, that he order'd Panocrates a Pension in the Museum of Alexandria (18). Athenæus does not explain the Reason, why the Poet would have this Flower called after Antinous; but we may easily conjecture, that Panocrates's Design in it was to do honour to the Name of This Favourite. I imagined for some time, that this Passage of Athenæus had been the Occasion of a Mistake of Mr Moreri's, which I have mention'd at the End of this Article: But I alter'd my Opinion, upon Reading these Words of a Modern Author. Adrian — gave the Name of this wretch (Antinous) to a City of Egypt — as he had also given it to a Planet, to a Flower, to Temples, to Sacrifices, to Oracles, to Solemn Games; in short, he made a God of him (19). They, who compare this Passage with the Antinous of Mæris, will be able to judge whether That Writer knew how to make use of the Books he consulted.

[D] He caus'd the Town, in which his Favourite died, to be rebuilt, &c.] I have followed the Translator of Xiphilin, who speaks only of a City repaired; though Xiphilin makes use of the Word ῥοδοποιῖας. Others, not examining the Text so closely, say, that Adrian built a Town, which bore the Name of Antinous. Πόλιν ἐκτίσεν ἐπ' αὐτοῦ Ἀντίνοῦ (20). Urbem condidit Antinous cognominem. It was situated in Thebais, and was anciently called Beja, which was also the Name of the particular Deity adored there. Cassaubon affirms this (21), and observes, that the Egyptians, leaving the new Name to the Greeks, continued to call it Beza; but some, joining together the old and new Name, call'd it Bezantinum. Helladius, who was born there, did so (22). Let us not forget, that Antinous's Tomb was to be seen there. St Epiphanius informs us of it in these Words: "Ὡς ὁ Ἀντίνοῦ ὁ ἐν Ἀντίνοῦ κεκρυμμένῳ ὡς Ἀδριανῷ κατετάφη (23). After this manner Antinous, being buried by Hadrian in the City of his Name, was rank'd among the Gods. We learn from Origen, that Miracles were said to be wrought in This Temple of Antinous (24). It is there Salmastus places the pretended Oracle of This false and ridiculous Divinity. "Licet in multis Græciæ urbibus templâ & sacerdotibus habuerit Antinous, præcipue tamē cum coluelli videntur Ægypti, in ea urbe, quæ ab ipso nomen accepit; nam ibi sepultus est, ibi Oracula per eum reddi credebantur, ibi prophetas habuit (25). — Tho' Antinous had Temples and Priests in many Cities of Greece, yet the Egyptians seem to have been the principal Worshippers of Him, in that City, which had his Name from Him; for There he was buried; There Oracles were thought to be deliver'd by Him; and There he had his Prophets." What relates to the Oracle is attested by Origen (26), if the Passage be read as Salmastus has quoted it; Πρῶτον θεολογῶν ἀπὸ τῆς Ἀντίνοῦ ἀγῶν (27). See also Scaliger on Eusebius, n. 2135, where his Quotation differs from That of Salmastus; tho' Spencer vindicates the latter Reading, in the Forty fourth Page of his Annotations on Origen against Celsus. What induc'd me to call it a pretended Oracle, was this: I recollected these Words of Spartian: "Et Græci quidem, volente Hadriano, eum consecraverunt, oracula per eum dari afferentes, quæ Adrianus ipse composuisse iactatur (28). — The Greeks, to please Adrian, deified Him, affirming that he gave Oracles, which Adrian himself is said to have compos'd.

[E] A New Star, — Supposed to be the Soul of Antinous.] The like Flattery had been practised before, in Favour of Julius Cæsar. "Ludis quos primo consecratos ei hæres Augustus edebat, stella cœnita per septem dies continuis fuit, exoriens circa undecimam horam, creditumque est eam esse Cæsar in Cœlum recepti, & hac de causa simulacro ejus in vertice additur Stella (29). — At the first Celebration of the Games, consecrated to him by Augustus, a Comet appeared for seven Days successively, rising about the eleventh Hour; and it was thought to be the Soul of Cæsar receiv'd into the Heavens; for which Reason a Star is plac'd on the Head of his Statue." Ovid concludes his Metamorphoses by That of Cæsar's Soul into a Star.

Vix ea fatus erat, media cum sede Senatus
Constitit alma Venus nulli cernenda, suique
Cæsar is eripuit membris, nec in æira solvi

(19) Trifflant Comment. Histor. Tom. 1. pag. 541.

(20) Hegeppus apud Euseb. Hist. Eccles. lib. 4. cap. 8. See also Amm. Marcellin. lib. 22. cap. 16.

(21) Casaub. in Spart. Vit. Adriani. lib. 138.

(22) Apud Photium, Biblioth. pag. 1596.

(23) Epiph. in Ancorato, n. 108.

(24) Origen adversus Celsum, lib. 3. pag. 132.

(25) Salmast. in Spart. vit. Adriani, pag. 143.

(26) Origen ubi supra.

(27) Salmast. in Spartian. ubi supra.

(28) Spart. in Adriano. pag. 137.

(29) Sneton. in Cæsar. cap. 88. See the Penfence Diversities fur les Comètes, pag. 219.

(13) Lampridius in vita Heliogab. cap. 8.

(14) Justin. in Apologia, pag. 65. See Salmastus on Spartian, pag. 136, and Apuleius in Apologia, pag. 301.

(15) Aurel. Victor. in Cæsaribus.

(16) Spart. pag. 135.

(17) Casaub. in Spart. Vit. Adriani. pag. 137.

(18) Athen. lib. 15. cap. 6. pag. 677.

(d) Xiphil. in Adriano.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Trifan. Comment. Historiq. PG. 543.

Antinous (d). What is most surprizing in all this, is, not the prophane Complaisance for this Prince's Weakness, which in private was a Jest (e); but that the Worship of this new Deity should subsist a long time after his Death, and be still in vogue in the Reign of Valentinian (f), when there was no longer occasion to flatter this Prince, or to fear the special Edict, ordaining this Worship (g). So that the Adoration of Antinous subsisted entirely on a ridiculous Fondness in People for every thing, which they find established. The Fathers of the Church made their Advantage of this foolish Superstition, to expose the Vanity of the Pagan Religion. It was easy to trace this new Divinity to the Source, and thence bring the Original of all the rest into suspicion. People talked very differently of Antinous, according to the Differences of the Times; when they addressed themselves to Antoninus Pius, the adopted Son and Heir of Adrian, or to Marcus Aurelius, adopted by Antoninus Pius, according to the Intention of Adrian, they were not so imprudent, as to hint at the infamous Cause of his Deification. They touched upon that String with the gentlest Hand (h). But Tertullian, who lived at a greater Distance from those Times, and under Emperors, who had not the same Interest in the Affair, observed no Measures. Prudentius has pleasantly observed, that Adrian's Minion was raised to an higher Station than Jupiter's [F]; for Antinous sat down to Table, while Ganymede fill'd the Liquor. The former might have said,

(g) St Athanasius against the Gentiles, and Theodoret in the 7th holy Discourse, apud Trifan ubi supra, say, there was an express Edict of Adrian, enjoining the Worship of Antinous.

(h) Justin Martyr Apolog. ad Anton. Pium. Athénagoras ad Marcum Imper.

— mediis videor discumbere in astris
Cum Jove, & Iliaæ porrectum sumere dextra Immortale merum (i).

(i) Statius Silv. 2. lib. 4.

Methinks amidst the Stars reclin'd I lye
With Jove, th' Imperial Master of the Sky;
There from the Hand of the fair Trojan Boy
The Cup receive, and quaff immortal Joy.

The Children of this World have, in all Ages, made their Court more exactly to the Gods of the Earth, than to Those of Heaven. I cannot imagine, why Mr Moreri says, that Adrian believed, that Antinous was changed into a Flower, and into a Temple (k), and even ordered an Altar to be raised to him. Is not this supposing, that he built no Temples in Honour of him? And is this any truer, than the metamorphosing him into a Flower?

(k) See the Remark [C].

Passa recentem animam, cœlestibus intulit astris.
Dumque tulit, lumen capere atque ignescere sensit,
Emisitque sinu. Luna volat altius illa,
Flammiferumque trahens spatioso limite crinem
Stella micat *.

* Ovid. Metam. lib. 15. ver. 843.

This spoke; the Goddess to the Senate flew;
Where, her fair Form conceal'd from mortal View,
Her Cæsar's Heavenly Part she made her Care,
Nor left the recent Soul to waſte to Air;
But bore it upwards to it's native Skies:
Glowing with new-born Fires she saw it rise;
Forth-springing from her Bosom up it flew,
And, kindling, as it soar'd, a Comet grew:
Above the Lunar Sphere it took it's Flight,
And shot behind it a long Trail of Light.

WELSTED.

The Greek Poets had long before employed the same Thought in Favour of Berenice's Hair: The Emperor Adrian was too learned to be ignorant of it. Yet he relished the Flattery, though destitute of the Charms of Novelty. What could they be thinking of, who placed this Darling in the lowest Region of the Heavens? Some there were, who raised him no higher than the Orb of the Moon. Πῶς δ' ὁ θεὸς Ἀντίνοῦ μαρμαίον ἐν τῇ σελήνῃ ὡς οἰὸν καθίδρυται

(30). — How came the young Antinous, when he died, to be placed near the Moon?

[F] Prudentius has pleasantly observed, that Adrian's Minion was raised to an higher Station, than Jupiter's.] His Verses deserve to be more correctly cited, than the Sieurs Trifan, in his Historical Commentaries on the Medals of the Roman Emperors (31), and Moreri, in his Historical Dictionary, have given them. I transcribe them from the Edition of Nicolas Heinſius.

(30) Tatian. Orat. contra Græcos, pag. 149.

(31) Pag. 542.

Quid loquar Antinœum cœlesti in sede locatum?
Illum delicias nunc Divi Principis; illum
Purpureo in gremio spoliatum forte virili, Hadrianique Dei Ganymedem; non cyathos dis
Porgere, sed medio recubantem cum Jove fulcro
Nectaris ambrosii sacrum potare lyzeum,
Cumque suo in templis vota exaudire marito (32)?

Why shou'd I mention Fair Antinous,
The Royal Lover's Minion, and Delight;
Rank'd, with His Master, now, amidst the Gods,
His other Ganymede; yet not, like Him,
The Cup to fill; but, near great Jove reclin'd,
To quaff Ambrosial Nectar with the Gods,
And, jointly with his Master, bear the Vows,
Which Mortals at their Altars humbly pay?

(32) Prudent. contra Symmach. lib. 1.

ANTIPATER, an Idumean by Nation [A], illustrious for his Birth

[A] An Idumean by Nation.] Eusebius makes him an Aſcalonite (1). "A Band of Robbers, says he, who had plundered a Temple near Aſcalon, carried Antipater with the rest of the Booty into Idumea, where he lived a long time; his Father not having wherewithal to redeem him." What I shall observe in the following Remark confutes this Story. Photius seems to me to deserve Censure upon this Occasion. In giving the Extract of Josephus, he affirms, that Herod was the Son of Antipater, who had served in the Temple of Aſcalon. Ὁ τῷ Ἀντίπατρὶ τῷ Ἀσκαλωνίτῃ τῷ ἱεροδύλῳ (2). He did not find this in Josephus; and yet what Reader questions, whether every thing cited by Photius be in the Books he refers to? He, elsewhere, says (3), that Antipater was an Idumean, of the City of Aſcalon, and a great Enemy to Hircanus, on account of the Love he bore to Arifobulus. This last Fault ought not to be imputed to Photius; for all his following Discourse shews, that he makes Antipater and Hircanus good Friends.

(2) Phot. Bibl. n. 76. pag. 163.

(3) Id. n. 238. pag. 969.

(1) Euseb. Hist. Eccl. lib. 1. cap. 6. 7. ex Asfricano.

Birth [B], his Riches, and his good Sense, artfully made his Advantage of the Confusions, into which the Differences betwixt Hircanus and Aristobulus had thrown Judea. These were two Brothers, who disputed the High-Priesthood. Antipater warmly espoused Hircanus's Interest, and engaged Aretas, King of the Arabians, in it, and, afterwards, Pompey, the Roman General; in such a manner, that Hircanus got the better (a). Antipater had the sole Management of Affairs under his Government, and always turned them to the Advantage of the Romans, whenever an Opportunity offered. This made the Roman Generals, Scaurus, Gabinus, and Cassius, honour him with several important Commissions, and pay a great deference to his Councils (b). He did Julius Cæsar a singular Piece of Service, in the War of Alexandria, by supplying him with Provisions and Troops, and assisting him courageously in Person. Inasmuch, that, besides great Commendations, he obtained from Julius Cæsar the Freedom of a Citizen of Rome, and the Administration of Judea (c). The Complaints of Antigonus (d) prevailed nothing against him; his Application to Business, and his great Abilities, gained him such an high Esteem, that he was little less honoured, than if he had been formally invested with the Royal Authority (e). The manner, in which he seemed to guard against any Reverse of Fortune, by giving one of his Sons the Government of Jerusalem, and another That of Galilee, with the Command of Troops, created a just Suspicion of his designing to have no Superior, either in Name, or Effect. A Jew, named Makbus, suspecting this, resolved to prevent the Evil, and, finding no better way, than That of sending Antipater out of the World, he poisoned him (f). By this Act he became guilty of the blackest Ingratitude; for the Person, whom he destroyed, had loaded him with Benefits, and had, besides, saved his Life (g). Among other Children, Antipater left the famous Herod, who was afterwards King of Judea (h).

(a) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 14. cap. 2. & seq.

(b) Ibid. cap. 9. & seq.

(c) Ibid. cap. 14, 15.

(d) He was the Son of Aristobulus.

(e) Ibid. cap. 17.

(f) Ib. cap. 19.

(g) Ibid. cap. 18.

(h) His Wife, called Cypria, was of a great Family in Arabia. Joseph. de Bell. Jud. lib. 1. cap. 6.

Friends. They, who published this Author, must share in the Blame as to this Point; but he alone is answerable for the other Fault. Afcalon was not a Town of Idumea; and, after all, Josephus does not say, that Antipater was of Afcalon. Now Pbotius gives it as an Extract from Josephus.

[B] Illustrious for his Birth. His Father, whose Name was likewise Antipater, was Governor of Idumea under Alexander Jannæus, King of Judea. Eusebius calls him Herod, and makes him a Servant in a Temple; and so poor, that he was not able to redeem his Son, who was fallen into the Hands of Robbers. Τῶτον δὲ Ἡρόδου τινὲς Ἀσκαλονίτου τὸν περὶ τὸν νεὸν τῷ Ἀπολλωνίῳ ἱεροδούλων καλυμμένων γεγονέναι (4). Huic vero Herodem quemdam Afcalonitam unum ex numero servorum templi Apollinis quod Afcalone est patrem fuisse. But the Learned make no doubt, that both Eusebius and Africanus, whom he copies, have followed false Memoirs in this Point; and that more Credit ought to be given to Josephus, who affirms, that King Alexander, and his Queen, gave the Government of Idumea to Antipater, who, by many Presents, obtained the Friendship of the Arabs, and That of the Inhabitants of Gaza and Afcalon (5). Josephus, speaking in another Place of Antipater, the Son, observes, that he was the most considerable Person of Idumea, as well for the Antiquity of his Family, as for his Riches (6). Hegeffippus says of the same Antipater, that he was famous in his own Country for his Ancestors (7). It has ever been common to debase the Birth of those, whom Fortune raises to the highest Dignities (8). By the way, the Ambiguity of a Passage in Josephus has made some imagine, that Herod's Grandfather's Name was not Antipater, but Antipas.

(5) Joseph. Antiquit. lib. 14. cap. 2.

(6) Id. de bello Judæico, lib. 1. cap. 5.

(7) De Excid. lib. 1. cap. 14.

(8) See the Remark [A] of the Article TOUCHET.

(4) Euseb. 1. 1. cap. 6. Vide ibi Valesium.

ANTONY, a Roman Family, in Latin, Antonia, descended, according to an old Tradition, from Anton, the Son of Hercules (a), produced two Branches: The one a Patrician, with the Surname of Merenda; the other a Plebeian, without almost any kind of Surname. It does not appear, that the Patrician Branch lasted long, or produced any other Persons, mentioned in History, except T. ANTONIUS MERENDA, and Q. ANTONIUS MERENDA. The first was one of the Decemvirate, abrogated on account of the tyrannical Cruelty of Appius Claudius, in the Year of Rome 304; and one of those, who went into a voluntary Exile, and whose Goods were confiscated, after the Trial of Appius Claudius, and Sp. Oppius (b). The latter was a Military Tribune in the Year of Rome 333 (c). But the Plebeian Branch continued a long time, and made a great Figure in Rome [A]; for, besides that it could boast of having twice enjoyed the Post of Captain-General of the Cavalry, Six times the Consulship, Once the Censorship, and Thrice the Honour of a Triumph (d); It saw itself, in the Person of Marc Antony, the Triumvir, Mistress of Half the Empire. We shall proceed to particular Articles of the chief Men of this Ancient Family [B].

(a) Plutarch. in Marc. Antonio, pag. 917.

(b) Livius, lib. 3. pag. 88.

(c) Id. lib. 4. pag. 128.

(d) See Glandorp Onomast. pag. 66.

[A] The Plebeian Branch continued a long Time, and made a considerable Figure in Rome. We must not forget, that Marc Antony the Orator, who died in the Year 667, was the first, who brought the Honours of the Consulship, the Triumph, and Censorship into This Family.

[B] Of This ancient Family. They, who have most Reading, most Collections, and most Materials for a Library, fall, sometimes, into strange Oversight. Father Vassafur is an Instance of this, in his excellent Treatise of the Burlesque Stile, when he censures Pbotius, for having believed, that Antonius Diogenes, Author of a Romance, flourished not long after the Death of Alexander. Οὐ λίαν πόρρω τῶν χρόνων τῷ βασιλεὺς Ἀλεξάνδρῳ (1). Non ita diu post Alexandri Magni tempora floruisse. He alleges several Reasons against this; among which he thinks this the strongest, That the Family Antonia was not, then, in being; and that the Name was not so much as known. Neque, quod gravissimum est, tum nata gens Antonia, aut facta vox, aut audita temporibus illis (2). Than which nothing is more false. We have produced, on the Credit of Livy, one Titus Antonius, a Decemvir, in the Year of Rome 304; and, about thirty Years after, one Quintus Antonius, who was a Military Tribune. We find, in the same Livy, one Marcus Antonius, appointed Master of the Horse by the Dictator Cornelius Rufinus, in the Year 421. Now it is certain, that Alexander died in the Year 430. I do not alledge the Tradition, recorded by Plutarch; I might justly be answered, that Anton, Son of Hercules, was no more the Stem of the Antony's in Italy, than Cocceus Nerva was the Stem of the House of Coffe in France.

(2) Vassafur, de ludrica Dictione, 143.

(1) Pbotius, n. 67. pag. 364.

ANTONY (MARCE) the Orator, was the greatest Ornament of his Family. At his Entrance on Public Business, he distinguished himself in a manner, which deserves to be related. He had obtained the Quæstorship of the Province of Asia, and was already arrived at Brundisium, to take shipping there, in order to go and take Possession of his Office, when his Friends informed him, that he was accused of Incest before the Prætor Cassius, the most rigid Judge in the World; whose Tribunal was termed the Rock of the accused. Marc Antony might have pleaded a Privilege, which forbade the receiving Accusations against those, who were absent in the Service of the Republic; but he chose to justify himself in Form, and returned to Rome, stood his Trial, and was acquitted with Honour (a). Sicily fell to him during his Prætorship; and he gave chase to the Pirates, who infested those Coasts. He was made Consul, with A. Posthumius Albinus, in the Year of Rome 653, and courageously and happily suppressed the turbulent Attempts of Sextus Titus, Tribune of the People. Some time after, he was made Proconsul of Cilicia, and performed so many great Actions in this Post, that he obtained the Honour of a Triumph. We must not forget, that, to improve his wonderful Talent of Eloquence, he would in some manner become the Disciple of the most noted Orators of Athens and Rhodes, in his Passage to Cilicia, and his Return to Rome. He afterwards exercised the Office of Censor, with great Glory; having gained his Cause before the People, against Marcus Duronius, who had entered an Accusation of Bribery against him, in Revenge for his expelling him out of the Senate; which this wise Censor thought he deserved; because, while Tribune of the People, he repealed a Law, restraining the immoderate Expences of Feasts (b). He was one of the best Orators That ever pleaded in Rome; and, as Cicero, a proper Judge in these Matters, says, he was an Instance, that Italy could boast of equalling Greece in the Art of Speaking well. Among other Persons, he defended Marcus Aquilius, and so moved the Judges by the Tears he shed (c), and the Scars he shewed on his Client's Breast, that he gained his Cause. The Character of his Eloquence, and his Actions, may be seen at large in the Books I quote (d). He never published any of his Pleadings [A]; least he should be convicted of speaking in one Cause, contrary to what he might have alledged in another. The Morality of the Bar thought it no Scandal, in those Days, for a Pleader to contradict himself in Favour of his Client. The Precaution of this Advocate is necessary to Persons of his Profession [B]; and yet is not always sufficient

(a) Valer. Maxim. lib. 3. cap. 7. n. 6. quo mentis (lib. 6. cap. 8.) the Consistency of this Marc Antony, is denying that his Master was guilty.

(b) Glandorpius, ubi supra, pag. 68. ex Epit. Liv. Cicero. &c.

(c) Cicero de Orat. lib. 2. cap. 47. & in Verr. 5.

(d) Id. in Bruto, & de Orat. c. 37.

[A] He never published any of his Pleadings.] This Fact, and the Reason of it, deserve to be confirmed by Proofs. Cicero and Valerius Maximus shall be my Vouchers. Let us hear Cicero first: "Hominem ingeniosum M. Antonium aiunt solitum esse dicere, idcirco se nullam unquam orationem scripississe, ut si quid aliquando non opus esset ab se esse dictum, posset se negare dixisse (1). ----- The ingenious Orator, Marc Antony, they tell us, was wont to say, that his Reason for never publishing any of his Orations, was, that, whenever it was proper he should not have said a Thing, he might deny that he had said it." Valerius Maximus's Words are: "Jam M. Antonio remittendum convitium est, qui idcirco se aiebat nullam orationem scripississe, ut si quid superiore iudicio actum ei, quem postea densurus esset, nociturum foret, non dictum a se affirmare posset: qui facti vix pudens tolerabilem causam habuit, pro periclitantem enim capite non solum eloquentia sua uti, sed etiam verecundia abuti, erat paratus (2). ----- Marc Antony is to be excused from Censure: who said, that he, therefore, published no Orations, that, if what he had pleaded in a foregoing Cause should appear to be prejudicial to a subsequent Client, he might deny his own Words. Thus he assigned a tolerable Reason for an Action, otherwise scarce honourable; for he was ready, not only to employ his Eloquence, but even to sacrifice his Modesty, in Defence of the Distress." No Critic, I think, can be so unreasonable, as to maintain, that I translate the Word scribere wrong. Every Reader of common Sense will perceive, that Marc Antony never meant to say, that he pleaded Extempore; that he never drew up his Pleadings in Writing; for, if this had been his Meaning, he would have assigned an impertinent Reason for his Conduct; since his only Intention was to prevent any one's turning his own Weapons against him. Now this he might equally have done, whether he wrote down his Pleadings, or not, provided he did not publish them. A Manuscript, which is locked up, can never convict an Orator, at the Bar, of having formerly maintained an Opinion quite contrary to what he advances at present. He may deny it, with the same Assurance, as if he had pleaded Extempore; without any Fear of being condemned to produce the Original of his Pleas: there are many ways of guarding against This.

We may conclude, then, that the present Question is not, whether he wrote, or did not write down, his Pleadings, but whether he published them, or not. Were it necessary to offer Proofs in so clear a Case, I could soon produce two very strong ones. The first should be taken from a Passage in Cicero, where Brutus complains, that Marc Antony, the Orator, had published but one very small Book. "Vellem aliquid Antonio præter illum de ratione dicendi sane exilium libellum ----- libuisset scribere (3). ----- I could wish, that Antony had thought fit to publish something more, than That very small Treatise of the Art of Speaking." Here, you see, he makes use of the Word scribere. The second might be taken from That Oration of Cicero, in which the Fact in Question is mentioned; for Cicero, intending to shew, that Marc Antony's Precaution was not so effectual as he imagined, represents, not that an Advocate is obliged to produce the Original of his Pleas; but, that there are Auditors, who remember, a long time after, what they have heard a Lawyer advance. "Perinde quasi quid a nobis dictum aut actum sit id nisi literis mandaverimus hominum memoria non comprehendatur (4). ----- As though the not committing to Writing, what we have formerly advanced in our Pleadings, would prevent it's being retained in the Memory of others."

[B] The Precaution of this Advocate is necessary to Persons of his Profession.] I remember, in a Letter, which was published in the Year 1685, an Enquiry into the Causes of the Contradictions of Authors (5). The Lawyers are there brought upon the Stage; and what is said, on their Article, is as follows. "It is sometimes diverting enough to hear the same Lawyer plead, in one and the same Week, for a Husband against his Wife, and for a Wife against her Husband. If he has a fruitful Imagination, he dwells altogether, in his first Plea, upon the Power of Husbands; he grounds his Arguments on Nature, on Reason, on the Word of God, and on Custom. He quotes the Scriptures; he quotes the Fathers; the Civilians, and the Writers of Travels. He declaims against Women, and dwells only on general Propositions. Two Days after, the Scene changes; he entertains other Thoughts, quite contrary to the former. He calls the Husband's Authority, Usurpation; he runs over the Holy Scrip-

(3) Cicero in Bruto, cap. 44.

(4) Cicero, in Orat. pro Cluentio.

(5) The second of the new Letters against Maximbourg's History of Calvinism.

A REFLECTION on the Contradictions to be found in Authors.

(1) Cicero in Oratione pro Cluentio. cap. 50.

(2) Valer. Maxim. lib. 7. cap. 13. n. 5.

sufficient to save their Honour [C]. He ever affected not to pass for a learned Man

"tures, the Code, Physic, History, and the Moral Law, in favour of Women, still haranguing on general Principles; for a vehement Spirit thinks it proves nothing, unless it affirms and denies, without Exception; and consequently, if obliged to maintain opposite Interests, must necessarily contradict itself." It must be owned, that a Lawyer, who has publicly pleaded with all the Fire of Imagination, for the Privileges of Women, may be confuted with all imaginable Ease, the next time he pleads for the Privileges of Men. It is but referring him to his own Minutes. Our Orator, Marc Antony, would fain have avoided this great Inconvenience, and have enjoyed the Privilege of contradicting himself, by maintaining one thing to Day, and another to Morrow, according as the Interest of his Clients required. It would be easy to shew, that Lawyers are not the only Persons, who make use of this Practice; Polemic Divines do the same, according to the different Tenets of those they have to deal with (6).

(6) See Remark [M] of the Article ADAM (JOHN).

(7) See the Efforts, which the Jesuit Multihusius makes in the Auditorium Primum Speculi Miseriarum Pauci, to reconcile this Contradiction. See the Remark [D] of the Article BELLARMIN.

(8) See the Supplement to the Philosophical Commentary, and pag. 207 and 216 of Mr. Saurin's Answer to This Commentary.

(9) It is Mr Menage, who speaks in the Anti-Ballet, Tom. 2. p. 174, 175.

(10) Above Citation (4).

(11) It is not left to be feared by Preachers, who, far from contradicting themselves, repeat from time to time, and almost word for word, the same Sermon.

(12) See Cicero Orat. pro Cluentio, cap. 50, &c. and de Oratore, c. 45. how he was revenged on Brutus, by bringing three R. addresses into Court.

(13) Cicero Orat. pro Cluentio, cap. 31.

Bellarmin, in disputing against the Enthusiasts, maintains, that the Scripture abounds with Characters of it's being Divine; but insists, against the Protestants, that it is obscure, and stands in need of the Authority of the Church (7). A certain Minister, whom I forbear to name, maintains, against those of the Romish Church, that the Scriptures every where shine with Characters of Divinity; but, writing against Mr Pajon, he speaks another Language (8). This Privilege ought to be left wholly to Poets and Orators. "In different Places, they say very different Things, as it best suits their Purpose. Nos Poetarum more, ut se res dederit, ita vel populi, vel eruditiorum hominum sententiam nostro quodam jure sequimur, atque alias, si fit opus, aliter de eadem dicimus, says the excellent Monsignor della Casa, Archbishop of Benevento, in one of his Letters to Victorius. And Eusebius has observed, on the eighteenth Verse of the second Book of the Odyssey, and on the Two hundred and forty third of the twelfth of the Iliad, that Homer has said things in these Places, concerning Auguries, quite contrary to what he said elsewhere; which he calls ἀντιρρολογισμοί. Thus, in the first Parts of my Poems, which I have just now quoted, I have said, that an old Poet is a wretched thing, because it suited to my purpose; but this does not hinder me from saying the quite contrary elsewhere, if occasion requires (9)." How do I love this Sincerity! and how should I be overjoyed to find it in Bellarmin, or the Minister; but it is not to be expected. We shall hear Cicero presently on the Right of Lawyers, with regard to the Privilege of contradicting themselves: See the Remarks [H] and [J] of the Article BALDUS.

[C] This Precaution — is not always sufficient to save their Honour.] We have seen (10), how Cicero has observed, that the good Memory of their Hearers is to be dreaded by Lawyers, who contradict themselves (11). If he had given Examples of this, he might better have made it appear, that the Precautions of Marc Antony were insignificant. But it must be own'd, that what he adds is sufficient to justify the Conduct of That Orator. It is this: Marcus Brutus, pleading against L. Plancius, who was defended by L. Crassus, got two of his Friends to stand up in Court, and read certain Passages in an audible Voice, which he had selected out of two Speeches of L. Crassus; some raising the Authority of the Senate very high, the others depressing it. This disconcerted the Orator a little, and put him upon excusing himself, from the Difference of Times, and Causes, which had extorted from him these contradictory Maxims (12). "Ego vero, says Cicero (13), in illo genere libentissim cum multorum tum hominis eloquentissimi & sapientissimi L. Crassus si autoritatem sequor, qui quum L. Plancium defenderet accusante M. Bruto, homine in dicendo vehementi & calido, quum Brutus duobus recitatoribus constitutis ex duabus ejus orationibus capita alterna inter se contraria recitanda curasset, quod in diffusionem rogationis ejus, quæ contra Colonium Narbonensem ferebatur, quantum potest de autoritate Senatus detrahit; in suasionem legis Serviliæ Summi ornat Senatui laudibus, & multa in Equites Romanos quum ex ea oratione asperius dicta recitasset, quo animi illorum Judicium in Crassum incenderentur; aliquantum esse commotus dicitur. Itaque in respondendo primum exposuit utriusque rationem temporis, ut oratio ex re & causa habita videretur. . . . For my own Part, I willingly follow, in This, the Authority of many Others, as also of the most eloquent and wise L. Crassus; who, having undertaken the Defence of L. Plancius, against the Accusation of M. Brutus, a vehement and artful Speaker; and Brutus having procured two Persons to repeat alternately Passages out of two of his Orations, which were contradictory to each other; for, on the one side, in his Oration against the Law, which was proposed against the Colony of Narbo, he detracts as much as possible from the Authority of the Senate; whereas, in That for the Servilian Law, he highly extols the Senate; and Brutus having recited out of That Oration some Reflexions on the Roman Knights, in order to exasperate the Minds of the Judges against L. Crassus; he is said, upon this Occasion, to have been a little at a Loss. In his Reply, however, he sets forth the different junctures of Time; that what he had said might appear to result from the particular Circumstances of each Cause." Cicero disapproved of the Conduct of L. Crassus on this Occasion; Cicero, I say, who was once in the same Circumstances; his Adversaries having repeated a Passage, in one of his Orations, quite contrary to an Argument he was then upon. He answered, That what they had repeated did not contain his true Sentiments; and that what a Man offers, as an Advocate, ought not to be considered, as if spoken by him in quality of a Witness; that it is the Language of the Cause, and not of the Orator. This is plain enough; they must speak according to the Interest of their Cause, and the Conjunction of Time, and not according to their private Opinions. "Ego si quid ejusmodi dixi, neque cognitum commemoravi, neque pro testimonio dixi: & illa oratio potius temporis mei quam judicii & autoritatis fuit. . . . Errat vehementer si quis in orationibus nostris quas in judicio habuimus autoritates nostras consignatas se habere arbitratur. Omnes enim illæ orationes causarum & temporum sunt, non hominum ipsorum aut patronorum. Nam si causæ ipsæ pro se loqui possent, nemo adhiberet oratorem: nunc adhibemus ut ea dicamus, non quæ nostra autoritate constituntur, sed quæ ex re ipsa causæque dicantur (14). (14) Idem, If I, indeed, said any thing of this kind, I neither offered it as of my own Knowledge, nor in quality of an Evidence; it was rather the Language of the Juncture of Time, than of my own Judgment and Authority. It is a great Mistake in any one, to look upon the Orations, which I have spoken in several Causes, as so many written Opinions under my own Hand. They are all the Language of the particular Cause and Time, not of the Orator himself. For could Causes speak for themselves, no one would have recourse to an Orator; and it is our Business to speak, not our own Determination of the matter, but what the particular Cause, we are engaged in, requires." Add to this the Words, which Cicero puts in the Mouth of the Orator Marc Antony. "Oratoris omnis assensus opinionibus non scientia continetur, nam & apud eos dicimus qui nesciunt, & ea dicimus quæ nescimus ipsi: ita & illi alias aliud iisdem de rebus & sentiunt & judicant, & nos contrarias sæpe causas dicimus, non modo ut Crassus contra me dicat aliquando; aut ego contra Crassum, quum alterutri necesse sit falsum dicere, sed etiam ut uterque nostrum eadem de re alias aliud defendat, quum plus uno verum esse non possit. Ut igitur in ejusmodi re quæ mendacio nixa sit, quæ ad scientiam non sæpe perveniat, quæ opinionibus hominum & sæpe errores aucupetur, ita dicam (15). . . . The whole Business of Oratory consists in Opinion, not in Knowledge; for we speak, not only before the Ignorant, but in Cases, where we ourselves are ignorant. Therefore both our Hearers think and judge of the same things differently at different Times; and we ourselves often patronize opposite Causes; insomuch that not only Crassus sometimes speaks against me, and I against Crassus, in Causes, where we are both obliged to speak against our Opinions; but even that we both take different Sides of the Question, in relation

(15) Idem, de Oratore, lib. 2. cap. 7.

Man [D]. His Modesty, and other good Qualities, made him no less beloved by a great Number of Illustrious Persons, than his Eloquence gained him the Admiration of the whole World. He perished unfortunately in the bloody Confusions occasioned by Marius and Cinna. He was discovered in the Place, where he had concealed himself, and Soldiers were immediately sent to kill him. His Address mollified them; nor had any of them Brutality enough to kill him, except their Commander, who had not heard his Discourse, but entered his Chamber in great Anger, that his Men had not executed their Orders (e). His Head was exposed on the Chair of the Orators, pro rostris (f); a Place he had formerly adorned with Triumphal Spoils. This happened in the Year of Rome 667. He left two Sons, of whom I am going to speak.

(e) Plotarch. in Marius, pag. 431. Valer. Max. lib. 8. c. 9.

(f) Cicero, de Oratore, lib. 3. c. 3.

"to the same Cause, upon different Occasions; when but one side can possibly be right. In this Matter, therefore, which depends upon Falshood, which seldom comes up to Science, and which catibets at the Opinions, and often the Errors, of Men, &c." I assure myself, that the greatest Part of my Readers will be so pleased to find, that these two great Orators held such Principles, and so well knew the Foible of their Profession, that they will pardon whatever may favour too much of Digression in this Remark. Note, that these Principles subsist still.

Compare the Pleadings of Mr Erard against Madam Mazarin with the Answer to the Fatum of This Lady. In particular read these Words of the Answer. Mr Erard represented to Madam Mazarin the Occurrences of the then Times, in such a manner as she herself must have considered them. It is true, Time and different Events make us think and speak differently.

[D] He ever affected not to pass for a learned Man. If I am not mistaken, this was more through Policy than Modesty. He saw himself already established in the Reputation of a great Orator. And might he not imagine, that he should be still more admired, if it was believed, that he owed his Eloquence to his Genius alone, and not to a long Application to the Study of Greek Authors? He had a farther meaning in it; he believed his Rhetoric would have more Influence on the People, if they took it for the mere Production of Nature, than if they looked upon it as the Result of Art. For People are apt to distrust Those, who are practised in all the Tricks of their Profession. As for the Judges, Marc Antony believed, that nothing would influence them more in his favour, than to make them believe, that he spoke unprepared, and carefully to conceal from them those fine Touches of Rhetoric, which are generally employed to set off a Cause. And yet, at the bottom, he was a learned Man, and acquainted with all the best Authors among the Greeks. Let us prove this by some Passages of Cicero. "Magna nobis pueris, Quinte frater, si memoria teneas, opinio fuit, L. Crassum non plus attigisse doctrinæ quam quantum prima illa puerili institutione potuisset, M. autem Antonium omnino omnis eruditionis expertem atque ignarum fuisse. Quam nos ea discere-mus quæ Crasso placerent, & ab his doctoribus quibus ille uteretur erudiremur, etiam illud sæpe intelleximus. illum & Græcè sic loqui, nullam ut nosse aliam linguam videretur, & doctoribus nostris ea ponere in percontando, eaque ipsum omni in sermone tractare, ut nihil effe ei novum nihil inauditum videretur. De Antonio vero quanquam sæpe ex humanissimo viro patruo nostro acceperamus, quemadmodum ille vel Athenis vel Rhodi se doctissimum hominum sermonibus dedidisset, tamen ipse adolescentulus, quantum illius ineuntis ætatis meæ patiebatur pudor, multa ex eo sæpe quaesivi. Non erit profecto tibi quod scribo hoc novum (nam jam tum ex me audiebas) mihi illum ex multis varisque sermonibus nullius rei, quæ quidem esset in his artibus de quibus aliquid exitari-mare possem, rudem aut ignarum esse visum. Sed fuit hoc in utroque eorum, ut Crassus non tam exstimari vellet non didicisse quam illa despicere, & nostrorum hominum in omni genere prudentiam Græcis anteferre. Antonius autem probatior hoc populo orationem fore censebat suam, si omnino didicisse nunquam putaretur. Atque ita uterque se graviorem fore, si alter contemnere, alter ne nosse quidem Græcos, videretur. If you remember, Brother Quintus, it was a prevailing Opinion, when we were Boys, that Lucius Crassus had attained to no greater Degree of Learning, than what he had gained at School; but that Marcus Antony was entirely ignorant, and void of all Erudition. But, when we applied our selves to Crassus's favourite Studies, and were instructed by such Preceptors, as he had made use of, we had frequent Opportunities of being convinced, that he spoke the Greek Language as well, as if he had never known any other; that he had put such Questions to our Preceptors, and handled such Points in every thing he said, that he seemed to be familiarly acquainted with the whole Circle of Science. As for Antony; though I had often learned from That Best-natured of Men, my Uncle, his attachment to the Consequence of the learnedest Men at Athens, or Rhodes, yet, as far as the Modesty of Youth would permit, I often applied myself to him for Instruction. And what I now assure you of, is no new thing to you (for I then declared to you the same), that, in the many and various Conversations I had with him, he appeared to me to be perfectly skilled in every Science, of which I could then form any Judgment. But this was peculiar to them both; that Crassus desired not so much to decline the Reputation of Learning, as to appear to despise it, and to prefer our own native Skill to That of the Greeks; and that Antony thought his Words would have the more Weight with the People, if they believed he had never been instructed; both of them thus aiming at Success, the one by appearing to despise, the other to be quite ignorant of, the Greek Learning." Thus the second Book of Oratore begins. Add to this what he there says of himself (16), that he read the Greek Writers only by way of Amusement; and that the Books of the Philosophers were quite unintelligible to him. "Verbum prolixum nullum intelligo, ita sunt angustis & concisis disputationibus illigati;" that, in this Respect he had nothing to say to the Poets, whose Language was not human; and that he confined himself to the Historians, or Orators, who condescended to the Understandings of of the half-learned; Videantur voluisse esse nobis, qui non sumus eruditissimi, familiares. In what follows, it is not Cicero, who speaks, but Marc Antony, who, among other things, expresses himself thus: "Ego ista studia non improbo, moderata modo sint: opinionem istorum studiorum & suspicionem artificii apud eos qui res judicant oratori adversariam esse arbitror; imminuit enim & oratoris auctoritatem, & orationis fidem (17). — I do not disapprove of these Studies, provided they are followed with Moderation; but I am of Opinion, that to be famed for them, and to be suspected of Artifice by the Judges, is prejudicial to an Orator, for it lessens his own Authority, and the Weight of what he says." Here he gives the Reason of That Conduct, which Cicero ascribes to him; "Erat memoria summa, nulla meditationis suspicio, imparatus semper aggredi ad dicendum videbatur, sed ita erat paratus, ut judices illo dicente nonnunquam viderentur non satis parati ad cavendum fuisse (18). — He had a happy Memory; was never suspected of Premeditation, and seemed, whenever he began to speak, to be unprepared; yet was he in reality so much so, that the Judges always seemed sufficiently prepared by what he was saying to give their Opinions." I remember, on this Occasion, a Remark of Mr Dailly, on the Difference between acting the Orator, and being one (19). This Remark is very just.

(16) Id. cap. 14. See his Orator, lib. 2. cap. 19.

(17) Id. de Oratore, lib. 2. cap. 37.

(18) Id. in Bruto, c. 37.

(19) Dailly, Reponct au P. Adam, 3. part. p. 156.

ANTONY (MARC), Eldest Son of the foregoing, had the Sirname of Cressens (a). He never rose higher than the Prætorship; but he exercised this Office with a more

(a) Plot. in Antonio, init. p. 915.

(b) Paternus, lib. 2. cap. 31.

(c) I shall examine, under the Article C. E. THEGUS, whether Cotta was Consul when M. Antony received this Commission.

(d) Antonius Paterculus in Orat. Cicero contra Verrem, pag. 113.

(1) Vell. Pat. lib. 2. cap. 31.

(2) See Peter Matthieu at the end of the Preface to the History of the Peace.

a more extensive Power than usual; his Commission to convoy Corn to Rome giving him a Command over the Seas (b). This Prerogative he obtained by the Favour of the Consul Cotta (c), and by the Faction of Cethegus (d); nor did any Party murmur at it, as they certainly would have done, if he had been a Person of more Merit [A]. It is said, that he suffered himself to be instigated by evil Counsels, to commit Ex-tortions in the Provinces; and, indeed, he was guilty of many (e). Those of Sicily have been represented in a few Words by Cicero (f). The War of Crete, the good Success of which he thought so certain, that he had provided fewer Arms on board his Fleet, than Chains to bind the conquered (g), having miscarry'd, he fell sick, and died of Grief. He was unable to support the cutting Reflexions, which arose in his Mind, when he remember'd, that the Enemy, having taken several of his Ships, had hung up the Roman Soldiers at the Yard-Arm, and had sailed up and down with this Spectacle, triumphing insolently over the Republic in a thousand Places. He had three Sons by Julia, his second Wife [B], to wit, Marcus Antonius, Caius Antonius, and Lucius Antonius (h), of whom we shall speak hereafter.

I shall have some Errors to correct [C], and perhaps the Encomium Plutarch bestows on Antony will be one [D].

[A] If he had been a Person of more Merit. Valerius Paternus supplies me with this Thought, in that Part of his History, where he relates, that Pompey, about two Years after, obtained a Commission, which rendered him Master of almost all the World. This Commission was not granted him without Opposition; whereas nothing had been said against the Decrees, which had trusted the like Power in the Hands of Marc Antony. The Reason was, that they did not judge the latter capable of rendering himself formidable; but Pompey's Merit was looked upon as dangerous to the Public Liberty. "Idem hoc ante biennium in M. Antonii prætura decretum erat: sed interdum personi, ut exemplo nocet, ita invidiam auget aut levat. In Antonio homines æquo animo passi erant; raro enim invidetur eorum honoribus, quorum vis non timetur. Contra in iis homines extraordinaria reformidant, qui ea suo arbitrio aut deposituri aut retenturi videntur, & modum in voluntate habent (1). — The same thing was decreed two Years before in the Prætorship of Marc Antony; but there is something in the different Characters of Men, which increases or diminishes the Oidium of a Thing. In the Case of Antony, the People were very well satisfied; for we seldom envy those Men Honours, whose Power we are not afraid of; whereas any extraordinary Degree of Advancement alarms us in Those, who, we think, can resign, or keep, their Authority just as they please, and whose only Restraint is their Will." This is a fair Text for the Compilers of Political Commentaries: I leave it to them almost entire, and content myself with this small Observation. It is thought a just ground of Complaint, that the same Qualities, which should recommend a Man to great Offices, prevent his obtaining them. George de Monte Mayor used to say, Est-amos à tiempo, que merecer la cosa es principal parte para no alcançarla. That is, (and they are the very Words of the President du Vair,) Nothing, in these times, binds good Men from rising to Riches and Honours, so much, as their deserving them (2). This Complaint is often too well grounded; but there are certain Cases, in which it is not quite so just; for, in order to deserve an Office, it is not sufficient to have the necessary Qualifications for the honourable discharge of it; but it is farther requisite, that those Qualities be not mixed with certain Vices, which prompt a Man to make an ill Use of the Glory, which redounds from the Discharge of this Office, with Capacity and Success. To speak properly, a Mixture of these Vices may render those unworthy of an Office, who, considered with regard to their great Accomplishments, might be the most deserving of any. It is not, therefore, always an Act of Injustice to refuse an Office to one, who is most capable of discharging it; it may be a reasonable Precaution, a Point of necessary Prudence; especially in Republics. Eminent Qualities inspire Men with Ambition. Give those who possess them Opportunities of doing their Country considerable Service; and you kindle the Fire of this Ambition more and more; the Glory they acquire, by worthily discharging an important Trust, inspires them with Thoughts of making an ill use of their Reputation, and shews them, that it is not impossible to climb a Step higher. They try their Fortune, aspire sometimes to the Sovereignty, and, whether they succeed or no, occasion a thousand Disorders, which might have been avoided, by bestowing such Offices upon Persons of moderate Merit.

[B] Julia, his second Wife.] She was the Daughter of Julius Cæsar, who was Consul in the Year of Rome 664; and Sister of another Julius Cæsar, who was Consul in the Year 690. Her Virtue and Merit equalled her to the most illustrious Ladies of her Time. Ταῖς ἀγαταῖς τοῖς καὶ ἀσπαστοῦταῖς ἐνθάδε. Cum præstantissimis & pudicissimis illius memorie matronis comparanda (3). She was not the happiest in Husbands; for, after the Death of Marcus Antonius Creticus, the married Publius Cornelius Lentulus, who was an Accomplice in Catiline's Conspiracy, and one of those, who was put to Death for it. What he did to save her Brother Lucius Cæsar, deserves Admiration (4). He was procribed in the Time of the Triumvirat, and hid himself in her House. The Soldiers went thither to search for him, to put him to death; but she placed herself at the Door, and declared they should never pass, 'till they had killed her; she, who had brought that Marc Antony into the World, whose Orders they were now to execute. This made them retire (5). The Name of our Antony's first Wife was Numitoria: She was Daughter of Quintus Numitorius Pullus. She is called the Daughter of a Traytor, in Cicero's Philippics (6).

[C] Some Errors to correct.] Thyfius, Professor of Oratory in the Academy of Leyden, has made a Remark, which might give us an ill Opinion of his Learning. It relates to these Words of Laßantius. "De Neptuni sorte manifestum est, cujus regnum tale fuisse dicimus quale M. Antonii fuit infinitum illud imperium, cui totius orbis maritimus potestatem Senatus decreverat, ut prædones persequeretur ac mare omne pacaret (7). — What Neptune's Share was, is very plain; whose Empire appears to have been like the extensive Authority of Marc Antony, who, by a Decree of the Senate, had the Command of the whole Sea-Coast, in order to extirpate the Pirates, who infested it, and secure the Navigation." Thyfius pretends, that, instead of Antonii, we ought to read Pompeii, which is the reading of the best Manuscripts; and upon this he observes, that Pompey was called Neptune, and that several of his Statues were adorned with the Ensigns of That Deity. He is mistaken: There is no doubt but Laßantius, who was perfectly Master of Cicero, had an Eye to the following Passage of the fourth Oration against Verres: "Postquam Marci Antonii infinitum illud imperium fenserat (8). — After they had felt the long continuance of Marc Antony's Authority; or to these Words of the following Oration: "Ita in isto infinito imperio Marcum Antonium gessisse, ut, &c. (9). — Marc Antony behaved himself so ill in the long Power he enjoyed, that, &c." One of Vossius's Sons might have spared the Professor of Leyden this false Note; for, in a Book, which was printed thirteen Years before the Laßantius of Thyfius, he observes, that Thomassius was very much in the wrong to put Pompeii, instead of Antonii, in his Edition of Laßantius; and proves it by the Authority of Cicero, and Paternulus (10). I add, that he believes Florus meant the same Antony, when he says, "Quum ille (Pompeius)

(e) Acom. Fed. ubi supra.

(f) Cicero, Orat. 2. in Verrem, esp. 01. See likewise Orat. 2. c. 3.

(g) Florus, lib. 3. cap. 7.

(h) Glandorp. Onomast. p. 73.

(3) Plut. in M. Anton. init. p. 916.

(4) Id. ib.

(5) Plut. in M. Anton. pag. 924.

(6) Taken from Glandorp, pag. 74, 75.

(7) Laßan. lib. 1. cap. 11. p. 38-39.

(8) Cicero Orat. 2. in Verrem, cap. 3.

(9) Id. Orat. 3. in Verrem, cap. 91.

(10) Gerardus Voßius Not. in Vell. Paternulus, pag. 55. Edit. 1639. he cites Cicero Verina 1, but he should have cited Verina 2 and 3. da. II.

- (11) Florus, lib. 3. cap. 7. and ut cap. 8. at Gerard Voff. cites him.
- (12) Plut. in Pompeio.
- (13) Dion. lib. 36.
- (14) Plut. in M. Antonio init. pag. 925. 916.
- (a) Afconius Pedianus in Oratio-nem Cicero-nis in toga candida, contra Antonin & Catilin in fin. pag. 158.
- " (Pompeius) res in Asia gerens eo quoque præfectum misit Antonium, in aliena Provincia inclitus fuit (11). — When Pompey, who commanded in Asia, had sent thither his Lieutenant Antony, he was famous in Another's Province." He shews, that Florus has confounded this Antony with Ottavius, who, as Plutarch (12) and Dion (13) say, was sent by Pompey to the Island of Crete, when Metellus commanded there. There is more ground for this, than for his saying, that the Surname of Criticus, given in Plutarch to Marc Antony, must be corrected by That of Creticus. I know not what Edition of Plutarch he made use of; but I find Κρητικός in the Frankfort Edition, 1620, and in That of Paris, 1624. I wish he had taken the trouble to examine a Chronological Error, which appears to be in Paterculus. This Historian affirms, that there passed but two Years between the Command, which was given to Marc Antony, and That, which was given to Pompey; and yet Afconius Pedianus affirms, that Marc Antony obtained it by the Favour of a Consul, called Cotta. I enlarge upon this Difficulty in the Article C E T H E G U S.
- [D] The Encomium, Plutarch gives our Antony, will be one. " He was a worthy, good, Man, says Plutarch (14), and particularly remarkable for his Liberality. He was not very rich, and withal diverted from the Exercise of his good Nature by his Wife. One Day a Friend of his, who stood in need of Money, came to borrow some of him. But Antony, having none to lend, ordered his Servant to fill a Silver

" Balon with Water, and bring it. The Servant obeying his Commands, he took the Balon, and lathering his Face, as if he was going to shave himself, he sent away the Servant upon another Errand, and gave his Friend the Balon, desiring him to make what use he pleased of it. Next Morning, the whole Family was in an Uproar, and great Enquiry made after the Balon. But Antony, seeing his Wife in a great Passion, and resolved to put all her Servants to the Question, acknowledged what he had done, and begged her Pardon." Ομολόησας συγγνωμὴν ἔχειν δ' ἐνείκεν (15). Petita venia id quod erat confessus est. Plutarch does not justly represent the Character of this Man; he calls him Liberal; whereas he should have made him Prodigal: Sallust was not deceived in him. " Marcus Antonius perdundæ pecuniæ genitus, vacuæque curis nisi instantibus (16). — Marc Antony, born to be a Spendthrift, and careless of every thing but the Present." It must not be dissembled, that Cicero denies, what was commonly said of this Marc Antony; to wit, that he neither kept an Account of what he received, nor of what he expended. " Audimus aliquem tabulas nunquam confecisse: Quæ est opinio hominum de Antonio falsa, nam fecit diligentissime (17) — We hear, that such an one never kept any Accounts. This was generally reported of Antony; but falsely; for he kept them very carefully."

(15) Id. ib. pag. 916. A.

(16) Sallust. in Fragm. Histor. lib. 3. pag. 446.

(17) Cicero, Orat. 1. in Verrum. cap. 23.

ANTONY (CAIUS) Brother of the foregoing, was a Person of irregular Conduct; infomuch, that his Elder Brother, and He, were much more the worthy Uncle and Father of the Triumvir, than worthy Sons of Him, who gave them Life. This Caius Antony bore Arms under Sylla, in the War against Mitridates, and committed many Extortions in Achaia; which, with other matters of Blame alledged against him, was the Cause, that the Censors afterwards expelled him the Senate. Nevertheless he was chosen Consul, in preference to Catiline, one of his Competitors; but with much less Honour, than Cicero; who, notwithstanding all the Plots, which Caius Antony and Catiline laid to exclude him, was declared Consul with unanimous Consent; whereas Caius Antony carried it, but by a few Voices, against Catiline (a). It was in this Consulate, that Catiline's Conspiracy was discovered, against which Cicero acted with great Zeal. His Colleague had the Command of the Army, which was sent against Catiline, and obtained a compleat Victory by his Lieutenant Petreibus: For, as for himself, either a feigned, or a real, Sickness hindered him from being personally in the Battel. Dion says, that it was pretended; and that Antony, fearing Catiline would discover some very important Secrets against him, would not command in Person (b). After the Victory, he led his Troops into Macedonia, and was beaten by the Dardanians. He governed that Province three Years, with so much Violence, and so many Exactions, that the Senate, displeased at his Conduct, sent him a Succesor. Upon his Return to Rome, He was accused by Marcus Cælius; and, tho' Cicero undertook his Defence, yet he was convicted and banished. Some say he passed Fifteen Years in the Island of Cephalonia; and that his Nephew, Marc Antony, who was very powerful in Rome, after the Assassins of Julius Cæsar had left it, recalled him from his Exile [A]. He died some Years after, full of Days and Troubles, and left only one Daughter, whom he saw repudiated, a little after her Marriage, by her Husband Marc Antony, the Triumvir, on Suspicion of an Intrigue with Dolabella (c).

[A] His Nephew Marc Antony, — recalled him from his Exile. There are some Difficulties, in relation to the Time of his Re-call, which shall be examined in the Remark [H], of the Article of FULVIA.

ANTONY (MARC) One of the Triumvirs, generally known by the bare Name of Marc Antony, was Grandson of Marc Antony the Orator, and Son of Marcus Antonius Creticus. Mr Moreri is very full on this Article, and therefore I shall take no notice of him. The Mistakes I have collected, on this Head, may find a place in the Article FULVIA, or elsewhere. All that I shall observe here of this Triumvir is, that he published a Treatise concerning his own Drunkenness [A].

[A] He published a Treatise concerning his own Drunkenness. This is a Fact, which modern Writers make no mention of; it is, however, a remarkable one, and to be found in Pliny. " Tergilla Ciceroni M. F. binos congios simul haurire solitum ipsi objicit; Marcoque Agrippæ à temulento scyphum impactum: Etenim hæc sunt Ebrietatis opera. Sed nimirum hanc gloriam auferre Cicero voluit interfectori patris sui M. Antonio. Is enim ante eum avidissime apprehenderat hanc palmam, VOL. I. No. XII.

" edito etiam volumine de sua Ebrietate: Quo patrocinari sibi ausus, approbavit planè (ut equidem arbitror) quanta mala per temulentiam orbi terrarum intulisset. Exiguo tempore ante Prælium Actiacum id volumen evomuit, quo facile intelligatur ebrius jam sanguine Civium, & tanto magis eum fitiens (1). — Tergilla objects to Cicero, the Son of Marcus Cicero, that he was wont to drink off two Gallons at once; and to Marcus Agrippa, that a drunken Fellow threw a Glass at his Head. These

(1) Plin. lib. 14. sub fin. cap. ult.

U u u u " are

(b) Dion. lib. 37. ad annum Romæ 692.

(c) See the Remark [G], of the Article FULVIA, and Glandorp. Onomastic. pag. 75. 76.

"are the Works of Drunkenness. Cicero seems to have disputed the Prize of Intemperance with his Father's Murderer Marc Antony; who, before him, had been very ambitious of it; having even published a Treatise on his own Drunkenness; in which, daring to undertake its Defence, he plainly justifies all the Mischiefs, which the World had suffered by His Drunkenness. He vomited forth his Treatise, a little before the Battle of Actium; which plainly shows, that he was drunk with the Blood of Citizens, and, for that reason, the more thirsty after it." I wonder Plutarch should take no notice of this Piece of Singularity, and that Suetonius should not mention it.

(a) Glan-
dorp. pag.
80, ex Cæsare, Lucini
Phœb. lib. 4.
Eutropio.

(b) He was taken by Hortensius, who delivered him up to Brutus.

(c) Glandorp. ex Plutarch. in
M. Antonio, &c.

ANTONY (CAIUS) Brother of the foregoing, served under Julius Cæsar, in the War against Pompey, and was forced to surrender himself, with the Troops he commanded in Illyria, for want of Provisions (a). After the Death of Cæsar, and during his own Prætorship, and the Consulship of his Brother Marc Antony, he was sent into Macedonia with the Decree of the Senate, which gave Marc Antony the Government of That Province. But, whatever Dispatch he could make, he was prevented by Brutus, and even fell into his Hands (b). At first Brutus treated him honourably, and allowed him the Ensigns of his Prætorship; but, when he perceived, that he endeavoured to corrupt the Army, he put him under an Arrest; and afterwards put him to death, when he was informed of the Proscriptions of the Triumvirate, the Murder of D. Brutus, That of Cicero, &c. Marc Antony, having got Hortensius into his Power, after the Battle of Philippi, sacrificed him to the Manes of his Brother. Cicero mentions C. Antony, sometimes, in his Philippics, but always to his Disadvantage (c).

(a) Glan-
dorp. Ono-mast. pag.
81, ex Dio-ne, &c.

ANTONY (LUCIUS) Brother of the preceding, had all the Vices of his Brother, the Triumvir, but none of his good Qualities: However he did not want Courage. He was Tribune of the People, in the Year of Cæsar's Death, while his Brother Marc was Consul, and his Brother Caius Prætor. He was Consul, Himself, in the Year of Rome 713, and triumphed the first Day of his Consulship over a People of the Alps, whom he pretended he had conquered; tho' he had really done nothing worthy of a Triumph, nor exercised any Command in their Country. But Fulvia, the Wife of M. Antony, and Mother-in-law of Octavius Cæsar, who then governed all in Rome, procured him, by her sole Credit, this Honour. This imperious Woman, desiring to be revenged on Octavius, for repudiating her Daughter, excited Lucius Antony to take up Arms against him, under pretence of protecting the Inhabitants of Campania, whose Lands were assigned to the Soldiers. The Troops, he had assembled, being introduced into Rome, by Night, He drove out Lepidus one of the Triumvirs; and harangued the People, declaring, That, according to his Brother's Intention, he designed to abolish the Triumvirate. This Promise filled the City with Joy. He was declared Imperator, and marched against Octavius Cæsar; but, not daring to keep the Field, he retreated to Perousa, where he defended himself, 'till the want of Provisions obliged him to surrender. Octavius gave him his Liberty; but what became of him after, is not known (a).

(a) Vell. Paterculus, lib.
2. cap. 100.

(b) Sueton-de Illustri-Gramm.
cap. 18.

(c) Festu-
s. de Diome-
dæ. Vetus interpretes Ho-
rat. in Od.
2. lib. 4.

ANTONY (MARCUS JULIUS) Son of the Triumvir, and Fulvia, found so much Favour with Augustus, after the Conquest of Egypt, that, by degrees, he was advanced to Employments, and at last to the Consulship, in the Year of Rome 744. He married Marcella, the Daughter of Octavia; and, being by this means become Son-in-law of Augustus's Sister, for whom That Prince had a great Esteem, he was the First Favourite after Agrippa, the Son-in-law of Augustus, and the Sons of the Emperors. But he proved ungrateful to his Benefactor, and was one of the first, who debauched his Daughter Julia; which, together with some Suspicions of a Conspiracy, occasioned his being condemned to death. Some Historians say, that he killed himself to prevent the Infamy of his Sentence (a). He had studied under the Grammarian L. Craffitius (b), and composed a Poem of Twelve Books in Heroic Verse (c), and some Treatises in Prose. It is to Him, that Horace addresses the second Ode of his fourth Book. He left one Son very young, whose Name was L. Julius Antony. The Emperor banished this Youth to Marselles, under the specious Pretence of keeping him to his Studies. He ordered him very singular Funeral Honours; for he procured a Decree of the Senate, that his Bones should be repositied in Octavius's Tomb (d). This was the End of That Ancient and Powerful Family Antonia, of which Tacitus says, that it had been always Illustrious, but Unfortunate; Multa claritudine generis, sed improspere (e). We shall now sum up all Mr Moreri's Errors concerning this Family [A].

(d) Tacit.
Annal. lib.
4. cap. 44.

(e) Id. ib.
Tacitus says
this on occasion of the Death of L.
Julius Antonius, which happened in the Year of Rome 778.

[A] We shall now sum up all Mr Moreri's Errors concerning this Family. I. He ought not to have mentioned this Family under the Letter M, on account of Marc Antony: Both He, and his Family, ought to stand under the Letter A. II. He ought not to have said, That the Family of the Antonii was famous among the Nobles of Rome; for it is plain, that, by this way of speaking, he intended to distinguish it from the Plebeian Families: now this distinction is false. The Tribuneship of the People alone, with which Marc Antony was invested, at the beginning of the War between Cæsar and Pompey, proves demonstrably, that the Antonian Family was Plebeian; for he was made Tribune of the People, without being adopted by a Plebeian; there was no Necessity for his imitating Clodius, who, to qualify himself for the Office of Tribune, had recourse to such an Adoption (1). I confels the Antonii were at first Patricians. This appears from the Dignities of the Dictatorship, and the Military Tribuneship, conferred upon them, before the Plebeian Families

(1) Cicero,
Orat. pro
Domio sua ad Pontifices,
cap. 13.

Families were admitted to the first Dignities of the Republic. But, whether it were, that the Antonii, who appeared with so much Splendor in the seventh Century of Rome, did not descend from the same Branch with those, who bore the Surname of Merenda, or whether it were, that they passed, we know not how, from the Rank of Patricians to That of Plebeians, as has happened to some other Families; it is certain, that their House was Plebeian in the Days of Marc Antony, the Orator, who first began to raise it. III. It is gross Ignorance to say, that this House was divided into two Branches, the Merenda's, and the Marc's. The Word Marc is the Prænomen, which serves only to distinguish Persons: That, which distinguished the several Branches, was called the Cognomen, and held the third Place, as Cæsar, Scipio, &c. (2). IV. It is not certain, that Q. Antonius Merenda, Military Tribune about the Three hundred thirty second Year of Rome, was the Son of T. Antonius Merenda, Decemvir in the Year 303. V. It is false, that Livy makes mention of M. Antonius Merenda, Master of the Horse, under the Dictatorship of P. Cornelius. He calls him only M. Antonius. VI. Marcius Antonius Creticus was not killed in a Duel. Africanus Pedianus leaves no room for Doubt in this matter. "Indicilo, says he, Cretensis bello male re gesta ibidem perit (3). — He died, after meeting with ill Success in the Cretan War." VII. Instead of saying, that Marc Antony, the Orator, never wrote down any of his Orations; he should have said, that he never published any (4). VIII. His Answer to those, who asked him the reason of it, is misrepresnted; he did not reply, that he would not furnish those with Arms, who might be inclined to convict him of having expres'd himself amiss; he was in no pain for his Words or Phrases; I mean, of being reproach'd with Barbarisms, or Offences against the Rules of Grammar; yet this is what Mr Moreri means; as all mult own, who understand what an Author means. But Marc Antony's Fear was, lest his Works should convict him of blowing Hot and Cold with the same Breath, and of having confuted, four Years before, what he was then advancing in his Plea. Consult the Remarks [B] and [C] of the Article ANTONY (MARC) the Orator; where I have fully displayed the Reasons, why Lawyers contradicted themselves, and maintain one thing to day, and the quite contrary to morrow, according to the different Interests of their Clients. IX. Besides, the Answer, which Mr Moreri ascribes to him, is absurd; for one may write down a Plea, without furnishing the Critics with Arms, provided it be not made public. X. M. Aquilius was not condemned upon M. Antony's undertaking his Cause. XI. The Judges did not confess, That He, who had so often expos'd his Life for the Good of the Republic, ought not to lose it so dishonourably. Had Mr Moreri known, that Aquilius could, at the worst, have been condemned only to Banishment (5), he would not have given his Style the Colours of Oratory. XII. What a confused way of speaking is it, to say, That Marc Antony was Consul, Censor in the Year of Rome 626, with A. Posthumius in 657, with L. Valerius, &c. There is something worse in it, than a confused Style: Fall-hoods are not wanting. Marc Antony was Consul, with A. Posthumius Albinus, in the Year 655, and Censor, with L. Valerius Flaccus, in the Year 657 (6).

(2) Caius Julius Cæsar. Publius Cornelius Scipio.

(3) Afr. Pedian. in Cic. de Divinat. pag. 17. Edit. Lugd. in 12mo. He says, in Verum de Prætor. urb. pag. 87. Cretæ mortuus.

(4) See, above, the Remark [A], of the Article ANTONY the Orator.

(5) She was Sister to Augustus.

(1) Germanicus, C. Cæsar's father, Drusus & minoris Antonii filius. — Germanicus, the Father of Caius Cæsar, and Son of the younger Antonia. Suet. in Cæsar. lib. cap. 1. See likewise in Claud. cap. 1.

Ex Antonia majoris patrem Nerois procreavit (Domitius). — Domitius begot the Father of Nero on Antonia the elder. Id. in Nero. cap. 5.

(2) Plutarch. in Marc. Anton. pag. 955.

(3) Lips. in Tacit. Ann. lib. 12.

(4) Gland. Onomast. pag. 87.

ANTONIA, Eldest Daughter of Marc Antony [A], and Octavia (a), was a Lady, whose Virtue and Beauty made her the Object of Admiration (b). She was married to Drusus, the Son of Livia, and Brother of Tiberius, by whom she had several Children (c), of which but Three survived Drusus, to wit, Germanicus, Claudius, who was Emperor, and Livilla, who was Tiberius's Son's Wife. Antonia, yet young and beautiful in her Widow-hood, was courted by several Persons, but refused them all; an Example of Continency [B], so much the more to be admired, as she lived in a Court exceedingly corrupt. Tiberius, whose humour was so stern, had yet a great Regard for this Lady; which shews, that to her Chastity she knew how to join other Virtues, unknown to the chaste Agrippina, her Daughter-in-law; I mean Mildness and Prudence. It was Antonia, who discovered to Tiberius Sejanus's

(5) Quum mihi M. Aquilius in civitate retinendus esset. It is Marc Antony, who speaks, apud Cicero. de Orat. lib. 2. de Orat. cap. 45. (6) Plin. lib. 8. cap. 7. Sigonius & Calvisius place this Consul in the Year 654, and the Censorship two Years after.

(c) Σεβαστήν καὶ κάλλιαν τρεῖς τέκνα. Castitate & forma inclutam. Plutarch. in Anton. pag. 955. E.

(i) Sueton. in Claud. cap. 1.

Conspiracy

[A] Eldest Daughter of Marc Antony. Suetonius and Plutarch are against me; the first expressly, and in downright Terms (1); the second after an implicit manner: For he only speaks of the Marriage of one of the two Antonia's with Domitius, before he mentions the other's Marriage with Drusus (2). Now, since Suetonius wrote after Tacitus, and sometimes seems to refute him; would it not be better to give Him the preference, and to suppose, that he took the contrary side, only because he was convinced of Tacitus's Error? Besides, are the Words of Plutarch of no weight? Let every one judge as he pleases; for my own Part, I have followed Tacitus, without pretending to contest the matter with those, who choose to follow Suetonius. There are two Passages of Tacitus, one in the Forty fourth Chapter of the fourth Book of his Annals, the other in the Sixty fourth Chapter of the twelfth Book of the same Annals, where the Wife of Domitius is called Antonia Minor. — Antonia the Younger. I find, that Lipsius declares for neither side (3), and that Glandorpius prefers That of Tacitus to That of Suetonius (4). There is a Reason on Tacitus's side, though not conclusive. It may be supposed, that Drusus, who, in quality of a Powerful Emperors Son, was one of the greatest Matches of Rome, married the eldest of the two Sisters; but, in answer to this, it may be said, that His Antonia was a perfect Beauty. Now this is a Right of Elderhood more to the Taste of a young Prince, (nor is it necessary to be a young Prince to have this Taste) than That, which is only founded on the greater Number of Years. It is probable, that Drusus, as he was the greater Match, had his Choice; and, no doubt, he chose the handsomest of the two, whether the elder, or the younger, Sister.

[B] Antonia, yet young and beautiful in her Widowhood, — — — was an Example of Continency.] What is said of her Husband, in relation to his conjugal Fidelity, is yet more surprising. "Drusum etiam Germanicum, eximiam Claudie familie gloriam, patriæque rarum ornamentum, & quod super omnia est opus suum pro habitu ætatis magnitudine vitrico pariter ac fratri Augustis, duobus reipublicæ divinis oculis, mirifice respondentem, consuevit usum Veneris intra conjugis charitatem clausum tenuisse (5). — It was certain, that Drusus Germanicus, the singular Glory of the Claudian Family, and uncommon Ornament of his Country, and, what is beyond all, as famous for Great Actions, in proportion to his Years, as the Augusti, his Father-in-Law, and Brother, the two divine Eyes of the Republic, confined his Desires wholly to conjugal Endearments (6)." It is remarkable enough, that, in Augustus's Court, the Emperor's Son-in-law should be contented with one Dish, like a Citizen; and it signifies little to say, that Antonia was so young and fair, that Drusus knew not where to please himself better. How many Princes, great Lords, and other Persons are there, with whom this Reason is of no force? But to return to Antonia, Valerius Maximus continues his Discourse in this manner. "Antonia quoque femina, laudibus virilem familie sue claritatem supergressa, amorem mariti egregia fide pensavit; quæ potius ejus excessum forma & ætate florens cubiculum focum pro conjugio habuit, in eodemque toro alterius adolescentiæ vigor extinctus est, alterius viduitatis experientia consenuit. — — — The Lady Antonia, a greater Ornament to her Family than the Males it produced, repaid her Husband's Love with a remarkable Constancy; for, after his Decease, though still in the Flower of her Youth and Beauty, she was wedded only to the Chamber of her Mother-in-law; and, in the same Bed, the one's Vigour of Youth expired, the other's Experience of Widow-hood grew

(c) Valer. Maxim. lib. 4. cap. 3.

(6) See the Verses in Remark [G].

Conspiracy [C]; nor was This Prince ungrateful, after a Service of such Importance (d). Pliny mentions a very particular Quality of Antonia, which is that she never spit (e). He tells us likewise, that she had a Fish, which she was very fond of, and which she adorned with Ear-rings; a Curiosity, which drew many Visitors to her Country Seat (f). This Lady was unhappy in her Family. Germanicus, her Son, had indeed all the good Qualities, which could be desired in the Presumptive Heir of the Empire, and was the Darling and Delight of all the Roman People; but this only served to heighten Antonia's Affliction, when a sudden Death bereaved her of This Young Prince. This disconsolate Mother was not able to walk as a Mourner, when Germanicus's Funeral was solemnized [D]. Her other Son was so disagreeable, and so brutish, in her Eyes, that she was wont to call him Monster, Rough-Draught of a Man, &c. [E] and made him the Standard of Comparison, whenever she would represent an arrant Blockhead. Her Daughter was a Monster of another kind; she made an Attempt on the Honour and Life of her Husband, and executed it; for she was convicted of Adultery, and of poisoning her Husband. Her own Mother was the Secular Arm, to which she was delivered; who shut her up in a Chamber, where she was starved to Death [F]. The Children of Germanicus, whom Antonia brought up in her House, gave her no small Trouble. She watched their Conduct; but her Vigilance served only to make her an Eye-Witness of their enormous Crimes. One Day, she surprized Caligula with his Sister (g). This Wretch had not yet assumed the Toga Virilis; and yet was guilty of Capital Incest. Upon his Accession to the Empire, he decreed all the Honours to his Grandmother Antonia, which the Senate had decreed Livia (h); but this was only a Start; for he shewed her no Respect afterwards, and even refused her a Private Audience. These Affronts threw her into a Melancholy, which occasioned her Death; and it was even said, that he hastened the (d) Josephus Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 8. pag. 632. C.

(e) Plin. lib. 7. cap. 19.

(f) In eadem villa (apud Baianum in parte Baiana) Antonia Drusi, murenæ quam diligebat insuæ addidit: cuius propter famam nonnulli Baulos videre concupiverunt. Plin. lib. 5. cap. 55.

(g) Ex his (soribus) Drusillam vitæ viciis prætextatus adhuc creditur: atque etiam in concubitu ejus quondam deprehensus ab avia Antonia, apud quam final educabatur. Sueton. in Calig. cap. 24.

(h) Id. ib. cap. 10. See also Dion. lib. 59.

"old." Antonia's Chastity found Panegyrist in Judea. Josephus deserves to be heard: he informs us, that Augustus solicited this Lady to marry again; but she persisted in the contrary Resolution, and preserved an unsported Reputation in her Widow-hood. The Uncommonness of her Conducts was This. We see great Ladies enough, who live separate from their Husbands, or do not marry a second Time, though courted to it; but do they live without Reproach? Do they give no occasion to censure their Conduct? Here lies the Difficulty, Hoc opus, hic labor est. Some scandalous Talkers will say, there are Those, who practise the Maxim, which Lutber is said to have taught Husbands. Si nolit Uxor, said he, veniat Ancilla. - - - If your Wife won't, call your Maid. This is turning the Tables, and understanding Lutber's Expression wrong; which was, si nolit, si desit maritus, veniat famulus. - - - If you have no Husband, or if he refuses to comply, call your Servant. The Words of Josephus are as follows: Τιμίᾳ δ' ἦν Ἀντωνία Τίβεριος εἰς τὰ πάντα ἀνυψεύνας τὴν ἀξίωσιν αὐτῆς, δρῶν γὰρ ἢ ἀδελφῇ τῇ αὐτῇ γυναι, καὶ ἀρίστῃ τῷ σφροδῶν, νέα γὰρ χηρὴν παρμένον γάμῳ τὴ ἀπέπειν τῷ παρὸς ἑτέρῳ, καὶ περ τὸ Σέβας κλέυσαντο τινὶ γαμίσθαι, καὶ λοιδορεῖν ἀπὸ πολλῶν διανοῶν αὐτῆς τὸν βίον (7). Antonia was greatly respected by Tiberius, either because she was related to him, as having been the Wife of his Brother Drusus; or on account of her Continency; for, though she was a very young Widow, she refused to marry again, notwithstanding the Importunity of Augustus; and in this State of Life she preserved an unblemished Reputation.

[C] It was Antonia, who discovered Sejanus's Conspiracy. Tacitus was probably well informed of this Fact; but, unhappily, That Part of his Annals is lost. If I am not mistaken, Josephus is the only Historian, who relates what share Antonia had in discovering this Conspiracy. He deserves Credit, because the Intimacy of Berenice, and That of her Son Agrippa, with This Lady, and the good Offices she did Agrippa, made her known in Judea, and induced the Jewish Historian to inform himself exactly of what concerned her. Let us believe, then, on his Testimony, that Antonia was no sooner informed of Sejanus's Plot, than she wrote all the Circumstances of it exactly to Tiberius, who was then in the Island of Caprea, whither she dispatched one of her most faithful Domestic with her Letter. This Prince's Consideration for her increased greatly after so eminent a Piece of Service. Ὁ δὲ μαδὼν τόντε Σηιανὸν κλείνει καὶ τὸς συνεπιβόλους, τήντε Ἀντωνίαν καὶ πρὶν ἀξιολόγως ἄγων τιμωστέρην τὴν ὑπὸ λαμβάνει κατὰ τοῖς πάσι πιθανόν (8). Tiberius, being informed of it, put to Death Sejanus and his Abettors, and bad, for the future, a still greater reliance on Antonia, whom before he greatly esteemed. I shall shew in another Place (9), that Xiphilinus occasionally observes, that Antonia informed Tiberius of certain Matters concerning Sejanus.

[D] This disconsolate Mother was not able to walk as a Mourner, when Germanicus's Funeral was solemnized. Let us see how Tacitus relates the Matter, and the Picture he gives of her in his Reflexions. "Tiberius atque Augusta publico abstinere, inferius Majestate sua rati si palam lamentarentur, an ne omnium oculis vultum eorum scrutantibus falsi inteligerentur. Matrem Antoniam non apud auctores rerum, non diurna actorum scriptura, reperio ullo insigni officio functam, cum super Agrippinam, & Drusum & Claudium, cæteri quoque confamæ gainet nominatim percripti sint; seu valetudine præpediebatur, seu victus luctu animus magnitudinem mali perferre viâ non toleravit. Facilius crediderim Tiberio & Augusta, qui domo non excedebant, cohibitam, ut par moror & matris exemplo avia quoque & patris attingeri viderentur (10). - - - Tiberius and Augusta would not appear publicly, thinking it beneath their Majesty to mourn openly; or, perhaps, lest the Eyes of the People, examining their Looks, should discover their Disimulation. I do not find, in any Historians, or Journalists, that Antonia, the Mother, performed any remarkable Part of the Solemnity, tho', besides Agrippina, Drusus, and Claudius, the rest of his Kindred are mentioned by Name; whether it were, that Sickness prevented her, or that her Mind, overcome with Grief, could not support the Greatness of her Misfortune in public View. I rather believe she was hindered by Tiberius and Augusta, who went not out of their House, that the Uncle and Grandmother might be thought to be equally afflicted with the Mother."

[E] She was wont to call him Monster, &c. This Suetonius informs us of. "Mater Antonia portentum eum hominis dictabat, nec absolutum à natura, sed tantum inchoatum! ac si quem scordie argueret, stultiorem aiebat filio suo Claudio (11). - - - His Mother Antonia used to call him a Monster of a Man, not finished by Nature, but only begun! and, whenever she would reproach any one with Stupidity, she was wont to say, he was a greater Fool, than her Son Claudius." By this we may judge she was a Woman of Wit and Sense; for your ordinary Women seldom discover, that their Children are stupid; or, if they do, they are not over-forward, to excuse themselves, and represent them as Changlings, or half-formed Productions.

[F] She shut her up in a Chamber, where she was starved to Death. This is another Proof, that she was a Woman of Spirit, who loved her Children

(9) In the Article VESPA-SIAN, Remark [T].

(10) Tacit. Annal. lib. 3. ad ann. 773. l. 6. A. D. 20.

(11) Suet. in Claudio, cap. 3.

(7) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 8. pag. 632. C.

(8) Id. ibid.

the Effects of her Melancholy by Poison [G]. He paid no Honours to the Deceased, nor assisted at her Funeral (i). Probably the Temple of Antonia, which Pliny alone mentions, took it's Name from this Princess (H). She did not live to see the Misfortunes of her Grand-Daughter Antonia, whom Mr Moreri has mentioned, but not without a Mistake [I].

(i) Sueton. in Caligula, cap. 23.

no longer, than they were an Honour to her; and preferred the Greatness of a Roman Soul to the tender Sentiments of Nature. There were two Traditions concerning the Death of Livilla; One, that Tiberius caused her to be put to Death; The other, that he pardoned her for the sake of Antonia; but that Antonia condemned her to be starved to Death (12).

(12) Dion. lib. 58.

[G] Caligula ----- heightened the Effects of her Melancholy by Poison. Suetonius and Dion agree in this Point. "Per illummodi indignitates & tædia causa exiit mortis, dato tamen, ut quidam putant, & veneno (13). --- By these Affronts and Vexations he was the Cause of her Death; not without a Suspicion of having heightened it by Poison." Dion says nothing of Poison; he only tells us, that this inhuman Wretch, not being able to bear the Reproaches of his Grandmother, obliged her to put an end to her Life (14). I cannot find in what Year this illustrious Lady died; but, since it was in the Reign of Caligula, I think her Death may be placed in the Year of Rome 792. That of her Husband happened in the Year 744. We may give a near guess at her Age, when she became a Widow, and how long she lived; for she must have been born in the Year of Rome 714; since her Mother Octavia, who married Marc Antony in 713 (15), was delivered of a Daughter, upon his return from Greece, the Year following (16). The Poem entitled Consolatio ad Liviam Augustam de morte Drusi Neronis (17), represents Antonia as very disconsolate, and gives her great Encomiums. We are there informed, as also in Valerius Maximus, of Drusus's Confinity, and that his last Words called upon his dear Wife:

(13) Sueton. in Calig. cap. 23.

(14) Dion. lib. 59. See also Sueton. in Calig. cap. 29.

(15) Caligula ad ann. mundi 3910.

(16) Plot. in Antonio, pag. 930. E. See also pag. 931. D.

(17) It is printed with Ovid's Works, and many take it to be his.

Quid referam de te, dignissima conjuge Druso, Atque eadem Drusi digna parente nurus?
Par bene compositum, juvenum fortissimus alter,
Altera tam forti mutua cura viro.
Fœmina tu princeps, tu filia Cæsaris: illi
Nec minor es magni conjuge visâ Jovis.
Tu concessus amor, tu solus & ultimus abissi,
Tu requies fessio grata laboris eras.
Te moriens per verba novissima questus abesse,
Et mota in nomen frigida lingua tuum.

How shall the Muse in feeble Numbers raise Her Voice, illustrious Lady, to Thy Praise?
A Consort, equal to great Drusus's Worth!
A Daughter, worthy Her, who gave thy Drusus Birth!
United Hearts in Love! Consenting Pair!
The bravest Warriour HE, and she the loveliest Fair!
A Princess born, great Cæsar gave Thee Life;
To him not less, than Jove's imperial Wife.
The sacred Tie consign'd you to His Arms;
And His were All Antonia's blooming Charms.
From Fair to Fair He never learnt to rove;
Thine was his first, and Thine his latest, Love.
On thy soft Bosom he repos'd from Care,
Forgot each Toil and Labour of the War.
His dearest Wife employ'd his latest Breath;
Thy Absence was his only Pang in Death.
Dying, his salt'ring Tongue's uncertain Aim Call'd on his Wife, and half pronounced Thy Name.

[H] Probably the Temple of Antonia, which Pliny alone mentions, took it's Name from this Princess. He speaks of it in the Catalogue of Apeller's Paintings: "Ejusdem, says he, arbitrantur manu esse & in Antoniae templo Herculeum aversum: ut, quod est difficillimum, faciem ejus ostendat verius pictura, quam promittat (18). --- The Hercules averted, in the Temple of Antonia, is thought to be by the same Hand; that, what was most difficult, the Picture might more truly represent his Face, than promise it." A very learned Commentator (19) says, upon this Passage, That he does not know, whether this Temple belonged to the elder, or the younger Antonia, nor in what Part of the City it stood.

(18) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 20. pag. 213.

(19) Father Hardouin.

"Cujus illud Antoniae fuerit, majoris, minorisve, quove Urbis situ conditum fuerit, incertum. Utraque Antonii Triumvir filia, Major Germanici & Claudii Cæsaris parens: Neronis avia. --- To which of the Antonia's, the elder, or the younger, it was dedicated, and in what City it was built, is uncertain. Both the Antonia's were Daughters of the Triumvir; the elder, the Mother of Germanicus and Claudius Cæsar: Grandmother of Nero." This is to prefer the Opinion of Tacitus to That of Suetonius (20), and giving the elder to Drusus; but, on the other hand, I know not what to make of the Words, Neronis avia. I suspect the Printer has, at least, forgot the Epithet minor; for, by substituting this Word, we find, that Father Hardouin has said something of both the Antonia's; of the elder, that she was the Mother of Germanicus, and the Emperor Claudius; and of the younger, that she was Nero's Grandmother. If no such Word be supplied, there is a manifest Error in this Place, since the Mother of Germanicus was not Nero's Grandmother. To have recourse to the Adoption of Nero, by Claudius, would be an ill shift. In another place (21), this Commentator has preferred the Opinion of Suetonius to That of Tacitus.

(20) See, above, the Remark [A].

(21) In Plin. lib. 7. cap. 19. Tom. 2. pag. 38.

[I] Antonia, whom Mr Moreri has mentioned, but not without a Mistake. She was Daughter of the Emperor Claudius, by Ælia Petina; but born before her Father was Emperor. He married her first to Cneus Pompeius Magnus (22), and afterwards to Faustus Sylla. She saw both her Husbands die a violent Death. The former was put to Death, by order of the Emperor Claudius (23); the latter was massacred, at Marseilles, by Rufians, whom Nero had sent thither for that purpose (24). She refused to marry this Prince, who would have taken her to Wife, after the Death of Pompey (25). Nero put her to Death, upon pretence, that she was concerned in a Conspiracy; I believe it was That of Piso. An Historian pretends, that Piso was to have carried Antonia into the Camp of the Prætorian Guards (26). Tacitus mentions it, without thinking it very probable (27). He thinks it unlikely, that Antonia should have exposed herself to so great Hazard, without the Hopes of becoming Piso's Wife. Now there was no room to expect this; for Piso was known to be a most uxorious Husband. But Tacitus does not stop here; he subjoins a Restriction, according to his Custom; unless, says he, we suppose, that the Desire of Rule in Women is, of all others, the most violent. By this he restores the Probability to Pliny's Account, which he had been labouring to destroy. Antonia might have believed, that Piso would repudiate his dear Wife, to open a way to the Throne, by marrying the Daughter of the Emperor Claudius. "Interim Piso apud ædem Cereris operiretur, unde eum præfectus Fenius & cæteri accitum ferrent in castra, comitante Antonia Claudii Cæsaris filia, ad eliciendum vulgi favorem, quod C. Plinius memorat. Nobis quoquo modo traditum non occultare in animo fuit, quamvis absurdum videretur, aut inani spei Antoniam nomen & periculum commodavisse, aut Pisonem notum a more uxoris alii matrimonio fe obstrinxisse: nisi si cupido dominandi cunctis affectibus flagrantior est (28). --- In the mean time Piso was to wait at the Temple of Ceres, from whence the Præfect Fenius, and the rest, were to conduct him to the Camp, accompanied by Antonia, the Daughter of Claudius & Cæsar, in order to gain the Vulgar to their Party, as C. Plinius informs us. I resolved not to stifle this Tradition, true or false; though I cannot but think it absurd, either that Antonia should run the hazard of lending her Name to so vain an Enterprize, or that Piso, who was remarkable for conjugal Fidelity, should engage himself to marry another; unless the Desire of Rule be the strongest Affection of the Mind." Moreri's Faults are, I. That Tacitus calls Antonia's second Husband Cornelius Salenus, whereas he calls him Cornelius Sulla (29). II. That Antonia lived a long time a Widow. Her Husband Sylla was killed in the Year 815. Piso's Conspiracy broke out in 818. Peppæus died the same Year: It

(22) He referred to him this Surname, which Caligula had taken from him. Dion. lib. 60.

(23) Sueton. in Claud. cap. 27.

(24) Tacit. Ann. lib. 14. cap. 57.

(25) Sueton. in Ner. cap. 35.

(26) Plinius, apud Tacitum in Ann. lib. 15. cap. 53.

(27) Tacitus Annal. lib. 20. cap. 53.

(28) Tacitus Annal. lib. 15. cap. 53.

(29) Annal. lib. 13. cap. 23. (and not cap. 5, as in Moreri) and 47. Moreri is mistaken in citing lib. 14. cap. 16. He should have cited lib. 14. cap. 57. Mr has cited all the Places, which he says to have cited.

is very probable, that Antonia was courted soon after; and that her Refusal caused Nero to revive the Proceedings against her in particular. Be it as it will, her Widowhood could not be very long, since Nero, who caused her to be put to Death, died in the Year 821. In the third Place, the Authors, quoted by Mr Moreri, do not say, that Nero obliged Antonia to kill herself.

ANTONIA, Younger Sister of the preceeding, as well by the Father, as the Mother's Side, will furnish but a small Article. I meet with nothing farther concerning her, than that she was the Wife of Lucius Domitius Aenobarbus, and that this Marriage produced one Son and two Daughters; the Son, whose Name was Cneus Domitius, was Father to the Emperor Nero. We shall speak of the Daughters under the Word DOMITIA; and shew, that Mr Moreri is mistaken, in saying, that One of them married Galba.

ANTONIANO (SILVIO) a Cardinal, and a learned Man, raised himself by his Merit from a very low Condition; He was of mean Birth, and his Parents so far from being able to breed him a Scholar, that they themselves stood in need of the Charity of others. Some say he was illegitimate; but Joseph Castalion, who wrote his Life, has proved the contrary (a). Be That as it will, he was born at Rome, in the Year 1540 [A]. He made so quick and surprizing a Progress in his Studies, that one can scarce credit the Accounts of it. At Ten Years of Age, he made Verses [B] on any Subject, which was proposed to him; which were so good, and so finely turn'd, tho' made extempore, that other Wits could not have composed the like without much Time and Pains. The Trial was one day made at the Cardinal of Pisa's Table, at an Entertainment, which he gave to several other Cardinals. Alexander Farneze, taking a Nodsgay, gave it to the young Scholar, bidding him present it to That Person of the Company, who should be the next Pope. The Youth presented it to the Cardinal de Medicis, and spoke his Elogy in Verse. This Cardinal, who was afterwards Pope Pius IV, fancied the Company play'd upon him, and that the Poetry had been prepared before-hand, with much Art, with a Design of making a Jest of him; upon which he seemed to take it amiss; but they solemnly protested to him, that it was made extempore, and desired he would try the Boy himself on any other Subject: He did so, and was convinced of the extraordinary Abilities of the Youth; who enlarged, off-hand, on a Subject, which was proposed to him, in very elegant Verse [C]. The Duke of Ferrara, coming to Rome, to congratulate Marcellus II, on his Elevation to the Pontificat, was so charmed with Antoniano's Wit, that he carried him with him to Ferrara [D], where he appointed him excellent Masters to instruct him in all the Sciences. He was taken from thence by Pope Pius IV; who, remembering the Adventure of the Nose-gay, and being now in St Peter's Chair, enquired what was become of the young Poet. Finding where he was,

(a) Scripti Sylvii Card.
Antoniani
vitam, quem tan rationi-bus tum pu-blicarum te-stimonis ab eorum ca-lumnias vindicare cona-tus est, qui illum a pa-rente minus justa uxore genitum asserabant.
Niclus Ery-thraus, Pi-naceo l. I.
pag. 167.

(1) N. E-rythra. Pinac.
l.

(2) Toppi,
Biblioth.
Napolit. pag.
233.

(3) Oldoini Athen. Roman. pag.
623.

(4) Fam.
Strada, Prof. Acad. 3.
lib. 2.

(5) *By the Gift of Joseph Casta-
lion*, in 1610.

[A] He was born at Rome, in the Year 1540. Niclus Erythraus makes him to be born at Rome: Rome, humili loco — ortus (1); but Toppi makes him a Native of Castelli, in the Abruzzo, and gives us an Inscription, made by Mutius Panza, in which he is said to be Castellorum oppido oriundus (2). This may only signify, that his Father was of this Place. However it be, I collect from Father Oldoini (3), that he was born in the Year 1540, because he tells us, that he died, August 16, 1603. Niclus Erythraus does not set down the Year of the Century, in which he died, but only, that he died in his grand Climacteric. Monf. de la Rochezouai, in his Nomenclator Cardinalium, places his Death on the sixteenth of August, 1604. I have chosen to follow Father Oldoini.

[B] At ten Years of age he made Verses. Father Strada, who, with much Politeness, has inserted the Relation of this Adventure in one of his Orations, says, that Antoniano was not quite twelve Years of Age (4).

[C] Who enlarged, off-hand, on a Subject, which was proposed to him, in very elegant Verse. Father Strada informs us, that, while the Cardinal de Medicis was confidering what Subject he should propose, the Clock struck; upon which he desired him to make Verses on a Clock. The Author has preserved those, which he supposes Antoniano made on the Spot; and adds, that the Cardinal of Trent presented him with a Chain.

[D] The Duke — carried him with him to Ferrara. Antoniano spoke some Orations there, which have been printed (5), with those, which he pronounced at Rome; this inclines me to believe, that he was Professor at Ferrara. Niclus Erythraus says only, that Antoniano taught the Sciences there; Why does he not tell us which they were? The fear of being too tedious is no just Reason for suppressing such Particulars. I have not yet had an Opportunity of consulting the Life of this Cardinal, composed by Joseph Castalion; which, no doubt, informs us upon what account he was at Ferrara, and in what Year he died, with many other Particulars. Much less can I procure a Book, which Mr Conrart sent to Mr de Balzac. The Subject was Italian Discourses of the Philosophical Orator (6). Mr de Balzac despised them: "I allow, says he (7), that the Elogium of Cardinal Dossat, and Cardinal Silvio Antoniano are not amiss, and that the Author has happily enough imitated the Parallels of Plutarch's Lives. His long Inve-

"tive against Nobility is the highest strain of his
"Wit: I have observed several fine Strokes in it,
"and something of his own Invention, besides what
"he has borrowed from others, and particularly from
"Caius Marius's Speech in the Jugurthine War.
"However, I am of Opinion, that, without injuring "his Subject, he might have shortened his Digres"sion. This Common-place Topic, which he has "spun out to such a length, and which he has so
"artfully, and so pompously displayed, ought only "to have been touched upon by the By. Besides,
"that he made himself powerful and dangerous En"emies by it. For it must needs be a great Offence
"to the polite World, to prove, that it is no Crime
"to be the Son of an Artist, or Rustic."

"Jerom Ruscelli, in the seventh Chapter of his
"Rimario, speaks Wonders of the Talent of our Sil"vio Antoniano, whom, by mistake, he calls Antonio, "for extempore Poetry. He mentions a Trial, which "was made of it at Venice, in the Presence of the "Queen of Poland, Cardinal Trivulzio, and the "Cardinal of Ausburg. Antoniano was not then
"above Sixteen. The Princes of Este detained him
"at Ferrara, where he read public Lectures, as the "same Ruscelli informs us, in the place quoted." I "have this from Mr de la Monnaie."

(6) See the Dissertations at the end of the Christian Socrates,
pag. 10.

(7) Ibid.
47.

* Bonna Sforza, who
in 1555,
quitted Poland to retire to Bari in Italy.

[E] What

was, he sent for him to Rome, and gave him an honourable Post in his Palace. He afterwards made him Professor of Humanity in the Roman College. Antoniano exercised This Office with so much Reputation, that, on the Day, when he began to explain the Oration pro Marco Marcello, he had not only a great Croud of People for his Auditors, but likewise Twenty five Cardinals. He afterwards became Rector of the same College; and, upon the Death of Pius IV, the Spirit of Devotion seizing him, he followed Philip de Neri, and accepted of the Office of Secretary to the Sacred College, offered him by Pius V. He exercised this Employ Twenty five Years, and obtained by it the Reputation of an honest and able Officer. He refused the Bishopric, which Gregory XIV would have given him, but not the Post of Secretary to the Briefs, which was offered him by Clement VIII, who made him also his Chamberlain, and afterward Cardinal. It is reported, that Cardinal Alexander de Montalto, who had behaved a little haughtily towards Antoniano, seeing him promoted to the Purple, said, that, for the future, he would never despise a Man in a Cassock and little Band, how low an Object soever he might seem, since, possibly, the Person, whom he had despised, might become not only his Equal, but even his Master. Antoniano killed himself by dint of Study; he spent whole Nights in it; which brought a Distemper upon him, of which he died, in the Sixty third Year of his Age. He wrote with so much Ease, that he had never occasion to make any Rasure; and it is said, that he preserved his Virginity all his Life (b). See, in one of the Remarks, what relates to his Works [E].

Cardinal Bentivoglio will furnish me with a large Supplement to this Article [F]. I find, that Antoniano was one of the Disputants on the Question concerning the Precedency of Patriarchs [G].

[E] What relates to his Works. We have of his, De Christiana puerorum educatione — Dissertatio de obsecratione Solis in morte Christi — De Successione Apostolica — De Stylo Ecclesiastico, seu de conscribenda Ecclesiastica historia — De Primatu S. Petri — Lucubrations in Rhetoricam Aristotelis & in Orationes Ciceronis. — i. e. Of the Christian Education of Youth — A Dissertation on the Darkness of the Sun at the Crucifixion — Of Apostolical Succession — Of the Ecclesiastical Style, or of writing Ecclesiastical History — Of the Primacy of St Peter — Lucubrations on Aristotle's Rhetoric, and Cicero's Orations. — Several pieces of Verses, some Sermons, Notes and Prefaces on the Romance of Achilles Statius, and on the Tenence of Gabriel Faernus (8), several Letters, &c. He is said to have had a hand in the Catechism of the Council of Trent (9). As for his Letters, they are Apostolical Briefs, which he composed while he was Secretary; I shall take notice of them in the following Remark. They are reckoned among the Letters, which the Writers of Anecdotes should make their Extracts from (10). The other Sources are the Letters of the Cardinals Bembo and Sadolet, Those of Peter Martyr, &c. Note, that his Book De Christiana puerorum educatione, composed in Italian, at the Request of Cardinal Charles Borromeo, was printed at Verona, by the Care of Augustin Valerio, Bishop of the Place, and Cardinal (11).

[F] Cardinal Bentivoglio will furnish me with a large Supplement to this Article. He says, it was still uncertain, whether Antoniano was born at Rome; but that there was no doubt of his having been educated there from his Infancy (12). He was placed, by Pope Pius IV, in the Service of Cardinal Borromeo, That Pope's Nephew; he was This Cardinal's Secretary for Latin Dispatches; He attended him to Milan, and returned with him to Rome. He was made Secretary of the Sacred College; and discharged the Duties of That Post to Admiration. He was admitted to the strictest Intimacy with Clement VIII; whose Briefs he composed with so much Eloquence, that That Pope had no reason to envy Leo X. the Sadolet's and the Bembo's. He inserted Passages of Scripture in them with great Judgment; for which he was blamed by too rigid a Censor; who said, that it made several of the Pope's Letters favour more of a Monastery, than of the Court of Rome, and represented rather the Person of a Preacher, than that of a Sovereign Pontiff. Che perciò alcuni di loro, sapessero più di Claustro regolare, che di corte Ecclesiastica, e rappresentassero quasi la persona d'un predicatore, che un Pontifice (13). He laughed at this Criticism, and answered, That, if he took the Matter right, there were not too many Scripture-Phrases in the Letters, which he composed; that, on the contrary, he thought they were not sufficiently filled with them, considering the Quality of the Person, who spoke in them, which was That of a Sovereign Pastor of the Church; considering further, likewise, that they were not prophane Letters, in which a Luxuriancy of Thought and Expression, after the Style of temporal Sovereigns, ought to reign. Anzi che a lui pareva, che più tosto mancassero in questa parte, havuto riguardo all' essere i Brevi Apostolici scritti dal supremo Pastor della Chiesa, e non lettere profane, che havessero a lussu reggiare con sensi, & parole tratte dalle Secretarie de Principi temporali (14). He adds, that the Briefs of Sadolet, and Those of Bembo, did not keep up the decorum, which the Pontifical Dignity required; and that, in some of his Briefs, Bembo, by an Affectation of Latinity, favours, not only of Prophaneness, and a worldly Spirit, but even of Paganism. Antoniano was, in his last Sickness, visited by Clement VIII, and received from him the Apostolical Benediction. He was naturally modest, of a pleasant Conversation, and a Prudence, which the Court-Spirit had not vitiated (15). He assisted in several Conclaves, and discoursed concerning them with singular Satisfaction; not without making solid Reflexions on the Vanity of human Things. Men, said he, perplex themselves with a thousand Cares, to compass their Ends, but the Providence of God almost always discovers it's Ascendant. Per occasione d'essere stato Secretario del Sacro Collegio tanti anni, s'era trovato egli in molti conclavi, e di quei successi discorreva con gusto particolare, e mostrava specialmente in quanti modi vi si affaticasse l'industria humana, ed in quanti vi apparisse, e vi prevallesse ordinariamente la provvidenza Divina (16). Without doubt he meant to say, that the best concerted Intrigues, and those, which have exercised the Thoughts most, are frustrated, in Conclaves, by unforeseen Accidents. If by this he would insinuate, that the secret Springs of Providence are more particularly discoverable in Those Assemblies, where Popes are elected, he was mistaken; for we see, that, in all the Courts of the World, the Success of the most prudent Politics depends upon I know not what fortuitous Incidents; which may convince us of the Truth of the Proverb, Man proposes, but God disposes.

[G] Was one of the Disputants in the Question concerning the Precedency of Patriarchs. Read this Passage, taken from a Letter, which the Paranda wrote to Rome, the eleventh of December, 1589. "La causa della precedenza Patriarcale non è ancor venuta à fine, & si tratta tuttavia nella Congregazione delle Ceremonie. Si scrive, & le scritture vanno per manus, & si come diff già il parer della Congregazione è contra la pretenza de gli Arcivescovi, & de Patriarchi. Solamente l'Antoniano sostiene questa parte, & scrive, & dà fido. Sarà un brau' huomo, se farà tanto che basti, havendo da contrastar con Monsignor Illustrissimo Gual-

(b) Ex land Nich Ery- tho, Pima- ph. l. pag 36.

(14) Id. ib. pag 122.

(15) Id. ib. pag 113.

(16) Id. ib. pag 152.

(8) Nomen- clat. Cardi- nal pag 178.

(9) See Co- lonius Bibl. chois. pag 36.

(10) Varil- las's Prefice to the Anec- dots of Flo- rence.

(11) Poffe- win. Apparat. Sacr. Tom. 2. pag 405 443.

(12) Bentivoglio's Me- moirs ovvero di- stio, capitolo 7. pag 107. Edit. Amstel. 1648.

(13) Id. ib. pag 111.

(17) Lettere "do (17). ---- The Question concerning the Pre-de Gio. "cedency of Patriarchs is not yet determined, and con-Francisco "tinues to be discussed in the Congregation of Cere-Peranda, "mony. They write, and their Works are in every
pag. 224. "one's Hand. And they say the Opinion of the Con-Edit. Venet. "gregation is against the Pretensions of the Arch-1604.

"bishops and Patriarchs. Antoniano alone under"takes their Defence, and writes, and makes a Stand.
"He will be a brave Man, if he can support his "Cause against the most illustrious Lord Gual-
"do."

ANTONIO (NICOLAS) Knight of the Order of St James, and Canon of Seville, has done great Honour to the Spanish Nation by the Bibliothèque de Spanish Writers, which he published at Rome, in two Volumes, in Folio, in the Year 1672. It is a very good Work in it's kind [A]. And, perhaps, no One has succeeded better in Collections of this kind, than Don Nicolas Antonio. He was born at Seville, in the Year 1617, of a Father, whom King Philip IV made President of the Admiralty, established in That City in the Year 1626. Having studied School-Learning, Philosophy, and Theology, in his own Country, he went to study the Law at Salamanca, and applied himself chiefly to the Lectures of Francisco Ramos del Manzano, who was afterwards One of the King's Counsellors, and Preceptor to Charles II. We cannot form a better Judgment of the Progress he made, than from the many Projects he had conceived for the Advancement of Literature, and the manner, in which he executed part of them, notwithstanding the unavoidable interruption of Affairs, in an Employment, which he had at Rome; being Agent-General for the King, his Master, and, besides, concerned in Special Commissions, from the Inquisition of Spain, the Vice-Roys of Naples and Sicily, and the Governour of Milan, to negotiate their Affairs at the Court of Rome. The Plan of the Bibliothèque de Spanish Writers consists of two Parts. The first comprehends all the Authors of That Nation, who lived before the End of the XVth Century; the other Those, who lived after the End of That Century. This latter Part, being ready sooner than the first, was published before it. It appeared at Rome, as I have already said, in two Volumes in Folio, in the Year 1672. I cannot tell whether the Author had leisure enough to put the last Hand to the other Part, and to a second Design, no less laborious. He was employ'd upon a Work under the following Title; Trophæum Historico-Ecclesiasticum Deo veritati erectum, ex manubus Pseudo-Historicorum, qui Flavii Lucii Dextri, M. Maximi, Helece, Braulioni, Luitprandi, & Juliani nomine circumferuntur; hoc est, vindiciæ veræ atque dudum nota Hispanarum rerum Historiæ, Germanarum nostræ gentis laudum, non ex Germano-Fuldensibus Chronicis, emendatarum in libertatem & paritatem plena Assertio.—An Historico-Ecclesiastical Trophy erected to the God of Truth from the Spoils of the Pseudo-Historians, banded about under the Names of Flavius Lucius Dexter, M. Maximus, Helece, Braulion, Luitprand, and Julian; that is, The True and Well-known History of the Spanish Affairs vindicated, and the Genuine Virtues of our People, not meanly borrowed from the German Chronicles of Fuld, but restored to their Liberty and Parity. He had reason to say, that it was not only a Work of vast Extent, but attended likewise with dangerous Consequences (a). For where are Those, who are willing to be undeceived as to Fables, which for a long time have flattered the Vanity of their Nation? To what do not they expose themselves, who venture to stem the Torrent of a Tradition equally fabulous and glorious (b)? Every one knows the Clamour of the Provençals upon Mr de Lawnois's attempting to cure them of their Errors in relation to Mary Magdalen and Lazarus. Perhaps Don Nicolas Antonio did not presume to meddle with certain pious Fables [B], as being very sensible of the Obstinacy of his Countrymen on this Head, and the untractable Temper of the Inquisition. He insinuates,

(a) Immense molis, ac forsan in-vidiæ, opus.

(b) See the Remark [D], at the end.

A Thought on the Indexes of Books.

(1) See the advantage, as Character given of it by Mr Baillet,
Tom. 2. of his Jugem-ents des Sçavans, n.
128. The Journal des Sçavans, of July 6, 1706, gives us a very interesting Article on this excellent Work.

[A] The Bibliothèque de Spanish Writers ---- is a very good Book in it's kind (1). I have quoted Mr Baillet, who has given a Detail of his Excellencies. He has, not without Reason, praised the very Tables of the Book; for they are in a very good Method, and very useful. The Author has wrote a short Preface to it, which shews his good Taste and Judgment. He there introduces the Saying of a Spanish Writer, "Indicem libri ab Autore, librum ipsum a quovis alio conscribendum esse. ---- The Index of a Book should be the Author's own; the Book itself may be wrote by any one else." The contrary is practised at present; Authors leave the trouble of composing Alphabetical Tables to others; and it must be owned, that they, who are not laborious, and whose Talent lies in a great Warmth of Imagination, are in the right to let others compose the Indexes of their Works; but a Man of Judgment, and Labour, will succeed, in making Tables to his own Writings, much better than a Stranger. There are many Pieces of good Advice to be given in regard to the Composition of these Tables; nor are they mistaken, who look upon them as the Soul of Books.

[B] He did not presume to meddle with certain pious Fables. Perhaps I am mistaken; for Mr Baillet speaks thus of them; "His Criticism is very

"just and solid in several Places; particularly in what "relates to the fabulous Traditions of the first Ca"techists, who planted the Faith in Spain, and of "those false Historians, whom Imposture brought "forth, for the Delusion of the Spaniards, and on "whom our Author has promised a particular Cri"ticism (2)." This would have made me more pre-
"emptory, had I not found another Remark sub"joined to these Words of Mr Baillet; "However,
"there is room to suspect him of too much Indulgence
"for certain vulgar Opinions, which are exploded
"by Critics of the best Taste." Be this as it will,
"there is no doubt but he would have destroyed the "Authority of all the supposed Authors men"tioned in his Title (3); nor would he have been the "first, who had employed his Pen to this Purpose;
"for read the following Extract from some Sheets of
"the Abbot de la Roque; "For an Age past, they "have had the boldness to write (speaking of Spain)
"and publish false Chronicles, to impose upon the "Credulity of the Learned, or the Simple; which,
"far from diminishing, increases the Glory of the "Marquis d'Argensol, who has so justly ridiculed
"and exploded Dexter, the oldest of these false
"Chronicles, in his *Dissertationes Ecclesiasticæ: por
"el honor de los antiguos tutelares contra las ficcio-
"nes modernas*, printed at Saragossa in 1671 (4).
[C] The

(2) Baillet,
Jugem. des Sçavans,
Tom. 2. pag.
134.

(3) See the Remark [D],
at the end.

(4) Journ.
des Sçavans,
of the week
of January,
1687, pag.
11. See the end of the Remark [D].

insinuates, that he had formed the Design of several other Works. But let us not omit That, which he published at Antwerp, in the Year 1659, De Exilio, five de Pena Exilii Exulatumque Conditione & Juribus, in folio (c).—Of Banishment, or of the Punishment of Exile, and the Condition and Rights of the Exiled, in Folio.

(c) Taken from his Bibliotheca Hispanica, Tom. 2. pag. 118, 119.

Thus much I had said of Don Nicolas Antonio, in the first Edition. Since That Time, I have been informed, that, being returned to Seville, after having studied the Law at Salamanca, he shut himself up in the Royal Monastery of Benedictines, where he laboured several Years on the Spanish Bibliotheque, and, for that purpose, made use of the Books of Benedictus de la Serna, who was, at that time, Abbot of It, and Dean of the Faculty of Theology of Salamanca; That, in the Year 1659, he was sent to Rome by King Philip IV, to take care of the Affairs of the Kingdom, as Agent-General (d): That the Cardinal of Arragon, Ambassador at Rome, obtained for him, of Pope Alexander VII, a Canonship in the Church of Seville, the Revenue whereof he employed in Alms and Books; That he collected above Thirty thousand Volumes with it; inasmuch that his Library fell short of none, but the Vatican; That, by this Assistance, together with continual Labour, and indefatigable Application, he finished his Bibliotheque of Spain in four Volumes in Folio (e).—That, after he had caused the two first Volumes to be printed, he was recalled to Madrid by King Charles II, to take on him the Office of Counsellor of the Crusado, which he discharged with great Integrity till his Death, which happened in 1684.—That he left no other Estate, besides the vast Library, which he had transported from Rome to Madrid; on the contrary, that his Executorship was clogged with Debts; that his two Brothers, who are Canons of Salamanca, and his two Nephews, were not able to get his Bibliotheque of Spain printed, but sent it to Monsieur the Cardinal d'Aguirre, who was so generous as to be at the Expence of the Impression himself (C), and committed the Care of it to Monsieur Marti, his Library-Keeper, who added some Notes in his Eminency's Name. I have just seen a little Book, in which I find, that the Jesuits have complained of this Work of Don Nicolas Antonio [D].

(d) Journ. des Savans, of the tenth of June, 1697, pag. 420. Edit. Holl.

(e) Ib. pag. 421, 422.

[C] The Cardinal d'Aguirre, ----- was so generous, as to be at the Expence of the Impression himself. He was the Author's old Friend, and had studied with him in the University of Salamanca. The Republic of Letters is extremely obliged to him for the Expence he was at in printing such a Book, which contains two Volumes in Folio. They were printed at Rome, and appeared in 1696. You will find good Extracts from them in the Journal de Savans (5), and in That of Leipfic (6). The Title of the Work is This: "Bibliotheca Hispana vetus, five Hispanorum qui usquam unquamve scripto aliquid confignaverunt, Notitia, complectens scriptores omnes qui ab Octaviani Augusti Imperio usque ad annum M D floruerunt. Auctore Nicolao Antonio, Hispanensi Juriconsulto, Ordinis S. Jacobi Equite, Patriz Ecclesie Canonico, regiorum negotiorum in Urbe & Romanæ curiæ Procuratore generali, demum Matriæ consiliario Regio. Opus Posthumum. Nunc primum prodit jussu & expensis Eminentiissimi & Reverendissimi Domini D. Josephi Saez Cardinalis de Aguirre. --- A Dictionary of ancient Spanish Authors, or Memoirs of all those in Spain, who have ever, or any where, committed any Thing to writing; comprehending all the Writers, who have flourished from the Reign of Octavian Augustus down to the Year M D. By Nicolas Antonio, Civilian of Salamanca, and Knight of the Order of St James; Canon of Seville, Agent-General for the King and the Inquisition, and lastly by the King's Counsellor at Madrid. A Posthumous Work; now first published by Order, and at the Expence, of the most Eminent and Reverend Lord, D. Joseph Saez, Cardinal of Aguirre."

[D] The Jesuits have complained of this Work of Don Nicolas Antonio [A] Pamphlet (7) entitled Calumnia convicta, seu Epistola familiaris Cleandri ad clarissimum & eruditissimum virum Evaristum, super Memoriali nuper porrecto, Hispano idiomate, ad Regem Catholicum à Patre Joanne de Palazol Soc. Jesu, nomine & jussu Thyræ Gonzales ejusdem Soc. Generalis Præpositi. --- Calumny convicted; or a familiar Epistle from Cleander to the most famous and learned Evaristus, concerning a Memorial, in Spanish, lately presented to the Catholic King, by Father John de Palazol, a Jesuit, by Order of Thyrus Gonzales, General of the Order; dated from Dillingen, the Twen- ty fifth of June 1698, informs me, that the Jesuits have represented to the King of Spain, that one of the five Propositions of Janfenius has been recommended as Catholic in the Work of Don Nicolas Antonio. They pretend to be unwilling to attack the Cardinal d'Aguirre, who was at the Expence of printing this Work; but it is easy to see that they attack him indirectly. They suppose, that some Janfenist has, in this Place, corrupted the Text of Antonio. The whole Affair is This: Our Author acknowledges this Proposition of Prudentius, Bishop of Troyes, for Catholic; "That the Blood of Jesus Christ was shed for all Believers; but not for those, who never have believed; who do not now believe; and who never will believe." Quod sanguis Christi effusus sit pro omnibus credentibus, sed non pro iis qui nunquam crediderunt, nec credunt, nec credituri sunt. The Author of the Pamphlet shews, that this Proposition might have been considered as Catholic; and that therefore there was no manner of Reason to suspect the Faith of Don Nicolas Antonio, or That of the Cardinal d'Aguirre. Note, that his Eminence has declared boldly against the looser Casuists (8); and that this is supposed to be the Reason of the ill Offices the Jesuits endeavour to do him.

It is probable, this will not be the only Complaint brought to the Tribunals against these two Volumes of the Bibliothèque de Spain. I have not yet seen them, and I question whether there be a Copy of them in the United Provinces (9); but I am assured, that the Author has declared loudly against the pretended Luitprand, and against Higuera, who brought him to light; and has fallen foul on Aubert de Seville, on the Chronicles of Dexter, on Maximus, on Julian, &c. A Spanish Jesuit (10) remarks this, in a Work he has published, in favour of his Brethren, at Antwerp, Compilers of the Acta Sanctorum. It is there I have met with some Passages of Don Nicolas Antonio on this Subject. But, since the Marquis d'Agropoli, Grandee of Spain by a double Title, could not combat these fabulous Historians, without exposing himself to a vexatious Information before the Inquisition (11), as a Writer, who betrayed the Honour of his Country; I cannot suppose the Monks of That Country will ever suffer the Memory of our Nicolas Antonio to rest.

(8) See the several Extracts from his Books, in the Memorial of a Janfenist, which I shall cite in the Article BELLARMIN, Remark [H].

(9) I write this the 28th of February, 1699.

(10) Anton. Xaramilios, in Apologia pro Veritate. This Work, translated out of Spanish into Latin, by the Jesuit Pet. Cant, was printed at Antwerp, 1698.

(11) See the Article VESPASIAN, Remark [D].

(5) Of the Month of June and July, 1697.

(6) Acta Eruclit. Lips. Mens. Jun. & Jul. 1697.

(7) Of seven by seven Pages in 12mo.

APAFI (MICHAEL) Prince of Transylvania, was promoted to this Principality in the Year 1661, without his thinking of it. Ali Bassa, having forced Kimin Janos to quit Transylvania, was apprehensive he should not be able to hinder him from returning, and making his Party superior by the help of the Imperial Troops. He resolved, therefore, to set up a Prince in opposition to him, who should be elected

(a) Joannes
Betlenius,
Rerum Transylvani-
e, lib. 3.
pag. 247.

by the States of the Country, under the Protection of the Porte. To this end, he demanded of the Deputies of the Towns of Transylvania, whether there were not some great Transylvanian Lord, in the Towns, which had submitted to his Arms, worthy of the Principality (a)? They named to him Michael Apafi, who kept himself at that time in his Castle of Ebeßfalve, and had not yet forgot the long Troubles he had suffered among the Tartars, from whence he was but lately released, by paying a great Ransom. Ali sent for him, without discovering his Design. Apafi believed it was to put him to Death [A], but durst not refuse to go with the Guard, which was sent for him. His Wife, who was near the time of her Lying-in, was in a mortal Frigate, and gave him over for lost. Before he had passed his own Estate, News was brought him, that his Wife was happily delivered of a Son; he knew not whether he ought to rejoice or grieve, at the News: but the Turks, who guarded him, and no doubt knew Ali Bassa's Intentions better than he, told him, it presaged a happy Principality to him. Ali received him very honourably, and a few Days after procured him to be elected Prince of Transylvania. He managed it so, that the Election appeared to be legal; for he caused as many of the Nobility of Transylvania to come into his Army, as he could; and told them he wished that They, together with the Deputies of the Cities, would elect a Prince; and promised, in the Sultan's Name, to confer the Ensigns of the Principality upon whomsoever they should elect (b). Thus Michael Apafi became Prince of Transylvania, without any Intrigues, on his part, or Expectation of it [B]. He was of Noble Birth [C] indeed, but of a quiet Disposition; besides that, his long Imprisonment in Crim-Tartary had inspired him with great Humility. Kimin Janos, who expected Wonders from his Conjunction with the Imperialists, commanded by the Count Montecuculi, found himself disappointed; for, as soon as Montecuculi was informed of the Condition of the Ottoman Forces, he thought it more convenient to return to Hungary, than hazard a Battle. This Retreat gave the Turks an opportunity of making great Ravages, and obtaining a Victory in Transylvania, which cost Kimin Janos his Life, in January 1662 [D].

His

(b) Ex eodem Betle-nio, pag.
248, 249.

[A] Apafi believ'd it was to put him to Death.] I give more Credit to this, than to Those, who say he was an ambitious Man. I quote an Author, who was well informed; for he lived at that Time, and had Employments in Transylvania, which gave him Opportunities of knowing the bottom of all Transactions (1). Now he relates very ingenuously, that Apafi was made Prince of Transylvania, without contributing any thing to it himself; and affirms, that he was not an ambitious Man. However, it is a very pardonable Mistake to say, that Apafi had certain Qualities, which rendered him worthy of a Principality, and an Ambition without proportionable to the Greatness of his Soul (2): For, generally, those who are raised to Elective Principalities, in the midst of Troubles, stirred up by their Competitors, are Men of very aspiring Minds. A French Author, who has published an History of the Troubles in Hungary, is far from representing Michael Apafi as a Prince, who endeavoured to aggrandize himself; for, when he speaks of the Resolution taken by the Hungarian Protestants, to confederate themselves with those of Transylvania, to maintain their Liberty of Conscience by the Sword; he adds these Words, "The Prince, who was a Woman of a turbulent Spirit, and extremely attached to the Errors of Calvin, solicited this Confederacy very powerfully; whilst her more peaceable Husband employed himself only in Hunting, and in the Conversation of the Learned (3)".

[B] Thus Michael Apafi became Prince of Transylvania, without any Intrigues, on his Part, or Expectation of it.] Of this I have already spoken in the foregoing Remark. It remains only, that I point out certain Authors, who seem not to have been well informed of the manner of his Election. One of them speaks thus; "In the beginning of the Year 1663, Kimin Janos was defeated, and lost his Life. . . . The Turks, finding no more Resistance, made themselves Masters of all Transylvania, except the Places possessed by the Imperialists. Michael Apafi, who had been elected in the Room of Kimin Janos, desired a Peace with the Turks; and, accordingly, Hali Bassa entered into a Treaty with the Baron de Greze (4)." This Discourse plainly imports, I. That Apafi was at War with the Turks, as soon as he was placed on the Throne of Transylvania. II. That he was not elected before the Death of Kimin Janos, and consequently not 'till the Year 1663. All This is false. He was elected in the Year 1661, during the Life of Kimin Janos, and at the Recommendation of Ali Bassa; and Kimin Janos was killed in the Month of January 1662. The Author of the Life of Count Tekeli relates (5), by Hear-say only, that Michael Apafi was raised, by the Turks, to the Principality of Transylvania, on his promising a larger Tribute. Away with this Promise to the same Place with His other Competitors, who addressed themselves to the Grand Signior, as the misinformed Mr Moreri tells us.

[C] He was of noble Birth.] Let us hear the Author, whom I have already cited more than once. "Hic (Michael Apafi) erat ex antiquissima magnatum Familia ortus, pius, sed tam natura, quam propter diuturnas Carceris Crimenis molestias, plus justo demissus ac levis, ut adepto etiam Principatu nimis a peritque lenitatis infimularetur (6). . . . This Prince (Michael Apafi) was of a noble and ancient Family; a pious Man, but, both by Nature, and from the long Troubles of his Imprisonment in Crim-Tartary, of too humble and mild a Disposition; inasmuch, that, even after he was raised to the Principality, he was reproached by some with too much Lenity." These Words, ex antiquissima magnatum Familia, sufficiently confute Mr Moreri, who says, that Michael Apafi was a Magistrate's Son of Hermanstadt, the chief City of Transylvania. It was certainly on the Credit of His Dictionary, that the Author of the Historical Mercury affirmed the same thing (7).

[D] Which cost Kimin Janos his Life, in January 1662.] I have already confuted Him, who said it was in the beginning of the Year 1663. There is another still to be confuted. Sir P. Ricaut pretends, that Kimin Janos, having been defeated near Clausenburgh, resolved, some time after, to try his Fortune a second time: That he gave the Turks Battle, at some Distance from Presburg; that the Success was a long time doubtful; but that, at last, he was forced to yield to Numbers, and, in the Flight, was thrown off his Horse by his own Men, and trod to Death. This Historian remarks, that the Turks killed, and took Prisoners, Fifty thousand Christians, in the Battle of Clausenburgh; and that, a little before, they declined fighting, because the Emperor's Troops, and those of Kimin Janos, were superior to theirs in Number (8). I find nothing of this in my Transylvanian Author. He informs me, on the contrary, that Montecuculi, and Kimin Janos, being advanced beyond Clausenburgh, were informed, that Ali Bassa's Army was four times stronger than theirs, inasmuch that Montecuculi declared to Kimin Janos, that, considering the ill Condition their Infantry was in, by reason of the Edition

(5) Pag. 12.
of 1694.

(6) Betlenius,
pag. 247.

(7) Mém. of March,
1690, pag.
490.

(8) Ricaut's History of Mahomet
IV. pag.
292, 293,
Ann. 1661.

(1) The Titles, which he gives himself, at the beginning of his History of Transylvania, printed at Amsterdam, 1664, in 12mo, are these. Joannes Betlenius, Comes Comitatus Albenis, regni Transylvanie Consiliarius, Cancellarius, ac sedis Siccualis Udvaryhely Capitaneus supremus, &c.

(2) Ricaut's
History of Mahomet
IV. pag.
292.

(3) History of the Troubles of Hungary, Book 2.
An. 1668,
pag. 71, of
the Edition of Amsterdam, 1686.

(4) Ib. lib.
1. pag. 41.

His Son endeavoured to support his Pretensions; but his Efforts were unsuccessful. Apafi was obliged to join his Forces with those of the Turks, to recover the Places, which the Emperor had possessed himself of in Transylvania. The Imperial Garrison of Clausenburgh defended itself so long, that the Turks and Michael Apafi were obliged to raise the Siege with Disgrace (c). Treaties were set on foot for the Evacuation of these Places, but without any Effect; they were forced to come to open War at last (d). The Turks were successful in 1663; but, the Year following, they lost the famous Battle of St Godard; after which the Grand Vizier consented to a Truce of Twenty Years. In the Year 1664, Apafi treated with the Imperial Garrisons of Clausenburgh and Zatmar, who delivered up those two Towns to him (e). He lived under the Protection of the Porte, and wholly independant on the Court of Vienna, during the Truce between the two Empires. At first he favoured the Malecontents of Hungary, without breaking with the Emperor; but at last engaged in an open War for them, and published his Reasons, in a Latin Manifesto, addressed to all the Christian Powers [E]. The Turks broke with the Emperor, in the Year 1683, and entered Hungary with a formidable Army, which penetrated as far as Vienna, with all imaginable Ease. But these happy Beginnings were followed by a dreadful Reverse. The Grand Vizier raised the Siege of Vienna; and from that time there followed nothing but Loss upon Loss, and Misfortune upon Misfortune, on the Ottoman side. Transylvania fell a Prey to the Imperial Troops; and Apafi, instead of asserting the Liberties of Hungary, was the Cause of This Kingdom's losing That Shadow of Liberty, which remained to it [F]; for it is now no longer elective, but looked upon as a conquered Country, and, accordingly, is erected into an Hereditary Kingdom. Apafi died at Weissenburgh towards the end of

(c) The Governor was called David Rettani. He was a Venetian, and a good Engineer. Vianoli Hist. Veneta, Tom. 2. pag. 66g.

(d) Ex Betlenio, Hist. Rer. Transylvan.

(e) Buno, Not. in Phil. Cluverii introduct. Geograph. pag. 281.

of the scarcity of Provisions, which they had suffered, he could not hazard his Imperial Majesty's Troops (9). Kimin Janos, being driven to despair, could hardly refrain from Tears at this Declaration (10); and was forced to return with Monteculi into Hungary. He fought no other Battle, but That, in which he was killed; nor did he fight it near Presburg, in Hungary, but in the Plains of Transylvania, on the Twenty third of January, 1662, near a Village called Hetur (11). The Historian observes, that about Five thousand Men of Monteculi's Army perished by Famine and Sickness (12). This Circumstance, joined to that which is observed above, weakens the Credit of what Sir P. Ricaut says, viz. that the Emperor's Forces, and those of Kimin Janos, united, formed so fair and numerous an Army, that one would have thought, they were designed not only to defend the Frontiers of Christendom, but even to dispute the Empire of the World with the Ottomans (13). How can this be, if the Ottoman Army was four times stronger? But how can this Victory of the Turks, near Clausenburgh, which cost the Christians Fifty thousand Men, be credited; how, I say, when there is not a Syllable of it to be found in the History of Transylvania? Have the Turks their Gazetteers at Constantinople, who vie with the Christians in framing imaginary Victories?

[E] And published his Reasons, in a Latin Manifesto, addressed to all the Christian Powers.] I have a Copy of it by me, printed in the Year 1682, after the Copy of Transylvania. But, as there is no date to the Manifesto of Michael Apafi, and as my Edition does not remark the Time of the Publication of That of Transylvania, I dare not affirm, that this Prince declared War in 1682; for I find, in the Life of Count Tekeli (14), that, in 1681, Apafi joined him with an Army of Transylvanians, and that they both undertook the Siege of Zatmar. The Author of the History of the Troubles of Hungary speaks of That Siege under the same Year (15), and informs us, that Michael Apafi made himself Master of the Town (16); but that, not being able to reduce the Citadel, he retreated, and lost his Baggage in the Retreat (17); that it was difficult to penetrate into the Cause of this Disgrace (18); that some attributed it to a misunderstanding between Count Tekeli, and Tekeli, who commanded the Transylvanian Troops at That Siege; that the latter was accused of making use of bad Powder, which took no effect; and that, according to others, Prince Apafi would not take the Town himself, on some Advice he had received, that the Grand Signior expected he should put the Place into his Hands; that it is certain, however, that the Bassa, who commanded the Turks at That Siege, sent long Memorials to Constantinople against this Prince, which obliged him to return into his own Country, for fear some change of Affairs should happen there in his Absence. Thus this Historian reports the Title-tattle of Coffee-house Politicians. The Historical and Political Mercury has faithfully copied him (19).

[F] Was the Cause of this Kingdom's losing That Shadow of Liberty, which remained to it.] It would be unjust to accuse Apafi of Imprudence on this account; for never had any one a better prospect of good Success. The Forces of the Malecontents, alone, had kept the Imperial Troops in play, 'till that time. What might not reasonably be expected, then, from the extraordinary Preparations of the Grand Signior, who had promised Wonders and Mountains to Tekeli? But, by one of those fatal Conjectures, by which the Providence of God interposes, from time to time, to confound the best grounded human Hopes, it happened, that Apafi not only performed nothing in favour of the Liberty of Hungary, but enslaved likewise his own Country. Sic erat in fati. It so happened, that, instead of weakening the House of Austria, he raised it from it's drooping Condition; he put it in a capacity of resuming it's Superiority; he ratified it's Claim to the Crown of Hungary; and made the Turkish Dominions an inexhaustible Fund of good News, for the Confederacy, formed against France, during the course of the War. Must it, therefore, be said, that Apafi was a hot-headed, rash, Man (20)? By no means, unless all be filed so, who cannot foresee Events the most contrary to Appearances. Would not the best Politicians have warranted, that France would have pushed the Affair on the one side, whilst the Turks acted on the other? Who could ever have persuaded himself, that she would continue in Inaction for six successive Years, in the midst of the most favourable Opportunities of aggrandizing herself, than ever Nation had? Apafi, Tekeli, and their Adherents, are very excusable, in not being able to conjecture, that the French would chuse to wage War with the Edict of Nantz, rather than with the House of Austria.

What I have said, in relation to the good News, which comes daily to us from Turky (21), is no Secret. Our Gazetteers, and other News-writers, give us scarce any Accounts from that Country, but such as are proper to inspire us with Joy. The Murmurs of the People, their Misery, their Vows for Peace; Dissensions in the Divan; a Grand Vizier strangled; formidable Factions; Plagues; Fires at Constantinople; Rebels in Aegypt, Arabia, and Syria; and an hundred things of this Nature, which come by the Couriers from Germany, sometimes of one kind, sometimes of another; are not these fine Tidings? How many complete Victories, how many Towns taken, how many Parties defeated, and how

(19) Month of May, 1690. pag. 492; but he places the Siege of Zatmar in 1680.

WHETHER the ill Success of Apafi's Attempt ought to be looked upon as the Effect of Imprudence.

(20) See the Remark [C], of the Article KOTTGE RUS.

(21) I wrote this in 1694.

(14) Pag. 304.

(15) In the Edition of Amsterdam, in 1686, the Year 1680 is marked on the Top of the Page. This Error may deceive those who do not examine it nearly.

(16) Book 2. pag. 30.

(17) Pag. 39.

(18) Pag. 32.

(f) During the Campaign
of 1690.

of April 1690 [G]. The Turks endeavoured to set up Tekeli in his room; but he had not the good Luck to improve to the best Advantage an Incurfion he had made into That Country (f). The Prefence of Prince Lewis of Baden melted him like Snow before the Sun, if I may use the Expression; nor has he, from That time to the time of my writing this (g), given any disturbance to the new Titular Prince of Transylvania, the Son of Michael Apafi.

(g) In the Month of February, 1699.

many successful Incurfions into the Enemy's Country, have we not had reason to publish in Summer; and what hopes of Peace have not been given in Winter? Even the raising the Siege of Belgrade, in 1693, is represented as an happy Event; since the Imperial Troops had executed their chief Design, which was to hinder the Ottomans from making an Inroad into Transylvania. I heard a Person say, soon after the Reduction of Ireland, that it would have been well to have prolonged the War there, that there might be a sure Fund of new Advantages, both in the East and in the West.

[G] Apafi died at Weiffemburgh, towards the end of April, 1690. [The News-writers differed in the Circumstances of his Death. Some said he died suddenly, in the Assembly of the States of Transylvania (22); others, that he died after a long Sicknels (23); but all agree, that he died at Weiffemburgh (24).]

(22) Paris
Gazette, of the 20th of May, 1690.

(23) Mer-curie Histori-que, for the Month of May, 1690.

Month of May, 1690. pag. 490. Life of Count Tekeli, pag. 253. Life of Count Tekeli says, at Alba Julia, the same as Weiffembourg.

A P E L L E S, one of the most famous Painters of Antiquity, was a Native of the Isle of Coos [A], and flourished in the Days of Alexander [B]. He was highly esteemed by This Prince, and the only Person, who was permitted to draw his Picture. He obtained, likewise, another singular Mark of his Favour; for Alexander, having sent one of his Mistresses to sit to him for her Picture, and being informed, that Apelles was fallen in Love with her, bestowed Her upon him [C]. There is room to question, whether Apelles abused the Good-Nature of this Great Monarch, as is pretended [D]. He was, probably, too good a Courtier, not to know, that a Speech,

(1) Plin.
lib. 35. cap.
100.

(2) See Carlo Dati, in his Apollil-les on the Life of Apel-les, pag.
104.

(3) See P.
Hardouin on Pliny, Tom.
5. pag. 264.

(4) Ovid.
de Ponto,
lib. 4. Eleg.
1. ver. 29.

(5) Dica-
di Dante,
lib. 3. cap.
16. apud Carrol Dati, ubi
supra, pag.
103.

(6) Strabo,
lib. 14. Lucianus, de Callumna.
Æli. Hist.
Anim. lib.
4. cap. 50.
See also Tactica
Chil. S. hist.
197. rer.
193.

(7) See the Remark [A]
of the Article
Z E U X E S.

(8) Carlo
Dati, Postille sopra vita
d'Apelle,
pag. 105.

[A] Was an Native of the Isle of Coos. I find but two Authors, who say so; and one of them must be supposed not to have written what most Editions make him say; but that, instead of these Words, "Apelles eo usque Olympiade CXII provectus ut plura solus prope quam ceteri omnes contulerit, he made use of these, "Apelles Couis Olympiade CXII picturæ plura prope quam ceteri omnes contulit (1). — Apelles of Coos, in the CXIth Olympiad, contributed, alone, more than all the rest, to the Improvement of Painting." Turnebus was of Opinion, that it ought to be read Apelles Couis, and not Apelles eo usque. His Supposition has been confirmed by the Manuscript of the Vatican (a), by Those of the King's Library, and by That of Mr Colbert (3). The other Evidence is Ovid, who says,

Ut Venus Artificis labor est & gloria Coi,
Æquoreo madidas quæ premit imbre comas (4).

Thus Venus, rising from her watry Bed, Immortaliz'd the Coan Artist's Hand.

We shall produce in the Remark [I], another Passage of this Poet, where some read Cois, and others Couis. The great number of Authors, who give Apelles another Country, induced le Mazzoni to defend Ovid's Cause; but, instead of Coi, he pretends that the Poet wrote it Cbui (5). Three Authors of good Credit make Apelles a Native of Ephesus (6). Suidas makes him a Native of Colophon, and adds, that the City of Ephesus adopted him.

[B] Flourished in the Days of Alexander. It cannot be denied, that he was at the height of his Reputation, when That Prince began the Conquest of Asia, that is, in the CII Olympiad. His Adventures at the Court of Egypt makes it appear, that he survived Alexander. It is a Mistake, then, to say, with Majoragius, that he was a Pupil of Zeuxes; the Distance of above One hundred and twenty Years between the LXXXIVth Olympiad, in which Zeuxes flourished (7), and the Reign of the first Ptolemy, will not allow it. Carlo Dati is the Person, who has taken notice of Majoragius's Mistake. He says, "Non so con qual fondamento Marcantonio Majoraggio nel Comento sopra l'Orat di Cicerone a 11. dice che Apelle fosse scolare di Zeusi, quando tra l'uno e l'altro corse l'età d'un uomo (8). — I know not upon what Foundation Marcantonius Majoragius, in his Commentary on an Oration of Cicero, makes Apelles the Scholar of Zeuxes, since there passed a Century between them." His Adventure in the Court of Egypt was this: Apelles had not the good Fortune to be beloved by Ptolemy in the Court of Alexandria. A Storm happened to force him into That Port, in the Reign of this King.

A Roguish Fellow, who had a Mind to play him a scurvy Trick, came, and told him, the King invited him to Dinner. Apelles waited on him, and, observing the King to be very angry, excused himself, by letting him know, that he came by his Order. The King desired he would tell him, who it was that invited him; but That was impossible; for the Person, who had imposed upon him, was not then in the Room. Apelles, upon this, began to draw his Face upon the Wall with a bit of Charcoal, and Ptolemy knew him by the very first Lines. "Non fuerat ei gratia in comitatu Alexandri cum Ptolemæo, quo regnante Alexandriam vi tempestatis expulsum, subornato fraude æmulorum plano regio invitatus, ad Regis comam venit, indignante Ptolemæo & vocatores suos ostendenti ut diceret à quo eorum invitatus esset, arrepto carbone extincto e foculo imaginem in pariete delineavit, agnoscente vultum planti rege ex inchoato protinus (9)."

[C] Being informed, that Apelles was fallen in Love with her, bestowed her upon him. Pliny relates the Story after this manner: "Alexander ei honorem clarissimo præbuit exemplo, namque cum dilectam sibi ei pallacis suis præcipue, nomine Cam-paspen, nudam pingi ob admirationem formæ ab Apelle justisset, eumque tum pari captum amore sensisset, dono eam dedit. Magnus animo, major imperio sui: nec minor hoc factio, quam victoria aliqua; quippe se vicit, nec torum tantum suum, sed etiam affectum donavit Artifici; ne dilectæ quidem respectu motus, ut, quæ modo regis fuisset, nunc pictoris esset. Sicut qui Venerem Anadyomenen illo pictam exemplari putant (10). — Alexander honoured him after a very remarkable Manner; for, perceiving that he had fallen in love with his favourite Concubine, Campaspe, whom, through Admiration of her Beauty, he had commanded him to draw naked, he gave her to him. Great as he was in Mind, he was still greater by this Command over himself; an Action This, as much to his Honour as the greatest Victory; for he conquered himself; nor did he resign his Bed alone, but even his Love, to the Artist; regardless of his Favourite's Lot, who, from being the Mistress of a King, was now to become a Painter's. Some think the Venus Anadyomenes was drawn from this Origin." Ælian relates the same Story; but gives this Mistress of Alexander the Name of Paucaſte (11). The Article of This Prince shall contain a Remark on this Subject (12); we shall shew, that a Man, who could give the fairest of his Concubines to be drawn stark naked, does not deserve the Encomiums of Continent and Chaste, which have been lavished on him.

[D] There is room to question, whether Apelles abused the Good-Nature of this great Monarch, as is pretended. Pliny may tell us if he pleases, that Apelles rendered himself agreeable to this Prince by his Politic

(9) Plin.
lib. 35. cap.
100.

(10) Id. lib.

(11) Ælian.
Var. Hist.
lib. 12. cap.
34.

(12) See the Remarks
[H] and [I]
of the Article
MACEDO-NIA.

Speech, so little respectful, as That, which is attributed to him, must displease. The Answer he gave, in relation to Lais, is no Recommendation of his Manners [E]. There has been much Talk of his Picture of Calumny; but scarce any one has observed the Blunders, which have been committed in relating the Fact, which was the occasion of this Picture [F]. The Treatise, in which Lucian mentions this, is an excellent

ness and Complaisance; but he will scarce persuade those, who know Alexander, that a Painter could say to him with Impunity, Say no more; the very Boys, who grind my Colours, laugh at you. "Fuit & comitas illi, propter quam gratior Alexandro Magno erat frequenter in Officinam ventitanti. . . . Sed in Officina imperitè multa differenti silentium comiter suadebat, rideri eum dicens a pueris qui colores terebant. Tantum erat auctoritati juris in Regem aliquo iracundum (13). . . . He had a Politeness of Behaviour, which ingratiated him the more with Alexander the Great, who frequently visited him in his Painting Room. . . . Where Alexander happening one Day to betray his Ignorance, Apelles, in an obliging way, desired him to say no more, telling him the very Boys, who ground his Colours, made a jest of him: so much Liberty did he take with a King, otherwise of a passionate Disposition." It is not to be supposed, that Apelles could think so harsh an Expression, after what manner forever spoken, would be well taken. Nor is it to be imagined, that Alexander, who had been so well educated, and had so good a Genius, could talk so impertinently of Painting, as to deserve to be laughed at by the meanest Apprentice. This is the Opinion of the Learned Freinshemius: "Non crediderim in officina imperitè multa differentem ab Apelle mordaci dictorio repressum fuisse. Nam id neque majestati tanti regis, neque modestiæ pictoris, hominis non stupidi nec indocti, convenisset; & Alexander, liberibus studiis ab extrema ætate imbutus, etiam de artibus quas non calleret haud inepte judicare dicere (14)." As for Megabyzes, Priest of Diana (15), it would be no such wonder, if Apelles had given Him this Advice. And, if we may believe Plutarch, it was He, who was censured in this manner by Apelles: Can't you see, said he to him, that, while you was silent, those Boys, who mix the Oker, looked upon you with Respect, on account of the Gold and Purple of your Garments, but that they laughed, when they heard you speak of an Art you did not understand (16). Another Author says, that it was Zeuxis, who spoke thus to Megabyzes (17). I could more easily believe the Liberty, which it is said Apelles took with Alexander, on another Occasion. Alexander, viewing his own Picture, which Apelles had just finished, seemed not to admire it as it deserved. A little while after, a Horse was led by, who neighed at the sight of the Horse in the same Piece. Sir, said Apelles to Alexander, one would think this Horse was a better Judge of Pain ing, than your Majesty (18). But, to give my Thoughts freely, it is all too harsh, too gross, and too brutish, to be ascribed to a Painter, represented, in all other Instances, as a modest, complaisant, and polite Person. A Man must either be on the foot of a jester at Court, or be such a whimsical, untoward, Humourist, as your great Artists sometimes are: I say, we must have recourse to one of these two Suppositions, to believe, what is said of Apelles, not only with regard to Alexander, but even with regard to Megabyzes, respected on account of his Gold and Purple. Apelles's Discourse to Alexander, on Occasion of the Horse's neighing, is not so harsh in the Translations of some learned Men, as in the Original; but this Softening does them but little Honour: It is a Blunder; it is gross Ignorance. Let us produce the Greek: Ἀλλ' ἔλεγε δὲ τοῦ θαλάσμιον τὴν ἐξ ἑσῶ εἰκόνα ἐαυτοῦ τὴν ὑπὸ Ἀπελλῆ γραφεῖσαν ἐκ ἐπὶ τῶν καλῶν τῶν ἀξίων τῷ γράμματι. ὁ δὲ τὸ ἵππον καὶ χρυσάσιναν. ὁ δὲ τὸν ἵππον τὸν ἐν τῇ εἰκόνι ἐς πρὸς ἀλλήθινον καὶ ἐκείνον, ὃ βασιλεὺς (ἵππον δ' Ἀπελλῆ) ἀλλ' ὅς τις ἵππον τοῖς οὐ γράφοντες εἶναι καλῶς πολὺ (19). Alexander, seeing his own Picture at Ephesus, drawn by Apelles, did not commend the Painting as it deserved; but as a Horse being brought, and neighing to the Horse in the Picture, as to a real one; O King. (said Apelles) This Horse seems to be a much better Judge of Painting, than you. Erasmus represents the Fact thus: "Apud Ephesum quum Alexander conspectam effigiem sui corporis ad vivum magna arte expressam admiratur, atque interim fortè equus deductus picto in eadem tabula equo adhinniret, deceptus imitatione, Apelles, equus, inquit, O Rex, multo melius expressus est quam tu (20). . . . As Alexander was admiring his own Picture, at Ephesus, drawn to the Life with great Art, an Horse, happening to be brought out, neighed to the Horse in the Picture, being deceived by the Resemblance; upon which Apelles said, your Horse, O King, is better drawn than you." I omit some Circumstances, which Erasmus adds, without having found them in Ælian. I only observe the Reflexion he puts in the Mouth of the Painter; Sir, I have succeeded better in painting your Horse, than your Majesty. This is not the Sense of the Greek; a learned Critic has shewed, that the Word γράφικος signifies one, who understands Painting; and has by This convicted Cælius Rhodiginus, and Erasmus, of misrepresenting the Story (21). I wonder Pliny was ignorant of This; He, who takes some Notice of the neighing of the Horse. See, below, the Remark [K]. [E] The Answer he gave, in relation to Lais, is no Recommendation of his Manners.] She was yet a tender Maid, when Apelles, seeing her returning Home from the Fountain, and admiring her Beauty, prevailed upon her to go with him where he pleased. He brought her to an Entertainment, where he was to meet some of his Friends; they laughed at him for bringing with him, instead of a Courtesan, a meer Girl: Don't trouble your Heads about that, replied he; I will manage her so, that, before three Years are at an end, she shall have all her Paces to perfection. Χλωσάντων δὲ αὐτὸν τῶν ἑταίρων ὅτι αὐτὸς ἑταίρας παρέβηεν εἰς τὸ συμπόσιον ἀγάγει, μὴ θαυμάσει; εἶπεν, ἵνα γὰρ αὐτὴν εἰς μέλλουσαν ἀπολαύσιν. μετ' ἑὸν δὲ ἄνθρωπον πρὸς ἑαυτὸν δέξω (22). Ætius autem a familiaribus, quod meretricis loco virginem adduxisset, nolite mirari, inquit, mihi etenim non toto opus erit triennio ut eam ad futuræ voluptatis usum pulchrè doctam institutamque reddere valeam. Would not one think the Conversation was concerning an unmanaged Colt, which, in the Hands of an excellent Horseman, would quickly learn all his Aims and Paces? The Reflexion on the Corruption of Those Ages inspires Horror. The Friends of Apelles seem even to have surpassed him in Debauchery (23). Lais became one of the most famous Courtezans of the Age she lived in. The Painters visited her to take the Model of a fine Neck (24). Apelles no doubt copied from the same Original. "Nemini dubium esse potest quin hanc ipsam quoque Laidem sibi veluti in contubernium addidisset Apelles, quo vivam emendatissimæ formæ imaginem ab animali exemplo in tabulas suas transfunderet (25). . . . Apelles, no doubt, kept this very Lais with him in his House, that he might copy the Resemblance of a most perfect Beauty from a living Original." [F] Scarce any one has observed the Blunders, which have been committed in relating the matter of Fact, which was the Occasion of This Picture.] See how Lucian relates it. The Painter Antipholus, not being able to bear the Favour, which Apelles enjoyed with King Ptolemy, accused him of being an Accomplice in the Conspiracy of Theodotus, Governor of Phœnicia. He asserted, that Apelles had been seen at Dinner with Theodotus, and whispered him in the Ear all the while. He afterwards told the King, that the City of Tyre had revolted, and that Pelagium was taken, through Apelles's means. Yet it was plain, that the Accused had never been at Tyre, nor had ever known Theodotus, but under the general Quality of Governor of Phœnicia. Ptolemy was in such a Rage, that, without examining the matter, he was very near putting Apelles to death. He considered neither the Accuser, nor the Accused. The former, through Spight and Emulation, might well be suspected of plotting the Ruin of an innocent Person; the latter was too inconsiderable a Person, to be capable of such Attempts; though a Sense of the Obligations he was under to Ptolemy had not been sufficient

(13) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 30.

(14) Freinshem. Supplem. in Curtium, lib. 2. cap. 6.

(15) Several of the learned think, that Megabyzes was a Name appropriated to the Priest of Diana. Others understood by Megabyzes, in this Place, a great Lord of Persia.

(16) De diff. crim. Adu. lit. & Amici, pag. 58. & de Tranquill. Anim. p. 477, 478.

(17) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 2. Freinshem. ubi supra, cites him as having attributed this to Apelles.

(18) Ælian. Var. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(19) Id. ib.

(20) In Apophthegm.

(21) Paulus Leopardus Emendationum, lib. 12. cap. 4.

(22) Athen. lib. 13. pag. 588.

(23) Richel. in his Dictionary, under the Word Ponce, observes, that a Maiden-head is called the Rogot of Swi.

(24) Athen. ubi supra.

(25) Junius in Catalogo Artificum, in Apelle, pag. 19.

(a) It's Till-is, Πηλ το μή παλιν πικρὸν διαβῶν.
Or not lightly believing Calumny.

excellent Piece (a). Apelles's Master-piece was the Picture of Venus, rising out of the Sea [G]. Some Authors tell us, that the Mistress, whom Alexander gave him, far to him, when he drew this Piece; others, that the Courtezan Phryne was the Original. They tell us of another Picture of Venus, which he had begun, and which would have surpassed the first, if Death had not prevented him from finishing it [H]. Mr Moreri has mistaken one of these Pictures for the other [I], and has misrepresented

(26) See Po-lybius in his fourth and fifth Books.
He speaks of it at large.

(27) Jacobus Tollius, notis in Lucian. de Ca-lumniis.

(28) Strabo,
Ælian.
Tactica.

(30) Plin-
lib. 35. cap.
10. de init.
cap. 11.
Carlo Dati,
pag. 105. &
P. Mardouin
in Plin.
Tom. 5. pag.
205. & 206. tact Plu-tarch, in the Life of Ara-tus, makes Apelles the Disciple of Pamphilus;
but this is an ambiguous Testimony.
Plutarch, in another place,
makes him rather the Disciple of Melanthus.

(30) In a Letter at the beginning of the third Volume of Val-ri.

(31) Possibile
on the Life of Apelles.

(32) In Ce-talogo Arti-
ficum, in Apelle.

sufficient to suffice in him all ill Designs. The Prince did not consider this. He never enquired, whether Apelles had ever been at Tyre; he only stormed and swore; and, if one of the Conspirators had not discovered the Wickedness of Antipbilus, the Accused had infallibly been put to death. But, when Ptolemy was satisfied of the Accuser's Crime, he condemned him to be Apelles's Slave, and gave the latter an hundred Talents. It was upon this Occasion, that Apelles drew the fine Picture of Calumny, which Lucian has described. It is Pity he did not perceive the monstrous Anachronism he is guilty of in this Relation; for Theodotus's Conspiracy fell out in the Reign of Ptolemy Philopater; which did not commence 'till an hundred Years after the Death of Alexander (26). Judge then, whether Apelles could be alive at that time. One of these two Positions must be laid down; either that Lucian speaks of a different Apelles from him, who was so much esteemed by Alexander; or he confounds some Plot, hatched in the Reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, with the Conspiracy of Theodotus. There being no Author, who can give us any Light concerning a Conspiracy, in which Calumny had involved our Painter; it will be Labour in vain to trace Lucian's Error to its Source. Let us consider only, whether he had any other Apelles in view besides Him, who is the Subject of this Article. Now This I cannot conceive; for any one, who knew how to write, would have taken care, in mentioning a Painter, who had nothing in common, besides his Name, with the great and incomparable Apelles, not to call him simply Apelles. He would have apprized the Reader, that he did not mean the great Apelles. Now Lucian gives no hint of this; on the contrary, all he says leads us in a direct Line to the great Apelles; this, then, is the Person, whom he means. I know, that a learned Man lays a Stress upon the Epithet Ephesian, ΑΡΑΛΙΑΝΟΣ ΕΦΕΣΙΩΝ. "Ad distinctionem illius Apellis, qui sub Alexandro & Ptolemæo Lagi vixit maximi nominis & artis, Cui Patriâ. Hic autem Patria Colophonius; verum & ἑσεία, id est adoptione, telle Suida, Pamphili Amphipolizæ discipulus (27). ----- To distinguish him from That Apelles, of great Fame and Art, a Coan by Birth, who lived in the Time of Alexander, and Ptolemy the Son of Lagus. Whereas This was a Colophonian; but, by Adoption, according to Suidas, a Disciple of Pamphilus of Amphipolis." But I find, that others likewise have given this Epithet to the great Apelles (28). Besides which, I can appeal to the Reason contained in the Passage I have cited; for if Lucian could give this Epithet to His Apelles, because adopted by the Inhabitants of Ephesus, tho' born at Colophon; I can allege, that he gave it to the great Apelles, born in the Island of Coos, but undoubtedly a Citizen of Ephesus. Is it probable, a Man of his Fame should settle in That City (where Alexander saw, and became intimate with, him) without obtaining all the Privileges of a Citizen? But I have another Proof: Tollius allows, that Lucian means the same Apelles with Suidas; now Suidas speaks only of the great Apelles. This I prove, I. Because he mentions but one Apelles. Would he have omitted the Great and Illustrious, to mention only the Obscure and Unknown? II. Because he gives his Apelles the Quality of a Disciple of Pamphilus of Amphipolis, a Quality, which Pliny likewise ascribes to the great Apelles (29). So that Lucian's Error is evident; and I am surprised, that neither John Baptist Adriani (30), nor Carlo Dati (31), nor Francis Junius (32), nor so many other celebrated Authors, who have spoken of this Treatise of Lucian, should perceive it, but should take this Relation to be a real Adventure of the great Apelles. Tollius very well knew, that the Crime, of which Apelles was accused, had relation to the Reign of Ptolemy Philopater; but he was not aware, that Lucian was deceived; he rather supposed, that Lucian had another Apelles in view, who was Cotemporary with Antipbilus, and Disciple of Pamphilus. I cannot say, in what time Antipbilus lived, nor Ctesidemus, whose Disciple he was (33); but it is plain, according to Pliny, that Pamphilus flourished in the Time of Philip, the Father of Alexander the Great (34).

[G] Apelles's Master-Piece was the Picture of Venus, rising out of the Sea. Augustus dedicated it to the Temple of Julius Cæsar. The lower Parts of it had been spoiled; and no Hand was able to mend it; Time destroyed the rest; and then Nero caused another Venus to be drawn by Dorotheus, which he substituted in the room of That of Apelles. "Venerem exequente e mari Divus Augustus dicavit in delu- bro patris Cæsaris, quæ Anadyomene vocatur, ver- sibus Græcis tali opere dum laudatur victo, fed- illustrato: hujus inferiorem partem corruptam qui resceret non potuit reperiri. Verum ipsa injuria cessit in gloriam artificis. Consenuit hæc tabula carie, aliamque pro eâ Nero principatu substituit suo." These are Pliny's own Words, in the tenth Chapter of his Thirty fifth Book. I have recited the Passage, in the Remark [C], where he says that Alexander's Mistress was the Original, from which this Venus was drawn. The Article PHRYNE will in- form us of a Tradition different from this.

[H] Death --- prevented him from finishing it. If Calconini could have been prevailed with to give the Testimony of ancient Authors, rather than advance things of his own Head, he would not have affirmed, that Apelles voluntarily left his Venus Anadyomene imperfect; the Reason, says he, of this Con- duct was, that Apelles despaired of finishing it with the same Perfection he had begun it. "Sed O me multo Apelle incautiores! ille enim tanta felici- tate Veneris emergentis partes superiores expressit, ut diffusis penicillo reliquis posse abolere despe- raverit, atque ita in admirationem posteritatis tabu- lam inchoatam reliquerit (35). ----- But much more incautious I, than Apelles! for He had so happily expressed the upper Parts of Venus rising from the Sea, that, distrustful his Pencil, he de- spaired of finishing the rest; and thus left an un- finished Piece for Posterity to wonder at." Carlo Dati, who accuses this Author of advancing several things, without acknowledging from whence he bor- rows them, produces two other Examples of it. It is certain, that the Words of Pliny convict Calconini of Falshood, as I am going to shew. "Apelles inchoave- rat aliam Venerem Cois superaturus etiam suam illam priorem. Invidit mors peracta parte, nec qui succo- deret operi ad præscripta lineamenta inventus est (36). --- Apelles had begun another Venus at Coos, intending it should excel the former. But Death obliged him to leave it imperfect; nor was any one capable of filling up the Outlines of the Work." Cicero says plainly, in two Places of his Works, that Apelles left That Venus imperfect (37).

[I] Mr Moreri has mistaken one of these Pictures for the other. [J] Thus he expresses himself: "The finest of all Apelles's Pieces were two Pictures of Venus, one of which, where she was drawn rising out of the Sea, was called Anadyomene; the other was That, which he drew for Those of the Island of Coos, mentioned by Ovid in these Words.

Si nunquam Venerem Cois pinxisset Apelles, Merla sub æquoreis illa lateret aquis.

He quotes Ovid in Sent. He should have cited the third Book de arte Amandi. You are to know, that Apelles did not finish the second of these Pictures; Pliny affirms this expressly (38). What Probability is there, that Ovid, having two Pictures of Venus to shew, the one finished, the other not, should omit That, and speak only of This? To act thus is to be ignorant of the common Laws of Reasoning. Besides the second Verse is a plain Allusion to the Venus Anadyomene, that is, Rising out of the Sea. He speaks, therefore, of the first Picture. We know, that the first Venus was drawn in this Posture; but we

(33) Plin-
lib. 35. cap.
10. pag. 222.

(34) Ibid.
pag. 206.

(35) Calcon-ini, lib. 13.
pag. 15.
apud Cam-erium Dati,
pag. 145.

(36) Plin.
lib. 36. cap.
10. pag. 222.

(37) Epist.
p. ad Famil.
lib. 1. & de
Offic. lib. 3.
cap. 2.

(38) See the preceding Remark.

sented what relates to his Picture of a Horse [K]. No Business was of such Importance, as to oblige Apelles to pass a single Day without handling his Pencil; which gave rise to a famous Proverb [L]. The Books, which this great Painter composed on the Art of Painting, are lost (b). It is not known where, or when, he died. One of his chief Excellencies was That of hitting a Likeness to a wonder; inasmuch that Physiognomists could form a Judgment, from his Portraits, with as much Certainty,

(b) Voluminibus etiam editis quæ doctrinam eam continent. . . .
Having likewise published Books containing the Principles of this Art.
Plin. lib. 35.
cap. 10.

we know nothing of the Posture of the second. I add, that, if these two Verses of Ovid fell from his Pen, as they here represented, he was a bad Reasoner. They must be corrected thus, to become a reasonable Proof of what goes before.

Si Venerem Cois nusquam posuisset Apelles, Merita sub æquoreis illa jaceret aquis.

Had not the Coan Artist -----

*Drawn Venus, rising, beautiful, from the Main,
Beneath the Waves the Goddess still had lain.*

The nicest Critics choose to read Cois instead of Cois. I believe they are in the right; though it is plain, that Apelles drew his Venus Anadyomene for the Inhabitants of the Island of Cois; for Augustus had it from them, and remitted them in consideration of it the Sum of an hundred Talents of the Tribute, which they were indebted to his Exchequer. They kept this Venus, and the Antigonus by the same Hand, in the Temple of Æsculapius. "Laeter promontorium est Cois insule, in cuius suburbio est ædes Æsculapii nobilitata Antigono Apellis ---- conspiciebatur ibidem quoque ejusdem artificis Venus Anadiomene (39). 'H νῦν ἀναδείκται τῷ θεῷ Καίσαρι ἐν Πάμῳ, τῷ Σεβαστῷ ἀναδύντος τῷ δὲ τοῖς κοῖσι ἀπὸ τῆς γράφης ἑκατὸν ταλάντων ἀποδοῖν γὰρ ἰσθαι τὴν ποταχθῆναι τὸν πόρον' (40). Quæ nunc dedicata est divo Cæsari, Augusto consecrante patri generis sui potentiam. Aiuunt Cois pro pictura fuisse remissa centum talenta de imperati tributum summa. ---- Laeter is a Promontory of the Island Cois, in the Suburb of which is a Temple of Æsculapius, famous for the Antigonus of Apelles ---- the Venus Anadyomene likewise of the same Artist was to be seen there. It is now dedicated to Julius Cæsar, Augustus consecrating the Patroness of his Family to his Father. The Coans, they say, were remitted the Sum of an hundred Talents of the demanded Tribute, in consideration of this Picture." Pliny might easily be ignorant, that the Venus Anadyomene was drawn for the Isle of Cois; no wonder then he should say, that Apelles' second Venus was designed for Them.

I shall here propose a Doubt, which occurs to my Thoughts on this Occasion: I cannot but think Pliny multiplies Beings without Necessity, when he tells us of a Venus Anadyomene, and of another Venus, which was begun for the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cois. The Reason of my Scruple is, that the first Venus was perfect only in the upper Parts of the Picture; Pliny himself informs us of this, and adds, that no Painter durst attempt to repair the Injury it had suffered (41). Now he never finished the other Venus; and no Painter had the Courage to supply what was wanting. This the same Pliny informs us of (42). I believe he is the only Author, who makes this Remark concerning two Venus's of Apelles, defective in the same Parts. Others say this only of the Venus of Apelles in general; and, whenever they mention this Venus, they place her in the Isle of Cois (43); now we have seen, that Augustus fetched the Venus Anadyomene from thence (44). Pliny, then, it is probable, has not been over-exact in this matter. I appeal to those, who will take the Pains to examine this small Doubt of mine.

[K] Moreri ---- has misrepresented what relates to his Picture of an Horse.] Ancient Authors, says Mr Moreri, have spoken with great Esteem of an Horse, drawn so to the Life by Apelles, that the Mares neighed at the sight of it. I believe no Writer has said this. What Pliny informs us of, as to this Matter, is as follows. "Er & equus ejus, five fuit, pictus in certamine: quod iudicium ad mutas quas drupedes provocavit ab hominibus. Namque ambis sensuolus prevalere sentiens singulorum picturas inductis equis offendit: Apellis tantum equo adhinivere, idque & postea semper illius experimentum artis ostentatur (45)." The meaning of which is, That Apelles, vying with some others, who should paint a Horse most to the Life, and disfrustring the Integrity of the Judges, chose to commit his Cause to the Decision of brute Beasts. Horses, accordingly, were led by, who neighed only at Apelles's Piece. Some think (46), that the Story in Ællan (47), is only a Corruption of this; and that what pass between Apelles, and the Judges of the Prize, when This Painter preferred the Judgment of a Horse to theirs, was what gave occasion to the Report of his saying to Alexander; Your Horse understands Painting, better than you. Others think they are two different Adventures (48). For my part, I have already given my own little Opinion; which is, that the Story, vouched by Ællan, ought to be looked upon as a meer Fable. Pliny's Silence, where so fair an Opportunity presented of speaking his Thoughts, confirms me in this Opinion. Would Pliny have been silent concerning the Horse, which neighed at Apelles's Door, in the Presence of Alexander, and concerning the Inference, which Apelles drew from it; Would Pliny, I say, have been silent on such a Fact, when he relates the other Adventure, in which Apelles appealed, from the Judgment of the Arbitrators, to That of Horses? Carlo Dati has observed, that, in neither of these Cases, Apelles spoke like an able Painter, since he supposed, that the more Knowledge a Person had, the more he would mistake the Representation for the Object itself. But we must have a care how we apply this Censure to the Adventure, which Pliny relates; for Apelles did not prefer the Judgment of Horses to That of Men, otherwise than as he perceived that the Intigues of his Rivals had corrupted the Judges (49). The Remark of Carlo Dati is very just at the bottom. It is easier to deceive Those, who do not understand Painting, than Those, who do. He quotes John Paul Lomazzo (50): And, after him, we might quote Mr Perrault, who has well refuted the Consequences, drawn, in favour of the ancient Painters, from their having deceived both Men and Beasts (51).

[L] Which gave rise to a famous Proverb.] Pliny informs us of it; "Apelli fuit aliqui perpetua consuetudo nunquam tam occupatam diem agendi, ut non lineam ducendo exerceret artem, quod ab eo in proverbium venit (52). ---- It was an inviolable Rule with Apelles never to pass a Day without exercising his Art, at least by one Stroke of his Pencil; which passed from him into a Proverb." Carlo Dati (53) observes upon this, that Salmastus, in support of this Proverb, quotes the following Line, as a Verse of Horace,

Nulla dies absque, quin linea ducta superfit.

Let no Day pass, without drawing at least one Line.

Which is neither Horace's, nor any other ancient Poet's. He adds, that it has been often the Fate of this Author to trust too much to his Memory. "Non lascerò d'auvertire in questo luogo che Claudio Salmastio grandissimo Critico dell' eta nostra, nelle Differtaz. Pliniane sopra Solino p. 5. in conferma- zione di questo proverbio, fidandosi troppo della memoria, come bene spesso egli fece, cita un verso d'Orazio ---- il quale non è (ch' io sappia) né d'Orazio né d'altro poeta latino antico, ma forse uno di quei versi proverbiali che vanno per le bocche de gli uomini senza saperne l'autore. ---- I shall not omit to apprise the Reader, in this Place, that Claudius Salmastius, a very great Critic of our Age, in his Exercitationes Pliniane on Solinus, pag. 5, cites, in Confirmation of this Proverb, and depending too much, as he very often does, on his Memory, a Verse of Horace ---- which (to the best of my Knowledge) is neither Horace's, nor any other ancient

(39) Junius in Catalogo Artificum, in Apelle, pag. 22.

(40) Strabo, lib. 14. pag. 452.

WHETHER there were two Venus's of Apelles.

(41) Plin. lib. 35. pag. 212.

(42) Ibid.

(43) See Cicero de Off. lib. 3. cap. 2. de Nat. Deor. lib. 1. in Venerem Oment. 9.

(44) Ex Strab. lib. 14. pag. 452.

(45) Lib. 35. pag. 213.

(46) Schef-ferus in Ællan. Var. Hist. lib. 2. cap. 3.

(47) See the Remark [D].

(48) Carlo Dati, pag. 128.

(49) Ibid. pag. 129.

(50) Lib. 3. cap. 1. della Pictura.

(51) Parallel of the Ancients and Moderns. Dialog. 2. pag. 136.

(52) Lib. 35. cap. 10. pag. 208.

(53) Carlo Dati, Postille sopra la vita d'Apelle. P. Har- douin makes the same Remark. See his Pliny, Tom. 5. pag. 208.

370 APELLES. APELLICON. APICIUS.

as if they had been Originals [M]. Witness what he did at the Court of Egypt (c).

(c) See the Remark [B].

"cient Latin Poet's; but, perhaps, one of those proverbial Verses, which are in every one's Mouth, without the Author's being known."

[M] Inasmuch that Physiognomists could form a Judgment, from his Portraits, with as much Certainty, as if they had been Originals. The Grammarian Apion tells a Story, to this purpose, so highly improbable, that one could scarce look upon it otherwise than as a Fable, though a more credible Author, than this grand Romancer, had affirmed it. Let us be content with Pliny's historical Account of the Matter. "Imaginem adeo similitudinis indiscrète pinxit, ut (incredibile dictu) Apion Grammaticus scriptum reli-

"querit, quemdam ex facie hominum addivinantem (quos metoposcopos vocant) ex eis dixisse aut futuræ mortis annos aut præteritæ (54). . . . He painted so to the Life, that a certain Physiognomist, according to the incredible Relation of Apion the Grammarian, was wont to pronounce, from his Portraits, the Year of the Person's Death, either passed or to come." Pliny himself cannot conceive, how any Person should tell, at the sight of a Picture, though ever so like the Original, at what Age the Person so painted died, or was to die. The Diviner, no doubt, enquired, whether the Person was dead or alive.

(c4) Plin. ubi supra, pag. 210.

APELLES, an excellent Tragedian, under Caligula, gained the Emperor's Favour by the most infamous Means; but, when the Flower of his Youth was past, he turned Player (a); and still supported himself so well in this Emperor's good Graces, who would never be without him, not even in Public (b), that he was at last admitted into the Number of his Counsellors (c). As they were one day standing near the Statue of Jupiter, Caligula asked him, Which of the Two do you think the greatest, Jupiter, or I? And, because Apelles did not answer him so readily, as he expected, he fell into a violent Passion, and ordered him to be whipt unmercifully; saying, in a jesting way, that Apelles had an agreeable Voice, even in a plaintive Tone [A]. Some affirm, that he ordered him to be laid in Irons, and turned from time to time on a Wheel.

(a) Philo. Legat. ad Caium. pag. 1021.

(b) Dion. l. b. 69. pag. 643.

(c) Philo. ibid.

[A] Caligula . . . said . . . that he had an agreeable Voice, even in a plaintive Tone] Suetonius is my Author. Inter varios jocos, cum assidens simulacro Jovis Apellem Tragicum conspiciisset, uter illi major videretur, cunctansem flagellis discidit, collaudens subinde vocem deprecantis, quasi etiam in gemitu prædulcem (1).

(1) Sueton. in Calig. cap. 33.

APELLICON, who bought Aristotle's Library. See the Remarks on the Article TYRANNION.

APICIUS. There were three Apicii, at Rome, famous for their Gluttony. The first lived before the Change of the Republic; the second under Augustus, and Tiberius; and the last under Trajan. Athenæus means the first Apicius, when, having said, on the Testimony of Posidonius, that, at Rome, they preserved the Memory of one Apicius, who had surpassed all Men in Gluttony, he adds, that it was the same Apicius, who had been the Cause of Rutilius's Exile (a). We know, that Posidonius flourished in the Time of Pompey, and that Rutilius was banished about the Year of Rome 660. The second Apicius was the most famous of the three. Athenæus places him under Tiberius, and says, that he laid out prodigious Sums on his Belly; and that there were several sorts of Cakes, which bore his Name (b). It is He, whom Seneca speaks of, in his Ninety fifth Letter, and in the Eleventh Chapter of his Book de Vita Beata, and in the Treatise de Consolatione, which he wrote to his Mother Helvia, under the Emperor Claudius. We find, in the last of these Works, that This Apicius lived in Seneca's time, and kept, as it were, a School of Gluttony, in Rome; that he had consumed two Millions and a half in good Cheer; and that, finding himself much in Debt, he at last bethought himself of examining into the Condition of his Estate; and, finding that he had but 250000 Livres left, he poisoned himself, as fearing he should starve with such a Sum. Dion, who calls him M. Gabius Apicius, relates the same thing (c), and adds a Particular, which is to be found likewise in the first Chapter of the fourth Book of Tacitus's Annals; viz. That Sejanus, in his Youth, had prostituted himself to him. Pliny calls him M. Apicius, and often mentions the Ragoûts, which he invented (d); Nepotum omnium altissimus gurgis. A Book was written on the Subject of his Gluttony, which is cited by Athenæus (e). It is not to be doubted, but that This is the Apicius of Juvenal, Martial, and Lampridius, &c. [A]. The third Apicius lived in Trajan's Time. He had an admirable

(a) Athen. lib. 4. pag. 168.

(b) Id. lib. 1. pag. 7.

(c) Lib. 57.

(d) Lib. 8. cap. 51. lib. 9. cap. 18. lib. 10. cap. 48. lib. 15. cap. 8.

(e) Apion was the Author of it. Athen. lib. 7.

[A] This is the Apicius of Juvenal, Martial, and Lampridius, &c.] I have these Words of Juvenal in view.

Ipse quoque ad cœnam gaudebat Apicius ire; Cum cœnaret, erat tristior ille, domi (2).

Apicius, when invited to a Feast, Was gay, and cheerful, as the merriest Guest; But, uninvited, when at home he dined, The gloomiest Mortal, surly, and unkind.

(2) Mart. Epigr. 29. lib. 2. See likewise Epigr. 73. lib. 10.

(1) Juven. Sat. 4. ver. 23.

multa videmus, Quæ miser, & frugi non fecit Apicius . . . (1). Now even Apicius frugal seems and poor, Outdone by Luxury, unknown before.

Rev^d. Mr R. DUKER.

And These two Verses of Martial;

And That Passage of Lampridius, where we read, that the Emperor Heliogabalus often eat Peacocks and Nightingales Tongues, in imitation of Apicius. Comedit sæpius ad imitationem Apicii calceas camelorum, & cristas nable Receipt for preserving of Oysters; this appeared, when he sent some to Trajan into Partbia; They were still fresh, when Trajan received them (f). The Name of Apicius was for a long time given to several Dishes, and made a kind of Sect among the Cooks. We have a Treatise de Re Culinaris, under the Name of Caelius Apicius, which some Critics judge to be very ancient, though they do not take it to be composed by either of these three Apicii (g). Some chuse to call the Author of this Book Apicius Caelius. A learned Dane is of this Number, who ascribes this Work to Him, who sent the Oysters to the Emperor Trajan. This Book was found, by Albanus Torinus, in the Island of Maguelone, near Montpellier, who published it, Twelve Years after, at Basil [B]. It had been found elsewhere, near an hundred Years before, by Enoch d'Ascoli, in the time of Pope Nicolas V (h). There was in the Title-Page M. Cæcilius Apicius. Vossius (i) is of Opinion, that the Author's Name was M. Caelius, or M. Cæcilius; and that he intituled his Work, Apicius, because it treated of Cookery. In the Remarks of Casaubon on Athenæus, there are some Particulars relating to our

(f) Athen. lib. 1. p. 7.

(g) Borrichius, Cogit. Lingue Lat. & Græcibus, pag. 18.

(h) Platina in Vita Nicolai V.

(i) Voss. de Analogia, lib. 1. c. 14. pag. 55.

Apicius

Et crispas vivis gallinaceis demptas, linguas pavonum, & lucinarum (3). There is another Passage in Juvenal, in which Apicius signifies, in general, one who it very expensive in eating.

(3) Lamprid. in Heliogabalus, c. 19. pag. 835. See likewise cap. 18. pag. 827. & cap. 24. p. 857.

- - - quid enim majore cacinno
Excipitur vulgi quam pauper Apicius (4) ?

(4) Juven. Sat. 11. ver. 2.

- - - what greater Feasts,
Than begging Gluttons, or than Beggar's Feasts ?
CONGREG.

It is childish, then, in some Commentators, to understand, here, either the Apicius of the first Book of Athenæus (5), or Him of the fourth Satire of Juvenal (6).

(5) Bernardus Autumnus upon this Passage of Juvenal.

(6) Farinæ upon the same.

[B] This Book was found, by Albanus Torinus, in the Island of Maguelone, near Montpellier, who published it twelve Years after, at Basil. He procured it to be printed in 4to, in the Year 1541, and added to it the Treatise of Paul Egineta, de facultatibus alimentorum, which he had translated, and the ten Books of Platina, de tuenda valetudine, de natura rerum, & popinæ scientia. He tells us, in his Preface, that, having made a Journey to the Island of Maguelone, twelve Years before, with Will. Peltissier (7), he had there seen a Manuscript, in which he found, by tracing the Characters, the Title of CAELII APICII DE RE CULINARIA LIBRI X. He was very well pleased with this Discovery, and procured an exact Copy to be taken of the Work: He immediately found, that it was the Production of an ancient Author. But, the Manuscript being in great Disorder, he thought it necessary, before he sent it to the Press, to collate it with the Copy of Venice; for which he waited a long time. At length it was sent him; but he found it more imperfect, than That of Maguelone. He would have given up all Thoughts of printing this Work, if some Men of Learning had not obliged him, by their Complaints, and Importunity, to publish it. The same Year there was a second Edition of it, in 8vo, published at Lyons, by Sebastian Gryppius. It was published at Zurich, in the Year 1542, in 4to, with the Notes and Corrections of Gabriel Hamelbergius. I do not think Gesner or Simler deserve Censure, for saying, that the same Work was printed at Venice, before Albanus Torinus brought it to light. It is pretended, they did not rightly understand the Expressions of this Torinus. In Bibl. Simlero-Gesneriana dicuntur Apicii libri primum excusum Venetiis, quod acceptum est ex male intellectis Torini verbis in dedicatione. His Expressions are these: "Premendum plane censebam, donec melioris alicuius exemplar fieret copia, quod acceptum esse "annis ab hinc plus minus quinquaginta Venetiis expressum (9). - - - I thought it ought to be suppressed, till I could procure a more correct Copy, such an one as I am informed was printed at Venice, about fifty Years ago." Though it does not appear, with the utmost clearness, from these Words, that they relate to an Impression of the Work, yet it is excusable to understand them so. And, in Fact, a certain Bibliographer affirms, that Apicius was printed at Venice, in the Year 1503, in 4to. apud Johann. de Cereto de Tridino (10). The Heirs of Andrew Wechel had some Thoughts of reprinting this Work: Pignorus offered them a fair Manuscript of it by Velliferus (11). But it did not go forward. There was an Apicius, in the Library of the Dukes of Urbino, the

(7) He was Bishop of Maguelone, i. e. Montpellier.

(8) Joh. Albertus Fabricius in Bibliotheca Latina, pag. 130. Edit. Hamburg. 1697.

(9) Albanus Torinus in Epist. Dedicat.

(10) Mercklinus in Lindemio renovato, p. 85.

(11) See the Letters of Reinecius to Dammier, pag. 109.

Characters whereof are like those of the Florentine Pandects. It is, at present, in the Vatican. Cudius compared it with the Edition of Lyons (12). By the way, Albanus Torinus has been severely censured for pretending to discover the true Air and Taste of Antiquity in this Author. "Olfaciebam statim autorem esse vetustissimum, & obopoeum, qui de re popinæ, lingua coquinaria, egregie præter cæteros scripsisset, & qui obsonia delicatius, quam pro ea ætate qua glandibus vescerentur homines, confecisset (13). - - - I immediately discovered, that he was a very ancient Author, and Master of the Art of Cookery, who had excelled all others in writing concerning Eatables, in the Style of the Kitchen; and one who had a nicer Hand at dressing a Dinner, than could be expected in that Age, when Men lived upon Acorns." Latinus affirms, that a Man must be very stupid to pass such a Judgment, and that this pretended Apicius is a meer Fool, and a Barbarian; some of whose Dishes, and Sauces are only fit to fetch the Skin off one's Mouth, and offend the Stomach. "In Latini Latinii Bibl. Profana, ubi quædam illius viri docti in Apicius observationes leguntur, ad verba Editoris, ubi in præfat. ait se statim olfecisse autorem esse vetustissimum, hæc nota occurrit: Quam veror ne tuæ nares obfores fuerint; Quid enim vetustatis redolere possint verba semibarbara & ab eo florenti seculo profusa aliena? Ego vero, ut quod sentio paucis expediâ, commentum puto esse hominis otiosissimi, qui cum illudere posteris ejusdem naris facile sibi esse persuasisset, mentito nomine Apicius credidit venditare posse. Sed passim occurrunt, quibus pæne manifesto prodit seipsum aut inceptus, barbarus, & nullius in eâ arte ingenii, aut gustus, qui ea interdum conjungat ad saporis gratiam, quæ usu docente omnes scimus summam palato molestiam, naufragique stomacho, creare solere (14). — In Latinus Latinii Bibliotheca Profana, where are some of this learned Man's Observations; on Apicius, we meet with the following Remark on the Editor's Words, in his Preface, where he says, that he immediately smelt him out to be a very ancient Author. How afraid am I, that your smelling is not very good? For what favour of Antiquity is there in Words so barbarous, and quite foreign to the Style of that flourishing Age. To give my own Opinion briefly, I look upon it to be the Invention of some one, who had nothing else to do; who, believing he might easily impose upon Persons of the same Taste in future Times, thought it would go off under the borrowed Name of Apicius. But there are numberless Passages, which discover the Author's Ignorance, Barbarism, and want of Genius and Taste, in often joining those things together, by way of Relish, which we all know, by Experience, are troublesome to the Palate, and nauseous to the Stomach. This Judgment of Latinus is not amiss. Isaac Grangæus had better have conformed to it, than pretended, that the ten Books de Re Coquinaria, which go under the Name of Apicius, were written by our second Apicius (15). I confess, the Scholiast of Juvenal observes, that this Apicius wrote a Treatise of Cookery (16). I own, likewise, that Isidorus de Seville attributes a like Work to the same Apicius. "Coquinæ apparatus Apicius quidam primus composuit, qui in eo absumptis bonis morte voluntaria perivit (17). — One Apicius was the first, who wrote a Treatise of Cookery, and who, having spent his Fortune in eating, killed himself." But the Testimony

(12) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, in Biblioth. Lat. Append.

(13) Alban. Torinus, in Epist. Dedic.

(14) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, ubi supra, in Append. p. 179.

(15) Isaac Grangæus in Juvenal. Sat. 4. ver. 23.

(16) Audior præcipiendarum cænarum, qui scripsit de iusticiis: fuit enim exemplum gulæ. Vetus Scholiast. in Juven. Sat. 4. ver. 23.

(17) Isidor. Hispalens. Orig. l. 20. cap. 4. apud Joh. Alb. Fabric. Bibl. Lat. pag. 132.

(1) Cafaub.
in Athen.
lib. 1 c. 6.
& lib. 4.
cap. 19.

Apicius (k). I have discovered some Mistakes, on this head, in different Authors (C), which I shall throw together in one single Remark.

Timony of these two Writers is not sufficient to counterpoise the Silence of so many Authors, more worthy of Credit, and who have had unavoidable Opportunities of quoting this Book of Apicius. Be it as it will, we are obliged, by all the Laws of just Criticism, to conclude, that, if ever any such Work had been extant, That, which Albanus Torinus published, was not It.

[C] I have discovered some Mistakes, on this Head, in different Authors. I begin with Mr Moreri; he should not have said, either that the Apicius, mentioned by Seneca, wrote a Book concerning the Delicacy of Eating, or that he hanged himself in Despair, when he found he had spent his whole Estate. Mr Moreri quotes Seneca, lib. de Confol. This is too indeterminate, since we have three Treatises of this Philosopher, entitled, De Confolatione. He should have cited That, which he addressed to his Mother. It appears from thence, that Apicius poisoned himself, upon looking over his Accounts, and finding, that he had but the Sum of Two hundred fifty thousand Livres left, all his Debts paid (18). "Ære alieno oppressus rationes suas tunc primum coactus inspexit. Superfuturum sibi sequesternum centies computavit, & velut in ultima fame victurus, si sequesternum centies vixisset, veneno vitam finivit. Quanta luxuria erat, cui sequesternum centies egellas fuit" (19)! — Oppressed with Debts, he was drove to the Necessity of looking into his Accounts. Upon a Computation, he found he should have but One hundred thousand Sestertii left; and, as if he would have been driven to the last Extremity of Want, if obliged to live upon only this Sum, he ended his Days by Poison. What Luxury was That, which accounted an Hundred thousand Sestertii meer Poverty! Martial wrote the following Epigram upon this Subject.

Dederas, Apici, bis tricenties ventri,
Sed adhuc supererat centies tibi luxum.
Hoc tu gravatus, ne famem & sitim ferres,
Summa venenum potione duxisti.
Nil est, Apici, tibi gulosus factum (20).

You expended, O Apicius, in eating and drinking, Six hundred thousand Sesterties; yet an Hundred thousand still remained. Unwary at this, and to avoid Hunger and Thirst, you took Poison. This last Draught, O Apicius, was the most extravagant you ever took.

Not to follow the Author one quotes, as to the particular kind of Death, is a slight Fault; but it is leaving out all the Marvellous of this History, to suppress the Sums this Prodigal had remaining. The Quotation from Athenæus, lib. 11, is entirely wrong. Lastly, Mr Moreri ought to have known, that there were three Apicii, and not have confined himself to one. Charles Stephens pretends, that the Apicius, mentioned by Seneca (21), hanged himself; and that he had published a Book of Culæ Irritamentis, which is to this Day in every one's Hand. No good Critic believes, that the Work, which we have de re Culinaris, belongs to this Apicius, whom Seneca mentions (22). Be that as it will, this was the Foundation of Mr Moreri's Mistake. He found there, that Apicius hanged himself; and that he wrote a Book of the Delicacy of Eating. He ought to have learned from the same place, that Apicius had Two hundred and fifty thousand Francs left; for it is a Fact, which Charles Stephens has not omitted. Lloyd has followed Charles Stephens in every thing, except saying, that the Work, de Culæ Irritamentis, is, to this Day in every one's Hands. He has enlarged this Article considerably, by copying what Lipfius has observed concerning the three Apicii. But he did not know, that the Passage of Suidas, concerning the Oysters sent to Trajan into Partbia, is to be found in Athenæus. The Memories of the greatest Men often fail them. Lipfius quotes Athenæus twice in relation to the Apicii, but forgets a third Passage of the same Author, as remarkable, at least, as either of the other two (23). If he had consulted it, he would not have suspected, that the Word Trajan was corrupted in Suidas. Hefman has done little more than copy Lloyd; only he has cited more Passages. His Quotations are not always the truest; for Example, he quotes Seneca de Confolatione ad Albin. & de Confol. ad Elbium, as if they were two different Pieces. Cafaubon (24), makes Athenæus say, that several kind of Cakes bore the Name of the first Apicius; but it is certain, that Athenæus says this of the second Apicius; of Him, who lived in the time of the Emperor Tiberius (25); "Ἐγένετο καὶ τὰς Τιβέριον χρόνος ἀπὸρ τις Ἀπικίου, πλεονεκτήσας, τρυφήν, ἀπ' ἧς πλεονέκων γένη πολλά Ἀπικία ὀνομαζέσθαι. Τιβέριϊ σέculo vixit Apicius, vir diffusus, luxu solutus, à quo complura placentiarum genera Apicia nominant. DALECHAMP has left an Error in the Translation of Athenæus, which might easily have been perceived. It is in the fourth Book, page 168. Athenæus, having repeated what Polidonius had said concerning the first Apicius, a Man infamous for his Gluttony, adds, Περὶ δὲ Ἀπικίου τὸ καὶ αὐτοῦ ἐπὶ ἀσυστία διαβούτι ἐν τοῖς πρῶτοις εἰρήκαμεν; which signifies, that, from the beginning, he meant the Apicius, who was also famous for his Gluttony. The Latin Translation, therefore, is false. Antea non quoque istius Apicii ob immodicum luxum famosi meminimus. I say this is doubly false; for it does not come up to the Force of the Greek Words, and imputes a Lye to Athenæus. It is not true, that Athenæus had before spoken of the Apicius, whom Polidonius had mentioned. Dalechamp observes, that Athenæus spoke, in his third Book, of the Apicius now in question, at the beginning of the seventh Page (26). I believe this is false. I say nothing of his citing Cælius, lib. 5. cap. 30 (27). He means Coelius Rhodiginus, whose fifth Book has but fourteen Chapters: He should have cited the eleventh Chapter of the ninth Book (28). This Author says several things, there, of Apicius; but if he falsifies, every where else, what he quotes, as he does here a Passage of Athenæus, unhappy for Those, who take things upon trust from him. Athenæus, according to Him, relates, that Apicius, enquiring diligently after a particular kind of Lobsters in Alexandria, was informed, that very large ones were taken on the Coast of Libya: He immediately set sail thither; and, finding he was sent on a Fool's Errand, he cursed the Country, and resolved never to return thither. Athenæus relates no such thing; he only says, that Apicius eat a kind of Water-Locusts at Minturnæ in Campania, which were larger than the Lobsters of Alexandria; and, being informed, that there were some in Africa of an exceeding Largeness, he failed thither without Delay, and under great Inconveniences. The Fishermen, being informed of his Arrival, came and brought him the largest they had taken; and, being assured from them, that there were no larger, he returned to Minturnæ, without ever setting Foot on Shore in Africa (29).

The modern Author, whom I have cited, was mistaken in saying, that the Manuscript of Apicius was found in the Island of Moguelone, by Enoch d'Ascoli, in the Pontificate of Nicolas V. He relies on the Authority of Leander Albertus, and on That of Philip of Bergamo. "Ut tradit, says he (30), Leander Albertus Bononiensis in Descriptione Italiae, pag. 267, & Philippus Bergomas in Chronici continuatione, qui M. Cæcilium appellat. — As we read in Leander Albertus's Description of Italy, pag. 267; and Philip of Bergamo's Chronicle continued, who calls him M. Cæcilium." But neither of these Authors mention the Island of Moguelone; and it is certain, that the Manuscript was found, in That Place, only by Albanus Torinus, in the Year 1529. Philip of Bergamo, without any mention of the Place, says only, that, in the time of Nicolas V., Enoch d'Ascoli found these two Books, Porphyry on Horace, and M. Cæcilium Apicius. This he says, under the Year 1454. Herman Buschius agrees with him, as to the time. These are the Words of Leander Albertus: "Cujus (Enochi Asculani) industria M. Cælius Apicius, & Pomponius Porphyrio in Horatium, circa Nicolaum V. Pontif. inventi ac è tenebris in lucem vindicati sunt (31). — By whose (Enoch d'Ascoli) Care M. Cælius Apicius, and Pomponius Porphyry upon Horace, were found, and brought to light, about the time of Pope Nicolas V." Volaterran affirms, that Suidas says, Marcus Apicius composed a Book De Gula. Robert Stephens, a great Copier of Volaterran, affirms the same in his Elucidarium.

(24) In A-then. p. 23.

(25) Athen. p. 7.

(18) I make use of the Computation of Lipfius on Tacit. Ann. lib. 4. c. 1.

(19) Seneca de Confolat. ad Helviam, cap. 10.

(20) About 50,000 l. Stirling.

(21) Martial. Epigr. 22. lib. 3.

(22) Charles Stephens cites, in lib. de Confolatione ad Allianam. Cafaubon in Athen. pag. 23. cites the same.

(23) See Remark (H) towards the End.

(31) It is That of the first Book, p. 7.

(26) Dalechamp. Not. in Athen. pag. 706.

(27) Id. ib.

(28) I do not deny, that the first Edition of Rhodiginus was divided into Books and Chapters, after a different manner from that generally made use of at present.

(29) Athen. lib. 1. p. 7.

(30) Joh. Albert. Fabricius, Biblioth. Lat. pag. 129.

(31) Leand. Albert. in Descript. Ital. p. 444.

(32) Joh.
Albert. Fa
bricius, ub
supra, pag.
132.

darium Poëticum. They have been both censured: "Vellem locum indicasset, says our Modern (32), hoc enim apud Suidam non reperio. — I wish they

*"bad pointed out the Place; for I find no such thing
"in Suidas."*

APIANUS (PETRUS), a German Mathematician, in the XVIth Century. I shall add but one Thing to what Mr Moreri has said of him; which is, that he is accused of having been a Plagiary from Roiaumont [A].

[A] Of having been a Plagiary from Roiaumont. They, who would swell the Liits of Plagiaries, already published, may, if they please, make use of this Passage of G. B. Benedetti. "Hæc omnia tradita fuerunt & scriptis mandata ab antiquis, & à recentioribus usurpata, ut facile deprehendi potest in Erasmo Oualdo, qui omnem fere sui primi mobilis rationem à Petro Apiano desumpfit; Petrus verò Apianus hæc eadem cum multis aliis Pro-

“ positionibus à Monte Regio accipiens sibi ipsi ascrip-“ sit (1). — All these things were delivered, and “ committed to Writing, by the Ancients; and have “ been usurped by the Moderns; as may easily be seen
 “ in Erasmus Ossualdus, who borrowed the whole “ Scheme of his Primum Mobile from Petrus Api- “ anus; who borrowed it, with many other Propo- “ sitions, from Roiradmont.”

(1) Joh.
Baptista Benedictus, de Gnomonum
umbrarum-que solarium
usu, cap. 2.
fol. 2.

APION, a famous Grammarian, and Native of Oasis, in Egypt [A], exercised his Profession at Rome, in the Reign of the Emperor Tiberius [a]. No one can deny, that he was a Learned Man [B]; and that he had, with great Diligence, traced those Paths of Antiquity, which are the least known, and distinguished himself for the Exactness, and Variety of his Knowledge: But he had all the Pride of a thorough-paced Pedant [C]; and spent his Time in Questions of great Difficulty, and little Importance [D]. The Emperor Tiberius was no Stranger to the Failings of This

(a) Suidas in
'Απρίον.

[A] APION, a famous Grammarian, and Native of Ophis, in Egypt. I cannot conceive why, in Moreri's Dictionary, they give us this Grammarian under two Articles, first under the Name of Apian, and afterwards under That of Apion, without appraising us, that they are but one Person. I believe no Men of Learning ever called him Apian; and I am certain, that they, who pretend to Exactness, never call him Apion. Their Reason is, because his Name was borrowed from Apis, an Egyptian Divinity; and not from Apia, a Roman Family (1). His Country is strangely mis-spelled by Moreri; who has changed it into Ofias. The Supplement has rectified it. Suidas observes, that Heliconius had said, that Apion was of the Isle of Crete; but doubtless he was of Ophis, since Josephus affirms it; and accuses him of abjuring his Country, in order to pass for an Alexandrian (2). This Accusation of Josephus would have been of no weight, though he had not exaggerated, and dressed it up in such a multitude of Words. For Apion, in calling himself an Alexandrian, after he had been made free of the City of Alexandria, did no more, than what several other renowned Professors had practised before. The Surname of Plistonices, which was appropriated to him (3), had an Import very much to his Advantage (4); but it is not known, for what Reason they gave him this Appellation. Suidas will have him the Son of a Person, whose Name was Plistonices. Ἀπίων ὁ Πλιστωνίτης. But, in this Case, the Surname imports nothing in his Praise. Others say, that his Father's Name was Pesidonius, Ἀπίων ὁ Πισιδωνίτης (5). It is not impossible, that the Transcribers might have changed Πλιστωνίτης into Πισιδωνίτης.

[B] No one can deny, that he was a learned Man. Tatian tiles him a Man of great Renown, ἀνὴρ δοκίμως (6). Aulus Gellius speaks of him after the same manner. “ Literis homo multis praeclitus, “ rerumque Graecarum plurima atque varia scientia “ fuit : ejus libri non incelebres feruntur, quibus audi- “ nam ferme quae mirifica in Aegypto videntur audi- “ turque historia comprehendit (7). — He “ was a Man of great Learning ; and had an exten- “ sive Knowledge in Greek Affairs. His Books are “ well esteemed, in which is contained an Account of “ almost every thing wonderful and curious in Egypt.” So much for his Learning ; what follows, discovers his talkative and confident Behaviour ; “ facile atque ala- “ cri facundia fuit (8). — He was of a ready and “ forward Elocution.” But let us not inroach on the following Remark.

[C] He had all the Pride of a thorough-paced Pedant.—Aulus Gellius represents him as an errant Braggadocio. "In his quæ audivisse vel legisse sese dicit, "fortasse à vitio studioque ostentationis fit loquacior. "Est enim sane in prædicandis doctrinis suis venditor (9). — Concerning those Things, which he pretends to have heard or read, he is more than

commonly talkative; perhaps through the Vice and "Desire of Ostentation. For, in recommending his "own Opinions, he is a perfect Tradesman." Apion boasted, with the utmost Assurance, that he bestowed Immortality on those, to whom he dedicated his Works. Never was a Prediction or Promise, more false. Not one of his Books has withstood the Injuries of Time; and, if other Authors had not informed us who he was, his Name and Person had been unknown at this Day: He did nothing, then, in favour of those, whose Names he placed in the Front of his Works. Let us cite the entire Passage from Pliny. "Apion quidam Grammaticus, hic quem Tiberius Cæsar cymbalum mundi vocabat, quum publicæ famæ tympanum potius videri posset, immortalitate donari à se scripti, ad quos alia componebat (10). — One Apion, a Grammarian, he whom Tiberius Cæsar was wont to call the Cymbal of the World, though he rather seems to have been the Drum of public Fame, pretended, that he conferred Immortality on those, to whom he dedicated any Composition." Mr de Tillemont owns, that he does not undertake what Pliny means to say of our Apion in this Passage (11): And I would make the same Confession, rather than take up with the Explication given by the Supplement to Moreri. He boasts, they are the Words of the Supplement, that he immortalized those, to whom he dedicated any of his Works. Which made the Emperor Tiberius call him the Cymbal of the World: Whereupon Pliny says, that he ought rather to be called the Drum of the World, because the always gave a disagreeable Sound. But first, It is not true, that Pliny any where says, that the Emperor called him Cymbalum Mundi, because he set such a Value on his Dedications. In the second Place, Pliny does not say, that he rather deserved to be called the Drum of the World; he makes use of the Phrase Publicæ Famæ Tympanum, which has a particular Force, to represent this Person as a kind of Public Crier, who, by beat of Drum, or sound of Trumpet, publishes to all the Inhabitants of a City, what every one is to be informed of. In the third Place, Pliny does not say, that, because Apion gave but an unpleasant Sound, he deserved the Appellation of Tympanum, rather than Cymbalum. Who told the Continuator of Moreri, that the Cymbal is more pleasing than the Drum?

[D] And spent his Time in Questions of great Difficulty, and little Importance.] Jal. Africanus calls him the Buffet of all Grammarians; or one, who carried his Enquiries to the utmost Scrupulousness and Nicety; ἀνεξεργασίας, ὑπερμακρῶν (12). According to Suidas, he obtained the Surname of Μόχθος. The Word signifies Toil, and has more Force, in this Place, than Μόχνηςος, Laborious, or Impertunate; which, according to the Conjecture of a learned Man (13), might have crept into Suidas, instead of Μόχθος. Didymus, who is named Καλλέως (14), that

(10) Plin.
in Præfati-
one Natur.
Historiæ.

(11) Tillemont's History of the Em-perors, Tom.
I. pag. 776.

ERRORS of the Supplement to Moreri. See also Remark [E].

(12) Jul.
African. 2-
pod. Eusebium, Præp.
Evang. lib.
10. cap. 10.

(13) Tille-
mont, ubi fuerit

(b) See Remark [C].

(c) According to Josephus, Antiq. l. 18, cap. 10, for Philo, p. 1043, says that the Jews' Deputies were five in Number.

(d) Joseph. Antiq. lib. 18. cap. 10.

(14) Amm. Marcellin. lib. 22. cap. ult. pag. 241.

(15) Seneca, Epist. 88, pag. 361.

(16) Plini, lib. 30. c. p. 2. sub fin.

(17) Seneca, Epist. 88.

(18) The Manuscript of Lipsius, on this Words of Seneca, expresses this reading, and pretends that Apion was a Mountebank and a Jack-pudding. Agryta fide & calculat.

(19) The first Word of the Lib. is Maviv. The latter is. pag. 40, the Letter for B.

(20) C. n. pare vob lib. 1. Plutarch. Sympos. lib. 9. cap. 3. pag. 739.

This Wit: For, though perhaps we do not understand all that this Prince meant (b), yet we may easily perceive, that he took Apion for a Romancer, who stunned the World with too loud an Ostentation of his Learning. This Person was Chief of the Embassy, which the People of Alexandria sent to Caligula, to complain against the Jews, who were settled in their City, and with whom they were at great variance. He set out for Rome, together with two other Deputies. The Jews, on their part, deputed Three (c) of their Body to Caligula to justify their Conduct. Philo was Chief of the Embassy. Apion, animated by That Hatred, which the Egyptians had born, time out of mind, to the Jewish Nation, accused them of various Crimes; and insisted chiefly on those, which he knew would most exasperate Caligula against them; namely, That the Jews refused to consecrate Images to him [E], and to swear by his Name; while all the other Subjects of the Empire dedicated Temples and Altars to him (d). One of Apion's Principal Pieces was That Of the Antiquities of Egypt. It was doubtless in this Book, that he gave so ample an Account of the Pyramids, that Pliny thought him worthy to be ranked among the Twelve Authors, who have treated on this Subject (e). He spoke very disobligingly of the Jews in the same Book; nor was he satisfied with treating them ill on every Occasion, which offered in his Antiquities of Egypt; he wrote a Book expressly against them (f). Josephus thought himself obliged to confute the malicious Calumnies, with which this Author had loaded them [F]. Apion was not alive, when this An-

(e) Plin. lib. 35. cap. 12. See also lib. 37. cap. 5.

(f) Justin. Paren. ad Græcos, p. 9. Clem. Alex. Stromat. l. 1. pag. 320.

ther Homer, pretended, that Homer, after having finished both his Poems, the Iliad, and the Odyssey, added the first Line to That Work, which comprehended the Trojan War. The Reason he gave for this was, because there are two Letters designedly placed in the first Verse, which denote the Number of the Books. We learn from these Words, that this Grammarian won the Hearts of all Greeks; since they received him in all their Cities as a second Homer, or as Homer himself risen from the Dead. A Man of Learning, and at the same time of Impudence and Pride, imposes upon great Numbers of People by his ostentatious Talk.

[E] The Jews refused to consecrate Images to him.] This was the chief Accusation, as Josephus particularly relates, in the Place cited by the Continuator of Moreri: And, as They were the Jews of Alexandria, whom Apion had Orders to accuse, it is plain the Question was not what the Jews of Jerusalem did, or did not do. And yet, if we may believe our Continuator, this was in reality the Case; nor was it the City of Alexandria, which remonstrated against the Jews, but Caligula himself, who complained, that they would not admit his Statue into the Temple of God. It is true, this Emperor used his utmost Endeavours to have his Statue placed in the Temple of Jerusalem (21); but it is equally true, that neither Philo's Embassy, nor This of Apion, relates to this Fact. Philo, when he so particularly relates the Complaints, and the Questions of Caligula, makes no mention of this Statue in the Temple (22). Caligula complains, in general, that the Jews were the only People, who refused to honour him as a God. Apion had already put him out of Temper on this Subject, that he might prevent his doing them Justice in the main Dispute. The Matter in hand related properly to the Privileges, which the Jews ought to have enjoyed in Alexandria: Their Cause was good, and they would have gained it before unprejudiced Judges. But what does Apion do? He gives the Cause a different Turn; he renders the Jews odious to Caligula; he has recourse to Accusations of Impiety, and amuses the Court with captious Points. Thus false Zealots act, at this very Day, to support themselves in a most unjust Authority over Conscience, as well as all other Concerns. This can never be too often repeated.

[F] Josephus thought himself obliged to confute the malicious Calumnies, with which this Author had loaded them.] Mr Moreri's Continuator commits another Blunder in this Place. This, says he, induced Josephus, afterwards, to write the Life and Errors of Apion. It is not true, that Josephus wrote the Life of this Grammarian; and it is speaking very inaccurately to say, that he wrote his Errors. These Words naturally suggest this Thought; that Josephus wrote a Book of Controversy against Apion's Heresies. The Truth is; Being informed, that several Critics had risen up against his Jewish Antiquities, not to condemn the Form, or Style, of it, but to accuse him of a thousand Fables devised for the Advantage of his Nation; He wrote an Apology; in which

(21) Philo de legat.

(22) Ib. pag. 1041, & seq.

swer was written; for the Author makes a Reflexion in it on the Manner of his Death. He affirms, that, after this Man had scoffed so much at the Jewish Ceremonies, not considering, that his injurious Treatment of the Jews in some Manner reflected on the Ancient Laws of the Egyptians (g), he found himself seized with a Distemper, which required Incisions in his Natural Parts, and that, notwithstanding this Remedy, he died in extreme Torture (h). He boasted, that he had called up the Soul of Homer, to enquire the Place of That Poet's Birth, and his Family (i). The Titles of Four or Five of his Books are preserved [G].

It is not true, that Apion relates, that Euphranor, intending to paint Jupiter, went to Athens to consult a Professor, who read Homer to his Scholars; and that This Painter drew an admirable Portrait of That God from the Description, which this Poet gives of Jupiter, in the first Book of the Iliad (k). This Error, which fell from Father Rapin, in the First Edition of his Reflexions on Poetry, was unmercifully censured by Vavassor the Jesuit [H].

which he replied to these Censures, and the Calumnies, which were published against the Jews. Half the Apology does not relate to Apion, though it is generally quoted, as if it were all against him. It is cited by Origen, under the Title, De Antiquitate gentis Judaicae (23). ---- Of the Antiquity of the Jewish Nation.

[G] The Titles of four or five of his Books are preserved. I have mentioned his Antiquities of Egypt, divided into five Books (24), as also his Treatise against the Jews. I add, that he composed a Treatise De Luxu Apicii (25), ---- Of the Luxury of Apicius; another De Lingua Romana (26), ---- Of the Latin Tongue; and another De Disciplina Metallifica (27), ---- Of the Knowledge of Metals. Suidas ascribes an History to him; wherein he treated of all Nations, ἑρρα-λεν ιστοριαν κατ' ἔθνη, scriptis historiæ de singulis gentibus. The famous History of the Lyon of Androcles is known only from the Relation of Apion, who speaks of it as an Eye-Witness. Aulus Gellius relates it after him (28). He is indebted to him for another Observation, to wit, the Reason why the Ancients wore a Ring on the Finger next to the little Finger of the left Hand. Apion gave a Reason for it, taken from some Anatomical Discoveries made in Egypt (29).

APOLLINARIS (CAIUS SULPITIUS), a very learned Grammarian, and a Native of Carthage [A], lived in the 11d Century under the Antonines. He had for his Successor, in the Professorship of Grammar, Helvius Pertinax, who had been his Disciple, and was afterwards Emperor (a). He is supposed to be the Author of the Verses, which are prefixed to Terence's Comedies [B], and contain the Summary of them. There is extant an Epigram, which he composed on the Order Virgil gave to burn his Æneid [C]. Aulus Gellius, who had studied under him, mentions him often with Commendation [D]. I advise the Reader particularly to consult what he has said

[A] A Native of Carthage. I have not met with any ancient Author, who informs me of this; I say it merely on the Authority of some modern Authors, who have published Collections of Epigrams, or Catalogues of the ancient Poets.

[B] He is supposed to be the Author of the Verses, which are prefixed to Terence's Comedies. I have read, in a Letter of Petrus Crinitus (1), that Politian had observed, that these Verses ought not to be ascribed to Terence, as is generally believed, but to Sulpitius Apollinaris. He adds, that, in a very ancient Manuscript of Terence, was to be read this Inscription in Capital Letters over the Summaries, G. S. ULPICI APOLLINARIS PERIOCHA. This Inscription has been of great Weight with the several Editors of Terence. Mr de Tillemont refers us to Sethus Calvisius concerning these Summaries (2). It is true, Calvisius mentions them under the Year 163. But he cites Suidas; and I much question, whether he ought to have done so. Mr de Tillemont is not in Fault, if we do not believe there are extant two Pieces more of Apollinaris. He * left some Letters, says he, and a Writing τ, in which he reprimands another Grammarian, whose Name was Cællius Vindex.

[C] There is extant an Epigram, which he composed on the Order Virgil gave to burn his Æneid. It is but a single Distich; and is This:

Infelix alio cecidit prope Pergamon igne,
Et pœne est alio Troja cremata rogo.

VOL. I.

[H] This Error, which fell from Father Rapin ---- was unmercifully censured by Vavassor the Jesuit. He first relates the Fact, and then adds: "Guel, Reader, at the pleasant Blunder of the Reflector, through a Mistake of two Words of this Commentator (30). Whereas I had said, as soon as he came out of the Professor's School, he drew the Picture of Jupiter; our Reflector, to express these Words of Euphranor, καὶ ἀπὼν ἑρρα-λεν, & egressus pinxit, translated them, as Apion, the Grammarian, wrote. Where the good Man was much overseen; and was not aware, either that the Participle ἀπὼν is not Ἀπῖων, as That Grammarian calls himself; or that the Verb ἑρρα-λεν signifies in this Place, he painted, as γράφω & γράφει are taken in the very same Sense before, or, lastly, that ἀπὼν, cum discessisset, answers to the preceding Verb παρήν, aditit. After all; if the Reflector had himself seen this Passage of Euphranor, I wonder he should thus misunderstand it, and if he took this Interpretation from some other, I am yet more astonished, that he should pretend to have read Euphranor, & carefully noting a Passage, which he had never seen (31).

Troy almost peris'd in a second Flame.

These Verses make us regret the Loss of others. Versus habemus ejus aliquos de Æneide Maronis, qui deperditorum acendunt sitim (3). These are the Jesuit Brietius's Words. I wonder he does not mention the Summaries of Terence; and more, that Vossius says nothing of our Poet. I confess, he speaks of an Apollinaris, whom Gyraldus has reckoned among the Latin Poets. But, since This Apollinaris lived in Martial's Time (4), it is plain he is different from our Grammarian. Besides, all who are Lovers of Poetry are not Poets: So that we have Reason to oppose Gyraldus, in giving the Title of Poet to the Apollinaris of Martial, on account of the Pleasure this Apollinaris took in Martial's Poetry. "Eum in poësis memorat Lilius, sed non fat firmo argumento; nec enim, si delectaretur epigrammaticis, co & ipse fuerit Poëta (5). ---- Lilius Gyraldus ranks him among the Poets; but his Reason is not a sufficient one: for it does not follow, that, because he was fond of Epigrams, he was therefore a Poet."

[D] Aulus Gellius ---- mentions him often with Commendation (6). He calls him virum præstanti literarum scientia (7), ---- A Man of remarkable Learning; Hominem memoriæ nostræ doctissimum (8), ---- The most learned Man of our Times; Virum elegantia scientia ornatum (9), ---- A Man of polite Learning; Virum in memoria nostra præter alios doctum (10), ---- A Man superior in Learning to all whom we remember. See the thirteenth Chapter of his twelfth Book.

5 B

(i) See Remark [D].

(k) Rapin. Reflex. sur la Poétique n. 28. pag. 77. Edit. 1674.

(30) That is Eudathius.

(31) Remarques sur les nouvelles reflexions touchant la Poétique, pag. 56, 57.

(2) Jul. Capitolinus in Pertinace, cap. 1.

(3) Brietius de Poët. Lat. pag. 42.

(4) He addresses to him the 256 Epigram of the 7th Book.

(5) Vossius de Poët. Lat. pag. 50.

(6) Aul. Gell. Noctes Atticæ. lib. 6. cap. 6, & lib. 13. cap. 16, & lib. 20, cap. 6.

(7) Lib. 6, cap. 17.

(8) Lib. 13, cap. 16.

(9) Lib. 16, cap. 5.

(10) Lib. 13, cap. 4.

(g) Amongst others That of Circumcision.

(h) Joseph. lib. 2. contra Apion sub fin.

(23) Origen. contra Celsum.

(24) Tatianus apud Euseb. Præp. pag. 493.

(25) Athen. lib. 7. pag. 294.

(26) Id. lib. 15. pag. 680.

(27) Plinius in Indice, lib. 35.

(28) Aul. Cell. lib. 5. cap. 14.

(29) Id. lib. 10. cap. 10.

(2) It is among those of Politian, the 22d of the 72th Book. Edition of Paris, 1526, in 4to.

(2) Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2. pag. 589.

* Gellius, lib. 15. cap. 5.

† Id. lib. 2. cap. 16.

faid of him in the fourth Chapter of the eighteenth Book : He will there see the true Picture of a Pretender to Learning; and the genteel manner, in which Apollinaris ridiculed one of this Character [E].

He ascribes to him another good Quality, no less valuable than Learning : Namely, that Apollinaris had not That pedantic Stiffness, which makes some censure those magisterially, who take the Liberty of giving their Opinion in Matters, which, perhaps, they do not thoroughly understand. For his Part, He gently admonished People of their Errors. Aulus Gellius gives a remarkable Instance of it. For Apollinaris, though he had had ever so little of the Pedant, yet might have used the sharpest Censure on an Occasion, wherein Aulus Gellius represents him as behaving with his usual Moderation. It was demanded, in his Presence, who a certain Cato Nepos was, whose Name appeared in the Title Page of a Book. A young Scholar took up the Question, and undertook to answer it, but was quite mistaken. It was an Affront to the Professorial Majesty, for a young Man to pretend to answer a Question in the Presence of a Professor of Grammar, without first allowing the Grammarian to give his Opinion; this Pertness was unpardonable; however Apollinaris would not set the young Man right, 'till he had first commended him in the civillest Manner. "Tum Apollinaris, ut mos ejus in "reprehendendo fuit, placide admodum leniterque, "laudo, inquit, te, mi fili, quod in tantula ætate "etiam hunc M. Catonem, de quo nunc quæritur, "quis fuerit ignores, auditiuncula tamen quadam de "Catonis familia asperlus es (11). - - - Then Apollinaris, after his usual manner of Reproof, with great "Mildness and Candor, replied, I commend you, my "Son, that, at these tender Years, though you are ignorant what This M. Cato is, whom we are now enquiring after, you yet seem to have some little "Knowledge of the Family of Cato."

(11) Aul. Gell. lib. 13, cap. 18.

[E] The true Picture of a Pretender to Learning, and the genteel Manner, in which Apollinaris ridiculed one of this Character.] This Pretender boasted in a Bookeller's Shop, that he was the only Man alive, who understood Sallust; "For, says he, I do "not stop at the Bark, or Surface of his Thoughts, "but descend to the very Pith and Quintessence

"of them" Neque primam tantum cutem ac speciem sententiarum, sed sanguinem quoque ipsum ac medullam verborum ejus eruere atque intraspicere penitus prædicaret. Apollinaris, assuming the Ironical Manner of Socrates (12), address himself to my Gentleman with an Air of Respect, and lest himself, that he had so opportunely met with an Oracle, to consult, on a Passage of Sallust, the Sense of which he had been asked the Day before, but was not able to give it. He desired to know, what Difference Sallust made between Stolidior and Vanior, when he said, Cn. Lentulus - - - perincertum stolidior an vanior (13). Our Pretender answered, with a scornful Air, that he might propole these Trifles to others; and that he did not give himself the Trouble to examine things which were universally known. By this he plainly discovered his Ignorance with regard to the Question proposed; but, finding himself close pressed, and that the Company began to sneer at him, he took his Leave, pretending he had Business elsewhere. Afterwards Apollinaris explained this Passage of Sallust; and shewed, that vanus signified a Knave, and stolidus a Clown. Aulus Gellius's Words deserve to be repeated; they paint this Scene very justly. "Tum ille rictu oris labiarumque ductu contemni "à se offendens & rem de qua quæreretur, & hominem ipsum qui quæreret; Priscorum, inquit, & remotorum ego verborum medullas & sanguinem, sicuti dixi, perspicere & elicere soleo, non illorum quæ proculatula vulgo & protrita sunt. Ipso illo quippe Cn. Lentulo stolidior est & vanior, qui ignorat ejusdem esse vanitatem & stoliditatem. - - - "Then He, drawing his Mouth into a contemptuous "Smile, and pretending to despise both the Questions "and the Person, who asked it, replied; I make it my Business, as I have already told you, to enquire into the inmost meaning of obsolete and remote Expressions, not of Those, which are in every one's Mouth. He must be more foolish and empty than This Cneius Lentulus himself, who knows not, that the same Person was both foolish and empty."

(12) Jactantem quæpiam & vendicantem sallustianæ lectionis irritum illudque genere illo facetissimæ dissimulationis, qua Socrates ad Sophistas utebatur. Gell. lib. 13, cap. 4.

(13) Sallustius, Histor. lib. 12.

A POLLODORUS. A great Number of Persons, of different Professions, and great Merit, have been called by this Name. Scipio Tetti (a), a Neapolitan, composed a Treatise of the Apollodorus's, which was printed at Rome, in the Year 1555, with the Bibliotheca of Apollodorus translated into Latin by Benedictus Ægius (b). Dr Thomas Gale re-touched this Subject above an Hundred Years after (c). Mr Moreri has given us many Articles under this Name, which stand in need of being revised. He forgot one Illustrious Apollodorus, the only Person of the Name, whom I propose to speak of.

(a) Moreri celsi hinc Tattius, inventus of Tettius.

(b) See Niccoloni's Additions to the Bibliotheca of Naples.

(c) See his Apollodorus, printed at Paris, with other Treatises, in 1675.

A POLLODORUS, a famous Architect, in the Days of Trajan, and Adrian, was of Damascus. He had the Direction of the Stone Bridge, which Trajan caused to be built over the Danube, in the Year 104; and which passed for the most magnificent of all the sumptuous Buildings of That Emperor. Procopius mentions it (a); and it is probable, Apollodorus left a Description of it in Writing. Adrian, who piqued himself on understanding all Arts and Sciences to Perfection, so far as to entertain a Jealousy, and Ill-Will, towards those, who acquired an eminent Reputation in their Professions, had particular Reasons to hate Apollodorus; for, as Trajan discoursed, one Day, with this great Architect, about some Buildings, which he designed to erect in Rome, Adrian would needs give his Opinion, and did it, like one, who understood nothing of the Matter (b). Apollodorus said roughly to him, Go, and paint Citrus*, As for these Matters, we are now discoursing of, you are intirely ignorant of them. Adrian, in those Days, spent his Time in painting Citrus, or Gourds, and even boasted of it. This Insult of Apollodorus cost him dear; Adrian never forgot it; and, when he came to be Emperor, took care to be revenged. He would not employ Apollodorus; He banished him; and, at last, caused him to be accused of several Crimes, and, upon this Pretence, put him to Death. He was ashamed to acknowledge the true Cause of this Severity. Apollodorus had, to his old Offence, added a new Provocation, which touched the Emperor to the quick; he had criticised, and, which is worse, very justly, on a sumptuous Structure, which Adrian had caused to be built. This Prince, to shew Apollodorus that he did not want his Assistance, sent him a Plan of the Temple of Venus, and asked his Opinion of it; but not before the Building was finished. Apollodorus wrote to him very frankly, what he thought of the Structure; and found

(1) De ædific. lib. 4, cap. 6, pag. 81, apud Tillemont, Hist. des Emper. Tom. 2, pag. 302.

(b) Xiphilin. in Hadriano.

* Great Gourds, or Lemps of Flax.

very very essential Faults in it [A]; which the Emperor could neither deny, nor repair. This raised the Emperor's Indignation to the utmost, and pushed him upon getting rid of Apollodorus (c). This last Piece of Ingenuity was much more excusable than the first. Men know not whom they shock, when they reprehend the Ignorance of Those, who would pass for Artists in the Presence of greater Masters. They may chance to affront a Person, whose Subjects they will one Day be [B], or whose Favour they may stand in need of. This confirms my Conjecture in relation to the Conversations between Apelles and Alexander [C].

(c) Ex Xiphilino in Hadr.

[A] Apollodorus - - - found very essential Faults in the Plan of the Temple of Venus. He made it appear, by good Reasons, that it was neither large, nor lofty, enough; and that the Statues placed in it were not justly proportioned to the Size of the Temple; for the Goddesses, said he, if they have a mind to rise, and go out of it, cannot accomplish this Desire (1). An Author of our own has paraphrased this Thought thus. "The Architect Apollodorus, seeing some Statues of the Gods in the Temple of Venus, said; These Gods will do well to continue sitting as they are; For, should they stand up, they would push off the Roof of the Temple, unless they stoop very low; and it will be still worse, if they have a mind to go out of it; for, the Doors being too low for them, they must be obliged to stoop in an inconvenient and indecent Manner (2)." I have somewhere read, that the Critics found the same Fault with the Olympian Jupiter of Phidias. But others have built a pious Reflexion on it. Let us hear Bardin. "They say, that Phidias, being to make a Statue of Jupiter Olympius, chose to carve him in a sitting Posture, and so disproportionate to the Size of the Temple, that, if he were to stand up, the Roof would be too low for him. Thus we may say, that God enters our Souls, which are his Temples; but that he cannot be contained in them at his full extent (3)."

(1) Ex Xiphilino, in Hadrano.

(2) Costar. Apolog. pag. 90.

(3) Bardin's Lycæum, cap. 2.

(4) See the Text of the Article ANTONIA. NO, towards the end.

[B] May chance to affront a Person, whose Subjects they will one Day be (4). The Relation between Trajan and Adrian might have warned Apollodorus of this: But here lies the Failing of those, who think themselves necessary, and whom an uncommon Capacity introduces into Favour; they imagine it is not necessary to pay their Court to young Princes; and that the great Patron is sufficient. Times change; and they find, that their magisterial Behaviour to all, who speak impertinently before them, in their own Profession, is great Folly.

[C] This confirms my Conjecture in relation to the Conversations between Apelles and Alexander. I have declared above (5), that I could not persuade myself, that this great Painter would dare to take so gross a Liberty of censuring the young Conqueror, as some Authors pretend. I am very sensible, that They, who excel in certain Arts, are sometimes of such a capricious Humour, that they are not able to contain themselves within the Bounds of Respect, when the Fit is upon them; but I know too, that Apelles is said to have been very modest and polite. But the strongest Reason I have for it is this. Alexander, the most impatient Man that ever lived, would not have let so scornful a Censure pass unpunished: Now, we do not read, that Apelles ever lost the Favour of This Prince. The Argument a fortiori, from the greater to the less takes place here. Adrian was not so haughty, as Alexander, nor was he a King, when he was affronted; yet the Censure of the Architect was a mortal Offence.

(5) In Remark [D], of the Article APOLLEUS.

APOLLO, a Pagan Deity. Look for PHŒBUS.

APOLLONIUS, of Perga, a City in Pamphylia, was a famous Geometrician (a), in the Reign of Ptolemy Evergetes, which reaches from the second Year of the CXXXIIIrd Olympiad, to the third Year of the CXXXIXth. He studied, a long time, in Alexandria, under the Disciples of Euclid (b), and composed several Books; none of which are come down to us, but his Conic Sections [A]. It is much esteemed, and several ancient and modern Authors have taken the pains to comment upon, or translate, it [B]. Mr Des Cartes had no favourable Opinion of it [C].

(b) Pappus in Proëmio ad lib. 7, Mathem. Collect.

[A] Composed several Books, none of which are come down to us, but his Conic Sections. Two Books περί λόγων ἀποτομῶν, de proportionis sectione. Two περί χωρίων ἀποτομῶν, de spatii sectione. Two διατομῶν τῶν τετραγώνων, determinatæ sectionum. Two ἐκαστῶν, actionum. Two νύσεων, inclinationum. Two τῶν ἐν κέντρῳ, planorum locorum (1). And eight of Conic Sections. There can be no doubt, that this last Work contained eight Books; the Author's Epistle Dedicatory to a Geometrician of Pergamus, whose Name was Eudemus, makes it plainly appear. The Public has not yet seen the last of these eight Books: Only the four first are in Greek; the three following have been translated into Latin, from an Arabic Version. See the following Remark. We find cited the Books of Apollonius, de cochlea, & de perturbatis rationibus (2). I cannot tell, whether we ought not to ascribe to the same Author the Commentary on the Phænomena of Aratus, which is attributed by the Ancients to Apollonius the Geometrician (3).

(a) Eutocius Afcalonita Initiō Commentar. in Conica Apollonii, ex Hieracio in vita Archimedis.

(1) Vossius de Scient. Mathem. cap. 16, pag. 55, ex Pappo, lib. 7. Mathematicæ collectionis.

(2) Apud Proclum in Euclidem. See the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliothecæ, pag. 71.

(3) See Vossius lib. cap. 32, pag. 106. and de Hist. Græcis, pag. 505.

(4) Claudius Richardus Pref. ad Apollon. Pergæum sect. 10.

(5) In lib. 7. Mathematicæ. Collect. Pappi.

[B] Several ancient and modern Authors have taken the Pains to comment upon, or translate, it. It is said, that Hyppatia, the Daughter of Theon, wrote a Commentary on the Conics of Apollonius. We have still That, which Eutocius of Ascalon composed on the first four Books of This Work, with Lemma's and Corollaries. He promised to comment on the other four also: See his Epistle Dedicatory to Anthemus.

We have also (5), to the Number of Sixty five, the Lemma's, which Pappus drew up on the Conics of Apollonius. The Catalogue of the Works of Francis Maurolycus, printed at Venice, informs us, that this ingenious Mathematician wrote a Book entitled, Apollonii conica elementa libri quatuor & demonstrationibus & lineamentis opportunis insaurata (6). - - - Apollonius's Principles of Conic Sections, in four Books, and illustrated with Demonstrations and suitable Schemes. John Baptista Memus (7), a noble Venetian, and Mathematical Professor at Venice, translated into Latin the four first Books of Apollonius; which were printed in the Year 1537 (8). This Translation is of no Value; he did not understand the Subject; and this was the Reason, why he passed over the most visible Faults of the Greek Manuscript. "Eos primus transulit, say Vossius (9), Joan. Baptista Memmius; sed infeliciter, eo quod argumentum operis non intelligeret: unde non vidit fat manifestas Græci codicis mendas, ac sæpe pueriliter alucinatur: sicut monitum Francico Maurolyco Præfatione in Cosmographiam suam. — John Baptista Memmius was the first, who translated them; but without Success; since he understood not the Design of the Work; whence it was, that he overlooked the plainest Errors of the Greek Copy, and is often guilty of childish Mistakes: as is observed by Francis Maurolycus, in the Preface to his Cosmography." Frederic Commandin (10) made a new Translation of it, much better than the former, which he published at Bologna, in the Year 1566. He added to it a Translation of Eutocius's Commentary, and several Notes. But, having made use of a very faulty Greek Manuscript, his Version was not so good as could be wished; for which Reason Martin Ghetaldus (11) resolved to trace the Evil to its Source. He endeavoured

(6) Claud. Richardus. Pref. ad Apollon. Pergæum. sect. 4.

(7) Moreri calls him de Meſmes; he undoubtedly believed that he was a Frenchman of the Family, which bears this Name.

(8) Claud. Richardus, ubi supra, sect. 15.

(9) Vossius de Scient. Math. pag. 55.

(10) And not Commandon, as Moreri calls him.

(11) He was a Patrician of Ragusa.

it [C]. Some have thought, that Apollonius appropriated the Writings and Discoveries of Archimedes to himself [D]. He had a Son, whose Name was Apollonius, and who

- ed to correct the Manuscript according to the Sense of the Author, and to resolve the Problems; and by this means believed he had restored Life to this ancient Geometrician (12). See the Book, which he entitled Apollonius redivivus, seu restituta Apollonii Pergæi inclinationum geometria, and his Supplementum Apollonii Galli, seu exfusciata Apollonii Pergæi inclinationum geometriæ Pars reliqua, printed at Venice, in the Year 1607, in 4to. Claude Richard, a Jesuit of the Franciscan Comte, and Royal Professor of Mathematics in the Imperial College of his Order at Madrid, in the Year 1642, explained, in his public Lectures, the first four Books of Apollonius, and, in the Year 1643, four other Books, of which himself was the Author, and in which he had supplied the other Part of this ancient Geometrician's Work (13). His Explications of the four first were printed at Antwerp, in 1655, in Folio. He declares that, after having finished these two Pieces, he read the Conics of Claude Mordorge (14) with Pleasure and Admiration, as also the Quadrature of the Circle of Gregory of St Vincent; in which are many things relating to those Books of Apollonius, which are wanting. In quibus (de quadratura circuli duobus tomis) præter elementa conica peculiari ordine disposita, innumera prodit, sicuti Mordorgius, quæ spectant ad postremo quatuor Apollonii libros injuriâ temporum suppressos, in lucem revocandos (15). Ferdinand I. Great Duke of Florence, proposed to get several Arabian Manuscripts, which were in his Library, translated. John Baptista Raimondo, who was the Principal among those, to whom this Prince gave Pensions for this Undertaking, had promised to translate Apollonius, which was in Arabic, in that Library; and some Authors have said, that this Translation was finished (16); but nothing of it has been found among his Papers (17). At last the Great Duke, Ferdinand II., and his Brother Prince Leopold de Medicis, cast their Eyes on Abraham Ecchellenfis, Professor of the Oriental Languages at Rome, and employed him in this Work. By the Assistance of Alfonso Borelli, Mathematical Professor at Pisa, he translated the fifth, sixth, and seventh Books of Apollonius into Latin. This Translation was printed at Florence, in the Year 1661, in Folio, with the Commentary of the same Borelli; who maintains, in his Preface, that these Books are not spurious, but the genuine Works of our Apollonius. He answers the Difficulties of Claude Mordorge, who imagined, that the three Books, which Goliath brought from the Levant (18), were the Work of an Arabian, who conceal'd himself under the celebrated Name of Apollonius. Father Merjennus mentions this Opinion of Claude Mordorge, but does not approve of it; he believes that the eighth Book of the Conics of Apollonius, and all the other Works of the same Author, as also those which Pappus has not quoted, are still extant, and actually translated into Arabic (19). He produces Aben Nedin as his Voucher, who wrote a Book De Philosophiæ Arabibus (20). i. e. Of the Arabic Philosophers. Observe, I. That it was remarked, at the bottom of the Manuscript of Goliath, that the eighth Book of Apollonius had not been translated into Arabic, because it was wanting in the Greek Copies, from which the Translation of the others had been made (21). II. That the Manuscript, from which the Translation of Ecchellenfis was made, came from the Oriental Library, which Ignatius Neama, Patriarch of Antioch, had left by Will to the Great Duke Ferdinand I. (22). III. That Abalpat Abaphanensis is the Author of the Arabic Translation, which served Ecchellenfis for an Original, and which he made for King Aiscacigiar, who ascended the Throne in the Three hundred seventy second Year of the Hegira. From whence it follows, that this was not the first Translation in that Language; for Gregory Barhebraeus notes, that seven Books of the Conics of Apollonius were translated into Arabic in the time of Almanun. Now Almanun was inaugurated in the Two hundred and third Year of the Hegira (23). IV. That Abalpat still pretended, that his Translation was the first, and that only some Fragments of Apollonius had been rendered before, from the eastest Places. This would induce one to think, that either he had not seen the Translation, which was made in the time of Almanun, or that That Translation contained only some Fragments of the Conics of Apollonius (24).
- This is what I had to say, by way of Comment on the Text of this Remark. I say nothing of the Apollonius Batavus of Willbrod Snellius, seu exfusciata geometria Apollonii Pergæi ægæi Diweximus toijns, a Book printed at Leyden, 1608, in 4to. I omit, likewise, Vincenzo Viviani, Author of the Treatise De maximis & minimis, geometrica divination in quintum librum Conicorum Apollonii Pergæi, at Florence, 1659, in Folio.
- [C] Mr Des Cartes had no favourable Opinion of it. "He was not surprized, that others should demonstrate the Conic Sections with more ease than Apollonius; because That ancient Author is very tedious and intricate; and yet all, that he has demonstrated, is, of itself, very plain (25)." He compared what he had done in Metaphysics "to the Demonstrations of Apollonius, in which there is nothing, but what is very clear, and certain, when each Point is separately considered. But, as they are somewhat long, and since one cannot readily perceive the Necessity of the Conclusion, without exactly remembering all that went before, scarce one Man in a City, or a Province, can be found, who is able to comprehend them: However, on the Testimony of those few, who understand them, and vouch for their Truth, every one gives Credit to them (26)."
- [D] Some have thought, that Apollonius appropriated the Writings and Discoveries of Archimedes to himself. Heraclius affirms, that Archimedes was the first, who applied himself to the Doctrine of Conic Sections; and that his Compositions on that Subject fell into the Hands of Apollonius, who published them as his own (27). Eutocius confutes this by two Reasons; one is, that Archimedes, in several Parts of his Works, speaks of Conics as a Science not new; the other is, that Apollonius does not pretend, that he is the Inventor of what he writes; he only says, that he has treated the Subject more amply, than had been done by any Author before him (28). This seems to me but an indifferent Justification of him, as to the Crime of Plagiarism; for a Man may appropriate the Writings of another to himself, though they are not Works, on which the Author pretends to say nothing, but what is new. The Honour of explaining a difficult Subject better, than had been done before, is sufficient to tempt a Man to get into his Possession A Work, which may procure him this Honour. This might be the Case of Apollonius, for any thing that appears in his Apology. There is something farther still; he boasts sometimes in the general Summaries of his eight Books, that what he advances is new (29). Judge, then, whether this might not be a powerful Motive to induce him to arrogate such a Work to himself. Upon the whole, Eutocius defends him but ill; and his best Justification is the Silence of Pappus, his Censor, and a Censor not a little prejudiced against him. Observe too, that Pappus not only does not accuse him of Plagiarism, but expressly allows him to be the true Author of the eight Books of Conic Sections, though he pretends, that Euclid had wrote four Books on the same Subject before (30). He defends Euclid, against Apollonius, who had remarked, that this famous Geometrician had succeeded very indifferently in a certain Point. He excuses Euclid, by what Apollonius himself had acknowledged; to wit, that, before the Discoveries of Apollonius, it was impossible to treat clearly on this Subject; the Principles made use of before not being sufficient. He pretends, that Euclid, being very good-natured, and modest, had confined himself to the Discoveries of Aristeus, in relation to Conics, without either overthrowing, or improving, what the other had begun; and that he had stop'd, where he found them incapable of carrying him farther; but that he was cautious of saying, that this was the Point of Perfection; for he had been to blame in that (31). Note, by the way, that this demonstrates the Fallacious of Heraclius's Pretension, that Archimedes was the first, who wrote concerning Conics. Vossius has taken no notice of the (12) Ex Vossio de Scient. Mathem. pag. 434.

(13) Cl. Rich. Pref. in Apollon. sect. 11.

(14) Tres Conicorum libros Claudii Mordorgii - - nova methodo ex Apollonianis fontibus & proprio ingenio apposite digestos. Claud. Rich. ubi supra.

(15) Id. ib.

(16) Ab Jeronimo Lunsdorff, in libro de Romana curia. See Borelli, in his Preface.

(17) Abraham Ecchellenfis, in Prefat. versionis Apollon.

(18) The 5th, 6th, and 7th of Apollonius' Conic Sections.

(19) Merjennus Prefat. in Apollonii Conicis, quæ sunt in ejus cunctis Mathemat.

(20) See Vossius de Scient. Mathem. pag. 55.

(21) Id. ib.

(22) Borellus, in Prefat.

(23) Abraham Ecchellenfis, in Prefat.

(24) Id. ib.

(25) Baillet's Life of Des Cartes, Tom. 2. pag. 39.

(26) Id. ib. pag. 101.

(27) Heraclius, in vita Archimedis apud Eutocium, iustit. Comment. in Apollonii Conica.

(28) Eutocius, ibid. See Claud. Richardus, Prefat. ad Apollon. sect. 7.

(29) See the Letter of Apollonius to Eutocius, in the beginning of his 8th Book. See likewise his Letter to Archimedes, at the beginning of the 4th Book.

(30) Pappus in Prolegomenis, lib. 7. Mathematic. Collect.

(31) You will find the Words of Pappus, in the Remark of the Article of ARI-STEUS, the Geometrician.

who was the Messenger, who presented the second Book of the Conic Sections to the Person, to whom the Author had dedicated it (c). The Arabians have discovered great Ignorance in Chronology, with regard to Apollonius [E]. Mr Moreri has been guilty of many Blunders on this Head [F].

(c) Apollon. Epist. Deucat. lib. 2.
apud Euto-cium.

the Proofs, which overthrow this Pretension. He observes, as something in justification of Heraclius, that Archimedes sometimes refers to a Treatise of Comes; and That in a Style, which he generally makes use of, in referring to his own Writings (32). He adds, that Guido Ubaldis has proved, against Euto-cius, that Archimedes was not ignorant, that Cones may be cut by Planes differently inclined to the Side of the Cone (33). But how does this prove the Point in Question? We may allow, that Archimedes had wrote an excellent Treatise of Conic Sections; but does this imply, that no one before him had treated of this Matter, or that this Work was stolen by the Plagiarist Apollonius?

(32) Vossius,
de Scient.
Mathem. in Addendis,
pag. 434.

(33) Initio Commenta-rii in Secundum Isophras-tum Archimedis.

[E] The Arabians have discovered great Ignorance in Chronology, with regard to Apollonius. They have said, that he lived in the time of Abaz, King of Judeab, and that his Writings on Conic Sections induced Euclid to write on that Subject a long time after (34). This is so strange a Mistake, that it is surprizing Ec-chellenfis treats it with so much Lenity. He seems unwilling to say, that the Arabian Author was mistaken; he only says, that this Chronology is very wide of the common Account. "In his long vide-tur discrepare Gregorius à communi Chronologo-rum sententia & opinione, qui Apollonium flori-scisse scribunt anno periodi Julianæ 4474 — dis-crepat præterea ab istidem Chronologis in ætate Euclidis, quem Apollonio juniorem agnoscit, ubi illi eum collocant in anno periodi Julianæ 4430 (35).
— In this Gregory seems to differ widely from the common Sentiment and Opinion of Chronologers, who write, that Apollonius flourished in the Year 4474, of the Julian Period. — He differs likewise from the same Chronologers, in relation to the Age of Euclid, whom he supposes to be later than Apollonius; whereas they place him in the 4430th Year of the Julian Period." Ecchellenfis leaves us, as it were, at Liberty, to chuse between these two Opinions: He would have done better, to have determined, that the Arabian Author was mistaken; for this is most certain. And observe, that his Error is not a Difference of some few Years; Abaz began to reign in the Year 3970 of the Julian Period. Ptolemy Evergetes, in whose time Apol-lonius flourished, succeeded the King, his Father, in the Year 4468, of the same Period. The mistake,

(34) Grego-
rius Barhebraeus, lib. 3.
Chronico-
rum in Achaz,
apud Abrah.
Ecchellen-sem Præsit.
in Apollon.

(35) Ecche-lenf. ibid.

then, is very great, since it includes a Difference of about five Centuries.

[F] Mr Moreri has been guilty of many Blunders on this Head. I. He has, simply and absolutely, given our Apollonius the Surname of the Great Geometrician; whereas he should have used a Restriction, and contented himself with saying, that his Cotemporaries called him so, on account of his Skill in Conics. This is precisely what Eutocius of Asiatic says of him (36). II. Moreri pretends, that this Surname is the same with that of Κεῖνός; which is a great Mistake, treat it as favourable as you please; for, in short, the Apollonius, who had the Surname of Κεῖνός, was not the Geometrician; he was born at Cyrene (37), and never had any Reputation (38). III. Euto-cius does not treat of Heraclius's Book of the Life of Archimedes; he cites it only. IV. To say, That we have the Treatise of Cones, Conicorum, translated by John Baptista de Mesmes, is to be guilty of a Barbarism, and tends to persuade the Reader, that this John Baptista translated the whole Work; whereas he translated only the four first Books. V. It is not true, that Men of Learning know, that these (39) four first Books of Apollonius belong to Euclid of Megara (40). VI. No one has said, that Apollonius was the Disciple of Eubulides, a Scholar of Euclid; and it is not probable, that he ever was; since Eubulides applied himself almost wholly to the Sophistry of Logic, and never taught in Alexandria, where our Apollonius studied under the Disciples of Euclid. VII. After having said, that Euclid is the true Author of the four first Books of Apollonius, ought he to add, that this Author wrote Commentaries on the four first Books of That Philosopher's Comics? What Confusion, or rather what Contradictions are here! VIII. It is not true, that Goliut translated the fifth, sixth, and seventh Books of Apollonius: out of Arabic into Latin. Mr Moreri, who affirms it, is without Excuse, since he had read in Plinius no more than this; viz. that Goliut had brought these three Arabic Books from the Levant, and that the Mathematics would soon be much indebted to him, especially when these three Books should be printed (41). IX. The Apollonius, who was the Master of Diodorus, is not the same with him, who is the Subject of this Article. Two more of Mr Moreri's Errors may be seen above (42).

(36) Euto-cium, introductio Comen-tarij in Conica Apollonii.
Hæc. lib. 1. ubi
est Testimony of *Eu-
clidi*, lib. 6.
Mathematicarum Præconium.

(37) Strabo,
lib. 17. pag.
576.

(38) Id. lib.
14. p. 453.

(39) Note, that Moreri
has said nothing, to which these can relate.

(40) See Dio-genes Laërti, 2. n. 1114.

(41) Vossius,
de Scient.
Mathemat.
c. 16. p. 55.

(42) In Remark [B], Citation (9)
and (10).

APOLLONIUS Tyanaus, was One of the most Extraordinary Persons, that ever appeared in the World. I had resolved to make a very long Article of him; but, having seen That, which Mr de Tillemont has already given us, I thought it better to employ my time in other Enquiries, than to take a great deal of Pains to say nothing, but what he has said before me, or only to copy him. His Book will pass through more Hands, than this, and every one will more readily consult Him, than My Dictionary. It will be sufficient therefore to advertise my Reader, That, in the second Volume of his Works (a), he will find a full and exact Collection of what most remarkably concerns Apollonius Tyanaus. However, if but for Form's sake, let me observe, That he was born at Tyana, in Cappadocia, towards the beginning of the First Century; That, at Sixteen Years of Age, he set up for a rigid Observer of the Rules of Pythagoras, renouncing Wine, Women, and all manner of Flesh, wearing no Shoes, letting his Hair grow at full length, and clothing himself only in Linnen (b); that, a little while after, he set up for a Reformer; that he fixed his Residence in a Temple of Esculapius, whither many sick Persons resorted to be cured by Him; that, being come to Age, he gave part of his Estate to his elder Brother; that he distributed another part to his poor Relations, and kept but a very small Share to himself; That he lived six Years without speaking a Word; that, notwithstanding, during this Silence, he quelled several Seditions [A], in Cilicia, and Pamphilia (c):

(a) It was the third City of Pamphylia.

(b) Quintil.
Declamat.
12. The French have a Proverb, that a hungry Belly has no Ear. The Ancients had said another.
See Enfmus's Chiridi. Venter non habet aures. Cato began an Oration with these Words, Ardum est
ad ventrem
verba facere, qui careat
auribus. —
It is difficult to persuade the Belly, which has no Ear.
The Basilisks
was to appease the People, who demanded
Corn.

(c) Pag. 200.
Edit. of Brussels.

(b) Philostr.
in Vita Apollon. l. 1.

[A] That, notwithstanding, during this Silence, he quelled several Seditions. That, which he put a stop to at Aspenda (1), was the most difficult to appease, because the Business was to make those hearken to Reason, whom Famine had driven to Revolt, sames me-gisra peccandi, durissima necessitatem (2). The Cause of this Commotion was, some rich Mens having engrossed the Corn, which occasioned an extraordinary

Scarcity in the City. Apollonius stopped this popular Commotion, without speaking one Word. Was there ever a more eloquent, active, and persuasive Silence known! His Talent was very different from That of the Person, whom Virgil describes.

Tum pietate gravem ac meritis si forte virum quem
Confexere, silent, arreclisque auribus assant :
Ille

- (c) Ibid. Phibia (c) : That he travelled, and turned Legislator; that he pretended to understand all Languages, without ever having learned them; to know the Thoughts of Men (d), and to explain the Oracles, which Birds delivered by chirping (e); that he condemned Dancing, and other Diversions of that kind; that he recommended Works of Charity (f); that he travelled over almost all the Countries of the World (g); that, at Cadix, he prevailed with the Intendant of the Country to revolt against Nero (h) [B], and that he died at a very great Age, without it's being certainly known where, or in what manner (i). His Life has been fully related by Philoftratus [C]. It contains no doubt a Thousand fabulous Relations; but, if the Facts were true, we must not impute them to the Power of Magic. The Pagans very readily opposed the pretended Miracles of this Man to Those of our Saviour [D], and drew a Parallel between them. It is observable, that St Austin confessed, that Apollonius, at the worst, was greatly superior to the Jupiter of the Gentiles (k). It cannot be denied, that this Philosopher received very great Honours, both during his Life, and after his Death [E]; and that his Reputation

(i) In the Reign of Nero, in the Year of our Lord 96, or 97.

(k) See Remark [F]. Citat. 28.

continued

(j) Aeneid. lib. 1. ver. 143.

Ille regit dictis animos ac pectora mulcet (3).

*If then some grave and pious Man appear,
They hush their Noise, and lend a listening Ear.
He soothes with softer Words their angry Mood,
And quenches their innate Desire of Blood.*

DRYDEN.

Such an one must speake, if he hopes to stop the Fury of a mutinous People. Apollonius had no need of Words; his Pythagoric Silence did all that the finest Figures of Oratory could effect.

[B] That, at Cadiz, he prevailed with the Intendant of the Country to revolt against Nero. " Philoftratus, thinks it for his Honour, that he induced the Governor of Cadiz, and the Country about it, to rebel against Nero; nor did the other Philosopher make any more scruple of this than He. [There being no Institution but the Christian Religion, which teaches us to consider Men, not as they are in themselves, but in the Order, wherein God has placed them, nor ever to violate the Fidelity, which has once been sworn to them (4).]" Mr de Tillemont might very well have omitted this moral Reflexion, and indeed the whole Parenthesis. Christianity has certainly the most real and sublime Advantages above all Philosophy; but, as to the Point here in question, I cannot see that it has had any Right, for these thousand Years past, to insult the Philosopher. The Christians, and They, have been pretty even, on this score, for a long time. We may say of this Engagement, Never to violate the Faith, which has once been pledged, what the Poet said of Chastity;

(4) Tillemont, Hist. des Empereurs. Tom. 2. pag. 208.

Credo pudicitiam Saturno rege moratam

In terris, vixerunt diu

Quippe aliam tunc orbe novo colloque recenti

Vivebant homines (5).

(5) Juvenal. Sat. 6. init.

*In Saturn's Reign, at Nature's early Birth,
There was That Thing, call'd Chastity, on Earth.*

*For when the World was bucksome, fresh, and young,
Her Sons were undebauch'd.*

DRYDEN.

It continued no longer than the three first Centuries. Mr de Tillemont observes, that Apollonius used his utmost Endeavours to raise the whole World against the Emperor Domitian (6). He, who wrote this Philosopher's Life, esteems it as an Heroic Exploit in him (7). This Impostor had mimicked the Son of God in several Instances; but, on the Article of Submission and Patience, he pulled off the Mask; and, indeed, there was no room for a Parallel on this Head.

[C] His Life has been fully related by Philoftratus. That which Damis, originally of Nineveh, the most devoted to him of all his Disciples, had composed, was properly no more than Memoirs, and ill enough written (8). They fell into the Hands of the Empress Julia, the Wife of Severus. "She gave them to Philoftratus, who, from them, and by the help of what he could gather from Apollonius himself, and from other Memoirs, composed the History we at present have of Him. He mentions one Maximus of Eges, who had written a Book on Apollonius, and one Marragenes, who had written four Books concerning him; but would have no Credit to be given to the latter (9)." See, in the Remark [I], some other Authors of the Life of Apollonius. As for the Life, which Philoftratus himself composed, it was first printed, in Greek, at Venice, by Aldus Manutius, with the Treatise of Eusebius against Hierocles. This Treatise was rendered into Latin by Zenobius Accianoli. The Life of Apollonius was translated into the same Language by Allemannus Rhinuccius, a Florentine. The Latin Version of these two Pieces, with several Corrections, and small marginal Notes of Gibbert Longolius, was printed at Cologne, in the Year 1532, in 8vo. The Paris Edition of all the Works of Philoftratus, published by Frederick Morel, is better than any of the preceding Editions; but it were to be wished, that some Person well skilled in Greek would correct the Latin Translation; he would find many things in it, which require the Hand of a skilful Operator. See the Remark [J].

(8) Tillemont, pag. 201. ex Philoftr. lib. 1. cap. 3.

[D] The Pagans very readily opposed the pretended Miracles of this Man to Those of our Saviour. We need only read a Work of Eusebius (10) against one Hierocles, a great Enemy of the Gospel, in the Reign of the Emperor Dioclesian. It appears, that Hierocles's Design, in the Treatise, which Eusebius confutes, was to draw a Parallel between JESUS CHRIST and Apollonius Tyannus, and that he gives the Preference to the latter. These Words of Lactantius confirm what I have said. "Item cum fides Jesu Christi mirabilia destrueret, nec tamen negaret, voluit offendere Apollonium vel paria vel etiam majora fecisse (11): — Likewise when he would have overthrown the Miracles of Jesus Christ, he could not deny them, he pretended to show, that Apollonius had wrought the like, or even greater." What Mr de Tillemont has observed is remarkable; " Apollonius, says he (12), by the seeming Innocency of his Life, and his pretended Miracles, was one of the most dangerous Enemies the Church had in it's Infancy. It seemed, according to his own Panegyrics, as if the Devil had sent him into the World, about the same time that Jesus Christ was to appear, either to counter-balance his Authority in the Minds of those, who should take the Illusions of this Magician for real Miracles, or that They, who should discover him to be an arrant Impostor and Magician, might thereby be brought to doubt of the Miracles of Jesus Christ and his Disciples."

[E] Very great Honours, both during his Life, and after his Death. Mr de Tillemont justly reproaches him with not having disclaimed the Style and Title of God, whilst his Followers ascribed to him; and with suffering himself to be adored as a Deity. And if, on certain occasions, he refused to receive Divine Honours in public; it was, says his Historian, for fear of Envy (13). The Inhabitants of Tyana built a Temple to their Apollonius after his Death (14). His Statue was erected in several other Temples (15). The Emperor Adrian collected as many of his Letters as he could, and kept them in his fine Palace of Antium, with a little Book of This Philosopher concerning the Answers he had received from the Oracle of Trophenus. This little Book was to be seen at Antium, during Philoftratus's Life; nor did

(9) Philoftr. lib. 1. cap. 2. & 3. apud Tillemont, ibid.

(10) In the Volume de Demonstration. Evangel. pag. 511.

(11) Lactant. Divinar. Institution. lib. 5. cap. 3.

(12) Tillemont, pag. 200.

(13) Godem's Hist. of the Church, p. 245.

(14) Philoftr. in Apollon. Vita. lib. 2. cap. 2.

(15) Godem's Hist. des Empereurs. pag. 246.

(16) Philoftr. in Apollon. Vita. lib. 2. cap. 2. pag. 376.

(17) Philoftr. in Apollon. Vita. lib. 2. cap. 10. pag. 340. See also lib. 1. c. 15. pag. 25.

(18) Tillemont. Hist. des Empereurs. Tom. 2. p. 216.

(19) Philoftr. lib. 1. cap. 4. p. 6. See also lib. 2. cap. 15.

(20) Vopiscus, in Aurelianus, cap. any 24.

continued as long as Paganism [F]. He left some Works, which have been long since any Curiosity render this small Town so famous as Apollonius's Book (16). Antonius Caracalla had an extraordinary Veneration for Apollonius, and built a Temple to him as to an Hero (17). The Emperor Severus kept the Image of this Philosopher, in a particular Place, in his Palace, among Those of Jesus Christ, Abraham, and the best Princes (18). Aurelian, having resolved to sack Tyana, was prevented by Apollonius's appearing to him in a Vision, and forbidding it; and he not only obeyed this Order of Apollonius, but vowed an Image, a Temple, and a Statue to him. Vopiscus, in relating this, declares himself his Admirer and Votary, with a Promise to write his Life. The Passage, though somewhat long, deserves a Place here; it being almost all of it a Proof of the Text of this Remark. "Taceri non debet res, quæ ad famam venerabilis viri pertinet. Fertur enim Aurelianus de Thyana civitatis eversione vera dixisse, vera cogitasse: verum Apollonium Thyaneum celebrissime fame autoritatisque sapientem, veterem philosophum, amicis cum verum deorum, ipsum etiam pro numine frequentandum, recipienti se in tentorium ea forma, qua videtur, subito altissime, atque hæc Latine, ut homo Pannonius intelligeret, verba dixisse. Aureliane, si vis vincere, nihil est quod de civium meorum nec cogites. Aureliane, si vis imperare, ac crueris innocentium abstinere. Aureliane, clementer te age, si vis vincere. Norat vultum philosophi venerabilis Aurelianus, atque in multis ejus imaginem viderat templis. Denique statim attonitus imaginem et statuas et templum eidem promissit, atque in meliorem rediit mentem. Hæc ego à gravibus viris comperi, et in Ulpia bibliothecæ libris relegi, et pro majestate Apollonii magis credidi. Quid enim illo viro sanctius, venerabilis, antiquius, diviniusque inter homines fuit? Ille mortuus reddidit vitam. Ille multa ultra homines et fecit et dixit, quæ qui vellet nosse, Græcos legat libros, qui de ejus vita conscripti sunt. Ipse autem, si vita suppetat, atque ipse viri favori usquequaque placuit, breviter saltem tanti viri facta in literas mitam: non quo illius viri gesta munere mei sermonis indigeant, sed ut ea, quæ miranda sunt, omnium voce prædicentur (19). ----- We must not omit a Circumstance, which tends to the Honour of this venerable Man. It is related, that Aurelian had come to a Resolution, and had declared his Intention, of demolishing the City of Tyana; but that Apollonius of Tyana, an ancient Philosopher of great Renown and Authority, a true Friend of the Gods, and himself honoured as a Deity, appeared to him in his usual Form, as he retired into his Tent, addressed him thus in Latin, so as to be understood by a Native of Pannonia. Aurelian, if you desire to be victorious, think no more of the Destruction of my Fellow-Citizens. Aurelian, if you desire to rule, abstain from the Blood of the Innocent. Aurelian, if you would conquer, be merciful. Aurelian was acquainted with the Looks of this venerable Philosopher, and had seen his Image in several Temples. In the Suddenness of his Surprise, he vowed to erect a Temple and Statues to him, and altered his Resolution. This Account I have from Men of Credit; and have met with it in Books in the Ulpian Library, and am the more inclined to believe it on account of the Dignity of Apollonius. For was there ever anything among Men more Holy, Venerable, Noble, and Divine, than this Person? He restored Life to the Dead; He did and spoke many Things beyond human Reach; which whoever would be informed of, may meet with Accounts of them in the Greek Histories of his Life. I myself propose to write a short Account of this great Man's Actions, if I live long enough, and this Philosopher himself shall permit me; not that his Actions want the Ornaments of my Words; but that such Wonders, as he performed, may be more generally known." The Words of Lampridius, concerning the manner of the Emperor Severus's Worship, are no less worthy of a place here. He informs us, that, when this Emperor was lately disposed, that is, when he had not lain with his Wife the Night before, he began the Day with Acts of Devotion. He went, early in the Morning, into his Oratory, to practise religious Ceremonies in Honour of the Patrons he had made choice of; of which Apollonius was one. "Ufus vivendi eidem hic fuit: Primum ut, si facultas esset, id est si non cum uxore cubuisset, matutinis horis in larario suo (in quo & divos principes, sed optimos electos & animas sanctiores, in quibus & Apollonium, & quantum scriptor suorum temporum dicit, Christum, Abraham, & Orpheum, & hujusmodi deos habebat, ac majorum effigies) rem divinam faciebat (20) -- The same Emperor's manner of Life was this. First, if he was duly prepared, that is, if he had not lain with his Wife, he performed, early in the Morning, religious Ceremonies, in his Chapel, in which he kept the Effigies of the best Emperors, and of Those, who had been the most remarkable for Sanctity; among which was Apollonius, and, if we may believe the Historian of his own Times, Christ, Abraham, and Orpheus, and the like kind of Gods, together with the Effigies of his Ancestors." Eusebius tells us, that, in his Time, there were Persons, who pretended to Incantments, by invoking the Name of Apollonius (21).

[F] His Reputation continued as long as Paganism. Mr de Tillemont, who denies this, alleges the Testimonies of Lactantius, and Eusebius. "From the beginning of the fourth Century, says he (22), no Person whatever worshipped Apollonius, as a God; though it is pretended, that the Ephesians still continued to reverence his Statue, under the Name of Hercules, but not under his own; because it is certain, that he was no more than a mere Man, and an Impostor." Eusebius affirms, likewise, that, at That Time, scarce any one acknowledged Apollonius as a God, or even as an extraordinary and wonderful Man, but only as a mere Philosopher." Mr de Tillemont cites the third Chapter of the fifth Book of Lactantius, and the Four hundred sixty eighth Page of Eusebius's Treatise against Hierocles. I confess, Lactantius supposes, that no one honoured Apollonius as a God; For he asks, "Cur igitur, o delirum caput, nemo Apollonium pro Deo colit? nisi forte tu solus, illo scilicet Deo dignus, cum quo te in sempiternum verus Deus puniet. ----- Why therefore, O Madman, dost thou not honour Apollonius as a God? Unless, perhaps, Thou alone; a worthy Potary of such a Deity, together with whom The True God will punish you for ever." But he does not deny, what the Author, whom he confutes, had advanced, that a consecrated Statue of Apollonius was still honoured at Ephesus, under the Name of Hercules: "Simulacrum ejus sub Herculeis cultus Alexicaci nomine constitutum ab Ephesiis etiam nunc honorari (23)." He thinks it sufficient, that Apollonius was not honoured under his own, but a borrowed Name; "Ideo alieni nominis titulo affectavit divinitatem, quia suo nec poterat, nec audebat. ----- He, therefore, affected Divinity under a borrowed Name, because he neither could, nor dared, do it under his own." This is more subtle, than solid; for, when the Ephesians consecrated the Statue, they had no other Intention, than to honour Apollonius, and only made use of the Title of Hercules ἀπολλωνιάδου, or Alexicacus, to denote, that Apollonius had delivered them from a Plague. It is probable there was no Artifice in this: Apollonius did not endeavour to conceal himself under a borrowed Name, for fear his own should raise Scruples in the Minds of the People. Here, then, is a fair Testimony produced by Lactantius, in proof of the Worship, which was still paid to our Apollonius, in the beginning of the fourth Century. But, with all the Respect due to this Father of the Church, I cannot persuade myself, that the Inhabitants of Tyana had discontinued their Veneration, or that the Images of Apollonius were removed out of all the Temples (24). I find, in Eusebius, that, in his Time, a Report was spread, that many things were performed, by invoking the Name of Apollonius. Ἀντίχα τὸν οὖν εἰσὶν οἱ ἀπειρηγμένοι μνηστῆρες τῆ τοῦ ἀπολλωνίου ἀνακλιμένης ἀποστολῆς καὶ εὐσεβείας λέγουσιν (25). Neque vero hodie quæque desunt, qui expertos se dicant ejus nomini invocato magicas inesse virtutes, ad superstitionis quædam peragenda. He calls them

(20) Lampridius in Alexandro Severo, c. 29.

(21) In Hierocli. p. 476, 477. apud Tillemont, pag. 220.

(22) Tillemont. ibid.

(23) Lactantius. Divin. Institut. l. 5. c. 3.

(24) See the Preface of Vopiscus, in the foregoing Remark.

(25) Eusebius. In Hierocli. p. 547.

(16) Philostratus ubi supra, lib. 8. cap. 8.

(17) Hierocli. Dio. lib. 77. pag. 878. C. apud Tillemont, pag. 219.

(18) Lampridius. p. 123. apud eundem.

(19) Vopiscus in Aureliano, cap. 24.

since lost [G]. Mention is made of another Philosopher, called likewise Apollonius of Tyana [H], who lived in the Reign of the Emperor Adrian. I know not of what Sect he was; but every one knows, that our Apollonius was a rigid Pythagorean. He made such an open Profession of his Belief of a Metempsychosis, that he caused a Lion to be adored, under pretence, that the Soul of Amasis (l) was united to the Body of That Beast (m). His Life is translated from the Greek of Philostratus (n) into French by Blaise de Vigenere, with a very ample Commentary by Arius Thomas, Lord of Embry, a Parisian. It is not long, since an English Translation of This Life, with

Notes,

(n) The Translation is,
that Fed.
Morel, Re-der, and Interpreter to the King, revised, & d-corrected this Version, exactly, by the Greek Original.
It was printed at Paris, 1611,
in two Vols
in 4to.

(l) A King of Egypt.

(m) Philostr.
lib. 5. c. 15.

(26) Marcell.
lin. ad Augustin. Epist.
III. inter
Augustini Epistolae.

(27) Citation
(2).

(28) August.
Epist. 4. pag.
23.

(29) Id. E-pist. 49. p.
208.

(30) Eunap.
de Vit. Philostrati. Pref.
pag. 11. I make use of Tillemont's Words, Hist.
des Emper.
Tom. 2. p.
22.

them magical or superstitious; but there can be no doubt, that many Pagans took them for real Miracles. I find, in St. Austin, that, in his Time, the Christians were so pressed with the chimerical Parallel between the Miracles of Apollonius, and Those of JESUS CHRIST, and by the ridiculous Pretence, that the first equalled, or even surpassed, the latter, that they had recourse to this great Light of the Church for a Solution of this Difficulty. "Sed tamen etiam ego in hac parte qui PLURIMIS, quicquid rescripseris, PROFUTURUM esse confido, precator accesserim, ut ad ea VIOLANTUS respondere digneris, in quibus nihil amplius Dominum, quam alii homines facere potuerunt, fecisse vel gessisse mentiantur. APOLLONIUM liquidum suum nobis & Apuleium alioquin magice artis homines in medium proferunt, quorum majora contendent extitisse miracula (26)."

----- On this Occasion, I add my Request, that you, whose Reply, whatever it be, will be of use to many, would condescend to exert your utmost Efforts in refuting the false Pretences of these Objectors, who would place the Works of Our Lord on a Level with the Actions of meer Men. For they produce against Him Their APOLLONIUS, and Apuleius, and other Dealers in Magic, whose Miracles they assert to have been greater than His." Then it was, that St. Austin declared, what you have read in the Body of the Article (27), that Apollonius Tyaneus was superior to Jupiter; which, by the way, ought to put some modern Divines to the Blush, who will not allow, that the want of the Knowledge of God was a less Evil, than the Worship of the abominable Pagan Deities, who, in St. Austin's Opinion, were even worse than Magicians. "Quis autem vel risu dignum non putet, quod APOLLONIUM & Apuleium caterosque magicarum artium peritissimos conferre CHRISTO vel etiam præferre conantur, quamquam TOLERABILIUS ferendum sit quando illos ei potius comparent quam Deos suos: multo enim melior, quod fatendum est, Apollonius fuit, quam tot stuprorum actor & perpetrator, quem Jovem nominant (28).----- But who does not think it even Matter of Laughter, that they should pretend to compare APOLLONIUS and Apuleius, and others, skilful in Art Magic, to CHRIST, and even to give them the Preference; though the Comparison of such Persons with CHRIST is more tolerable, than That of their Gods: for we must confess, that Apollonius was much better, than Their Jupiter, as they call him, the Author and Perpetrator of so many Acts of Lewdness." The same Father observes, that "the Pagans, who laughed at the History of Jonas, would have believed a like Adventure to be true, if reported of Apuleius, or Apollonius Tyaneus, or any of Those, to whom they gave the Name of Magicians, or Philosophers." "Si hoc quod de *Jona scriptum est, Apuleius Madurensis, vel Apollonius Tyaneus, fecisse diceretur, quorum multa mira, nullo fidei auctore, jactitant.----- si de istis ut dixi, quos Magos vel Philosophos laudabiter nominant, tale aliquid narraretur, non jam in buccis creparet risus, sed typhus (29). Upon the whole, I find, that, in the beginning of the fifth Century, "Eunapius wrote, that Apollonius was not so much a Philosopher, as something between a God and a Man; and that Philostratus ought to have entitled the History, which he wrote of him, The Descent of a God upon Earth (30). Am I to blame then, in affirming, that Apollonius's Honour continued as long as Paganism?"*

It remains only, that I answer Eusebius's Authority, by which Mr de Tillemont endeavours to support himself. And this is easily done; since it is plain, from the Facts now alleged, that Eusebius gives into an Hyperbole, which has not the least shadow of Truth. How can it be true, that, in Eusebius's Time, no one did Apollonius the Honour to call him a Philosopher, when Ammianus Marcellinus, in the same Century, occasionally speaking of a Fountain, which was near Tyana, failed not to remember Apollonius with this Elogy, "Ubi amplius simus ille Philosophus Apollonius traditur natus (31). "----- Where the most celebrated Philosopher Apollonius is reported have been born." I should chuse, for the Honour of Eusebius, to say, that he was speaking of Philostratus; so that his meaning will be, that it is not necessary to refuse at large the Dreams of Philostratus, since he is an Author of no Repute, and not so much as ranked in the Number of Philosophers. I confess there is some Difficulty in this Explication; but it is plain, that Eusebius's Design was to attack the Phantom of Philostratus, and not the true Apollonius. Does he not declare, that he had always esteemed Apollonius as a learned Man, and allow, that he deserves to be ranked, with all imaginable Honour, among the Philosophers? That he only rejects the fabulous and supernatural Virtues, which Philostratus, and some other Panegyrist, ascribed to him, and that, in direct Opposition to Philostratus, he will shew, that Apollonius, as described by Him, is unworthy to be ranked, not only among the Philosophers, but even among Men of moderate Virtue; So far is he from coming into any Competition with JESUS CHRIST. Μόνον επισημασάμεθα τὴν τῷ φιλοσόφῳ γράφην δι' ἧς εὐ-δυνάμην ὡς ἐχ' ὅτι γε ἐν φιλοσόφοις ἀλλ' ἐν ἐπικείροις καὶ μετριοῖς ἀνδράσιν ἄξιον ἔχκεται, ἐχ' ὅπως τὸ σῶντ' ἡμῶν Χριστὸν παρὰ τὸν Ἀπολλωνίον (32). Unum modo penitus Philostrati historiam, ex hac enim certis rationibus convincemus Apollonium non inter Philosophos locum, ac ne inter medicos quidem ac usitate prohibitis viros dignum sortiri, nedum sit ille Salvatori nostro ratione aliqua conferendus.

[G] He left some Works, which have been long since lost. He wrote four Books of Judicial Astrology (33), and a Treatise On Sacrifices, shewing what was to be offered to each Deity (34). This last Piece became very famous: Eusebius cites it (35): Suidas also mentions it, and adds to it a Testament, a Collection of Oracles and Letters, and The Life of Pythagoras (36). The Theology, of which Eusebius cites a Passage (37), is perhaps the same Piece, with the Treatise On Sacrifices. Apollonius wrote a great Number of Letters, some of which Philostratus has inserted in his History; all of them very short. The Hymn on Memory was not composed by Apollonius, as Mr de Tillemont pretends. He cites the eleventh Chapter of the first Book of Philostratus, pag. 18. I have not met with any such thing, there; but only, that Apollonius, at the Age of an hundred Years, had a better Memory, than Simonides; and that he often sung the Hymn, which Simonides had composed in the praise of Memory. Suidas reports this so confusedly, that he seems to say, that Apollonius composed This Piece. König was deceived by it. See the Forty ninth Page of his Bibliotheca. The Testament, mentioned by Suidas Διαθήκη, is, without doubt, the same Book, which Philostratus cites in these Words: Καὶ Διαθήκαι δὲ τῷ Ἀπολλωνίῳ γεγραμμαι παρ' ἑν ὑπάρχον μαθεῖν ὡς ὑποθεσάων τὴν φιλοσοφίαν ἐγένετο (38). Apollonius wrote likewise some Memoirs, from whence we may learn how rapturously fond he was of Philosophy.

[H] Mention is made of another Philosopher, called likewise Apollonius of Tyana. Suidas is the Author, who mentions him, on the Credit of Agripphon, who wrote a Book concerning Persons of the same Name, περὶ ὁμωνύμων, de homonymis. This brings to my Mind, that a learned Man, whom I have already cited (39),

(31) Amm.
Marcell. lib.
23. cap. 6.
pag. 370.

(32) Euseb.
in Hierocl.
pag. 514.

(33) Plag.
ἀστρολογίας
ἀστρολογίας.
De Dictione Astrorum.
Philstr. in Vita Apoll.
lib. 3. c. 13.

(34) Id. ib.
See likewise
lib. 4. cap. 6.

(35) Euseb.
Prepar. E-
vang. lib. 4.
cap. 13. pag.
150.

(36) Suid. in Ἀπολλωνίῳ
66. p. 376.

(37) Euseb.
Demonstr.
Evang. lib.
3. cap. 3.
pag. 105.

(38) Philo-strat. in Vit.
Apollon. lib.
1. cap. 3.

Notes, gave great Offence to pious Minds [I]. It has been condemned, prohibited, and anathematized, and not without Reason. I take notice of it in my Remarks. Had we what a cotemporary Philosopher, named Euphrates, satirically wrote against Apollonius, we should be furnished with an ample Detail of Scandal; for, when such Rivals once declare War against each other, they bring many Secrets to Light. Philostatus has reason to alledge This Euphrates's Silence, as an Argument to convince those of Calumny, who reproached Apollonius with Unchastity, and boldly to maintain, that Apollonius, even in the Vigour of his Youth, triumphed over Nature, and always lived in a state of strict Continency (o). Sidonius Apollinaris has given us a Description of Apollonius, which represents him as the greatest of Heroes in Philosophy [K]. The Author of this Description does not forget to make his Excuses to the Catholic Church.

(o) Philostr.
lib. in cap. 8.

(37) Mr de Sallio. See Remark [F], of the Article ALLATIcited (39), questions, whether the Ancients wrote any Books, like those of Leo Allatius, de Simeonibus, de Pjellis, &c. He ought not to have questioned it; for, besides Agrestion, we can appeal to Demetrius Magnes. Some learned Men would add Dionysius of Sinope, and Simarilus; but they are mistaken. See the Remark [B], of the Article DEMETRIUS (MAGNES).
US.

[I] An English Translation of this Life, — gave great Offence to pious Minds.] The Author of this Translation proceeded no farther, than the third Book exclusively. If he had done nothing more than translate, there would have been no just Cause of Complaint; but to this Translation he has subjoined a great Number of Annotations, which he borrowed, for the most part, from a Manuscript of the famous Baron Herbert, a great Deist, if we may believe many Persons. They, who have read these Annotations, have assured me, that they are full of Poison; that they tend to destroy Revealed Religion, and to bring the Holy Scriptures into Contempt. The Author does not carry on this Design by Arguments, gravely and seriously proposed, but almost continually by prophane Jest, and little Subtilties; so that it was not without Reason, and Justice, that this Book, which was printed in London, in the Year 1680 (40), was prohibited under severe Penalties. This new Translator of Philostatus was an English Gentleman, whose Name was Charles Blount. In the Year 1693, he published a Treatise, the Title of which was, The Oracles of Reason, and accompanied it with some other small Pieces of the same Stamp. The same Year he died a tragical Death. He was greatly in Love with his Brother's Widow; and pretended, he might marry her without committing Incest; and even wrote a Treatise to prove it; but, seeing no likelihood of obtaining the Church's Consent, he fell into Despair, and killed himself. See the History of the Works of the Learned (41). To return; Mr de Tillemont, speaking of those, who had wrote the Life of Apollonius, stops at Philostatus. Let us advance farther. Nicomachus, who lived in the Reign of Aurelian, wrote the Life of Apollonius, on That, which Philostatus had composed; Tasius Victorianus wrote another upon That of Nicomachus. Sidonius Apollina-

(40) The Title specifies the Year 1680. It must have been concealed for several Years; for it was not condemned 'till 1693.

(41) Memoirs of November, 1693, pag. 135, 136.

(a) Some call him Peter d'Avana.

APONA (a) (PETER of) in Latin PETRUS APONENSIS, or APONUS, one of the most famous Philosophers, and Physicians, of his Times, was born in the Year 1250 (b), in a Village situated four Miles from Padua. He studied a long time at Paris, where he was promoted to the Degrees of Doctor in Philosophy and Physic [A]. I cannot tell whether he died very rich; but I have read

[A] He studied a long time at Paris, where he was promoted to the Degrees of Doctor in Philosophy and Physic.] Naudé takes notice of this, in a Speech, in which he extols the ancient Glory of the University of Paris, as much as possible. Let us produce his Words at length, because they incidently inform us, that Peter of Apona composed That great Work at Paris, which procured him the Appellation of The Reconciler. "Prodeat tandem Petrus Aponensis ab "ignifi libro, quem, dum vestras scholas frequenta- "ret, edidit, Conciliatoris nomen adeptus: Certe "latabat in Italia, nulli propè cognita, nullis aliis "disciplinis, nullis artibus, nedum propriis, exulta, "nulla denique, vel linguarum cognitione, vel Phi- "losophiæ nitore, decorata Medicina; cum ecce tu- "telaris illius genius, ex Aponensis balnei pago, Iris wrote a third, and followed the Plan of Victorianus, rather than That of Nicomachus (42). We read, in Suidas, That Soterichus, a Native of Oxyris in Egypt, had composed the Life of Apollonius. This Author lived in the Reign of Aurelian. I cannot imagine on what Ground Savaron builds, when he reckons Plutarch among those, who had written the Life of our Apollonius (43).

[K] Sidonius Apollinaris has given us a Description of Apollonius, which represents him as the greatest of Heroes in Philosophy.] That every one may judge of this, let us here produce the Words of Sidonius Apollinaris. He had written the Life of Apollonius; and, sending it to a Counsellor of Evarigis, King of the Goths, he addresses him after this manner. "Le- "ge virum (fidei Catholicæ pace præfata) in pluri- "mis similem tui, id est, à divitiis ambitum, nec "divitiis ambientem; cupidum scientiæ, continen- "tem pecuniæ; inter epulas abstinentem, inter pur- "puratos linteatum, inter slabastros censorium: Con- "cretum, hispidum, hirsutum, in medio nationum "delibutarum; atque inter satrapas regum tiarato- "rum myrrhatos, pumicatos, malobatratos, venera- "bili squalore pretiosum. Cumque proprio nihil "esui aut induitui de pecude conferret, regibus ob "hoc, quæ pererravit, non tam suspitioni, quam "fuisse suspectui: & fortuna regum sibi in omnibus "obsecundante, illa tantum beneficia poscentem, "quæ mage sit suctus, oblata præstare, quam sume- "re (44). — Read (by the Catholic Church's Per- "mission) this Life of a Person, in many things not "unlike yourself; that is, one courted by the Rich, "but not courting Riches; covetous of Science, but "moderate in his Desire of Wealth; at Ban- "quets, abstemious; amidst those in Purple, habited "himself in Linnen; amidst sweet Ointments and "Perfumes, a rigid Censor of Manners; amidst a "Race of Pops, rough and unpolished; and amidst "perfumed and smooth Courtiers, valuable for his "venerable Unattire. And, as he was not indebted "to his own Flock either for Food or Raiment, he "was the Admiration, rather than Jealousy, of the "Countries he travelled over; and, having the For- "tunes of Kings ever at his Command, he asked no "other Favours, than such as he was wont rather "to bestow, when offered, than receive."

(42) Ex Sido- doni Apollinaris Epist.
3, lib. 8.

(43) Savaron, in Sidon. A- pollin. pag.
498.

(44) Sidon.
Apollin. E-pist. 3, lib.
8. pag. 486.

(b) Jacobus
Philippus
Tomasinus, Elog. illustr.
Vir. p. 22.

"taliam ab ignorantie barbarie, velut alter Camillus Romam à Gallorum obsequio, liberaturus, di-ligenter inquit, ubinam gentium humaniores literæ felicius excolebantur, Philosophia subtilius traderetur, Medicina purius & solidius edoceretur: cumque recessisset uni Luteriæ hanc laudem deberi, in eam statim involat, illius gremio totum se tradit, Philosophiæ, Medicinæque mysteriis fe-dulo incumbit, gradum & lauream in utraque con-sequitur, utramque postea celebrissime docet, & post diuturnam annorum moram divitiis vestris onustus, imo Philosophus, Medicus, Astrologus, Mathematicus suæ tempestatis præstantissimus, in patriam suam revertitur, & primus omnium Scar-dæoni viri gravissimi judicio, synceram Philoso-phiam, & Medicinam illi restituit. Unde gratitu-5 D "dinis

(c) In Remark [C].

(d) Toma-
sin. Elog.
Vir. Illustr.
P. 24.

that, if he had lived to the End of his Trial, he would have suffered, in Person, what he was sentenced to suffer in Effigie after his Death. We shall relate (c), what his Apologists observe, that His Body, being privately taken out of it's Grave, by his Friends, escaped the Vigilance of the Inquisitors, who would have condemned it to be burnt [D]. He was removed from Place to Place, and at last deposited in St Augustin's Church, without Epitaph, or any other Mark of Honour (d). His Accusers ascribed inconsistent Opinions to him; they charge him with being a Magician, and yet with denying the Existence of Devils [E]. He had such an Antipathy to Milk, that the very seeing any one drink it turned his Stomach (e). He

(e) Merckli-us, in Liberio reno-vato, pag.
879. Erc-herus, in Theatro,
pag. 1203.
He cites
Marcellus Donatus, and Math. de Gradibus.

|| Lib. 1. de
Patientia.
cap. 3.

† Anglerg.
Part II. cap.
21. Quest.
2.

•• Book 4.
chap. 3.

"Heresy by the Inquisition, as one, who opposed the Doctrine of Spiritual Beings. To which may be added, that, upon this account, Baptista Mantuanus || calls him, Virum magnæ, sed nimium audacis temerariæque doctrinæ. — One, whose Doctrine was great, but too bold and rash; That Cosmannus † reckons him in the Number of those, who ascribed all Miracles to Nature, and that le Loyer affirms, in his Apparitions , that he laughed at Sorcerers, and their Nocturnal Meetings: Whence one would wonder, why the same Authors reckon him frequently among the Enchanters and Magicians; if it were not the Prædile of those, who write on such Subjects, so to swell their Books, by copying all they find in Authors, that it is with Difficulty they observe the Precept of the Poet;

(15) Horat.
Ars Poet.

Primo ne medium, medio ne discrepet inum (15).

All should be uniform and of a Piece.

After this, his Apologist declares, That " he can justify him both from the Crimes of Magic and Atheism, " as well by the Testimony, which the illustrious and religious Frederick, Duke of Urbino, " has been pleased to give to his Merit, by placing " his Statue among those of the famous Men, which " are to be seen in his Citadel; as also by the public Attestation of the City of Padua, which has " set up his Effigies over the Gate of it's Town- " house, with those of Livy, Albertus, and Julius Paulus, and with this Inscription on the Base. " Petrus Aponus Patavinus Philosophiæ Medicinæ- " que scientissimus, ob idque Conciliatoris nomen " adeptus; Astrologiæ vero adeo peritus, ut in Ma- " gicæ suspicionem incidere, falsoque de hæresi po- " tuitatus, absolutus fuerit (16). — Petrus Aponus of Padua, very learned in Philosophy and Physics; whence he had the Name of The Reconciler; " and so expert in Astrology, that he was suspected " of Magic, and being accused of Heresy, was acquit- " ted. — But, adds be (17), fully to expose the " Fallhood of these Objections, we may reply to " what Ludwigus †† has said of the seven Spirits, " which taught him the seven Liberal Arts, that this " fabulous Report took it's Rise from what the " same Peter of Apona ||| affirms, after Albumazar, " that the Prayers, which are made to God, when " the Moon is in Conjunction with Jupiter, in " the Head of the Dragon, are readily heard; " and that, having requested for himself, (to use his " own Terms) sapientiam à primo, visus est sibi in illa amplius proficere. Upon which account, many " Authors justly deride him for so indifferently dis- " owning all his Watchings and Labours, and for " ascribing his Knowledge wholly to the Superstition of this Prayer; which cannot but be vain, and fruitless, in whatever Sense it be taken. For " if you say, it is addressed to the Planets, it is gross " Stupidity to believe, that they can hear it; if to " God, I would willingly know, whether he was " deaf before this Conjunction, or whether he " will not hear our Prayers without it, or whether " it can force and necessitate him to condescend " to the Petitions, which are then made to him. And " hence it is, that John Picus ††, speaking of this " new Solomon, had reason to say, Consulere Petro isti ut totum quod profecit suæ potius industria ingenioque acceptum referret, quam Jovis illi suæ supplicationi. — I would advise this " Peter to confess himself indebted, for all his Know- " ledge, to his own Industry and Genius, rather than " to this Planetary Prayer. It may be said, likewise, " in answer to the Proofs, which are brought for the (16) This Inscription is in Tomasin,

in Elog. II.
Illustr. viror.
pag. 23.

(17) Naudé
ubi supra,
pag. 388.

†† Dæmo-nomagie,
Quest. 16.

||| Differentia CLVI.

II Lib. 4. advers. Astrolog. cap.
8.

" three Books, published under his Name, that " they are no less falsely ascribed to him, than many " others are to almost all other great Wits; witness " Tribemius's * not allowing them to be genuine, " on account of the many Fables, which have been " forged, in relation to this Author; and his having " said before, in his Catalogue of Ecclesiastical Wri- " ters, that he did not believe what was said of " the Magic Art of Petrus Aponensis, because he " had never seen any Book of his on this Subject. " If to this you will farther add the Silence of " all the Librarians, and the Confirmation, which " Symphorian Champier † gives to this Autho- " rity of Tribemius, when he affirms, that he had " never seen any of his magical Books, excepting " only some Disputations, in which he treats of it " incidentally; I believe nothing can prevent our ac- " knowledging his Innocence, and supposing, with " the better Sort, that all the Suspicions of Magic Art, " which have been thrown upon him, proceed, as " from their true Spring and Origin, from the Power, " which he attributes to it, in the CLVI Disputa- " tion of his Conciliator, and from the Predictions, " which he might make by Virtue of Astrology; " on which, by Length of Time, All These Fables " and Chimeras have been grafted; according to " the true Observation of Propertius.

Omnia post obitum pingit majora vetustas *.

Time magnifies each Object, after Death.

Remark the following Errors of Mr de Clavigni de Sainte Honorine. He pretends, that the Effigies of Peter of Apona, made by Order of the Duke of Urbino, stands in the Market-Place of Padua, with Those of Livy, Albertus, and Julius Paulus, and that the Inscription contains Astrologiæ adeo peritus, ut in magicæ suspicionem venerit (18). I. The Statue, under which these Words are inscribed, is not in the Market-Place of Padua, but over one of the Gates of the Town-house. In Una Portarum Prætorii Patavini (19). II. The Statue, which the Duke of Urbino caused to be erected, was not set up in Padua, but in the Castle of This Duke. III. The Words, which Mr de Clavigni mentions, are not on it's Pedestal. See TOMASINI (20).

[D] The Inquisitors, who would have condemned his Body to be burnt. Peter of Apona, being accused of Magic and Heresy, died during his Trial, and was buried in the Church of St Anthony. All the Zealots were scandalized at it: The Inquisitors continued the Process, and, having convicted him, by his Writings, of Impiety, they condemned his Body to the Flames; but, when they could not find it, they ordered his Effigies to be publicly burnt. This is what we read in Spondanus (21). But how can we reconcile this with the Inscription, which the Magistrates of Padua caused to be put under the Statue of This Physician, and in which they declare, that he was acquitted. Petrus Romanus reports, that the Inquisitors, having publicly read the Sentence of Condemnation against Peter of Apona, caused his Effigies to be burnt. He observes likewise, that they could not find his Body; his Concubine Mariette having privately taken him out of his Grave by Night, and hid him a ruinous Sepulchre (23).

[E] They charged him with being a Magician, and yet with denying the Existence of Devils. We have seen (24) what Advantage his Apologist makes of this Contradiction; but he ought to have taken notice, that Bodin ranks Peter of Apona among those Sorcerers, who, to elude judicial Proceedings, maintain, that all that is said of Devils, and Magic, is a Chimera. Bodin declares, that he wrote his Book pali, lib. 1.

* Anti-
cap. 3.

† Tractat.
4. lib. de claris Medicinæ Scriptoribus.

* Eleg. 2.
lib. 3.

(18) Clavi-
gni de St.
Honorine, Lecturæ des livres suspects, pag.
101, 102.

(19) Tomas.
Elog. Viror.
Illustr. pag.
23.

(20) Ibid.

(21) Spon-danus An-
nal. Ecclesi.
ad ann.
1516, n. 8.
Hæres Scar-
deon. Hist.
Patavinæ,
lib. 2, class.
9.

(23) St Ro-manni, Journal Chronol.
& Histori-que. Decem-
b. 31.
He cites Bernard Scarde-on.

(24) In Re-
mark [C].

died in the Year 1316, in the Sixty sixth Year of his Age [F]. One of his principal Books was That, to which he gave the Title of Conciliator. They tell a very ridiculous Story of him; namely, that, having no Well in his own House, and a Neighbour forbidding his Servant Maid to fetch any more Water at His Well; he caused the Devils to remove his Neighbour's Well into the Street (f). He had much better have employed his Devils in making a Well to his own House, and stopping up his Neighbour's, or at least in removing his Neighbour's Well into his own Yard, rather than into the Street.

(f) Tomaso Garfani, Piazza universale di tutte le Professioni, discorso 135 fol. 365. verio.

(2) Bodin's Preface to his Demonomanie des Sorciers, pag. 5. See also chap. 5. pag. 71.

(16) Tomadini, in E-log. Viror. pag. 22.

(27) Paulus Frcher. in Theatro, pag. 209.

of the Demonomania of Sorcerers, among other Reasons, "to serve as an Answer to those, who endeavour, by printed Books, as far as possible, to excuse Sorcerers; inasmuch that it seems as if they were influenced by the Devil himself, to publish these fine Books; such was Peter of Apona, a Physician, who endeavoured to demonstrate, that there were no Spirits; and yet it was afterwards affirmed, that he was one of the greatest Sorcerers of Italy (25)."

[F] He died in the Year 1316, in the Sixty sixth Year of his Age.] So we read, in an Inscription mentioned by Tomadini (26). If this be true, it must be confessed, that Naudé is mistaken, when he says, that Peter of Apona, being accused at the Age of eighty Years, died in the Year 1305. Frederus says the same thing, upon the Authority of Bernardin Sardon (27). Let us observe, likewise, that Gesner is mistaken in making Peter of Apona flourish in the Year 1320 (28). König has copied This Error (29). But Father Rapin is much more grossly mistaken than any of them, when he places him in the sixteenth Century. "Peter of Apona, says he (30), a Physician of Padua, who flourished under Clement VII, debauched his Imagination so far by reading the Arabian Philosophers, and by too frequent poring on the Astrology of Alfraganus, that he was put into the Inquiry on Suspicion of Magic." Vossius has followed Gesner, and makes an Observation, which deserves to be considered. He says, that Peter of Apona lent his Book de Medicina omnimoda to Pope John XXII, who was elected in the Year 1316, and held the Chair seventeen Years (31). By this we know the Age of This Physician. But, if the Year 1316 was That of his Death, the Conclusion is not just, nor does it acquit Vossius of an Error.

(28) Gesner, in Biblioth. fol. 544.

(29) König, Bibl. vet. & nova, pag. 49.

(30) Rapin, Reflex. sur la Philosophie, n. 28. pag. 360.

(31) Vossius, de Scient. Mathem. pag. 181.

APROSIO (ANGELICO) born at Vintimiglia, on the River of Genoa, the Twenty ninth of October 1607, was well esteemed among the Learned, and wrote a great Number of Books. His Family produced several learned Men (a). He was but Fifteen Years of Age, when he entered himself in the Order of the Augustins; where his Abilities procured him the Office of Vicar-General of the Congregation of our Lady of Consolation at Genoa (b). When he had finished his Studies, he was thought sufficiently qualified to teach others; accordingly he taught Philosophy for Five Years, and afterwards travelled into several Parts of Italy; and, in the Year 1639, fixed his Residence at Venice, in St Stephen's Convent, where he taught polite Literature (c). One thing, which contributed very much to his Renown, was the Bibliothèque of the Augustins of Vintimiglia, which was intirely his own Work, and a singular Proof of his Love of Books, and the Care he took to understand them thoroughly (d). He published a Book concerning this Bibliothèque, which is much esteemed by the Curious (A). Besides he took great Pleasure in disguising himself under fictitious Names in the Front of his Works. Perhaps he durst not write, in his own Name, on Matters so little conformable to a Religious Life, as the Con-

(a) See the following Article.

(b) Michel Iustiniani, Scrittori Liguri, pag. 63.

(c) Philippus Elsius, in Encomiasticis Augustinianis, apud Iustinianum, pag. 67.

(d) Raffaell, opere, li. critici della Liguria, pag. 21.

[A] He published a Book concerning this Bibliothèque, which is much esteemed by the Curious.] Mr Morhof had heard much talk of this Book, but did not know, that it was printed. He mentions it in several Parts of his Polybistor (1), published in the Year 1688; but always as one, who believed, that this Piece had not yet appeared from the Press. It is, nevertheless, certain, that the Bibliotheca Aprosiana was printed at Bologna, in the Year 1673; and that Martin Fogelius (2), Professor at Hamburg, had a Copy of it, as Mr Morhof might have seen in the Catalogue of That Professor's Books; for he cites this Catalogue (3), which was printed in the Year 1678. This is what Placcius observes in his Invitatio Amica, published at Hamburg, in the Year 1689. He adds, that he has mentioned this Work of Aprosio among his Pseudonymous Pieces (4), and refers us to the Annotations on the Catalogue of Rhodi (5). In Effect, he informs us, in the One hundred and fiftieth Page of his Pseudonymous Pieces, that he was informed, by a Letter from Mr Magliabecchi to Martin Fogelius, that Aprosio, disguised under the Name of Cornelio Aprosio Antivigilini traxi i Vagabondi di Tabbia detto L'Aggirato, had published a Book in 12mo, in the Year 1673, intitled Bibliotheca Aprosiana, passa tempo Autennale. In the Annotations on the Catalogue of Rhodi, there is a Doubt raised on what Scavenius had said, that Aprosio had composed a Book entituled, Bibliotheca Apocryphorum, in which he re-ferred many Pieces to their true Authors (6). The Reason of this Doubt is, that the Book, intitled Bibliotheca Apocryphorum, is not to be found in the Catalogues of the Works of Aprosio, but only the Bibliotheca Aprosiana. Now it is supposed, that Scavenius might, by a natural Mistake, metamorphose Aprosio into Apocrypha. It is something strange, that Father

Oldoini has not mentioned the Bibliotheca Aprosiana, passa tempo Autennale, since he did not publish his Athenaeum Ligusticum till the Year 1680. It is true, he places the Bibliotheca Aprosiana & Antiquitates Abintimillenses among the Works of Aprosio; but in such a manner, as to persuade us, that this Work had never been printed. Mr Teiffier, in the Year 1686, leaves more room for doubt, than for deciding any thing in this Matter (7). Mr Morhof observes, that Mr Leti quotes an Author, who has cited the second Volume of the Bibliotheca Aprosiana. "Pro-ducit Idem Leti, ex Abbate Libanoro, pag. 379, locum quo tomus secundus Bibliothecae Aprosianae citatur, quo multi continentur ab Hieron. Savanorola manuscripti libri (8).—The same Leti produces a Passage, from the Abbot Libanorus, p. 379, where the second Volume of the Bibliotheca Aprosiana is cited, in which are contained many manuscript Works of Jerome Savanorola."

This Citation of Leti is very just; and for this, and other Reasons, I am strongly persuaded, that Morhof does not alledge the Italia regnante on the Credit of others, but that he had read it himself. How comes it, then, that he does not know, that the Bibliotheca Aprosiana was printed at Bologna, by the Manoleffi, in the Year 1673, in 12mo? Does not Mr Leti positively affirm it, in the Three hundred seventy seventh Page of the fourth Part of his Italia regnante, and does he not cite sufficiently long Passages out of This Work of Aprosio? He adds, that the Author, having carried on the Relation of his own Life as far as the Two hundred sixty second Page, mentions afterwards, to Page 666, several Authors, who had given in their Works to him (9); and that this first Volume contains only the Writers, whose Names begin either with the Letters A, B, or C.

(7) Catalog. Auct. Bibliothecae, pag. 18.

(8) Morhof, Polybist. pag. 38.

(9) Narrando la sua vita con l'inserto varie curiosità intorno ad A. m. i. suoi. Leti, Ital. Reg. Parte 1v. pag. 38.

tests between the Wits about the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini [B], or such like Matters [C]. Or, perhaps, he was naturally fond of inventing different Allusions, and in puzzling those, who are eager to unmask a disguised Author. He loved this Employ well enough himself [D]. Be that as it will, if you consult the Authors, who have given us a Catalogue of the Ligurian Writers (e), you will find, by the Titles of his Works, that he gives himself an hundred fictitious Names, sometimes That of Mafoto Galifioni, sometimes That of Carlo Galifioni, sometimes That of Scipio Glareano, sometimes That of Sapricio Saprici, and at other times That of Oldauro Scioppio, &c. His Life is to be met with in the Work intituled Biblioteca Aprosiana. Several Authors have given him great Commendations; and some perhaps have exceeded the Bounds of Reason (f). He was admitted, among other Academies, into That of the Incogniti of Venice; as appears by the Book [E] intituled, Le Glorie de gli Incogniti, ovvero gli Huomini illustri dell' Accademia de' i Signori Incogniti di Venetia; — The Glory of The Incogniti, or the Illustrious Men of the Academy of the Incogniti at Venice; where his Elogy appears at large. He was living in the Year 1680, when Oldaini published his Albenaum Lygisticum.

He believes, that the following Volumes will speedily be printed; but he had been assured, that the second was not; from whence he concludes, that Father Libanori, who quotes it, had only seen it in Manuscript (10). This Work of Mr Leti was printed in the Year 1676.

[B] He durst not write in his own Name — concerning the Contests between the Wits about the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini.] The Cavalier Stigliani, having published the Book of the Obiale, or The Spectacle, which is a severe Censure of the Adonis, found himself attacked on all sides (11). It appeared plainly, upon this Occasion, how much Italy was infatuated with the Adonis: They run to this Controversy as it were to put out a Fire: But, among the many Persons, who took Pen in Hand in Defence of the Cavalier Marini, none showed more Zeal for the Adonis, nor more Heat against the Enemies of That Poem, than Father Aprolo de Vinimiglia, Hermit of St Augustin (12). He published the Ochiale Stritolato di Scipio Glareano per risposta al Signor Cavalier Frà Tomafo Stigliani (13). — — — La Sferza poetica di Sapricio Saprici, lo Scantonato Accademico Heteroclitico, per risposta alla prima censura dell' Adone del Cavalier Marino, fatta dal Cavalier Tomafo Stigliani (14). — Del Veratro, Apologia di Sapricio Saprici, per risposta alla seconda censura dell' Adone del Cavalier Marino, fatta dal Cavalier Frà Tomafo Stigliani. — The Spectacles broke to pieces of Scipio Glareano, in Answer to Father Thomafo Stigliani. — The Poetical Whip of Sapricio Saprici, in Answer to the Censure of the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, made by the Cavalier Tomafo Stigliani. — Helibore &c. An Apology of Sapricio Saprici, in Answer to a second Censure of the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, made by the Cavalier Tomafo Stigliani. This Work is divided into two Treatises (15); it was Helibore given in two Doses. He had wrote against the same Stigliani, Il Vaglio Critico di Maloto Galifioni da Terama sopra il mondo nuovo del Cavalier Frà Tomafo Stigliani da Matera (16). — Il Burato, Replica di Carlo Galifioni al Molino del Sig. Carlo Stigliani (17). — The Poetical Sieve &c. and The Bolting-Cloth &c.

Observe, that Mafoto Galifioni da Terama is the Anagram of Tomafo Stigliani da Matera, and that, instead of putting in the Title in Trivigi per Girolamo Rigbetti, it is put in Rosbach per Willerno Wallop, because this Rigbetti was a Bookseller of small Repute. Aprolo mentions this in the Hundred and twelfth and Hundred and thirteenth Pages of the Biblioteca Aprosiana (18).

[C] Or such like Matters.] I do not think, that the Disputes, concerning the Adonis of the Cavalier Marini, were more foreign to a Monastic Profession, than the following Works. Annotationi di Oldauro Scioppio all' Arte degli Amanti dell' Illustissimo Signor Pietro Michele Nobile Veneto (19). — Lo Scudo di Rinaldo, ovvero lo specchio del disinganno, Opera di Scipio Glareano (20). — Le Bellezze della Belia Tragedia dell' Illustissimo Signor D. Antonio Mucettola, abbozzate da Oldauro Scioppio Accademico Incognito, Geniale, &c. (21). — Annotations of Oldauro Scioppio on The Art of Love of the most Illustrious Signor Peter Michael, a Noble Venetian — The Shield of Rinaldo, or the Undeceiving Mirror, by Scipio Glareano. — A Sketch of the Beauties of Belia, a Tragedy composed by the most Illustrious Signor D. Antonio Mucettola, by Oldauro Scioppio, of the Academy of the Incogniti, Geniales &c. There are several such like Compositions among the Manuscript Writings of Angelico Aprolo. But it must not be dissembled, first, That there are also among them the Lectures, which he read on the Prophet Jonas, in the Church of our Lady of Consolation at Genoa, in the Year 1649, and 1650 (22). Secondly, That, in the Year 1643, he published the Italian Translation, which he had made, of the Spanish Sermons of Augustin Oforius, under the Name of Oldauro Scioppio.

[D] He loved this Employ well enough himself.] It is not altogether without Reason, that Stavenius relates, that Aprolo had wrote a Work, intituled, Biblioteca Apocryphorum, in which he restored several Works to their true Authors; for two Pieces are attributed to him; one under the Title of La visiera alzata Necatasse di alcuni Scrittori che andarono in Maschera fuori del tempo di Carnevale, — The Visor pulled off from certain Authors, who appeared in Masquerade out of the Time of the Carnival; the other, which is only a Sequel of the foregoing, is called Pentecoste di alcuni Autori anonimi di pseudonimi, scoperiti per Mantiffa della Necatasse della visiera alzata, — The Pentecost of certain Anonymous or Pseudonymous Authors, discovered by Mantiffa della Necatasse in The Visor pulled off. Father Oldaini does not inform us, whether these two Pieces were printed, or no; he only says, that Aprolo wrote them under a borrowed Name; and by what he quotes in the following Page, La visiera alzata, evulgata sub nomine Friani Forbotta, — The Visor pulled off, published under the Name of Friani Forbotta; we cannot conclude, that they were printed; for he plainly shews, that this Forbotta is a different Person from Angelico Aprolo (23). It cannot reasonably be doubted, that the two Pieces, which he attributes to our Aprolo, are the same with those mentioned in the Journal of Leipsic (24). They were printed at Parma in 1689. The Name, which appears in the Front, is John Peter Villani, de Sienne, Academicien Humorisfe, Infecund, & Genialis. It appears, that they were dedicated, in the Year 1678, to Messieurs Magliabecchi.

[E] As appears by the Book.] It was printed at Venice in the Year 1647, in 4to. Father Labbe believed, that John Francis Loredano was the Author of it (25); but others are of a contrary Opinion, for this among other Reasons, that the Elogy of Loredano in this Book is too pompous to be attributed to Loredano himself (26). It is thought, that the Veries at the beginning of this Work, and which do not congratulate Loredano, as the Author of it, but as the Founder of the Academy of The Incogniti, were the Cause of Father Labbe's Error.

(c) Raffael Sopran, & Michel Justiniani in 1660. Augustin Oldaini in 1650.

(f) Magnifica ejus & plene invigilanda Eligia adferuntur à Gregorio Leti, Italia agnate, part. 4. l. b. 3. pag. 377. Morhof Polyhist. p. 38. See also pag. 144.

(21) Printed at Lovano or Loano, in 1664.

(22) Sopran, Scrittori della Liguria, pag. 23.

(23) Ololonus, in Appen. Athen. Liguist.

(24) July, 1689, pag. 353.

(25) Labbe's Biblioth. Bibliothecar. pag. 118. Edit. 1678.

(26) Placcius de Anonym. pag. 115. See in the same Volume the Catal. gus of Rhodius, pag. 23, 26.

APROSIO (PAULO AUGUSTINO) a Lawyer, and Member of the Academy of the Apatisti at Florence, was born, at Vinimiglia, of one of the chief Families of the Town, and which can boast of having produced Nine Doctors of Law, and One of Physic, from the beginning of the XVIIth Century to the Year 1667. He, whom I here mention, having studied under the Jesuits, at Genoa, went to Rome, to study the Law. He was admitted Doctor there, in the Year 1449, and afterwards returned home, bought a Collection of curious Books, and retired to a Country House, that he might the more quietly enjoy the Pleasure of reading and composing. He wrote Annotations on the Belfa of D. Antonio Muscetola, which were printed with the Bellezze delle medezima abbozzate da Oldauro Scoppio, in the Year 1664. When Soprani, from whom I borrow this Article, published his Catalogue of the Ligurian Writers, in 1667, our Aprosio was preparing a large Moral Treatise, concerning the Overthrow of Capital Vices by their opposite Virtues (a). Oldoini informs me, that this Work was printed at Genoa, in the Year 1674, and dedicated to the Prince of Monaco.

(2) Strage de Vitti capitali trionfati dalle Virtù op-poite.

APULEIUS (LUCIUS) a Platonic Philosopher, publicly known by the famous Work of the Golden Ass, lived in the II^d Century under the Antonines [A]. He was a Native of Madaura, a Roman Colony in Africa [B]. His Family was considerable [C]. He had been well educated, and had a graceful Person; he had Wit, and Learning; but was suspected of Magic; an Infamy, which to this day does great Injury to his Memory. He studied, first at Carthage, then at Athens; and afterwards

[A] Lived in the second Century under the Antonines (1). Peter Pithæus rejecting all Those, who say, that Apuleius lived after Theodosius, proves, that he lived about the time of Antoninus Pius, and some time after (2). This Opinion is supported by such good Reasons, that it is generally embraced. It is plain, that Scipio Orphitius, Lollianus Avitus, Claudius Maximus, and Lollius Urbicius, of whom Apuleius speaks, as Persons then alive, lived under the Antonines. Father Norris is mistaken in his Criticism on Elmenhorst; he charges him with having acknowledged his Ignorance as to the Time when Apuleius lived (3), and refers him to two Passages of Apuleius's Apology; in one of which Antoninus is not filed Divus, and in the other mention is made of the Proconsul Lollianus Avitus, who was Consul in the Year 144. The Omission of Divus is a sufficient Proof, that Antoninus was yet living. Father Norris would not have been so much mistaken, if the Author, whom he criticises, had not expressed himself as follows: "Quo anno natus (Apuleius) non liquido liquet. Verisimiliter tamen postsumus adferere eum temporibus Antonini Pii Divorumque fratrum vixisse. Meminit enim Lolliani Aviti, Lollii Urbicii Pudentis, & Scipionis Orphiti, Coss. qui sub Antonino præcipue flourerunt, summis macti honoribus, ut constat ex L. 3. ff. de his qui testamentis, &c. L. 3. ff. de Decurion (4). --- WHEN Apuleius lived, is not certainly known; yet it is probable, it was in the times of Antonius Pius, and his Brothers, who preceded him. For he mentions the Consuls, Lollianus Avitus *, Lollius Urbicius Pudentis †, and Scipio Orphitius ‡, who flourished chiefly under Antoninus, having been advanced to the greatest Honours, as appears from L. 3. de his qui testamentis, &c." The Passage, in which Antoninus is not filed Divus, contains the Reproaches, which Apuleius made to his Wife's Son, on his exposing his Mother's Love-Letters. "Hucusque à vobis miserum istum puerum depravatam, ut matris suæ epistolâs, quas putat amatorias, pro tribunali Proconsulis recitet apud virum sanctissimum Claudium Maximum, ante has Imperatoris Pii statuas filius matris suæ pudenda exprobrat flupara, & amores obijcet (5). --- So far has this wretched Youth been spoiled by you, that he has not been ashamed to recite his Mother's Love-Letters before the Proconsul's Tribunal, in the hearing of the venerable Claudius Maximus, and even to reproach her with her Amours before these Statues of the Emperor Antoninus Pius." Jonsius is doubly mistaken, when, in order to prove, that Apuleius lived in the time, which I assign him, he says, that our Philosopher gives the Elogy of Divus Antoninus Pius (6). The Fact is false; and the Consequence drawn from it inconclusive.

(1) Pithæus,
Advers. lib.
2. cap. 10.

(2) Norris,
Cenotaph.
Pisan. p. 33.

(4) Elmenh.
in Vita A-
pul. ii.

* Apolog.
pag. 23.
Capitolin.
Antonino
27.

† Apolog.
pag. 274.
Capitolin.
Pertinace
74.

‡ Floridor.
Apuleii, p.
357. 358.

(5) Apul.
Apolog. pag.
267.

(6) Jons. de Script. Hist.
Phil. p. 267.

(7) Apul. A-
pul. pag. 289.

[B] He was a Native of Madaura, a Roman Colony in Africa. This Town, which had belonged to Syphax, was given by the Romans to Massinissa. "Neque hoc eo dixi, quo me patriæ meæ penitente, et adhuc Syphacis oppidum effemus: quo tamen victo, ad Massinissam regem concessimus, munere populi Romani, ac deinceps veteranorum militum novo conditu splendidissima colonia sumus (7). --- My Meaning is not, that I should have been ashamed of my Country, though

"we had still continued a Town belonging to Syphax; after whose Defeat, however, we fell under the Power of King Massinissa, by Gift of the Roman People, and at last became a most flourishing Colony." A little before, he had said, that he was not ashamed, like Cyrus, to partake of two different Nations. "De patria mea vero, quod eam sitam Numidiæ & Gætulæ in ipso consilio meis scriptis ostendisti, quibus memet professus sum --- Seminudiâ, & Semigætulâ, non video quid mihi sit in ea re pudendum, laud minus quam Cyro majori, quod genere mixto fuit, Semimedus ac Semipersa. --- As for the Place of my Birth, which you have shewn to have been situated on the very confines of Numidia and Gætulia, from my own Writings, in which I profess myself a Semi-Numidian and a Semi-Gætulian; I cannot see, why I have any more reason to be ashamed of it, than Cyrus the Elder had of being of a mixed Race, half a Mede, and half a Persian." A certain Author, who pretended to let up for a general Censor, towards the end of the sixteenth Century, falls here into our Hands. After having said, that Lucian, under the pretended Form of an Ass, teaches a thousand Impurities he adds, "Apuleius hunc imitatus, ut vir Græcusc se Latine necivisse ingenue confessus, in Asino aureo plane rudis (8). --- Apuleius, imitating this Writer, and ingeniously confessing, that, being a Greek, he was ignorant of the Latin Tongue, downright brays in his Golden Ass." First of all, it is not true, that Apuleius confesses he does not understand Latin: He only says, I. That he did not understand it upon his first Arrival at Rome. II. That he learnt it without a Master. In the second Place, it is not true, that he was a Greek. Madaura was a Roman Colony; and, when he would justify himself by the Example of other Poets, he cites the Greeks as Strangers, and the Latins as his Countrymen. "Fecere tamen et alii talia, & --- apud Græcos Tejus quidam --- A P U D N O s vero, Æditi, & Portius, & Catulus (9). --- Others have done the like, and --- A Teian Poet among the Greeks --- but among our own Writers, Æditi, & Portius, and Catulus, &c." The Truth is, the Latin Tongue was not common at Madaura. Apuleius, the Son of one of the chief Magistrates, understood nothing of it, when he came to Rome. The Son of his Wife Pudentilla understood only the Carthaginian, and a little Greek, which his Mother, who was originally of Thebais, had taught him. Loquitur nunquam nisi Pantic, & si quid adduc à matre græciffat: Latine enim quæ vult neque potest (10).

[C] His Family was considerable. His Father's Name was Thefeus. These Words are our only Authority. "Si, contentus laræ parvulo, Thefei illius cognominis Patris tui virtutes æmulaveris (11). --- If, satisfied with a moderate support, you shall emulate the Virtues of your Father Thefeus." He had exercised the Office of Duumvir at Madaura. It was the first Dignity of a Colony. "In qua colonia patrem habui loco principe Duumviralem cunctis honoribus perfectum (12). --- In which Colony, I had a Father, who, having gone through all inferior Offices, arrived to the Dignity of Duumvir, the principal Post of Honour." His Mother, who

(3) Claudius Verderius, in Audorea
pene omnes Censura,
pag. 73.
This Book was printed at Lyons in 1586.

(7) Apolog.
pag. 278.

(10) Ibid.
pag. 336.

(11) Apul.
Metamorph.
lib. 1. pag.
112.

(12) Id. A-
pul. pag. 289.

wards at Rome [D]; where he acquired the Latin Tongue without any Assistance: An insatiable Curiosity to know every thing induced him to make several Voyages, and enter himself in several Religious Fraternities [E]. He would see the bottom of their

(13) Id. Metam. lib. 2. p. 815. whose Name was Salvia (13), was originally of Thebes, and descended from the Family of Plutarch. He says this himself, at the beginning of his Romance. St. Austin had heard, that Apuleius was of a good Family, as appears from his fifth Letter. See, below, the Remark [E]. Citation (18).

[D] He studied, first at Carthage, then at Athens; and afterwards at Rome. This Gradation is a secret to those, who stop at the Prologue of his Romance; since he makes no mention there of Carthage. He is satisfied with saying, that his first Studies were Those of the Greek Tongue in Greece, and that afterwards he came to Rome, where he studied Latin, without the Assistance of a Master. "Ibi linguam Attidem primis pueritiæ stipendiis merui, mox in urbe Latia advena studiorum Quiritium indigenam sermonem ærumnabili labore, nullo magistro præunte, agressus excolui." This Narration is deceitful, and imperfect, and must be rectified by other Passages of Apuleius. Is it at all surprizing, that Authors should relate the Actions of others imperfectly? Do they not sometimes report their own very confusedly? Let us produce other Passages of our Author. He tells the Carthaginians, that, in his Infancy, he studied with them, and that he had begun, likewise, to embrace the Platonic Sect among Them. "Sum vobis nec lare alienus, nec pueritia inuistatus, nec magistris peregrinus, nec secta incognitus. . . . E-nimvero & pueritia apud vos, & magistri vos, & secta, licet Athenis Atticis confirmata, tamen hic inchoata est (14). . . . I am no Stranger to you, either as to my Family, my Education, or my Opinions. . . . For my Childhood was spent among you; you were my Instructors; and the Sect, of which I am a follower, though confirmed in it at Athens, was first embraced by me here." To which he adds; "Hanc ego vobis mercedem, Carthaginenses, ubique gentium dependo, pro disciplinis quas in pueritiâ sum apud vos adeptus. Ubique enim me vestra civitas alumnus fero (15). . . . This Acknowledgment, O Carthaginians, wherever I am, I pay you, in return for that Instruction I acquired among you: I every where acknowledge myself the Pupil of your State." Some Pages after, he reckons up the Sciences he had studied at Athens. "Prima cratera Litteratoris rudimentum eximit: Secunda Grammatici doctrinâ instruit: Tertia Rhetoris eloquentiâ armat. Hactenus à plerisque que potatur. Ego & alias crateras Athenis bibi; Poeticæ commentum, Geometricæ limpidam, Musicæ dulcem, Dialecticæ austerulam, enimvero universæ philosophiæ inexplibilem, scilicet nectaream (16). . . . The first Cup of Knowledge, which we drink at the Hands of our Preceptors, removes entire Ignorance; the second infuses Grammatical Learning; the third arms us with the Eloquence of the Rhetorician. Thus far many drink. But I drank of still more Cups at Athens, the fabulous of Poetry, the limpid of Geometry, the sweet of Music, the unpleasant of Logic; indeed the never satiating, and truly nectarous, Cup of universal Philosophy." Some will have it, that he studied, at two several times, in Greece; the first time, before he studied at Carthage, and the second after his Studies in That City. They take no notice of Rome; they pretend, that he acquired the Latin Tongue at Carthage (17): This latter Fact is expressly contradicted in the Prologue to the Golden Ass.

[E] And enter himself in several Religious Fraternities. He introduces himself speaking the following Words, in the third Book of the Golden Ass. "Paveo & formido solide domus hujus opera detegere, & arcana dominæ meæ revelare secreta. Sed melius de te doctrinæque tua præsumo, qui præter generosam natalium dignitatem, præter sublimis ingenium, sacris pluribus initiatus, profecto non sanctam silentii fidem (18). . . . I dread to make a full Discovery of the Practices of this Fraternity, and to reveal the Secrets of my Mistress. But I have a better Opinion of you, and your Learning, who, besides an high Birth, and elevated Genius, know how to guard a Secret inviolably, having "been yourself initiated in many Mysteries." He concludes his Romance with an account of his Admission into the Religion of Osiris. This Honour was conferred on him at Rome. He did not continue long among the Herd of the Initiated, he soon raised himself to the highest Degrees. "Denique per dies admodum paucos, Deus Deum magnorum potior, & majorum summus, & summorum maximus, & maximorum regnator, Osiris, non in alienam quampiam personam reformatus, sed coram suo illo venerando me dignatus affamine, per quietem præcipere visus est. . . . Ac, ne lacris suis gregi cætero permixtus deservirem, in collegium me Pato-phorum suorum, imo inter ipsos Decurionum quinquennales, elegit. . . . Lastly, in a very few Days after, Osiris, the greatest of the Gods, appeared to me in a Dream, not in a borrowed Shape, but in his own venerable Person. . . . And, that I might not administer his Sacred Rites, amidst the Herd of his Volaries, he chose me into the College of his Pato-phori, and even appointed me one of his Decuriones" Before his Arrival at Rome, he had been initiated into the Mysteries of Isis; these were the first Fruits of his recovered Humanity. In the Descriptions of these Ceremonies he intermixes several sublime Sentiments, which are only worthy of the true Religion. As for Example: "Te jam nunc obsequio religionis nostræ dedica, & ministerii jugum subi voluntarium, nam, cum cæperis Deæ servire, tunc magis senties fructum tuæ libertatis (19). . . . Dedicate yourself immediately to the Obedience of our Religion, and take upon you the voluntary Yoke of Ministering in it; for, when you shall begin to serve our Goddess, you will be the more sensible of the Fruit of your own Liberty." They, who accused him of Magic, objected, among other things, that he kept something, I know not what, in a Handkerchief, with a singular Superstition. His Answer was: "Vin dicam cujusmodi illas res in sudario obvolutas laribus Pontiani commendarim? Mos tibi geretur. Sacrorum pleraque initia in Græcia participavi. Eorum quædam signa & monumenta tradita mihi à sacerdotibus sedulo conservo. Nihil insolitum, nihil incognitum dico. Vel unius Liberi patris symmisæ, qui adestis, scitis quid domi conditum celetis, & absque omnibus profanis tacite venerimini. At ego, ut dixi, multijuga sacra, & plurimos ritus, varias ceremonias, studio veri, & officio erga Deos, didici. Nec hoc ad tempus compono, sed abhinc ferme triennium est, cum primis diebus, quibus Oçam veneram, publice differens de Æsculapii majestate, eadem ista præ me tuli, & quot sacra nossem percenſui. Ea disputatio celebratissima est, vulgo legitur, in omnium manibus versatur. . . . Etiamne cuiquam mirum videri potest, cui sit ulla memoria religionis, hominem tot mysteriis Deum concium, quædam sacrorum crepundia domi adservare, atque ea lineo vela involvere, quod purissimum est rebus divinis velamentum (20). . . . Shall I tell you what kind of Things, wrapt up in an Handkerchief, I have entrusted with the House of Pontianus? you shall be satisfied. I was initiated into several sacred Rites in Greece. Some Tokens and Remembrances of them, delivered me by the Priests, I carefully preserve. What I say, is no uncommon, or unknown, Practice. I need go no farther, than you, ye Volaries of Bacchus, who are here present; who are conscious of what you keep concealed at Home, and adore in private, without any Proprobation. But I, as I have already said, prompted by a Love of Truth, and out of Duty to the Gods, have learned the Mysteries of different Religions, and been initiated in various Rites and Ceremonies. Nor is this a new-invented Apology; for it is now almost three Years, since, in a public Oration on the Majesty of Æsculapius, on the first Day of my Arrive at Oça, I made the same Declaration, and reckoned up how many Religions I had been initiated in. This Disputation is very famous, is commonly read, and is in every one's Hands. . . . And can any

(14) Apul. Floridior. pag. 359.

(15) Id. ib. pag. 351.

(16) Id. ib. pag. 363.

(17) He passed the first Years of his Childhood in Greece, and the following at Carthage, where he learnt Latin without a Master. He likewise began to learn Philosophy there. Afterwards he went to Athens, where he studied Poetry, &c. Tillmont, Hist. des Empereurs. Tom. 2. pag. 722.

(18) Apuleii Metam. lib. 11. p. 264.

(19) Apol. p. 309. 310.

(20) Id. ib. pag. 312.

their pretended Mysteries. He spent almost all his Estate in travelling [F], in-much, that, being returned to Rome, and having a Desire to dedicate himself to the Service of Osiris, he wanted Money to defray the Expence of the Ceremonies of his Reception. He pawned even his Cloaths to make up the necessary Sum (a).
After this he gained his Livelihood by Pleading: And, as he was eloquent, and subtle enough, he did not want Causes; some of which were very considerable (b).
But he improved his Fortunes much more by a lucky Marriage, than by Pleading.
A Widow, whose Name was Pudentilla, neither young nor fair, but who stood in need of a Husband, and had a good Estate, thought him for her Purpose [G]. He

(b) *Quæ res summum peregrinationi meæ tri-buebat solatium, nec minus etiam viduum uberi-oribus subministrabat.
Quidni?
Spiritus faventis even-tus quæsticulo forensi nutrito, per patrocinia sermonis Romani...*
quam nunc incontanter gloriosa in foro redderem patroci-
nia. *Apul.
Metam. lib.
11. par. 272.
Edit. Elmen-horstii 1621. in 8vo.*

was

"one be surprized, who has any Remembrance of "Religion, that a Man, acquainted with so many "Mysteries of the Gods, should lay up at Home some "few sacred Trinkets, and conceal them in a Piece of "Linnen, which is the purest covering for Divine "Things." It is probable, that, if Apuleius was a Magician, his Crime was incomparably less, than That of the Magicians of these Times; because he was ignorant, that only bad Genii apply themselves to certain Operations, in consequence of the Performance of certain Ceremonies. He believed, with the

(21) See *St
Austin's Disputation against the Opinion of Apuleius, in the 8th Book
de Civitate Dei, cap. 19.
and the following.*

(22) *August.
Epist. 5.*

(23) *Apuleii Floridor.
pag. 361.*

(24) *Apuleius, Metam.
lib. 11. pag.
271.*

(25) Ibid.

Platonists, that good Genii might do the same (21).
I have quoted St Austin, in the Text of this Article, who testifies, that Apuleius had a religious Dignity, which gave him the Superintendence of the Gladiatorial Shews. *Sacerdos Provinciæ pro
magno fuit, ut munera ederet, venatoresque vestiret* (22). Lastly, I find, that our Author had dedicated himself to the Worship of Æsculapius, one of the chief Divinities of the Carthaginians, and that he had also an eminent Station in His College. "Principium mihi apud vestras aureis au"spiciatissimum ab Æsculapio Deo capiam, qui
"arceam vestræ Carthaginis indubitabili numine pro-
"pitius respicit. Ejus Dei hymnum Græco & La"tino carmine vobis sic canam, jam illi à me de-"dicatum. Sum enim mihi ignotus illius SACRI-"COLA, nec recens cultor, nec ingratus ANTI-"STES (23). ----- I shall bespeak your favour"able Attention, by reciting an Hymn in Greek and "Latin Verse, which I have just dedicated to the "God Æsculapius, the tutelar Divinity of the Citadel
"of your Carthage. For I am no unknown SACRI-"FICER of This God, no recent Worshipper, nor
"ungrateful MASTER of his CEREMONIES."

[F] He spent almost all his Estate in travelling.]
This was not the only Cause of the Poverty, into which he fell; he was expensive upon more commendable Occasions; at least he pretended to have been so, when he replied to those, who reproached him with his Poverty. "Ad istum modum desponsus sacris,
"sumptuum tenuitate contra votum meum retardabar:
"nam & viculæ patronii peregrinationis attri-
"vant impensæ (24). ----- Thus betrothed to Religi"on, I was unwillingly retarded by the Narrowness of "my Circumstances; for the Expences of travelling had "weakened the little Strength of my Patrimony." Thus he speaks, when he represents the Difficulties he laboured under at Rome, in relation to his Admission into the Fraternity of Osiris. He had mortgaged himself, as it were, to this mysterious Congregation;
he had given his Note of hand; but, as nothing is ever done for nothing, something was to be paid for the Inaugural Ceremonies; and he had not wherewithal to supply the Expence. He was forced, as one may say, to sell his very Shirt; the Divinity, which inspired him, pointed out no other Resource. "Jam-
"que sepulcre non fine magna turbatione stimulus,
"postremo jussus, veste ipsa mea quamvis parvula
"distracta, sufficientem coram summulam, & idipsum
"præceptum fuerat specialiter. An tu, inquit, si
"quam rem voluptati fruendæ molieris, lacinia
"tuis nequaquam parceres, nunc tantas ceremonias
"adituras impendendæ te pauperiei contaris com-"mittere (25). ----- Being often prompted, not without great Emotion of Mind, and at last commanded,
"I scraped together, by making Money of my very "Cloaths, mean as they were, a sufficient Sum; for "this was particularly required of me. What! says
"he, would you not spare your Fringes, if you were
"in pursuit of your Pleasures, and are you unwilling,
"when you are to be initiated into such Ceremonies,
"to encounter a Poverty not to be repented of?" At that time he ascribed his Indigence only to the Ex-pences of his Travels; but, on another occasion, which I have mentioned, he says he was at great Ex-pences in good Works, such as assisting his Friends, rewarding the Care of those, who had instructed him, and portioning some of their Daughters. He adds, that he should have made no Difficulty to purchase, at the Price of his Patrimony, a thorough Contempt of it; a Contempt, which is a much more valuable Treasure, than a Patrimony itself. This is speaking like a Philosopher indeed. "Si tamen nefcis, be ad"dresses himself to his Accuser (26), profiteor mihi ac

"fratri meo relictum à patre H. S. vices, paulo se-
"cus; idque à me longa peregrinatione, & diutinis
"studiis, & crebris liberalitibus modice imminu-
"tum. Nam & amicorum plerique opem tuli, &
"magistris plurimis gratiam reuli, quorundam etiam
"filias dote auxi. Neque enim dubitassim equidem
"vel universum patrimonium impendere, ut adquire-
"rem mihi, quod majus est, contemptum patrimonii.
"If you know it not, I assure you, that my Father
"left my Brother and myself an Hundred thousand
"Sesterces, or little less; which I have something
"diminished by my long Travels, continued Studies, "and frequent Bounties. For I have assisted several "of my Friends, and gratified many of my Pre"ceptors; some of whose Daughters I have even "portioned. Nor should I make the least Scruple
"of expending my whole Fortune in acquiring, what "is much more valuable, a Contempt of it." He had made very solid, and very moral, Reflexions on Poverty (27).

[G] A Widow, — neither young, nor fair, but who stood in need of a Husband, and had a good Estate, thought him fit for her Purpose.] Apuleius's Accuser affirmed, she was sixty Years of Age (28): He had his Design in it; for his Aim was to prove, that the Passion, she had conceived for the Accused, was not Natural, but the Effect of Magic. Apuleius made it appear (29), that she was not much above forty Years of Age; and that, if she had past fourteen of them in a State of Widowhood, it was not out of any Averse-tion to Matrimony, but from her Father-in-law's opposing it: that, at length, a State of Continency had so far impaired her Health, that the Physicians and Midwives agreed, that the best Remedy for the Diseases, which were the Consequence of it, was Matrimony.
A Lady, to whom such Advice was given, and who had no time to lose, if she desired to make the best use of her teeming Years, wanted not to be constrained by Magic Art to make choice of a Spouse.
This was Apuleius's Argument, and it is of great Force.
"Eo scrupulo liberata, cum à principibus viris in "matrimonium peteretur: decrevit sibi diutius in vi-
"duitate non permanendum. Quippe ut solitudinis
"tædium perpeti posset, tamen ægritudinem cor"poris ferre non poterat. Mulier sancte pudica, tot
"annis viduitatis sine culpa, sine fabula, absetudine
"conjugis torpens, & diutino situ vicerum faucia,
"vitiatâ intus uteri, sæpe ad extremum vite dif-
"crimen doloribus obortis exanimabatur. Medici
"cum obstetricibus consentiebant, penuria matrimo"nii morbum quæsitum. Malum indies augeri, æ"gritudinem ingravescere: dum ætatis aliquid super-
"fuit, nuptiis valetudinem medicandam (30). -----
"This Scruple being removed, and, being courted by "Persons of the biggest Rank, she determined to con"tinue no longer a Widow. For, though she might "have supported the Solitude of a single Life,
"yet the ill State of her Health she could not.
"This Lady, religiously Modest, and pining, during
"so many Years of Widowhood, for want of an Hu"band, was brought almost to Death's Door, through "Pains arising from a stoppage of the Matrix. The "Physicians and Midwives agreed, that the Distemper
"was owing to the Want of an Husband; that it in"creased daily, and gained ground; and that, if she

(26) *Apolog.
pag. 288.*

(27) *Ibid.
pag. 284,
286, 287.*

(28) *Apolog.
p. 317, 330.*

(29) *Ibid.
pag. 330.*

(30) *Ibid.
pag. 318.*

was not coy; nor was he follicitous to keep his fine Person, his Neatnefs [H], his Wit,

W H Y some "made haste, Matrimony might cure her." Some kind of Proceedings are very unfortunate for the Ladies; where several things must necessarily be revealed to a full Audience, which one would wish to conceal, whether owing to natural or moral Infirmary (31). Had it not been for this Trial, Apuleius would never have revealed the Distemper, with which Pudentilla was afflicted, during her Widowhood. However, she had this Satisfaction, that, though she had suffered so much, it was a Proof, that she had not had recourse to the true Remedy. This Consequence was not urged to the Judges; but it was alleged, that she had always lived chastly, and that her Conduct had never been called in question. To return to her Age; there is no doubt, that Apuleius was younger than She; for she had a Son, who had been Apuleius's Companion at Athens (32); but I add, that he did not marry without Hopes of having Issue by her. This he declares, in answer to the Reproach thrown on him, of going into the Country to be married. After having replied, that the Reason of this was to avoid the Expence, which a Wedding in the City would have put them to; he adds, that "the Country is naturally more favourable to Procreation, than the City; and that, to lie down upon the Grass, and under the Shade of Elms, amidst numberless Productions, which spring out of the fruitful Bosom of the Earth, cannot but be lucky to a new married Couple, who desire to have Children." He should have kept this Thought for his Florida, I mean for his rhetorical Declamations, in which he gives a Loofe to the false Flights of his Imagination. This Passage spoils his Apology. It is unworthy of the Judges, before whom he spoke, and of the Cause, which he was pleading. "Immo, si verum velis, uxor ad prolem multo auspiciatus in villa quam in oppido ducitur; in solo uberi, quam in loco sterili; in agri cespite, quam in soli fœce: mater futura in ipso materno si nubat sinu, in fœgete adulta super fecundam glebam. Ver enim sub ulmo marita cubet in ipso gremio tære matris inter soboles herbarum, & propagines vitium, & arborum germina (33)." We shall see hereafter (34), that it was declared in open Court, that Pudentilla was not defamed; and that her Contract of Marriage contained Clauses, which supposed her to be still of teeming Years.

(31) See, below, Remark [I].

(32) Apuleius, Apolog. pag. 320.

(33) Ibid. pag. 329.

(34) In the Remark [I].

(35) Metamorph. lib. 2. pag. 115. See also lib. 1. pag. 112.

(36) Accusamus apud Philosophum Formosum, & tam Græcè quam Latine, pro nefas! differimus. Apolog. p. 275.

[H] His fine Person, his Neatnefs. I shall here give some touches of his Picture. "At illa obtutum in me conversa, En, inquit, sanctissimæ Salviæ matris generosa proles. Sed & cætera corporis in explicabiliter ad regulam congruentia; inenormis proceritas, succulenta gracilitas, rubor temperatus; flavum & inaffectatum capillitium; oculi cæsi quidem, sed vigilantes, & in aspectu micantes prorsus aquilino, quoquo versum floridi; speciosus, & immeditatus incessus (35). — But She, turning her Eyes upon me, said, behold the worthy Son of the most virtuous Salvia; contemplate the just Proportions of his bodily Parts; his proper Stature, his moderate Size, and his healthful Aspect; his yellow, careless, Locks; his Eyes, blue indeed, but lively, and sparkling, like those of an Eagle; lastly, his beautiful and unaffected Gait." His Accusers reproached him with his Beauty (36); his fine Hair; his fine Teeth; and his Looking-glass. He answered to the two first Particulars, that he was sorry the Accusation was false. "Quod utinam tam gravia formæ & facundie crimina vere mihi expromeret! non difficile ei respondissem, quod Homericus Alexander Hectori:

"Οὐτι πρόκληντ' ἐστὶ θεῶν ἑκκυδία δῶξα,
"Ὅσσα κιν αὐτοὶ δῶσιν, ἑκάη δ' ἐκ ἄν τις ἔλασθω.

Munera deum gloriosissima nequaquam aspernanda: Quæ tamen ab ipsis tribui fuenta, multis volentibus non obtinunt.

"Hæc ego de forma respondissem. Præterea, licere etiam Philosophos esse vultu liberali. Pythagoram, qui primum sese Philosophum nuncupavit, eum sui sæculi excellentissima forma fuisse: item Zeno-

VOL. I.

nem. — Sed hæc defensio, ut dixi, aliquamultum à me remota est: cui, præter formæ medicritatem, continuatio etiam literati laboris omnem gratiam corpore deterget, habitudinem tenuat, succum exorbet, colorem obliterat, vigorem debilitat. Capillus ipse, quem isti aperto mendacio ad lenocinium decoris promissum dixere, vides quam non sit amœnus ac delicatus, horrore implexus atque impeditus, stupeo tomento affamilis, & inæqualiter hirtus, & globosus, & congestus: prorsus inenodabilis diutina incuria, non modo comendi, sed saltem expediendi & discriminandi (37). — (37) Ibid. & pag. 276.
"How do I wish, that these heavy Accusations of Beauty and Eloquence were just! I should, without Difficulty, reply, as Paris, in Homer, does to Hector.

— nor thou despise the Charms,
With which a Lover golden Venus arms.
Soft moving Speech, and pleasing outward show,
No Wish can gain them, but the Gods bestow.

P O E T.

"Thus would I reply to the Charge of Beauty. Besides, that even Philosophers are allowed to be of a liberal Aspect; that Pythagoras, who styled himself the first of Philosophers, was the handsomest Man of his Time; and Zeno. — But, as I observed, I am far from pretending to this Apology; since, besides that Nature has bestowed but a moderate Degree of Beauty on me, my continual Application to Study wears off every bodily Grace, and impairs my Constitution. My very Hair, which I am falsely accused of curling, and dressing by way of Ornament, is, as you see, far from being beautiful and delicate; on the contrary, it is perplexed and entangled, like a bundle of Flocks or Tow; and so knotty, thro' long neglect of combing, and even of disentangling, as never to be reduced to Order." As to the third Particular, he did not deny his having sent a Powder for the Teeth to a Friend, together with some Verses, containing an exact Description of the Effects of the Powder. He alleged, that All, especially they, who spoke in public, ought to be particularly careful to keep their Mouths clean. This was a fine Field for Defence, and for turning his Adversary into ridicule; though, in all Probability, he had given occasion enough for Censure, by too great an Affectation of distinguishing himself from other learned Men. Observe with how much Ease some Causes are defended, though the Defendant be a little in the wrong. "Vidi ego dudum vix risum quoddam tenenteis, cum mundiciis oris videlicet orator ille aspere accusaret, & dentificium tanta indignatione pronuntiaret, quanta nemo quisquam venenum. Quidni? crimen haud contemnendum Philosopho, nihil in se sordidum finire, nihil uspiam corporis apertum immundum pati ac fœtulentum; præsertim os, cuius in propulso & conspicuo usus homini creberrimus: five ille cuiuspiam osculum ferat, seu cum cuiquam fermocinetur, five in auditorio differet, five in templo preces alleget. Omnem quippe hominis actum fermo prærit: qui, ut ait Poeta præcipuus, è dentium morbo proficitur (38). (38) Ibid. pag. 277.
"I observed, that some could scarce forbear laughing, when our Orator angrily accused me of keeping my Mouth clean, and pronounced the Word Tooth-Powder with as much Indignation, as any one ever pronounced the Word Poison. But, surely, it is not beneath a Philosopher to study Cleanliness, and to let no part of the Body, which is seen, be nasty, or of an ill savour; especially the Mouth, the use of which is the most frequent and conspicuous; whether a Man kisses another, or converses, or speaks in public, or says his Prayers in a Temple. For Speech is previous to every Action of a Man, and, as an excellent Poet says, proceeds from the Wall of the Teeth." We may make the same Observation upon the last Head of his Accusation. It is no Crime in a Doctor, of what Faculty soever, to have a Looking-glass; but, if he consults it too often in dressing himself, he is justly liable to Censure. Morality, in Apuleius's Time, was much stricter, than at present, as to external Behaviour; for he durst not avow his making use of his Looking-glass. He maintains, that

Wit, and his Eloquence for some young Girl; he married the rich Widow, cheerfully, at a Country-house near Oëa, a Maritime Town of Africa. This Marriage drew upon him a troublesome Law-Suit: The Relations of this Lady's two Sons pretended he had made use of Magic, to possess himself of her Heart and Money [I]: They that he might do it, and proves it by several Philosophical Reasons; which, to say the truth, are much more ingenious, than judiciously applied; but he denies, that he really consulted his Looking-glass. "Sequitur de speculo longa illa & censoria oratio, de quo pro rei atrocitate pene disruptus est Pudens, clamitans, Habet speculum philosophus, possidet speculum philosophus. Ut igitur habere concedam, ne aliquid objecisse te credas, si negaro, non tamen ex eo me accipi necesse est, exornari quoque ad speculum solere. — Plurimis rebus possessu careo, usu fruor: quod si neque habere utendi argumentum est, neque non utendi non habere, & speculi non tam possessio culpatur quam inspectio, illud etiam doceat necesse est quando & quibus præsentibus in speculum inspexerim, quoniam, ut res est, majus piaculum decernis speculum philosopho, quam Cereris mundum profano videre (39). — Next follows the long and bitter Harangue about the Looking-glass; in which, so venomous is the Crime, Pudens almost burst himself with bawling out, A Philosopher has a Looking-glass, A Philosopher is in possession of a Looking-glass. Suppose I should confess that I have, that you may not believe there is really something in your Objection, if I should deny it; it does not follow from hence, that I must necessarily make a Practice of dressing myself at it. — In many things, I want the Possession, but enjoy the Use of them. Now, if neither to have a thing be a Proof, that it is made use of, nor the want of it of the contrary; and, as I am not blamed for possessing, but for making use of, a Looking-glass; it is incumbent upon him to prove farther, at what Time, and in the Presence of whom, I made use of it; since you determine it to be a greater Crime in a Philosopher to see a Looking-glass, than for the Prophanes to behold the Attire of Ceres."

Read Juvenal's Invektive against the Emperor Otto, who reckoned his Looking-glass as one of the principal Parts of his Equipage of War.

Ille tenet speculum pathici gestamen Othonis,
Astoris Aurunci spoliis: quo se ille videbat
Armatus, cum jam tolli vexilla juberet.
Res memoranda novis annalibus, atque recenti
Historia, Speculum civilis Sarcina Belli (40).

One holds a Mirror, pathic Otho's Sbeild,
In which he view'd, before he march'd to Field;
Nor Ajax with more Pride his seven-fold Targe did wield.

O noble Subject, for new Annals fit,
In musty Fame's Records unmention'd yet!
A Looking-glass must load th' Imperial Car,
The most important Carriage of the War.

T A T E.

By the way, I cannot but think (though I dare not affirm it) that Apuleius had his Law-suit in view, when, in one of his Speeches, he described the Contest between Apollo and Marfyas. He supposes, that Marfyas begins with praising his own bushy Hair, his squalid Beard, and hairy Breast; and then reproaches Apollo with extream Neatness: "Marfias, quod stultitiae maximum specimen est, non intelligens se deridiculo haberi, priusquam tibi acciperet inflare, prius de se & Apolline quædam deliramenta barbare effutivit; laudens sese quod erat & coma relicinus, & barba squalidus, & pectore hirsutus, & arte tibiens, & fortuna egenus; contra Apollinem, ridiculum dictu, adversis virtutibus culpabat. Quod Apollo efficit & coma intonsus, & genis gratus, & corpore glabellus, & arte multificus, & fortuna opulentus. — Riserit Mufæ, cum audirent hoc genus crimina, sapienti exoptanda, Apollini objectata (41), & tibiensum illum certamine superatum, velut ursum bipedem, corio execto nudis & laceris visciferibus relinquerunt (42). — Marfyas, which was the

"the greatest Instance of Folly, not perceiving, that he exposed himself to ridicule, before he began to play upon his Pipe, made an absurd Comparison between Apollo and Himself; praising himself for his bushy Hair, his squalid Beard, his hairy Breast, his Skill in playing on the Pipe, and his Poverty; and absurdly reproaching Apollo with the contrary Virtues. Apollo, he said, had long Hair, a beautiful Face, and a smooth Body; that he was a great Scholar, and very rich. — The Muses laughed, when they heard such Crimes, as a wise Man would wish to be guilty of, objected to Apollo, and left the poor Piper, overcome in the Contest, like some two-footed Bear, mangled and torn, with his Skin stript over his Ears." Observe, that Apuleius affirms, his Accuser was a huge ill favoured Peasant: "Mihi istud crede, quamquam terrerim os tuum minimum à Thyestâ tragico demutet, tamen profecto discendi cupidine speculum inviseris, & aliquid quando relicto aratro mirare tot in facie tui fulcos rugarum. At ego non mirer, si boni confusis me de isto distortissimo vultu tuo dicere, de moribus tuis multo truculentioribus reticere (43). — Take this from me; though That rueful Countenance differs but little from That of Thyestes in the Tragedy; yet would you sometimes, for the sake of Information, visit the Looking-glass; and, leaving the Plow, stand amazed at the many Furrows in your own Face. You will take it in good part, I doubt not, that I mention the Deformities of your Face, but am silent on your more hideous Morals."

[I] Made use of Magic to possess himself of her Heart and Money.] Apuleius had no need of any great Justification, on the first Article; for since Pudentilla, for Reasons of Health, was resolved on a second Marriage, before she had seen this pretended Wizard, Apuleius's Youth, good Mien, fair Speech, Wit, and other Accomplishments, were more than a sufficient Charm to engage this Lady's Affections. He had the most favourable Opportunities of gaining her Esteem; he lodged for some time at her House: Pudentilla's eldest Son would absolutely have it so; and it was He who solicited Apuleius to marry her (44). Apuleius managed his Advantages artfully; and turned his Accusers into ridicule by Smart and surprizing Turns of Wit. "You wonder, said he, that a Woman should marry again, after having been thirteen Years a Widow; it is more surprizing, that she did not marry much sooner. You believe there was need of Witchcraft, to induce a Widow of her Age to marry a young Fellow; whereas, on the contrary, this is a Proof, that Witchcraft was unnecessary." "Cur mulier libera tibi nuptis post annos tredecim viduitatis? quasi non magis mirandum sit quod tot annis non nupserit. — At enim major natu non est juvenem alpernata. Igitur hoc ipsum argumentum est nihil opus magia fuisse, ut nubere vellet mulier viro, vidua cælibi, major juniori (45)." If the Decree of the Judges had been founded on a Sentence pronounced, in nearly a like Case, by the Mother of Alexander the Great, it would have been admirable. "Ο βασιλεὺς φιλιππῶν ἡγε. Θεσσαλίας γυναῖκας ἀρτίαν ἔχουσας κατὰ φαρμακείαν αὐτῶν ἐσπένδατο ἐν ἡ Οὐλυμπιάδι λαβεῖν τὴν ἀνδραπὼν ὑποχείριον. ὡς δὲ εἰς οὐρανὸν ἔλθοσα, τό, τε εἶδ' ὡς ἐντοπὴς ἔειπεν, καὶ δὲ λέχθη πρὸς αὐτῶν ἐκ δένων ὡς ἐδὲ δούνητος, Χαρίτωσαν (εἶπεν ἡ Οὐλυμπιάς) αἱ διαδοχαὶ σὺ γὰρ ἐν σκαυτῇ τὰ φάρμακα ἔχεις (46). — King Philip fell in Love with a Thessalian Lady, who was said to have influenced him by Magic Charms. Olympias contrived to get her into her Power. As soon as she was brought into the Presence of the Queen, and not only appeared very beautiful, but spoke with Modesty and good Sense; away with such Calumnies, cried Olympias; the Magic Charms you employed are all in your own Person. Thus much for the Conquest of the Heart. The other Article, which relates to the Money, begets some Suspicion, not of Witchcraft, but of Avarice. It is hard to believe, that this Marriage was not a Sacrifice to Reasons of Interest. But let us not condemn Apuleius, with-

(39) Ibid. pag. 281, 282.

(40) Juvenal Sat. 2. vcr. 99.

(41) See the Application of this Passage in the Nouvelles de la Republ. des Lettres, Septemb. 1685, Article 7.

(42) Apul. Florida. pag. 341.

(43) Apul. Apol. pag. 284.

(44) Apul. p. 320.

(45) Ibid. pag. 291.

(46) Pharaoh. in Præcept. Conjug. pag. 141. B. See the Remark [L.] of the Article GRANDIER.

(c) His Accuser was called Sici-nianus. He was Brother to Pudentilla's first Husband. Apul. Apolog. init.

They accused him of being a Wizard (c), not before Christian Judges, as a Commentator pretends that St. Austin affirms (d), but before Claudius Maximus, Proconsul of Africa, and by Religion a Pagan. He defended himself with great Vigour: We have his Apology, which he spake before the Judges. It is a very fine Piece (e); and furnishes us with Examples of the most shameful Artifices, that the Villainy of an impudent Calumniator is capable of putting in Practice [K]. It has been ob-

(d) Leon. Coqueus, in August. de Civit. Dei, lib. 8, c. 19, p. 740. Edit. Franc. 1661, in 4to. But he is mistaken. St. Austin says quite the contrary.

(e) Augustin. ubi supra, lib. 18, cap. 18.

(47) Apul. Apolog. pag. 321.

out hearing him. He offers to prove, by his Marriage-Contract, that he had desired nothing of Pudentilla, for the present, but only the promise of a moderate Sum, in case he survived her, or had Children by her. He makes it appear, by several of his Actions, how disinterested his Conduct was, and how reasonable it was to demand That Sum from his Wife, which he had promised him. Here he was obliged to make such Confessions in open Court, as Pudentilla could very well have dispensed with. He says (47), that he was neither fair, nor young, nor in any respect so tempting, as to induce a Man to have recourse to Witchcraft; and that it ought not to be wondered at, that he had given great Encouragement to such a Person as himself was. "Quod institui pergam di-

(48) Apul. pag. 332.

putare, nullam mihi causam fuisse Pudentillam veneficis ad nuptias prolestanti. Formam mulieris et ætatem ipsi ultro exprobraverunt, idque mihi vitio dederunt talem uxorem causa avaritiæ concupisse, atque adeo primo dotem in congressu grandem & uberem rapuisse — Quamquam quis omnium vel exigue rerum peritus culpæ audeat, si mulier vidua & mediocri forma, at non ætate mediocri, nubere volens, longa dote & molli conditione invitasset juvenem neque corpore, neque animo, neque fortuna penitendum. (48). — To go on with my intended Defence; There was no Necessity, that I should have recourse to Magic, to induce Pudentilla to marry me. My Accusers have voluntarily reproached her with Age, and want of Beauty; and have taxed me with Avarice, in desiring such a Woman, and with having obtained from her, upon our first coming together, a large and plentiful Settlement. — Though what Man, of the least Experience, would find fault, that a Widow Lady, of little Beauty, and advanced in Years, who has a mind to marry, should tempt a young Fellow, not contemptible either in Person, Mind, or Fortune, by a large Settlement, and an easy Condition of Life." Pontianus, the Son of Pudentilla, (he tells his Judges) proposed the Marriage of his Mother to him, no otherwise than as an Incumbrance, and as the Act of a Friend and a Philosopher; that is, an Act more becoming a good Friend to Pontianus, and a Philosopher, than the staying for a Match, where he might find both Riches and Beauty. Considerate esse, fore ut id onus recipiam, quoniam non formosa pupilla, sed mediocri facie mater liberorum mihi offeratur. Sin hæc reputans formæ et divitiarum gratia me ad aliam conditionem refererem, neque pro amico neque pro philosopho facturum (49). He magnifies greatly the Advantages of a Maid, above a Widow. "How poor soever a fair Maid is, said he, she brings you a great Dowry, the Flower and first Fruits of her Beauty, an Heart intirely new. It is with great Reason, that all Husbands set so great a value on a Maidenhead; all other Treasures, which a Woman brings, are of such a Nature, that an Husband may restore them back, if he is unwilling to be obliged to his Wife for them; the may withdraw them; she may recover them at Law; Virginity alone cannot be restored, but remains always in Possession of the first Husband. If you marry a Widow, and she leaves you, she carries away all the brought with her; you cannot boast of retaining any thing, which belongs to her." He observes several other Inconveniences in marrying Widows; and concludes, that "Pudentilla would not easily have been married a second time, if she had not met with, in him, the Temper of a Philosopher." Virgo formosa, etsi sit opido pauper, tamen abunde dotata est. Affert quippe ad maritum novam animi indolem, pulchritudinis gratiam, floris rudimentum, Ipsa virginitalis commendatio jure meritoque omnibus maritis acceptissima est. Nam quodcumque aliud in dotem acceperis, potes cum libuit ne si beneficio obstrictus omne ut acceperas retribuere, pecuniam renumerare, mancipia restituere, domo demigrare, prædiis cedere. Sola virginitas cum semel accep-

(49) Ibid. 320.

ta est reddi nequitur: sola apud maritum ex rebus dotalibus remanet. Vidua autem qualis nuptiis venit, talis divortio digreditur. Nihil affert irreversibile, sed venit jam ab alio præforata; certe tibi, ad quæ velis, minime docilis; non minus suspectans novam domam, quam ipsa jam ob unum divortium suspectanda; seu illa morte amisit maritum, ut scavi omnis mulier, et infandi conjugii, minime appetenda; seu repudio digressa est, utramvis habebat culpam mulier: quæ aut tam intolerabilis fuit ut repudiaretur, aut tam insolens, ut repudiaret. Ob hæc et alia viduæ dote audæ procos sollicitant. Quod Pudentilla quoque in alio marito fecisset, si Philosphum pernentem dotis non reperisset (50).

This Discourse of Apuleius is a noble Field for Reflexions, were there leisure to pursue them; however, in haste as I am to pass on to other Articles, I shall stay to make two Observations; one is, that this Estate, of which the Husband can never be diseized, is a meer Chimera; no Baker, or Butcher, would trust you for Six-pence upon this imperishable Possession. The other is, that Apuleius had not considered every Disadvantage of Widowhood. He has said nothing of Widows, who have never had any Children; nor, indeed, was That his Case. A Prebend of Paris, who made a trip to Geneva, in 1672, with a Design of embracing the Protestant Religion, happened, soon after his Arrival, to single out a young, rich, and handsome, Widow, among other Women in the same Church. He soon found an Opportunity of speaking to her; and, the more he saw her, the more he fancied she would suit his purpose. But, having brought with him from France, nothing but the good Plight of Persons of his Profession, and some Insight into the Abuses of Popery, he was repulsed with Scorn. He communicated to me the Secret of his Repulse, and complained less of the Disappointment, than of the manner, in which he was treated (51). I represented ingenuously to him, that he was in the wrong to propose any such thing, considering the present Condition of his own Fortune, and the Circumstances of the Lady. He confessed she was too rich for such a Person as he; But, continued he, much of her Riches must be abated, on the score of her never having had a Child; this alone is a Drawback upon it of Thirty or Forty thousand Livres; at least I should have esteemed her by so much a better Fortune, than I do now, since there is a Presumption of her being barren; especially, when I consider, that my only Brother has no Heirs, and that our Family is in danger of being extinct, if I leave no Posterity. I would not enter into a farther Dispute with a Man, who had calculated the Matter so nicely. I left him to estimate the Business by himself; and was satisfied with believing, that the Care he had at Heart of preserving his Family had contributed greatly to the opening his Eyes.

REFLEXION of a Convert Priest on a Widow, who had had no Children.

(51) He never talked of the Affairs, without repeating, Est modus in rebus.

[K] Furnishes us with Examples of the most shameful Artifices, that the Villany of an impudent Calumniator is capable of putting in Practice.] I shall instance but in one; to shew, that, in all Ages, the Spirit of Calumny has put Men upon forging Proofs by false Extracts from what a Person has said, or written. To convict Apuleius of practising Magic, his Accusers alledged a Letter, which his Wife had wrote during the Time of his Courtship, and affirmed that she had confessed, in this Letter, that Apuleius was a Wizard, and had bewitched her. It was no hard matter to make the Court believe, that she had written so; for they only read a few Words of her Letter, detached from what preceeded, or followed; and no one pressed them to read the whole. At last Apuleius covered them with Confusion, by reciting the whole Passage of Pudentilla's Letter. It appeared, that, far from complaining of Apuleius, she justified him, and artfully ridiculed his Accusers. There are his Words: You will find, that precisely the same Terms may either condemn, or justify, Apuleius, according as they are taken wish, or without, what preceeds them. Βελομένην γὰρ με δι' αἰετῶν αἰτίας γαμνήσιναι, served, that Apuleius, with all his Magic Art, could never raise himself to any Post of Authority, though he was of a good Family, had been very well educated, and was much esteemed for his Eloquence (f). It was not, pursues my Author, out of a Philosophical Contempt, that he was never in Public Employ; for he thought it an Honour to be invested with the Priestly Office, which gave him the Superintendence of the Public Games; and contended strongly against Those, who opposed the erecting of a Statue, with which the Inhabitants of Oëa would have honoured him (g). Nothing is a more sensible Proof of the impertinent Credulity of the Pagans, than their saying, that Apuleius had wrought many Miracles [L], that they equalled, or even surpassed, Those of JESUS CHRIST. No doubt many Persons took all he had said in his Golden Ass for true History. I wonder St Austin could be in any Uncertainty about it (h), or that he was not convinced, that Apuleius intended this Book only as a Romance (i). He was not the Inventor of it; the Story is of ancient Date, as Mr Moreri discovered in the Words of Vossius [M]; which yet he did not thoroughly understand. Some Pagans have mentioned this Romance with

(g) Pro statua sibi apud Ocenfes locanda, ex qua civitate habebat uxorem, adversus contradictionem quorundam civium litigaret, quod poteros ne lateret ejusdem litis orationem scriptam memorie commendavit. Augustin. Epist. 5.

(f) St Austin makes this Remark, in his 5th Epistle. See Remark [L.] at the end.

(h) Id. de Civit. Dei, lib. 18. cap. 18.

(i) Sermone isto Miletio varias Fabulas conseram. Apul. in Prolog.

(52) Apul. Apol. pag. 326.

γαμνηθῆναι, αὐτὸς τὸν ἑταῖρον ἀντὶ πάντων αἰρεῖσθαι, θαυμάζων τὸν ἄνδρα, καὶ σποδάζων αὐτὸν οἰκτιρὼν ἥμιν δι' ἐμὰ ποιήσαι. νῦν δὲ ὡς μοχθῶρος ὑμᾶς κακονδεῖς τε ἀναπέδουσιν, αἰετῖδον ἐγείρετο Ἀτταλίου μάγῃ, καὶ ἐγὼ μαμάτευμαι ὑπ' αὐτοῦ. καὶ ἡρᾶ. καὶ ἡλθέ τις νῦν πρὸς ἐμὲ, ὥς ἐτι σωφρονῶ (52). Being inclined to marry for the Reasons, which I have mentioned, you yourself persuaded me to make choice of this Man, being fond of him, and desirous, by my means, to make him one of our Family. But now, at the Investigation of wicked Men, Apuleius must be informed against as a Magician, and I forsooth am enchanted by him. I certainly love him. Come to me, before my Reason fails me. He aggravates this kind of Fraud as it deserves. His Words deserve to be engraved in Letters of Gold in a thousand Places, to deter, if possible, all Calumniators in all Countries, and in all Ages, who practise the like Cheats. "Multa sunt quæ sola prolata calumniæ possunt videri obnoxia. Cujusvis oratio infamulari potest, si ea quæ ex prioribus nexa sunt principio sui defraudentur, si quædam ex ordine scriptorum ad libidinem supprimantur, si quæ simulationis causa dicta sunt, adaverantis pronuntiatione quam exprobrantis legantur (53). -- There are many things, which, produced alone, may seem liable to Calumny. Any Discourse may furnish matter of Accusation, if what is connected with foregoing Words be robbed of its Introduction, if some Things be suppressed at Pleasure, and if what is spoken by way of Reproach to others, for inventing a Calumny, be pronounced by the Reader as an Assertion of the Truth of it."

(53) Ibid.

[L] The Pagans pretended, that Apuleius wrought many Miracles [L] We should scarce believe, that this had ever been said, if credible Persons did not attest it; But we find, that this Impertinence of the Pagans was such a Cant in St Austin's Time, that this great Prelate was requested to refute it. "Precator accesserim ut ad ea vigilantius responderem digneris, in quibus nihil ex prioribus Dominum quam alii homines facere potuerunt fecisse vel gessisse mentiuntur. Apollonium siquidem suum nobis & Apuleium alioque magicæ artis homines in medium proferunt, quorum majora contendunt extitisse miracula (54). -- On this Occasion I request of you, that you will exert your utmost Efforts in refuting the false Pretences of these Objectors, who would place the Works of OUR LORD on a Level with the Actions of meer Men. For they produce against him their APOLLONIUM and APULEIUS, and other Dealers in Magic, whose Miracles they assert to have been greater than His." St Austin contented himself with answering, that, if Apuleius had been so great a Magician, he would not have lived in so mean a Condition, as he did, considering his Ambition; That, besides, he had denied the Charge of Magic, which he allowed to be a great Crime (55). His pretended Miracles were spoken of long before St Austin; for Lactantius expresses his Surprise, that the Author, whom he consulted, had not joined Apuleius with Apollonius Tyanaus. "Vultu offendere Apollonium vel paria, vel etiam majora fecisse. Mirum quod Apuleium prætermittit, cujus solent & multa mira memorari (56). -- He pretended to shew, that Apollonius had wrought as great, or even greater. It is surprising he should forget Apuleius, who is reported to have wrought many Miracles." Apuleius

(54) Marcellinus ad Aug. Epist. 4. inter Epist. Augustini. See also the 4th Letter of St. Augustin, pag. 208.

(55) August. Epist. 5.

(56) Lactant. Divin. Institut. lib. 5. cap. 3. See also St. Jerome in Pal. lxxxii.

leius has had the Fate of many other Persons; His Miracles were not spoken of 'till after his Death; his Accusers objected nothing but Trifles against him; or brought the worst Proof in the World of what might have the Appearance of Magic. But I know not how to reconcile St Austin with Apuleius. The one says, that Apuleius could never arrive at any Post of Judicature, ad aliquam judicariam Reipublicæ potestatem (57). The other boasts, that he had enjoyed the same Post, which his Father had held; who had been Duumvir, and had passed through every honourable Employment in the City, where he lived. "In qua colonia patrem habui loco principe Duumviralem cunctis honoribus perfunctum. Cujus ego locum in ea repub. exinde ut participare curiam cepti nequaquam degener pari spero honore & exultatione tueor (58)."

(57) August. Epist. 5.

(58) Apul. Apolog. pag. 289.

[M] The Story is of ancient Date, as Mr Moreri discovered in the Words of Vossius. Let us first set down his own Words. "The Metamorphosis, of the Golden Ass is a Paraphrase of what he had taken from Lucian, as Lucian had done before from Lucius of Patras, mentioned by Photius ----- It is even probable, that Apuleius borrowed, from the same Source, the very Subject of the Fable, which he has given his own turn to. For he understood the Greek and Latin Tongues very well." To judge whether Mr Moreri deserves Criticism, we must compare what he has said with the Passage of Vossius, which was his Original. "De ætate Lucii Patrensis non liquet, nisi quod antiquior credatur Luciano, quippe qui inde composuisse videatur Asinum suum, uti ex Luciano posset asinum suum aureum exscriptis Appuleius. Nisi is potius ex eodem Lucii fonte sua hausit, & hoc sanè verisimilius esset. Nempè ut Lucium in epitomen redegit Lucianus, ita paraphrasin Lucii scripsit Appuleius, sed ille Græcè, hic Latine (59). ----- It is uncertain, when Lucius Patrensis lived; only he is thought to have been older than Lucian, who seems to have borrowed from him his Ass, in like manner as Apuleius afterwards copied his Golden Ass from Lucian; unless perhaps he copied it from Lucius himself; which is most probable. So that, as Lucian epitomized Lucius, Apuleius paraphrased him; but the one in Greek, the other in Latin." It is plain Mr Moreri mistook Vossius's Thoughts, and that he ought not to have said, that Apuleius's Work is a Paraphrase on That of Lucian. He should have said, that Lucius Patrensis had been abridged by Lucian, and paraphrased by Apuleius. The Argument, which Mr Moreri includes in these Words, for he understood the Greek and Latin Tongues very well, is good for nothing. Put this Reasoning into Form, and you will raise this Entymema from it: He understood the Greek and Latin Tongues very well; therefore he took the Subject of this Fable, which he dressed up after his own way, from the Fountain-head; that is to say, therefore he has not paraphrased Lucian, but Lucius Patrensis. This Entymema is ridiculous. A Knowledge of the Greek Tongue is as necessary in making use of Lucian, as of Lucius; and the Latin Tongue is of no help towards dressing up in one's own way a Subject borrowed from Lucius. Cannot Mr de la Fontaine dress up a Tale of Ouville after his own way? It would be of greater Use, than we are aware of, to criticise on the false Logic of Authors. Young Persons, with Contempt [N]. Apuleius was extremely laborious [O], and composed several Books [P], some in Verse, and others in Prose; of which but a small Part has resisted the Injuries of Time. He delighted in making publick Speeches, in which he gained the Applause of all his Hearers. When they heard him at Oëa, the Audience cried out with one Voice, That he ought to be honoured with the Freedom of the City (k). Those of Carthage heard him favourably, and erected a Statue in Honour of him (l): Several other Cities did him the same Honour (m). It is said, that his Wife held the Candle to him, whilst he studied; but This, I think, must not be taken literally; it is rather a Figure of Gallie Eloquence in Sidonius Apollinaris; Legentibus meditantibusque candelas & candelabra tenuerunt (n). Several Critics have published Notes on Apuleius [Q]. I have never met with any modern French Translation of the Golden Ass [R]. This Work ought to be considered as a continued Satire on the

(H) Id. Apol. pag. 320.

(I) Id. Floridor. pag. 355, & seq.

(m) Ibid. pag. 356.

(n) Sidon. Apollin. Epist. to. 1. 2.

Persons, who are born to be Authors, would profit much, and sometimes, by such Criticisms.

[N] Some Pagans have mentioned this Romance with Contempt. I desire no other Proof of this, than the Letter, in which the Emperor Severus complains to the Senate of the Honours paid to Clodius Albinus. Among other Elogiums, they had given him That of Learning. The Emperor could not bear, that they should give such a Character to a Man, who had filled his Mind with nothing but the Tales and Rhapsodies of Apuleius. "Major fuit dolor quod illum pro literato laudandum perire duxisset, quum ille naeniis quibusdam anilibus occupatus inter Milesias punicas Apuleii sui, & ludicra literaria senesceret (60)." Macrobius has assigned over all such Romances, as Apuleius's Golden Ass, to Nurses. "Vel argumenta fictis casibus amatorum referta, quibus vel multum se Arbitr exerceat, vel Apuleium nonnunquam lusisse miramur. Hoc totum fabularum genus, quod solas aurium delicias proficetur, de sacro suo in nutritum cunas sapientia eliminat (61)." We are surprized to find, that even Apuleius sometimes diverted himself with Love-Tales, in which Arbitr chiefly exercised himself. This kind of Fable, which professes only to please the Ear, Learning banishes from her Temple to the Cradles of Nurses.

(60) Capitolin. in Clodio Albin. cap. 12.

(61) Macrob. Saturnal. lib. 1. cap. 2.

[O] Apuleius was extremely laborious. Hear what he says himself, in his Answer to his Adversary, on the Subject of Eloquence. "De eloquentia vero, si qua mihi fuisset, neque mirum neque invidiosum deberet videri, si ab ineunte ævo unis studiis literarum ex summis viribus dedidisset, omnibus aliis spretis voluptatibus, ad hoc ævi, haud sciam an ne super omnes homines impenso labore, dique noctuque, cum defectu & dispendio bonæ valetudinis, eam quaesivissem (62)." As to Eloquence, if I ever had any, it ought not to be thought strange or odious, that, from my Youth to this Time, I have endeavoured after it, applying myself solely to the Study of Letters, and contemning all other Pleasures, with greater Application of Mind, than perhaps any Man ever did, and even to the Ruin of my Health."

(62) Apul. Apolog. pag. 276.

[P] And composed several Books. See the Dissertation de Vita & Scriptis Apuleii, which Wower has printed at the beginning of his Edition, and Mr Fleuri, the Dauphin Scholiast, has prefixed to His. It may be said, that Apuleius was an Universal Genius: There are but few Subjects, which he has not handled. He translated the Phædo of Plato, and the Arithmetic of Nicomachus: He wrote a Treatise de Republica; another de Numeris; and one de Musica: They quote his Tablæ Quæstiones; his Letters to Cerellia, which are a little too free; his Proverbs; his Hermagoras; and his Ludicra. He mentions the latter himself: Legimus, says he (63), & Ludicris meis Epistolium de dentificio, versibus scriptum. They read, out of my Ludicra, a short Epistle in Verse, concerning a Powder for the Teeth. We have still his Golden Ass in eleven Books; his Moral Philosophy; his Treatises of Natural Philosophy; of Moral Philosophy; de Syllogismo categorico; de Deo Socratis; de Mundo; and his Florida. As to his Letters to Cerellia, I must not omit the Judgment of a learned Critic (64) on them. He believes, that the Name of Cicero ought to be inserted in That Passage of Anfonius, where these Letters are mentioned; for Cicero was the Person, who was reproached with having been too familiar with Cerellia, and writing to her too freely. On this Supposition, we must read the Passage in Anfonius thus: "Esse Apuleium

(63) Id. ib.

(64) Fredericus Gronovius in Aufon. Cent. Nuptial. in Editione Aufonit. Amstel. 1671. pag. 516.

"in vita Philosophum, in Epigrammatis amatorem; Ciceronis in præceptis omnibus exstare severitatem, in Epistolis ad Cerelliam fuisse perulantiam. . . . Apuleius was, in his Life, a Philosopher; in his Epigrams, a Lover; Cicero's Precepts are all rigidly moral; his Epistles to Cerellia, loose and wanton."

[Q] Several Critics have published Notes on Apuleius. Philippus Beraldu published very large Notes on the Golden Ass, at Venice, in Folio, Ann. 1504, which were reprinted, in 8vo, at Paris, and at several other Places. Godefrick Stewechius, Peter Colvius, John Wower, &c. have written on all the Works of Apuleius. Priceus has published the Golden Ass, and the Apology, separately, with a great many Observations (65). The Annotations of Casaubon, and Those of Scipio Gentilis, on the Apology, are much valued. The first appeared in the Year 1594, and the latter in the Year 1607. The best Edition of the Book de Mundo, is That of Leyden, 1591, in 8vo. We are indebted for it to Bonaventure Vulcanius. Let me observe, by the way, that This Treatise is almost the same with the Translation of a like Work, attributed to Aristotle. The Book de Deo Socratis has appeared with the Annotations of Jofias Mercerus (66). The Author, whom I quote, will give you a more ample Account of the Editions of Apuleius (67). He has made no particular mention of That of Basil, apud Henricum Petri, 1560, in three Volumes, in 8vo; nor of That of the same Town, apud Sebastianum Henrici Petri, 1620; nor of That of Lyons, 1614, in two Volumes in 8vo; which perfectly resembles That of Leyden, the Pieces of which he particularly specifies, placing it in the Year 1614. Perhaps he mistook the Lugdunum of France (Lyons), for the Lugdunum Batavorum (Leyden).

(65) The Apology; Paris, 1635, in 4to. The Golden Ass; Gouda, 1650, in 8vo.

(66) At Paris, 1624, in 12mo.

(67) Joh. Albertus Fabricius in Bibliotheca Latina, pag. 135, & seq.

[R] I have never met with any modern French Translation of the Golden Ass. If I am not mistaken, John Louveau is the Author of the first old Translation: La Croix du Maine mentions it, without setting down the Year, in which it appeared (68). He only says, that it was printed at Lyons. It was reprinted, at Paris, by Claudius Micard, in 1584. One J. de Montigny published a Translation of the same Book, with a Commentary. One of the two Editions, which I have seen, was according to the Copy, printed at Paris by Abel l'Angelier, 1612; the other, at Paris, by Samuel Thiboust, 1623. The Preface is long; and contains a Criticism on several Errors of John Louveau.

(68) La Croix du Maine Biblioth. Francoise, pag. 238.

I find, that La Croix du Maine, and du Verdier Vau-Privas, have mentioned a Translation, which may very well be older, than That of John Louveau. They say, that George de la Boutiere, or de la Boutier, a Native of Autun, rendered the Metamorphosis, or Golden Ass of Apuleius into French (69). The one says, that this Version was printed at Lyons, by John de Tournes and William Gazeau, in the Year 1553. The other, that it was printed by John de Tournes, in 1516 (70). There is an Error of the Press in the last Date; and it is evident, that, to put the Figures in their right Places, it ought to be 1556: Now, as the same Author has said, that the Translation by John Louveau was printed in the Year 1558 (71), there is Reason to suppose, that it was later than That of George de la Boutiere.

(69) Ibid. p. 118. Du Verdier, pag. 446.

(70) Du Verdier, Bibl. Francoise, p. 440.

(71) Id. pag. 716.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary, Part of a Translation of the Golden Ass has appeared at Paris. The Journal des Sçavans of the ninth of January, 1696, mentions it. Monf. le Baron des Coutures published, with Notes, in 1698, his French Version of the Treatise de Deo Socratis.

[S] This

the Disorders, which the Magicians, Priests, Pandars, Thieves, &c. filled the World with at That time [S].

[S] This Work ought to be considered as a continued Satire on the Disorders, which Magicians, Priests, &c. filled the World with at That Time. This Observation occurs in Mr Fleuri's Annotations. "Tota porro hæc metamorphosis Apuleiana & filo & sententia Satyricon est perpetuum (ut recte observavit Barthius Advers. lib. 51. cap. 11.) in quo magica deliria, sacrificulorum scelera, adulterorum crimina, furum & latronum impunitæ factiones, palam differuntur (72)." He adds, that Those, who are in search of the Philosopher's Stone, pretend to find it in the Mysteries of the Grand Operation. A Person, who would take the Pains, and had the requisite Qualifications (and he must, indeed, have a great many) might draw up a very curious and instructive Commentary on This Romance, and might inform us of several Things, which the preceding Commentaries, how good soever, have never touched upon. There are some very obscene Passages in this Book of Apuleius. It is believed, that the Author has inserted some Episodes in it of his own Invention; and, amongst others, That of Psyche. Horum certe noster ita imitator fuit, ut à suo penu innumera-bilia protulerit, atque inter cætera venustissimum il-lud Psyche Ψυχὸς Ἔρως (73). This Episode furnished Moliere with Matter for an excellent Dramatic Piece, and Mr de la Fontaine for a fine Romance.

(72) Julius Floridus, Comment. ad Ufam Delph. in Apuleium.

(73) Julius ubi supra, pag. 2.

(a) Du Verdier, Biblioth. Franc. pag. 278.

AQUÆUS (STEPHEN), in *French de l'Aigue, Lord of Beauvais (a), in Berry, his Native Country, made himself famous by his Military Actions [A]; and his Writings, in the Reign of Francis I. Not that his Commentary on Pliny, which is the best of his Works, is good in the Main [B]; but it was extraordinary, in those Times, for a Gentleman to perform so much. This Commentary was printed in 1530. Father Hardouin was not well acquainted with it's Date [C].

*So the Gallons call Water. This Author writes himself Stephen de l'Aigue dict Berulnois, at the beginning of a Translation of Cæsar, Edit. of Paris, 1546, in 12mo.

(1) Hardouin, Præfat. in Plinium.

(2) Du Verdier, Bibli. François, pag. 278. Le Croix du Maine points out the Edition of Paris, in 1530.

(3) Du Verdier, ubi supra.

(4) La Croix du Maine, Bibli. Fr. pag. 76.

(5) Hardouin, Præfat. in Plinium.

(6) See the 50th Letter of the Centuria Epistoliarum Philologicarum, published by Goldast, p. 106. Edit. 1674.

[A] Famous for his Military Actions, and his Writings. Father Hardouin gives him this Elogium. Vir nobilis in primis, ac militia quoque exacta egregie ferdus (1). --- A Person very famous, and, after War, remarkably ferdid. The Works, he published, are A singular Treatise concerning the Properties of Tortoises, Snails, Frogs, and Artibokes, at Lyons, in 8vo (2). Julius Cæsar's Commentaries on the Roman Wars, and other Military Exploits, performed by him in Gaul, and Africa, at Paris 1531, in Folio. Du Verdier cites this Edition (3). La Croix du Maine takes notice of the Edition at Paris, in 1539 (4), but not of That in 1546. We are going to take notice of his Commentary on Pliny.

[B] His Commentary on Pliny ---- is not good in the main. It is more considerable, for it's Size, than it's Learning. The Author corrects only as a Plagiary, and passes over almost all the difficult Places. This is Father Hardouin's Judgment of it. "Commentarios scripsit in omnes Plinii libros: Sed mole magis quam eruditione insignes. Nec vero emendationes ullas habet, quam quas à Rhenano mutuatus est: Et ea fere in quibus faleberrum est aliquid aut ambagis, solet is, ceu foveam, securus prætergredi (5)." He is guilty of the same Fault with several other Writers; he makes use of the Property of other Men, without mentioning his Benefactor; and names him only when he intends to censure him. Rhenanus made this Complaint, in a Letter to a Physician of the Cardinal of Westphalia: "Hoc mirum, quod quum ex meis castigationibus non nihil fit adjutus, nunquam tamen mei mentionem facit, nisi quoties vult reprehendere (6)." The general Judgment, which he passes on this Work, deserves to be reported. "In primis ipsum volumen non est exiguum, ex variis congestum autoribus, quod uui pauperculus esse possit, qui non habent bibliothecam instructam, puta Aristotelem, & Albertum de Animalibus, Raphaelem Volaterranum, ex quo integra ferme capita autor transcripsit bona side, hoc est, upa cum ipsis mendis, ne syllaba quidem mutata, Cœlius Rhodiginus, Columella, Palladiusque, & similes scriptores. Nam hoc præcipue habet studio, citare testimonia autorum, qui cum Plinio faciunt, de verbis ipsis minimum sollicitus, quod illi penitus puerile videtur. In summa liber talis est, qui si non magnopere juvet, excitet tamen literas, & Plinium ipsum vulgo fortassis commendet, quæ mihi res in primis grata est (7). --- In the first Place, it is a bulky Volume, compiled from various Authors (upon which account it may be useful to poorer Students, who have not a well furnished Library) from Aristotle, and Albertus de Animalibus; Raphael Volaterran, from whom the Author has fairly transcribed whole Chapters, not omitting the very Faults, nor altering a Syllable; from Cœlius Rhodiginus, Columella, Palladius, and the like Writers. For his chief Aim is, to cite the Testimonies of Authors, who favour Pliny, unconcerned as to the Words themselves, which he thinks deserve the Regard of Boys alone. In short, the Work is such, that, if it be not very entertaining, it may yet promote Learning, and perhaps recommend Pliny to a more general Reading which I am particularly pleased with."

[C] Father Hardouin was not well acquainted with the Date of the Edition of Aquæus's Commentary on Pliny. He observes, that Sigismond Gelenius published a Volume of Corrections on Pliny, in the Year 1535; and that, the Year following, Beatus Rhenanus published his Work on the same Author; and that, at the end of four Years, our Aquæus published his Commentary (8). He must therefore have published it in 1540. Now it is certain, that he published it in the Year 1530. I suppose Father Hardouin's Mistake proceeded from his not knowing, that Gelenius had twice employed his Pen on Pliny, before the Edition of 1635 (9). Perhaps the Book of Aquæus was later, by five Years, than the first Corrections of Gelenius.

(7) Ibid.

(8) Hardouin, Præfat. in Plin.

(9) See the 50th Letter of the 3rd Book of Erasmus's, pag. 1957.

AQUAVIVA (ANDREW MATTHEW) Duke of Atri, in the Kingdom of Naples, and Son of Julius Aquaviva, Count of Conversano [A], added, to the Splendor of his Birth, an Erudition, which rendered him highly illustrious, towards the End of the XVth, and Beginning of the XVIth Centuries. He was not satisfied barely with studying, and conversing with the Learned; he employed himself in writing Books, and acquitted himself with Reputation; as appears by his Work intitled, Encyclopædia; and another, in which he treats of Moral Virtue [B]. He wrote a

Book

(1) See the History of Mahom. 11. by Guillet, Tom. 2. pag. 373.

(2) See the Verses, which Marullus addresses to him, Epigram. lib. 1. pag. 16.

[A] The Son of Julius Aquaviva, Count of Conversano. This Count signalized himself by his Valour, on several Occasions, and commanded the Army of Naples, when he was killed in a Skirmish, during the Siege of Otranto by the Turks, in 1480 (1). His Son, of whom we speak in this Article, was a long time inconfolable for this Loss (2).

[B] A Work, in which he treats of Moral Virtue. One would think, that P. Jovius looked upon it to be a Commentary on Plutarch's Treatise of Moral Virtue; and the modern Author of the Annotations on the Latin Poems of Sannazarius had the same Thought. "Librum nempe nobilem, cui Encyclopædia nomen, itemque Commentarium in Plutarchum de Virtute morali (3). --- To wit, an excellent Work, entituled Encyclopædia, and a Commentary on Plutarch, Of Moral Virtue." But the Words of Paul Jovius are not clear enough to determine me to this Sense; I should rather keep to a more indefinite Idea. He expresses himself thus:

"Nemo

(3) Note ad Sann. Eleg. pag. 188. Edit. Amstel. 1689.

likewise de Re Equeſtri. Before he applied himſelf with ſo much Ardour to Arms, he had paid That Debt to Arms, which his high Birth claimed, and had ſerviced himſelf that way; tho' Fortune had been ever averſe. He had been engaged in two unſucceſſful Battles, and was wounded, and taken Priſoner, in both. Study ſupported him in his Confinement; and he was ſo happy, as to obtain his Liberty from Ferdinand, King of Aragon, when Gonſalvo, ſurnamed the Great Captain, would have ſent him, with other Priſoners, into Spain. From that Time, He betook himſelf to the Pleaſures of a private Life, amidſt his Books, and in the Company of learned Men, by whom he was highly praized, and honoured [C]. He inſpired his Brother Belſarius with the ſame Love of Learning, who became likewiſe an Author [D]. Our Aquaviva would have been more happy, if he had managed his Eſtate a little better; but his too great Expences for ſeveral Years at laſt exhausted his Fortunes. He died at Converſano, at Seventy two Years of Age; when the French Troops, under the Conduct of Lautrec, ravaged Apulia (a) in 1582.

(a) Ex Jo-
vio, Elog.
Doct. Vir.
cap. 73.

"Nemo ex his, qui illuſtris orti familiis ætate noſtra clareunt ----- Andrea Matthæo Aqua-vivio ----- ſe læculentius optimis diſciplinis ex-ornavit; uti præclare conſtat eo libro nobili pa-riter ac erudito quæ Encyclopædia inferibitur, & de morali virtute Plutarchi plenior liber ſubtili & copioſo commentario perſimilis offendit (4). -----
"No one, among thoſe of great Birth, who have ſlowly riſen in our Times, ----- made a greater Figure in the learned World, than Andrew Matthew Aqua-viva; as is evident from his excellent and learned Book, entitled Cyclopædia, and his larger Work, not unlike a ſubtile and copious Commentary, concerning Plutarch's Treatiſe of Moral Virtue." This ſeems to intimate a laborious Paraphraſe on this Work of Plutarch.

(4) P. Jovi-us, Elog.
cap. 63. pag.
158.

"ſtimably explained. Neither Toppi, from whom I have borrowed this (5), nor Leonard Nicodemus make any mention of the Book, entitled Encyclopædia.
[C] He was highly praized and honoured by learned Men.] Alexander ab Alexandro dedicated his Dies Geniales to him. Pontanus dedicated to him his firſt Book de Rebus Cæleſtibus, and his Treatiſe of Magnanimity. Sannazarus ingeniouſly celebrates him for having been (as was ſince ſaid of Mr de Montauzier) a Favourite of Pallas, whether under the Name of Minerva, or That of Bellona.

(c) Toppi Biblioth.
Napolet.
P. 141

Favori de Pallas quelque nom qu'on lui donne, Ou celui de Merve, ou celui de Bellone.

See the laſt Elogy of the ſecond Book, towards the end, and the ſecond Epigram of the ſecond Book. As to the Forty fourth Epigram of the ſame Book, I queſ-tion, whether it be in praife of our Aquaviva, as the Author of the Annotations on Sannazarus (6) fancied; it is addreſſed ad Neritimum Ducem, who,
according to Paul Jovius, was Belſarius Aquaviva, the Brother of Andrew Matthew. It ſeems to me likewiſe, that the firſt Elogy of the third Book has no relation to this latter, but to his Father Julius Aquaviva. See, in the Author, whom I quote, the Names of ſeveral Writers, who have celebrated our Andrew Matthew.

(6) Notæ in Sannaz.
pag. 188.

(7) Nicodemus, Addiz.
alla Bibl.
Napolet. p.
11, 126

[D] His Brother Belſarius ----- became like-wiſe an Author.] He compoſed a Treatiſe of Vena-tione, which he dedicated to his Brother John Matthew; another de Aucupio; another de Principum liberis educandis; another de Re Militari; and another de Singulari Certamine. Theſe Works, firſt printed at Naples, in Folio, in the Year 1519, were reprinted at Baſil, in 8vo, in the Year 1578, by the Care of Leonclavius, with the Manuel Palæologus of Royal Education.

AQUINAS, or AQUINIUS, (PHILIP), acquired a great Reputation by his Skill in the Hebrew Tongue, which he taught, at Paris, in the Reign of Lewis XIII; and by his Works, which he publiſhed [A]. He was originally of Aquino, in the Kingdom of Naples (a), and from thence derived his Name; but he was born in the County of Avignon. He was a Convert from the Jewiſh Religion, and had a Penſion (b) allowed him from the Clergy of France. He is mentioned in the Trial of the Marſhal d'Ancre [B]. Simeon de Muis has greatly commended him [C];

(a) I have only this from Hearſay.

(b) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Interpretation
of the Tree of the Cabala.

[A] He acquired a great Reputation ----- by the Works, which he publiſhed.] The Catalogue of them is as follows: Dictionarium Hebræo-Chalæo-Thalmudico-Rabbinicum, fol. printed at Paris in the Year 1629; The Roots of the Sacred Language, ad formam Cabi Hutteriani, at Paris, 1620, 16mo;
A Translation, in Italian, of The Apophthegms of the ancient Doctõrs of the Jewiſh Church, collected by Rabbi Simeon, Son of Gamaliel; *The Expoſition
Of the thirteen Ways, which the ancient Rabbies made uſe of to explain the Pentateuch*, (1). An Interpretation of the Tree of the Cabala, enriched with it's Figure, taken from the ancient Hebrew Authors, at Paris, at the Expence of the Author, 1620, in 8vo; A Diſcourſe of the Camp, and Tabernacle of the Iſraelites, at Paris, by Tb. Blaſe, 1625, in 4to; Literal, Allegorical, and Moral Explications of the Tabernacle, which God commanded Moſes to build; of the Prieſts Veſtments, and the manner how they conſulted the Rationale of the ancient Law, together with the Form of the Jewiſh Sacrifices; all

(1) Printed at Paris in 1620. in 4to.

curiouſly collected, and faithfully translated from the moſt learned and ancient Hebrew Authors, with a Diſcourſe concerning the Camp of the Iſraelites; and a Deſcription of the Jewels of the High Prieſts' Breſt-Plate, added at the end of the ſecond Edition, reviſed by the Author; at Paris, at the Author's Expence, 1624, in 4to; Beccinas Olam, or An Examination of Rabbi Jacob's World's Moral Sentences of the ancient Hebrews, and the thirteen Ways, which they made uſe of to interpret the Bible, in 8vo, at Paris, by John Lacquebay, 1629. Phil. Aquinatis Hebræicæ Lingue Profeſſ. Lactyma in obitum Illuſtriſſ. Cardi-nalis de Berulle, Pariſiis, apud Joannem Beſſin, 1629, in 8vo.

[B] He is mentioned in the Trial of the Marſhal d'Ancre.] This Fact is too ſingular to be omitted.
Item, It is proved, by Informations, as alſo by the Depoſition of Philip Aquinas, formerly a Jew, but now a Chriſtian, whom Conchini and his Wife had ſent for to Moulins, where the ſaid Aquinas was at the Lieutenant Criminal's Houſe (2), that Conchini
and

(2) Perhaps he was Tutor, to Gilbert
Gaulmin, who confeſſes that he had been a Diſ-ciple of Philip Aquinas; inter-
num
MS. librum, ſays he, ad
libros de Vita & Mor-tis, pag.
305. ex Philippi Aquin Preceptis olim mei magiſtri necreſcipimus.

(c) Mr Colommits believes he was his Son.

him [C]; on the other hand, Valerian de Flavigni has spoken ill of him [D]. There was one LEWIS-HENRY AQUINAS, his Cotemporary, who was also well skilled in the Oriental Languages. I cannot tell, whether he was his Son, or his Brother (c). He translated something out of the Hebrew into the Latin (d) [E]. He had likewise been a Jew, and was afterwards a Pensioner of the Clergy. AN-TONY AQUINAS, who had been First Physician to Lewis XIVth, was Grandson of Philip.

(d) See Co-lonmits Gallie Orient.
pag. 254.
256.

"his Wife had made use of the Cabala, and the "Jewish Books. It being to be observed, what this "Aquinas had farther depofed, viz. that Conchini,
"in the Prefence of his Wife, had taken away a "Chamber-pot on account of it's Impurity, and
"removed a Crucifix out of the Room, for fear it "should hinder an Effect, which They, Conchini and "his Wife, expected from reading some Verses "of the Fifty first Psalm, Misereri mei, in He"brew: which Reading they caused to be per"formed by Aquinas, in the same Manner as it "had been some times performed before them by
"Montalto."

[C] Simeon de Muis has greatly commended him.]
He expresses himself thus concerning a Verse of the Thirty fifth Psalm: "Cum hic hærerem dubius,
"Philippus Aquinas à Judæo Christianus, vir rarè
"& exquisitissimæ in Hebraicis literis doctrinæ, &
"quem nunquam frustra consulas, forte venit ad me
"visendi gratia, & venit quidem optatus. Ille statim
"atque de re communicavi, ut singulas Bibliorum
"versus imò & voces singulos in numerato habet,
"ac tanquam digitos tenet, indicavit locum ex
"Esaie 66. ver. 13. - - - Being at a loss for the "Sense of this Passage, Philip Aquinas, a converted "Jew, a Man of uncommon and exquisite Skill in "the Hebrew Tongue, and whom you can never con"sult in vain, came accidentally to pay me a Visit,
"and came opportunely to my wife. For no sooner "had I communicated the Matter to him, but He,
"who has every Verse, and even every Word, of Scrip"ture at his Fingers ends, referred me to Esaiah

"66. ver. 13.

[D] Valerian de Flavigni - - - has spoken ill of him.] He was Professor of Hebrew in the Royal College, at Paris. He ridiculed the Bible of Mr le Jai unmercifully, and maintained, that the Hebrew Text had been miserably corrupted by Philip Aquinas
"Tot ac tantis conspurcaturum maculis atque
"sordibus, obftricticantibus impurissimis manibus Phi"lippi Aquinatis Avenionensis ex Judæo Christiani,
"ut à planta pedis usque ad verticem non fit in
"eo sanitas (3). - - - Defiled with so many and "great Blots and Filth by the impure Hands of "Philip Aquinas, of Avignon, a converted Jew,
"that, from the Sole of the Foot to the Crown of
"the Head, there is no whole Part in it."

[E] He translated something out of Hebrew into Latin.] Read what follows: Commentarius Rabbi Levi filii Gerfonis in librum Jobi, seu in V. prima capita, interprete Ludovico Henrico Aquino Lutetiæ. — A Commentary of Rabbi Levi, the Son of Gerfon, on the Book of Job, or on the five first Chapters, translated by Lewis Henry Aquinas, of Paris. Paris, by Thomas Blaise, 1620, in 4to. Scholia Rabbi Salomonis Jarchi in librum Elther: item excerpta quædam ex Talmudo & Jalcut in eundem librum, interprete Lud. Henr. Aquino. — The Scholia of Rabbi Solomon Jarchi on the Book of Elther; likewise Extracts from the Talmud and Jalcut on the same Book, translated by Lewis Henry Aquinas. Paris, 1622, in 4to.

(3) In Epist.
de Heptaplia Parisiensibus, apud Colomesium
Gall. Orient.
pag. 256.

ARAGON (ALPHONSO, fifth of the Name, King of). See, under the Word
NAPLES, Alphonso, first of the Name, King of Naples.

ARAGON (JOAN of) the Wife of Ascanio Colonna, Prince of Tagliacozzi, was the most Illustrious Lady of the XVth Century. She was born at Naples, and descended from the Kings of Aragon. The Wits of those Times celebrated her Praises after an extraordinary manner [A]. The Philosopher Augustin Niphus was one

THE Poetical Defication of this Lady.

[A] The Wits of those Times celebrated her Praises in an extraordinary manner.] I have not seen any Dictionary, in which the Article of this Lady is to be met with: It is a Sin of Omission most worthy of Censure; for, perhaps, there never was a Man or Woman in the World, whose Merit has been celebrated by more fine Wits, or in more Languages, than That of Joan of Aragon, in the XVth Century. The Poems, wrote in her Praise, were collected by Jerom Ruscelli, and published at Venice, in 1555, under the Title of TEMPIO ALLA DIVINA SIGNORA DONNA GIOVANNI D'ARAGONA, fabricato da tutti i piu gentili Spiriti, & in tutte le lin-gue principali del mondo. — A Temple to the Divine Lady Donna Joanna of Aragon, erected by the greatest Wits, and in all the principal Languages of the World. The Poetical Defication of this Lady was performed with Ceremonies, not unlike Those made use of in the Canonization of Saints. In the first Place, several great Wits, of their own meer Motion, determined to testify their Devotions to this Divinity, and to prepare her a Temple; afterwards, in the Year 1551, the Matter passed into a Decree in the Academy of the Dubbiosi, at Venice. After several Deliberations and Consultations, on a Question, which was started, to wit, whether this Temple should be jointly dedicated to Donna Joanna of Aragon, and her Sister, the Marchioness du Guaft; the Decree imports, That, considering the Opposition anciently made by the Pontiffs to Marcellus's Design of building a Temple jointly to Honour and Virtue, the Marchioness du Guaft could have no Part, nor Interest, in her Sister's Temple; except by Means of some particular Interpretations. Not only the Poets, whose Verses Ruscelli has collected, but Himself likewise, in the Prose of his Epistle Dedictory to the Cardinal of Trent, and in his Preface, employs the Terms of Adoration and Divinity; it is true, he adds this Corrective, that the Adoration, paid to this Lady, was only relative, and terminated in the Su-pream Being, who had conferred so many Perfections upon her. These are his Words. "Quæta conof"cenza — ha fatto questi anni à dietro che conof-

"cendofi in universale & in particolare da ogni piu
"raro giudicio i gran meriti, & il sommo valore,
"& la bellezza infinita di corpo & d'animo della Il-
"lustrissima & Excellentissima Signora DONNA
"GIOVANNA D'ARAGONA, si fieno tutti
"i piu begli spiriti di commune consentimento po-
"sti à sacrarle un Tempio, come à Donna intera-
"mente divina, & la quale, come nobilissima fatu-
"ra & sembianza del sommo Iddio, meriti ve-
"ramente d'esser con la lingua & col cuore adorata
"per immenso honore del factor suo; potandofi degna-
"mente da ciascuno far giudicio, quanta sia infinito
"il sapere, il potere, & l'amor verso di noi di chi
"cosi (alla capacita della mente nostra) infinitamente
"bella & perfetta & degna d'esser adorata creatura
"habbia potuto, saputo, & degnatosi di voler fare in
"questa eta nostra. — This Knowledge — has "been the Cause, of late Years, that, the great Me"rit, Worth, and infinite Beauty, both of Body and "Mind, of the most Illustrious and most Excellent
"DONNA JOANNA OF ARAGON, being "universally and particularly known to every one of "the least Judgment, all the Men of Wit unani"mously agreed to dedicate a Temple to her, as to a "Lady entirely Divine; and who, as being the most "noble Production and Resemblance of the Supream
"Being, deserves to be adored with Tongue and Heart,
"in honour of her great Creator; every one being ca"pable of judging of the infinite Wisdom, Power, and "Love

one of the forwardest in paying his Homage to her. He represented her as so wonderfully beautiful, and particularized the Perfections of her Body [B], in such a manner, that some Authors have said he flattered her [C], and that Love inspired him with those high Strains. It has been said likewise, that his Quality of Physician gave him Privileges, which fired him with Love [D]. To me these Conjectures appear trifling

"Love of God towards us, in condescending to form
"out of our own Species (within the Sphere of human "Capacity) so beautiful, perfect, and adorable a Crea"ture, in this our Age." He tells us, in the Preface, that the Substance of his whole Collection imports,
"Che questa gran Donna, come perfettissima di corpo
"& d'animo, & come particolarissima fattura del
"sommo Iddio, meriti d'essere adorata ad honore
"del factor suo. Overo che chiaciuno partitamente
"l'offerisce il suo voto, o la pura del affecto suo.
"—— That this great Lady, as being most per"fect, both in Body and Mind, and the most singular
"Production of the Supreme Being, deserves to be a"dored in honour of her Creator; or, that every one
"ought, in particular, to offer up his Vows to her,
"according to the Purity of his Affection towards "her." The least poetical, and the most unknown, Languages, were employed in erecting this Temple; as the Slavonian, the Polish, the Hungarian, the Hebrew, and the Chaldaic; and, perhaps, Mr de Peirej (1) was the only Person, in whole Favour a like, or a greater, Concourse of Languages, had ever been employed.

[B] And particularized the Perfections of her Body.] Niphus dedicated his Treatise of Beauty to this Lady; and, to confute the ancient Philosophers, who maintained, that there is no perfect Beauty in the Universe, he alleges, in his fifth Chapter, the Instance of Joan of Aragon. He enters into so minute a Detail, in drawing the Picture of this fair
one, that, among the great Numbers of Descriptions, which the Romances of Mademoiselle de Scudery brought in fashion, thirty or forty Years ago (2), there is not one, we may venture to say, but falls short of his. He is not satisfied with describing the Beauties, which are visible to every Eye, but passes to those, quas sinus abscondit, and to the Proportions between the Thigh and Leg, and between the Leg and Arm. Ventre sub pectore decenti, & latere cui secretiora correspondent. Amplius atque perotundis coxendicibus, coxa ad tibiae & tibia ad brachium sequalitera proportionem habente (3). In the beginning of this Treatise, there is a Letter of Cardinal Pompeius Colonna to Augustin Niphus, vouching for the incomparable Beauty, and other great Qualifications, of Joan of Aragon. Now, no one is ignorant, how far a Cardinal of Quality is a competent Judge, and even a Critic, in these Matters, quam elegans formam spectator fiet.
These are the Words of his Letter. "Non Vulgo spe-
"ciosissima quæque exponit natura: nostro tamen ævo
"parens officiosa ac liberalis, veluti divinitatis æmu-
"la, ut perfectum admirandumque aliquid, Dissique
"immortalibus quam simillimum, gentibus proferret,
"Joannam Aragoniam Columnam procreavit, atque
"ab incunabulis ad hanc usque ætatem, in qua est
"florentissima per omnes pulchritudinis & venustatis
"numeros, provexit, ut facile principem locum in"ter formosissimas vindicaret. Animum præterea fin"gularibus & dotibus & virtutibus insignivit, &c.
"—— The finer Productions of Nature are rare, and "uncommon; yet this diligent and bountiful Mother
"of all things, in Emulation, as it were, of Divi"nity, and desirous of producing a perfect and ad"mirable Creature, and nearly resembling the immor"tal Gods, gave the World Joan of Aragon, of the "Family of Colonna, and added daily new Charms
"to her, from Infancy to her present Years, in which
"she is a consummate Beauty, and may justly claim
"the Preference to all other the most beautiful Wo"men. Nature, likewise, adorned her Mind with "singular Gifts and Virtues, &c."

[C] Some Authors have said, he flattered her.] Lewis Guyon cannot be persuaded, that all the Beauties, which Augustin Niphus ascribes to the Princess Joan of Aragon, of the illustrious Family of the Columnas, were real: "But, says he (4), I fancy he was in "Love with her, and was drawn into it by having "seen, touched, and handled her, in several parts of her "sick Body, as Physicians have a Privilege to do;
"and that, ambitious of obtaining her good Graces,

"he published the Book, which he dedicated to her;
"nothing being more likely to gain, either on Wo"man or Maid, than a Persuasion that their Beauty
"has inspired us with Love." After which he remarks, "that, if so, the Physician had forgotten
"the Oath he had taken, upon receiving his De"gree, which, among other things, enjoined him,
"not to lust after the Maids, or Women, he shall "have under Cure." In the Table of Matters, he says positively, that Niphus fell in Love with the Princess Joan of Aragon, when she was his Patient.
This is going a little too far; he ought, at most,
to have stoppt at a Conjecture. I confess, Niphus, who was one of the best Philosophers of the last Age, was of a very amorous Complexion; so far, that neither Age, nor the Gout, could break his Chains, which sometimes made him act a very shameful Part, and even dance to the Sound of a Flute. Suf-ceptis liberis, & senescente uxore, septuagenarius; Senex puellæ citra libidinem impotenti amore correptus est usque ad infanciam, ita ut plerique Philosophum Senem & podagricum ad tibiæ modos saltantem miserabili cum pudore conspexerint (5). I confess likewise, that, being in Love with a Lady of Honour, belonging to Joan of Aragon (6), he might have a near View of this fair Lady, and warm himself, at a small Distance, by this great Fire; but it is not certain, that he forgot himself so far, as to raise his Thoughts so high.
Besides, as he did not practise Physic (7), tho' he had taken the Degree of Doctor, it is not probable, that he was Physician to this Princess; for Persons of her Quality make use, in their Sicknes, of an experienced, rather than a speculative, Physician, who, like Niphus, applies himself chiefly to the Philosophical Part;
so that, upon the whole, I should chuse to say, that,
Judgment not being his Talent, he took the Liberty to speak of things he had never seen, and to represent them according to his own Ideas. What Lewis Guyon remarks, that this Princess was of the Family of the Columnas, might be true on the Mother's Side;
however, he has not expressed himself as he ought to have done. We have seen, that Cardinal Pompeius Colonna calls her Joannam Aragoniam Columnam; probably because she was married to Astacio Colonna.
Perhaps Augustin Niphus might have been censured upon better Grounds, in relation to the Sixty eighth Chapter of his Treatise of Pulchro; where, having said, that there was none, in those Times, who deserved the Name of Happy, but Joan of Aragon, since she was possess'd of Both the Ingredients of Woman's Felicity, viz. Beauty and Chastity; he speaks, immediately after, of Victoria Colonna, Marchioness of Pescara, as a shining Example of the Union of Beauty and Chastity.

[D] It has been said, likewise, that his Quality of Physician gave him Privileges, which fired him with Love.] The Poets, and others, have long since made Reflections on this Privilege of Physicians. Thus Ovid makes the Amorous Acantius speak.

Me miserum! quod non Medicorum iussa ministro, Astringoque manus, insideoque thoro.
Et rursus miserum! quod me procul inde remoto,
Quem minime vellem, forsitan alter adest.
Ille manus istas astringit, & assidet ægræ,
Invisus superis, cum superisque mihi.
Dumque suo tentat salientem pollice venam,
Candida per causam brachia sæpe tenet,
Contrectatque sinus, & forsitan oculus jungit,
Officio merces plenior ista suo est *.

Why sit I not by your Bed-side All Day,
My mournful Head in your warm Bosom lay,
'Till with my Tears the inward Fires decay?
Why press I not your melting Hand in mine,
And from your Pulse of my own Health divine?

(5) Jovius
Elog. c. 92.

(6) Naudæus, in Judi-cio de Aug.
Nipho.

(7) Medicinam licet circitoria instar aut peri-odiote nangum exercuerit, optimè ta-men callebat. Id. ib.

NIPHUS
censured.

A REMARK
on the Privileges of a Physician.

* Ovid. Heroid. Epist.
20. ver. 133.

(1) See Remark [C] of his Article.

(2) This is written in 1692.

(3) Niphus
pag. 213.
Opuscul. Edit. Paris.
1645.

(4) Guyon, Divers. Le-
çons, Vol. 3.
lib. 3. c. 12.

(a) See Remark [C].

(b) See Remark [E].

(c) In 1556. See the Life of the Duke of Alba, and the Remark [I].

trifling (a). It was not for her Beauty alone, that this Lady was so much admired; her Courage, her Prudence, and Capacity for great Affairs, distinguished her extremely from other Womankind of Quality (b). In the Pontificate of Paul the IVth, she had a share in the Resolutions, taken by the Colonna's, against the Interests of That Pope. She would have been imprisoned, had it not been in regard to her Sex; but she was only commanded not to stir out of Rome. However she dextrously contrived to make her Escape (c) [E], that she might be the better able to second the Enterprizes of her Son, the Famous Marc Antony Colonna, who afterwards acquired so much Honour in the Battle of Lepanto. It does not appear, that she was upon good Terms with her Husband at that time; for she was entirely in her Son's Interest: Now there was so great a Misunderstanding between the Father and Son [F], that the latter contributed to the Imprisonment of the former for Crimes of State. Unhappy, that a Lady, of so much Merit, should be at variance with her Husband. This is not so uncommon a Case, as it ought to be, among Persons of her Sex, who are possessed of the greatest Qualities. She shewed a great deal of Constancy, when she lost her Eldest Son, in 1551. What Aretin wrote to her, on that Occasion, is mixed with the highest Commendations. See the Sixth Book of his Letters, Page fifth

But Oh! these Wishes are all vain, and He,
Whom most I fear, may now sit close by Thee,
Forgetful, as thou art, of Heaven and Me.
He That lov'd Hand does press, and oft does feign
Some new Excuse to feel thy beating Vein.
Then his bold Hand up to your Arm does slide,
And in your panting Breast itself does hide;
Kisses sometimes he snatches too from Thee,
For his officious Care too great a Fee.

Mr DuKE.

Remi Belleau, in his Commentary on the second Book of the Amours of Ronfard, says, that the Forty sixth Sonnet was taken from this Epistle of Ovid. These are the Words of Ronfard.

Ha! que je porte & de haine & d'envie
Au Medicin qui vient soir & matin
Sans nul propos tatonner le tetin,
Le sein, le ventre, & les flancs de m'amie.
Las! il n'est pas si soigneux de ma vie
Comme elle pense, il est mechant & fin:
Cent fois le jour il la visite, afin
De voir son sein, qui d'aimer le convie.

Ah! bow my jealous Heart, by turns,
With raging Hate, and Envy, burns,
'Gainst Him, who pleads a Doctor's Right
To see my Mistress, Morn and Night;
Who feels her snowy Breast, her Arm,
And handles every secret Charm.
Know you what makes the Doctor pay
An hundred Visits in a Day;
'Tis not as you believe, my Fair,
To guard That precious Life with Care;
But, with a Lover's eager Eyes,
To see your Bosom fall and rise.

But this Difference ought to be observed, that He, whom Acontius complains of, was contracted to the sick Person. Without this, she durst not have consented, in her Answer to Acontius, that his Rival killed her but seldom;

Ocula rara

Accipit.

Brantome quotes this Sonnet of Ronfard, somewhere in his Memoirs, and says some good Things on the Occasion.

[E] She was only commanded not to stir out of Rome. However, she dextrously contrived to make her escape.] The Passage of Antony Maria Gratiani, which I am going to produce, contains, in express Terms, the Proof which I want. "Joanna Arragonia, Marci Antonii mater, virilis audaciz femina, quæ virorum quoque consiliis apud filium habitis interfuerat, continere se domi, neque pedem inde efferre fuerat iussa; id enim sic indulsit dignitati ejus pontifex, ne in carcerem duceretur. Ea cum rem spe-ctare ad arma bellumque, & primum Pontificiorum impetum in oppida filii fore intellexeret, vestibus mane summo commutatis, cum filia & nuru, corruptis aut deceptis portæ custodibus, egressa Urbe, consensu quos ad id præparaverat equis, protinus Neapolim aufugit. Pontifex, quamquam deceptum se delusumque à femina graviter ferebat, acerbius tamen Hispanis, quorum ea consiliis administrarentur, irascebatur (8). — Joan of Arragon, Mother of Marc Antony, a Lady of manly Resolution, and who was present at the Consultations held at her Son's House, was commanded to confine herself to her own House; for the Pope, in regard to her Dignity, had remitted the Sentence of Imprisonment. This Lady, perceiving that all things tended to War, and being sensible that the first Attack of the Pontifical Forces would be upon the Towns in possession of her Son, disguised herself early one Morning, together with her Daughter, and Daughter-in-law; and, bribing, or deceiving the Keepers of the Gates, escaped out of the City; and, mounting Horses, which she had prepared for their Flight, escaped to Naples. The Pope, though vexed to be out-witted by a Woman, yet was more angry with the Spaniards, by whose Councils these Affairs were directed." It was on occasion of this Escape, and some other Provocations, that the Pope was so much exasperated against the Colonna's, that "he sent a Monitory (9), to Joan of Arragon, by which he forbade her to marry any of her Daughters without his Consent; in default whereof, the Marriage, though after Consummation, should be void (10)."

[F] There was so great a Misunderstanding between the Father and Son. Cardinal Palavicini remarks, that Ascanio Colonna had offered such Violence to his Creditors, that the Procurator Fiscal cited him, to give an Account of his Conduct. Ascanio, not appearing, was condemned for Contumacy, and his Lands confiscated. His Son Marc Antony, having been a long time at Variance with his Father, took this Opportunity to stir him, by seizing on the confiscated Estates, and driving off the Ministers of Justice, a little before the Death of Pope Julius III. In ipsa rei confusione Marcus Antonius ejus filius, cui cum parente veteres & nunquam satis composita controversiæ intercedebant, vim interposuit, eodemque tempore patrem oppidis spoliavit, ab ipsius fisci ministerio prout habuit (11). He quitted Rome contrary to the Prohibition of Paul IV. This Disobedience, together with some former Disturbances, obliged this Pope to publish Letters Monitory against the Father and Son. The Father excused himself, on his being detained a Prisoner at Naples, from having endeavoured to excite a Revolt there; the Son alledged, that he had sequestered the Lands into the Hands of Mendoza, who could not be dispossessed of them, without the Emperor's Order. I am surprized, that Palavicini says nothing of Ascanio Colonna's Wife: But since we know, from another Hand, that she was engaged in her Son's Intrigues at Rome, and that the Son was at variance with his Father, we may safely suppose, that she was not upon very good Terms with her Husband. Gratiani speaks more positively of Marc Antony's scandalous Conduct towards his Father. Ante omnes, says he (12), Colonniorum familia,

(8) Gratian. de Censuris Virorum Illustrium, pag. 132.

(9) On the second of January 1556.

(10) F. Pauli's History of the Council of Trent.

(11) Pallavic. Hist. Concil. Trident. lib. 13. cap. 14. n. 9.

(12) Gratian. ubi supra, magna pag. 120.

(d) Of the Edition of Paris 1609.

fifth (d). She had a Sister, who was very handsome even in her old Age, and who had a famous Daughter-in-Law [G].

Every Remark on this Lady's Article might be spun out to a greater Length. For which reason, I shall add, in this Edition, by way of Supplement to what I have already said of her Deification (c), that, soon after the erecting of her Temple by the Care of Jerom Ruscelli, a certain Gallant Author dedicated many Statues to it

(c) In the Remark [A].

"magna in civitate pollensque pro illo (Cæfare) stabat, cujus princeps Marcus Antonius cum paulo ante Alcanium patrem, a quo hostili odio dissidebat, infimulatum majestatis in custodiam tradendum Neapoli curasset, aliquot oppidis intra fines Romanæ Ecclesiæ haud longe ab Urbe imperitabat. — The great and powerful Family of the Colonna's declared for Him, whose Head Mark Antony, having, not long before, procured his Father, with whom he was at irreconcilable Variance, to be imprisoned at Naples for Treason, was in possession of some Towns within the Territories of the Roman Church, not far from the City."

[G] She had a Sister, who was very handsome, even in her old Age, and who had a famous Daughter-in-law.] A Spanish Author speaks of these three Ladies thus: "Que cosas no podrian desirle en laude y exaltation de la hermosissima Duquesa de Tallacoza, Donna Joana de Aragon, muger de Sangre Real, y en summo grado casta, y buena? Y ainsí de Donna Maria su Hermana Marquesa del Vasto? Y de Donna Isabel de Gonzaga, su nuera (13). —

(13) Joan. de Spinosa, Dialog. in laudes de las Mugeres.
fol. 98. verso.

"What Praise may not be bestowed on the most beautiful Duchess of Tallacoza, Donna Joanna of Aragon, a Lady of the Blood Royal, and chaste and good to the highest Degree; likewise of Donna Maria, Marchioness of Vasto; and of Donna Isabella de Gonzaga, her Daughter-in-law? Donna Maria of Aragon, Sister of Joanna, was Wife of Alphonso d'Avalos, Marquis del Vasto, one of Charles the Fifth's best Generals. Sorbiere calls her Marchioness of Vasto, and ranks her among the learned Women (14). Brantome, who praised her highly, has placed her among the lasting Beauties; for, after having repeated the fine things, with which the Grand Prior of France entertained her in a numerous Assembly; That her Autumn surpassed all the Springs and Summers then in the Room, he adds, and indeed she was still fairer, and more desirable, than either of her two Daughters, though both fair and young; and tho' she was, then, near sixty Years of Age (15). The Grand Prior (16), was immediately smitten with her; but, though he loved the Mother, yet he took her eldest Daughter for his Mistress, por adombrar la cosa. — By way of a Blind. After six Years, or more, Brantome, returning to Naples, found her but very little altered, and still so fair, that he said she could hardly fail of occasioning a mortal Sin to be committed, either in Thought, or Deed. She died at Chiaia, in the House of Don Garcias de Toledo, the ninth of November, 1658 (17). I do not remember to have observed, that he ever mentions her Sister. It is true, he speaks somewhere of the Wife of one Alcanio Colonna, who passed for one of the greatest Beauties of Italy, and whom Barbarossa endeavoured to carry off, in order to make a present of her to the Grand Signior; but he calls her the Signora Livia (18) Gonzaga (19). It is not the same, then, who is concerned in this Article; though the manner, in which Augustin Niphus has spoken of her Beauty, may create a Belief, that she was not less likely, than the other, to prompt Barbarossa to such an Attempt. Thuanus has mentioned this Mary of Aragon; he says, that the Island of Ischia was chiefly remarkable for having been the place of this Lady's Retreat. "Dragutes

(14) Sorbiere Lettre xv.
pag. 73.

(15) Brantome, Dames
Galantes,
Tom. 2. pag.
243, 245.

(16) Francis of Lorraine, General of the Gallies, Son to Claude, first Duke
of Guise.
This Journey to Naples was taken in 1559.

(17) Tomaso
Costo, Compendio
dell' Istoria del Regno di Napoli.
Part. 3. fol.
59.

(18) He should have said Julia;
we shall speak of her under the Article GON-ZAGA.

(19) Brantome, Dames
Illustres, pag.
283.

(20) Thuan.
Hist. ad
Ann. 1552.
pag. 222.

"Enariam Insulam Arce munissima, quæ inter duas terras saxo imposita est, sed maxime Mariæ Arragoniæ Alfonso Avali Vastii viduæ secessu nobilem, petit (20). — Dragutes seek the Island of Ichia, famous for it's strong Citadel, built, between two Necks of Land, on a Rock, but chiefly for the Retreat of Mary of Aragon, Widow of Alphonso d'Avalos, Marquis of Vasto." The same Jerom Ruscelli, of whom I have spoken above, and who took so much pains to immortalize Joan of Aragon, was at a great Expence likewise in spreading the Praises of Mary. He was not satisfied with using the liveliest Expressions, his Imagination could suggest, to set off the Perfections of this Lady, but collected all the Pieces of Poetry, in which she had been celebrated by the finest Wits of the Times, and printed them at the end of his Commentary, on a Song of John Baptista d'Azia, Marquis della Terza. This Song was written in praise of " (Illustissima & Excellentissima Signora, la Signora Donna Maria d'Aragona, Marchesa del Vasto). — The most illustrious and most Excellent Lady, the Lady Donna Maria of Aragon, Marchioness of Vasto." This Commentary of Ruscelli was printed at Venice, in 1552, in 4to, by John Griffius, and contains Seventy three Leaves. The Marchioness is represented in it as the Archetype of Beauty, the Criterium Formæ; inasmuch that, (according to the Commentator) the true way of knowing, whether other Women are more beautiful, one than another, is to examine, whether they resemble her more or less. "Secondo che in altre vedrà le fattezze del volto & di tutto il corpo che habbian somiglianza, ò s'avvicino poco ò molto à quelle di lei, così giudicare, che le Bellezze di quelle tali, sieno più ò meno perfette, come del Paragon dell' oro habbiam detto. Et da tale esempio, ò idea, ò più tosto vero Archetipo qui in terra della vera Bellezza corporale, formar poi le regole, le ragioni, le misure, i gradi, & le proporzioni della Bellezza intera & perfetta (21). — According as, in other Women, you see the correspondent Lineaments of the Face and Body resemble more or less the Beauties of this Lady, to judge from thence, that such Women are more or less fair; as I have observed of this Paragon of Beauty. And from this Copy, or Idea, or rather true Archetype on Earth of corporeal Beauty, to form the Rules, Reasons, Measures, Degrees, and Proportions, of entire and perfect Beauty." He makes her no less beautiful in Soul, than Body; and says, that Giraldi having had the Honour to see her, and hear her speak, was struck dumb for some time, not knowing whether she was more desirable for her Beauty, or adorable for her Wit. "Al cospetto di questa divinissima signora condottosi già il Signor Giovan Battista Giraldi Cinthio, & contemplando attentissimamente l'una & l'altra Bellezza che à gli occhi del corpo, & à qui della mente gli si rappresentavano dalla vera Bellezza del volto, dalla splendor de gli occhi, dalla soavità della favella, dalla leggiadria & macia del sembiante, & dalla maraviglia de' modi & delle maniere veramente angeliche, stette lunga pezza tra se stessi attonito, & stupefatto, & dalla somma Bellezza del Corpo, che primieramente s' offeriva à gli occhi suoi, dovea tosto risolverli, che questa fosse da lui da amarsi sopra ogn' altra cosa mortale. Poi passando subito col pensiero à quella dell' animo, che gli si rappresentava per quei modi & per quelle maniere già dette, si mutava di opinione, & risolveasi, che quella sola Bellezza dell' animo, dovesse come cosa divina & celeste, con intera humiltà & divotione adorarsi (22). — This Signior John Baptista Giraldi Cinthio, being conducted to the sight of this divine Lady, and attentively considering the Charms both of her Mind and Body, stood long astonished at the true Beauty of her Countenance, the Lustre of her Eyes, the Sweetness of her Voice, the Comeliness and Majesty of her Appearance, the Wonderfulness of her Manners, which were truly Angelical; and, from the great Beauty of her Body, which first struck his Sight, immediately thought her worthy of his Love, beyond all other Women. Afterwards, passing in thought to the Beauties of her Mind, which appeared to him in the manner we have already described, he changed his Opinion, and determined, that this Beauty of the Mind alone deserved to be worshipped with perfect Humility and Devotion, as divine and celestial." — Then follows the Madrigal, which he composed on this Problem.

(21) Ruscelli, Lettura sopra un Sonetto, &c.
fol. 57.

(22) Ruscelli, ibid.

it [H]. The Life of the Duke of Alba will furnish me with some new Particulars relating to the Disturbances, which obliged this Lady to fly from Rome, in the Year 1556 (f) [I]. She was then very old, according to the Duke of Alba's Historian. She must therefore have enjoyed a long Life; for She died in the Month of October, 1577 (g). In the Year 1575, She made a Present to the Capuchins of the Holy Sacrament of the Place, where the Monastery, which they had at Rome, was built (h). She was a Benefactress to the Jesuits; for the rebuilt the Church of St Andrew, which the Bishop of Tivoli made them a present of in the Year 1566 (i). Hitherto I have said nothing of her Genealogy; it is Time I should observe, that she was Daughter of Ferdinand of Aragon, Duke of Montalto [K], third Natural Son of Ferdinand I, King of Naples.

(f) See the Remarks [E] and [F].

(g) Tomaso Costo, Compendio dell' Istoria di Napoli, part 3. fol. 168.

(h) See la Ritratto di Roma Moderna, 541, Edit. of Rome 1653.

(i) Ibid. pag. 340.

[H] A gallant Author dedicated many Statues to it He was Joseph Betussi. He published, at Florence, in 1566, a Dialogue, entituled, Le Imagini del Tempio della Signora Donna Giovanna Aragona. — Statues of the Temple of the Lady Donna Joanna of Aragon. The Book consists of an Hundred and twenty one Pages; in which the Praises of several of the fair Sex are artfully intermixed with those of the Goddess of the Temple.

[I] New Particulars relating to the Disturbances, which obliged this Lady to fly from Rome, in the Year 1556. The following is an Abstract from the History of the Duke of Alba, printed in Latin, at Salamanca, in 1669, and in French, at Paris, in 1699. "Joanna of Aragon, Mother of Marc Antony " Colonna, laid behind at Rome; and the Caraffa's, " who kept her always in Sight, detained her, if I " may so say, as an Hostage. As the Truce, in " some measure, removed their Suspensions, and " Roads were open, the Duchess went out of Rome, " with her two Daughters, on Foot, pretending the " was going to divert herself in a Vineyard, at some " Distance from the Ramparts. Though she was now " very aged, she continued walking, till she was out " of sight of the Centinels, who kept the Gates; " after which she got on Horse-back, and mounted " her two Daughters behind two Cavaliers. With " this Equipage, unworthy of her, but very agree- " able to her present Fortune, she fled away to the " Camp. The Duke of Alba received her with in- " expressible Joy. As the great Age of this Lady " could give no room for Suspicion, he embraced " her; but contented himself with saluting her two " Daughters, who uncovered themselves out of Re- " spect. I fancy, says he, addressing himself instant- " ly to her, that I see the famous Clelia, who fled, " not from the Enemies Camp in her own City, in- " fluenced by the sole Love, of her Country, but from " the City in the Camp, induced to this Flight by the " force of maternal Affection. The Duchess was " charmed with the Generosity of the Spanish Gener- " al, and express'd her Sense of it by a thousand " thanks; however, she could not resolve to continue " in the Camp; the Age of her Daughters not permitting her. The Duke consented to it; and " she retired into Campania, accompanied by her " Son, and escorted by a Party of Horse, which " the Vice-Roy assigned her, out of Respect, not ne- " cessity (23).

We must lay a Word or two of the Misfortunes of her Husband. " He was a Prisoner in the Castle of " Naples, accused by his own Son of Heresy, and a " Conspiracy against his Catholic Majesty (24); and " when the Duke of Alba arrived at Naples, in the " Year 1556, he visited him in Prison (25), and heard " all he had to say. — He comforted the good " old Man as much as possible, and assigned him the " Castle for his Prison; whereas before he had been " confined to a very strait Tower. He relieved the " Distress, to which he was reduced, not only by " giving him Money, but by appointing him an " handsome Pension out of his Son's Estate. — " However he did not give him his Liberty; the " Accusations against him were supported by too " many Probabilities; and many People thought them " too well grounded. Besides he would have diso- " bliged Philip, who kept Afcancio in Prison the " remainder of his Days, without, however, de- " priving him of those Advantages, which the Duke " had had the Goodness to grant him."

The Historian remarks, that this Affair (26) was " never thoroughly examined into; and he blames Noel " le Compte, who accuses the Duke of Alba of having " rigorously treated the Father of Marc Antony Col- " onna.

[K] She was Daughter of Ferdinand of Aragon, Duke of Montalto.] Antony, his Son, succeeded him in the Duchy of Montalto, and espoused Hippolita of Roceira, and afterwards Antoinette of Cardena, and was the Father of another Antony. This latter, fourth Duke of Montalto, was married to Maria de la Cerda, Daughter to the Duke of Medina Celi, and afterwards to M. Louisa de Luna. He had several Children, who all died young, except one Daughter, named Maria, who was Heiress of the Duchy of Montalto, and married, in Sicily, to Don Francis de Moncada, Prince of Paterno (27).

(24) Life of the Duke of Alba, Book 4. chap. 19. pag. 381.

(24) Ibid.

(25) Ibid.

(26) Ibid.

(27) Ibid.

(28) Ibid.

(29) Ibid.

(30) Ibid.

(31) Ibid.

(32) Ibid.

(33) Ibid.

(34) Ibid.

(35) Ibid.

(36) Ibid.

(37) Ibid.

(38) Ibid.

(39) Ibid.

(40) Ibid.

(41) Ibid.

(42) Ibid.

(43) Ibid.

(44) Ibid.

(45) Ibid.

(46) Ibid.

(47) Ibid.

(48) Ibid.

(49) Ibid.

(50) Ibid.

(51) Ibid.

(52) Ibid.

(53) Ibid.

(54) Ibid.

(55) Ibid.

(56) Ibid.

(57) Ibid.

(58) Ibid.

(59) Ibid.

(60) Ibid.

(61) Ibid.

(62) Ibid.

(63) Ibid.

(64) Ibid.

(65) Ibid.

(66) Ibid.

(67) Ibid.

(68) Ibid.

(69) Ibid.

(70) Ibid.

(71) Ibid.

(72) Ibid.

(73) Ibid.

(74) Ibid.

(75) Ibid.

(76) Ibid.

(77) Ibid.

(78) Ibid.

(79) Ibid.

(80) Ibid.

(81) Ibid.

(82) Ibid.

(83) Ibid.

(84) Ibid.

(85) Ibid.

(86) Ibid.

(87) Ibid.

(88) Ibid.

(89) Ibid.

(90) Ibid.

(91) Ibid.

(92) Ibid.

(93) Ibid.

(94) Ibid.

(95) Ibid.

(96) Ibid.

(97) Ibid.

(98) Ibid.

(99) Ibid.

(100) Ibid.

(a) Corio, Histor. di Milano, parte 6. pag. 879. Edit. 1646. in 4to.

(b) Varillas, Hist. of Char. VIII. lib. 2. pag. 157.

(c) Konig is expressly milita- ken, in mak- ing him live in 1672.

ARAGON (ISABELLA of) Daughter of Alphonso, Duke of Calabria, Son of Ferdinand King of Naples, was the Wife of John Galeazzo Sforza, Duke of Milan. This Duke, before his Marriage, was under the Tuition of his Uncle Lewis Sforza; nor was he less so, after he had been married, with great Magnificence [A], to Isabella of Aragon, in 1489 (a). The Counsels of this Princess, who was as Ambitious as Fair, encouraged him to let the World see he was resolved fully to enjoy all his Rights (b); but he had a strong Party to deal with. The Protector was the most intriguing Man in the World, and the best able to support himself against the just Pretensions of his Nephew. He had fallen in Love with the Princess Isabella at first sight; and, as she had been married to John Galeazzo only by Proxy, he did not despair of marrying her himself, in exclusion of his Nephew. He discovered his Design to the Princess; assuring her, that she might more certainly depend upon Commanding, if she married him, than if she was the Wife of John Galeazzo, his Nephew. This Proposal was rejected with scorn. The Protector was not discourag- ed; but ordered Matters so, that his Nephew could not consummate his Marriage; and

[A] After he had been married ----- with great Magnificence.] Read Trifan Chalcibus, an Author of those Times (1), in Nepitium Mediolanen- sum descriptione. Father Menetrier quotes a very long Passage from him, which contains a Description of the magnificent Supper, which Bergonza Bot- ta, a Gentleman of Lombardy, gave to Duke Gale- azzo and his new married Duchess, when he en- tertained them at his House at Tortona. " Each Ser- " vice was ushered in with a kind of an Opera, " which Novelty at that Time rendered agreeable, " rather than the Graces, which have been since " added to these Musical Entertainments (2)."

(2) Mene- trier, Re- presentat. en Musique, pag. 160. & seq.

[B] His

and to effect this, as was commonly said, had recourse to some Magic Ligature [B]. In the mean time, he caused his own Marriage with Isabella to be negotiated at the Court of Naples. Ferdinand seemed inclined to grant his Request; but the Duke of Calabria would never consent to it (c). So that Lewis Sforza was obliged to deliver up the Prey to John Galeazzo; but he was resolved to be revenged, and destined Isabella of Aragon to be his Principal Victim. He denied her several things, which flattered either her Taste, or her Diversion (d), and married a Princess, who thwarted her in every thing. The Young Isabella underwent so many Vexations in this Conflict, and kind of Civil War, which is well worth the pains of describing [C], that she sent her Father and Grandfather Word, that, if they did not release her out of this miserable Condition, she should attempt her own Life (e). These Princes were not in a Condition to bring Lewis Sforza to Reason, who was instrumental in drawing the French into Italy; which overwhelmed the whole House of Aragon, which then reigned in Naples. He carried his Villiany so far, as to murder his Nephew (f) [D]. It is in vain

(f) Conjuge Joanne Galeacio orbatam, eo quidem luctuosius ac miserius, quod in veneficio sublatum crederetur. --- She was deprived of her Husband John Galeazzo, in a manner so much the more afflicting and unhappy, as he was thought to have been taken off by Poison. Jo. vus Elogior. lib. 5. pag. 422.

[B] His Nephew could not consummate his Marriage ----- to effect which he is said to have had recourse to some Magic Ligature. Guicciardin affirms, that there was such a Report, and that all Italy was persuaded of it: "E manifestello che quando Isabella figliuola d' Alfonso ando a congiugnerli col marito, Lodovico come la vidde, innamorato di lei, desidero ottenerla per moglie dal padre: e a questo effetto opero (cosi fu allora creduto per tutta Italia) con incantamenti, e con malie, che Giovan Galeazzo fu per molta mesi impotente alla consummatione del matrimonio: alla qual cosa Ferdinando harebbe acconsentito, ma Alfonso repugno, onde Lodovico escluso di questa speranza, preta altra moglie & havutone figliuoli, volto tutti i pensieri a trasferire in quegli il Ducato di Milan (3). ----- It is certain, that, when Isabella, the Daughter of Alfonso, went to meet her Husband, Lewis, seeing her, fell in love with her, and desired her of her Father for himself; to which end, as it was then generally believed all over Italy, he so contrived it, by Enchantments and Witchcraft, that John Galeazzo was for many Months incapable of consummating his Marriage; upon which account Ferdinand would have consented, but Alfonso refused; whence it was, that Lewis, being disappointed, and having married another Lady, and bad Children by her, employed all his Thoughts to transfer the Duchy of Milan to Them." Mr Varillas, as far as I can perceive, does not touch upon this Particular; he only says, that Lewis Sforza hindered the Consummation of this Marriage for three Months (4). He proves clearly enough, that the Reason was, because the Parties were kept from each other; for he says (5), that the Father of the Bride thought himself obliged in Honour ----- to suffer Lewis Sforza to keep the new married Couple any longer asunder. That he threatened to complain of it to all Europe, and to arm in revenge of his Quarrel. This was a strange Piece of Malice, and an insufferable Act of Violence in the Protector.

[C] A kind of Civil War, which is well worth the Pains of describing. As Varillas seems to have succeeded very well in his Description of this Matter, I believe I shall oblige the Reader with a curious Fragment, by inserting his very Words in this Place. It is a Piece so much the more necessary to this Article, as it serves to discover the Humour, Spirit, and internal Qualities of Isabella of Aragon. "Lewis Sforza gave up Isabella to his Nephew ----- and, to give her a Rival, who should controul her on every Occasion, he addressed himself to the Princess Alphonfina, Daughter of Hercules d' Este, Duke of Ferrara. Alphonfina resembled Isabella in all things, except in Beauty. Both were conceited of their Births, and both without Reason; since they had nothing to reproach each other with on that Score, and since there was Bastardy in the Genealogies of both. They were both haughty to excess; and their Pride was owing to a most refined Ambition. They were both Chaste, more from a Principle of Pride, than Constitution. Isabella resolved to marry, and Alphonfina aspired to it, rather to partake of their Husband's Power, than their Beds. Both were Luxurious; and, though both had been educated in Families, in which nothing recommended itself so much as Pashimony, yet they were naturally Prodigal, and their Inclinations led them to all possible

Expendes. The Duke of Ferrara did not deliberate a Moment, whether he should give Alphonfina to Lewis Sforza. He had no Dower to give her; and there was Reason to hope she might one Day be Duchess of Milan. She was therefore sent away immediately to Lewis Sforza, who had two Sons successively by her. This Fruitfulness made her insult Isabella, who had been delivered a second time only of a Daughter; But Jealousy had before sowed Discord between them. Alphonfina could not bear the Praises bestowed on Isabella's Beauty; she looked upon them as a Reproach to her own Homeliness; nor could Isabella see with Patience the extraordinary Honours paid Alphonfina, as believing they were due only to herself. They both lived in the same Palace, and eat constantly together. They had new Opportunities every Day of increasing their Aversion; and the Courtiers furnished the greatest Part of them. They paid diligent Court to Alphonfina; because her Husband distributed all the Favours; and attended in Isabella's Apartment for mere Form's Sake. She was perfectly distracted at it, and it was this Solitude, no less than the short Allowance for her Court, which made her write to her Father, and Grandfather, that she would make an Attempt upon her own Life, if they did not deliver her from this Captivity. On the other hand, Alphonfina was so tired of Isabella, that, to get rid of her, she solicited her Husband to make her a Duchess, as he had promised, and add the Quality of Duke of Milan to That of Administrator of the Duchy (6). Varillas had said, in this very History (7), that Isabella had written to the Duke of Calabria her Father, and to the King of Naples, her Grandfather, certain Letters, the greater Part of which are still extant (8); in which she complained of her Unhappines, in the most pathetic Terms then in use; she described it in such lively Colours, as would have made the hardest Heart relent; she told them she had made herself a Slave, purely in Obedience to their Commands; and she threatened to destroy herself with her own Hands, if she was not immediately set at Liberty.

[D] He carried his Villany so far, as to murder his Nephew. I shall again make use of the very Words of Varillas. Thus he speaks, under the One thousand Four hundred and Ninety fourth Year, after having conducted his King as far Pavia. "Lewis Sforza, being persuaded, that it was time to make away with Duke John Galeazzo, his Nephew, caused, they say, one of those lingering Doses of Poison to be given him, which produce Symptoms of a Consumption and wasting in the Body; in order to confirm a Report, which was spread about at that time, that this Prince's Illness proceeded from the too strong Incitements of his Wife's Beauty. The Physicians had given him over, when the King, passing by Pavia, where he lay sick, could not dispense with paying him a Visit. His Majesty did not speak to him concerning any Business; because Lewis Sforza had earnestly desired to be present at the Interview, which they durst not refuse him: He only expressed his Sorrow to see his Cousin German ----- in to weak a Condition, and endeavoured to flatter him with some Hopes of Recovery; but John Galeazzo, who found himself a dying,

(6) Varillas, History of Char. VIII. book 3. pag. 211.

(7) Pag. 158.

(8) He cites in the Margin, L'Histoire de Bernardin Corio.

* They were two Sons of two Sisters, Princesses of Savoy.

(c) Varillas, History of Char. VIII. lib. 3. pag. 210, 211.

(d) Ibid. lib. 2. pag. 157.

(e) See Remark [C].

(3) Guicciardin. lib. 1. pag. 15.

(4) Varillas, History of Lewis XIII. book 1. p. 47.

(5) Ibid. lib. 3. pag. 211.

* Borso d' Este, Great Grandfather by the Father's side, to Alphonfina; and Ferdinand Grandfather by the Father's side to Isabella; were both Legitimates.

vain to pretend, that John Galeazzo died of over-caressing his Wife [E]; the Tradition, which imputes his Death to his Uncle's Ambition, has prevailed. After the French had taken Milan, the Princess Isabella retired to Naples, and appeared the most afflicted of all the Princesses her Relations, who were in great Numbers in the Island of Ischia, when King Frederic was obliged to surrender at Discretion to Lewis the XIIth, in the Year 1501 (g). She spent a long time in exchanging one Mourning for another; for, in the space of a few Years, she lost her Grandfather, Husband, Father, Brother, Uncle, and Son [F]. The only Consolation left her was to see her Persecutor Lewis Sforza expiate his Crimes, in France, by an hard Captivity, which ended but with his Life. She had yet another Consolation, which affected her perhaps more than the former; which was to see her only Daughter, Bonna Sforza, married to Sigismund, King of Poland; She retired to a Town in the Kingdom of Naples, which had been assigned her for her Dower (h), where she lived in such a manner, as shewed, that Adverse Fortune had not sunk That Air of Royal Grandeur, in which she had been Educated. She died of a Dropsy; but had time enough to take a Journey of Devotion to Rome, in the Pontificat of Leo the Xth. She walked on foot to the Vatican, followed by a great Number of Ladies, dressed like Brides. The whole Town ran to see this Sight (i). It were to be wished, for her Memory's sake, that we could finish her Article here, without an Appendix much to her disadvantage; but we are not Masters of these Things. Her very Panegyrist has made use of the Conclusion we are about to make. This Lady, who, in the Bloom of her Youth, had been so famed for Virtue, gave an handle to Slander in the Decline of her Age, and admitted the Gallantries of Prosper Colonna, with

(g) Gratian. de Causis Viror. Illustrium, pag. 41.

(h) Bori. See the last Remark.

(i) Jovius, Elog. p. 422.

"and did not doubt but it was owing to the Wickedness of his Uncle, laid hold of this Conjecture. He considered not himself; but, calling to mind his Son and Daughter, he recommended them to the King with a flood of Tears; plainly importing, that, if his Majesty did not take particular care of them, he foresaw they would be poisoned as well as himself. To conclude the Tragedy, the Duchess, his Wife, cast herself at the King's Feet, as the Italian Authors say, who are more to be credited in this, than Philip de Commines, who will have it to be at the Feet of Lewis Sforza. She was too high spirited to act such a Part; and, could she have conquered her Pride, she was but too well convinced, that her Submission would be all in vain. She did not mention her Children, because she supposed her Husband's Tears would be effectual in that Point: She reserved her's for her Father; and the King made her no other Answer, than that the Expedition of Naples was too far advanced, to be left unfinished (g)."

(n) Varillas, ubi supra, pag. 253.

[E] It is in vain to pretend, that John Galeazzo died of over-caressing his Wife. Guicciardin affirms, that this was reported; but gives it as the general Opinion of Italy, that this Prince died of Poison, which Lewis Sforza had given him. "Fu pubblicato da molti la morte di Giovann Galeazzo essere proceduta da coito immoderato, non dimeno si credeva universalmente per tutta Italia, che e' fusse morto non per infermita naturale ne per incontinencia, ma di veleno: e Teodoro da Pavia uno de' Medici Regii, il quale era presente quando Carlo lo visitò, affermo haverne veduto segni manifestissimi. Ne fu alcuno, che dubitasse che se era stato veleno, non gli fusse stato dato per opera del zio (10). ----- It was reported by many, that the Death of John Galeazzo proceeded from immoderate Coition; nevertheless it was universally believed by all Italy, that he died, not of any natural Infirmiti, or of Incontinency, but of Poison; and Theodore of Pavia, one of the King's Physicians, who was present, when Charles visited him, affirmed, that he had discovered manifest Symptoms of it. Nor did any one doubt, that, if there was Poison in the Case, it was given him by the Contrivance of his Uncle." Jovian Pontanus affirms, that People talked publicly of this abominable Crime of Lewis Sforza. "Ludovicum Sforciam, qui pubescentem primo, dein adolescentem jam ætatem Joannis Galeatii fratris filii Mediolanensis Ducis procuracione hæctenus ac patrocinio tutatus est suo, veneno illum et medio sustulisse cives, advenæ, peregrini passim atque impune omnes predicant ----- Fora, porticus, plateæ, circuleque infimorum cujusque generis hominum nefandis criminis accusationibus ----- im-

(10) Guicciardin. lib. 1. pag. 27. ad Ann. 1494.

"precationibus etiam maxime diris plena undique circumsonant (11). ----- Citizens, Foreigners, and Travellers, cry out every, and with Impunity, that Lewis Sforza had poisoned his Nephew John Galeazzo, Duke of Milan, who had been educated from his Youth under his Care and Protection. ----- The Market-places, Portico's, Streets, and Assemblies of People of the lowest Rank, resound with Accusations of this wicked Action, and the most dreadful Imprecations on it's Author." A Crowd of Historians concur in this, as Bernardin Corio (12), Peter Bembo (13), Vianoli (14), &c.

(11) Jovian. Pontan. de Præsentia, lib. 4. init.

[F] In the Space of a few Years, she lost her Grandfather, Husband, Father, Brother, Uncle, and Son. Paulus Jovius (15) describes this Series of Misfortunes with great Eloquence, but does not always observe Order; for he has placed the Death of the Husband, before That of the Grandfather. As to the Son of our Princess, he says, that the French took him away from his Mother, and carried him into France, to make a Monk of him, and that he died of a fall from an Horse. "In venatione currentis equi lapsus in Hædus exanimatus esse nunciaretur. Hunc enim vel invita depocentibus Gallis tradiderat, à quibus cucullati sacerdotis habitum in opulenti sacerdotii cœnobium idcirco con-

(12) Corio, Histor. Mediolan. Part. 8. 7.

(13) Petr. Bembo, Hist. Venet. lib. 2. fol. 30.

(14) Vianoli Histor. Venet. Part. 2. pag. 20.

(15) Jovius, Elog. lib. 5. pag. 422.

jectus fuerat, ne Sforziani Regni legitimæ proles hæres superseslet." Bernardin Corio gives us a very moving Description of the Sorrow of this Princess, when, all at once, she saw her Husband carried to his Grave, her Son excluded from the Duchy of Milan, and the Wife of Lewis Sforza on the Throne. "Li suoi fautori gridando duca, visitò (Ludovico) il tempio di Divo Ambrosio, e le campane in segno de letitia fecero sonare, il morto corpo di Giovanne Galeazzo anchora essendo nel Domino scoperto, e quasi universalmente da tutti pianto e condoluto il miserando e pietoso caso. Isabella sua moglie a Pavia con li poveri figliuoli vestiti di lugubre vestimenti, come prigione si recluso entro una camera, e gran tempo stette giacendo sopra la dura terra, che non vide aère. Dovrebbe pensare ogni lettore l'acerbo caso de la sconsolata Ducissa, e le più duro il cuore haveffe che diamante, piangerebbe a considerare qual doglia dovea essere quella de la sciagurata infelice moglie, in uno punto vedere la morte del giovenetto e bellissimo consorte, la perdita de tutto lo imperio suo, e li figliuoli a canto orbi de ogni bene, il padre e fratello con la casa sua espulsi dal Neapolitano Reame, e Ludovico Sforza con Beatrice sua moglie nel modo dimostrato haverli occupata la signoria. ----- Those of his Party saluting him Duke, he visited the Temple of St Ambrose, and set the Bells a ringing for Joy; the dead Body of John Galeazzo being yet in the House uncovered, and his unfortunate End universally with very little regard to her Reputation [G]. Her Daughter, the Queen Dowager of Poland, having retired to the same place, in the Kingdom of Naples, followed there the Example of her Mother [H]. So true it is, that Love is the ordinary and almost unavoidable Rock of the Honour and Merit of Women, who have conversed much in the grand monde. Sooner or later they split upon it. Serius ocius fors exitura. Our Isabella died the eleventh of February, 1524, as is remarked in her Epitaph, reported by Mr Misson, in the second Volume (k) of his Travels into Italy.

(h) Pag. 41.
3d Edition.

" universally lamented. Isabella, his Wife, with her " poor Children, dressed in Mourning, shut herself up
" at Pavia, in a dark Chamber, and lay a long Time
" prostrate on the hard Ground. Every Reader will
" imagine the melancholy Condition of the disconsolate
" Dukes; and, though his Heart be harder than " Adamant, must relent, when he considers what " must have been the Grief of this unhappy Lady;
" to behold, at one Instant, the Death of her young
" and beautiful Consort; the Loss of all her Power,
" and her little Sons, at her Side, deprived of all " their Estate; her Father and Brother, with all " her Family, expelled the Kingdom of Naples; and
" Lewis Sforza, with Beatrice, his Wife, possessed,
" in the above-mentioned Manner, of the Dukedom."

[G] She gave a handle to Slander in the decline of her Age, and admitted the Gallantries of Prosper Colonna, with very little regard to her Reputation.] Paul Jovius informs us of this, in the Elogy he made on this Princess: " Ceterum in hac eximie
" virtutis femina improbe plebis rumor non medio-
" criter pudoris decus pertrinxit, ob id gravior,
" quod cum florebat ætate impenetrabilem pudici-
" tiam prætulisset, in ipso demum ætatis flexu Pro-
" sperum Columnam sibi cultum, & officium assidue
" tribuentem, sæpeque procacem ad urbaniores jocos
" admitteret (16). — Yet even this Lady of exem" plary Virtue suffered her Reputation to be not a little
" jultied by common Fame; and the more so, as she,
" who in her Youth had preserved an inviolable Cha-
" stity, in the decline of her Age, admitted the Ad" dresses of Prosper Colonna, and often admitted him
" to jest and toy with her."

(16) Jovius,
Elog. p. 424.

[H] The Queen Dowager of Poland ----- followed the Example of her Mother.] Thuanus reflects more upon the Daughter; than Paul Jovius does upon the Mother; every one may judge of this by comparing the Passages. " Eodem tempore Bona
" Sforcia Sigismundi Augusti Poloniæ regis parens
" - - - filii pertulit, Sarmatia relicta, in Italiam
" venit, & honorifice Venetiis excepta est -----
" unde paratam triremem confectam in Apuliam
" ad Barium navigavit, cujus urbis possessio gentili-
" tione Arragoniæ gentis jure dotale & hæreditarium
" illi erat. Ibi solute & diffidentie a priore vita
" ratione postea vixit, consuetudine cujusdam Papa-
" caudæ non satis honeste usæ, cui & omnia bona " testamento præteritis liberis reliquit, & fama ac
" bonis decoctis haud multo post in summa egestate
" & infamia decessit (17). ----- At the same time
" Bona Sforza, Mother of Sigismund Augustus, King
" of Poland, being tired of her Son, left Sarmatia,
" and came into Italy, where she was honourably re" ceived at Venice ----- whence, going on board
" a three-oared Vessel, prepared for her, she sailed " to Bari, of which Town she was in Possession, as " being her Dowry, in right of the House of Ara" gon (18). There she lead a dissolute Life, con" trary to what she had 'till then done, carrying " on a criminal Correspondence with a young Gallant,
" to whom, in exclusion of her Children, she left all
" her Effects by Will; and, having ruined her Re" putation and Estate, died in extremest Poverty and
" Infamy." This is what Thuanus says of the Queen Dowager of Poland. Can any thing be added to this Elogy?

(17) Thuan.
Hist. lib. 16.
ad Annum
1555. p. 326.

(18) Mr. Va-rillas, in the Life of Lewis XIII. l. 1.
p. 47. says,
that Lewis Sforza, finding himself contrasted to quit the Duchy of Millan, made over to the Duchess Isabella the Duchy of Bari, and the Principality of Rossano, which had been given him in Recompence for having re-established the House of Aragon on the Throne of Naples.

ARAGON (MARY of) Wife of the Emperor Otho the Third, and Daughter of a King of Aragon, became infamous for her Lewdness; which at last brought her to the Punishment of the Fire. She artfully disguised a young Fellow, whom she was in love with, in Woman's Apparel, and made him pass for her Chamber-maid (a). We need not ask, whether she used any Moderation; her Temper, and perpetual Opportunities, give us sufficiently to understand, that her pretended Chamber-Maid wanted no Employ, and that she made one in all the Progresses, which the Court took. The Emperor, having discovered this abominable Cheat, was resolved the Empress should have her full share of the Shame; and, for that Purpose, caused the Young Man to be stripped in the Presence of a great many Witnesses, and, upon the flagrant Discovery of his Sex, condemned him to be burnt.
He was gracious enough not to punish his Wife, and hoped she would behave herself better for the future; but he was mistaken. She fell desperately in Love with a young Count near Modena, and soon declared her Passion to him; for she was in a much properer Station no solicit, than be solicited, in Affairs of this kind. The Count, as Chaste, as he was Beautiful, resisted all the Advances, or, to say better, all the violent Attacks made upon him; but, if, in this, he imitated Joseph, he had not his good Luck, to come off only with Imprisonment. The Empress complained to her Husband, that the Count had made Love to her, and hoped such Insolence would not go unpunished. The credulous Otho ordered the Accused to be Beheaded. But mark, how the Accuser was caught in her turn. The Count, seeing himself condemned, and expecting no Favour, and yet unwilling to reveal the whole Mystery, made his Wife promise she would justify him, in the best manner she could, to the Emperor. She kept her Word, preserved her Husband's Head, and took her Opportunity, when the Emperor admitted Justice in a General Assembly, held in the middle of a great Plain, near Placentia. She took, I say, this Opportunity of demanding Justice against the Murderer of her Husband. The Emperor, not knowing who she was, promised to do her Justice to the utmost Rigor of the Law. Upon which the Countess produced her Husband's Head, and offered to prove his Innocency by the Fiery Tryal. Her offer was accepted; a red hot Iron was ordered; she took, and held it in her Hand, as long as they pleased, without being burnt; then boldly demanded the Emperor's Head, as being convicted of the Murder of her Husband: At last she was satisfied with the Punishment of the Empress, whom Otho condemned to be burnt (b). This happened towards the end of the Xth Century.

(a) Secum muliebri ha-bitu circumduxit juvenem, quo cum congre-diebatur quotidie, quandoquidem eo pro cubi-cularia utebatur. ---
She carried about with her, a young Fellow in Woman's Cloaths, with whom she had daily Opportunities of being familiar; since she made him pass for her Chamber-maid. Man-steri Cosmo-graphia, l. 3.

(b) Gottfr.
Viterb.
Chron. Parte 2.
lib. Krantz Cuspinian-in Othone
III.
Sigon. apud Maimb. De-cedence
de l'Emp're
p. 188.

